House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Friday, April 21, 1922

The House met at three o'clock.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. D. D. McKENZIE (Solicitor General) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 51 to amend the Canada Temperance Act.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Explain.

Mr. McKENZIE: This bill is intended largely to assist local authorities in carrying out provincial temperance legislation. They have made the claim that they require some assistance by way of Dominion legislation to carry out the principle voted upon by the provinces and given effect to by provincial legislation. The present bill is with a view to supplementing the action of the provinces in that regard.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is the Solicitor General's (Mr. McKenzie's) first attempt at introducing legislation, but really I do not think he should be allowed to get away with the explanation he has made. He sates that the bill is to supplement provincial legislation, or to enable the provincial authorities to carry out their temperance aspirations and to do it by amendment to the Canada Temperance Act. Well, there has been much legislation along that line, but what is this legislation for? In what way is it to help the provinces? What is to be amended?

Mr. McKENZIE: It is not usual at this stage to go into detailed explanations, these are generally reserved until the motion for second reading is made. I may say, however, that British Columbia has reserved to itself the right of dealing with the sale of liquor in a certain way, and it claims that its control in dealing with that liquor in the province is particularly interfered with by the promiscuous importation of liquors. The provincial authorities therefore ask this Parliament to say that inasmuch as the general sale of liquor in the province of British Columbia is prohibited by local statute, the importation of liquor into the province shall be confined entirely to the local government or its agents. That is the main purpose of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATURAL RESOURCES OF PRAIRIE PROVINCES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. J. McMURRAY (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. It was intimated in the Speech from the Throne that the question of the natural resources of the prairie provinces would receive consideration. It is well known that the Premiers of these provinces are here and in conference with the Government. I would ask the Prime Minister, therefore, what progress has been made in dealing with the question.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The Premiers of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have been in conference with members of the Government yesterday and to-day, and progress has been made in the discussions we have had. My hon. friend from North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) intimated to me that he intended asking this question, and I therefore prepared and have brought with me a memorandum which will indicate the progress which has been made thus far. I may say that Premier Norris of Manitoba is obliged to return to Winnipeg to-night. The Premiers of Alberta and Saskatchewan are remaining. Our conferences so far as these two provinces are concerned will continue with them. As to Manitoba the following satement will indicate what progress has been made, up to date, between the Dominion government and the government of that province:

As between the Government of Manitoba and the Dominion Government it has been agreed,—

(1) That it is desirable and just that such adjustments be made between the Dominion of Canada and the Prairie provinces with respect to their natural resources as will give full recognition to the principle that in this respect they are entitled to be placed in a position of equality with the other Provinces of Confederation.

(2) That the Government of Canada will negotiate an agreement with the Prairie provinces with the above object in view, such agreement to be subject to ratification by Parliament and the respective Legislatures.

(3) That failing agreement on any point as between the Dominion and the Province of Manitoba all such items so in dispute shall be referred to arbitration.

(4) That any awards made by such arbitrators shall be subject to ratification by Parliament and the Legislature of Manitoba.

DATE OF THE BUDGET

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): I observe that the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) is now in the Chamber. Perhaps he will be able to tell us, approximately at any rate, when we may expect the Budget.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): I am afraid I cannot gratify the reasonable curiosity of my hon. friend by mentioning a particular date. I realize that the session is moving on and that we should all like to have the Budget at a not distant date. I will try to bring it forward at a time when my hon. friend will feel the delay has not been unreasonable.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Within the next month?

Mr. FIELDING: It is always embarrassing to tie oneself to dates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was equally embarrassing when the hon. gentleman himself used to insist, and when we complied.

Mr. FIELDING: I think I can make a contract, that I will bring down the Budget this session as early as my hon. friend opposite did a year ago.

SUPPLY

House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Department of Agriculture—Live stock, $1,000,000.

Mr. LANCTOT: I desire to take up a few minutes of the time of the House on a matter of great importance to the electors in my district, and, in fact, of great interest to the country as a whole. With the permission of the House I will read a resolution passed unanimously by the County Council of Napierville:

At a regular meeting of the Municipal Council of the County of Napierville, held in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court, in the Village of Napierville, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, the eighth of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-two, in accordance with the provisions of the Municipal Code, at which were present Messrs. Hilaire Lamarre, Esquire, Mayor of the Municipality of the Village of St. Remi; Alfred Marcil, Esquire, Mayor of the Municipality of the Village of St. Michel Archange; Wilfrid Gadouas, Esquire, Mayor of the Municipality of the Village of Napierville; Dosithée Payant, Esquire, Mayor of the Municipality of the Parish of St. Patrice de Sherrington; Edouard Mailloux, Esquire, Mayor of the Municipality of the parish of St. Cyprien de Léry and Warden of the County of Napierville, constituting a quorum under the chairmanship of the Warden.

"It is moved by Mr. Dosithée Payant, seconded by Councillor Alfred Marcil, that a request be made to the Honourable the Minister of Agriculture, at Ottawa, to place an embargo upon the exportation of manure from Canada to the United States of America: which exportation is calculated to do injury to the gardening industry of this country, to lessen the crops in general throughout Canada; that copies of this request be sent to the Honourable the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa, also to the Hon. Roch Lanctot, Federal Member for the County."

Resolution passed.

EDOUARD MAILLOUX, Warden.
JOS. E. DUPONT, Sec. Treas.

A true copy extract from the minute-book of the Municipal Council of the County of Napierville. Given at Napierville, Que., in my office, the 14th March, 1922.

JOS. E. DUPONT, Sec. Treas.

Some ten years ago the farmers of my county, and of the county adjoining, could buy manure in Montreal and have it delivered to their local station for $13 to $15 a car. At the present time we have to pay from $50 to $52 per car. It is true, the freight has increased in that time from $6 a car to $13 a car. Hon. gentlemen will see that the freight charge has more than doubled, but the cost of the manure to us has increased about four-fold. The manure output of Montreal is practically controlled by one man, Mr. LeFebvre. This gentleman was a resident of my own riding for about twenty-five years, but has been in Montreal for a number of years now. For a time he supplied hay to the Canadian Pacific Railway—that is to say, to the Dominion Transport company which performs transport work for the Canadian Pacific in Montreal. Later he built sidings on the several railways at such points as Hochelaga, Point St. Charles, and other freight terminals of Montreal, and erected platforms to facilitate the loading of manure on the cars. The big cartage concerns that handle the manure of the stockyards can take the manure to the sidings and load it into the cars from Mr. LeFebvre's platforms. In the case of smaller stables whose proprietors have no dump-carts, it is the practice to call up Mr. LeFebvre's office to haul away the manure as it accumulates. For this service Mr. LeFebvre is paid, as any carter would be paid, $1 or $2 a load. I do not complain about that, but what I do complain about is that Mr. LeFebvre is more lucky than any farmer in this Parliament or in Canada, because since he has been in that line of business he has improved his position by having a wider market, in the United States. There is a man not far from Rouse's Point named Mr. Miner, who buys from Mr. LeFebvre any amount of cars of manure for his farm, and I do not think there is a farm in Canada equal to Mr. Miner's farm. He has at least twelve to fifteen thousand acres. I am told he is worth many million dollars, and he wants to improve his land and produce vegetables of all kinds for the big New York market. He has got the money to do it. We farmers in my part of the country cannot afford to compete with Mr. Miner, because we have not got the millions. It is true that, during war-time, we had to buy the manure from Mr. LeFebvre at any price, because we needed it. Potatoes were selling at a very high price for two or three years, and at that time the farmers could afford to pay a big price for manure. But, as we have often been told in this House since the opening of this session, prices of commodities and especially of farm products have declined. At present prices we cannot make the raising of vegetables as profitable as it used to be. What will be the result if we are not able to stop that gentleman sending out the manure that costs him practically nothing? I say it is not the Liberal policy. Some of my friends have remarked that it is not Liberal to put an embargo on manure. Members from the West know very well that we are not now on new land. We are farming on very old land, and we must have manure. We may be asked, Why do you not buy fertilizers? I say that fertilizers cannot replace manure. My father said to me, when I was under his leadership: "Use abundant manure, and then you will succeed as a farmer; if not, you will not succeed." I think that is true.

The riding in which I live lies south of Montreal; it starts a mile from the Victoria bridge and extends southwards. Twenty years ago, we were supplying the Bonsecours market of Montreal with about two per cent of the vegetable requirements of that city. Those who visited Montreal some years ago, and who have visited it again this year or last year, know that not many gardens are to be seen in what was called "the garden of Montreal" twenty years ago. If you leave Windsor station or the Grand Trunk station and go to Ste. Anne, what do you see? You see little bushes of all kinds; wild cherries grow there, I think, and all kinds of weeds; but you do not see what we saw some twenty years ago, namely, melons, cucumbers, cabbages and all other kinds of vegetables with which to supply the city of Montreal. The real estate boom came to Montreal as well as to the West, and made the farmers rich from the sale of their farms.

Mr. McMASTER: Those who got paid.

Mr. LANCTOT: Yes; those who did not get paid are not rich, and I suppose they had to take back their farms. But conditions have changed; in order to have vegetable products with which to feed the people of Montreal, we on the south side of the river St. Lawrence must replace the gardens of the Island of Montreal, and we must go into mixed farming and raising vegetables of all kinds. We have been at that work now for the last ten years or more, and I say, without fear of contradiction, that my constituency to-day raises more vegetables than the whole Island of Montreal. As is well known, we have had and still have a good government in Quebec, and my colleague, the present Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin), was Premier of my province for fifteen years or more. He brought about the enactment of good laws and we, the farmers, have profited by those laws. Throughout my riding, there have been constructed good macadam roads, without which it would be impossible to-day to supply the big city of Montreal. Those who live thirty miles from the Victoria bridge are really close to that bridge to-day; twenty years ago they were, comparatively speaking, very far away from it. For, at that time, we had mud roads; nowadays we have good macadam roads, and our farmers, having made money, have purchased two-ton trucks, and to-day they can go to Montreal, at any time during the year except, perhaps, when big snow storms occur in the winter, with sixty bags of potatoes or a like quantity of any other vegetable products. This is the reason that we are getting along so well. And we want to do better. We have been told on many occasions in this House, and told truly, that there is need of more production and still more production. If manure from the city of Montreal goes to the United States, and we cannot get it for less than $52 a car, its present price, and if we must sell our products at one-half or less what we received during the war, what does that mean? It means that we shall reduce our production. And what does that mean for the people of Montreal? If they do not receive from our part of the country the vegetables they require, they will have to go further away for those products and will have to pay about double what they would pay if we had what is necessary for that sort of cultivation, namely, manure from the city at cost price. This is what the people in my riding and the riding next to mine want. I am not sure if any of my hon. friends in this House think it is bad politics to ask this Government to impose an embargo to prevent shipment into the United States of the most essential requirement for successful farming. I do not know how the western members feel about this matter; but as a farmer myself, as one who has been in this House for quite a number of years and who is still a farmer, I would ask them to help me out on this question, because, as I have said before, in our part of the country we need manure in order to grow, not grain as is grown in the West, but vegetables of all kinds for the benefit of the big population of Montreal—and I think the same thing must apply to Toronto and other big cities. We are situated very close to the boundary line, the distance from Montreal to Rouse's Point being about forty-three miles; and my friend, LeFebvre, who has all the sidings and controls all the manure, takes advantage of this to benefit the United States at Canada's expense. That is to say, if the farmers of my riding and of the riding of the hon. member for St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers) refuse to pay $52 a ton f.o.b. delivered at their station, he tells them: "If you do not buy, I will go to the United States and Mr. Miner is open for all the surplus I have." This is the reason why I brought this matter before the House to-day. I do not want to dwell any more on this question. I think the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) will do all that is possible for the electors and farmers of this country, who at the present time are not too prosperous, and give us the manure we require to raise the best crops.

Mr. LEWIS: I do not wish to prolong this debate nor to delay the passing of the agricultural estimates, but yesterday reference was made to the cattle embargo removal in Great Britain, and I had my attention drawn to-day to a certain article in the press giving statements made by the Hon. P. C. Larkin, High Commissioner for Canada, on this subject. The statements that he made reflect upon the honour, integrity and loyalty of the prairie provinces, and I take exception to them. I wish, furthermore, to place this matter before the Government in order to be informed if they understand that Mr. Larkin is making such threats. We are quite prepared to believe that it is in the interest of all Canadians that the embargo should be removed; but we do not believe that the High Commissioner has a right to make a threat to the British Government at the expense of the prairie provinces. The article reads:

> Representations of the strongest character concerning the effect which failure to remove the embargo on cattle would produce in Canada have been made to the British Cabinet by Hon. P. C. Larkin. The new High Commissioner has assured the Ministers that the Government's failure to redeem its pledge to remove the cattle ban would place a potential weapon of considerable power in the hands of the annexationists of the Prairie provinces—

Why the prairie provinces?

> —and other foes in Canada of the imperial connection. It is understood that he has conveyed to the Cabinet the strong feeling which exists that the decision to leave the question to the free vote of the British Parliament is not regarded by Canada as fully implementing the Government's promise, as given by Lord Ernle during the war. The proposed resolution favoring the lifting of the embargo will probably pass the Commons, and may even pass the House of Lords if Canada makes its demand sufficiently strong, but even then it would be necessary to introduce and pass a bill to carry out the sense of the resolution, and such a measure would be bitterly contested.
> Hon. Mr. Larkin has already made a good impression here and the High Commissioner's office seems in a fair way to become the positive force for the advancement of Canada's interests and ends.

Well, if that is the impression that Hon. Mr. Larkin is making, the sooner he is recalled the better. The minister of Agriculture is a loyal citizen of the West and is interested in the prairie provinces, and I call this matter to his attention in the hope that he will not allow it to pass unnoticed by this Parliament. It is a reflection upon the integrity and loyalty of the prairie provinces; we on this side of the House take great exception to the remarks I have quoted.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not gather, from the reading of the article by my hon. friend (Mr. Lewis), the authority for the statement that Mr. Larkin had made the remarks attributed to him. I was one of those who had a final conference with Mr. Larkin, the High Commissioner, before he left Canada, and this question of the embargo was discussed. We were both of the same mind as to the nature of the invocation that might be made in the effort to have the embargo removed, and our common view was precisely that of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) namely, that we should certainly persevere in the matter, but, at the same time, use the light pedal. It was our opinion that we should not go out with the club in hand; as was suggested yesterday, there has been too great a use of that weapon in the past in connection with the embargo, with mighty little prospect of success. That is not the way to approach anybody, but particularly the British public, more especially at this critical time when an election is in the offing. We should not put ourselves in the position of trying to embarrass the British authorities by apparently taking sides in an election which is a matter of entirely domestic concern. And in view of that conversation with Hon. Mr. Larkin I feel quite confident, at least until I have information to the contrary before me, that he never did indulge in such representations to the British government as are attributed to him. That is the position I will take until I have further proof to the contrary. I know what Mr. Larkin's views were, I know what mine are, and I know what opinion the leader of this Government (Mr. Mackenzie King) holds on the subject, and I feel quite satisfied that Mr. Larkin did not use the remarks ascribed to him.

With further reference to the question of embargo, I should say that, having very fully discussed yesterday the desirability of taking off an embargo, it is somewhat embarrassing to be asked to-day to put one on, even though one relates to animals and the other to animal product. The question raised by my hon. friend from Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Lanctot) is, however, a very important one. Apparently in the past he has been able to secure natural fertilizer in the vicinity of Montreal at $13 or $14 per car, for which he now has to pay $53 or $54. There is one obvious solution to that difficulty, and that is to give about a dollar more than the Americans give, so that the commodity will stay in the vicinity of Montreal. I have no doubt, of course, that the reply will be made that that is more than the business would stand. But, inasmuch as the placing of an embargo on even natural fertilizers would involve a government policy, I am not in a position to enunciate one offhand. I will assure my hon. friend, however, that anything that can be done locally will be done. I think that possibly something might be done in regard to freight rates. I understand that our railways carry manures, both natural and artificial, on a cheap rate basis, and possibly some representation might be made to the authorities at Montreal towards solving the problem the hon. member has raised. At all events, we will inquire into this matter before taking the more drastic step of invoking the remedy of an embargo. After all, an embargo is a restraint of trade, and I am sure my hon. friends opposite will sympathise with me when I say that just a little restraint of trade as possible should be brought into play even for such a worthy purpose as this.

Mr. HOCKEN: Will the minister get in touch with the Hon. Mr. Larkin by cable and let the House know, at the first opportunity, whether he did make the statements he is alleged to have made?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We should have quite a cable bill—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Wait until I am through before you laugh.

Mr. HOCKEN: I will pay the cable myself, if that is the objection.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friends might reserve their laughter until I have concluded my remarks. If everything that appeared in the press were made the subject of a cable, we should run up a serious bill, and I do not see why we should do that. I have not seen the article in question, and I heard it but indistinctly. I gleaned the substance of it, however, and it did not occur to me that there was any necessity to cable Mr. Larkin asking him whether or not he was the author of these alleged statements. However, the First Minister is present and he may have something to say on the matter. I do not take much stock in these things, and I should not be a bit surprised if, as a result of the discussion that took place yesterday in this House, some remarkable press statements should appear in the United Kingdom with respect to what transpired in this Chamber.

Mr. LEWIS: I do not care whether the minister communicates with Mr. Larkin by cable or otherwise, but I do think that this press report from the special correspondent of The Gazette in London should be either retracted or confirmed; for if it is authentic it is a reflection on the people of the West. The matter should be cleared up for their sake.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the minister spoke rather hurriedly, or he would not have given utterance to the expression he used, that the matter of cost should intervene as between correcting or not correcting a statement made by the official representative of this Dominion.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is not what I said.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not what my hon. friend said? Then why was the matter of cost introduced if it has no relevancy to the question? Why was it brought in at all?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If you will permit me I will state again what I said.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend will have an opportunity to explain himself, but the matter of cost was introduced by him—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: —in connection with the request that he seek to find out whether or not a representative of this country made certain statements attributed to him. It may be that there are false press reports which the Government does not see fit to correct or to pay any attention to. That is quite true. But Mr. Larkin represents this Dominion in Great Britain, and if there are attributed to him statements which he certainly should not make in that capacity, then it is the duty of the Government, undoubtedly, to ascertain whether or not he did make those statements. If they were uttered they were uttered on behalf of this country. Suppose it turns out that he did not make them. Is it not well that this country should know that its representative did not so misunderstand his duty as to give utterance to such sentiments? The country is entitled to know, yes or no. Consequently the minister should say definitely and at once that he will ascertain whether those statements were or were not made by Mr. Larkin and let the House know accordingly at the first moment.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not yet seen the report. When I see it, if it appears serious enough I will carry out the suggestion made by my hon. friend and by the member for Swift Current (Mr. Lewis). But until I know the source of the report, and the value to be attributed to that source, I do not propose to send cablegrams on information of that kind.

Mr. HOCKEN: Do you want to appoint a royal commission to find out.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The remark I made was that if the Government paid heed to every press report, whether correct or incorrect, a very substantial expense would be incurred for cablegrams. I had not caught the word "annexationist." I do not wonder at the hon. member for Swift Current being exercised over it, inasmuch as the term has been often used against the prairie provinces much nearer home. I will reconsider my decision, Mr. Chairman, and when this estimate is passed I shall take such steps as may be necessary to meet the situation. Yes, it is a very offensive term, and until I get further evidence I shall not be satisfied that it was used by the High Commissioner. But, as I said before, it is often used much nearer home.

Mr. CALDWELL: Mr. Chairman, I was much interested in the hon. minister's statement that he understood the railways carried both natural and artificial fertilizers at reduced rates. I sincerely hope his understanding is correct, but I am afraid it is not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They carry natural fertilizers at reduced rates.

Mr. CALDWELL: Did you not include artificial fertilizers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Possibly not.

Mr. CALDWELL: When the Board of Railway Commissioners ruled that gravel and crushed stone for roadmaking purposes would not be subject to the increased rates, I inquired of them whether ground limestone for agricultural purposes and artificial fertilizers might not come under the same ruling, as I thought it was of more interest to the country at large to have cheap transportation of fertilizers than even of road-making materials. I would urge upon the minister to take up with the Railway Commission the desirability of low rates on fertilizers.

I asked the minister yesterday afternoon, but did not get any reply, what was his attitude towards establishing an abattoir and cold storage plant for the maritime provinces.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I answered that question, but my hon. friend was out at the time.

Mr. CALDWELL: Pardon me. I did not have time to read Hansard this morning. Mr. Chairman, I crave indulgence to refer to an item that I believe was passed yesterday afternoon while I was absent attending a meeting of the Pensions Committee. —Item 52, Administration of the Agricultural Instruction Act. Have I your permission, Mr. Chairman?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. CALDWELL: This, I imagine, applies largely to the expense of furnishing lecturers to instruct farmers how to farm. If that is so, I would impress upon the minister that it is not necessary to instruct farmers as they have been instructed in the past—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I might correct my hon. friend. It might be assumed that this item covers the activities of lecturers, but it does not.

Mr. CALDWELL: I think the matter might well be discussed also under the item now before the committee. In times past we have had lecturers advising the farmers in New Brunswick, not to improve their methods, but to adopt different methods of farming. I am not referring to any particular lecturers, but, generally their policy has been to tell us that we have been absolutely wrong in the lines we have been following, and to advise us to adopt other lines which, according to their view, would be much to our advantage. I think money expended on such lectures is thrown away, because a farming community cannot discard their methods and embark on other methods at a moment's notice. If these lecturers are to instruct us in future, I would suggest that natives of the province whose farmers they are to instruct should be employed, in fact men who know the local conditions, because those conditions vary very much. I think it would be money well spent to provide instructors whose policy should be to instruct the farmers to improve the methods of the branch of farming which they are already carrying on. For instance, it is waste of time for lecturers to tell the farmers of New Brunswick to go into wheat growing; and it is possible that advice to embark in dairying would be just as useless, due to the fact that we are too far removed from local markets and have no cheese factories to utilize dairy products. If those lecturers can show us how to carry on our present farming activities to better advantage by improved methods, the money would be well spent. I think the minister gave a reply to my question regarding the establishment of abattoir and cold storage facilities.

Mr. FIELDING: With regard to the statement attributed to Mr. Larkin, I want to be permitted to give two reasons why I am satisfied that he never uttered it. My first reason is, my faith in his sound judgment, good sense and discretion; my second reason is, I read that statement, in almost the exact words, in the press a week ago, but attributed to somebody else, not named, in England. I am quite satisfied that the statement made by somebody else, evidently an irresponsible person, has been improperly attributed to Mr. Larkin.

Mr. CALDWELL: Possibly this is an echo of one of the statements made by the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) last fall and still ringing down the halls of time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It may be an echo of deliberate misrepresentation of statements of the leader of the Opposition, circulated for the same purposes that hon. gentlemen opposite circulated assurances that they would give cash grants to soldiers and other like favours; misrepresentations that doubtless were in the mind of the Minister of Agriculture a moment ago when he sought, in a covert way, to convey the impression that others had declared that there were annexationists in the West, but which he won't stand in his place and attribute to any individual in this House.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No words of mine ever reflected in the least degree on the loyalty of western Canada, nor did any newspaper report that I ever read of any assertions of mine attribute such words to me. By the time, however, that they get on the lips of men who are anxious to make political capital, not for the sake of political reforms but for the sake of office, and to carry out in office exactly the things they denounced in opposition,—when they get around to the lips of men like that, they finally reach the form which perhaps Mr. Larkin might have copied. But, if Mr. Larkin is over there copying misrepresentations, it is time he returned. I am quite ready to accept the judgment of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I cannot conceive that any man of Mr. Larkin's standing could make such a statement as this. I know what it is to be misrepresented, and I am not going to abuse Mr. Larkin until I know exactly what he said.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Taking the last criticism first, Mr. Chairman, I did not even look at the right hon. gentleman when I was speaking about the question of annexation. Why should he be so quick to put the cap on right over his ears without any suggestion on my part that it belonged there?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman quote me when I put the cap on?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My right hon. friend referred to it and said he had never dealt with it—

Mr. MEIGHEN: No; I said the hon. gentleman would not attribute it to anybody in this House.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, the circumstances I had in mind related to the election campaign of 1911, in which reciprocity was an issue—why the air was blue with it. My hon. friends have very short memories. But let us get back to agriculture for a moment, and to natural fertilizers, not artificial fertilizers.

With regard to cold storage, I may repeat briefly what I said last night in reply to the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell). Under the terms of a cold storage act passed many years ago, substantial assistance was given to those engaging in the construction of cold storage plants. Until about 1917 or 1918, thirty per cent of the cost of construction was paid by the federal government as a subsidy to all cold storage plants constructed under plans and specifications laid down by the Department of Agriculture. That law was changed to apply only to municipal cold storages, in order that the burden on the revenues of the country might be decreased. Very few plants—possibly only one or two—have been constructed under the amended law. I would like to have advised the Minister of Finance to revert this year to the original enactment providing for the thirty per cent subsidy, but I did not think I was justified in doing it this year. Possibly we may be able to do so another year when the treasury is less depleted—and I think if we did, it would go a long way toward meeting the situation. Of course, I cannot pledge the Government to that policy. The question of cold storage is becoming a very vital one, not only in my hon. friend's province but in other provinces as well. British Columbia in particular.

The question of lectures has been referred to. I have driven twenty-five miles after dark from Abernethy to Indian Head to hear an agricultural lecture, only to listen to an address by someone who did not know beans when the bag was open. I do not know whether any of the lecturers my hon. friend refers to have been down in his district since the first of January. I am prepared to take responsibility for any shortcomings in that regard, even those which date back to the time prior to my taking office; if these men are there yet, I am responsible for it.

Mr. CALDWELL: I am not referring to anything just lately.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend will inform me confidentially as to some of the gentlemen who do not measure up, we will try to improve matters. There again, of course, I am up against the Civil Service Commission: we can dismiss them, but we cannot appoint others.

I think my hon. friend was correct in saying that the reduced freight rate does apply to the natural fertilizer, and many arguments could be advanced in support of the contention that it should apply to the artificial fertilizer also.

Mr. CALDWELL: I would like to make a statement in regard to the ground limestone. In New Brunswick ground limestone is very badly needed; acid phosphate has a tendency to make the soil become acid, and the application of ground limestone is necessary to correct that condition, In order to provide our farmers with this limestone the provincial governemnt got a special freight rate from the railway companies which ensured the delivery of ground limestone anywhere in the province at $5 a ton. But when the last increase of freight rates came into effect, the rate on ground limestone was increased by about $2 a ton—I am not positive as to the exact amount, but that was the approximate increase. The result has been almost to prohibit the use of ground limestone in New Brunswick, to the great detriment of production. I think that this matter should be brought very forcibly to the attention of the Railway Commission. I have in my feeble way tried to do that, but I was informed in reply that you could produce an argument in favour of a reduction of freight rates on anything. That was a rather flippant way to deal with a question which is of the greatest importance, to us at least. When you increase the price of ground limestone from $5 to $7 or thereabouts, through increased freight rates, it is a very serious thing, and I would like to see some action taken to afford us relief.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will keep the matter in mind.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): The minister will remember that his predecessor in office met those interested in the production and marketing of bacon through a conference held last fall, with a view of discussing the improvement of the quality of our bacon, both in its raw state and in the finished condition. What results, if any, have come from that conference?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The conference was held in November and was attended by representatives of all the departments of Agriculture as well as by producers and representatives of abattoirs, the idea being to work out a plan of grading of hogs or bacon. Shortly after the new government was formed we started to carry out the conclusions of the conference. The necessary Orders in Council have gone through, and the whole question has got the 'once over'. But it is amazing what an intricate matter it is to get appointments made. It is simply a question now of getting the men for the positions. As my hon. friend knows, advertisement has to be made and applications have to be received. I assume that when the positions are advertised there will be from 150 to 200 applicants for the 20 or 22 positions. It will take about two weeks to advertise the positions; then the receiving of applications will take a little while longer, after which the process of examination must take place, the rating of the applicants, and so on. I cannot, therefore, give my hon. friend any assurance when the actual grading of hogs will be in operation. My deputy tells me that with reasonable luck—because I cannot put it in any other way—we shall be able to put the ball into play about the first of June; we were aiming at starting about the first of May. We would like to commence when the business is slack, so there will be the least possible disturbance to the old order of things in the introduction of the new.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): Does the minister's explanation mean that his department is implementing the work done by those conferences?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): Might I ask the minister's opinion as to the grading of live hogs? Does he think it will be effective, and what benefit will result to the producer?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Before I answer the first question I may say that provision for paying these men is made in the vote under discussion. Everything has been provided for: Regulations have been drafted, Orders in Council passed, and the matter is now either before the Civil Service Commission or on the point of being sent there—I do know it has got to go to the commission. As to my hon. friend's other question, I was not at the conference referred to, but I have had a discussion with a number of those who were, and the idea is this: As time goes on the tendency in all agricultural countries, owing to the keen competition—not only to secure markets but to retain them—is to put all farm products on the market in a graded condition, and to encourage the buying based upon quality. That is to say, in order to get quality you must encourage quality, in order to encourage quality you must pay on that basis; and—just as the hon. member's wheat, oats, barley or rye out in Last Mountain is paid for on the basis of quality—the hope is that by the grading of hogs, which is certainly difficult but not impossible to carry out, payment will be largely made on the basis of quality and that will encourage quality. Now, the idea of these hog graders is not to grade every consignment that comes in, but rather to grade those that the buyer and the seller disagree on. If my hon. friend were the purchaser of hogs and I the seller, as long as we could agree on the grade there would be no difficulty about the transaction; but if we disagreed then the matter would be referred to this grader or, as it would be more proper to call him, referee. That is the way we propose to start. I think that even the grade my hon. friend and I might agree on should be made the subject of record even though we do not refer to the referee at all, so that we would be able to keep track of how the amount in hogs corresponds with the amount in first-class bacon the abattoir may turn out. The whole matter, I think, tends in the right direction. It is not desired to disturb the trade any more than is necessary. The grader may be said to be rather a referee. That referee will represent the abattoirs and also the producers and both will abide by his decision. In addition the understanding is that, based upon this quality, the abattoirs will bid in order to play their part and thus incidentally prevent their doors being closed for the want of business, a condition that some of them are in to-day. The abattoirs will bid a premium on all selects, of ten per cent, I think it is. That is the understanding, but it will not be easy to work out the proportion. It may gradually become absorbed into the general price. At any rate, I have explained the object we have in view, and that is the intent of the contract.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I would like to impress upon the minister the hardships that will be suffered by exhibition associations if a reduction of even twenty-five per cent is made in the grants for this purpose. I believe in economy, and I suppose we must think about economizing, but it seems to me that this is just about the last place where we should start that principle. I think we should do everything possible to encourage agriculture, and it seems to me that one of the best ways to do so is to encourage the holding of these fairs. In my constituency we hold an exhibition under the auspices of the Royal Agricultural and Industrial Society, an exhibition that boasts of being the best in the West, and personally I think it is a very good show indeed. We have a splendid display of agricultural exhibits and of live stock; it is a very complete and interesting exhibition. Unfortunately, I believe the exhibition associations have counted on having the full grant this year. I believe they were told that before any reduction was made they would be notified and afforded the opportunity of being heard by the minister. They received no notice whatever that any reduction was to be made this year, and they have made up their prize lists, and based their expenditures, on the expectation of the full grant. Now, I submit to the minister, it is hardly fair that this reduction be made without notice. I would also suggest to him that before his policy in this regard is finally determined he give the fair managers the opportunity of making representations to him. I think they have asked for a conference, and I would suggest in all seriousness to the minister that he might very well consider the advisability of having this conference with the fair managers of the whole Dominion before he finally adopts his policy with regard to exhibition grants.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think my hon. friend looks so good natured over it that he rather expects this small reduction.

Mr. McQUARRIE: No, not for this year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I would like to ask the minister whether there is to be any change in the vote for the National Live Stock Records. I believe there has been a vote of $20,000 a year for quite a number of years back to assist the National Live Stock Records in carrying on their work. It is well known that the work of the records board has increased very much during the last few years, and the live stock associations of the Dominion find a good deal of difficulty in carrying on at the present time—in fact, some of them have been compelled to increase their registration fees as a result of the increased obligations that they have had to assume. I notice there are twenty-six of these record associations and I will hurriedly run over the list. They are:

Canadian Aberdeen Angus Association, Canadian Ayrshire Breeders' Association, Can. Belgian Draft Horse Breeders' Ass'n, Canadian Brown Swiss Association, Clydesdale Horse Association of Canada, French Canadian Cattle Breeders' Ass'n, Can. French Coach Breeders' Association, French Canadian Horse Breeders' Ass'n, North American Galloway Association, Canadian Goat Society, Canadian Guernsey Breeders' Association, Canadian Hackney Horse Society, Canadian Hereford Breeders' Association, Canadian Jersey Cattle Club, Canadian Kennel Club, Canadian Percheron Horse Breeders Ass'n, Canadian Pony Society, Canadian Red Polled Association, Canadian Sheep Breeders' Association, Canadian Shire Horse Association, Dominion Shorthorn Breeders' Association, Canadian Silver Fox Breeders' Association, Canadian Standard Bred Horse Society, Canadian Suffolk Horse Society, Canadian Swine Breeders' Association, Canadian Thoroughbred Horse Society.

I think the House will agree as to the importance of keeping the record of the pure-breds of all stock raised in this country. I believe that the outlook for the farmers of Canada depends more upon raising stock of a high standard than upon attempting to supply the demand for inferior animals, and I do not know of anything that will conduce more to the promotion of the interests of the live stock industry in the Dominion than assisting the live stock associations to carry on.

As I pointed out, the grant, I believe, for a number of years has been $20,000 per year, and I believe that for some time past the associations have been making requests of the Government for an increase. In this connection I might point out that the money received by these associations for fees, and for recording pedigrees and transferring records, in 1917 was $111,000 approximately; in 1918 $123,000; in 1919, $147,000; in 1920, $155,000; and in 1921, $171,689. There has been an increase in those five years of $60,615 in the fees they collected, which indicates that the work has spread very rapidly. I think more attention is being paid by the farmers of this country to improving the various breeds and keeping a record as to the purity of the breeds than there has been at any time in the past. I believe the department has endeavoured to do good work along this line for many years, and I am in sympathy with the demands which have been made by the live stock associations in the requests for greater assistance along this line. This item of $1,000,000 is the same amount that has been placed in the Estimates for many years past. The charge is often made that the grants for agricultural purposes are not as large as they might be, and this is one thing that might well receive the favourable consideration of the minister and the Government. I think an increased grant should be given to the National Live-stock Record, because the increase in the salaries which they had to pay has been very great indeed. I understand the salaries paid by the Records Board amounted to somewhere about $50,000 per year, and $20,000 seems a very small amount to vote towards assisting the Live-stock Records Board. I would suggest that the minister consider the requests which have been made by the Records Board and the Live-stock Associations for a more generous contribution toward expenses. The necessity should not be forced upon these associations to increase the registration fees, as the boards have done during the past few years. In the case of some of the boards the registration fees have been doubled during the last year or two as a result of an increased expenditure, and this is not conducive to the maintenance of the purity of the breeds, because in many instances, I believe, animals are allowed to go unrecorded if the fees are too high.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I quite agree with the hon. gentleman in all he has said. I am not familiar with the details as to the amount of assistance given in past years, but I have in my hand an itemized summary of what we are giving them now. I might point out that not only is this an important branch with respect to preserving the records and pedigrees of animals, but it is also important by reason of the fact that it is taking care of new lines of activity. The work is extending all the time in many lines of work, which, in years past, they did not take care of, and I have no doubt as time goes on their activities will increase and widen in scope:

Grant to the Live Stock records	$20,000 00
Printing	5,944 26
Stationery	500 00
Salaries, for employees, Live Stock Branch	5,840 00
Cartage	120 00
Rent	6,249 00
Taxes	1,359 75
Lighting	239 23
Power	196 00
Water	100 63
Elevator Attendants	1,260 00
Free Postage, estimated as worth	12,000 00
Total	$53,808 00

In addition to what they have been getting last year, they have been given certain printing assistance and also certain additional office accommodation. I do not suppose there is a branch in the whole department where the officials would not tell you they could spend more money to advantage, and this particular activity is similar to the other branches in that respect. It is not spoken of usually as a branch, but it is similar to a branch, I have no doubt they could spend more money to advantage. They require additional office space and printing in addition to what they got last year. That is about the only difference.

Mr. BRETHEN: I belong to a breed association of some two or three thousand members, who are receiving no assistance, but who have had to increase their fees, and I believe this money might be used to better advantage. While I am in favour of the grant to this industry, I am not favourable to devoting the whole grant to the interest of special breeds. I believe this matter might well be taken into consideration in making an additional grant for this purpose. Since coming to this House I have been more or less conversant with the principle of public ownership, but when we have a breed organization which is capable of conducting its affairs to its members' satisfaction at least, and quite as economically as the Government would, I fail to see the advantage of Government ownership in the matter of records. I draw this to the attention of the minister, because it might otherwise be overlooked.

Mr. HARRIS: Last night the minister was good enough to allow this matter to stand over, to give him an opportunity to bring in facts and figures in regard to the hog cholera, and perhaps the impression was left on the House yesterday that the amount of hog cholera was in proportion to the amount of compensation. Some questions were put to the minister and we expected an answer to-day. Before the estimates are passed, I should be glad if the minister would answer these questions, as briefly as possible, so that the House would understand that the amount of compensation is not an index to the amount of hog cholera prevalent in the Dominion, but rather that the number of cases recorded and the number of cases where compensation was not paid would, perhaps, be a better index.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have been so busy with certain other phases of the live stock question that I am sure I will be excused for not going back to hog cholera until I was asked to do so. However, I have a statement here and I do not know how good my hon. friend from South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) will consider the authority. The statement reads:

Reasons for not permitting the use of double treatment for hog cholera in Canada. The double treatment means the simultaneous injection of hogs cholera serum and the active virus of the disease.

1. Double treatment perpetuates the disease. Every double treated hog is a carrier of the virus for an indefinite period after the treatment, and during that time may convey the disease to susceptible hogs.

That is better put than what I said yesterday, but the meaning is the same:

2. Double treatment sometimes causes outbreaks of hog cholera. Experience of the United States shows heavy losses from so-called "breaks" after treatment.

3. Double treatment may disseminate other diseases. During the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in the United States in 1914-15, the disease was spread in some instances by this means.

4. Double treatment is unnecessary in Canada as losses from this disease are very small.

There is my authority. I have no doubt the disease is serious in spots. In the West about ten years ago I saw outbreaks that were exceedingly serious. The disease may exist there now, but I have not seen any cases of it recently:

[Mr. Brethen.]

During the past year only 429 hogs were destroyed for hog cholera in all Canada. Compare this with the average annual loss in the United States for three years of $55,000,000.

Of course, we must take into consideration the difference in population. I have not figured that out, neither has Dr. Torrance.

5. Control of hog cholera by immunization when once begun must be kept up indefinitely. All young hogs in double-treated herds must be treated or disease will appear. The cost of this to hog growers in the United States amounts to $7,500,000 a year for serum and virus, not counting payment to veterinarians applying the treatment.

Serum and virus alone cost $7,500,000. Travelling expenses in administering this serum must be enormous.

HOG CHOLERA—SWINE DESTROYED, COMPENSATION, ETC.

	Number of swine destroyed	Compensation
For the years ending—
March, 31, 1919.. ..	2,163	$23,342 74
March 31, 1920.. ..	1,642	19,001 71
March 31, 1921.. ..	3,354	22,003 33
March 31, 1922.. ..	429	3,055 06

	Number of swine serum treated
For the year ending—
March 31, 1922..	2,557

	Serum Purchased	Purchase price
For the year ending—
March 31, 1921-22..	261,000 c.c.	$3,581

There is no regularity in the decrease in number of animals slaughtered; the number varies. This year the number is noticeably larger than that of last year.

Then Dr. Torrance makes this statement:

The method of dealing with hog cholera in Canada is to first control the feeding of garbage on a large scale by strictly enforcing Regulation 88½, which provides for the licensing of all parties feeding garbage collected from other premises; (2) strict supervision of these premises to ensure proper sanitation and early detection of disease; (3) outbreaks are dealt with by promptly destroying all affected hogs, and by serum treating all hogs that have been in direct or indirect contact with them, and (4) by serum treating all hogs returned from public stock yards to farms for breeding or feeding whenever hog cholera makes its appearance in the yards or vicinity.

By these means hog cholera has been kept down to a minimum during the past few years.

I think this is the information that my hon. friend desired most.

Number of swine destroyed for hog cholera, for which there was no compensation paid.

For the year ending—
March 31, 1919..	206
March 31, 1920..	89
March 31, 1921..	1,341
March 31, 1922..	108

If I have omitted anything, I have done so inadvertently.

Mr. MACLEAN (Prince): I think it would be only fair to give a tabulated statement regarding the different provinces. We would like to know where this hog cholera is. Perhaps the minister has not the information.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that hog cholera is more prevalent in this province and in British Columbia. There is also some in Quebec. I understand there is a little all over; but in some provinces it is almost exterminated, while British Columbia and Ontario have probably more than other provinces, but not to such an extent as to make it pronouncedly conspicuous.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Do I understand that, during the year 1920, only 89 hogs were slaughtered for which compensation was refused?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was for the year ending March 31, 1920. A very small number of hogs were slaughtered that year. These amounts correspond to the totals I have cited; there is a relationship between them. In 1920, the total number of swine destroyed was 1642; the next year the total number was 3,354, twice as many.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The matter which I brought to the minister's attention last night occurred in March, 1920, when over 200 animals belonging to one man were slaughtered and compensation was refused. This must be for a different year.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All hogs actually slaughtered in one year may not appear in that year's accounts. As fiscal years come together, payment for some hogs slaughtered in one year will appear in the accounts for the following year. That is unavoidable. That is so in the case of the year 1921, where the number slaughtered increases from 89 to 1,341. Should there be a heavy slaughter at the end of one fiscal year, the number will show big at the beginning of the next year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It seems remarkable that there should have been so many during the year 1921. The impression prevails in many quarters that it was the policy of the department to discontinue the licensing of people to feed garbage to their hogs; and if the purpose is to stop the spread of the disease, I do not know that it is not a good policy to pursue. Was any effort made in that year to discourage the feeding of garbage by withholding compensation from those who had sustained losses? It has been pointed out to me that a number of people have had their animals destroyed and that the department has refused to issue licenses.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This large increase in hogs that were slaughtered without compensation in 1921 was due to the fact that we had a larger amount of imported bacon. Inasmuch as 90 per cent of hog cholera is traceable to garbage, there was thought to be a relationship between the amount of hog cholera, and the larger amount of importations of American bacon, which proves that that is the source of the contagion. That is good circumstantial evidence, at all events.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Does the minister contend that the importation of American bacon was the chief source of the hog cholera that was introduced into this country?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. The portion that goes into the swill barrel carries the germ. With regard to the matter of discouraging the licensing of the feeding of garbage, licenses have been refused men who violated the regulations in the past. Such men could not have their licenses renewed, and as a matter of fact they did not get them in the first place until they complied with the conditions laid down. The only change that has been contemplated at all has been the substitution of larger kettles for cooking garbage, so as to avoid the necessity of procuring more expensive boilers. It has been pointed out that if the hog owners were allowed to use larger kettles that could be looked after by unskilled labour, they could feed more cheaply than if they had an expensive boiler that necessitated the services of a semi-expert when the boss was away from home. I have not had an opportunity of looking into the question, but it seems rational enough.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Last night I asked for information with regard to the amount paid by the Department of Agriculture in the way of freight and expenses on carloads of cattle during the year 1921. I think the minister promised to give that information to-day.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The following is a memorandum with regard to the cost of free freight policy for 1921:

Memorandum re Car Lot and Free Freight Policy

Cost of free freight policy for 1921—

Eastern Canada	$ 47 29
Western Canada	22,414 75

Cost of car lot policy for 1921—

Eastern Canada	$ 11 25
Western Canada	9,936 65

The records of the Live Stock Branch show only the movement out from each stock yard and not by provinces. It would take considerable time to compile a definite statement of costs from each yard, but approximately the cost may be divided as follows:

	Per cent
Calgary	65
Edmonton	15
Moose Jaw	5

On Page 21-23 of the Live Stock Branch Estimates will be found a detailed statement of the movement of live stock under these policies since their inception.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: What percentage has been paid during these years in eastern Canada? The minister has given the figures for western Canada. It is necessary that we should have some more light on some of these items in this vote for $1,000,000, which is the most important vote that goes through in connection with the Department of Agriculture. There are many branches of agriculture which receive assistance through it, and it is well that the committee should know where the bulk of the money goes and what results are obtained. In regard to this particular item to which I have referred, it is quite apparent that practically the whole sum is distributed in western Canada. I have also asked what amount was paid in grants for the payment of feed for live stock during the year 1921; and I want some information with regard to the control of the stockyards. The department exercises control over the licensing of commission men or firms who dispose of live stock on the live stock markets. Have any complaints been received from any of the stockyards in regard to these licensed commission men, and have any investigations been held into their operations?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know which of these many questions I shall answer first. I have a memorandum with regard to some features of the question regarding the amounts expended during the last four years in connection with the shortage of feed in western Canada. I shall read it:

With regard to the amounts expended during the last four years in connection with the shortage of feed in Western Canada, particularly in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, the amounts paid out by the Federal Department of Agriculture for the transportation of haymaking machinery from the dry area to points where hay was plentiful and return, of hay and other feed to the dry area from points outside and of live stock from the dry area to feeding grounds outside and return, were as follows:

[Mr. Motherwell.]

1918-19	$ 49,994 78
1919-20	620,135 54
1920-21	309,942 54

With regard to the complaints about live stock yards, I had a number of resolutions from the Alberta Grain Growers' convention, through its secretary, Mr. Higginbotham, and I also had an interview with a number of members from Alberta. I think we satisfied them that any serious difficulties were just such as might be expected in comparatively newly organized stockyards. In the older stockyards conditions are, I think, satisfactory. In the newer ones, such as those at Moose Jaw and Prince Albert, you cannot expect everything to be in apple-pie order, but they are gradually improving. With respect to the investigations to which my hon. friend has referred, I must ask him to excuse me for the moment. I do not know exactly what particulars he desires. There is a live stock exchange at Winnipeg, and I understand that certain investigations were held there. I presume the hon. member refers to the buyers on those exchanges who are bonded. I believe the bond is for $10,000. The hon. members of the Progressive party will understand the situation in regard to the marketing of wheat, which is similar to this. A man ships a carload of wheat to a commission merchant who defaults, and he loses his money; and the same thing happens in the case of a carload of stock. The commission man's bond runs out, or something happens, and he defaults. A number of cases have happened where men have lost a carload of stock. This is occurring all along the line. Several remedies have been suggested. Before coming here I was in correspondence with gentlemen in various parts of western Canada on the subject. But the remedies so far proposed would create difficulties that probably would be as great as the evils they were intended to correct; in other words, the remedies were worse than the disease. In the shipment of wheat this difficulty can be met by getting as large an advance on your car as possible, and having the bond take care of the balance only; but in the shipment of live stock I understand that that is not so easy to do. I have not been a big shipper of live stock myself, but I do not think it is the practice to get advances on such shipments. It takes so large a bond to cover the business of a live stock commission man that it is a considerable burden to him, and it has not been imposed for fear lest it should increase the cost of buying. The hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie), I have no doubt, could contribute more information in regard to this matter than I can. I know there is the same difficulty in connection with grain, but not to so large an extent. But the difficulty is there, and I have had my attention brought to it in one or two instances where the farmer had lost money as a result. Nothing has been done yet that I know of to correct the trouble.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am afraid the minister misunderstood my question. I was asking if any complaints had been received by the department with regard to those who were licensed to dispose of stock on the live stock markets. Carload lots are consigned to the commissioned men, in many instances the owner does not attend the market at all, and consequently a good deal of confidence must be reposed in those men.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the hon. member mean complaints from the commission men themselves?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No, they would not be likely to complain. I refer to complaints from the owners of live stock that the commission men may not have disposed of their stock to proper advantage. My reason for bringing this to the attention of the minister is that rumours to this effect have been in circulation, and I believe that as a result certain commission men have been very much injured. I also have information that the rumours are not correct. It is very easy to start such a rumour, and everyone knows how it will be passed, from one person to another, until it is given widespread circulation. If no such complaints have been made, I think the country should know it, and the commission men should not longer remain under the imputation of dishonesty.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No complaints whatever have been made with the exception of one or two from correspondents in the country, as I have already recited.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There are also other votes in connection with stallion clubs, representing a considerable amount. It is a new departure on the part of the department, but it has been in practice in the Old Country for some time. What portion of this sum has been given for the purpose to clubs around in eastern Canada and in western Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, we are kept pretty busy answering questions both here and in our office, and I think we should try to avoid duplication. This question is on the Order Paper, and we have not even come to it yet. There will be a whole lot of work involved in giving the information, and it will come down in due course. It is now nearly five o'clock, and if we keep on at this rate we are not going to conclude the session until the middle of July. It seems to me that if I give this information once, that should be sufficient. However, I am in the hands of the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Notwithstanding the statement just made by the minister, I think the committees are entitled to know what this vote is for. Because a certain question appears on the Order Paper I do not think that is a very good reason why the information should not be furnished. This afternoon the minister was inclined to adopt a different attitude with regard to another matter that was under discussion, raised, I believe, by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Lewis) relative to an insinuation that appeared in the press this morning. The minister now advocated applying the soft pedal, saying in effect: You cannot accomplish much by using a club. When he made that statement I could not help reflecting on what happened with regard to the British cattle embargo. I think the hon. member for Swift Current was amply justified in his objection; but I think some of our provincial ministers who took such an active part in the embargo agitation overseas had not very good grounds for doing so. I do not think any government in Canada has been negligent of its duty in trying to have that embargo removed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the hon. gentleman know of any case in which I referred to the embargo question in any offensive way? I am not responsible for the action of provincial ministers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The minister stated that instead of the hon. member taking exception to the report which appeared in the Montreal Gazette, he might just as well or better have taken exception to the statements of some people nearer home, and later on, by way of justification, he went back to the elections of 1911.

Now what happened? Every administration we have had since the embargo was imposed by the British government has endeavoured to secure its removal. A year ago the matter came up in this House on a motion introduced by an hon. member, and everything indicated that efforts were being put forth by the then Minister of Agriculture to place the matter before the British government. A member of a provincial government in western Canada, and a member of another provincial government in eastern Canada, went over to the Old Country and took an active part in this matter, and during a by-election in Great Britain certain influences were brought to bear, with the result, I am inclined to think, that great difficulties were placed in the way of having the embargo removed. Now, it seems somewhat remarkable that one of those ministers from Alberta on his return home almost immediately afterwards took part in a provincial election in his own province, and instead of receiving the endorsation of his people he was repudiated and turned out of office. A little later another general election came on.

The CHAIRMAN: I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that his remarks are not relevant to the item under consideration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am referring to the Hon. Duncan Marshall, who is engaged by the Government in connection with a matter which is involved in the item now before the committee.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What happened the hon. gentleman's own leader?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am not referring to my own leader; I am referring to a matter which is pertinent to the item we are now considering. Not only was Mr. Marshall rebuked in the provincial election, but he was also rebuked when he was again a candidate for the federal parliament, and the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Lewis) does not need to feel that he has suffered very much as a result of the newspaper article which has appeared. The minister says we are going to use the soft pedal now; we are going to get away from tactics of that kind. Last night when this item was before the committee I made some inquiries regarding the operations of this commissioner—I hardly know how to designate him; he is engaged temporarily and cannot be considered as in the permanent service. I have a distinct recollection of the minister stating that Mr. Marshall was to be sent to Terra del Fuego, or Patagonia, or somewhere in the extreme end of South America, in order to develop the live stock business of this country. But when I ask for information with regard to the clubs and associations that are receiving assistance from this grant, the minister says we are taking up too much time; that the information can be furnished later if the vote is allowed to pass. The minister states that Mr. Marshall has been engaged with a view to having a new allocation made of the grant for the instruction of agriculture in this province. Last night we were told that he was engaged in immigration work down in Florida, and that as the result of one speech he made there, the people are coming from that country and advancing into—he did not say where; into western Canada, I assume. I would like to know whether the services of Mr. Marshall, who has been engaged by the minister for agricultural purposes, are to be devoted to the Department of the Interior for immigration purposes which do not come under this vote.

5 p.m.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I would like to have some further information with regard to what the various provinces are receiving out of these grants for agricultural instruction. We have had a little information to-night, and you see that western Canada has been getting practically the whole of it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The agricultural instruction vote is passed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: But the vote covering the operations of Mr. Duncan Marshall is not passed. When he arrives in Patagonia possibly we shall have a better idea of what we are voting this money for. How many pure bred sires were distributed by the Department of Agriculture during the past year? I would like the information by provinces.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In 1921, 27 bulls were distributed in British Columbia, at a cost of $4,910. I hope that is satisfactory to my hon. friend from Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie). I think I should receive some assistance from him during this terrible ordeal; I have always stood by him in a crisis like this.

Mr. TOLMIE: The hon. gentleman was not here last year; I was alone.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is a great relief to me; misery likes company. But to proceed with the statistics: in Alberta, 104 bulls were distributed at a cost of $19,980; in Saskatchewan, 113 were distributed, at a cost of $22,090 and in Manitoba, 88, costing $15,340. Ontario seems to have been discriminated against, having received only 31, costing $5,550, while Quebec received 73, costing $11,825. This matter will have to be looked into. New Brunswick did not receive any, and only 5 went to Nova Scotia, at a cost of $435. Here we have the province which sent to Parliament the "solid sixteen" getting only 5, as against Saskatchewan, with only one Liberal representative, getting 113. Surely there is something wrong; I do not wonder that my hon. friend asks questions. Prince Edward Island received 2, at a cost of $290. None of these animals seem to have found their way to the Yukon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Would the minister give us the number of stallions distributed in the different provinces?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No stallions were distributed.

Item agreed to.

Department of the Interior—Geodetic Survey of Canada—Investigations, reconnaissance, triangulations, precise levelling, topographical work and geodetic astronomy, etc., $325,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is just one observation I would like to make on this item. It brings up a question that has had some consideration from the House at former sessions, namely whether it would not be well to combine the surveys work and the map work of the various departments in a single department. This work is now being done by four or five different departments, and I am satisfied that there is a great duplication of effort and of expense. Quite an elaborate system is maintained in the Department of Public Works, and there is this fairly elaborate system in the Department of the Interior. Then there is also a branch of the Militia Department which maintains a very highly qualified staff of expert engineers and surveyors. I think that in still another department there is a similar staff. I am told that in the United States all this work is being done under the War Department by the trained officers, engineers and draughtsmen of that department, and I believe the same thing could be done here with a great saving of expense, and I think probably with better results from the point of view of uniformity than we are obtaining at the present time. The Royal Military College, which is maintained very largely at the expense of this Government, turns out annually a very capable body of engineers and scientific draughtsmen. Many of them go into the militia and their services could be made available by any department of the Government. I am satisfied that if the new minister would take that matter up and consult with his colleagues he could evolve a scheme, and bring it to Parliament for the next session, which would do away with a great deal of the duplication of these services which has been going on for thirty or forty years. I only bring the matter before the committee at the present time for the purpose of directing the attention of the minister to this work. I am satisfied there is a possibility of making great economies in this service and that better work will result for the Government.

International Boundaries. Expenses connected with the survey and demarcation of International Boundaries, including $1,000 to J. J. McArthur as International Boundary Commissioner, $35,680.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the nature of this work?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil, Minister of the Interior): This branch deals with the demarcation of the boundaries between Canada and the United States under the direction of the joint commission composed of two commissioners appointed respectively by His Majesty and the Government of United States. The work has practically been completed. The money asked for is required to compile data for the joint reports, the preparation of maps, and resurveying and the resetting of monuments in various places.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It seems a large sum of money to expend for simply the compilation of data and the arrangement of monuments. However, the minister says the work is practically completed. Is it the minister's intention to continue the work this year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am informed that as soon as the work is completed the whole thing ceases. I have a detailed statement dealing with the monuments set up from the lake of the Woods to the western coast, and with the survey work on the St. Croix river, New Brunswick. Once the work is completed there will be no further expenditure in connection with it.

Item agreed to.

Government of the Yukon Territory, $160,000.

Mr. LEWIS: Will the minister tell us why there is an increase of $30,000 in two of the items comprised in this vote?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In the first item, of $65,000, there is an increase of $30,000 as compared with the Main Estimates of 1921-22. A number of changes, including the consolidation of certain positions, were contemplated when the Estimates for 1921-22 were prepared, and the vote was reduced from $70,000 to $35,000. As the changes did not take effect it was impossible to pay the expenses of administration with the sum of $35,000, and a Governor General's warrant for $25,000 additional was obtained, making a total of $60,000 for 1921-22. It may be that this last sum will not be quite sufficient to pay the expenses for that year, and the payment of some of the accounts will no doubt have to be carried into the fiscal year 1922-23. At any rate, the gold commissioner recommends that a vote of $65,000 be obtained. That sum is required to pay salaries, living allowances and expenses connected with travelling, insane patients, printing and stationery, advertising, etc. I may say I have gone over these and I will read them for the benefit of the committee; most of them appear reasonable.

Amount for living allowance..	15,900
Insane patients, expenses connected with transportation to and maintenance in the insane hospital, the Provincial Mental Hospital at New Westminster, B.C., also for maintenance in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police barracks at Dawson and White Horse..	14,500
Travelling expenses of outside officials to and from Dawson and in the territory..	2,000
Printing and stationery..	1,500
Expenses connected with the collection of export tax by Royal Canadian Northwest Mounted Police officers. They receive 50 cents a day while on that special duty.	1,000
To pay commission of 10 per cent to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police officials on sums collected by them as mining recorders, mining inspectors and Crown timber and land agents..	1,000
To pay legal expenses not included in Vote for costs of litigation..	1,000
Miscellaneous: Freight and express charges, telegrams, telephones, postage and unforeseen expenses.. ...	6,440
Total..	$65,000

[Mr. Charles Stewart.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: The only observation that I have to make is this, I understand the population of the Yukon has very rapidly decreased in recent years, and one would expect that the cost of government would decrease accordingly. Last year the vote was only $45,000 for all this service, and a Governor General's warrant became necessary for an additional $25,000, which would make the total amount of last year $60,000. I think I am safe in saying that there are fewer people in the territory than there were last year, but the vote now asked for is $65,000, notwithstanding that last year we were able to get through with $60,000. I think the committee would expect the amount for the coming year to be decreased $5,000 or $10,000 rather than increased by $5,000. Of the amount, $21,000 goes for salaries and $15,000 for allowances. The balance is made up largely of grants for maintenance of institutions for the insane, and the like, to which no great exception can be taken. But surely as time goes on this vote for salaries and allowances should be decreased. I think the minister should content himself this year with what he spent last year, namely $60,000. That would look reasonable to me.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In all probability the objection is well taken, and it is possible that we may get along without that $5,000. If it is possible, I intend to adopt the suggestion made by some of the officials of the department, that an amalgamation of offices shall take place, and probably we can make a larger saving. But the committee will readily understand that one who has recently come into the department would hardly venture to make drastic cuts and expect to carry them out, not knowing just exactly what he might be up against in connection with this saving. The revenues are expected to be in the neighbourhood of $154,000 and we are practically within the revenue in our expenditure. I am not advancing that as a claim for the $65,000 vote by any means, because I agree with the objection taken by my hon. friend, that if an amalgamation of officials took place the cost of government could be reduced; but there is some revenue still coming out of the Yukon territory, and I have discovered a persistent demand for road construction to enable the people engaged in mining to get out the products of the mine. I hope we can present a much reduced estimate on this head next year, when I have had time to investigate. No more money will be spent than is absolutely necessary during the coming year.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am sure the committee is glad of the assurance of the minister in that respect, and I feel sure that he will see that not a dollar more than is necessary will be spent. But the principle upon which Parliament votes money is that an estimate is made, having regard to all the circumstances, of as exact an amount as it is possible to arrive at. That additional $5,000 or $10,000 will have to be obtained by the Minister of Finance by taxing the people of Canada. If the money is not going to be required, and there is a strong probability that it will not be required, it should not be voted. There is another principle that always obtains in voting supply in this House, and I think in every Parliament, namely that we should not vote amounts in excess of actual requirements leaving it to the discretion of the minister or of his department either to spend or not to spend it as they see fit. As a rule, if the moneys are voted, they are spent. Parliament, therefore, should take care, in the first instance, that only actual requirements are covered by the vote. I sympathize with the minister. He has not been very long in his department, and I believe he will apply thoroughly economic methods in the administration of this branch of his department. The revenue is $154,000. The cost of governing the Yukon this year is going to be about $160,000. We are proposing an additional expenditure of some $20,000 on roads. We are not getting much out of it. It may be a necessary expenditure for the miners there. If they are getting all the benefits from it, it might not be unreasonable to make the expenditure on the roads.

Item agreed to.

Salaries of Dominion Lands outside officials, $536,380.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There are 423 officials paid from this appropriation, as follows: 366 in the Dominion Lands outside service outside of Ottawa, with a total amount of salaries of $472,725; and 57 at Ottawa, whose duties are directly connected with the Dominion Lands Service, who are not provided for under civil service government, with a total amount of salary of $63,655—a total of $536,380. The amount standing under this heading for 1921-22 was $515,000, so that there is an increase of $21,000 for 1922-23. This is entirely due to statutory increases in salaries and increases due to reclassification.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Why are the 57 employees who are at Ottawa not included in the civil government list as detailed in the Estimates?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Their services are part time at Ottawa and part time outside service. There is apparently still going on a reclassification and blanketing in by the Civil Service Commission, and at the moment, a number of Civil Service employees are not in the permanent service. This may, perhaps, be the fault of the Government, because we are endeavouring to get information regarding this matter, but they are regarded as temporary until they are blanketed in as permanent officials. These particular officials, I believe, would not come under the classification in any case as they are not looked upon as permanent.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is there not a contingent appropriation under civil government?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This covers the whole appropriation in this connection.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But for the whole Department of the Interior?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There are two categories—Civil Service and the outside service. This is the outside service.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But I understand the 57 men are at Ottawa.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Part time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the nature of their duties?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They are largely temporary employees. They are not permanent in any sense except that many of them are employed during the whole year. I say quite candidly, that I am not yet able to see the difference between a temporary employee employed by the year and one who is a permanent employee; but there is a distinction. You may find a temporary employee on the list for several years, and yet he is temporary. These officials are not civil servants in the sense that they are blanketed in in the Civil Service of the Interior Department or employed for various purposes in the lands branch of the Interior Department.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Are they appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. As far as I have been able to learn, all officials who are employed at Ottawa are under the control of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is the increase of $21,380 an increase authorized or resulting from some ruling of the Civil Service Commission, or is it by reason of some statute? I understood the minister to say, statutory increases.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I presume it is the increase that is granted. Perhaps, I can explain it in this way. I find, in some of the branches of the service, that officials are retired probably at the maximum salary of the position, and when the position is filled, the appointee begins at the minimum. Therefore, there is a slight reduction; but all those increases until the officials reach their maximum apparently involve increased considerations annually. I do not know when the end of this reclassification will be reached; I presume it must be nearly reached by this time; but, in many instances, reclassification will probably mean that a very considerable amount must be voted for any individual civil servant affected. I understand the Civil Service Commission are taking the ground that temporary service must be temporary service according to the way that I would understand it—service for a period of three, four, five or six months—and that those who are now designated as temporary will have to be blanketed in in the permanent service.

Mr. MANION: Do those temporary employees get the gradual increases the same as the permanent employees?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Temporary employees do not get statutory increases; the increases in this item apply to the permanent staff. There are about seventy employees on the survey staff, of whom about fifty are blanketed in. The remainder are not, although I find a number of these men have been employed since 1909-10. I imagine difficulties have arisen with individual cases, and they have not yet been taken in. Hence, there are many difficulties to explain; at least, I find it difficult to understand the grading and classification of the Civil Service.

[Mr. Charles Stewart.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: While the minister has his deputy beside him, can he explain what the classification of a temporary employee means?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Supposing I put it in this way: A temporary employee in the real sense, or as I or any one else would understand the matter, would be a beginner in the service under trial.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And he would be there for only a certain short period?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think the difficulty arises because the reclassification is not all completed. I just mentioned one of the difficulties that we are involved in at present in connection with the survey employees, who have undoubtedly been permanent as we would designate them, inasmuch as they have been in the service since 1910. Naturally, we would say that they are permanent. The real classification of a temporary employee should be one who is a beginner, who is on probation until such time as he proves efficient and is taken into the service permanently. But that is not the position these men are in; they are designated as temporary until the final blanketing-in order is put through making them permanent in character.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The explanation of the minister is all right; but is there anything in the printed classification defining a temporary employee?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think there will be, once the reclassification of the whole service is finished. Our difficulty is that the Civil Service Commission has not yet finished with the classification of the service.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think it is defined in the statute.

Mr. LEWIS: With regard to the first item, I think the time must surely come when the lands of the Dominion will have to be settled and when there will be no necessity to employ these men and pay these salaries out year by year. Most of our lands are already settled, or are being settled, and additional lands are not being found which these men can survey. For that reason I should like to see these amounts gradually decreased rather than increased.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Land Contingencies, etc., $250,000.

Mr. MANION: Will the minister please explain this item?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The following is a statement of the details of this estimate:

1. Expenses of 52 Homestead Inspectors, including purchase, renewals and repairs of travelling outfits, such as teams, buggies, harness, etc..	$85,000 00
2. Expenses of 17 Timber Inspectors, including, as in above item, purchase, renewals and repairs of travelling outfits, etc..	20,000 00
3. Expenses of 3 Inspectors of Ranches..	8,500 00
4. Expenses of 17 Dominion Land and Crown Timber Agencies and of the offices of the Inspectors, of Dominion Lands and Crown Timber Agencies, these expenses consist in the payment of telegrams, telephone, commission and postage, to sub-agents, clerical assistance of a temporary nature only, janitor service, etc.. ..	40,000 00
5. Travelling Expenses of outside officials, when away on government business, including Superintendent of Western Land Agencies, Assistant Land Agency Inspectors, Travelling Auditor, etc..	25,000 00
6. Printing and Stationery. This item is to cover the cost of printed forms used in transacting public business. The purchase and repairs of typewriters and for all stationery required in the Dominion Land Offices and sub-Land offices..	48,000 00
7. Advertising re sale of Timber Berths; also to cover accounts in connection with lands open for entry, etc.. ..	10,000 00
8. Miscellaneous: — Freight and express charges, Telegrams, etc., paid at Ottawa and for unforeseen expenses during 1922-23..	13,500 00
	$250,000 00

Surveys of Dominion Lands, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, etc. $600,000.

Mr. MANION: I do not know much about this subject at all, but it puzzles me to know why these figures remain in the Estimates year after year. I am not criticising the minister by any means, but I cannot understand the continued necessity for these votes. Three years ago this estimate was $700,000. last year $600,000, and this year again $600,000, and I wonder whether these surveys of Dominion lands are never going to cease. It seems that once a vote gets upon Government Estimates it has a tendency to stay there, apart altogether from the question of necessity.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am afraid I cannot give any detailed information in regard to this estimate, nor can I at the moment make any definite statement as to when this work may be regarded as nearing completion. There seems to be, even from the older provinces, a demand, which is growing more insistent, for work of this character as well as for geological work. This work has naturally been confined very largely to the western provinces and the Northwest Territories where the Dominion owns its resources, and almost the whole of this expenditure is for the purposes of the survey parties in that area. I do not know whether or not there should be a reduction, but it appears to me that, as this work is rather interwoven with that of immigration, it would be wise in the western provinces, with which I am thoroughly familiar, to confine our immigration as far as possible to the vacant lands along our existing lines of railway already surveyed. I know that even in Alberta there has been an insistent demand for the continuance of the services of the parties who periodically go into the field there for survey work; and sometimes the demand is for a larger number of men than have been engaged in previous years. I cannot say whether that work is approaching the point of completion; but if the negotiations that are now in progress with the prairie provinces were completed, naturally it would cease, almost in its entirety, and the Dominion would be relieved of a work which everyone will agree is expensive.

Mr. MANION: If it is the fact that the survey work would no longer be necessary in western Canada if those provinces took over their resources, will the minister explain how it is that the older provinces are asking for these surveys?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They are not asking for topographical surveys.

Mr. MACLAREN: Was this $600,000 voted last year entirely expended?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. The vote represented the expenses of the various parties, to each of which was allocated a certain sum.

Mr. CAMPBELL: A good deal of the survey work in western Canada is, I think, unnecessary. During the last few years survey parties have been working between the Thunderhill branch of the Canadian Northern railway and the Prince Albert branch, and others in the vicinity of the part, in districts where the land would not be used for at least fifty years. I regard this as a serious waste of money which could be avoided for the present at any rate.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I myself have made the same complaint, but frequently, in the northern portions of the three provinces, someone goes in and locates a mineral claim which he wants to file, and the difficulty arises in regard to the location. So that we have at least to ascertain some point from which registration can take place. I agree with my hon. friend that it is a mistake to go on with indiscriminate surveying in areas that are not likely to be settled, but we have to meet the difficulty in connection with mining claims.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There are many areas in which there is no evidence of minerals, and it seems to me that conditions are only complicated as a result of these surveys. When you survey land a long distance from the railway, someone immediately files a claim for some of that land and gets possession of it. You then have a small settlement, and immediately there comes a demand for a branch railway. This survey work should be dispensed with entirely in the present state of the country.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I agree with my hon. friend that it has been very expensive to the provincial governments in the past, but it is very difficult to prevent settlers going in and even squatting in these areas; in fact, it is impossible to prevent. I had some notion of recommending to Parliament that we cease granting free homesteads, but again I am met with an insistent demand that it continue. So I am in a quandary. We want people to come into Canada and settle on the land, and I confess it is very difficult to determine what to do. If squatters get in you have difficulties and demands for surveys. I think some of the work might very well be curtailed.

Mr. RYCKMAN: This is one of those large items whose appearance in the right-hand column seems to be justification for its appearing in the left-hand column; in other words, having been voted last year, it must of necessity be voted this year. I believe the minister is as anxious as any of us in these times of stress to practise economy, and I should like him to tell the committee if this is not one of the items where a sizable sum, say $50,000, could be stricken off, and the affairs of the country in this particular be still carried on satisfactorily for the ensuing year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I very much sympathize with the remarks of my hon. friend, but I think he would have been better advised if he had suggested cutting this particular item in two instead of lopping off only $50,000.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I accept the amendment.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Of course, I have no knowledge what the requirements of the department were in this respect, but the first request that came to me was $160,000 higher than the amount which now appears in the estimates. But I find the Department of the Interior has very wide ramifications, and I should like to have a few months in order to become acquainted with some of the work carried on by it. I would undertake to say that areas that are not required for settlement should not be surveyed. If a definite policy were adopted in connection with immigration and land settlement, there would be no necessity for any further surveys for a considerable period. But in the meantime I might inform the committee that every dollar of this vote is allocated, and some of the survey parties are already on their way to the scene of operations; therefore, I should very much regret having to curtail the expenditure for this year.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The money may be allocated, Mr. Chairman, but it is not yet expended.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Would any serious injury be done to the country if for the present year we had a survey holiday? We hear of naval holidays and armament holidays, so why not a survey holiday? I am inclined to think from what I have heard in this and previous discussions on the subject that the surveyed areas, particularly in the Northwest, are so vast that it will be generations before they are ever settled. I know the policy of the last twenty or twenty-five years has been to go ahead with surveys far in advance of the requirements of settlement, but I was rather surprised when I heard to-day from my friend on the left, I think from Prince Albert, that in the neighborhood of The Pas the surveys are at least fifty years in advance of any possible requirements. We hear the complaint generally that it is difficult at the present time to get money. Now here is a very substantial item of $600,000. Would any harm be done to the settlement or the progress or prosperity of the country if that item was stricken off by the minister and the survey parties not sent out till next year?

An hon. MEMBER: None at all.

Mr. GUTHRIE: A $600,000 saving is a very substantial amount of money, and I am sure the news of such a reduction would be very gratefully received at the present time by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. And I believe that no harm would be done to the country. We have surveyed lands for a population three or four times what we now have in the western provinces. I believe our surveys cover every reasonable requirement of the mining districts. It may be that some new districts will be developed where surveys will have to be made, but in my judgment if this whole item were left in abeyance and nothing spent this year on further surveys, the burden of taxation on the people would be that much lighter, and no injustice would be done to the settlement of the western country or to the progress and prosperity of the Dominion at large.

Mr. MANION: I do not suppose that any more criticism comes to the Dominion government for unnecessary surveys than comes to the provincial governments. In my own section of Ontario where the lands are in the hands of the provincial authorities, they are continually doing what to my mind looks like unsystematic and unnecessary surveying. I presume exactly the same condition obtains in the Dominion surveys, and it is not perhaps so much a criticism of my hon. friend as of his predecessors. I believe with my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) and other hon. members that this is a time when some of this work might be cut down without doing any harm to the country. I know very well that the provincial surveys could be cut down a great deal every year without interfering with the progress of the province, because the authorities carry those surveys on, so far as any one in the neighbourhood can see, without laying out systematically the crown lands of the province. While perhaps it would be asking too much to cut out the item altogether, I believe that the minister himself, judging from the attitude he has taken, would probably half-heartedly agree that a good chunk could be cut from this estimate without doing any harm to the Northwest, especially as hon. members from there, who naturally know much more of this question than I do, appear to be under the impression that none of this work is necessary.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Under Item 286 full provision is made further down for continuing improvement of districts already settled by surveys and inspections in connection with the administration of the Irrigation Act, etc. So that so far as these things are concerned—and I concur in the desirability of the appropriation for those purposes—they are provided for; but I fail to see any necessity whatever for the enormous grant asked for general survey work for the opening up of new land not already surveyed. I would move, Mr. Chairman:

That the item be cut in two; that is, be reduced by the sum of $300,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I second the motion.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This is a matter that as far as I am concerned would rather seriously handicap all the arrangements that have been made. Of course, the natural answer to that is: You should not make those arrangements until you have the money. I quite recognize that. But if survey parties are to take the field, preparation must be made some considerable time ahead. I am unable to say definitely that every one of these crews is required for survey work, but if time is given for investigational work, any that are not required can very readily be dispensed with. As a matter of fact, many members of the staff have been in the employ of the Government for a considerable number of years —I was looking it up the other day; some of them since 1905—and to dismiss them summarily would hardly be a fair method of procedure. I am not arguing altogether on behalf of the staff, but rather for the utility of the survey. Now, my hon. friend from Saskatchewan spoke with a good deal of knowledge with respect to what has happened in his territory. He speaks of the territory of The Pas, In all probability the requirements of the survey in The Pas district are brought about by the necessity for survey of mineral claims, and have nothing to do with survey for settlement. As to the complaint of my hon. friend from Alberta, the survey work he speaks of, namely, the classification of the soil for settlement purposes, is not included in this vote, which is for the parties who will take the field for topographical work only. So far as I have known in Alberta, projections of base lines are carried out by survey parties in one year, and no subdivision takes place until there is a demand for settlement. That has been the procedure, and I did not make any inquiry whether a departure from it was to be made this year. I doubt, however, that there will be any departure from it. The director of surveys allocates the work where it is being asked for or necessity calls for it. That is the information I have received for a number of years in Alberta when I have made inquiries with respect to the matter of surveys, and while I did not make any inquiry this year, I imagine that is the reason that the—Bill No. 50, to incorporate The Sisters of Saint Mary of Namur.—Mr. Demers.

SUPPLY

The House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): At six o'clock I was endeavouring to bring to the attention of the committee the work of the Surveys Branch. The cost of surveys is detailed as follows:

1	Controller of Survey	$ 3,660
2	Assistant Controllers	5,110
2	Inspectors of Survey	6,000
2	Interprovincial Boundary Commissioners (1/3 share)	3,000
37	Survey Engineers	121,545
1	Topographical Engineer	3,285
26	Assistant Survey Engineers	66,430
16	Articled Pupils, Levellers and Instrument Men	12,800

In order to put before the committee the work that is being carried on I will give a statement as to where it is done. The expenditure by the controller, the assistant controllers, and one inspector, amounts to $14,000; that of two parties of survey of block outlines and initial meridians, $14,000; or a total of $28,000. I do not see how this particular service could be dispensed with, because from the meridian block survey the subdivision eventually takes place. These lines must be projected. There is an expenditure on two parties in the Mackenzie river district, in the Great Slave district, and one party northwest of The Pas, on controlled traverses and settlement surveys, the figures being, respectively, $18,000, $15,000 and $8,000.

As regards the Mackenzie river survey, I have personal knowledge of the requirements in that district, where it will be necessary to send a party. There are a number of settlements which have been asking for surveys, for settlement and not for agricultural purposes; and the surveys are necessary, too, for the allocation of the oil leases and also in view of the conditions that prevail generally in the district.

Mr. GOULD: In regard to the Mackenzie river survey, I understand that parties have already started on that expedition and that possibly two years' work will be entailed. The members of the party will, I believe, be absent from the city throughout that time. Is that correct?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): So far no party has remained in the north during the winter and it is doubtful whether this party will do so. The expenditure in connection with one party of subdivision surveys of Alberta and the Peace river block is largely entailed on account of the oil development and the settlement that is going on in the Peace river block of the Dominion lands. Some of the Alberta members will know what the requirements there are. Then there is an expenditure of $8,000 for four parties on resurveys, retracement surveys, and miscellaneous surveys in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and for three parties at $3,500 each, making a total of $18,500. That is general work that will have to be undertaken by some one, and eventually, if the resources go to the provinces, will be paid for by the provinces themselves. The critics of this particular work will agree that it is necessary, and it has all been asked for. There is an expenditure on four parties on examination of land for general settlement, at $5,000 per party. That is investigation work carried on by the engineers for the classification of soils in lands not already settled. In connection with this matter, the information that the Immigration Department gets from intending settlers from the United States is that 90 per cent of the people who decide to come to western Canada come for the purpose of locating on free land. That, apparently, is the inducement that brings them to western Canada, and it is one of the reasons why, this year at all events, I did not recommend to Parliament the cutting out of the free homesteads and offering for sale all lands in the public domain. I am anxious that that should be done, but I realize the necessity for bringing people to the western plains. Now, I am not suggesting that they go on the Crown lands; indeed, I do not believe that a very large percentage will go on those lands when they thoroughly understand the conditions, but that they will rather purchase lands that are convenient to railways, churches and schools. But, needless to say, a free homestead appears to be the lure that draws people to western Canada, and the classification of these lands is of immense value. I was amazed to find how much it meant in connection with soldiers' settlement, and how much has been saved in this connection, although it cost money to do this work.

Mr. McTAGGART: Is it true that certain areas in the western provinces have been withdrawn from homestead entry at the present time?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, for soldiers' settlement purposes I am told.

Mr. McTAGGART: For how long, and what is the area withdrawn?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am told that the period of withdrawal is indefinite, and probably will last only so long as the soldiers' settlement requirements continue. But, knowing Alberta as I do, I think I am safe in saying that there is very little crown land of first class, or even of second class character within fifteen miles of a railway.

Mr. McTAGGART: The people in the southwestern part of Saskatchewan whom I have the honour to represent have been led to believe that crown lands in that district were withdrawn from homestead entry because new regulations were to be brought down. Can the minister give us any information in regard to that?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is scarcely correct. Representations have been made to the department by settlers who are desirous of moving, and who have already enjoyed the privilege of securing a homestead, to re-enter for another homestead in the northern part of the province. That is quite agreeable to the department, and, in Saskatchewan, can be arranged through the provincial Department of Agriculture, which takes upon itself the responsibility of recommending any individual for re-entry.

Mr. McTAGGART: How large is this area?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No area is laid out for that purpose. Choice would have to be made by the individual himself of any crown lands.

Mr. SALES: What becomes of the first entry?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is just the reason why the department does not want to take any responsibility. The indebtedness that undoubtedly will have accrued against the property will have to be looked after by the provincial authorities, and they will have to take the responsibility of recommending to the federal authorities any individual who is to receive that privilege.

Mr. McTAGGART: Possibly the minister misunderstood my last question. I wish to know particularly what are the boundaries of the area which has been withdrawn from homestead entry?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This was an arrangement made by the previous government, and I am told it is an area fifteen miles wide along all existing railways.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Do I understand the minister to say that he has perfected arrangements whereby homesteaders within the province may have second homesteads upon the recommendation of the provincial Department of Agriculture; or is that only within certain areas?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, this matter has not been brought to a definite conclusion yet, but that is the proposal upon which we are now working. No specific area is set apart for that particular purpose. None need be set apart, because one will readily understand that although at first sight it may appear an easy matter to arrange, yet as one looks into it, it becomes somewhat complicated and difficult, as in most cases the applicant for re-entry has assumed financial obligations in respect to his original entry, which renders the transfer very difficult to complete. But if the provincial authorities, who understand the local situation, in their wisdom make the recommendation that the applicant be given a second chance, then we are prepared to get the necessary authority to meet such a situation.

[Mr. Charles Stewart.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: I fully appreciate that the question is surrounded with difficulties, because I have tried lately to think out some satisfactory solution. I hope the minister does not contemplate adopting a policy whereby any one having a homestead in these provinces may, if he secures the approval of the local government, have two homesteads, or abandon his first and get a second homestead, as I am afraid it would be an extension of the patronage system beyond the aspirations of even the most ambitious. I am aware of the difficulties to be encountered, in that homesteaders in these dry areas—and it is the dry areas that the minister must be directing his attention to—are in municipalities to which they owe taxes for schools and other local works, and the municipalities depend upon the contributions of these homesteaders just as they depend upon the contributions of their neighbours, and as a consequence difficulties are encountered which the municipalities and the provincial government will have to arrange between themselves. But let me warn the minister that the responsibility is on his own department, and that the final determination as to whether a second homestead is to be granted or not must rest there. It may be that he can work out a plan whereby responsibility as to local indebtedness will be assumed by the provincial authorities.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is no intention of the federal authorities taking that responsibility.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It may be the federal authorities cannot escape some share of responsibility even there. But after the provincial government has given its decision on that point, that must not end the matter; the minister himself must exercise supervision some way as to who are to get second homesteads and who are not. There must be some principle—there must indeed be regulations submitted to this House for parliamentary approval. Above all things, let it not become a matter merely for the imprimatur of provincial governments as to when second homesteads shall be given. And I would say as well, that there necessarily will have to be some geographical limitations in connection with the application of any policy to this subject.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not intend, Mr. Chairman, to get into a discussion of the difficulties of southern Saskatchewan or southern Alberta, but I quite agree with the right hon. gentleman that it is a matter that will have to be undertaken by the respective governments. I think it is generally conceded that if the settlers who now find themselves upon those areas, whether they be large or small, will either have to move of their own volition or be assisted to move to other districts, and that the areas deserted will in due time be turned back to grazing purposes. I see innumerable difficulties, but I do not see very much difficulty with respect to the indebtedness. The individual, however, who spends his all, who has put in years of hard work, will have to sustain the loss of all that he has put in there, plus his work, and it seems to me that if he is willing to continue his residence in the province it would be good business for the provincial government, aided by the federal authority, to get that man upon an area of land where he can carry on agriculture successfully. I am willing, so far and so long as the federal authorities retain control of the crown lands, to recommend that portions of them be used for the purpose of re-establishing these men and keeping them within the provinces in which they have settled. However, we are getting away from the subject under discussion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under those circumstances I would advise the minister to concentrate on the solution of 9 p.m. the question, because from the meaningless statement made by the Prime Minister this afternoon I have no very lively anticipation that he or his successor will not be responsible for the administration of the crown lands for a long time to come.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Well, there is nothing like being optimistic about it. We were dealing with the expenditure of four parties on examination of lands for general settlement at $5,000 each. Then, there is expenditure of two parties on the survey of water areas on the old subdivisions at $4,000 each—the water areas are constantly receding and giving occasion to controversy. Then, there is the expenditure of two parties on topographical surveys of the Calgary sectional sheet and Cypress Hills Forest Reserve, one party at $4,000 and one party at $5,500. A number of settlers are going into the Cypress Hills, and when I took office I found there was a controversy proceeding there with regard to men who had squatted on some of these areas; it will be necessary to send a survey party there this summer. There is also the expenditure of one party on the survey of group and other lots; expenditure of five parties on topographical survey in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta at $6,000 per party; expenditure of two parties on subdivision surveys on the railway belt, British Columbia, $4,000 each. I had a rather warm time to-day with a delegation from British Columbia with respect to this matter. One of the members from British Columbia and some of the officials of the department were not in entire agreement with regard to the methods employed there, and it will be necessary to have someone in that railway belt in connection with this work. There is also the expenditure of four parties on running lines or levels, one-third share of the expenditure by the Alberta, British Columbia and Provincial Boundary Commission. The government of Alberta have for a considerable number of years been paying for the defining of the boundary line from the international boundary northward. I imagine the work should soon be completed. There is expenditure on surveys of timber berths, and surveys not otherwise provided for, $20,000. That, briefly, is the report, outside of the topographical mapping and the various items that go to make up the balance of this amount. I do not know just where I could cut this down to the extent of one-half. I am convinced that the amount could be reduced another year, but I do think that men who have been in the service of the Government for ten or fifteen years are entitled to at least a year's notice in order that they may look for other employment. Some of these parties are on the way; some partly and some fully equipped for the work they are to carry on this season.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the total for topographical surveys in the three western provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): $30,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would be inclined to doubt the wisdom of that expenditure. The ordinary topographical survey is made for special purposes, usually for military purposes. The Militia Department has for years been conducting a topographical survey of Canada; every year, this year included, there is an amount to provide for that work. A topographical survey shows every hillock, pond, ditch, wall, fence, tree-stump. It is really for military purposes, and what we want it for throughout western Canada, in addition to the work that has been carried on for the last twenty-five or thirty years by the Militia Department, I do not know. To my mind, this proposed expenditure of $30,000 is waste money. No doubt the expenditure has been made annually for years back, but it has been emphasized in the House that this is a time to call a halt in unnecessary expenditures. Here is an opportunity to save $30,000 on a single item, and I would ask the minister to consider a reduction of his estimates to that extent at least, and the cessation of the topographical surveys for a few years.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If the mover of the amendment is agreeable, I am willing to cut the whole estimate by $30,000, but I would not like to apply the reduction to any specific vote.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Although I may frankly say that I am not altogether satisfied with the minister's explanation, I feel that he is not responsible for the present conditions. I think we can be assured of the minister's good intentions and that next year will witness a substantial reduction in this vote. I would therefore be quite willing to accept his suggestion that the amendment be withdrawn, and another amendment substituted providing for a reduction of $30,000. I would, however, offer one suggestion to the minister in connection with the Mackenzie, Peace river, and all the other oil schemes: If a few men are to go out into any of these districts and plot out some oil leases, or whatever they call them, and then it becomes necessary to send out a survey party to map them out, these men should pay the expenses of the survey instead of the department.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): So far as regards making the lessees pay for the surveys the department have fairly stringent regulations with respect to the payment of royalties on the product when it is found. If an individual goes in and spends thousands of dollars on development work, as many of them do, whereas the Government has spent no money on such work but charges a fee for the lease and imposes a stiff tax on the product when found—with which I am heartily in accord—I think we will all agree that this particular industry is being taxed fairly heavily. While I am in thorough agreement with that policy, I do think that in the initial stages we should render all the assistance we can for investigational and development work, and, when the product is found, take a fair share for the State out of the production.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much of the $600,000 was actually spent last year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am informed it was all spent last year but I cannot vouch for the statement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would not think myself it was very far out. I am sorry that the enthusiasm of my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) for retrenchment was so short lived. I do not know what the transformation is that has taken place since six o'clock but I have still some enthusiasm of my own left. Now the expenditure on surveys some three years ago necessarily increased. Why? It had ranged around $400,000 and $500,000 per year. It increased because of the necessities of the soldier settlement survey. Large amounts were required to take care of surveys that were demanded by reason of the soldier settlement extension work that took place in the year 1919-20, particularly in the year 1919. Last year $100,000 was deducted. It would be because that work was contracted; and going over the estimates with Dr. Deville we arranged for the gathering together of certain surveys under one head and we were able to reduce by $100,000. Now in every respect of policy that counts, every policy that is vital, the Government have paid us the flattery of imitating us exactly save only in the process of retrenching on expenditure. In that they do not seem to be able to follow the good example that we set. Last year $100,000 was taken off in that process. Why can we not do it this year? I have not the least doubt that the contraction of soldiers' settlement work is much more this year than it was last. Furthermore, I cannot remember in detail but there was certain work that we had to do in conjunction with provincial governments —I think the governments of Ontario and Manitoba. We bore, I think, one-third of the cost of some survey work in Manitoba and also some in the province of British Columbia. That work, I think, is over and therefore I know of no reason at all why there should not be this year a reduction of $100,000. In this connection I feel that I ought to say this: The head of this branch of the work of the Interior Department, Dr. Deville, is not only a man of conspicuous capacity, but he is a man who will co-operate with the minister to the full in securing reduction of expenditure if the minister shows a desire to that end. If there is one officer who is ready to co-operate with him more enthusiastically than another it happens to be the head of the branch who recommends to the minister expenditures under this head. Not only is Dr. Deville a competent official but I think he is one of the very few examples—if not the only one—where the undoubted and admitted head of his profession in this Dominion is, in so far as his profession is concerned, at the head of the service. I do not think there is any one in the Dominion who compares with Dr. Deville in his own profession, and it is fortunate we have him in our employ. I am sure if the minister goes over these estimates with Dr. Deville with this end in view he will be able to co-operate with him, and he can then come back to this committee quite readily and agree to a total expenditure of $500,000 for this service.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Dr. Deville submitted an estimate of $760,000 this year. I am very glad indeed to hear the remarks of my hon. friend eulogizing Dr. Deville and his work because he has already cut the estimate of last year for the simple reason—and I think that reason should be apparent—that we were anxious, as individuals who had no information, that the officials of this department should be able at least to get along with the appropriation of last year instead of asking for an increase. Therefore, Dr. Deville has already cut this appropriation by $160,000. Now I am not able to argue—

Mr. MEIGHEN: But he increased it.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): —as to all he had in mind. I am referring the hon. gentleman to what he has just said in praise of this official. Naturally, if all the things he has said of Dr. Deville are true, he is an official who must realize his responsibility when submitting his estimates to the minister; and if he has already cut $160,000 I think it is only fair to say that he has made an honest endeavour to get his estimate to the point where he would be able to render the service that he has been asked for from various parts of Canada. Now possibly Dr. Deville could get along—undoubtedly he could if he had to—on $300,000. There can be no question about that; and unless I am able to ascertain there is a very serious need, when I become more fully acquainted with this department—more fully acquainted with the surveys branch of the department—there can be a very substantial reduction made in the cost of surveys. I cannot agree with the hon. member however that all the added cost came about on account of the surveys necessary for soldier settlement because a very large proportion of the soldier settlement—a very large proportion in the province of Alberta—was made upon the crown lands. There was a fair amount it is true but nothing that would indicate the necessity for an increase from $400,000 to $600,000 of survey work. Therefore I offer to accept the suggestion which has been made for a reduction but I am not prepared to accept any greater reduction.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Does the hon. member from Bow river desire to reduce the amount in the amendment to $30,000?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understand the minister has himself stated his willingness to cut his estimate by $30,000, and I think I might withdraw the motion altogether on that understanding.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the amendment be withdrawn?

Mr. GUTHRIE: What does the minister say?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I move to reduce the total estimate by $30,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister does not appreciate the position. Dr. Deville comes to him with his estimates. Last year's was $600,000 reduced from $700,000 the year before. He comes with $760,000. This represents the surveys Dr. Deville has been asked to perform. I would not dispute that probably Dr. Deville is right, and that in time those surveys must be performed, and it was his duty to come to the minister and ask for sufficient money to have them performed. But that does not say that we must push into these territories this year. He had added $160,000 before he took anything off. Having added $160,000, he deducts that amount. All the minister has to do is to say to Dr. Deville "We want to make an equal reduction with the year before", and he should be able to do it, because the expenses of surveys this year are not as much as the expenses last year. He knows that the expenses of equipment and of surveys are not as large this year. Things have gone down. He can get the same amount of work done with less money than last year. There should be no difficulty in making a reduction equal to last year's reduction, and, unless he does that, he makes no substantial reduction. Why can he not come down in the estimate? Even then, the estimate is higher than it ever was before the necessities of the soldiers' settlement came in. Certainly, all the soldiers did not go on Dominion land. If they had done so, we would have required one million and a half for the surveys. But there were several applications for Dominion lands requiring substantial expense for surveys, and this was not the only thing. There were several other things in relation to obligations which had been entered into with provinces in regard to boundary surveys.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They are still in existence.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think they are completed.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is not the one completed in British Columbia?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, there are still some surveys not completed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think there is much to do.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): But they are still there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The international boundary surveys are not in this book. Anyway, there is very little to do in the way of boundary surveys and practically nothing in the way of soldiers settlement and there is really no reason why there should not be as much deduction this year as last year.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment is carried.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understood the hon. gentleman withdrew his amendment altogether.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I made the suggestion to my hon. friend (Garland Bow River) and he said he would withdraw it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then the amendment that is carried is the one moved by the minister?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: In regard to the question as to where these oil leases are being located, I was pleased to hear the minister say that some very severe regulations were in force. I hope the minister will take into consideration the possibility of eliminating speculation in oil leases. As the hon. gentleman has been living in Edmonton for some years past, he knows very well the great hardships, that are being suffered because of speculation in oil leases, and I hope he will take that matter into consideration when he is going over this regulation.

Item as amended, agreed to.

Protection of timber in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the N.W.T. and the Railway belt in B.C., Tree culture in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and inspection and management of forest reserves, $1,000,000.

Mr. STEVENS: I would like to ask the minister what steps are being taken in connection with this work, and, in doing so, I take this opportunity of bringing to his attention, and to the attention of the House, the serious condition developing in Canada with the rapid depletion of our forests reserves—a condition which I think is really becoming alarming. Of course, a part of what I refer to and, which I have in mind, is not wholly under the jurisdiction of the minister, but in the railway belt of British Columbia the conditions to which I refer obtain as well—that is through waste in methods of lumbering, through forest fires and through the depredations of insects of one kind and another. This deforestation or denuding of our lands and forests is, I think, one of the greatest problems facing this Dominion to-day. It is the same thing in the maritime provinces, and the northern and other parts of Quebec, northern Ontario, and it is becoming serious, even in the province of British Columbia, which has been looked upon as having very large areas of primitive timber. I would like to ask the minister if there is in his mind, or in the purview of the Government, for the immediate future, the consideration of reforestation and of more care of existing forests. I hesitate to make these observations, because under these conditions, perhaps one ought to be prepared to substantiate his remarks with data, but I have not the data under my hand at the moment. Perhaps this is a suitable opportunity for the minister to tell the committee just what steps are being taken. I think it might be beneficial.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I presume what the hon. gentleman has in mind is reforestation as well as the care of the existing forests. It does not appear that the Forestry Department have entered upon a very large programme of reforestation, but there is a report here of what they have done to date. It reads:

Reforestation by planting is not being undertaken on a large scale, as in most places natural reproduction is fairly satisfactory, and in any case it is not advisable to undertake large planting operations until the fire preventive system is thoroughly organized and equipped.

Experimental planting has been done on the following reserves:

	Acres
Spruce woods	129¼
Riding mountain	6½
Duck mountain	2
Turtle mountain	1
Manito	4
Elbow	18
Dunburn	17
Beaver Mills	1
Pines	16
Nisbet	4
Cypress hills	1¼
Cooking lake	5
	205

Seeding has been done on the Spruce woods, Riding mountain and Cooking lake reserves.

Most of the stock for planting is grown at the forest nursery station at Indian Head, Saskatchewan.

Mr. STEVENS: That is all in the prairie provinces.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, practically all of it. There is not any doubt that steps should be taken in a more adequate way to preserve our forests. I have some knowledge of this in my own province, from the devastation by fire in our spruce timbered areas. One can realize what a terrific amount of damage fire can do in a very short period. I know considerable criticism has been offered with respect to fire ranging, and last year the fire patrol at High river—that is the aerial patrol—located 57 fires. I have not the report with me, but I think the report I have at the office states that in a short season they were able to locate fifty-seven fires. I am somewhat anxious that that should be continued, because I think millions of dollars are lost annually by forest fires, and some more adequate steps should be taken to protect our forest areas. I do not believe it is necessary, in many parts of Canada, to replant, because I think the natural growth, if fire prevention is undertaken, will take care of reforestation. But we have allowed our timber areas to be reduced almost to the danger point, and it will be wise on the part of the Government to take whatever steps seem to be necessary for the prevention of fire, and the reforestation of many areas in Canada that are unfitted for any other purpose. I expect to make a personal investigation as well as to get all the information I can on this matter, and, perhaps, on another occasion I may ask for an increased grant.

The aerial patrol is very expensive, and yet, after all, perhaps, it is not so expensive as it appears to be at first sight, inasmuch as it covers so much more territory than can be done by a man on horseback or on foot, and can locate fires at a time when it is much easier to control and extinguish them than when they have gathered considerable headway and done considerable damage.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am glad to hear the minister say a good word about the air patrol. I had the honour, last year and the year before, of presenting to this House the estimates in respect of the Canadian Air Service, and I endeavoured, in my humble way, to emphasize the great usefulness of the air service as regards forest patrol. I regret, at that time, my views did not meet with ready approval from the Opposition benches, and I am glad, indeed, to hear the minister say tonight that, in his judgment, the air service, as a means of fire control, is a particularly good service and that although expensive at first glance, upon examination, it need not be so expensive on account of the great extent of territory which the air patrol covers. I believe, that last year, prior to Christmas, over fifty incipent fires were discovered by that part of the air service located at High River. The air service has a great opportunity to discover fires; and when fire is discovered in its incipient stages, it can be very easily dealt with; whereas, if a day elapses or even a few hours elapse before it is discovered, it may become an uncontrollable force and tremendous destruction of property may ensue. I sincerely hope that the Government, in view of the statement of the minister, will see to it that the air service of this country is continued upon a proper basis, in order that it may be utilized for the purposes for which it has been utilized during the past two or three years, in the protection of the forests of this country. I know it was argued, last session and the session before, that the Dominion government should not take part in this work; that it was essentially a provincial work, and that the provinces, if they wanted to protect their timber, should protect it at their own expense. There are, however, in this Dominion, forests of which the timber belongs to this Government. Surely it is the duty of this country to protect that timber, and the most efficient way of discovering fire is by means of the air service. I am afraid the estimates for the air service for the present year do not contemplate very much work of this kind. So far as I can gather, those estimates are rather directed towards military service in connection with the air service of Canada. Essentially, it is a military force, and probably, under present day conditions, no military force can exist or should be allowed to exist without a suitable air force. But there is the other side to the question; there is the civil aviation side and that is the side which should appeal to the House, perhaps more than the military side. Something should be in the Estimates to preserve that force for the purpose of looking after our forests, for the discovering of fire and for preserving a large amount of this country's wealth which, at any time, may be devoured by flame.

Mr. CALDWELL: Might I suggest to the minister a method of fire detection that has been used in the maritime provinces for the last two or three years? It is possible it may not apply so readily to the prairie provinces. The New Brunswick government has sought out the highest mountains in that province; it has erected on them towers or shelters for the look-out men who are stationed there, and these shelters are connected by field telephones with headquarters or with the local telephone line, so that the men can get connection with headquarters. In this way they are able to detect fire at a great distance because, from the high peaks, one is able to get a survey of a large stretch of territory. This method of fire detection is very inexpensive; whereas the air service for fire protection, while it is very efficient, is very expensive. Our provincial government uses the aerial method as well, but in a very limited degree, on account of the fact that look-outs, as they are called, have been established pretty generally throughout the province on those high mountains. I just call this to the attention of the minister, because I feel, in this way, a small expenditure gives great results.

Mr. MANION: Does the minister happen to have under his hand at the moment the percentage of timber and of pulpwood in the Dominion which is under the control of the Dominion government and the percentage which is under the control of the provincial governments.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have not the figures with me, but I think I can get them.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. MANION: The reason I asked the question is that I should like to ask another question bearing upon this matter. I suppose the minister has been receiving copies of circulars which have been distributed by various people who are deeply interested in the forests of this country. In some of the circulars sent out by men who, one would conclude, are very well posted on the question, serious statements are made as to the condition of the forests of this country. As the hon. member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) has said, if the statement in regard to the rapid depletion of our forests can be sustained, the condition is certainly a serious one for this country. In view of those statements, is the minister's department looking into this question and taking into consideration the idea of dealing with those statements, and, if they are correct, of bringing about legislation to carry out the suggestions put forward in those circulars?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it intended to discontinue the aerial patrol service in southern Alberta, or to do away with the High River station?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That does not come under the control of the Department of the Interior, but I can say frankly that the department will be glad to avail itself of the services of that patrol. No doubt that matter will come up for discussion when the estimates for that particular service are being considered.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understood that this matter was under the Department of the Interior, and I also understood that the minister had secured some permanent buildings in High River for this service.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It was never under the control of the Interior Department but under the Air Board, up to last year at least.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And Dr. Deville, of the department, was on the Air Board.

Mr. MANION: Has the minister any information on the question I asked a moment ago?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Fifteen per cent of the total area is under the control of the federal government, and that area is found in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Mr. MANION: What information has the minister on the other question regarding the circulars, and the seriousness of the situation referred to?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The officials of the department are aware of the circulars having been issued, and all efforts of the department are directed towards the preservation of the forests. Everything that is done has that end in view.

Mr. MANION: Do the officials regard these circulars as exaggerating, or rather representing, the condition that actually exists?

Mr. CALDWELL: Before the minister answers, I may say that I know the writer of one of these circulars, and he is willing to back his theory with his own money. I refer to Mr. Frank J. Barnjum.

Mr. MANION: That is the man I refer to.

Mr. CALDWELL: He has offered cash prizes to individuals in the maritime provinces, and also in Quebec and Manitoba, for the best area of reforested land.

Mr. MANION: Does my hon. friend know of the serious statements that have been made in regard to the conditions that exist?

Mr. CALDWELL: I will come to that. This man has also offered prizes to individuals for any area of young spruce and fir trees, but especially spruce, planted to the satisfaction of the forestry officers. He is putting up his personal funds to carry on this work, so that he is quite earnest about it. With regard to the destruction of forests by the spruce bud moth, I am only too sorry to say that I know what has been said to be absolutely true. It is estimated that 60 per cent of the spruce in New Brunswick has been killed in the last three or four or five years by this moth. I am glad to know that the evil is diminishing, and like other pests it may suffer a natural extinction. Otherwise, I feel that any action the Government or private individuals may take in the way of reforestation will be of no avail unless something is done to combat the ravages of this insect. I do not know whether the federal department has taken any action in this matter in the nature of research work. I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), one evening when his estimates were before the House, what was being done, and he replied that they were using the aerial service to locate the killed areas so that they might direct the lumbermen just where to cut, in order to save the timber before it was too far gone. If the timber is cut within one or two years of its being affected it is still good, but after three or four years it is utterly useless, either as lumber or pulp. I thought at the time, although I did not express the opinion, that it is rather futile merely to give locations to the lumbermen. Having lumbered somewhat myself, I know that every lumberman has his own cruisers on the various grounds to determine where to cut, and where and to what extent there has been any damage. I would rather see a department of the federal government devote its money and energy to finding, if possible, a remedy for this evil, because some means ought to be found of combating the ravages of these insects. I do not know whether the minister's department has any data on the subject, but he can readily realize what a serious menace these insects are. Any large area of forest infected by flies, for instance, which migrate from one locality to another, is soon in danger of destruction. These flies attack the very tops of the trees, which have the appearance of having been singed by fire, and after a while the injury gradually works down until the trees are entirely destroyed. Perhaps the minister may have some information as to what research work, if any, has been done to ascertain the extent of the activities of those provinces that own their timber. I understood from the Minister of Agriculture that his department was carrying on some such work. Work of this kind, I think, should be undertaken by one department of the Government. The Department of Agriculture does something, while the Interior Department carries on independent activities, and thus there is likely to be overlapping. This is a serious question and the minister might say what the policy of the Government is.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The work is carried out in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture, whose entomologists make a study of insect pests. In British Columbia, where the bark beetle seems to be ravaging the forests, work is being done in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture, the provincial authorities, and the Forestry branch, towards the extermination of all insects. I agree with the hon. member that overlapping should be avoided as far as possible, and that one department should undertake the responsibility of prosecuting this particular work. It is quite obvious that these insects are destructive to forest life. I have no personal information on the subject, and I did not know that the forests in my own province were being attacked by insects.

Mr. MANION: What information is there in regard to the authenticity of the statements to which I have already drawn attention?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is no definite information, but the officials of the department think that probably the statements are not overdrawn.

Mr. COOTE: I might return to the subject of the aerial patrol at High river. This is an important matter, which, I understand, comes under the Department of the Interior. It is possible that the service is furnished by the Air Board. I am not very familiar with the details, but I want to impress on the Minister of the Interior, and perhaps more forcibly upon the committee, the importance of the work at that particular station. They patrol the forest reserve, in, I think, the Clearwater, the Bow river and the Crow's Nest districts. The Crow's Nest and Bow river areas are particularly in need of this patrol, for irrigation projects in southern Alberta are already under way which will take practically all the available waters from the rivers in that territory, and the head waters of those rivers are all located in the forest reserves. Now, if those forest areas are allowed to be burnt over, it is questionable whether the rivers will then supply sufficient water at the proper season of the year for irrigation purposes, and the Government has already invested considerable money in surveys for these irrigation projects. For that reason I would impress upon the committee the necessity of continuing the aerial forest patrol at High River station. Last year the service located fifty-one fires, which were all extinguished without doing any considerable damage, with the exception of one fire which started in British Columbia and had gained headway before it was visible to the patrol. In case this is not under the minister's department, and not included in the estimates under discussion, I would specially plead with him that he use his influence with the Air Board to see that the service at this particular station is not discontinued, because it serves a dual purpose in the preservation of the timber and of the water supply for the irrigation system in southern Alberta.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Forestry branch value very much the work done by the air service in the location of forest fires, and there can be no doubt about the advantage and utility of employing the Air Force for this particular work, although perhaps it was not primarily organized for that purpose. It becomes increasingly apparent that drastic measures will have to be adopted to prevent destruction by fire alone, without taking into consideration destruction by insect pests. I think it will be generally admitted that fire is the most destructive agency we have to contend with in the preservation of our timber resources, and every effort should be made to check forest fires.

Mr. WARNER: I visited the department that is handling our forest fire patrol by air service, and I was assured that there was no intention of discontinuing the patrol at High river. I was informed, however, that the estimates for this service having been reduced, they would have to curtail the patrol more or less. I was glad to observe that those in charge fully understand the necessity of this service not only to protect the value of the timber but by keeping the live timber on the eastern slopes to preserve the rainfall and snow, as the conservation of this moisture materially affects all the country lying to the east of the foothills, as well as being of vital importance to the successful operation of the irrigation projects referred to by my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Steedsman). Any one who has studied that district understands very well the benefits accruing from the retention of the air service. The service has been a little expensive, but the departmental officials admit that the expense will be lowered very much in future compared with the amount of work that can be done.

Mr. COOTE: The minister has told us that tree cultivation is carried on to a small extent in several of the forest reserves. Yesterday and to-day we were told in discussing the agricultural estimates that to make agriculture permanent in some of the older settlements of the prairie provinces it was necessary to go into mixed farming. That is quite true, but there is something here that is of as great importance to agriculture in those areas as mixed farming, and that is the cultivation of trees. Has the minister taken into consideration the advisability of demonstrating, not in the forest reserves, but out on the open prairie, what can be done in tree planting, and so encouraging the farmers to plant trees, because I am quite sure that in that direction lies the salvation of those areas to a great extent? It might be worth while for the department to start a plantation, to be extended from time to time, that would act as a shelter belt, and where the settlers might go for the purpose of securing young trees for use on their farms.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That work has been carried on in all the years that I have been in the Northwest. Trees are supplied to farmers for planting on prairie farms in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The species distributed are mainly Manitoba maple, elm, ash, cottonwood, Russian poplar, and willow. Some spruce, tamarack and pine are also distributed for which a small fee is charged. The reports of the inspectors show that these plantations have a high average of success. There are two nurseries for the purpose. One was established at Indian Head in 1903 and one at Sutherland in 1912. The increased demand for trees made necessary the increase of accommodation for furnishing the supply. The new nursery is now supplying trees for distribution and this supply is largely increasing as the nursery develops. The number of trees distributed in 1921 was 4,083,975 to 3,603 applicants. The average number of trees sent to each applicant was 1,092.

Mr. COOTE: I am quite aware that this work has been carried on, but the minister has possibly not quite grasped what I was driving at in regard to those plantations out on the bald prairies. What I suggest, and what in my humble opinion would be of very great value to the settlers there, would be a demonstration on those drought-stricken areas of what can actually be done. These settlers are in such condition financially that it is almost impossible for them to experiment in tree planting, and if any area could be set aside there for demonstration of what could be 10 p.m. accomplished in the way of tree growing, the results should be of great benefit to the settlers. It was brought out in the course of the discussion that these settlers might ultimately have to move out to other parts of the province.

Item agreed to.

For surveys and investigations of water and power resources, and for administration of water-powers, etc., $367,000.

Mr. HODGINS: In view of the possible taking over by the provinces of their natural resources, could this item not be reduced?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Agreements have been entered into between the Water Powers branch and the various provincial governments for surveys of this character. All provinces, therefore, irrespective of whether or not the natural resources go back to them, are receiving service of this character.

Item agreed to.

Reclamation of Dominion lands by drainag· (including revote of $69,000), $217,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This is a matter in which I have been interested for some time and which I discussed with the department when I was provincial premier. Arrangements were made with the federal department by the western provinces with respect to reclamation, and on assuming office I found that one project under way had not been completed; the vote this year is for its completion. It is not the intention of the department to carry on any further surveys in this connection; it is believed that the work can be done more advantageously by the provinces themselves. Where Dominion lands are affected we are prepared to enter into agreements to turn those lands over to the provinces or to individuals whom the provinces may suggest as proper persons to be entrusted with drainage projects.

Item agreed to.

Canadian National parks, $966,500.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a substantial increase in this item. Would the minister be kind enough to explain it?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The apparent increase of $166,500 is not an increase when the three Governor General's warrants, granted in August, October, and November last, totalling $166,500, are taken into account. The increase of $166,500 over the original vote last year, is due mainly to:

Banff Windermere road..	$81,000
Fencing additional area in Elk Island Park to provide sufficient pasture for the increasing number of buffalo..	16,000
Edith Cavell road, Jasper park.. ..	10,000

Town planning work transferred from Conservation Commission August 1st, last	10,160
New park area-Vidal's Point on shore of lake Katepwa near Indian Head	2,670

The balance is made up of small amounts required for maintenance of roads, streets, public buildings, recreational facilities, etc., which are exceptionally high because during the war, the parks appropriations were reduced to $300,000 for two years, and $349,670 for two years, which were not sufficient to provide adequately for the general maintenance work in the parks. The total number of visitors to all the parks last year was approximately 160,000, about 60,000 of whom were foreigners. Allowing an average expenditure of $300 for each foreign visitor, this represents over $18,000,000 brought into the country, in return for which we sent practically nothing out. Capitalizing this revenue on the basis of a 5 per cent dividend, it means that the national parks are worth to-day $360,000,000 to the people of Canada, and their value is increasing yearly. This does not take into account what they are worth as playgrounds to Canadians themselves. The country's return was about twenty times our expenditure, and it must be remembered a good deal of this was spent on new road construction forming an investment on capital account that will bring in its own revenue in the near future. Anyone who has visited the Banff park will realize its immense value from the point of view of the tourists who visit it as well as of the residents of the country who go there. The Windermere road, which we hope to complete this year, will make a connecting link that will bring the tourists from the international boundary north of Calgary, through the Banff park, on to the lakes in British Columbia, and, returning, either by way of the coast or back through the Crow's Nest pass. This is a portion of the work that we have been asked to complete, notwithstanding the fact we may find ourselves short of money; for it will bring to Canada a great number of people who otherwise might not come here. With respect to the Jasper park, and to the other parks that are on the National system of railways, I think they should be developed in order that we can encourage traffic upon our own railways and get a return for these investments. I believe I am safe in asserting that if these playgrounds along our National railways are developed even to the extent that the Banff park is developed to-day, it will mean a very considerable addition to the earnings of these railways. I am strongly in favour of developing those playgrounds.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understood the minister to say that the increase of $166,500 represented the three Governor General's warrants which were issued last year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Why are they in the estimates of this year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They are in the estimates; I was simply pointing out that the estimate of last year, plus the Governor General's warrants, equalled the estimate of this year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I thought the minister meant. He is asking for the same amount as was necessary last year.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Were the warrants exactly this amount? I do not think so.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The officials inform me the warrants were: $100,000, $50,000 and $16,500. I may say that I know something of the necessity for the last warrant—namely, the unemployment situation was taken into consideration in connection with the construction of the Banff-Windermere road and on that account construction was continued after the appropriation was exhausted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That was one of the major factors in determining the Government to press on with that work? I listened with pleasure indeed to the minister's defence of the expenditure in connection with these parks. I can remember well when that same duty devolved on me, when I was not treated with quite the same consideration across the floor, when I was told that this expenditure was merely catering to the rich and was really not for the good of the country at all; and in my humble way I had to defend it and say that our parks were an asset for the whole country in that they brought money into Canada. I can remember as well having to adduce figures in an endeavour to show that we really obtained as much profit per acre from the rocks and mountains of our parks as from the wheat fields of Alberta. That, perhaps, would not amount to very much now because I have been taught to believe by hon. gentlemen to my left that there is no profit per acre on the wheat fields. Anyway if the one source of revenue fails let the other continue. I am grateful that the minister is now able to present to a much more sympathetic audience the case that I presented before.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It depends on the minister.

Item agreed to.

Grant to Alpine Club of Canada, $1,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I really think the minister should not have the heart to ask for this $1,000 for the Alpine Club in the absence of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster).

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, have a heart!

Mr. MEIGHEN: I recall the battle that he waged in this House year after year—waged against heavy odds and with considerable support around him—to save the suffering people of this country from this awful imposition of a thousand dollars—a thousand dollars that he saw passing from the treasury into the pockets of the rich and the powerful to enable them to enjoy the scenery of the Alps of Canada assisted by the hard earned savings of the people of this country. The hon. member is absent to-night but I know it could not have been by intention, because even this session I find that the memory of the filching from the treasury that had been done by this Alpine Club has not passed from him. I can recall well that he reminded me of it only about two weeks ago; but here when there is opportunity to save the nation from this imposition he is absent from his duty. I will not, I am sure, appeal to the minister in vain when I ask him just to let this item stand in order that the House may be treated once more to the lugubrious eloquence of the hon. member for Brome.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I also have a recollection of being attacked on a similar vote in the legislature of the province from which I come, and knowing the sympathetic mind and heart of the right hon. gentleman I am sure he will agree to allow this item to pass realizing what we have both suffered in the past in this connection.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Are none of the other critics going to speak at all?—because the hon. member for Brome was not alone.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, he was alone.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh no, my recollection is much more intimate than that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I am sure that the hon. member for Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Lanctot) was one of his coadjutors and I see him now in his seat.

Mr. LANCTOT: I am here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And silent.

Item agreed to.

Seed Grain Advances—Amount required to meet uncollected portions of advances of seed grain made in the Western provinces by the chartered banks to holders of unpatented Dominion lands under the guarantee of the Dominion Government, also including commission payable to banks for collections, fees to secretary treasurers of municipalities and officers of the provincial departments of agriculture, clerical assistance, travelling expenses, etc., $200,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presume the method that was installed about three years ago is being continued by the minister—the method of guaranteeing the banks up to a narrow margin of interest, giving them an incentive to collect this money themselves? Also, how much of the vote of $500,000 last year was actually spent? I know it was absolutely impossible to judge how much we should need?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MEIGHEN: About the amount being asked this year. I think the minister will, if he has looked into the matter, be able to report to the committee that this method has saved the country very large sums of money and has proved efficient, effective, and economical, meeting the situation in every way.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I thoroughly agree with what the right hon. gentleman has said. So far as I have been able to learn it is the most economical method of dealing with the situation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That, I presume, will be read by the critics of long ago who are absent or inert to-night.

Item agreed to.

Conciliation and Labour Act, including publication, printing, binding and distribution of Labour Gazette and allowance to correspondents, $50,000.

Mr. McBRIDE: I do not see that there is much use in our sitting in the chamber unless we can hear what is going on.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister might give us a statement as to the progress made under this item, in the Nova Scotia coal situation.

Hon. JAMES MURDOCK (Minister of Labour): This particular vote has nothing to do with the Nova Scotia coal situation.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think the minister is treating the House with courtesy when he makes that statement. I am not seeking to pester him with things that do not come under the item, but as I read this item it is:

Conciliation and Labour Act, including publication, printing, binding and distribution of Labour Gazette and allowance to correspondents, $50,000.

Surely, under the duties of the department and the administration of the Conciliation and Labour Act, I would be justified in asking a very ordinary question, and I think the House has been very tolerant with my hon. friend in refraining long ago from inquiring as to what progress has been made in the settlement of the strike. If the minister refuses to answer, then we are to rely upon press reports, and when he refuses to answer my very simple question, I think I am justified in making a few speculations. It would appear from items in the press that very satisfactory progress has not been made. I think the minister should take this opportunity to tell the House just what progress he has made. Certainly I am amazed at his bald, blank, and scarcely courteous refusal to give the information.

Mr. MURDOCK: I am very sorry, indeed, Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend from Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) understood me as being discourteous in suggesting to him that the next item that we will have to discuss is the one which has to do with the expense connected with handling the mining difficulties in Nova Scotia. There was no intention of being discourteous. I now understand that the hon. gentleman would like some information as to the status of the situation in Nova Scotia, which we discussed in this House some weeks ago, and, of course, I will be very glad to give such information as I have at hand in regard to that matter. As hon. gentlemen have seen from press reports, an effort was made to reconvene the Gillen Board. As a matter of fact, the Gillen Board was reconvened, and, shortly after reconvening in Halifax, two members of the board, in substance and in effect, wired their resignation to me, indicating that they had no authority, as a reconvened board, to deal with the question that had been indicated in this House they should properly and effectively deal with. The resignation of the two members of the board, namely the chairman and the representative of the employees, was promptly accepted by the minister, and later I received from the former representative of the company on that board a letter which, in substance, indicated that he was heartily in accord with the belief of his colleagues that the reconvened board could not, under any intent of the law, deal again with the situation that they had undertaken to deal with in January last. The result was that we undertook, of course, in carrying out the evident desire of this House, to at once institute a new board of investigation under 63A of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, as amended in 1918, and that board is now in course of formation. A week ago last Wednesday the miners' representative appointed a member to that board to represent the employees. The companies have not yet appointed their representative. They asked for some delay, sufficient to compensate or make allowance for the holiday, which was given them. That time expires to-night, when, if an appointment has not been made by the companies, it will be the duty of the minister to appoint a representative for the companies. Then it will be necessary for another five days to elapse, in which we hope that the two members appointed will agree on the choice of a chairman. If they fail to do so, it will again devolve upon the minister to choose a chairman for the board, so that we hope to have a newly established board functioning in regard to the mining dispute of Nova Scotia within the next ten days.

Mr. STEVENS: What is the condition of the dispute now?

Mr. MURDOCK: The condition, as I understand it, is that coal mining is going on under fairly satisfactory conditions. The strike-on-the-job, in so far as it was ever effective, has been, as I understand, distinctly and entirely abandoned, full work is being given ungrudgingly, and the actual coal mining situation is better than it was when we discussed the matter in the House on the 30th March last. Of course, I judge that is because the men believe that, as soon as possible, there will be another board functioning and investigating entirely the situation on their behalf.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was very strongly under the impression that the Government was only wasting time in this dispute in endeavouring to reconvene the old board. However, I had not studied the act particularly, and I assumed the Prime Minister, who had charge of the matter, and who, I had understood framed the act, knew its terms, and that when he accepted the suggestion of the leader of the Progressive party that the old board be reconvened, he was accepting something that was practical and that would lead somewhere. But on subsequent inquiry I find the impression I was under was absolutely and plainly correct, and that there could be no possible misinterpretation of the matter at all. I must say that, under the circumstances, and a very clear reading of the statute, I do not know why the Government ever set to work to attempt to reconvene the old board, to go back into the old dispute, because, manifestly, the old board had no power in the world to go back in to that dispute. The old board had completed its functions when it made its report, and it could only be reconvened for the purpose of interpreting that report under section 22A of the act. It could not be reconvened and reassume any of the powers at all that it formerly exercised. All it could do would be to go down and give the support of either side without any powers at all. Consequently, when the old board was presumably reconvened, time was being wasted, and when the members resigned they were resigning offices they did not hold. They had nothing to resign. The offices they had held terminated sometime before, with the handing in of their report. So that there was nothing but time wasted in connection with the reconvening of the old board.

Of course, the minister under the provisions of section 63A, which he has just referred to, and properly referred to, could properly appoint a new board. He could, by going through the regular process, or rather he could not, but the parties to the dispute, could, if they so chose, have taken the former members. But they were the men to make the choice; under the act, the Government could not make the choice at all. If the Government was operating under the act, the Government had to leave it to the parties to name their representatives. All the rest of the procedure was just so much, I will not say intentional, but just so much waste time, and I could not help thinking that the minister himself has been of that impression all along. With, however, that time gone, simply through inappreciation of the law owing to hasty action on the part of members of the Government, we are now apparently at the stage where the law is being complied with, where, under section 63-A, the minister is taking steps to have a new board established. That is all right. I do not know whether that is the best method or not; the minister ought to be in a position to know that a great deal better than I. There may be some advantage in having a royal commission under the Inquiries Act, and I am quite prepared to accept his judgment that this is the best step to take. I am glad to see something done to bring about better conditions and to have the Labour Department function as it is intended to function in disputes of this kind. Let me, however, express the hope that, when the board is appointed, it goes to the ground and learns all the facts; that the minister sees, to the best of his ability, that it goes there, and also that, hereafter, when we have declarations of labour policy from the Minister of Labour, we shall be able to understand that they are declarations of government policy. I presume, however, that all are concurring with the minister this time in the appointment of a new board under section 63-A, and that this is not a step which he is taking, only to be repudiated by his colleagues later on.

Mr. MURDOCK: I am, indeed, gratified to hear this evening the statement from my right hon. friend. I was personally convinced, on the third day of April, when he rose from his seat in this House and undertook to insist that, unconditionally, the Gillen Board be reconvened, he knew full well or believed that it would be inconsistent with the provision and intent of the act, under all the circumstances, to reconvene that board, and that the board, when it was convened, would have no effect or authority in law. I felt, at that time, that my right hon. friend—and I am not criticising in this—was endeavouring to assist in delaying the game for the purpose, possibly, of casting some reflection upon the Minister of Labour or the Labour Department or, possibly, upon some of the present colleagues or associates of the Minister of Labour in the present Government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the minister proceeds further in reference to my statement, will he read my words where I insisted that the Gillen Board be reconvened? I certainly intended to insist that what was done be done unconditionally as regards Mr. McLachlan; but I did not insist or suggest that the Gillen Board be reconvened. What page is it?

Mr. MURDOCK: Page 621, April 3. The language is:

> Mr. Meighen: Anyway, I understand that the reconvening of the board is wholly irrespective of the repudiation of Mr. McLachlan's stand.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MURDOCK: Again, on the same page:

> Mr. Meighen: Unconditionally?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear. Certainly. I understood the reconvening of the board to be unconditional, and unconditional, not depending at all on McLachlan's stand. I never made even the suggestion that the board be reconvened—much less insisted that it be reconvened; but when hon. gentlemen said that the board was going to be reconvened, I asked if the reconvening was to be unconditional and stated my understanding that it was to be unconditional. Will the hon. gentleman cease now to misrepresent me? Will he read the preceding paragraph?

Mr. MURDOCK: I have not the slightest desire or intention of misrepresenting my right hon. friend; but if I might be permitted to suggest, it is purely and simply, as a result of the position taken and insisted upon by my right hon. friend, that the delay of the past two or three weeks has occurred in dealing with the mining situation in Nova Scotia. No other statement or reason is responsible for the delay that has occurred, during the past two or three weeks,in placing a board on the job, properly functioning under the law, to do the thing that this House of Commons, according to its declaration on the evening of March 30, last, wanted done. I know how capable the right hon. gentleman is when he undertakes to convince this house that he is not responsible or to disprove anything which I might say to the contrary. I know full well how easily and readily he will evade the responsibility and undertake to place it upon some of my colleagues or upon myself. Again, I repeat, as Minister of Labour, that the Right hon. Arthur Meighen is primarily responsible

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MURDOCK: The right hon. leader of the Opposition is primarily responsible for the delay of the last two or three weeks, which delay I can assure him I am trying to make up for as fast as possible under the law. As he has said and given me credit for, I felt at the time, after the discussion and after full consideration of the law, that the law did not contemplate the reconvening of the board for the purpose of going as fully into all the circumstances as this House appeared to indicate it wanted those circumstances investigated. We could have reconvened the board in order to express its opinion on some phase of its previous award, but I did not think we could have reconvened it for the purpose of an entirely renewed investigation. The situation is as I have stated. We are endeavouring to make up now, as best we can, for lost time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I cannot say whether astonishment or amusement is uppermost in my mind listening to the speech of the minister. I am responsible, he says, for three weeks' delay; and if I got his remarks correctly, although I am finding increasing difficulty in following him, as he is getting further from the realm of reason every time he speaks, the cause of that delay is that I insisted on the Gillen Board being reconvened. I may be entitled to all the compliments he pays me as to fidelity to reason and, consequently, some success in convincing people; but I shall not need to over-exercise any of those powers to-night. Hon. members were present in this Chamber all through these discussions, and, if any hon. member has any recollection of my even suggesting the reconvening of the Gillen Board, I should like him now to stand in his place and say so. He will search Hansard in vain for any suggestion, either in the first discussion or the second. On the first discussion, as every hon. member knows, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), in perfectly good faith, having heard the debate, having heard the impossible position taken up by the minister, with which position nobody, not even his colleagues, could agree, suggested that the Gillen Board be reconvened; that it be asked to go back and complete on the ground the work that it had commenced. That was followed by the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who stated his confidence in the personnel of that board, and recited certain questions that he had put to the parties that had come down to ask for a royal commission. Those parties had themselves stated that they believed that the members of that board had endeavoured to do what was right, and the Minister of Finance repeated, at that time, that he had made a suggestion that the Gillen Board was the proper one. That was followed by a proclamation of the minister to the press—because he keeps very close to the press, whatever faults he may have—to the effect that they could not move until McLachlan came down and receded from his position. Consequently the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) having taken the one stand, accepting the suggestion of the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Crerar), in which I had no part at all, and as respects which I did not even make a statement, and the Minister of Labour having made a statement to the press of the country wholly contradictory of his colleague's view, I asked in the House, the next day, what was to be done. I called attention to both statements and inquired whether the board was to be reconvened, or whether the policy of the Minister of Labour, as stated in the press, was to be carried out. I was promptly and distinctly informed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that the Gillen Board was to be reconvened, and that steps had already been taken—I think I am giving the words of the hon. member, or, at least, their effect—to get in communication with the members of the board; whereupon, having in mind the proclamation of the minister that nothing would be done until there was a repudiation of the stand taken by Mr. McLachlan and his men. I asked whether this reconvening was to be unconditional and irrespective of the conduct of Mr. McLachlan.

Mr. MURDOCK: Does my hon. friend think that the Minister of Labour acted in disregard of the rights of all the people of Canada when he took the position that no consideration should be given to a man or men who promulgated and sought to carry out any such thing as they were talking about, such as "loafing on the job?" Does he think that the Minister of Labour improperly took that position? My hon. friend appears to justify the conduct, the attitude, and the claims of McLachlan on April 3rd, and I want to know whether or not I misunderstand him in this respect.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Let me assure the minister that he will not misunderstand me tonight; but I will assure him, first of all, that he will not switch me from the point, until I am through, no matter how he struggles to do so. I will finish that first.

Mr. MURDOCK: And you will give me an answer to that question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have given the answer already, but I have no objection to repeating it. The point is this: having pointed out this conflict of statements with the Government, I asked the Prime Minister whether the board was to be reconvened as intimated by the Minister of Finance two or three days before, and the Prime Minister gave a clear and unequivocal answer. To make sure that there was to be nothing conditional about it, I inquired whether this reconvening was to be conditional or unconditional, and was told that it was to be unconditional. Now, what is to be thought of a minister of the Crown, in the face of these facts, coming to Parliament to-night and asserting that I am the father of the reconvening of the board, and that, because I inquired whether it was to be done unconditionally, therefore, all the delay connected with the reconvening is attributable to me? Is that the only sense of reason the minister has? Is that the best he can do?

Mr. MURDOCK: A mere knowledge of the facts is all I have.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister's knowledge of the facts may be all right, but in his expression of them he is all wrong.

Mr. MURDOCK: I am willing to let the people of Canada judge who is to blame for the delay.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We are now before the members of this House. Now what the minister asks to-night is another question altogether, a question debated in this House some weeks ago on the motion of the member for Calgary (Mr. Irvine). My judgment on that is exactly as expressed then. I did not feel that the conduct of McLachlan was such that it could in any way be made an excuse for the Department of Labour to cease functioning. That is the opinion I expressed then and to which I adhere now; and that seemed to be the opinion of the Government, however different it may have been from the opinion of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. MANION: The publication, the printing, binding and distribution of the Labour Gazette comes under this item. I have heard the opinion expressed in the past by labour men that the table which is given in the Labour Gazette on the cost of living is absolutely unreliable. The minister has no doubt seen this table many times. Does he think it is a reliable guide as to the cost of living?

Mr. MURDOCK: When did my hon. friend hear this opinion?

Mr. MANION: I heard it during the regime of the late government. It came to my hearing in the past; I have not heard it since my hon. friend has been Minister of Labour. Like myself, he has been only a short time in office.

Mr. MURDOCK: So far as I have had an opportunity to look into the matter, I believe that the figures contained in the Labour Gazette in regard to either the increase or the decrease in the cost of living are as nearly accurate as they can be made under all the circumstances. The Dominion statistician gets the figures in regard to the cost of all the commodities that go to make up the cost of living, and these figures are compiled as carefully as possible and put into shape for the Labour Gazette. As I say, they are as nearly accurate as they can possibly be made, although I have not the slightest doubt that any gentleman who cared to do so could prove that at some particular town or in some locality the figures were slightly different, one way or the other, from those given in the Gazette. Generally speaking, however, they are reliable.

Mr. MANION: I merely wanted the information. I was desirous to know whether, in the minister's opinion, the figures given in the Gazette were reasonably accurate.

Item agreed to.

Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, $35,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Has the minister any information regarding the rather serious dispute in District 18, the Crow's Nest?

Mr. MURDOCK: Under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, the board has been functioning in District 18 for some days now, although, for some reason which I am not quite aware of, it has been for two or three days off the job. The board reconvenes again on the 25th at Canmore, having been already at Drumheller, where it spent three or four days investigating.

Mr. STEVENS: And the men are on strike in the meantime?

Mr. MURDOCK: Yes; they left the company's employ on the 1st of April when the contract expired, and the board was convened on that date to deal with the situation. It is now proceeding as quickly as possible in a thorough investigation. It has yet to go to Lethbridge, Crow's Nest, Michel and Fernie to investigate several other mining situations.

Item agreed to.

Labour Administration, Employment Offices Co-ordination Act, $45,000.

Mr. MANION: We have one of these employment offices at the head of the lakes, and I should like to know how that office is run by the province and the Dominion combined.

Mr. MURDOCK: The province mans the office, the Dominion pays not more than half the expense. I am told that sometimes it is a little less than half, but never more than half in any particular case.

Mr. MANION: Is the management of the office entirely in the hands of the province?

Mr. MURDOCK: Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMPSON: How often does the manager of the office report to the central bureau in Ottawa as to the number of unemployed?

Mr. MURDOCK: Daily reports are sent to the federal Department of Labour of all vacancies, but those officers report directly to the Ontario government and are under its direct control.

Mr. STEVENS: Is this system working out satisfactorily according to the minister's judgment; and is the effort on the part of these public employment bureaus in a measure meeting expectations?

Mr. MURDOCK: The employment officers scattered throughout the Dominion are helping to some extent in relieving the unemployment situation when there are opportunities for them to secure vacancies for unemployed men to go to. I have not sufficient knowledge of the administration of these offices in every province to give all the information which my hon. friend would probably like in order to show whether any improvement could be effected in their management, if that is what he desires.

Mr. STEVENS: What I had in mind is this. I know one officer in particular in my own city whom I have always held in very high esteem. I may say that he has never been a supporter of mine politically, so I am speaking quite impartially. On the other hand, I have heard criticisms that the offices are not functioning effectively, and I think it would be desirable while the Estimates are before us that some official opinion should be expressed. If the department receives no definite and adequate reports, I would suggest that steps be taken to keep in touch with these employment bureaus inasmuch as we are paying a portion of the cost of maintenance.

Mr. MURDOCK: I am sure my hon. friend will appreciate that it would be rather a delicate task for the federal Department of Labour to suggest how the various provinces should run their employment offices. We do, it is true, undertake to maintain reasonable supervision over the manner in which they are being conducted, but I am told that we have got to be very careful how we treat any plan that is regarded as satisfactory by the provincial authorities.

Mr. STEVENS: The whole question narrows itself down to this, if the minister will permit me. We are voting $45,000—not a very large sum for the whole of Canada, I will admit—but the object, if I remember correctly, was to lessen the expense and avoid any duplication that might otherwise occur between the operations of the provincial and Dominion Labour Departments. My point is that if the department is not satisfied that effective work is being done, certainly the grant should not be continued and the association should be terminated. I am under the impression that these employment offices are working satisfactorily, but there have been disturbing criticisms, and if the minister from the reports at hand cannot give us a satisfactory answer as to this, then I think the department ought to exercise a more intimate supervision.

Mr. MURDOCK: I am told that we have had no complaints such as suggested by my hon. friend. I am sure he realizes that this $45,000 is not all of the money that is expended by the Dominion in connection with employment offices; this is only for their administration. The amount asked is $45,000, a reduction of $30,000 from the appropriation of 1921-22. The appropriation is intended to cover the expense incurred in the administration of the Employment Offices Co-ordination Act. Briefly, the statute empowers the minister to aid and encourage the organization and co-ordination of employment offices, to promote uniformity of methods among them, and to establish clearing houses for the interchange of information between employment offices concerning the transfer of labour and other matters. For the purposes of such organization and co-ordination provision is made for distribution among the various provinces annually of a sum of $150,000. The present vote, however, relates only to expense incurred in administration, and represents disbursements on account of printing, stationery and other supplies, travelling and temporary help. There are at this time—March, 1922—seventy-six provincial offices and three clearing houses—Halifax, Ottawa and Winnipeg—all of which are outfitted from the department with respect to stationery and supplies. The disbursements include considerable charges for railroad travelling and printing. The appropriation for 1922-23, though considerably reduced from that of last year, is intended to meet the charges incurred in issuing periodical bulletins, and so forth.

Mr. STEVENS: What was spent last year?

Mr. MURDOCK: From April 1, 1921 to March 31, 1922, $49,832.58. This might possibly be added to because of some items chargeable to the past fiscal year.

Mr. MANION: I notice that in addition to item 268, for administration, Employment Offices Co-ordination Act, $45,000, item 269 provides $100,000 for these employment offices. In view of these two items, and the minister's statement that we pay half the cost of running these offices, I do not agree that any diffidence need necessarily be shown in approaching these employment offices with suggestions. I do not know whether diffidence is one of the qualities possessed by the minister. I would like to know how many men have been given employment through these offices during recent months, say since the first of January?

Mr. MURDOCK: I have the totals for the fiscal year; I do not know that I have them for the period since the first of January. During the fiscal year 1921-22 the approximate number of vacancies notified to the officers of the employment service was 429,600, of which 327,900 were for men and 101,700 for women. Applicants for employment during the year numbered approximately 541,400, of which 439,900 were received from men and 101,500 from women. The total number of placements effected was approximately 357,700; of these about 270,600 were regular placements—236,600 of men, and 34,000 of women—and 87,100 placements were casual; that is, the employment was not expected to continue more than one week. The average daily transactions of employment service were approximately:

Vacancies	1,390
Applications	1,750
Regular placements	880
Casual placements	280
Total placements	1,160

Mr. MANION: These figures really show that practically a thousand people have been placed in temporary and more or less permanent employment; that would be, roughly, something over 350,000 a year.

Mr. MURDOCK: Yes. My hon. friend might like to have the record of the previous fiscal year, 1920-21 by provinces. It is as follows:

	Regular Placements			Casual Placements.
	Men	Women	Total
Prince Edward Island	95	2	97	0
Nova Scotia	1,637	166	1,803	109
New Brunswick	4,841	334	5,175	222
Quebec	14,438	1,442	15,880	366
Ontario	100,062	9,057	109,119	17,856
Manitoba	52,445	6,681	59,126	27,079
Saskatchewan	40,886	4,012	44,898	6,962
Alberta	47,508	7,273	54,781	14,605
British Columbia	44,810	4,602	49,412	12,546
	306,722	33,569	340,291	79,745

Mr. MANION: These figures agree pretty much with the figures for the past year; they are a little less, but practically the same. That would seem to me to be very gratifying. Now, besides item 268, $45,000, and item 269, $100,000, there is an amount authorized by statute of $150,000—all for employment offices. Why should this amount of approximately $300,000 be divided into three votes?

Mr. MURDOCK: Item 268 is for the administration of the Employment Offices Co-ordination Act. The amount 11 p.m. given in item 269, $100,000, the same as last year, is intended for distribution among the provinces. Under the terms of the act, the amount provided for the year is $150,000. The industrial situation likely to prevail throughout the fiscal year 1922-23 is anything but clear at the present time, and it is thought desirable to supplement the statutory appropriation by the amount indicated, thus enabling the department to meet contingencies which may confront the employment services. I have the following memorandum:

> The provinces have, during the past two or three years been led to expect that the federal grant would be practically equal to their expenditures and this would be possible only by increasing the statutory appropriation as proposed. Its omission would bring from the provinces the protest that they had been induced to undertake certain annual expenditures on a basis of partnership and the federal Government had then withdrawn. A detailed statement of expenditure for the twelve months ending March 31st, is given for the various provinces.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Murdock.]

International Labour Conference, $15,000.

Mr. MANION: I would ask the minister one question about this item. I understand there is an International Labour Conference, having some connection with the Genoa Conference, being held in Rome. Has Canada any representatives at that Conference?

Mr. MURDOCK: My understanding is that it is only a general International Trades Union Conference that is being held at Rome.

Mr. STEVENS: What is this item for?

Mr. MURDOCK: The expenditure under this head arises out of section 13 of the Peace Treaty. It is probable that the 1922-23 conference will be held in Europe.

Item agreed to.

Joint Industrial Councils, $15,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the minister explain what the work of the Joint Industrial Councils consists in and what councils report at the present time?

Mr. MURDOCK: We have only three or four of these Joint Industrial Councils at the present time, I am told. They are in Montreal, Hamilton and Toronto. The results secured are not what the Labour Department looked and hoped for in the formation of these councils. I might add for the information of my hon. friend that the expenditure in connection with this item for the last fiscal year was $13,722.36. The appropriation is intended to meet charges arising out of work done for the promotion of a system of joint industrial councils as between employers and workmen. The system is largely identical with that known in Great Britain as the Whitley Councils and is thought likely to be helpful in meeting the difficult situation arising out of the industrial unrest. The appropriation is intended to meet charges for printing and stationery, travelling expenses, and temporary assistance.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the minister if any effort has been made to institute a system of joint councils among the employees of the Civil Service? If the Government itself is the employer and the principle is a good one, is the effort being made here as in England to have Whitley Councils established among the Civil Service employees?

Mr. MURDOCK: In reply to my hon. friend's question I would say—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not like to interrupt but I wish to put a question which perhaps may be of assistance. I am at a loss to know what the nature and purpose of a Joint Industrial Council is.

Mr. MURDOCK: An industrial council can be briefly described as a council which would presume to bring the employers and employees connected with a certain industry, or a certain going concern, around the table for mutual discussion with the hope that they would be able to talk their differences over and arrive at an understanding that would prevent any interruption to operations. The Whitley Council is established and maintained to a large extent in England and the industrial councils here are expected to follow very much along the same lines. For further information I would refer my hon. friend to page 71 of the report of the Department of Labour for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1921 where that point is extensively dealt with.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I have an answer now to my question as to whether steps are being taken to institute industrial councils in the Civil Service?

Mr. MURDOCK: I started to answer my hon. friend's question by stating yes, that steps are being taken as far as possible to establish industrial councils wherever it appears feasible.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will that kind of policy be pursued as regards the employees in the Civil Service?

Mr. MURDOCK: Did my hon. friend mention the Civil Service?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said the Civil Service.

Mr. MURDOCK: I beg my hon. friend's pardon, I did not catch his precise question. That matter is under consideration. Representations have been made in that regard and they will be given consideration.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the same policy be carried out in regard to the Canadian National Railways, the Government or the Board of Management in that case being the employer?

Mr. MURDOCK: Six of the largest railroad organizations have what could be very properly described, I think, as an Industrial Council in the Canadian Railway Board of Adjustment No. 1 which deals with all disputes arising in connection with those six organizations, or all controversies with the railways, and the entire Canadian National Railways are a party to that council. I think there is work to be done in bringing the other classes of railroad labour, possibly on the Canadian National Railways, under some similar plan for the mutual benefit of employer and employee.

Item agreed to.

Unemployment Relief, $100,000.

Mr. STEVENS: This is a very important item and I know that there are a number of hon. members in this particular corner who are anxious to discuss it at some considerable length. I hope, however, that the minister at the next meeting of the committee will not seek to place upon me, as he did in the case of the leader of the Opposition, full responsibility for all unemployment because I made this reference. It is pretty late now and I know the committee would not care at this hour to enter into a lengthy discussion of this vitally important item.

Mr. MURDOCK: It will be quite agreeable to me to discuss the matter later.

Item allowed to stand.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 11.12 p.m.

Monday, April 24, 1922.

The House met at three o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Mr. DONALD M. KENNEDY (West Edmonton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 54 to amend the Criminel Code. He said: This is a bill to repeal section 20 of Chapter 25, the statutes of 1921. This section of the Criminal Code was passed in June of last year, in the face of an insistent demand from a part of the West for an investigation into alleged frauds in connection with the transfer and location of half-breed scrip. Many frauds complained of are supposed to have been committed as far back as fifteen years ago, and the amendment, section 20, Chapter 25 of 1921, provides that prosecution cannot be taken after three years from the commission of the offence.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATURALIZATION ACT, 1914 AMENDMENT

Mr. JOSEPH ARCHAMBAULT (Chambly and Vercheres) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 55, an Act to revise and amend the Naturalization Act, 1914. He said: This is a bill to amend the Naturalization Act of 1914. By this act, a residence of five years, in the previous eight years, in His Majesty's Dominion was required, with one year, the last year, in Canada. When the war broke out an amendment was enacted which provided that the time spent overseas in the crown forces by those who enlisted would count as residence in Canada, but there was no provision for men who enlisted in the armies of the allied countries. The result is that if a Belgian, a Frenchman or an Italian who was a resident in Canada before the war, and who had spent four years in Canada, enlisted in the allied army, his time while he was overseas did not count, and when he came back to Canada, say in 1919, he had to reside in Canada five years more in order to obtain naturalization papers. I submit that this was an oversight causing a grave injustice, and the purpose of my bill is to remedy that injustice. I will explain the bill fully on second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

[Mr. Murdock.]

CAPTAIN CARTY

Mr. FOURNIER:

1. What were the war services of Captain Carty, the commissioner's representative on the Appeal Board of the chief architect's branch, Department of Public Works?
2. What salary did he receive when appointed?
3. Was he instructed or directed regarding those who were to lose or to win their appeals?
4. If so, by whom?
5. Before hearing the appeals did he have interviews with officials of the branch regarding the decision to be rendered?
6. If so, what are the names of said officials?
7. Is he still on the staff of the commission?
8. If not, where is he employed?
9. What salary did he receive during the last year?
10. Did he obtain his present position by competitive examinations?
11. If not, why?
12. What salary is he presently receiving?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. Captain Edward Godfrey Carty, Canadian Militia. Appointed prov. lieutenant, 23rd Battery, 8th Brigade, Canadian Militia, 18th December, 1915. Attended Royal School of Artillery, Kingston, 10th January, 1915, to March, 1915. Qualified for lieutenant, artillery. Appointed adjutant and paymaster, Signal Training Depot, C.E.F. (Ottawa), 13th March, 1916. Transferred to 2nd Depot Battalion, Eastern Ontario Regiment (Ottawa), as paymaster, with effect from 29th December, 1917. Struck off the strength of the Canadian Expeditionary Force on general demobilization, 10th September, 1919. This officer had no overseas war service.
2. $1,800 per annum, plus bonus.
3. No.
4. Answered by No. 3.
5. No, so far as the Civil Service Commission is aware.
6. No information.
7. No.
8. Department of Railways and Canals.
9. $2,400.
10. No, the regulations did not require examination for those only temporarily employed.
11. Answered by No. 10.
12. Answered by No. 9.

GOVERNMENT SHOPS, SOREL

Mr. BOUCHER:

1. How many persons from the county of Yamaska were given employment at the Government shops at Sorel shortly before and just after the by-election of May, 1921?
2. What are the names, and the respective occupations and salaries of the said persons?
3. Who recommended these persons?
4. Did the superintendent of said shops give employment to many after having said there were no vacancies?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. 30 persons. 2.

MARCONI WIRELESS

Mr. DESLAURIERS:

1. Was the unexpired contract with the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of Canada, Limited, cancelled and a new contract entered into?

2. If so, what are the terms and conditions of the old and new contracts?

3. Was this contract entered into prior to a change of Government?

4. If so, what steps, if any, does the present Government propose to take to rescind it?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. The old contract has not been cancelled, but a supplementary contract has been entered into.

2. The principal amendments to the old contract are as follows:

That for a period of five years, April 1, 1921, to April 1, 1926, the subsidy in respect of each of the stations remaining open be increased from an average of $2,081 per station per annum to $5,500 per station per annum.

That all Government messages which under old contract were free of charge be handled at half the rates charged on commercial messages.

3. Amendments to contract authorized by Order in Council P.C. 1573 of the 31st August, 1921 and supplementary contract signed 15th December, 1921.

4. The rescinding of the supplementary contract has not been given consideration.

GOOD ROADS

Mr. ANDERSON:

1. What part of Dundas street, in the county of Halton, has been completed by the provincial government of Ontario under the Federal Good Roads scheme?

2. What amount of money has been paid to the provincial government by the Dominion Government on account of this road?

3. What is the cost of the road to date and the cost per mile?

Hon. Mr. KENNEDY:

1. Dundas street, in the county of Halton, is under construction, but no part of it has been completed under the Federal Highways Act.

2. $1,874.94.

3. Approximate expenditure on whole road from Toronto to Clappisons' Corners up to 31st December, 1921, is $580,000 or $18,972 per mile. The detailed audit to give expenditure in Halton county is not yet completed.

PRINCE OF WALES' ROYAL CANADIAN REGIMENT

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has the Government received an appeal from the 1st Battalion, Prince of Wales' Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians) to the following effect?

"We beg Canada to help us to be retained in the British army as the Prince of Wales' Royal Canadian Regiment, and so to represent the Dominion just as the Irish Guards represent the Irish Free State, with his Royal Highness as our Colonel-in-Chief, as he is at present".

2. If so, what action, if any, has been taken?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Yes, through the High Commissioner for Canada and also through the Colonial Office.

2. The appeal was submitted to the Army Council who stated that—

"It is with very deep regret that they have felt compelled to recommend the disbandment of this Corps. Such action is rendered necessary by the Articles of Agreement for a Treaty between Great Britain and Ireland, which contemplate the establishment of a military defence force by the Irish Free State.

. . .In view of the present need for economy, involving a general reduction of the Army it would be impossible to substitute reformation in another form for disbandment."

POST OFFICES—MONTREAL

Mr. RINFRET:

1. How many Post Offices are there in the city limits of Montreal?

2. Where are they located?

3. How many letters and parcels were received and forwarded from each of the said post offices during the year 1921?

Hon Mr. MURPHY:

1. 89.

OPIUM AND NARCOTIC DRUGS

Mr. STEVENS:

1. Has the International Conference on the Opium and Narcotic Drug question been held? If so, where, when and on what date?

2. Has the Government on file any copy of the proceedings and findings of such conference?

[Mr. Murphy.]

3. Did the conference discuss the subject of restriction and control of the production of opium?

Have any steps been taken by the British Government, or French Government or the Government of India towards controlling the production and export of opium?

5. Will the Canadian Government make representations to the British, French and Indian Governments regarding control of production and export of opium?

Hon. Mr. BELAND:

1. Four International Opium Conferences have been held. The first was held at Shanghai, China, January-February, 1909; the second, at The Hague from 1st December, 1911, to 23rd January, 1912; the third, from 1st July to 9th July, 1913; the fourth, from 15th June to 25th June, 1914.

2. Yes.

3. Yes.

4. Yes.

5. As the countries concerned equally with Canada are parties to the International Opium Convention of the 23rd January, 1912 (ratified 10th October, 1919), by which they undertake to restrict and control the manufacture of and trade in opium and similar harmful drugs, and to bring about the suppression of their abuse, no such representations would appear to be necessary.

AERIAL FOREST PATROL—ALBERTA

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

1. What sum of money has been expended by the government upon the air station and aerial forest patrol, southern Alberta, situated at High River, Alberta?

2. Did the government purchase or build any permanent buildings which would be of no use for other purposes than those of an aerial station?

3. If so, what was the cost of said building?

4. Does the Government contemplate doing away with this air station?

5. Does the Government intend to discontinue the aerial forest patrol in southern Alberta?

6. If so, for what reasons?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. 1920-21, $21,947.85; 1921-22, $147,621.26.

2. The buildings at the air station were designed for that particular use. They could be used, if necessary, for other purposes, however.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4 and 5. Pending the reorganization of the air services following the formation of the Department of National Defence, it is difficult to make definite decisions as to the maintenance of any particular air station. The forest patrol in southern Alberta can be continued during the coming summer in any case.

6. Answered by 4 and 5.

BRITISH EMPIRE STEEL CORPORATION

Mr. MARTELL:

1. Was the British Empire Steel Corporation assessed for, and did it pay any Business Profits Taxes during the last calendar year?

2. If so, what was the amount of said taxes, and, when and in what manner were they paid?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING:

1. No, as the first accounting period of the corporation ended on 31st December, 1921.

2. Answered by No. 1.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—EMPLOYEES

Mr. FONTAINE:

How many employees (a) men (b) women and (c) returned soldiers, are there in the Post Office Department, either permanent or temporary, receiving a salary of $600 per year?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY:

Permanent, (a) 1, (b) 3, (c) Nil; Temporary, (a) 8, (b) 25, (c) 27.

ELECTION DEPOSITS

*Mr. FOURNIER:

1. Have all members of the House of Commons been refunded the deposit made by each of them to returning officers in accordance with the provisions of the Electoral law?

2. If not, how many, and what are the names of the members still expecting the refund of said deposit?

3. What are the reasons for delay in returning said deposits?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING:

1. No. All deposits received by the Auditor General under Section 40, sub-section 9 of the Dominion Elections Act have been returned to the candidates, as provided by section 72, sub-section 5 of the Dominion Elections Act.

2. One member and one candidate are still expecting refunds of deposits made by them, these being Mr. George Parent, M.P., and Pierre Bertrand, defeated candidate, electoral district of Quebec West.

3. The delay is caused by the returning officer failing to forward the deposits to the Auditor General of Canada as provided by section 40, sub-section 9 of the Dominion Elections Act.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. VIEN:

1. Was an inventory taken of all war material furnished to the British Government by Canada, when the late war was declared?

2. What was the nature of such shipments, and on what date were they shipped?

3. Was this war material paid for in kind or was it paid for in money?

4. What were the dates of these payments and of what nature were they?

Mr. VIEN:

1. Has the Canadian Government received from the Imperial Government, shipments of munitions of war, arms or equipment, during the years 1921 and 1922?

2. If so, on what dates, and what were the nature and values of these shipments?

3. Under what agreement have these shipments been made?

4. Were they written agreements? If so, what is the name of the official who signed them for Canada and what are the dates of said agreements?

5. Does the Government expect other shipments of the same nature?

6. If so, of what nature and value?

7. Were arms, accoutrements and munitions received by the Canadian Government from the British Government, in the autumn of 1921?

8. If so, what was their value?

9. Were the said arms, accoutrements and munitions out of service or in bad condition, and will the Canadian Government be obliged to spend large amounts on repairs?

10. Will a great quantity of this munition be unfit for use after 1924, and thus have to be destroyed?

11. Where was this material disposed of?

Mr. FOURNIER:

1. What are the names, positions and salary of the employees of the Chief Architect's branch, Public Works Department, who worked on the three classifications which were posted in the branch?

2. Which of the three classifications was approved by the deputy minister and recommended to the commission.

3. On what date, month and year were reports or cards for classification from Chief Architect's branch received by the commission?

4. After such reports or cards for classification were received by the commission, were there any other special ones issued?

5. If so, on what date, month and year were they issued?

6. By whom were they requested?

7. What are the names, positions and salary of the persons to whom they were issued?

8. Were all the employees informed? If not, why?

9. What were the duties of those who received these cards?

10. For what position and salary were each of them requested to fill in these cards?

11. To what positions and salaries were they classified?

12. What was the position and salary of each when the first and second classifications were posted?

13. What is the amount of back pay each received?

14. What was their position and salary, also the year they were appointed in the service?

DRAWBACKS

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Saskatoon) moved:

For a return showing a list of the raw materials, with the quantity and value thereof, on which a refund of the duty under the Drawback Act was paid, together with a list of the firms to whom such money was returned. Also a list of the finished articles manufactured from such material and the countries to which they were exported.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: For what period?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU: Before this motion is adopted, it would be well for the hon. gentleman to state from what time he wants this return made.

Mr. EVANS: For the last year that the report was made—1921.

Mr. CALDWELL: The period between 1920 and 1921 would be very brief unless it includes one year or the other.

Mr. EVANS: It is for the year ending March 31, 1922.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

PRIME MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

CORRESPONDENCE WITH BRITISH GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition, moved:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the British and Canadian Governments, leading up to and concerning the conference of Prime Ministers in 1921.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): As my right hon. friend will be aware, most of this correspondence is marked "secret and confidential". I presume it will be the wish of my right hon. friend that I should ask the permission of the British Government, to bring down such correspondence as is marked "secret and confidential" and obtain that permission in advance before placing the correspondence on the Table of the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that some correspondence is so marked, and personally I do not ask that any be secret or confidential. I leave the Government, however, to decide what, in the interest of the country, should be preserved as secret and confidential.

Mr. SPEAKER: Motion agreed to, subject to this limitation.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. STEVENS:

For a Return showing a list of the names of persons from Poland, Roumania or Russia, who were allowed to enter Canada under bond to go farming, and who have been found, on investigation, to have violated terms of the said bond.

Mr. PARENT:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, applications, petitions and other documents exchanged between the Government and individuals or companies, referring to conditions imposed on various railway companies intending to use the Quebec Bridge for the purpose of reaching the city of Quebec.

[Mr. Evans.]

Mr. PARENT:

For a copy of contracts, correspondence, agreements and other documents, during the period from the year 1911 to date, between the Government directly, or through any commission, and the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other railway, referring to the construction and the use of the Union Station at Palais, city of Quebec.

Mr. PARENT:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents regarding the appointment of one or more appraisers for Paris and London, made by the Civil Sevice Commission.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

For a return showing a list of the names of the names of the persons who were employed as newspaper censors during the war, the name and location of the newspapers which were censured, the date of censorships and a copy of the articles censored. Also a copy of the regulations of the said censorship.

Mr. MEIGHEN:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Canadian and the British Governments, respecting an Address passed by the Canadian Parliament on the subject of extra territoriality rights of the Dominion.

Mr. McMURRAY:

For a copy of all letters, correspondence, telegrams, orders, instructions and other documents, exchanged between the Minister of Labour or any member of his department and Alfred J. Andrews, in connection with the strike in Winnipeg in the year 1919.

Mr. McMURRAY:

For a copy of all letters, correspondence, telegrams, orders, instructions and other documents, exchanged between the Solicitor General or any member of his department, and Alfred J. Andrews, relative to the strike in Winnipeg during the year 1919.

Mr. McMURRAY:

For a copy of all letters, correspondence, telegrams, orders, instructions and other documents, exchanged between the Minister of the Interior or any member of his department and Alfred J. Andrews, relative to the strike in Winnipeg during the year 1919.

Mr. McMURRAY:

For a copy of all letters, correspondence, telegrams, orders, instructions and other documents, exchanged between the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Labour, the Solicitor General, the Minister of the Interior, or any person connected with these departments, and General Kitchen, relative to the strike in Winnipeg during the year 1919.

ALFRED J. ANDREWS—APPOINTMENT AS DEPUTY MINISTER OF JUSTICE.

Mr. E. J. McMURRAY (North Winnipeg) moved:

For a copy of the Order in Council appointing Alfred J. Andrews a Deputy Minister of Justice, during the year 1919. Also a copy of all letters, telegrams, instructions, orders and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Justice or any official of the department of Justice, and the said Alfred J. Andrews, pertaining to the strike in Winnipeg, Manitoba, during the year 1919.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I really cannot understand how the Government can permit this motion to carry in its present form. It asks for a copy of the Order in Council appointing Alfred J. Andrews a Deputy Minister of Justice during the year 1919. As hon. members well know, it was not within the power of the Government to appoint another deputy minister while we had one, and for that reason, if not for many others, Alfred J. Andrews was never appointed Deputy Minister of Justice. This motion asserts as a fact something which is manifestly and palpably untrue.

Mr. BUREAU: The motion merely asks for a certain Order in Council.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But it asserts as a fact something which is untrue, and it is against the rules of the House that such an assertion shall pass.

Mr. BUREAU: There is no assertion of fact in the motion; it merely asks for a particular Order in Council.

Motion agreed to.

THE UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, in view of the widespread unemployment with which the Municipalities and Provinces find themselves unable to cope, it is desirable that the federal Government should devise some means of dealing effectively with the situation.

He said: This resolution deals with a question that is of vital importance to Canada at the present time. It was a matter of regret to a great many of us that in the Speech from the Throne there was no suggestion that the Government would deal effectively with the great question of unemployment. The paragraph in the Speech relating to that matter read:

Whilst of the opinion that unemployment relief is fundamentally a municipal and provincial responsibility, my Government has felt that as conditions have arisen in a measure out of the late war, they would be justified in continuing for the period of the winter months the expedient of supplementing by grants from the federal treasury the relief contributions of provinces and municipalities for the purpose of alleviating actual distress.

I take it that the solution of the problem of unemployment should go a great deal further than the giving of unemployment relief, and that the problem is already of such vast importance that it cannot be dealt with satisfactorily by either provincial or municipal bodies. I have a resolution passed at the joint conference of trades unions, returned men's organizations, and representatives of other public bodies, held on February 6, 1922, at Vancouver, which embodies fairly well the position taken by a large number of unemployed people and labour organizations throughout the entire Canadian West. This resolution is as follows:

Whereas the unemployed situation is of a national character, and is one that cannot be handled satisfactorily by municipal bodies; and whereas, the extremely low scale of relief now being given is tending to lower the standard of living of the entire wage working population; be it resolved, that we call upon the federal Government to assume the management of the unemployment situation on a national scale, and that the basis of relief be work at trade union rates or full maintenance on the scale laid down in the Labour Gazette.

In my own province of Manitoba there was held, in September, 1921, a conference on the question of unemployment. This conference was called at the invitation of the government of the province, and I have before me a series of resolutions which were drawn up at that time. It will be borne in mind that these resolutions represent the municipal and provincial aspects of the case. Among clauses dealing with the causes of unemployment I would read the following:

Fluctuations in industry are caused by market changes brought on by world conditions and social habits.

Lack of relations between system of education and the labour market, in order that the youth will be trained in occupations in which workers are in demand.

Allowing men and families to immigrate into Canada, who are not equipped, either physically or financially, to take up farm work, and who are not desirous of taking up this work, but who wish to take up other industrial activities wherein there is no demand.

The lack of organization of productive industry with a view to continuous employment.

Having laid down some of the causes of unemployment, the report proceeds with suggested measures for relief:

Undoubtedly, the unemployment problem is a national one, and must be studied from a national point of view.

I agree absolutely with the finding of the provincial conference on unemployment, that this matter cannot be dealt with satisfactorily except from a national standpoint.

I think this position is well taken, when we consider the action of the Peace Conference at Versailles. In the draft convention and recommendations adopted by the International Labour Conference at its first meeting in Washington during November, 1919, there occurs the following recommendation with regard to the unemployed:

As to No. 3, the minister observes that the experience of other countries has demonstrated that a system of unemployment insurance, in order to be effective and successful, must be made ancillary or complementary to a system of labour exchanges, the whole being adapted to the principal function of finding work for unemployed insured workmen. In this view, unemployed insurance has a pronounced federal aspect, and on the whole the minister thinks the establishment of a system of unemployment insurance is competent to the Dominion in the exercise of its residuary legislative powers with regard to the peace, order and good government of Canada.

Here, then, we have it admitted on the highest authority that there is a place for federal action with regard to this great question.

Now, further, may I suggest that the government has already committed itself on this question. I have a document here with this heading:

Liberals and labour. The Liberal party's record of achievement on behalf of labour, issued by the National Liberal Committee, 115 Sparks street, Ottawa. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, M.P., Liberal leader, etc.

In this document we find the following statement:

And further resolved: (2) That insofar as may be practicable, having regard to Canada's financial position, an adequate system of insurance against unemployment, sickness, dependence in old age, and other disability, which would include old age pensions, widows' pensions, and maternity benefits, should be instituted by the federal government in conjunction with the governments of the several provinces; and that on matters pertaining to industrial and social legislation, an effort should be made to overcome any question of jurisdiction between the Dominion and the provinces by effective co-operation between the several governments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it would seem clear from this resolution that not only is it acknowledged that the federal government has responsibilities in this matter, but also that the party in power is committed to take action along these lines.

Very little need be said here with regard to the serious situation which exists to-day. The Minister of Labour admitted in a speech, made several months ago, that there were something like 200,000 unemployed men in Canada. I presume that that would mean in the vicinity of 1,000,000 people—men, women and children —directly affected by unemployment. That is a very, very large proportion indeed of a population of eight or nine million. I know perfectly well that in the West we have had the most serious unemployment for the last two or three years, particularly in the cities of Vancouver and Winnipeg, and to a smaller extent in nearly all the other cities, including Edmonton, Calgary and Saskatoon. And we have unemployment in the central part; I have resolutions from Toronto, Hamilton and other cities here in the East. During the recess I was down in Nova Scotia, and not only are large numbers of miners unemployed or underemployed, but there are in Sydney something like two thousand unemployed steel workers, who have absolutely no prospect of securing work in the near future and do not know where to turn to get a livelihood. It seems to me that we cannot let this session go by without taking some action to relieve the distress in which so many of our people now find themselves.

There are a few points which I should like to mention very briefly as to the position which it is necessary for us to take. There was a time in the history of Canada when, if a man were unemployed, it was his own fault. There were free lands, easily accessible, and good markets, and if a man could not succeed in one place he could go to another; and if he could not make good in one particular kind of work he could try his hand at another. That time has passed and with the system of large-scale industry that we have to-day a few large corporations control the greater part of the work that is available. I take that example of the steel workers at Sydney; there are several thousand of them in connection with the one great corporation there. If for any reason that corporation closes down its plant, the men are helpless. There was a time when steel working was confined to small local foundries and blacksmith shops, and in those days a man could open a little shop of his own. So far as Nova Scotia is concerned, the farms cannot absorb very many of the surplus unemployed, and they tell me there that fishing is about the only means of livelihood left, and that under present conditions it takes a considerable amount of equipment to carry on fishing successfully. A great many of the men out of work in Winnipeg are employed in railway shops and kindred work. There again I would point out that if for any reason at all the railway is not able to carry on its work to the full extent, thousands of mechanics find themselves in a helpless position, for it is simply impossible for them to start up any new kind of work; they are on the street. The same thing is true in our larger mining and logging activities on the coast. I submit that to-day with large-scale industry as it is, the individual unemployed workman is not to blame. Notwithstanding that, we treat him still almost as if he were a criminal. We take it for granted almost that he is shiftless or lazy, or he would not be in such a helpless position. In any case we allow a certain maladjustment in industry to bear very heavily indeed on the unfortunate individual and his still more unfortunate family. Now, that state of affairs ought to be absolutely changed.

Another point that needs to be emphasized is that hitherto the municipalities, helped out by the provincial and Dominion governments, have been expending large sums simply for unemployment relief, and at the end of the year there is nothing to show for the expenditure. Surely, it would seem as if in Canada we had sufficient development work to do that for every hour's work there ought to be some return. This practice of putting men simply at work tests, to break stone when great crushing machines are by their side, is absolute folly. The whole trouble seems to be that we have not at the present time the necessary credit to go on with the new works we feel ought to be undertaken, and which if proceeded with would start the industrial machinery moving again. Now, there is not the slightest doubt that in this respect we are being held up, more or less, by certain interested bodies. A few weeks ago in Vancouver I was talking to an alderman who is chairman of the unemployment committee as well as of the finance committee of the council. He pointed out that much as the city would like to give some constructive work to the unemployed in Vancouver, they could not do so because they could not obtain credit from the bank—in this case, the Bank of Montreal. Upon turning to the annual statement issued by the Bank of Montreal, I find that the general manager of that institution takes the position that unemployment is a very necessary evil; that only through unemployment can we drive down the wages to the point they should be,—or, to use the words of the report, that unemployment is a "natural corrective." Mr. Speaker, I think of some of the scenes which I have witnessed in the homes of labouring men during the last few weeks: men out of work; their wives almost desperate; their children, in some instances, kept home from school through lack of shoes or clothing; in some cases not only physical privation, but absolute discouragement with regard to life itself. A large number of people are in that position; yet we are told by one of the leading financial institutions of Canada that unemployment is a "natural corrective". I submit that it is for the Government to defend the people of Canada against an institution of this character.

Why should we ask that the whole burden of unemployment be borne by the provinces or by the municipalities? According to our constitution, this Parliament has to deal with such great matters as immigration, fiscal policy, and so on. I submit that questions of immigration have a great deal to do with the question of unemployment. Thousands and tens of thousands of immigrants came to my own city of Winnipeg last year direct from Great Britain. Ostensibly they were to go on the land, and I believe in the first instance they did so; but the immigration officials told me at the time that there was nothing whatever to prevent these people from drifting into the city when the work of the summer was over. A number of them did drift back into the city, with the result that the municipality is loaded up with the care of them. Their presence in this country, however, is directly due to the action of this Government under its immigration policy. The same is true with regard to a good many of our large fiscal policies: we decide here what those policies shall be, but we shoulder off upon the provinces and municipalities, themselves already overloaded with debt, the responsibility of caring for the unemployed. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot do otherwise in this body than assume responsibility.

It may be said by members of the Government that it is impossible to establish a full-fledged system of unemployment insurance at this particular time. Perhaps that is a reasonable position to take, yet I would say this: until such a system can be established the least we can do is to adopt the principle underlying unemployment insurance, namely, that industry should bear the burdens entailed by industry. If we have brought more people to this country than we need, or if we have placed more people in a particular industry than we need, then the least we can do is to see that that burden is spread out over the community, not borne by the few unfortunate individuals upon whom it now presses so heavily.

Now, without going further into this matter, I would urge that the problem is such a serious one that we should not allow many more weeks to pass before taking definite action. You may say that the spring is opening up, and that with the spring there comes agricultural work and more activity in various lines. That may be true, but we are going to have another winter, and there is no prospect that the next winter will be any better than the one which has just passed. If we are to have effective action, therefore, it must be taken at this session of Parliament. I hope hon. members will realize that while we in this House deal very largely merely with statistics and general principles, there are loyal Canadian men and women in every one of our cities to-day who are in almost desperate straits. I take it that our administrative bodies exist in order to provide for the primary needs of the people. I have said to labour audiences, and I venture to repeat it in this House, that any administrative body, in a country capable of producing as Canada can produce, which fails to provide for the primary needs of its people, even to the extent of food and clothing and shelter, ceases to command the loyalty of those people. On all sides the people in this country are calling upon us for relief, and we face a serious situation if we do not lend an ear at this time and do our utmost to solve what is not only a national but a world problem.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before the hon. member finally takes his seat, I would like to ask whether he has any concrete suggestion to make to the House as to means whereby the federal government could deal with the problem?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My concrete suggestion would be that at this session the Government should go into the matter and establish a system of unemployment insurance. Not that such a system would provide work, but it would give immediate and definite relief to those who are out of work, and in the effort to provide for their immediate needs we would find ourselves driven to do something along constructive lines. Most decidedly there are a number of things that could be done. Almost all our unemployment conferences have suggested lines of work which could be pursued. For example, there is a shortage of houses all over Canada; in all our cities rentals are very high, and there is no reason why a great many more houses should not be built. On the western coast there are large areas of land which still have to be cleared; why should men be going around the cities idle when they might be engaged in the clearing of those lands? As I have said, large numbers of people lack the prime necessities of life, even of clothes; we have factories and mills standing idle which are capable of producing these things, and if these various industrial organizations cannot carry on, I do not see why the Government should not do so, and under those circumstances, put these idle men at work and see that the needs of the people are provided for. Down in Cape Breton some of the coal miners are recognizing that principle; they say that if these great corporations, some of whom have leases from the provincial government, can not see their way to make dividends and carry on, then the Government itself should step in and operate the industry in the interests of the people. There is not much doubt that there is work to do. I would venture to repeat to the Prime Minister what I said, I think, in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, that there were three factors, and three factors only, necessary in order to enable us to produce all that we require for the material welfare of the people of Canada, and those are, the natural resources of the country, the equipment and labour. I submit that we have all these three at the present time in Canada. We have natural resources in abundance. At all our Canadian Clubs we have been told of the vast extent of our natural resources. We have the equipment: factories are idle, mills and railways are not working to capacity; we have an abundance of equipment already in this country. One trouble, it seems to me, is that we have been so long adding equipment that the only possible thing we can conceive of now is to add still more equipment. We already have equipment enough; and we have labour idle. What seems to be lacking is a certain courage, and imagination that would enable us to bring these three factors into effective working connection. I cannot see why we should allow things to drift from bad to worse until some of the labour people are driven to desperation. Surely we have the brains and ability here in this House to devise some method for giving the unemployed work. If not the poor individual workman is himself surely helpless.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Let me say at the outset that I am in entire sympathy with my hon. friend from Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) in his desire to find some means of helping to solve the problem of unemployment where it exists. I agree with him, too, in believing that the problem of unemployment has a national significance, as well as a provincial and a municipal significance; but I think it is all important that this Parliament should very carefully consider whether the obligation of looking after men who are unemployed should become a federal obligation, rather than it should be understood to be primarily a matter for individuals in the first instance, between municipalities and the people living within their bounds, in the second instance, next, between the provinces and the citizens of the respective provinces, and only finally a matter of concern in the federal arena.

If it were admitted for one moment that it was not primarily a municipal obligation to look after the individuals who are unemployed within their bounds where would we ultimately land in the solution of this question? Should the resolution pass in the form in which I understand my hon. friend to wish it to pass, namely, as meaning that the obligation is upon the federal government to look after the unemployed, every municipality that had unemployed would immediately send its communications to Ottawa and say: The Ottawa Government, in view of the resolution that has passed this House, is obligated to look after the unemployed in this area.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Might I call attention to the fact that the resolution merely suggests that it is desirable that the federal government should devise some means of dealing effectively with the situation? That might involve taking the matter up with other agencies as well.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What I want to make perfectly clear is this: I do not think the Government can admit that it is primarily a federal obligation to look after the unemployed. I think that there is a national significance to the problem of unemployed, but the problem primarily is one which concerns municipalities, and secondarily, the provinces affected. It only becomes a federal problem when both the municipalities and the provinces have found it impossible to cope with a situation that is completely beyond their control. That condition has arisen, to a certain extent, as a consequence of conditions growing out of the war, and the federal government has recognized its obligation there by promising to co-operate with the municipalities and with the provinces in the relief of their unemployed. There is a standing offer at the present time to the municipalities and the provinces —a policy that was adopted by the late government, and one which has been followed by the present administration —to help them meet cases of distress where they are unable to look after their own unemployed. I am told by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) that from two or three, possibly four of the provinces of this Dominion, no request has come to the federal government for assistance. Does my hon. friend think, that the provinces which have made no request for assistance in helping to solve the unemployment problem within their boundaries would be agreeable to being taxed to assist other provinces in the matter of their unemployment as a national obligation? I am afraid that if we began to work out the question on a basis of that kind, we would find it impossible in any way to carry out such a policy. I believe with my hon. friend, as I said at the outset, that the matter is one in which there is a national interest, as well as provincial and municipal interest, but that it can only be met by co-operation between the provinces and the federal government.

The hon. member has suggested that the step that should be taken at once is for this Parliament to pass an enactment in the nature of unemployment insurance. I question very much whether, if we attempted to pass such legislation at the present time, we would find that it comes wholly within the jurisdiction of this federal Parliament. The provinces may have the right to pass such a law; we may have the right to pass such a law; but one thing is certain, that between the two of us we ought to be able to find a way to pass such an enactment if it is in the public interest. It is in that spirit that the Liberal party adopted as one of the planks in its platform the resolution which my hon. friend has quoted, and which I shall quote now, and which, let me say, expresses the policy of the Government on this question:

> That in so far as may be practicable, having regard for Canada's financial position, an adequate system of insurance against unemployment, sickness, dependence in old age, and other disability, which would include old age pensions, widows' pensions, and maternity benefits, should be instituted by the federal Government in conjunction with the Governments of the several Provinces; and that on matters pertaining to Industrial and Social legislation an effort should be made to overcome any question of jurisdiction between the Dominion and the Provinces by effective co-operation between the several Governments.

That policy is one which recognizes the obligations of the federal government to co-operate with the provincial governments in working out a system of insurance against unemployment. That is an entirely different attitude, however, from the federal Government's admitting that the obligation is upon it to solve this question independently altogether of the municipalities and the provinces.

I would say to my hon. friend and to the House that the Minister of Labour and myself have already been in communication with representatives of some of the provincial governments with a view to having a conference on this very subject during the course of the present year, and I think before the year is out that conference will take place; but I would like to make it perfectly plain that so far as the Government is concerned, we regard all these matters of unemployment and the like as questions primarily of concern to municipalities and to provinces, but in so far as the national interest may also be concerned we are prepared to co-operate with the municipalities and the provinces in seeking a solution.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): I shall take up the time of the House only for a few moments in any remarks I have to make on this question. There is no doubt that this is a very important question from the standpoint of any country in the world. I believe that any man who looks at this question in a fair light must decide that no class of men should be permitted to be without work and to go hungry.

We have, unfortunately, in most countries of the world been in the habit of taking better care of our animals—that is the lower animals—than, perhaps, of human animals, and I believe that, from that standpoint, the question my hon. friend from Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) has brought up is one of importance. There is no doubt every hon. member of the House desires to see some solution, if at all possible, of the unemployment situation, which exists not only in Canada, but unfortunately is world-wide at the present time. My hon. friend from Centre Winnipeg mentioned unemployment insurance. He has been more of a student of affairs of this kind than I have, and I presume he knows much better than I do that that type of insurance has been tried out in various parts of the world, and I think probably he knows the conclusion that I draw from my reading, namely that it has not been altogether a success. It has been tried out in a number of different countries, in various cities in Germany, in a number of cities in France, in some cities in Italy, and various other cities, and I believe in some countries almost as a whole. But there has been a great deal of abuse of this system of insurance in the different countries of the world. It has not been found an unmixed good. However, I personally wish to express my entire sympathy, as the leader of the Government (Mr. Mackenzie King) did, with the problem, but before any system of unemployment insurance could be adopted, I think it would be desirable to go into the question much more thoroughly than this House has ever done since I have been a member of it.

My hon. friend, the Prime Minister, pointed out that the Government of to-day is carrying on the programme as outlined by the government which went out of office in December, 1921. It is rather gratifying to us on this side of the House to have our hon. friends on the other side back up our programme which they did not support before the election. I have noticed that this pledge of the Liberal platform which he read must go into the discard, with a number of other pledges which were in the Liberal platform before the election, and I am pleased to hear the leader of the Government to-day commend what was condemned so vociferously before the election by a number of the members of the present Government. It is certainly gratifying to us on this side of the House, and it should certainly prove to the people of this country that a cure in office is a good deal more difficult than condemnation out of office.

Hon. JAMES MURDOCK (Minister of Labour): I want to first state, Mr. Speaker, that I am altogether sympathetic with what I believe to be the views of my hon. friend from Centre Winnipeg, in so far as we can, in an appropriate way, co-operate in dealing with this very important question of unemployment. But I fear that my hon. friend is undertaking to place an undue burden upon this federal government when he proposes to hold this Government alone responsible for dealing with the question of unemployment. My hon. friend referred to certain communications on this question received by him from Vancouver. I have received some fourteen or more communications as the result of a meeting held in Vancouver on 6th February last, indicating that it was the view of an unemployed conference there that the federal government should assume charge over the conditions of unemployment, to the extent of obtaining full wages, at trades union rates, for all persons in Vancouver who were not at that time employed. I must firmly take the position that I do not see how this federal government could assume any such obligation as that, because it would be adopting a plan that might not be in the best interests of the unemployed in Canada, and would certainly place a burden upon this Dominion which would indeed be hard to carry. My hon. friend referred to unemployment being common in the Dominion, which is, I think, substantially correct; but, as indicated by the Prime Minister, we are placed in the peculiar position of having at least several of the provinces through their proper representatives, indicate to us, in a very courteous way, that they are quite competent to deal with the unemployment situation in their particular provinces. As a matter of fact, in connection with the unemployment we find orders which have been in effect since this Government took office as to the handling of this question. We have found four provinces that have not believed it was necessary or essential that they should take advantage of the offers made by the federal government in those two employment orders that have been issued.

Mr. CARROLL: Can the hon. minister tell me which provinces those were?

Mr. MURDOCK: Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec have generally indicated that they were amply sufficient unto themselves to deal with this question; and we, of course, are glad to understand that that is the position. My hon. friend from Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) referred to the statement that there were 200,000 unemployed in Canada. I am glad to tell my hon. friend that the latest advices are that that particular situation is being considerably relieved recently, and that the conditions in which he is particularly interested, in Vancouver and on the Pacific Coast, are not, or should not be, the normal condition on that coast. I am told by a gentleman in close touch with the situation that many of the unemployed in Vancouver and places adjacent are men who were unemployed or could not find employment in the prairie province, and, on account of the climatic condition, merely went out to Vancouver and joined the all-too-large army of unemployed there. The result is—and this may be interesting to my hon. friend—that during the past fiscal year this Government has paid, as its share for unemployment in Vancouver, $102,-432.36, which indicates that the various municipalities and the provincial governments have borne an equal share of the expenses in dealing with the unemployment situation at Vancouver and adjacent cities. I desire to assure my hon. friend from Centre Winnipeg and this House that I am entirely in sympathy with the undertaking to devise some means of dealing with this situation. But I hold that if, as has been said in years gone by, charity begins at home, it can be just as truthfully and forcefully stated that assistance and co-operation begins at home; and I believe that the assistance and co-operation which we need in dealing with this unemployment question, should commence in the municipalities and provinces. My hon. friend might be interested in knowing too that the present Orders in Council, under which this Government undertakes to assist in the relief of unemployment, expire on the 30th day of this month, we have, so far as I know, no requests at this time from municipalities or provinces for an extension of the provisions of those measures. It seems to me that, if there was a marked necessity at this particular time for an extension of those provisions, we would have heard something about the matter from the authorities in the various municipalities and provinces. Therefore, I would again suggest that this matter should, and I hope will, be dealt with in the way that I have indicated. I shall be glad to permit my hon. friend to have access to all the files of the Labour Department in order that he may ascertain if, with the records before him, he can devise some means whereby we can or should do something more in connection with this matter than has been done since this Government took office.

Mr. SIMPSON: Is the department over which the minister presides carrying on an investigation with reference to unemployment insurance? In his opinion, would that be an effective method of dealing with the unemployment situation?

Mr. MURDOCK: The Department of Labour has given some consideration to that question, for I find, on referring to the report of my predecessor, that he deals with a portion of the Speech from the Throne of February, 1921, and I assume that that portion of the Speech from the Throne meant exactly what it says, and that the Labour Department did undertake to investigate the matter to which my hon. friend refers. The report reads:

> The following sentences from the Speech of His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of Parliament in February indicate the attitude of the Dominion Government on the subject:
> "Unemployment, the world-wide result of the conditions to which I have referred, though less widespread in Canada than elsewhere, has received most anxious consideration. Of the charges for the relief of general unemployment, measures have been taken to bear a substantial share, and special measures have been taken to assist disabled and partially disabled ex-service men. These will be submitted to you for approval.
> "An investigation is being conducted by the Department of Labour into systems of unemployment insurance and old age pensions."

That is the quoted portion of the Speech from the Throne, and, therefore, I am sure my hon. friend will realize that the Labour Department, in fulfilment of its promises thus made to the people of Canada dealt with and undertook to investigate the question of unemployment insurance and old age pensions. The subject matter which is the result of those investigations is, I feel quite sure on file in the Department of Labour, although I might say that I have not yet had an opportunity of analyzing it and of ascertaining just what it may be.

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (Cape Breton South and Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in any way in the discussion of this resolution, and I would not have said anything, were it not for the fact that the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth), who moved the resolution, made some mention of conditions in the city of Winnipeg. Conditions in that city are far from good, and the hon. member is well within the mark when he says that 2,000 steel workers in Sydney, who are anxious and willing to work, are out of employment at the present time and, I believe, are well nigh on the verge of starvation. Did I hear an hon. member say "strikers"? They are not even able to "strike on the job," because they have no job to strike on. Nova Scotia is a province which has not applied to this Government under the various Orders in Council which have been passed for the purpose of aid being rendered by this Government to municipalities. That does not mean that there is not to-day dire want in Nova Scotia. As I have stated, there are in the city of Sydney 2,000 people who are only too anxious to work if they can get employment. They are not looking for charity, and they have not gone to the provincial government to ask for aid, because if they did that and received aid under present regulations in that province, they would become paupers and would cease to be citizens of this country. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why they have not gone to the Nova Scotia government to ask for aid under present legislation in that province.

I want to be quite frank. I have brought this matter to the attention of certain members of this Government, and I am going to interview members of the Government again, because last week I received communications from several clergymen in Sydney, wise men who brought this matter to my attention in a way in which it was not brought before, and I am bound to say that it is a most serious condition,—in a city of 27,000 people or thereabouts, to have 2,000 bread-winners walking the streets in idleness because there is no occupation for them. When I brought this matter to the attention of certain members of the Government, they did not say: "We will not act;" but I am bringing it to their attention to-day publicly, and I am going to interview them again. When I do so, I shall be reinforced by every private member from Nova Scotia, and I am going to draw to their attention the fact that there is a way out of this difficulty as regards the 2,000 steel workers in the city of Sydney. That is, the problem can be solved in that city without adding one dollar to the public debt of this country, because a way can be devised whereby the steel mills in the city of Sydney may be put into operation by this Government, if they see fit to have them put into operation, and for every dollar which will be spent by this Government in putting those mills into operation, this Government will receive a return in the shape of the product of those mills. If this Government are not able to use this product now, they will be able to use it in a very short time. I would not have spoken about this matter; but I felt, the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg having made reference to the situation in the city of Sydney, that my people down there, if I may say so, would think I was derelict in the duty in which I feel I owe them—and which, I believe, the Government of this country owes them —if I did not speak on their behalf. My hon. friend said that there was a possibility of the steel workers of Sydney going on the farms or fishing. In the first place, that is not their occupation, and, as in any other occupation, success——requires years of service.

That is the first difficulty. The second difficulty is the fact that these 2,000 steel workers in the city of Sydney have not the means to procure the necessary equipment for fishing. It is true that it does not cost very much—between $200 and $400 being required. But this is altogether beyond these people. And in Nova Scotia these workmen could not go in for farming, even if they were adapted to this calling which they certainly are not. We are not a great farming community, and there are no farms that could be available for these men. Furthermore, there is an insurmountable obstacle in the lack of capital. In spite of all the circumstances that have conspired against them, however, these 2,000 men of whom my hon. friend has spoken have not gone to the government of Nova Scotia to seek one dollar of public charity, and I commend that indomitable, manly spirit on their part. At the same time they are, to my knowledge, in dire need to-day, many of their families facing actual starvation.

There is a way out of this unfortunate situation, and I trust that before the Government decide whether or not they will anticipate an order of steel rails for the city of Sydney they will take my word for it when I tell them that there is the direst necessity at this moment for some effective action. The problem is not only local; it is one of national concern. There is not a province in the entire Dominion, if my information is correct, where it is not necessary at the present time for some steps to be taken, either by the local authorities or by the Dominion government to provide relief; and I am one of those who believe that the federal government might be called upon to render more assistance to the people of the country than has been given, either by past governments or, so far, by this Government. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) has stated that $102,000 has been spent in the last two or three months in the city of Vancouver. I can tell him that in order to provide adequate relief in the present situation in Sydney, not $100,000 or $200,000, but $500,000 is necessary. What is $10,000 or $50,000 when distributed among 2,000 families? It is nothing. It may tide them over for a week or so, but whatever assistance it may give is fleeting. So that the time may come, if the present condition of affairs develops as in the last two months, when the federal government will have to make greater efforts than have been made in the past to alleviate the sufferings of the people. I know for a fact that the municipalities in Nova Scotia, which are not in any very different position from those of other parts of the country, are to-day financially embarrassed. At any rate, those with which I am familiar have overdrawn their accounts at the banks and have not the wherewithal to furnish relief to those who are in need. And, what is more, I doubt very much whether the provincial government, if it were called upon, would be in a position to lend any assistance. The federal government may possibly say, "Well, we are in the same position ourselves; we have not the funds." Well, Sir, let there be more co-operation. Take the municipality of the county of Cape Breton, for example. The county council of Cape Breton meets once a year, in the month of January, and if any parts of the municipality were in need of relief it would take a considerable length of time to convene the council and adopt measures co-operative with the province, or with this Government, for that matter. The Order in Council which was passed some months ago offering relief to soldiers embraced only certain classes of men, those who were getting pensions and those who were receiving vocational training, and it therefore did not meet the requirements of the municipalities, and the various districts generally, in the province from which I come.

Now, sir, I wish to inform this House that the people of the province of Nova Scotia are neither thriftless nor lazy, but are desirous, nay more, anxious, to work. They are not a class who would evade the responsibility which they owe their families, their friends, or the public at large. The labouring classes in that province, I say, are anxious and eager to get employment that they may earn a livelihood, because they have not looked for charity and are not doing so now. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, many of them would starve rather than go looking for charity. I hope, therefore, that the Government will believe me when I repeat that there is the most urgent necessity for some effective action in the city of Sydney and its vicinity. In regard to the miners, there is the question of wages; and I do not think my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) will say that at the present time there is any large amount of unemployment in the coal industry in Nova Scotia. The question of wages is entirely another matter, and I hope that in a very short time the question will be settled when it comes before the conciliation board, which is now being reconvened. At this particular stage, where promptness of action is imperative, I do not think that an investigation into the matter of insurance against unemployment is going to help the situation. No investigations of any kind will relieve the distress that exists; immediate action is necessary. When, however, the question of insurance against unemployment, the question of old age pensions, and other social questions which have been more or less engaging the public mind for some time, are brought to the forefront, I can assure my hon. friend from Centre Winnipeg that they will find a staunch supporter and an ardent friend in myself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend's motion is capable of two interpretations. I shall be prepared to vote for it on one interpretation, but not on the other. If he means that the federal government must assume an obligation, in the matter of solving the unemployment question, apart altogether from the obligation on the part of the municipalities and provinces, I shall feel obliged to oppose his motion. On the other hand, if he means that it is the duty of the federal government to co-operate with the municipalities and provinces in a solution of the question and in trying to devise effective means towards that end, then I shall be prepared to support it. I should like him to indicate which view he wishes us to take of his motion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I wish briefly—

Mr. SPEAKER: I wish to inform the House that the mover closes the debate. If any other hon. member wishes to speak on the motion he should do so now.

Right Hon ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I think the Government ought to be able, as the motion reads, to determine its meaning and to decide its position with regard thereto. For myself, I do not want to be understood as voting in any atmosphere of doubt when I record my judgment on this resolution. I have no trouble whatever in determining my position.

The resolution implies that in so far as relief is concerned the principle we have followed is inadequate and does not get us far enough, and that some new principle, some new scheme should be sought out and adopted, placing upon the federal authorities the initial and primary burden for relief from distress. So far as that is concerned, whether as leader of the Government, or as leader of the Opposition, or as a private member, I have no doubt as to where I ought to stand—none whatever.

I agree wholly with the principle that when it comes to the handing out of relief to those in want and distress, the obligation is primarily municipal; if it passes the municipality, the next obligation is on the province; and lastly, and only lastly, on the federal authority. I believe that if we depart from the principle of primary municipal responsibility, we land ourselves in a Serbonian bog from which we will not emerge, and this House should not countenance departing from that principle for any reason whatsoever. Consequently I oppose the resolution.

I oppose it because I believe it seeks to put this House on a false basis with regard to unemployment relief. I do not for a moment say that we have no responsibility with regard to unemployment; not at all. The primary duty of the federal parliament is to adopt such measures of high public policy as will bring to a minimum unemployment, and spread to the utter most limits employment amongst our people.

May I compliment the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll)? I know not what he has in mind in suggesting that there are things which may be done in the way of legislation which will conduce to employment among those out of work. That is something for this House to consider. If he has something practical, something which will really bring about that result, I would be disposed to favorably consider it. As I say, I do not know what he has in mind, but consideration of the subject he mentions is the primary duty of the federal parliament. When it comes to actually relieving those in distress, that is the primary duty of the municipalities and the provinces.

Now, is the Government following the proper course as regards both of these responsibilities?—first, to so dispose public policy as to make employment general and remunerative, which is the initial and major responsibility?—second, to take care to the extent of its last, not initial, responsibility of such residuum of distress as may remain? As to the first, we will know better when the programme of the Government comes down. The Order Paper as yet is absurdly barren,—the most anaemic indeed that I ever have witnessed. But there are still some weeks ahead and there are those who have some hope left. Consequently the time for the discussion of that phase has not yet come. As to the second, as the Prime Minister has stated, the Government is following the principle laid down by the late administration,—the principle of placing the task of actually taking care of the unemployed upon the local authorities. Follow any other course, and what results? Not relief to the people generally, but only the encouragement of unemployment locally due to the knowledge that locally they would not have to bear the strain.

Now, there is one thing in the statement of the Prime Minister that really I do not understand. I hope that he only made a mistake. He stated there were four provinces which had not asked for assistance in the matter of relieving unemployment, and that those four provinces should not be called upon to give any assistance in the way of general relief. Let us inquire into that declaration. Under the late administration the municipalities were asked to put in the machinery to provide relief, where relief could not be avoided and was called for by all the claims of mercy and decency, and then to call on the provincial authorities to provide one-third of the actual disbursements,—not of the disbursements for the machinery at all; we did not propose that we or the provinces pay any of the expenses of organization—but only one-third of the actual amount that reached the unemployed. If the province and the municipality did so we would pay a third. That placed upon the general federal taxpayer the obligation to pay one-third of the residuum of actual relief.

We went further. We said: In so far as the disabled returned soldier is concerned, he is the special charge of the Government. He has suffered in the war, and it may be that because of his suffering he particularly comes in contact with the distress incident to unemployment because often he is the first to be discharged. Therefore, as respects the disabled returned man, we said we could and did take care of him altogether. That is the extent to which we went, and I think we spent something over one million dollars last year in taking care specially of these disabled returned men. I do not know just what the expenditure was in the general relief, one-third of which we bore.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I interrupt my right hon. friend? I assume that he has in mind that I was referring to the system of relief now being administered when I made the remark that the other provinces would probably take exception to spending further money on unemployment relief. I was not referring to the present method of relief at all. I was speaking of the broad question of the federal government assuming the obligation of giving relief to unemployment generally, and I said that under the circumstances the four provinces, not having requested any relief from the federal government, did the House think that those provinces would be indifferent to the federal government assuming the general obligation of relieving unemployment throughout the Dominion?

Mr. MEIGHEN: What the Prime Minister said was: Would it be fair to expect these four provinces, which were not asking for anything themselves, to contribute to the relief of unemployment in the other provinces. He said it would not be fair. Whether he referred to the present method or any method is perfectly immaterial. If it is a false principle to call upon a province which does not ask for relief itself to contribute to unemployment relief in another province that does ask it, then that applies to anything which invokes that principle. In other words, if you use a principle that is false, you are doing wrong. Let me repeat. If it is wrong to call upon a province that itself takes care of its own obligations to assist a province that does not, then that is a good principle and you should not invade it. You invade it by the system now in vogue. Consequently I say it is either not a good principle or we should depart from the system now in vogue.

I think it is not a good principle I think that you can fairly ask the whole Dominion to assist on certain conditions in the relief of unemployment. But you must not go too far, you must go only a short distance in that regard; and the reason we came to that opinion was this: The conditions which resulted from the war were such that unemployment was to some extent—in what measure it was impossible exactly to say—the direct result of the war itself. Therefore, because of the returned soldier obligation we felt in justice bound to assume and spread over the whole of Canada some share of the unemployment burden. That reason seemed to me good. If I did not believe it I would have to oppose the Government's policy, and I could not justify the policy that the late government adopted.

Now, the present Government, while following precisely the principle that we applied, not departing in any way whatever from it, did alter the proportions; but instead of altering them along the line of the principle suggested by the leader of the Government to-day, it altered them exactly the opposite way. It said to the municipality: Your responsibility is primary, but the share you pay will be the least of all. We will pay half, you will pay only one-sixth, and the province one-third; that makes the whole, whereas before the municipality paid a third, the province a third and the Dominion a third. Consequently over the whole of Canada he spreads now half—more than ever—making the very provinces that asked for nothing contribute more than they ever contributed before to the relief of provinces that asked for federal help. In a word, his policy is a direct antitheses to his expression of sentiment. However, it is not the first time that that incident has occurred.

Now, the Prime Minister, in regard to the unemployment insurance question, reads from the Liberal platform. You will be delighted, Mr. Speaker, and we all are, to hear at last a reference to the Liberal platform from the lips of the Prime Minister. I am sure all are in accord with me when I say that this is the first time that platform has been brought into the realm of this House since he reached his present exalted post; this is the first time he has read from its provisions. But, may I ask, Mr. Speaker, what is this resolution that he says his Government actually binds itself to fulfil? It is a pretty safe resolution. He says that if it is in the public interest—these are words that my hon. friend placed in it as he read—and if the public finances will permit, and when they permit, and if it is within our powers, then we ought to find some way of co-operating with the provinces in order to introduce unemployment insurance. If one can improve on that for a resolution that by a circuitous excursion finally ends by saying nothing, that at least he has exceeded my powers of circumlocution. The Prime Minister having seized on this lone declaration of the Liberal platform and declared his fidelity to it, I conclude that the plan of the Government is this: only to give heed to the programme of the Liberal convention when the resolution in question is surrounded at all four points of the compass with a wide-open "if" and when there is nothing but swinging doors in between.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): Mr. Speaker, just for a moment I would like to bring to the attention of the House the condition of affairs in our own province of Ontario, where a certain dispute has arisen between the Hydro-Electric Commission and the provincial government. Bonds have been issued and the money is in the bank for the construction of certain radial lines and other public improvements which, if proceeded with, would go a long way toward relieving unemployment in Ontario. I can only say it is the wish of a large number of the people of Ontario that that dispute should be settled, or this misunderstanding cleared up. The purchase of the Toronto street railway, though it is still the subject of arbitration, has resulted in the payment out of large sums for the reconstruction of the system, and that has given much relief to the unemployed. The same thing could be done in connection with these radials. In most respects the different parties have agreed, but for some reason the legislation governing the matter is subject to some changes. If that matter could be settled several millions of dollars now available in Toronto could immediately be devoted to the purpose for which the money was appropriated, thus giving employment in connection with the works for which the bonds were issued.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to note that all hon. members who have spoken on this question agree as to its importance and its urgency. I want to make a few practical suggestions, seeing that hon. members on the Government side have not made any, and that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) has not made any. It has been stated that the member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) has not made any. So perhaps I may be pardoned if I attempt at least to make one or two. If the suggestions I make are not of any value, we simply ask that the Government take this matter into consideration and themselves make suggestions that will be of value.

There is no idea on our part to charge the present employment situation to this Government. We understand that they have no more to do with it than we have. We are simply urging that it is a question of national importance, and that, therefore, it is a question that cannot be passed by as merely something for the municipalities or for the provinces. Those who have been connected with labour for some years know that the municipalities take precisely the same attitude that this Government has taken. They say: "This is not a matter for us; we have no authority." And the provincial governments say the very same thing. But when we come to this House we find the federal government saying that the municipalities or the provinces are responsible. I think it is reasonable to suggest that the Government should in the first place find out who is responsible. It would be well for labour, it would be well for the members of this House and of other legislative bodies, to know who has authority in these matters. The question seems at present to be undecided, for both the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the leader of the Opposition—for once in the same camp—have stated very definitely that this is a matter for the municipalities and must not be taken out of their hands. I am not suggesting that it should be taken out of their hands, but I want to know whether it is actually in their hands now. It seems to me that matters of unemployment or anything else pertaining to labour are pretty much of a football that is kicked around from one authority to the other. It is necessary that we should know where the authority lies.

Now, the unemployment situation is not a new thing, nor is it going to be settled permanently with the coming of summer; it is a problem that has arisen out of the economic system that prevails. I do not think, nor do I believe that the other representative of labour thinks, that the question can be ultimately settled in this House. But we do think that something of a practical nature can be put forward. The Prime Minister challenged the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg to offer a practical suggestion. That is only fair, but I would like to remind the Prime Minister that he already has had a very practical suggestion from the organized labour movement of Canada: I refer to the case as presented to his Government by the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada. The Trades and Labour Congress have put forward a solution which seems to them to be good; it is the only one, or the best one, they have been able to think of. As I say, it has been placed in the hands of the Government. I do not know what the Government are going to do with it, but I want to put upon Hansard what the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada request of the Government with regard to unemployment:

> We recommend the enactment of unemployment insurance embodying the following principles:—
> (a) Creation of a federal fund, from which payments may be made to unemployed, and under employed persons.
> (b) This fund to be raised by assessment on the pay rolls of undertakings whose workers are covered by such insurance and added to by Dominion and, if possible, provincial public funds.
> (c) Payments to be made to workers during actual unemployment or when employed for fixed periods for less than 75 per cent of their regular working hours.
> (d) No employer to be allowed to discharge numbers of his workers without due notice to the Employment Service of Canada, so as to give them an opportunity to provide for their redistribution.
> (e) The Government to have power to investigate as to the real need of discharge of workers, and consequent limitation of production.
> (f) No employers to be allowed to discharge workers for lack of work, until the hours of such industry have been reduced to at least half of the normal working hours.
> (g) Workers in this way underemployed to have their wages supplemented from the federal fund up to not less than 75 per cent of their normal earnings.
> (h) This Act to apply to workers under public bodies as well as to private employers.
> (i) Use of the advisory councils of the employment services should be made for the carrying out of the act, and power given them to deal with matters relating to the co-ordinating of public works, and perhaps their partial financing from the fund, in order to avoid unemployment. These suggestions are by no means complete but would provide a starting point for this much needed legislation.

That is the starting point which the organized labour movement of Canada has suggested to this Government, and I repeat, if that is not considered to be a feasible proposition, let the Government provide a more feasible one. Inasmuch as they have admitted that this is a question of grave importance which they are willing to see settled, have they a better solution than the one suggested, and if so, what is it? I think the Labour representatives in this House will be only too glad to support the Government if they have a solution that they consider better than the one I have just mentioned.

I want to offer another suggestion. If unemployment insurance is not considered to be practicable at the present time, and if the Government has no other substitute proposal, I want to read just a clause from the proposal put forward by the Trades and Labour Council of Calgary. This is merely a palliative, as they call it, but it might be worthy of consideration. I simply offer it to the Government at its face value:

> That the Dominion, provincial governments and municipalities prepare estimates for all public works that can be possibly carried out during the winter months, and that tenders for same be prepared and submitted early in the fall to eliminate any unnecessary waiting to start the work when needed.
> That the Dominion Government take under consideration the further construction of the national highways with a view that same be eventually completed from coast to coast.

These are the two principal palliatives. I do not know whether the Government will adopt them, but at all events I have submitted them for consideration.

In conclusion, the Government has already committed itself on this question. It has already paid out doles to the unemployed in Canada. It has accepted partial responsibility, at least, in conjunction with provincial and municipal governments for aiding the unemployed. That is an assumption at least of partial responsibility. Furthermore, the Government, I understand, has assumed responsibilities for losses which may have been incurred by large corporations who were engaged in producing munitions and other war material. If I am not mistaken, the British Empire Steel Corporation in Nova Scotia actually received subsidies—perhaps that is not the exact term—because when the war ceased they were left with a great plant on their hands and seemingly could not make anticipated profits. The Government, I understand, reimbursed them to the extent of their probable losses. Surely, if the Government can undertake to reimburse a company for probable losses, it ought to assume some responsibility for the men who are thrown out of work by 5 p.m. that company. That is not asking too much; in my opinion, it is a reasonable proposition. I believe that the Government is just as sincere in trying to solve the unemployment problem as I am, and I have no hesitation in saying so. I believe that the leader of the Opposition

[Mr. Irvine.]

(Mr. Meighen) is also sincere. But it seems that while we all think it is a great and serious problem which we would all wish to see partially or completely solved, nobody seems to know what to do about it. Does that mean that we must drop the matter there, bury it and leave it; that we will not continue to make a study of this question? Would it not be possible for the Government to have a Standing Committee appointed to study this question and continue to make proposals? Because I can assure the House that unemployment is going to be with us much longer than this summer. Next winter is likely to be as bad if not worse than the last, and now is the time to take precautionary measures and do everything possible to prevent unemployment being as prevalent throughout Canada as it was last winter. If the suggestions put forward by the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada are not practicable, and if the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) and myself have not contributed anything of value, let not the effort stop there; let us find somebody who can give us something of value.

I have another suggestion, and it is that this Government take steps towards calling a national conference at which municipal and provincial governments and the Dominion Government will be represented, for the purpose of taking into consideration the proposals of the Peace Conference and seeing what action shall be taken regarding them.

There is one other thing I would urge, and it is that the Government immediately start to put into effect the resolution that was read by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to-day.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): First, one or two remarks on the suggestions that have been put forward in this discussion by hon. members who have spoken.

It was suggested by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock), I think, that a certain number of the unemployed in Vancouver were there because they were unwilling to go out on the prairies. A great many of them last spring did go out on the prairies, but were sent back because there was no work for them to do. There were advertisements, I believe, placed in some of the papers on the prairies protesting against any more men being brought over the mountains from the West. Then, as is very well known, owing to the seasonal character of agriculture, after the threshing is over on the prairies large numbers of men have no further work to do on the farms; that is, there are more men needed on the farms just at threshing time than during the winter months, and those unemployed drift back into the cities, and, of course, a considerable number of them drift back over the mountains to Vancouver. But this situation is no fault of the men who are found out of work during the winter time. It arises as I said before because of certain mal-adjustments in our industrial system itself.

Again, we are told that charity ought to begin at home, and that the municipalities ought to take action in this matter. A very large number of municipalities, at least in the West, have taken action in this matter, and it is only after they have found themselves unable to cope with the situation that they have referred the matter to the provincial governments. In turn, it is only after the provincial governments have found that the question was altogether too big for them, that the federal government has been appealed to. In the resolution of the conference called by the Manitoba Government, which I read it was distinctly urged that the problem was on such a large scale that it could not be solved short of being treated as a national problem.

One hon. gentleman from the East suggested that I had thought that possibly the steel workers might go fishing. He did not catch my point at all. I stated that some people had suggested: Why not go into other classes of work?—why should they not go fishing? And my position was precisely that which the hon. member took, that it would be impossible for them to go fishing or engage in any other occupation which required considerable equipment.

I have no great hope that the problem of unemployment will be solved simply by introducing a policy of unemployment insurance. I frankly admit that unemployment insurance has not been a full success in places where it has been tried. But it has accomplished something. We are faced with a world condition today. Some believe that our economic problems can be solved only by the most radical and far-reaching changes in our whole economic system. I am one of those. But I may be mistaken. If the present system of organization is capable of carrying on, give it a chance. If it is capable of providing for the wants of the people, give it every opportunity, but, in the meantime, do not let us permit the men and women, and especially the little children to suffer. If the existing system can take care of the people, that may show that some of us are wrong when, as we try to analyse the situation, we conclude that other and more radical changes are necessary. Some of us have been fairly closely associated with what is known as radical labour throughout western Canada and I should like this House to know there is a very strong impression among quite large groups of labour that it is next to impossible to accomplish anything through the action of Parliamment. They have almost given up hope. Some of us have stated that we ought to use parliamentary power to the full extent. Others reply that such a course would be useless. Really I do not know but that they are right. If we come here asking for so simple a thing as that this Government should undertake measures to provide for the men that are confessedly on the verge of starvation, and who have had to be fed by the municipalities during the winter months, and if this Government refuses to take action to provide, even for primary needs of that kind, I am sure it gives force to the contention it is hopeless to secure any reforms of far-reaching character through our parliamentary machinery. The Prime Minister speaks of being willing to co-operate with the provinces and municipalities. "Co-operate" is a good word, but I would like to have a little bit more definiteness in regard to it. There has been up to the present co-operation in the giving of relief. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) says the way is still open for co-operation in the giving of more relief. My resolution looks to some action more far-reaching than the simple giving of doles. It looks at least in the direction of a permanent solution of this problem, or, if not a permanent solution, then more adequate care for the people who at present are being crushed under our present system. The Prime Minister says he would be quite favourable to the resolution if it were understood that it does not mean that the federal government assumes exclusive jurisdiction in this matter, and that it does not mean that it would take responsibility from the provinces or municipalities. I have no desire, whatever, to remove responsibility from the provinces or municipalities. I have, as a matter of fact, very little interest in these purely jurisdictional affairs. I want to secure definite construction action. If the Premier can assure us that the Government will go forward in the near future and give us some definite action that is all that any of us require at this particular time. My resolution reads:

That in the opinion of this House, in view of the widespread unemployment with which the municipalities and provinces find themselves unable to cope—

That is, I think substantiated by the resolutions which have come forward to the Government, copies of which resolutions have been furnished to all of us.

—it is desirable that the federal Government should devise some means of dealing effectively with the situation.

That is intended to place upon the Government the responsibility of finding the best means of meeting the situation. In this resolution we are not even urging unemployment insurance. That is thrown out merely as a constructive suggestion. We are urging upon the Government definite action, so that the people who are now suffering shall not have to go through another winter such as that through which they have just passed.

Motion agreed to.

MINISTERS AND DIRECTORSHIPS

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by Mr. McMaster, seconded by Mr. Lanctôt:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable in the public interest that all ministers of the Crown, on their appointment as such should resign all directorships held by them in banks, trust companies, insurance companies, transportation companies or large public utility corporations; and that should Ministers of the Crown retain their directorships in companies other than those hereinabove mentioned, such companies should have no business dealings with the Government of the Dominion of Canada, or with any department thereof or with any railway or ship owned or controlled by said Government; it being understood that such prohibition should not affect the use by such company of the public services afforded by the said Government, or any department, or by any such railway or ship.

MINISTERS AND DIRECTORSHIPS

Mr. LANCTOT (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I beg to draw your attention to the fact that I am not the seconder of this motion.

Mr. McMASTER (Translation): That is the case, Mr. Speaker, the seconder is the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould).

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) will second my resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER: The fault is all mine. The member sitting next to the hon. gentleman from Brome (Mr. McMaster) is the member for Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Lanctôt), and I gave his name as seconder. The hon. member from Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) is the seconder of the motion.

Mr. ANDREW McMASTER (Brome): I ask the attention of hon. members of this House to what this motion proposes to do, and what it proposes not to do. It does not propose that members of the Government who are directors in companies carrying on what I might call private businesses should resign their directorships. If a member is carrying on the business, let us say, of a wholesale grocer in corporate form, I do not propose that he should, on becoming a member of the Cabinet, resign his directorship in such company. I propose that his company should be put exactly in the same position as if it were owned by him in non-corporate form, and that the company should not have the privilege of doing any business with the Government. What I claim for this resolution is that it proposes to prevent a possible conflict of fiduciary interests and that it is framed for the purpose of asking the opinion of this House as to the undesirability of members of the Government being at the same time directors in great public corporations, such as the banks, trust companies, transportation companies and great public utility corporations. I trust that I shall be able to place before the House such arguments as will lead it to the belief that what I am endeavouring to do now is in the public interest. I may say, what I said in introducing this matter last year, that I desire to discuss it on the plane of principle and not on that of personality; that I attack, not an individual, but a practice.

This is not the first time that I have brought such matters before the House. Last session, I introduced a bill providing that within fifteen days of accepting office, all ministers of the Crown who were directors in companies—and at that time I made no differentiation between large companies and small companies—should resign their directorships. I have changed that attitude; this session I have not gone so far as I did last year. I have not gone so far, largely because arguments were advanced last year which showed me that it was unwise to go so far as I went on that occasion. What were the arguments used against my bill last year? There was, first of all, the argument that it was unwise, improper. I will deal with that criticism in a moment. There were other criticisms; there was the criticism that the bill went too far in that it tried to crystallize into legislation what should be rather left to the feelings of ministers themselves. There was also the argument that it went too far; that it was unfair to ask a man who was say, carrying on a business individual to himself, in corporate form, to resign a directorship in such business. I have met those two last criticisms. I am not asking for legislation on this occasion; I am not asking that men who are carrying on their private business or their partnership business in corporate form should, on assuming office, have to resign their directorships in such companies. But I am returning to the charge in respect of the holding of directorships in banks, trust companies and transportation companies, and the first point that I wish to make is that everything which has happened in this country in respect of the holding, by ministers of the Crown, of directorships in banks, trust companies and such other organizations since the introduction of my bill of last year, has ratified, confirmed and approved everything that I said in that connection on that occasion.

I do not wish to delay the House unduly with this matter, for it seems to me that what I have to say is of primordial, primary soundness. I think I shall have the general agreement of hon. gentlemen who sit on both the front benches of this House, when I say that, in this country, the life of a minister is one of unremitting toil. Our practice in this country imposes upon ministers vast amounts of routine business, and it is only with difficulty that a minister is able to obtain the time required to study policies. I say that we have the very best of authority that no man can serve two masters. There is nothing that one can do better in connection with such a matter as this than to give an example. There is no stronger argument, I humbly submit, as to the soundness of the position which I am assuming on this occasion, then what happened in connection with the Merchants Bank of Canada. On the 31st of November last, the Merchants Bank of Canada possessed, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, some hundreds of branches. It claimed to have a capital stock of about $10,500,000 and a reserve of about $9,000,000. For some months prior to the 7th day of December, it had been paying to its shareholders, by way of bonus or dividends, a profit at the rate of about 13 per cent. On the latter date the people of Canada were astounded to learn that the bank was in a very bad way. It was reported that the reserve had been practically wiped out. It was found that great losses had occurred through advances to a stock-broking firm and also to a manufacturing concern of which a representative of the bank had been in charge, or in charge, to a certain extent, of the finances for many months. That was the situation which confronted the Canadian people on that occasion.

The ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries was a director of the Merchants Bank of Canada. The Merchants Bank of Canada, as the House knows, was sold out to the Bank of Montreal. I make no complaint of the sale; it may have been the very best thing that could have happened, in view of the situation in which that bank found itself on the 7th of December, 1921. But the minister in question was also a director of the Royal Trust Company, which is considered to be and which is, I think, in fact the side-door of the Bank of Montreal, and it is a matter, difficult for any outsider to the transaction, to state whether, in this transaction, the minister in question represented the interests of the Merchants Bank of Canada, which was the vendor, or the interests of the Bank of Montreal, which was the vendee, or the general interests of the Canadian people. I am charging no wrongdoing against any one; but I say that it is an unwholesome position for a man to find himself in, that people cannot tell which side of the bargain he is supposed to be looking after. To my proposed legislation of last year, the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries was an outspoken opponent. Although, when I address the House, I seldom weary it by reading extracts, may I be allowed to read a little of the debate which took place last year in connection with this matter? The Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the last administration said:

> I have no hesitation in stating that I am a director of banks and trust companies. I ask how could it be otherwise? A man who enters business early in life, achieves a success, and becomes associated not only with a large industrial concern—of which he may happen to be the president, vice-president or managing director—but with other commercial undertakings in the city or town in which he resides, and who amasses wealth, will find himself invited to become a director of other large corporations, banks or trust companies. If a man is not successful in business, and if he is not possessed of good judgment he will not find himself on any of these various directorates.

Now, suppose a business man is called to serve his country? It is a well-known fact that business men have no desire to become members of Parliament, great as the honour is, or to become members of a government, although they appreciate to the full what that honour means. Judging from the political history of Canada and other countries it is a rare thing to find a business man, who has succeeded in commerce or in finance, either a member of the popular chamber or a member of any particular Cabinet. But, Sir, if the State does call that man, there is only one thing for him to do. He must place the duties of his public office, the duty of serving his country, before his business interests, and henceforward devote all his time and all his attention to the administration of those public affairs to which he has been called. If I may be permitted to make a personal reference for a moment my position as a member of the Government and a member of the House is no different from the position which would be taken by any other business man. I had, of course, to drop all my business connections as far as giving them any personal attention was concerned; I have not been able to attend to the duties of the various boards to which I belong. But, Mr. Speaker, is it fair for the hon. member (Mr. McMaster) to expect a business man identified with large interests in this country to at once resign from those boards upon his entering the Government?

In closing the debate, I made this reply to the Hon. Mr. Ballantyne:

Now, I come to the argument made by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne). I may say—and I would call all members of this House to witness who heard me the other day—that in introducing this measure I studiously refrained from imputing any wrong-doing to any minister, and I refrained absolutely from making a personal attack upon any one. But the Minister of Marine has endeavoured to attract the lightning upon himself; his doing so has been no fault of mine. The minister has been frank, if he has been anything. He said: I am a director in many large industrial companies, in banks and in trust companies. He seems to think that his holding of these positions is perfectly compatible with his being a minister of the Crown,—and he now nods his head in token of assent. But, Mr. Speaker, he goes on to say this: The energy and the skill required in the administration of a large department of the Government is such that I have not been able to give any attention to my company matters; —and he nods his head again. Well, in all kindness I ask him, is it fair to the shareholders of the Royal Trust Company that he should remain a director of that company, that he should give his name to the institution and the prestige that his name carries with it, while he gives no attention at all to the affairs of the Company? Is it fair, is it right, for a man to hold himself out as a guardian of the interests of the shareholders and of the depositors, if there are any, of the Royal Trust Company, and yet give no attention to the affairs of the Company? My hon. friend is a director, if I mistake not—and he will correct me if I make any mistake—of the Merchants Bank of Canada. Is it fair or right that the working men of this country should be invited to place their hard-earned savings in the care of the Merchants Bank of Canada, relying upon my hon. friend being a director of that institution, when as a matter of fact he tells us that he can give no attention to the matter? I do not think it is right, and I think that on further consideration, my hon. friend will come to the same conclusion.

[Mr. McMaster.]

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada who have seen what happened in connection with this bank have come to the conclusion which the member for Brome formed last session in respect of this matter. I need not stress this point. But for a minister of the Crown to hold positions in which he is a trustee for other people's money, when the work entailed in his office as minister precludes him from giving any attention to the affairs of the institution which is taking care of that money, is, I respectfully say, unfair to the minister himself, unfair to the cabinet of which he is a member, unfair to the party to which he belongs, and unfair to the people of the country of which he is supposed to be one of the governors in charge of affairs. A man comes to occupy a great position in connection with business matters if he allows his name to be used as a director. He gives notice to the world that, so far as concerns the policy of the institution in question, he takes his share of responsibility; and although he does not pretend to look after the details himself, he will see that they are properly looked after.

Now let us pass to another phase of the question. The world has been struggling for years past for political equality, for social equality, and now for economic equality. In this struggle men see, with a considerable amount of uneasiness, the fact that in this country, as in others, the money power is becoming centralized in fewer and fewer hands. That is a matter on which we might have a long and interesting discussion. Interlocking directorates tie together a large number of the great financial and industrial institutions of the country. I am not going to discuss that question to-day, but the point I shall make before the House, and perhaps in some degree before the country, is that interlocking directorates should not get past the door that guards the entrance to the executive council of the nation. A friend of mine who is conversant with business matters has prepared a graph for me in which he has put, in most striking form, the connection existing between the great financial, industrial and transportation interests of this country. On one side of the page I hold in my hand there appear the names of fifteen leading men of this country who are directors in large institutions. On the other side of the page, there are the names of sixteen great financial, industrial and transportation concerns. Fifteen of them are Canadian institutions, and one an American corporation which has been playing no inconsiderable part in financial affairs in Canada during the last few months or years. The amount of assets credited to these corporations totals $4,295,000,000, or considerably more than the whole national debt of Canada. The names of these great institutions are:

The Montreal City and District Savings Bank,
The Sun Life Assurance Company,
The Cockshutt Plow Company,
The Dominion Bank,
The Dominion Textile Company,
The Canadian Bank of Commerce,
The Canadian Pacific Railway Company,
The Bank of Montreal,
The National City Bond Company,— which is apparently a subsidiary of the National City Bank, New York.

The Royal Trust Company—

—which I have characterized, I think with perfect correctness as being a side-door to the Bank of Montreal.

The Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company,
The Shawinigan Water & Power Company,
The Laurentide Company,
The Royal Bank,
The Montreal Trust Company—which is really a side-door to the Royal Bank.

—and The Montreal Cottons Limited.

Now, of these sixteen great companies there are fifteen men in Canada who are directors of one, or two, or three, or four, or five, or six. As I desire to discuss this matter on a plane not of personality but of principle, I will refer to these directors as No. 1, No. 2, etc.

Director No. 1 is a director in the Cockshutt Plow Company, the Dominion Bank, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the National City Bond Company.

Director No. 2 is a director in the Canadian Bank of Commerce and in the National City Bond Company.

Director No. 3 is a director in the Dominion Bank and in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Director No. 4 is a director in the Cockshutt Plow Company and the Bank of Montreal.

Director No. 5 is a director in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Bank of Montreal and the Royal Trust Company.

Director No. 6 is a director in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Bank of Montreal and the Royal Trust Company.

Director No. 7 is a director in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Bank of Montreal, the National City Bond Company and the Royal Trust Company.

Director No. 8 is a director in the Montreal City and District Savings Bank, the Bank of Montreal, the National City Bond Company, the Royal Trust Company, the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company, the Shawinigan Water and Power Company and the Laurentide Paper Company.

Director No. 9 is a director in the Dominion Textile Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company; in the Shawinigan Water and Power Company; in the Royal Bank; in the Montreal Trust Company and in the Montreal Cottons Limited.

Director No. 10 is a director in the Dominion Textile Company, the Bank of Montreal, the Royal Trust Company and in the Montreal Cottons Limited.

Director No. 11 is a director in the Dominion Textile Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Bank of Montreal, the Royal Trust Company, the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company and the Laurentide Paper Company.

Director No. 12 is a director in the Montreal City and District Savings Bank; in the Sun Life Assurance Company; in the Montreal Trust Company and in the Montreal Cottons Limited.

Director No. 13 is a director in the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company; in the Shawinigan Water and Power Company; in the Laurentide Paper Company and in the Montreal Trust Company.

Director No. 15 is a director in the National City Bond Company, the Royal Bank and the Montreal Trust Company.

To make the proof of the interlocking still more complete, I will take five of the chief of these great corporations and will show how closely allied the boards of these are to each other.

Thus, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has on its board of directors Nos. 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9 and 11.

The Bank of Montreal has on its directorate, directors Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10 and 11.

There are five directors of the Bank of Montreal who are also directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and of the executive committee of the Canadian Pacific Railway consisting of five directors three are also directors of the Bank of Montreal.

The National City Bond Company has on its directorate, directors Nos. 1, 2, 7, 8 and 15.

The Royal Trust Company has on its directorate directors Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 10 and 11.

The Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company has on its directorate, directors Nos. 8, 9, 11 and 13.

Now, as the Scotch say, what is the difference? Well, this is what I object to. We have great questions to discuss. We have followed I think a false economic system known as protection. The leader of the party situated angularly opposite will not agree with this part of my discourse.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why does the hon. gentleman confine his selection of leaders to myself?

Mr. McMASTER: There are others. I was looking at the right hon. gentleman when I spoke, as he often looks at me while he speaks, so I thought it just as well to bring him before the House as an example. It is suggested to me that I call my right hon. friend leader No. 2. Well, leader No. 2 will not agree with me when I say that the Canadian people have since 1878 followed a false economic system,—the policy of protection. That has caused to be built up in this country great corporations which have oftentimes an interest contrary to that of the mass of the people; and therefore I say it is highly undesirable that these special interests should have special representation in a Cabinet. That is one of the reasons why I believe it is unwise to have cabinet ministers who are directors in any company; there is the possibility of public prejudice. I need not stress that point. As I stated before, I am imputing wrong-doing to no one; but I do not think that is sufficient. We should have such a carrying on of our public life that there will not be room for suspicion. Let me take an extreme case for the purpose of making my argument. Suppose we find that in a Cabinet—and I do not care from what party that Cabinet was drawn —every member was a director in a cotton company, and we saw the duties on cottons raised, would we not have ground for suspicion? Of course we would. That is all I wish to say upon that point.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will my hon. friend permit a question? Following that argument, why has he not included cotton companies in his resolution?

Mr. McMASTER: I suppose that is a fair question. I wished, if possible, to keep companies within a certain class, and that class covered great companies which were of a semi-public nature. I can easily imagine that an argument could be made out that no director whose company was the supposed beneficiary of the protective system should have a seat in the Cabinet; but to do that I would have to shut out the directors of perhaps half of the industrial life of this country, and I thought that would be going too far. In connection with any reform it is always easy to put forward the stereotyped criticism, that it goes too far, or does not go far enough. If I have the co-operation and enthusiastic support of Leader No. 2 to this resolution I will be satisfied so far as this afternoon is concerned.

Now, the next point I wish to make is that the position I am assuming now, as I assumed last year, is in conformity with present legislation on the subject—the House of Commons and Senate Act, R.S.C., 1906, chapter 10. section 14 provides:

> No person, directly or indirectly, alone or with any other, by himself or by the interposition of any trustee or third party, holding or enjoying, undertaking or executing any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, with or for the Government of Canada on behalf of the Crown, or with or for any of the officers of the Government of Canada, for which any public money is to be paid, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons or shall sit or vote in the said House.

And section 21 provides:

> No member of the Senate or of the House of Commons shall receive or agree to receive any compensation, directly or indirectly, for services rendered, or to be rendered, either by himself or another, in relation to any bill, proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest or other matter before the Senate or the House of Commons, or before a committee of either House, or in order to influence or to attempt to influence any member of either House.

I do not think the passing of such a law was any reflection upon the judiciary, any more than the introduction of his resolution is intended to be or is, if properly considered, any reflection upon the members of this or any past government. Section 33 of the Judges Act reads:

> No judge of the Supreme Court of Canada or of the Exchequer Court of Canada or of any superior or county court in Canada, shall, either directly or indirectly, as director or manager of any corporation, company or firm, or in any other manner whatever, for himself or others, engage in any occupation or business other than his judicial duties; but every such judge shall devote himself exclusively to such judicial duties.

Then my resolution is in line with the provisions of the law respecting the Board of Railway Commissioners. This statute is known as the Board of Railway Commissioners Act, 9-10, George V, and section 14, subsection I, reads as follows:

14. (1) No commissioner or officer of the board shall, directly or indirectly,—

(a) hold, purchase, take or become interested in any stock, share, bond, debenture or other security, of any company subject to this Act; or

(b) have any interest in any device, appliance, machine, patented process or article or any part thereof, which may be required or used as a part of the equipment of railways or of any rolling stock to be used thereon, or of any work or undertaking subject to this Act.

16. The commissioners shall devote the whole of their time to the performance of their duties under this Act, and shall not accept or hold any office or employment inconsistent with this section.

Of course, if they cannot be shareholders in companies making these devices, they cannot be directors in such companies; therefore my resolution is in line with that legislation concerning the Board of Railway Commissioners. The Cabinet is a court of appeal to which the findings of the Railway Commission may be taken; therefore my resolution merely asks that the personnel of that court of appeal should be subject to the same limitation as the court of first instance, the Railway Commissioners of Canada.

Then, the next point, which to me is a very important one, is that the resolution follows the best practice in Canada. I have been told, and I believe it to be a fact, that when Sir Robert Borden became Prime Minister of Canada he resigned all his directorships. I am told on the authority of the Leader of the official Opposition that the former Minister of Finance, Sir Thomas White, gave up all his directorships when he became Finance Minister of Canada. And the attitude of the members of the party sitting to your right, Mr. Speaker, is in line with my resolution. I wish it were possible for the Speaker of this House to descend upon the Floor this afternoon and give me the valuable help of his eloquent voice as he did when I introduced my bill on a former occasion. On that occasion the present Speaker said:

Some years ago this Parliament amended the Judicature Act to provide that judges who had been appointed directors and were drawing directors' fees in joint stock companies or in any other company must resign. I may be told at once that no judge was ever accused of being partial in his decisions because he was a director of a company. That may be the case, but there is a great principle involved in this matter, and it is that the public must have absolute confidence in the integrity and probity of those who administer the law. It was for that purpose—that the public might respect the more the Bench of Canada—that this Parliament decided that judges should not be directors of any company. The legislation evoked considerable discussion at the time, and some of the judges protested against what they called this hardship being imposed upon them; yet public opinion ratified the action of Parliament. Every litigant approved of it because, as we say in common parlance, Caesar's wife must be above suspicion.

At the end of his interesting remarks, he said:

But I say that it is in the interests of the ministers of the Crown, and of good government and of the good reputation of Parliament, that public opinion should be satisfied that there are no conflicting interests between ministers as such and any directors of private concerns. Why, it is obvious that any day of the month a minister of the Crown who has charge of a large spending department—let us take, for example, the Public Works Department, the Department of Marine and Fisheries, or the Department of the Interior—might be put in a very awkward position as between his fiduciary interests as member of a board and his public duties on the other hand. It may happen any day, and therefore I think, without having gone very deeply into the matter, that my hon. friend is living up to British custom, to precedent, and tradition in advocating this legislation.

I do not believe I need go further in pointing out that when this matter came before the House last year, in the consideration of my bill, the party to which I have the honour to belong was very strongly in favour of the measure—not unanimously; there were some who did not like to go as far as I have gone. For instance, the member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon (Mr. Robb) felt that my motion went too far. I have largely met his objections; therefore I can recall to his attention and to the attention of others who were in the House when I made my speech last year, these words of his:

If my hon. friend were to introduce legislation that would prevent incorporated companies that had on their directorate a Minister of the Crown from doing business with the Government, I submit that he would be upon sound ground, but I fear the measure now before the House will be misunderstood, will do no good, and will not attain the object which my hon. friend desires. I am sure he had nothing personal in his mind when he introduced this measure. I am not going to offer him advice, because he is better posted upon these questions than I am, but it does seem to me that if he wishes to create such conditions as will prevent incorporated companies from abusing their privileges he might very well introduce such a measure as will put an incorporated company, with a director in the ministry, upon the same basis as a private man doing business.

That is precisely what my resolution tries to do.

Now, let us turn from Canada to Great Britain. I am not one of those who wish to see this country a pale reflection of any other country, even one so great as Great Britain. I wish to see in Canada the development of a national spirit; I want Canada to have national characteristics of her own, taking the best from all the different ethnic stocks from which we come, and leaving aside those less desirable. But I do say that to Great Britain we may very safely look for guidance in matters of this sort. It is not the universal practice in Great Britain for ministers to resign their directorships when assuming office, but it is the best practice. When we discussed this matter on a former occasion, the then member for Red Deer, Dr. Michael Clark, said that Sir Edward Grey, when he joined the Campbell-Bannerman administration in Great Britain, resigned his directorship—in fact, I think it was the presidency of a great British railway, carrying with it a remuneration of some £5,000 a year. The whole matter came before the British House of Commons some twenty years ago in an interesting discussion. A private bill had been promoted in connection with a railway, and the votes of two gentlemen, Mr. McCartney and Colonel Lockwood, were challenged. They had voted in favour of the private bill, and their votes were separately challenged by Mr. Swift MacNeil,, who said that the votes should be disallowed because they might have been influenced by the interest these members had in the companies concerned. Mr. Dillon, whose remarks are reported in British Hansard, fourth series, volume 93, page 216, spoke as follows—the precedent of Lord Rathmore had been alluded to:

> He was a very honourable man, but his case formed a very bad precedent, for his was a most striking case of a minister of the Crown uniting with that position the directorships of innumerable companies. According to the Directory of Directors, that gentleman was a director of no less than ten companies.

Mr. Lloyd George, whose name is not unfamiliar in this House, said:

> He did not think that any man ought to put himself in a position where his private interests conflicted with his public duty. He would put it higher: He did not think a man ought to put himself in a position where his duty as trustee for a corporation conflicted with his duty as trustee for his constituents.

There were two resolutions to disallow separately the two votes of these gentlemen, and there voted in favour of the motion for disallowance the present Prime Minister of Great Britain, Lloyd George, his predecessor, Mr. Asquith; Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, John Morley, Reginald McKenna, and our own Edward Blake.

[Mr. McMaster.]

In the United States it is also, I will not say the universal, but the best practice. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that when Mr. Harding formed his administration, Mr. Andrew Mellon, who had been a director of a large railway company, enjoying a large salary in that position, resigned his directorship on becoming Secretary of the Treasury.

I quote an extract from Le Journal of Paris of the 9th of February, 1922. M. Loucher, one of the ministers, had been accused, and no doubt wrongfully accused, of having profited in his private business through his official position, and in the Chamber of Deputies he made this statement:

> I wish to destroy, once and for all, a number of legends . . . It has been stated that I have been profiting by my presence in the Ministry to do business. That is false. As soon as I assumed office at the end of December, 1916, I quitted in definitive fashion all business affairs in which I was engaged directly or indirectly. And I assure you that it was not without a pang that I have thus abandoned the fruit of twenty-five years' work . . . And in this connection I should proclaim here that it is greatly to be regretted that it is not permitted in France for a public man to remain in business without running the risk of seeing himself suspected. However that may be, knowing that fact I have abandoned business since I was called upon to form part of the Government. . . And it is thus that to-day, with a clear conscience, I can reply to my accusers.

The editorial writer of this paper also makes the statement that M. de Lasteyrie, as soon as he was named Minister of Finance, resigned from all the financial companies or boards of directors of which he formed a part.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. McMASTER (resuming): I endeavoured this afternoon to present this resolution in a manner which, I trust, respected the sensibilities of all who did not agree with me, for it is not my intention to wound or offend. I tried to point out the undesirability of ministers of the Crown being at the same time directors of great financial corporations. I showed that there was an inevitability of conflict of fiduciary interests. I showed the possibility of public prejudice. I showed that the attitude which I assumed was in line, not only with my attitude of last session, but also in line with the present legislation as respects senators and members of this House, as respects judges, and also as respects members of the Board of Railway Commissioners. I also showed that it was in line with the best practice in this country, in Great Britain, in the United States and in France. It is also, Mr. Speaker, I submit, in line with the attitude and practice of the banks themselves. If hon. gentlemen examine the boards of directors of four or five of the great leading banks of this country, they will find that, as far as commercial banks are concerned, practically no man is a director in more than one of these banks. I remember noticing with what alacrity a friend of mine, who had been a director in the Bank of Commerce, when elected to the Bank of Montreal, retired from the Bank of Commerce. Apparently, the banks will not submit to any possibility of divided allegiance in respect to their directors. There is another argument which I might cite, derived from the history of our country. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, with your knowledge of Canadian history, of which no one has a greater mastery, that after Confederation it was possible, for some time, for members of this House to be, at the same time, members of the local legislature of Quebec. There was what is called the "double mandats," or the double agency.

Mr. GAUVREAU: It is quite changed now.

Mr. McMASTER: Yes, because the Liberal party insisted that it should not be so. The Liberal party took the position that there should not be any division of fiduciary interest or responsibility in a man who represented the province and at the same time represented the Dominion, who was forced to make up his mind whether he would serve his country in the provincial or in the federal field.

Mr. JACOBS: Is the hon. gentleman aware that a member of the local legislature was appointed to the Senate by the Government which preceded this one?

Mr. McMASTER: That is true, I understand, but it does not affect the validity of my argument. The law at one time was that a man could be a member of the legislative assembly of Quebec and also a member of this House. The law was changed by reason of the application of the principle for which I am struggling to-day. But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say something more. John Morley, in his Reminiscences, tells us that in writing to Lord Minto, when Governor General of India, he stated that whether they liked it or not, the master both of himself and of the Viceroy in India was the British House of Commons. Then I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the master of this House is the public opinion of this country—

> There is on earth a yet Diviner thing,
> Veiled though it be, than Parliament or King.

And that thing is what we know as public opinion. Public opinion, no doubt, is divided upon this question, as it is upon other questions, but I submit, with great confidence, that the informed and disinterested public opinion of this country points the way in the direction of the acceptance by this House of the resolution which I have submitted this afternoon. Public opinion is sometimes wrong. It is then the duty of public men to combat it. We have seen a William Lloyd Garrison mobbed in the streets of Boston, because he withstood the public opinion of his time. We have seen a John Bright losing the seat which he had represented in the House of Commons in Great Britain because he opposed the Crimean War. We have seen a Lloyd George escape from the town hall in Birmingham in disguise because he opposed another war. But where public opinion points the way to better and purer laws, I submit it is the part of wisdom, the part of prudence, aye, the part of patriotism, for individuals and political parties to place themselves in conformity thereto.

Mr. O. R. GOULD (Assiniboia): In rising, I wish, first of all, to refer to what I deem a compliment paid me by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) in asking me to second his resolution. Perhaps, looking at it from a personal point of view, I take the credit to myself, simply because I believe the hon. member has learned, in the short time in which I have been in this House, that I, at least, am consistent with respect to the policy I advocate and believe in. The policies I have endeavoured, though in a feeble manner, to further, since I have been here, represent my beliefs. As I look back one year and recollect that this resolution, or a resolution very similar in its nature, was before this House, I know that by my vote I approved of it on that occasion. Likewise I know that the people at home, who are watching and paying attention to the votes as they are recorded in this House, strongly approved of the attitude I took on that occasion when I recorded my vote in favour of the resolution, as presented and argued for by the hon. member for Brome. That is one reason, perhaps, why an individual shall be consistent. I have always taken the attitude that in public political life, as in private life, the individual who will hew consistently to the line, all the time, will get further perhaps, and be thought quite as much of, as the individual who tries to play politics. There might be another feature in that proposition, namely that the individual taking the course which I have indicated is likewise playing politics. However, I believe, Sir, that the people of Canada approved the resolution as presented by the hon. gentleman last year and will approve it again this year. I wish merely to place myself upon record on the question, because the hon. gentleman has presented the argument, and I am sure that no more time should be taken in this House in arguing this question. Perhaps time should be taken in endeavouring to rebut the proposition, because I am sure the hon. gentleman has so completed his argument that it would be quite impossible to assault his citadel and depose him from the position he has taken.

There are one or two thoughts, however, in connection with the question that I might add. It is my belief that people in the rural districts throughout Canada have in the past ten or fifteen years paid more attention to political and economic questions, than have the city dwellers, and are more advanced in thought and initiative. I speak this in pride perhaps, because I have the honour of representing a district distinctly rural. I have sat in the municipal councils in that district many times, and I have heard equally as good expressions of opinion in public questions in those meetings as I have heard in the House of Commons, a statement is not intended to be derogatory to any hon. members here. Nevertheless, these people are of necessity paying attention to questions which are economic and political, and in that they do not have to take any inferior position to any other class of people in this whole Dominion of Canada.

The hon. gentleman from Brome (Mr. McMaster) introduced a question this afternoon relative to the Merchants Bank. It had to do with the whole principle of the resolution. Like the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), I have no desire to have any thought which I may utter interpreted as being against any individual.

[Mr. Gould.]

I live in the West, and I may say that all but one of the fifteen industries or institutions which the hon. member mentioned this afternoon is in the East. To prove that I have no desire in my heart to say anything personal against any one, I wish to state that, in my search for information, I have made no endeavour to secure information concerning any individual who may be a director in any of the institutions of Canada. Consequently, I cannot speak with authority in that connection because I have not the knowledge; but as regards the general principle of the resolution as outlined and debated by the hon. member for Brome, I agree with him in all the arguments that he has presented.

I have a citation which I wish to make in regard to this question so far as it relates to the Merchants Bank. It seems to me that the business of a minister in a government is very much like any other business; and when one sees that individuals occupying positions as bank directors influence the banks and banking institutions of Canada to lend money to their interests or institutions, one finds it possible to conceive the idea that the same individuals, if, by chance, they should occupy positions on the treasury benches, will do the same thing in those positions. I am not making a charge against any one; I am making this statement because of the present unrest in the minds of the people of Canada. The minds of our people are quite harassed at times on account of the fact that they are, perhaps, unable to place their fingers upon the spot to which a liniment or other remedy should be applied. Therefore, if those who sit in high places can do something which will contribute towards putting an end to the unrest which is prevalent throughout this country at the present time, they should do it in the interest of peace in Canada, and one course of action would, I think, be to approve this resolution. The article that I have in my hand and that I wish to place upon Hansard, shows the sums of money that have been lent by the banking institutions of Canada to their own businesses or to their directors in their own businesses. I mention this only because of the fifteen institutions which the hon. gentleman cited. One of them is existent in the West; and when we in the West sometimes feel the pinch or need of money, and when we find that these business institutions in the East, with their directorates all in the East, refrain from lending money to our legitimate interests in the West, although they can hand out large sums of money to the large corporations in the East, we are inevitably led to the conclusion that we have been prejudiced against, and we think the principle is wrong whereby they can persuade the banks to lend money to their own directorates while other businesses in Canada go without funds. This is a statement showing the loans made by the Canadian banks to their directorates:

Name of Bank	Loans to Directorates
Bank of Montreal	$1,112,870
Bank of Nova Scotia	1,044,269
Bank of Toronto	350,766
Molson's Bank	189,884
Banque Nationale	162,392
Merchants Bank	459,035
Banque Provinciale	Nil

That speaks volumes for our hon. members from Quebec. The Banque Provinciale does not show that it has lent any money whatever to its directorate.

Union Bank	$1,066,668
Bank of Commerce	1,378,913
Royal Bank	631,821
Dominion Bank	540,564
Bank of Hamilton	528,792
Standard Bank	83,892
Banque d'Hochelaga	273,575
Imperial Bank	120,620
Home Bank	295,712
Sterling Bank	267,207
Weyburn Security Bank	51,078

That is a western institution and the only one.

Mr. VIEN: In what way is the advance of money to directors by banking institutions connected with the motion before the House?

Mr. GOULD: I was arguing that if, in the ordinary business world, an individual, who may be a director of a bank, can influence that banking institution to do business with the organizations with which he is a member, we can likewise conceive of the same individual, as a member of any government, exercising a similar influence. Possibly the hon. member was not in his seat; but I argued a few minutes ago from that premise that, as unrest is prevalent throughout Canada at the present time because of that fact, the unrest might be mitigated or lessened if the principle contained in the resolution is adopted. That is the only point that I wish to make by the citation of these figures. The hon. member for Brome this afternoon gave citations concerning conditions in England and France, and he also cited ex-Ministers of Finance of the Dominion. I wish to point out that those hon. gentlemen, to whom reference was made in those citations, recognized the underlying principle of this resolution. They recognized the possibility, at least, of an evil in the body politic or in the business world by the retention of their positions on directorates while they occupied seats on the treasury benches, and, consequently, they voluntarily resigned their directorships. I might state that some years ago I had the honour for some years of holding a position on one of the rural councils in the West, and that was a principle that was enunciated in that council at that time. I also believe the provincial law, in many provinces in this Dominion, demands that a man, upon taking office as a member of any municipal board, shall retire or resign from directorships that he may hold in any companies. I do not think one would have to delve very far into this matter to be able to justify one in coming to these conclusions; but, without making specific references, I may state that the people know what they are talking about, and when they make resolutions of this nature, they are perfectly warranted and justified in the attitude they have taken.

The necessity for the retention of positions as directors cannot be argued from a financial point of view because, I recollect, as other hon. members will also recollect, that two years ago a resolution was introduced by Sir Robert Borden increasing the salary of the Ministers of the Crown. One of the reasons given in support of that resolution was the fact that as ministers of the Crown gave, or were supposed to give, all their time and attention to the public business, it was therefore only right that they should receive a remuneration commensurate with the services they rendered the country. In the face of that contention, the measure was adopted practically without debate, no dissenting voices being raised against it. Every hon. member seemed to recognize, at that time, that the labourer was worthy of his hire, and a minister of the Crown worthy of the compensation it was proposed to give him, and consequently the resolution was carried.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to dwell on this point, but I might make a slight reference to the hon. member for Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Lanctot), who, this afternoon, declined, in favour of myself, the honour of seconding the resolution now under consideration. Adverting for a moment to the resolution introduced by the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden on the occasion to which I have referred, I might say that, immediately succeeding it, another resolution was introduced to increase the indemnities of private members. That resolution came in for a little discussion in the House, and I do recollect that the hon. member for Laprairie and Napierville—

Mr. GAUVREAU: Order. What has that to do with the motion before the House? Leave the question of indemnities out of it.

Mr. GOULD: I was about to say this, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Laprairie and Napierville has taken a slightly different attitude this year from the position by which he stood last year. At least, that is my interpretation of the hon. member's attitude, and I can only utter, in the words of the old adage: Consistency.—

Mr. SPEAKER: In justice to the hon. member for Laprairie and Napierville, I said this afternoon that the fault was entirely mine in naming him as seconder of the motion. I presumed that he was seconding the motion of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) because he sat next that hon. member; but the moment he dissented I immediately mentioned the name of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould). The fault, I repeat, was mine.

Mr. GOULD: I was not seeking to attach any blame to anyone in the matter, Mr. Speaker; and certainly I am not blaming the member for Laprairie and Napierville. Indeed, I took it as a compliment that the opportunity of seconding the resolution should have come to me by the circumstance that my hon. friend declined the honour himself. However, the refusal of the hon. member to second the motion did bring to my mind the fact that last year he supported a similar resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How did you vote on this resolution last year?

Mr. GAUVREAU: What about you too?

Mr. GOULD: Did my hon. friend address the question to me? I voted in favour of the resolution last year, and I am consistent this year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I cannot find the hon. member's name in the division list.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

[Mr. Gould.]

Mr. GOULD: The hon. member is evidently very much concerned about what I did. However, I have a distinct recollection of the matter, as no doubt the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) also has; and knowing my attitude towards this question he had no hesitancy, I take it, in accepting me as seconder of the resolution. I shall not discuss the question further. if arguments are to be adduced they should be in rebuttal; and I am sure that hon. gentlemen who may endeavour to refute the conclusions of the hon. member for Brome, as disclosed in his speech this afternoon, will do naught but strengthen that hon. member's position.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): I desire to address a few remarks to the House upon the principle of the motion, which, in my judgment, is of sufficient importance to invite a fairly general discussion, and, I think, is certainly of sufficient importance to call for a fixed and definite decision before the matter is finally concluded. In the first place, I think it is due to my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster) to say that he has placed his case before the House, this afternoon and evening, in a manner entirely creditable to himself. I think his argument to-day has been much more convincing than that which he presented to the House just about twelve months ago, when he introduced a bill embodying to a large extent the same principle which is embodied in his motion on the present occasion. I congratulate my hon. friend that he has made an argument to the House on a high plane entirely free from any element of personalities, but rather has discussed the question solely on its merits. I might also pay him tribute for his courage in the matter. He certainly has the courage of his convictions. It must have been noticeable to the hon. member for Brome, as he spoke this afternoon, that his own political friends in this Chamber were not in the same enthusiastic or receptive mood on this occasion as they displayed in this House twelve months ago when the same subject was under discussion. The ominous silence which prevailed upon the Government benches this afternoon and evening spoke very eloquently of some radical change which has taken place in the views of Government members in the intervening twelve months. Certain it is that last year when the hon. member proposed a measure far more radical and drastic, far more sweeping and comprehensive than is embodied in the motion he has made to-day, he received a very decided and enthusiastic support from those members of his own political party who now sit on the Treasury benches and who to-day remained absolutely silent during his able speech. I did not happen to be in the House last year when this question was discussed, and I did not have the privilege of voting upon it. And just here let me say that I do not believe my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) had that privilege either. If he did vote on the question, all I can say is that the records of the House are strangely in error, because, on looking over the division list, I fail to find the name of my hon. friend from Assiniboia among those who voted either for or against the motion at that time. But the hon. members who now support the Government were certainly in favour of my hon. friend's sweeping proposal of last year. What was that proposal? I have before me a copy of the bill which the hon. member then proposed. That bill, in brief, was this:

No person accepting or holding the office of first minister—

Then follows an enumeration of other ministers in the Cabinet—

—shall hold the office of, or act as, director of any incorporated company.

Provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to holding office of or acting as a director of any company incorporated for purely religious, charitable, philanthropic, or educational purposes.

With that trifling exception which I have just read, no man could be a director of any company and hold office in the Government of Canada as a minister thereof. Such was the proposal which was acclaimed and enthusiastically supported just a short twelve month ago by hon. members who now occupy the Treasury benches. Some of them who are before me to-night made glowing speeches on that occasion, stating in eloquent terms their reasons for supporting the drastic and sweeping proposal then put forward by the hon. member for Brome. But the hon. member who went further than any one else in that respect was my hon. friend who now occupies the high position of Prime Minister. It is true that he did not on that occasion deliver what one might call a speech upon the bill, but he interjected a few remarks that showed very very clearly what his position was in regard to it. He was prepared to go even further than the bill went; he was prepared to out-Herod Herod—or perhaps I should say out-McMaster McMaster, if the rules of the House will permit of such an expression. If, Mr. Speaker, you will turn to page 589 of Hansard you will see exactly what was said by my hon. friend the Prime Minister, then the leader of the Opposition. Let me give this quotation in the language of Hansard:

Mr. Meighen: (During Mr. McMaster's Speech): Does the hon. member not think that if his bill is to be accepted it should, under our present practice, apply as well to the leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Mackenzie King: Hear, hear.

Mr. McMaster: I would have not the slightest objection to its applying to the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Meighen: And to the leaders of both Oppositions?

Mr. Mackenzie King: Certainly.

Mr. McMaster: I know my own leader and can speak for him; I am sure he would not have the slightest objection to having it apply to him. As regards the leader of the Opposition sitting angularly opposite, I cannot speak for him.

Mr. Doherty: But does the principle apply?

Mr. McMaster: There is, of course, the consideration, as the member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) remarks, that there is no salary attached to the position of the leader of the other Opposition.

Mr. Meighen: That is not the point.

Mr. McMaster: That is not the great point, I admit. If that is the only thing standing in the way of the Government's acceptance of my bill, I would be willing to go one step further and have it apply to the leader of the Opposition as well.

Mr. Meighen: It would be of no use to have the one without the other.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Perhaps I should say right at the moment that I should feel it distinctly in the public interest to have the provision apply to the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend now says, "hear, hear." I assume from that "hear, hear" that he has not changed his views during the intervening twelve months, and that he still applauds the same principle to-night. So I suppose we are going to find him in hearty accord and sympathy with the motion which my hon. friend from Brome has moved on this occasion.

But my hon. friend, the Prime Minister, has acted very strangely in the interval. In the meantime we had a general election, and my hon. friend was called upon to form a new government. In the few months that intervened he cannot have forgotten that debate which took place in March last year. That debate and his vote on that bill must have been present to his mind when His Excellency called upon him to form an administration. If these were his principles and his convictions then—and as he

"hear hears" them to-night when I refer to them, I assume they are still—then why did he so utterly disregard them when he undertook to form his administration? I turn to the division list on that bill, and I find no less than six ministers of the Crown sitting to-day on the Treasury benches, all of whom voted for that measure, that sweeping proposal introduced by my hon. friend from Brome in March, 1921; I find there my hon. friend, the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment (Mr. Beland), voting for that measure; I find my hon. friend, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau), among the names of those who voted for the bill; I find the name of my hon. friend, the Secretary of State (Mr. Copp), among those who voted for the measure; I find the name of my hon. friend, the Prime Minister, among the supporters of the measure; also my hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe), and my hon. friend, the Solicitor General (Mr. McKenzie). All of them, solidly, upon that occasion, with great acclaim and enthusiasm declared to the House and the country their support of that radical and sweeping enactment which proposed that no man who was a director of any incorporated company could sit in the Cabinet. A few months afterwards a new government was formed, and I believe I am within the mark when I say that several members of that government are at this moment directors of incorporated companies. And not only that—that relates to the bill of last year—but they would likewise come within the narrower language of the motion this year, namely, > —that all ministers of the Crown, on their appointment as such, should resign all directorships held by them in banks, trust companies, insurance companies, transportation companies or large public utility corporations;

It is strange, Mr. Speaker, that in one short year after a solemn pronouncement of that character—because a vote in this House, I take it, is about the most solemn pronouncement a man can make—my hon. friend, the leader of the Government should, at the very first opportunity, seek to violate and repudiate the principle which he then solemnly affirmed.

Now, for myself, I am not inclined to agree with my hon. friend from Brome in the proposal which he has so eloquently placed before the House this afternoon. I believe he is making a mistake in his motion, that he is assuming too much in connection with our public life, and he has not in my opinion made out any case at all for action such as that contemplated in his motion. I cast my view back over the last fifty or sixty years of our political history since the day when Canada became a Confederation, and I fail to recall a single instance where injury has resulted to the public service, to the government of the country, by reason of the fact that a minister of the Crown was likewise a director of an incorporated company. There may be an instance of the kind, but I have failed to recall it, and certain it is that my hon. friend from Brome did not cite such an instance, unless in the case of the Merchants Bank, which I will refer to in a moment. Coming from 1867 down to the present day, Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall a single instance where public injury has resulted from the fact that a minister of the Crown was also a director of an incorporated company. If after fifty or sixty years' experience we find there has been no lapse, no wrong, no public injury, then am I not within the mark when I say that my hon. friend from Brome is seeking to provide a remedy where there is no ailment?

What is the disease in the body politic which my hon. friend from Brome is seeking to cure? He has not explained to the House what the particular ailment or disease or wrong is; he has cited no instance at all. Therefore I submit he is dealing too much in the realm of possibilities rather than of probabilities. I do not believe wrong or injury has ensued, and I do not believe that wrong or injury will ensue to the public service or to the people of this country by reason of our continuing under the present law, which it seems to me affords every reasonable safeguard. The present law on the subject is in the House of Commons Act, which was quoted this afternoon by my hon. friend from Brome. That law has been in existence practically since Confederation. It applies not only to ministers, but to every hon. member of the House, and that law has up to the present, I submit, been sufficient. My hon. friend has failed to show that there is any rule on the subject, either in this Dominion or in Great Britain. There is some practice to be found in the Imperial Parliamentary reports, I admit, but the practice appears to be as much one way as it is the other. Purely from curiosity I have looked a little into the history of our Canadian Parliament in this respect, and I find that in every administration whether Conservative or Liberal, prominent members of the ministry have been closely identified with great business undertakings in Canada. But I have found no lapse on that account. I take for example the government of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier; when I first came into this House over twenty years ago, Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself, then Prime Minister, was director of one of the great life insurance companies of this country, the Mutual Life of Canada. No one would suggest that this circumstance proved detrimental to the public service or to the people of Canada; quite the reverse, I can assure you. That particular company came to this Parliament for legislation during that period, but nobody ever suggested that the fact that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a director of it had anything to do with the matter. I take the case of the late Mr. Sutherland, whom I knew very well. I turn to the Parliamentary Companion in regard to Mr. Sutherland, because I know that while members do not write the notices in that book, they have the opportunity of revising them, and, as a rule, statements found there are fairly accurate. I find that the late Mr. Sutherland, who was Minister of Public Works in the cabinet of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier was "a director of several trading and commercial companies." I turn to the name of the late Mr. Prefontaine, Minister of Marine and Fisheries in that cabinet, and I find identically the same language: that he likewise was "a director of several trading and commercial companies." I turn to the name of Sir Richard Cartwright, and I find the following language in regard to him: "He is president, director or trustee of several commercial and financial corporations." We all remember Mr. Charles Hyman, at one time Minister of Public Works in that same administration, a man connected with a number of commercial companies and likewise a director of the Bank of Toronto. And so with the preceding Conservative administration: I take the name of Sir John Carling, connected with half a dozen joint stock companies and with one bank. I take the name of the late Sir Frank Smith, vice-president of the Dominion Bank and president of transportation companies in Canada. You will find that the same thing applies practically to every government that has held office since confederation. But the point that I want to urge upon the House is that so far as we know, so far as experience goes, so far as history goes, no harm has resulted from the practice, no wrong has been done by it. There has been no weakness in the system; no public injury has resulted from the system. Now, I believe in many cases it would be a very great hardship to ask a man, as the price of his admission into the government of this country—a man who is wanted in that capacity—that he forego his right to sit on a board of directors in any of the companies enumerated in this motion, and in which his whole fortune may be wrapped up. It may be his whole investment; his life's work may be represented in the capital stock of that company of which he is a director. His presence may be urgently required in the government of Canada, and it would be a hardship—to my mind it would be an absurdity—to ask him to come in and assist in the government of the country and at the same time to say to him: If you do, you must jeopardize your private fortune and resign your directorship. That, simply, is the proposal of the present resolution.

I said at the outset that I believed my hon. friend from Brome had distinctly failed to make out a case for changing the law. If he were able to make out such a case, then I might revise my opinion, but up to the present, I am satisfied, he has failed to make out a case. He seeks to produce a remedy for a disease which is non-existent in the history of the government of Canada and has been from confederation up to the present time. However, I am satisfied that what the House and the country most desire to know at the moment is what view the Prime Minister of Canada takes on this question. I know there is great expectation in the galleries; I know there is great expectation in the country—one has only to read the daily press and to see the names there mentioned and the views there expressed to realize that—and there is a general subdued excitement and curiosity to know just what the Prime Minister intends to do in regard to this matter. I can tell the hon. member for Brome that if this resolution were to pass it might have one very unfortunate application in regard to this Government and this country. True, it would not be in the nature of an enactment upon our statute book, but it would be a resolution of the House of Commons, tantamount to a plain direction of this body which any government is bound to obey. If the resolution passed this House, the Government would be expected to obey it, and we might be placed in the position of being called upon to sacrifice an hon. member of the Government whom we on this side of the House look upon, and whom a great many of the people in this country look upon, as about the only real guarantee of stability which the Government contains. I refer of course to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin). If the passage of this motion as it stands to-day were to put the Minister of Justice to an election in the matter; if it were to call upon him to decide whether he should resign his position in the Government or his position as director of the various banks or companies of which he now is director, and if he should decide to resign his position in the Government, I will be candid enough to say that I believe it would be nothing short of a calamity in the country at the present critical juncture of our national affairs. It would be a most unfortunate thing for the country, to say the least, but for the Government itself it would be a positive catastrophe. It is no wonder that there is considerable expectation in the House and in the country as to just what the leader of the Government intends to do in regard to this motion, and perhaps the easiest way to find that out is for me to conclude my remarks and allow him to inform us.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must thank my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) who has just taken his seat for the compliment he has paid me in saying that the views which I have to express with regard to this motion are of more than exceptional interest to himself and to other members of the House, and possibly also to the country generally. I shall endeavour to leave no doubt in the mind of my hon. friend or of any person in this country as to where I stand with regard to the resolution now before the House.

Let me say first of all that I conceive the purpose of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) in introducing his motion, to be that of helping to bring about in the mind of the public generally, a greater sense of security in the administration of public affairs, irrespective of the government that may be carrying on the business of the country. So far as his motion is calculated to have that effect—to give to the public a sense of greater security in the administration of the day—I am certainly in hearty accord with my hon friend. But so far as his motion is calculated, to create in the minds of the people a distrust in or suspicion of the Government, when there is no just cause or good reason for such distrust or suspicion, I am entirely opposed to the motion.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

My hon. friend has said, and I think very wisely, that in a matter of great importance such as this we may well be guided by British practice and British procedure. He has stated that we need not slavisly follow all that is done by the Mother of Parliaments on the other side of the water. Nevertheless, he has wisely affirmed that the British Parliament affords to parliamentary assemblies possibly the safest guide of any institution in the world as to what is best in maintaining the highest and noblest traditions. Having this in mind, with such assistance as I have been able to get from recognized constitutional authorities, from books, and from students of this question, I have gone to some pains to endeavour to see what attitude the British Parliament has taken on this all important question. I shall seek to compress into a very few paragraphs the essence of the situation as it has been of recent years.

May I say first of all, that when this question has come up for discussion in the British Parliament it has generally been viewed from a much broader point of view than the restricted one of the present motion, which is limited to the question of directors relinquishing their directorships upon entering the Government. The question has generally been discussed from the broad point of view of the right of members to vote where they are believed to have a personal interest in the subject matter which is before the House. That question has been debated over and over again in the British Parliament. It has been the subject of special parliamentary inquiries. My hon. friend this afternoon quoted some illustrious names in support of a contention which he was making. I hold in my hand a report of the Select Committee of the British Parliament on this personal interest matter, together with the proceedings of the committee, etc. The report was made in the year 1896, and I find in the membership of the committee such illustrious names as Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. Courtney, Mr. Haldane, Mr. Lloyd George, and several others. This committee, having examined carefully the rules of the House to discover whether it was advisable to extend them in any way for the purpose of affording greater security in the public mind as to votes cast in the House of Commons, came to the conclusion that the rules as they stood at the time were to all intents and purposes sufficient.

May I say that judging from the records of the British House of Commons, it would appear that while at all times it has been admitted that members of the House have a right to question the right of any other member to vote on a particular matter in which he is supposed to have a personal interest, yet whenever that vote has been taken, with the exception of possibly one or two cases out of a very large number, the House of Commons of Great Britain has invariably decided that the matter should be regarded as one of honour and conscience on the part of the member who is casting his vote, and has refused to deny him the right of voting.

I contend Sir, that that is the right point of view from which to view this question, but coming to the more restricted view, that namely of the duty of members of a government to relinquish their directorships, I find that there have been, broadly speaking, four different attitudes. The first I might describe as an attitude of indifference towards this subject; no question whatever being raised on the subject. I take it that this attitude is not entirely a matter of chance or of accident. I think there are good and sufficient reasons why the British House of Commons has for the most part assumed it. A good and sufficient reason, to my mind, is that every minister of the Crown has in the first instance been elected to Parliament by the people of his constituency. His associations, financial and commercial, are known to his electors, and if they are of a character to arouse suspicion or distrust, then they may become a matter of discussion on the public platform, and, indeed, are certain to be if they are likely to be in any serious way a matter of grave concern.

I would point out further, that 9 p.m. a member of Parliament once he becomes a minister of the Crown, is obliged to resign his seat and to return to his constituency for re-election. He has to go through the process of twice appealing to the electors. The electors know when they are choosing him in the first place whether he is a director of financial concerns or not; when he goes back for re-election as a cabinet minister they also know whether he is a director or not. If his associations are likely to prove detrimental to the discharge of his public duties, that is the time when protest should be made. That is the time when public opinion, which is the last resort in all these matters, should make itself felt.

Let me mention next an attitude at the opposite extreme. I have spoken of the attitude of indifference. There is also the attitude of statutory prohibition, very much the attitude of my hon. friend who has moved this resolution, because I take it that a resolution of the House of Commons to all intents and purposes is expected to have the effect of legislation. My hon. friend referred this afternoon to an hon. member of the British Parliament, Mr. Swift MacNeil, who introduced into the House of Commons in England a measure very much along the line of his own resolution. Not only did Mr. Swift MacNeil introduce such a measure on one occasion, but he introduced it, I think, at least a dozen times, and on every occasion the House of Commons of Great Britain refused to pass that resolution. That is the attitude which the English Parliament has taken towards the extreme of statutory prohibition with respect to ministers of the Crown holding directorates.

The third attitude is the one which has been taken by Mr. Balfour, Lord Salisbury, and other Conservative leaders when this matter came up for discussion. They have contended that these questions should be regarded as matters of conscience and honour, that it should be left to every public man to be guided in his actions as a cabinet minister and as a member of Parliament by the dictates of his conscience and as his own sense of honour would seem to render proper. In the long run we will gain more in virility in our public life by leaving some matters to conscience and honour rather than by seeking to enforce prohibitions that may be too severe and too drastic, and in the end only have the effect of bestowing harsh moral judgments upon some of our fellowmen.

The fourth attitude is the one which I might describe as the Gladstone-Campbell-Bannerman-Asquith attitude, which has been to adopt, not as a written rule, not as a matter of legislation, but as a matter of unwritten policy, subject always to exceptions where exceptions seem to be justifiable, the attitude that ministers of the Crown should not retain directorships. That has been the attitude which has been taken by most of the English Liberal statesmen. That attitude is one on which I shall say a few more words a little later on. It is not, as I have mentioned, the enforcement by resolution of the House of Commons, but rather leaving it to the Prime Minister to exercise his judgment in the formation of his Cabinet as to what may be most in the public interest and what is best for the nation under the existing circumstances.

So much, then, for the attitude which the British House of Commons has taken. I think if we are to follow British practice in any particular, we would be justified also in following British procedure in the manner of putting that practice into play. If we are to make prevail in this country an opinion such as is suggested in the motion of my hon. friend, I think it is much better that it should be left to a prime minister, in consultation with his colleagues, to take the course which the public interest seems to dictate as wisest and best, all circumstances being considered, rather than to tie the hands of a prime minister and to fetter his government by restrictions which do not take account of circumstances which in the public interest should be taken account of.

My hon. friend this afternoon gave several reasons in support of his motion, and with them I should like to deal. First of all, let me say, I can conceive of cases where it would be very much against the interests of the public for certain individuals to hold cabinet positions and at the same time retain directorships in certain companies. My hon. friend has cited an example this afternoon that I think might well be put forward as a case in point. There are times when certain measures are under consideration, as was cited to-day, where ministers might well feel it the part of propriety, to resign their directorships or else resign from the ministry. But I think these cases have to be treated on their merits, and I submit that nothing has arisen in connection with the present administration which gives any ground to any one for believing that such circumstance exists in this country at this time.

My hon. friend has spoken about a possible conflict of fiduciary interests. He has pointed out that ministers of the Crown have to give most of their time to the business of government, and, I think, last year he said that he believed, where there was a conflict between an hon. member's time as devoted to public affairs and given to private affairs, private, not public, affairs were likely to suffer. That may be a good reason why companies might find it in their interests, perhaps, to prohibit their directors from taking positions in governments, but I do not think it is an equally strong reason why the country should be denied the service of men who have risen high in financial and commercial confidence, if the companies with which they are associated are prepared to allow these gentlemen to give their services to the country in dealing with great national, financial and commercial affairs.

Similarly, my hon. friend spoke about the danger of interlocking directorates. There may be an evil in interlocking directorates, but I contend that the way to meet and cure that evil is not to pass an enactment which will prevent a director of any public company coming into a government without resigning his directorship. Let us deal with the evil of interlocking directorates, as such.

My hon. friend said that he was only following existing legislation. I should like for a moment to invite the attention of the House to the existing legislation, because I can well believe that there are members in this House to-day who may think that there is not adequate legislation to protect the public interests where an hon. member who has to do with affairs of government is connected also with a business which may have direct or indirect dealings with the Government in a manner which will be furthering special interests rather than public interests. I contend that if we read carefully the legislation that at present exists in the Act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons referring more particularly to the independence of members of Parliament we will find that the interests of the public, as respects members of Parliament who are directors and members of a government, is pretty well taken care of in that legislation as my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has already said. Let me read section 14 of the act, and ask hon. gentlemen to recollect that, inasmuch as it applies to every member of Parliament, it applies equally to every minister of the Crown, since every minister of the Crown is already a member of Parliament. The section reads:

> No person, directly or indirectly, alone or with any other, by himself or by the interposition of any trustee or third party, holding or enjoying, undertaking or executing any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, with or for the Government of Canada on behalf of the Crown, or with or for any of the officers of the Government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is to be paid, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons, or shall sit or vote in the said House.

Can legislation be more emphatic than that? If we live up to that legislation, what likelihood is there of any director of a company, through his position in the cabinet, doing anything unfair or unjust which could be prevented by legislation such as my hon. friend has suggested. Then take the next section, No. 15—

If any member of the House of Commons accepts any office or commission, or is concerned or interested in any contract, agreement, service or work which, by this Act, renders a person incapable of being elected to, or of sitting or voting in the House of Commons, or knowingly sells any goods, wares or merchandise to, or performs any service for the Government of Canada, or for any of the officers of the Government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is paid or to be paid, whether such contract, agreement or sale is expressed or implied, and whether the transaction is single or continuous, the seat of such member shall thereby be vacated, and his election shall be thenceforth null and void.

But let me direct attention specially to section 21, which, I think, is even more important—

No member of the Senate or of the House of Commons shall receive or agree to receive any compensation, directly or indirectly, for services rendered, or to be rendered, to any person, either by himself or another, in relation to any bill, proceeding, contract, claims, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter before the Senate or the House of Commons, or before a Committee of either House, or in order to influence or to attempt to influence any member of either House.

Subsection 2 reads:—

Every member of the Senate offending against this section shall be liable to a fine of not less than one thousand dollars and not more than four thousand dollars, and every member of the House of Commons offending against this section shall be liable to a fine of not less than five hundred dollars and not more than two thousand dollars, and shall for five years after conviction of such offence be disqualified from being a member of the House of Commons, and from holding any office in the public service of Canada.

Subsection 3 reads:

Any person who gives, offers or promises to any such member any compensation for such services as aforesaid, rendered or to be rendered, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment and to a fine of not less than five hundred dollars and not more than two thousand dollars.

May I not ask members of this House, is it possible to conceive of any hon. gentleman, being a director and using his position in a government in a manner to further the interests of a company with which he is concerned, who would not become liable to lose his seat in the House of Commons under this legislation? And would not the companies with which he was concerned, if they sought to influence him through payment of director's fees or in any other manner, be violating the law of this country as it stands at the present time?

May I say a further word in regard to one or two other references of my hon. friend? He spoke of the judges of the country and said that the law requires that the judges must give their whole time to the work in which they are engaged and, in the discharge of their judicial duties; must not accept directorships. May I remind my hon. friend that judges are appointed for life; they are given a life tenure of office. They hold their positions at good salaries, with the expectation that their time will be given for the remainder of their days to the discharge of judicial duties. No such undertaking can be given with respect to members of a government. I only need to look opposite to see half a dozen gentlemen who entered the cabinet of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) shortly before the last general election. They were in office for about three months, and, that is all they will ever see of office in the course of their lives. How unfair it would have been to these gentlemen to say "You shall not enter the Government without giving up your directorships in any companies you belong to," and then for them to find, at the end of the few weeks they had served their country in the capacity of cabinet ministers, that they had not only ceased to be cabinet ministers, but had severed any connection they had ever had with any company. The comparison of my hon. friend in regard to judges is not a true parallel by a very long degree.

My hon. friend spoke of the members of the Railway Commission. There again, we have a definite position that is fixed in tenure for a period of years. But if my hon. friend will look at the references to the Railway Commissioners, he will find that they are not precluded from being directors of all public companies. They are precluded from being directors of railway companies, or any companies with which railways are likely to have business dealings—a very proper and right thing in every way. But this is not any such sweeping, wholesale, self-denying ordinance as my hon. friend seeks to impose upon individuals who may enter a government as cabinet ministers.

The hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) spoke of the Secretary of the Treasury in the United States and said that he noticed, following the best practice in the United States, that Mr. Secretary Mellon had resigned directorships that he held in companies. I do not know whether my hon. friend is aware of the fact or not; but I am informed that in the United States there is a special law applicable to the Secretary of the Treasury alone, not to any other minister, and that under that law the Secretary of the Treasury has resigned such positions as he has held on boards of directors. I am inclined to think the example of our country in that respect is even better than that of the United States. The Minister of Finance is necessarily brought into very close relation with many industrial concerns. My hon. friend said that the ex-Minister of Finance, Sir Thomas White, resigned his directorships when he became Minister of Finance. That was taking a view of his obligations as Minister of Finance voluntarily, not in view of any statute, and that is a much finer attitude for any hon. gentleman to take than to be obliged to do something by compulsion. The House well knows that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in the present Administration holds no directorships in any companies having anything to do with the business of this country. But I venture to say that there is not in this country a man who would have any less confidence in the minister if he held directorships in twenty companies. Public confidence is a matter of belief in the integrity and honesty of a man and not of the position that he may hold. You may have a man without any position who is thoroughly dishonourable; you may have another man holding a dozen positions who, for the very reason that he has a greater responsibility, feels that his integrity must be so much the more circumspectly guarded.

There is this aspect also which is worthy of consideration. The motion of my hon. friend does not go so far as to say that shareholders, if they enter a government as cabinet ministers, must give up their shares in companies. I will leave it to the judgment of the House, from the point of view of public interest as to which is the better—to have a gentleman in a cabinet who is a shareholder in a company, but who is also a director and known to the world as a director, or to have a gentleman in a cabinet having large shareholdings in one of these public companies of which the public knows nothing because of his not being a director? I contend that the mere fact that a gentleman is known to be a director of a particular corporation places upon him a special obligation to be particularly careful when any matter affecting the business of the corporation with which he is associated comes up for consideration in the Cabinet. Men of a high sense of honour will take good care, to see that when matters concerning companies with which they are concerned come up for consideration in Cabinet or Parliament, when there is the slightest possibility of their integrity or honesty being challenged, to vacate or withdraw while the discussion is going on and the matter is being settled.

The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) quoted from Hansard of last year as to my position in the discussion which took place at that time. With respect to what I said in the debate of last year, I have not a single word to withdraw. I wish to reiterate at the present moment every word that I said on that occasion. At that time I was leader of the Opposition.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Those words seem to belong to the position of leader of the Opposition, because they are exactly the ones I used last year at the particular time:

> Mr. Meighen: Does the hon. member not think that if his bill is to be accepted, it should, under our present practise, apply as well to the leader of the Opposition?
> Mr. Mackenzie King: Hear, hear.

Just what my right hon. friend has said, sitting in exactly the same spot. Further:

> Mr. Meighen: And members leaders of both oppositions.
> Mr. Mackenzie King: Certainly.

I made one other reference in the debate, and it was this:

> Perhaps I should say right at the moment that I should feel it distinctly in the public interest to have the provision apply to the leader of the Opposition.

I stated that, when I was leader of the Opposition. I thought it would be in the public interest that a leader of a political party should not have any associations with corporations by way of directorships and I take that position now. I think my right hon. friend opposite to me takes the same position; I think both he and I hold similar views on these matters. I think each of us has refrained from accepting directorships in any companies. Why? Not because we thought it was wrong that we should accept or that other men should accept directorships, or because we thought men should not accept positions as ministers of the Crown while holding directorships, but because as leaders of parties, officially so recognized by the law of the country, we regarded our position as perhaps the more secure in the minds of our following as well as of the country, in taking that particular attitude. I wish to repeat that I think it is in the public interest that leaders of great political parties should in every way possible seek to give their entire time and thought to their public duties, and to put their position as far as possible beyond any possibility of question by their own following or by the public generally.

The hon. member for South Wellington went one step further. He said: Why did I forget all about the position that I took in the debate when I came to form the new administration? I did not forget the position that I had taken at that time. I remembered it very distinctly and I remembered also the vote which was registered in this House at that time and which was to the effect that that bill should not carry. The House of Commons, when this subject was up for debate before, decided against the principle that it was not advisable that hon. members holding positions as directors should be admitted as ministers of the Crown. I repeat, I can conceive of cases where it would not be in the public interest for certain gentlemen holding directorships to be simultaneously ministers of the Crown. I believe a situation of that character will make itself apparent, and become quickly apparent, to any one accustomed to dealing with public affairs. But I can also see where the passing of a resolution such as is proposed by my hon. friend to-night, might deprive the country of the services of some of the ablest business men in Canada and this at a time when special knowledge of financial and commercial conditions is most needed in the management of public affairs. I am free to admit that I was confronted with that very problem when called upon to form the present administration. The member for Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has spoken of the hon. the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin). May I tell the House exactly what took place between the Minister of Justice and myself when I asked that hon. gentleman if he would become a member of the cabinet? When I approached him with the invitation to join the cabinet he said, in reply, that he had been a long time in public life, and had left it with the intention of retiring for good; that he had had no thought of going back into Parliament and resuming the burdens which cabinet responsibility places upon one who has rendered many years of public service; that, having regard to the vicissitudes of public life, its uncertainties and its obligations, he would hesitate to enter the Government if it meant severing his financial and commercial associations. I told him I thought the country appreciated the distinguished service which he had rendered not only to his own province, in the position of Prime Minister, for fifteen years, but to the whole Dominion of Canada as well; that he was everywhere recognized as outstanding in the country's affairs. I said that the people of Canada wanted and needed his services, and that I would not think of pressing an individual opinion in matters of this kind as against the judgment of himself or any of my colleagues in the present administration. Had I, regardless of their distinction and public service, sought to impose upon hon gentlemen coming into the cabinet restrictions of various kinds, I might have succeeded in effecting a mediocre administration; I certainly would not have had the privilege of being surrounded to-day by the gentlemen of distinction and eminence who sit in the cabinet. There are times and places for everything. I have spoken of the Gladstone, the Campbell-Bannerman, and, if you will, the Asquith tradition. May I remind my hon. friend that it was 1868 when Mr. Gladstone first became Prime Minister of England. He was then 59 years of age, and had had a long parliamentary experience. It was not until 1892, a quarter of a century afterwards, when he was past 80 years of age, that Mr. Gladstone sought to impose any self-denying ordinances upon his colleagues. If my hon. friend will give me time, and the occasion demands it, I shall be glad to follow the Gladstonian tradition. I think it would come with much better grace from an older to younger men, than from a young man to men who have long served the country with distinction, and with great honour and credit to themselves and to their nation, to lay down rules in the nature of self-denying ordinances which after all might serve only to indicate a lack of confidence in their fidelity and integrity. As between myself and my colleagues, and between the Government and the country, the relationship I wish to have maintained is that of "Trust me all in all, or not at all." That is the attitude I hold towards every member of the Government, and it is the attitude I believe which every member of the Government holds towards myself. While we began with confidence in each other's integrity and ability, I may say that at this moment that confidence has ripened into implicit trust. Inasmuch as the support of my hon. friend's motion would seem to make it necessary for me to reflect upon the honour and the integrity of any hon. gentlemen associated with me in the cabinet, I must decline absolutely to vote for it.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): If the experience of the last two months had not rendered me utterly impervious to all sentiments of amazement, it would require at least the space of a few half hours to recover sufficiently from the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in order to address this House. I thought that the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) was rendering a service when, in speaking on the motion, he invited, even prodded, the leader of the Government to make a statement on behalf of the administration, and to seek to harmonize opposition to this resolution with his vote of a year ago. Well, my hon. friend in so doing may have contributed a service to the country, but he contributed none to the Government and in all respect I suggest that the reputation of the Prime Minister would have been infinitely better if he had declined to yield to the invitation of the member for Wellington and had maintained a discreet if not a dignified silence.

What is the resolution that we are asked now to vote upon? The hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) moves that legislation should be enacted providing that no member of a government of Canada shall be a director of any of four classes of companies: first, banks, second, trust companies, third, insurance companies, and fourth, transportation companies to which is added in general words a fifth, large public utility corporations; and that, should a member of a government be a director of any company other than those recited, that company should be debarred from all business with the country. Now, the resolution, admits of discussion from two phases: first, as to its intrinsic merits;—should it be supported or be defeated? Secondly, the resolution is important to the House as bearing upon the public honour of the country, as impersonated in the government in office, I shall commence by discussing the question from the first standpoint.

A year ago the same hon. member, in a speech ranking, perhaps, not equal in fullness of treatment, but ranking equal in fairness and dignity, with that delivered to-day, introduced and urged to second reading, not a resolution merely, but a bill, a statute, providing that no member of the government should under any consideration be a director of any company whatever. That resolution was pressed in this House, supported by several hon. members, and resisted by several, including myself; and, on its coming to a decision, a majority vote against it was recorded. I took the stand then that this was a question that could not be adequately or fairly decided by statutory enactment; that is to say, that it would not be possible for this House to enact legislation which would deal fairly with the situation, which would be practical on the one hand and beneficial on the other. I argued that for the House to enact that a member of a government should not be a director of any company was in effect to debar from the public service many of the business community who could render distinct, indeed conspicuous, service to the state; and, further, that such an enactment would secure no commensurate result. I contended that, to pass the bill which the hon. member moved would, while debarring directors of companies, at the same time admit to the public service as members of the government those who could be influenced by exactly the same considerations, but who might not be directors of companies. On several grounds, by myself and others, it was urged that you could not deal with this evil—if, indeed, it was an evil at all—by statutory enactment, but that, in the words of the then hon. member for Red Deer, Mr. Clark, who delivered a speech that I commend to the consideration of hon. members, it was fundamentally, historically and necessarily a matter for the conscience and honour of the minister himself. That is the stand I took then; that is the stand I take to-day.

I pointed out at that time that if you legislated to debar an hon. member from being a director of a company and also a minister of the crown, you would put it out of the power of a man who had made some money, incorporated a company, and required to exercise some little supervision over the competence that he had gathered for the taking care of his family after his death by being director of his company—you would, I said, put it absolutely out of the power of that man to be admitted to a share in government, while at the same time the man who did exactly the same thing, who had his company not incorporated but a mere personal concern, could be a member of the government and could as well devote such time as he thought fit to the affairs of his company.

That result in the first place would be unfair. I remember it being urged very strongly by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb)—who, let me say, is the sole conspicuous example of anything approaching consistency on this question among hon. members of the government—that to refuse a director admission to the Government would merely put a premium upon the practice of a director of a company in which he was largely interested appointing a mere dummy, his stenographer for instance, to be a director in his place, who in effect would be nothing but the mouthpiece of her principal and, consequently doing the will of the real director; his interest being concealed behind his dummy while he, the principal, took his place in the government. Many other objections were urged as well. It was instanced that you might have a man a director of a company who had a very minor interest in it, while some other man, not a director, might be interested to a very great extent. The first man is a director because of his acceptability, because of his business probity, because he is known and honoured of men; the other man is not a director, because although he is very rich he does not enjoy the confidence of the other shareholders, he does not enjoy the same reputation in the community. Under the law then suggested by the hon. member for Brome the second man, the unworthy man, could be a member of the government; but the man of honour, the man who stood out and made known to the world his position, was denied admission to the service of the state.

On other grounds the incongruity, the anomaly, the unfairness of the bill was clearly demonstrated to this House, but all to no effect. To no effect upon hon. members now sitting on the Treasury benches it was urged that in Great Britain from time immemorial it had never been the practice to deal with this matter by statutory enactment at all; that the British practice had been to leave the decision in each individual case to the honour, to the conscience, to the sense of public duty of the minister himself, and that to this day there is no enactment in Great Britain along the lines of the bill of the hon. member for Brome introduced last session, or along the lines of his resolution to-night. All in vain it was urged—even urged by myself—that throughout the history of our provinces in not one of them had it ever been seen fit to enact legislation such as that proposed by the hon. member for Brome. There is just as much, yea, there is even more need for this legislation—if need exists at all—in our provincial legislatures than in this House, for our provincial legislatures have to do with those questions of property and civil rights that concern the welfare of companies, corporations, and individuals more directly than has this House. None of our legislatures, I say, has seen fit to follow this example. The idea sounds well, it perhaps makes some appeal to certain people. But it has been considered unsound historically in Great Britain, it has been considered unsound historically in this Dominion, and none of our provinces, whether under Liberal rule, whether under Conservative rule,—yes, though under Progressive rule, has ever seen fit to propose such legislation. These were the arguments urged against the measure. Those arguments appealed to me; many of them I advanced myself. All these arguments I stand by to-night as leader of the Opposition just as I stood by them as leader of the Government.

Now, the resolution before the House is much milder, it is true, than the bill of a year ago. The hon. member for Brome, influenced, he says, by the arguments then advanced, has reduced the scope of his proposal. He says: "I won't object any longer to a member of the Government being a director of an industrial corporation; I won't object any longer to a member of the Government being a director even of a loan company; I won't object any more to a member of the Government being a director of a great manufacturing enterprise, the arguments of last year have put those ideas out of my head and behind me; but I say that after this, if I have my way, no member of the Government shall be a director of a bank, nor of a trust company, nor of a transportation company, nor of an insurance company, nor of a public utility corporation."

Now, that I may be perfectly clear, let me say before commencing my argument on this resolution, that I am equally opposed to it as I was to his bill last year. The hon. member's resolution indeed illustrates, as nothing could illustrate better, the inherent unsoundness and fatuousness of the bill of last year, and as well of the method he is adopting now to gain the end he seeks. For what is going to be the result if legislation is introduced confirmatory of this resolution? A director of the British Empire Steel Corporation could still be a member of the government—that would be perfectly all right; a director of the Massey-Harris Company could be a member of the government—that would be all right; a director of the Dominion Textile Company—instead of representing us at an economic conference—could be a member of the government; indeed, we might have, as the hon. member frankly admitted, sixteen presidents of textile companies composing the government if his resolution passed and a bill confirmatory of it was enacted. But if a man is a director of the Street Railway Company of the town of Guelph, he could not be a member of the government; if he is a director of an old corporation, that is all but dead save in name, that once proposed to build a street railway in Portage La Prairie, his interest would be such that the door must be shut against his admission to high place in public life; a director of any little transportation concern, though it be half dead and half alive, anywhere in this Dominion, could not for the life of him get into the government. But a man may be president of British Empire Steel; he may be president of the Dominion Coal Company; he may be president of Dominion Textiles; he may be president of Massey-Harris; he may be president or director of the Cockshutt Company, and he still will be all right and quite fit for admission to the Administration. Now, I know the difficulty the hon. member confronted. He concluded—the argument was such he could not help it—that you could not shut the door to public life and admission to the ministry to those engaged in industrial enterprises. He knew that a man would thereby be debarred from exercising openly, which is always far better than secretly, such supervision of the money as he has managed to make in his life, that he owes to his family, owes to his descendants; and that if you debar public men of that right you cannot expect men of consequence to enter public life. It is just because of this difficulty which the hon. member confronted, and which is reflected in this reduced and wholly illogical resolution that he introduces to-day—it is just for that reason that it has been found impossible in all countries to take care of this evil, if it is evil at all, by statutory enactment. Therefore the argument on this point by the Prime Minister to-night had some appeal to me. I almost congratulated myself that if what I said a year ago passed then like cold water from his breast, if all my arguments had fallen at that time upon barren soil, at least I could see that there had been a fertilizing process in the interval and that what I had sowed in good season was maturing into harvest now.

Let us for a moment, in all seriousness, refer to that phase of the question that has to do with the public honour of our country as embodied and illustrated in the ministry of the day. A year ago a sweeping, all-embracing bill is put before this Parliament for final decision. Arguments are adduced pro and con, just as have been adduced to-night. The government of the day opposes the measure. The government of the day gains a little, but very little, support in its negation from the Opposition of that time, also from the Progressive party of that time. There may have been others, but I recall the leader of the Progressive party, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) and the hon. member for Red Deer supporting the government in its opposition. But against the course the government took, the leader of the present Government stood and voted, and every indication of opinion that he made was to the effect that he not only favoured the bill but would go further than the bill went and would include within its sweep the leader of the Progressive party and the leader of the Opposition as well. That was the declaration of principle and of faith that the present leader of the Government made to this Dominion, and upon which among other things he appealed to the electorate for support. "Oh," he often declared, "I put the Government on its record," Very well; the Government stood on its record—did he stand on his? Is he standing on it to-night? I am afraid my resources of ridicule would be entirely insufficient if I came to examine the reasons that the leader of the Government advances. He says: "Yes, it is true I supported this bill a year ago." He did all right—he did more; he supported a bill that was sweeping, drastic and complete, going a great deal further than this resolution goes. He declared that he wanted it to go even further. "Oh, yes," he says, "I voted for it, but I have kept in mind ever since the fact that the House voted it down." "I remember well how I voted, I have never forgotten that," he assures the hon. member for Wellington, "but I am not forgetting that the House voted it down. I declared my principles; I declared my belief; I submitted to this nation where I stood upon the question, but—save the mark—I cannot stand there any longer, because the House voted it down." Well, this will come surely with a thud of despair to those hon. members of this House, if any are left, who expect the present administration under the present Prime Minister to adhere to anything they have declared for in the last five years. Did not the House vote them all down? There have been tariff resolutions proposed on the faith of which hon. gentlemen to my left have on many a platform proclaimed that the Liberal party were practically the same as they, and upon the faith of which hon. gentlemen opposite, with still more emphasis, have declared to the people that there was no need at all for the Progressive party because its principles were identical with their own. Tariff resolution after tariff resolution has been defeated by this House, proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in opposition, proposed by the present Prime Minister himself. Now, what are we to expect? When the Budget comes down and the vote of the hon. Prime Minister is held before his face, and the vote of his colleagues around him are shown all in black and white—when resolutions are called to his memory declaring for reductions on this thing and on that thing, all to cure unemployment and bring relief to a wearied and oppressed people—when all this is done, the Prime Minister will rise and say: "Yes, I remember all these resolutions; I remember that I proposed them; I remember that I voted for them; I remember too, that I believed in them, but all is so different now, because those resolutions were voted down." But more: "Now," he says, "I stand on British precedent." May I ask what precedent he stood on a year ago? He has spent a lot of time on the subject; he has analysed the argument presented by the hon. member for Brome. Back centuries he has gone, and he divides into four categories all of those who have ever discussed this question in the British House. Some who have discussed it, he says, are indifferent to it altogether—do not care anything about it. Others who have discussed it believe it should be left to conscience and to honour. Others, on the contrary, believe that there can be nothing done about it, even though they are not indifferent. And the fourth class, the Gladstone-in-his-prime class and the Campbell-Bannerman class—they believe that the decision should be left to the Prime Minister of the country; and of course my hon. friend, now that he is Prime Minister of the country, is right step in step with the Bannermans and the Gladstones, believing it should all be left to himself. I really admired the skill; rather I admired the plenitude of verbosity with which the hon. Prime Minister contrived to have this question lost in the fogs of the past, to have it buried in the recesses of history. How much better his memory was of what Gladstone said, of what Campbell-Bannerman said or of what Balfour said, than of what he said himself. How much better his memory was of the decisions of the British House and of debates in the House of Lords in the time of Pitt and Walpole than of the debate last March in the Commons of Canada and of his own vote on that occasion.

"Oh," he said, "when I came to form my Government I found out that my individual opinion should not prevail." Why, he had told us before that he had abandoned his opinion in deference to the decision of this House. Which of his two statements is right. I am inclined to think the conclusion is that he has no opinion, and never had any real opinion; inded, I think those words apply to him as respects almost every subject of public policy in this country. "I found," he says, "that if I stood by that resolution I would have only a mediocre government; I could not form an administration of the conspicuous abilities of the hon. members who sit around me now."

I might have had a government of Sinclairs and of Motherwells, if I may abandon the rule for a moment, but I could not have had for example the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau), I could not have had the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin), and I could not have had the Solicitor General (Mr. McKenzie). I could not have had such men as the hon. minister without portfolio from Quebec (Mr. Dandurand), I could not have had the minister without portfolio from Renfrew (Mr. Low), nor could I have had my distinguished friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Kennedy). All these great men, six or seven or eight, perhaps more, directors of companies and members of his government today he would have had to leave out of his cabinet, and because he had to decide between their superhuman capacities and his principles, without a moment's hesitation he abandoned his principles.

Now I stated a year ago that this is essentially a question to be left to the sense of self-respect and public respect of the member of the government himself. I stated a year ago that the matter had no personal reference to myself nor to the then leader of the Opposition, who is now Prime Minister, that neither of us had any directorships at all; but I stated as well that one could conceive of conditions where the intimacy of relationship between a membership of the governmnt and a directorship would be such that such directorship should not be held. I ask hon. members of the Government opposite simply to reflect whether there are not examples within their own household, rather remarkable examples that could be cured by the application of that sense of public respect and of public duty. I leave it to their own sense of honour and to their own conscience, just as I was prepared to leave it to the same in the case of the colleagues of whom I had the honour to be the head. But while I do so, is there anyone who as a Canadian can think quite the same of the Government of his country, yea, even of his country, when he finds today in that Government are members who are directors of companies and voted a year ago that it was a cardinal principle that no member of his government should be a director of a company. Six or seven or eight of those ministers I say are today directors of companies. The leader of the Government voted that it was in his judgment an evil to be immediately cured by legislation that a member of the Government should be the director of a company, and then immediately takes into his government six or seven or eight men and never asks one of them to surrender a directorship that he holds. Oh, he said, that was my opinion then and something like that was once the opinion of Gladstone, but poor old Gladstone was eighty years of age when he came to the conviction that a director of a company should not be a member of a government. That was, he suggests, the opinion of Gladstone in his senility. Well, the hon. member was not eighty years of age when a year ago he came to the same conclusion. In process of time he is fleeing the other way. Where is he going to be when he is eighty years of age?

The matter has a more serious aspect than would appear from the really absurd character of the course which has been pursued by the Government and by the Prime Minister to-day. What is to be thought of public honour in this country if leaders of political parties are with impunity to be permitted to declare their faith to a nation, receive the votes of a nation and then with scorn, yea, with self-satisfied contempt, aban-
10 p.m. don it immediately the responsibility of office is upon them? I know this is not the first instance. I also am pretty firmly convinced it will not be the last. I intend to hold myself in a position to complain if this wretched example is repeated, I purpose to be in a position to indict the administration. But there are many hon members of this House who will not be on very strong ground in that regard, who have already voted to absolve the ministry from obligations entered into with the people of this country. I am not in that position. And where is public honour to be in Canada if the people of this country when they come to exercise the sacred duty of voting are to have no knowledge at all of what are to be the principles that are to govern the administration when those they vote for are returned to power? I ask, are the people of this country after to-night to have any way in the world of judging as to what this Government may do upon any question whatever? If they are, by what talisman are they to be guided? Is there anybody in this country who can rest upon anything in the whole record of the administration and seize on that as a reason for saying that in his belief the Government will take any certain course upon any subject at all? I affirm that there is not. The Government has contemptuously and cynically turned its back upon every pledge made by its leader. On every one that has yet come before this House for discussion, it has cynically and contemptuously turned away, even when reminded of that pledge by one of its own most faithful supporters. That is the position in which Canada finds herself to-day, and is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that notwithstanding every opportunity given by the people, yea, and given by hon. members of this House, for the Government to establish itself by carrying out the task it undertook, by carrying out the programme it laid before the people—is it any wonder I ask that inches are coming off daily from the stature of the Government of this country, that it is going down in public estimation? The only explanation of the course they are taking now and have been taking ever since they ascended to office is that if they swerve from the course pursued by the late government to the right or to the left in the ruin they would precipitate the wrong they would inflict, they would bring the inches off their own stature faster than if they defied and entirely ignored their principles and declarations of the past. When hon. gentlemen opposite pursued lightly and without any regard to conviction, without any regard to argument, but merely for the sake of embarrassing the administration, as they thought, and of gaining a temporary advantage dear to the heart of the office seeker or the demagogue when hon. gentlemen opposite pursued lightly the lines of conduct they pursued a year ago, they could not but know that Nemesis surely would come. Doubtless hon. gentlemen opposite instigated the hon. member for Brome to bring in that bill of 1921, at least encouraged him to do so—

Mr. McMASTER: No instigation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Encouragement anyway, came very shortly after he brought in the bill, and he does not deny that there was encouragement before. When they pursued that line of conduct, they must have expected that Nemesis was certain to follow.

Mr. McMASTER: I would like to interrupt my right hon. friend with his permission. There was no encouragement before. I brought in the bill on my own responsibility, as I brought in this resolution.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I venture to say that though there may have been no encouragement and no instigation before the hon. member introduced his bill, he gained very considerable of both from the discussion, and still more from the vote. I would venture to suggest as well that before he brought his resolution in this year he met with very considerable in the way of discouragement and non-instigation, and that it required all his pluck and all his sense of self-respect to declare by the course he was to take that his own honour was just as sacred to him as the honour of the administration. Yes, when hon. gentlemen in this House as leaders of parties abandon the course they pursued as leaders when in opposition they may count that public contempt and ultimately public vengeance will come, but I venture to say that as yet these visitations have only in part arrived. Where is the hon. member going to stand in the respect of this country when it is known throughout the length and breadth of Canada that a year ago he stood four square and definitely for a fixed principle and to-day he stands definitely and defiantly against it. He merely declares that a year ago he was leader of the Op position.

"Oh yes," he says and this was perhaps the best of all. "I believe in leaders of a party not being directors, but I would not apply that restraint at all to members of the administration." Well, I wonder how those words appeal to hon. gentlemen to my left. Their leader is the leader of a party—a very considerable party—in this country. He is a director, not only of one, but, I am informed, of at least six companies. Do they approve of the doctrine that their leader must resign either his directorships or his leadership, while five, six, seven or eight members of the Government retain their portfolios and do not resign their directorship? But such is the specious reasoning by which the leader of the Government supports his stand to-night.

The best thing that from my own standpoint, and I think, from the standpoint of the permanent interests of the country, I can desire is just to leave the leader of the Government where by his conduct he is impelled; to let his action of a year, and his action to-night, his conduct in forming his Government, and the labored explanation he grinds out now in his defence,—let these things speak for themselves, and be an indication to this Dominion of his loyalty to principle and of his sense of public duty and honour.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Militia and Defence): I have listened, Mr. Speaker, with a great deal of pleasure to the speeches in this debate. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) was intent and logical to a degree, but, to my mind, he dwelt in the upper regions of theory and did not get down to earth, where men are practical. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has made a speech convincing and logical, and one, I believe, that will appeal to the common sense of all classes in this country. The right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) has remarked that he does not know where the Prime Minister is going to land. Well, he knows where he has landed, after the case of the past and the present was put plainly before the people of this country. We, on this side of the House believe—and I believe the country will substantiate that belief—that where he has landed he is going to remain. My right hon. friend has expressed amazement. Well, he is a wonderful actor, and he can simulate amazement or, as the actors say, register disgust, register anger, or register surprise. No person can do it more ably than himself, but I will suggest that the amazement of April 24 was not in it with the amazement of December 6. I have sympathy with him because I had the same kind of amazement in 1911, and no person can tell me that a man of the disposition of the right hon. leader of the Opposition was not amazed beyond degree on the night of December 6. I am not here to discuss what people said, or how they voted, a year ago. The country has spoken since a year ago, and has said to the leader of the Government: "We want you to form the best government you can find in the Dominion of Canada, according to your judgment; that is your job." Whether he has done that or not the people of Canada will in time declare. At the present moment, I would suggest to the right hon. leader of the Opposition that instead of inches being cut off from the esteem in which the Prime Minister is held, he has been adding to his stature daily through his conduct since the election. I do not know that I will gain anything in enlightenment,either for myself, the House or for the country, by following my right hon. friend. I will submit, however, that for the last twenty minutes of his speech he said nothing about the subject before the House at all. The country is not anxious now to know what happened a year ago, or what happened—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAHAM: Well, it was anxious on December 6. The right hon. gentlemen seems to be sitting with his back to the engine, always looking at the scenery after he has passed it, but he will have to face the motive power of the machinery of this country, and look at things that we are approaching, and not at things we have passed. What we are called upon to do in this country, as a Parliament and Government, is what interests the people of Canada at the present time. During the campaign some of us made somewhat heated declarations. I think on this side of the House we are no exception to any of the hon. gentlemen on the other side in that regard. But now that Parliament has assembled, this Government is endeavouring to manage the affairs with the advice of members of this Parliament. The people are reading the papers every day, not so much to know what we say to each other across the floor of the House, but to know what is being done to bring order out of the chaos which this Government found when it came to office.

The question before the House is one simply of practical business. I ask hon. gentlemen, if they were endeavouring to select men to conduct their business, and there were large financial matters of paramount importance to be discussed and dealt with, would they not seek for the men who had experience in those things? Every business man will say that is the correct policy. What is applied to our private business should be applied to our public affairs. The discussion to-day has been woven around the question of whether men who were able enough in a company to become directors of it might not do something wrong in a government. The fact that they have risen to become directors of a company, as my right hon. friend says, is something in their favour, because the men who know them best have entrusted to them their money to manage. That being the case, I take it, sir, that the people of the country do not make any mistake in passing the same kind of judgment. It is all very well for us to discuss a theory, and many theories that are not practicable are absolutely impregnable in discussion. I could name some of them, but will not. This is a question of practical every day business, and we should apply the best business intelligence we have to it.

Take, for instance, the resolution before us. How many hon. gentlemen in this House are shareholders in local rural telephone companies? A great many of them. Let me point out that the attempt to make this apply to directors who are ministers is merely drawing a herring across the trail. What applies to a minister of the Crown, applies to every member of the House and ought to apply, because a private member in this House, if he have interests in any company, is in a better position to do business for that company quietly, than if he were a member of the Government, and I point out to hon. gentlemen that when an attempt is made to say that one law shall apply to members of the Government, and that another law shall apply to members of the House of Commons who are not members of the Government, they are making a distinction which neither the law nor the independence of Parliament ever contemplated. If this resolution were to become law, then, in its spirit and in its reality, no member of a rural telephone company could become a member of the Government.

Mr. McMASTER: Would the hon. member consider that a rural telephone company fell under the classification of a large public utility corporation?

Mr. GRAHAM: Many of them do, and they are growing larger and of more importance every day. I repeat that, under the literal reading of this resolution, any director of a rural telephone company would be debarred from becoming a member of a government and if he has no right to become a member of a government, he has no right to become a member of this House or of the Senate. Business is not conducted as it was many years ago. At that time individual men conducted businesses; to-day, for the sake of convenience, of better organisation, nearly every business of importance is organised into a company, and in many townships, in every village, every town and every city, we find the men who take interest in public affairs in those small organisations for the sake of helping their own locality and giving courage to those who are endeavouring to make things better in the vicinity in which they live. Does any sane person, who has given this subject thought, mean to tell the country that a man who takes that interest, in his locality, in his municipality, in his province, is to be debarred from taking a larger interest in public life? He has shown, by his interest in those affairs, that he is not only public-minded with a broad view of public affairs but more competent to deal with the affairs of this country on a larger scale, than a man who does not take that interest in things closely around him.

I want to say just one other word, and it is this: If the present law surrounding the independence of Parliament is not sufficient to keep members of the Government right, then you cannot pass a law anywhere or place a law on any statute book that will accomplish that object. If members of the Government or members of the House of Commons or the Senate do not adhere to the law as at present on our statute books, then I say again, with all deference to the hon. member for Brome Mr. McMaster) that he cannot draft a bill which, if enacted, would compel those gentlemen to keep in the line of rectitude. The question is a broad one. You cannot make men honest by statute so easily; and as banks will take without security, the note of a man in whom they have confidence, rather than, with security, that of a man in whom they have no confidence, I would rather a man, who has a reputation for probity, for integrity, in dealing with the public as a member of government, even if he were director in twenty companies, than a man who had a bad reputation and who was a director in no company. To my mind, what the country expects us to do, both as a Parliament and as a government, is to bring our best ability to bear upon the questions now confronting us, and every person will agree that they are momentous. If a man who is director of a bank or some other company will give his time, and he is considered to be the man for the position, then all Canada will say: "Secure the services of that man if you can possibly do so." You will do it in your business, I will do it in mine, and the people of this country will recognise that the Prime Minister has done it in his.

Mr. R. A. HOEY (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) is, in my humble judgment, a most important one, one the mere discussion of which will create widespread interest throughout this country, and one, the final outcome of which is awaited even now with considerable anxiety. My justification for rising to take part in this discussion is based upon the conviction that this proposal is, in spirit at least, in complete accord with British practice at its best,—British practice as exemplified and illustrated in the case of many outstanding leaders in Great Britain and, I am happy to state, by many outstanding political leaders in this country.

I should like to apologise to you, Sir, for introducing a personal element. I want to do so, in order to discover, if I can, the disease in the body politic, to which the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has referred, and in order to come down into the realm of practical affairs, to which the Minister of Militia (Mr. Graham) has referred. During the recent federal campaign, an opportunity was extended to me to visit many constituencies in western Canada and one or two constituencies, at least, in western Ontario. During those visits I was astonished, shall I say alarmed and depressed, to find a large section of the Canadian people absolutely disinterested in the outcome of the election, not only in their respective constituencies, but in a Dominion sense?

I was naturally anxious to inquire into the cause of this apathy, and I learned that there was, amongst this section of the population, a widespread feeling that governments in Canada, from time to time, had been dominated, if not controlled, by the big interests of this country. I am not saying, at the moment, that they were right in this belief; I am only attempting, in my humble and awkward way, to interpret an attitude of mind. Let me say that I found this feeling most pronounced, not amongst the radical labour element and certainly not amongst the wealthy classes, but amongst what I might be justified in terming the better middle class, business men in a small way, professional men, teachers, many of whom were university graduates and all of whom were keen students of economic thought, the section of the population that, in the older countries, has always been able to determine the outcome of any election by throwing the weight of its influence in with either of the two historic parties. I heard from this class again and again and again of the numbers of Cabinet ministers who, at the same time, were directors of large business companies. I heard them refer to politics as a game in this country, of profit only to those who occupied places in the inner circle. I heard, throughout that campaign, reference made again and again to campaign funds, and that reference to me seemed particularly pertinent when applied to the late government in the early days of the campaign and to the present Government in the closing days of that campaign. But the point that I wish to bring out is this, that that mysterious source from which campaign funds have been obtained in this country and the fact that there are directors of big interests occupying Cabinet positions, are inseparably bound up in the consciousness of a certain class of the Canadian people.

I made the statement then, which I repeat now, that unless something could be done to restore the confidence, and re-establish the faith, of this section in our political institutions, then the outlook in Canada was in no sense promising. We have been witnessing during the past three or four years the collapse of constitutional government in more than one of the older countries. How has this collapse come about? I know whereof I speak when I say that in the case of one country that collapse was preceded by a century of propaganda that sought to convince the people that the government responsible for the administration of public affairs in that land was wholly dominated by the landlords and the wealthy men of Great Britain; and that propaganda, continued systematically, ultimately succeeded in completely undermining the faith of the people of that country in constitutional government. Turn to Russia and study its modern history and you will find that the collapse of constitutional government there was also preceded by a system of propaganda that sought to associate the government of that great country with the wealthy classes. It is my conviction that this impression, so widespread in Canada at the present time, that the governments of this country have been from time to time dominated by big business, has been created largely by propaganda for which all parties have been more or less responsible. That propaganda, in so far as it has substantial basis in fact, and foundation in truth, is commendable, believing as we do in the purifying influence of public opinion and publicity. In so far as propaganda of that kind is based on a desire for party advantage, however, it is pernicious and destructive, is always followed by disastrous consequences, and, in my opinion, is unworthy of the Canadian people.

Mr. VIEN: My hon. friend says that public opinion, at least in certain sections of the country, has lost confidence in the constitutional government of Canada. Will he tell us what section of the country he visited, and where he found indications of such a lack of confidence?

Mr. HOEY: Perhaps I had better come down to the realm of practical affairs and mention the constituency which I have the honour to represent. There are 20,000 voters on the voters' list in that constituency. I know that a great many voted who were not on the list, but I learn from a table I have here that there were 8,000 of the 20,000 who failed to exercise the right of the franchise on the election day. Let me give my hon. friend some figures from Toronto, that home of tolerance and economic enlightenment. In East Toronto there were 39,435 names on the list, as against 14,930 votes counted. Does that indicate disease in the body politic? In North Toronto the names on the list numbered 47,622 and the votes counted 20,864. But, more amazing still, in South Toronto there were on the list 31,749 names while those who voted numbered only 7,531. I think I will repeat that.

Mr. VIEN: Perhaps my hon. friend will allow a correction. I was told by an hon. member from Toronto that this small vote given in that city was due not to any lack of confidence in constitutional government on the part of the people of Toronto, but mainly to the fact that the ladies of that city did not vote, notwithstanding that they had been given the franchise.

Mr. HOEY: My hon. friend must have been anticipating my speech.

Mr. VIEN: I am giving the hon. gentleman—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member, I think, is unduly interrupting.

Mr. HOEY: So far as the question of lack of confidence is concerned, I know that this feeling is very pronounced in my own constituency, particularly in the urban districts. Now, I am not one of those who believe that this proposal will prove a panacea for that ill. I do not know that it will. But I do think that it is a step in the right direction; and I believe that, if extended, not by compulsion and certainly not by legislation, which I would not favour, but by mutual agreement and consent among gentlemen, the proposal embodied in this resolution would do much to re-establish the faith of this section of the country in our constitutiounal government. I am aware that such a policy if carried out by mutual agreement, and not, as I have said, by compulsion or legislation, would undoubtedly involve sacrifice. I am willing, as I think we are all willing, to admit that. But was it not a sacrifice on the part of all classes that enabled this country to emerge triumphantly from the great crisis of the war? It was; and I am convinced that it will be sacrifice on the part of all our people, and especially on the part of our leaders, that will enable the country to emerge triumphantly from this post-war period of depression and unrest. And it is because I believe that this proposal is a step in the right direction that it affords me a great deal of pleasure to lend it my support on this occasion.

Mr. JEAN JOSEPH DENIS (Joliette): I listened with a great deal of interest to speech of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), and if I cannot share his views, I must say, in justice to him, that at least he certainly put before the House the best possible case that could be presented under the circumstances. Unfortunately, I am bound to add that, in my opinion, my hon. friend did not make a good case; in fact, I do not think he made any case at all. Before taking up the main argument on this question, I desire to indicate one or two points that should be considered in this motion if it is to pass at all. To begin with, the motion declares that ministers should resign their directorships on their appointment as ministers of the Crown. Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be very imprudent for ministers to resign their directorships on appointment to the Cabinet, especially had that applied to the ministers who were appointed shortly before the last general election. Several of those ministers never were elected to the House, and consequently had they resigned their directorships on appointment they would have resigned for no consideration whatever.

My hon. friend proposes further, that:

> Such companies should have no business dealings with the Government of the Dominion of Canada, or with any department thereof, or with any railway or ship owned or controlled by said government;

It would not be fair to bar a company from doing business with the Government simply because one of its directors happened to be a minister of the Crown, because it is not within the power of a company to prevent its directors from entering the Government. The shareholders of a company generally elect their directors for one year, and it is not competent for those shareholders to displace any director within that period. Therefore I think that part of the resolution should disappear also.

But these are only preliminary considerations, and I prefer to examine the question on its merits. As was pointed out by the hon. Prime Minister, we have at present a statute, that meets the purpose which concerns the hon. member for Brome. That statute is the Senate and House of Commons Act, Section 14 of which provides that:

> No person, directly or indirectly, alone or with any other, by himself or by the interposition of any trustee or third party, holding or enjoying, undertaking or executing any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, with or for the Government of Canada on behalf of the Crown, or with or for any of the officers of the Government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is to be paid, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons, or shall sit or vote in the said House.

That is supplemented by section 18, which provides that in every contract with the Government there shall be inserted a clause giving effect to the provisions of section 14. This law has been in force for about fifty years, and it has not been pointed out to-night wherein it has ever been insufficient. On the contrary, from all that has been said it appears that the statute has always been considered adequate and sufficient.

I suppose if this resolution should be accepted by the House it would be the duty of the Government to introduce a bill to give effect to it. But I say that this resolution in its present form cannot be accepted by the House, because it is arbitrary, uncertain, obscure, useless, and uncalled for. In a word, it has not been demonstrated that any evil now exists which a statute based on this resolution could remedy.

Now, let us examine some of the arguments put forward in support of the resolution. My hon. friend from Brome says that it is based on English practice. Well, I am sorry to differ, but I must say that that is by no means the case. On the contrary, that practice has been, making allowance for certain exceptions which only confirm the rule, that ministers of the Crown, do not resign their directorships. My hon. friend quoted the instance of the chairman of the board of directors of the Northeastern Railway Company, who on being appointed a member of his Cabinet by Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman resigned his railway position. But I submit, Sir, that that is not a parallel case at all, because anyone will readily understand that no man could hold the two positions concurrently. It would be about the same as if the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or the President of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, when that company was a private corporation, were appointed ministers of the Crown. Therefore that case in my view falls within the exceptions that confirm the rule.

My hon. friend says, further, that it is a general practice for British ministers of the Crown to resign their directorships. Again I have to differ with him, and point out that not only in Great Britain but in Canada and the United States, generally speaking, ministers do not resign their directorships on accepting portfolios. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) quoted many examples of Ministers of the Crown since Confederation who accepted offices without resigning their directorship.

Now, in studying this question I think it is wise to refer to the law in other countries, and with that purpose in view I have examined the laws of Great Britain, the United States, and France, and in none of those three countries have I found any law that by any means resembles the statute which would have to supplement this resolution. I go further and say that in none of our provinces is there any such law in existence. If it is a good principle for the Dominion it is a good principle for the provinces, but, as I have just pointed out, none of the provinces so far has thought fit to embody the principle in legislation. In those three countries and in our provinces the rule has been to refer the question to the integrity, the honour and the sense of propriety of the minister so appointed. Now, sir, if that has been the standard in Canada for the last fifty years; if that is the standard in other countries, has that standard diminished in Canada of late? Is it since the present administration has assumed office that the standard of honour and integrity and sense of propriety has been lowered in Canada? Certainly my hon. friend from Brome will say "No" to that question, as I do myself. In a case like this, where it is more a question of propriety, good taste and honour than of law, I think the wish of the people should be considered. The wish of the people is a criterion, and when they elect as their representative one who belongs to any political party, knowing at the time of his election that he is director of a large corporation, they do so because they want that man to become a member of Parliament, notwithstanding his directorship in that corporation. Therefore I say that if the people want such men as their representatives in Parliament, who is going to say that they are not fit to become members? I apply my argument to members of Parliament because I contend that if my hon. friend's resolution has any foundation at all it must be applied not merely to ministers of the Crown, but to members of Parliament generally. Of course, being applied to members generally it would apply as well to ministers, the minister being only, after all, a member of Parliament. After a member has been elected by his constituents with the knowledge that he is a director of a company or large corporation, the Prime Minister may choose him as a member of his ministry. The Prime Minister might or might not make an error in his choice, but if he does make an error, if the people do not want this man to become a minister because of his directorship in a large corporation, the people have full opportunity of opposing his selection. After the member has been selected as Cabinet minister he must again go before the people for re-election; he must submit his conduct to them and be elected in his capacity as minister. Under those circumstances, when the people pronounce themselves twice, first by electing a man as a member of Parliament and next by re-electing him following his selection as a member of the Cabinet by the Prime Minister, then I say that Parliament should go no further.

It has been said that the work of a minister of the Crown is arduous and unremitting and that, therefore, he should give all his time to the duties of his office and entirely eliminate all other activities. But directorship in a corporation is only one of the many activities of mankind in which a member may be engaged, and if after becoming a minister a man is precluded from being a director of a corporation, he should also be precluded from looking after his own private business. He should be precluded from giving his time to any occupation whatever other than that pertaining to his office; and that would imply a severance from his friends, from all social functions, from his party affiliations, even from his family, if you want to go that far. Such was never the intention of government or of Parliament; such is not the intention of the people of this country. The people ask that a minister of the Crown shall give his best efforts to the work devolving upon him, but they do not and cannot reasonably ask that he abandon everything; that he should isolate himself, if need be, just because he is a member of the cabinet. It has been very properly pointed out that political life is often of short duration, and if after a man has worked for a lifetime and acquired some wealth he has to put it all aside in order to become a member of the cabinet, there is danger that the most able men in the country will, on that account, refuse to accept any such position.

The hon. member for Brome said, en passant, that no man could serve two masters. That is true, Mr. Speaker; no man can serve two masters if one be the Lord and the other the devil. No man can serve two masters if they are antagonists; if they are working on projects that are opposed one to the other. But in the ordinary course of life a man can serve two and more masters. A man can serve two masters if their interests are different. But any time a minister of the Crown thinks that the interests of the corporation of which he is a director may come into conflict with the interests of the Government; any time he feels that he is placed in a position where he cannot serve the two masters and he must decide between the two, it would be his duty to resign his directorship. Otherwise I do not see that a man who is a member of the ministry and at the same time a director of a corporation serves two masters in the biblical sense of the word.

The hon. member for Brome spoke very eloquently of what he called interlocking directorates. I submit that this resolution has nothing to do with interlocking directorates, if such things exist. What does it matter to this House that a member be a director of several companies if none of which has any connection or dealing with the Government? As long as there is wealth or riches in the country, men of prominence, influential men, men of wealth will be directors of companies, and in that there is no harm whatever?

The argument has been made to-night, and it is a good one, I think, that the fact of a man resigning his office as director of a company does not preclude him from retaining his interests in that company and from being represented by a dummy on its directorate. Suppose, for instance, that the director owns only a few shares in the company, having been elected a director because he was a capable and intelligent man, and that alongside of him there is a shareholder who owns a great many shares, but who is not a director because he is not as able as the other man. Is it not true that the large shareholder will have more interest in that company, although he is not a director, than the first man even though he were a director and a minister of the Crown? Is it not true that the large shareholder who was not a director would be more concerned about the welfare of that company and more susceptible to influence than the director who owned only a few shares? Or take the case of a man who owns a large private industry and becomes a minister of the Crown. There is no reproach against him so far, but if he organizes that industry into a company and keeps a few shares and becomes a director of that company, he could no longer be a minister of the Crown.

Parliament should always be very careful not to pass what I would call useless legislation. The object of legislation is either to procure a benefit or to cure an evil. I do not see that any benefit will be procured by the passing of the resolution of my hon. friend from Brome, nor do I see that any evil will be cured. If it had been shown that during the last fifty years under the present statute concerning the Senate and the House of Commons, evils had prevailed, or that minister of the Crown had abused his position, either in this or any other country, I would say that there was an evil to be cured, but nothing of the kind has been shown. On the contrary, when we know that ever since Confederation there have been in every government in this country ministers of the Crown who were directors of companies, it is wonderful indeed to think that no evils resulting from that situation can be pointed out to the House to-night. Therefore, I say that the safeguard which the resolution seeks to impose is an artificial, an imaginary safeguard. I believe that there is no necessity for it. What we want in the service of this country are able, experienced, business men, men in whom the community has confidence. Once a man has been elected a member of Parliament and is again re-elected as a minister of the Crown, I say that the confidence of the people of this country has been demonstrated enough so far as that individual is concerned, and for that reason he is fit to be a member of the Cabinet.

I heard one of my friends sitting in the party obliquely opposite make the argument tonight that men of large capital and influence who were directors of a company should not be allowed to become ministers of the Crown. We must be very careful about laying down any such principle as that. If we are going to accept as a principle that the rich man, the able man, the learned man, the man who has been chosen by his associates as president or director of a large corporation because they have confidence in him, is not fit to a be a cabinet minister, I would ask from what kind of material will your cabinet be drawn? There is a country in the world at the present time which has swept aside the rich and the powerful, directors of companies, let us say, and we know which country that is. While I would not by any means compare what my hon. friend said to a Bolshevist utterance or the utterance of a demagogue, it reminded me of a story I saw illustrated by a cartoon not very long ago. Two policemen appeared with a prisoner before a judge in Russia, and were asked by him what was the charge against the prisoner. The policemen answered "A capitalist." The judge asked, "What was he doing? How did you find out this man was a capitalist?" The policemen answered, "We found him in a barber shop having his hair cut."

Mr. McMASTER: That does not apply to the hon. member for Brome.

Mr. DENIS: I am only quoting that in a humourous way. I must say that there is in this country, perhaps in every country in the world at the present time, a certain tendency which may be very honest in many quarters, to set aside the man who has the reputation of being rich and powerful for the sole reason that he is rich and powerful. I think that when it comes to choosing a cabinet, the rich and powerful man should be placed on the same footing as the poor and weak man, that every man should be given the same opportunity providing they are of equal ability and are capable of filling the position.

In conclusion, I wish to say that the principle at the bottom of this resolution is one which concerns the honour and the integrity of members of Parliament and ministers of the Crown, and I submit that the honour and integrity of a man cannot be remedied or improved by legislation. It is entirely a private matter concerning the honour and integrity of the individual. The people choose their representatives, and those who are chosen members of the cabinet have to go back to the people and accept their verdict.

One aspect of this question which has not been touched upon is that it is purely and simply a question of fact. It is not a question of law, it is a question of fact, and this is the distinction I would make between a question of law and a question of fact. If this question could be determined by a general principle of law applicable to all cases with equality and justice, then I would call it a principle of law. If we have to differentiate and to examine each case in particular, if the principle which is embodied in this resolution were true and right in one case, but might be unjust and unwise in another case, according to the circumstances, then I say it is essentially a question of fact, and I submit that questions of fact cannot be regulated by statute. A question of fact has to be examined each and every time on its particular merits. That is the reason why it might very well happen in one case that a minister of the crown, being a director, could not remain in both offices without violating his oath of office. On the other hand, it might very well happen in many cases, and in most cases, that a minister of the crown could hold a position as director of a company without any incompatibility, without any evil or wrongdoing whatever, and, for that reason, I say that this question is merely one of fact. It cannot be regulated by statute, but can be regulated only by the sense of honour, integrity and justice of the man. For these reasons, I will vote against the resolution.

Hon. J. B. M. BAXTER (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert): I rise for the purpose of tendering, if I may, my respectful and heartfelt sympathy to the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster). I think this is an occasion where he needs sympathy, where he deserves it and ought to have it in full measure. I am not in accord with the proposition which he has placed before the House. The party of which I am a member was not in accord with the proposition in its broader form when placed before the House last year. The hon. member for Brome will have no reproach to make to the members of the official Opposition. He cannot agree with them, but he knows that where they stand to-day they stood when he first introduced his resolution. He will, at least, give this portion of the House the credit for both sincerity and courage. Can he do as much for his own side of the House? For years hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have accepted the services of the hon. member for Brome as one of the chief critics, if not the chief financial critic, of the Government of the day. He is a good Liberal and was brought up in the faith. He sat in council, though, as yet, I have not seen any very visible emblems of reward, and, perhaps, my hon. friend does not expect any, but, if I might paraphrase a little, I would have said that before the opening of this Parliament—at all events before the introduction of the resolution—he might have stood against the world. To-day there are none so poor in his own side of the House as to do him reverence. Every member of the Government and every supporter of the Government who has spoken has, in a mild, perhaps charitable, but still possibly firm manner, told the hon. member for Brome that he does not really know what he is talking about, and that his panacea is no panacea at all.

Unfortunately, some hon. gentlemen who took part in the debate this year, and also took part, even though a limited part, in the debate last year, and a larger number of them who concurred in the vote last year, did not express by their vote to the hon. member for Brome the things they say to him this year and the things they are going to show him by their vote tonight. It is rather unfortunate. He has been told that the principle is a good one, that no man can serve two masters, but I think the hon. member for Brome is probably considering it from a little different angle tonight. He is probably asking himself how one man can serve one master who goes in different directions at different times. The trouble is not in the multiplicity of masters, but apparently this chart, about which we hear so much, has come in evidence again—the chart that shows no lighthouse, no compass, nothing but an aimless sea of indirection upon which the political bark is allowed to float in a manner that will best serve the political exigencies of the moment. Let my hon. friend from Brome make up his mind now, a little late perhaps, to endure this sort of suffering for the rest of his political career. He can now really appreciate the company into which he has gotten himself.

We have been told that public opinion is the master of this House. I hope so. I would be very glad to think that, and, naturally, those of us who sit in this angle would like to lead public opinion along the same lines as we think, but how, may I ask hon. members of this House, are we going to do it? Shall we go on the public platform, or stand in this chamber, or discuss on the street, things that we do not intend to put into practice when we come into office? Shall we go from one end of Canada to the other, exhorting the people to support the Conservative party and declaring to those people that if we come into power we are going to do thus and so, and at the same time have the mental reservation that we do not intend to do anything of the kind, and that we intend to shape our course according to the expedience of the moment? That is not simply one of the issues, but that is the dominant issue in Canadian politics to-day, —whether the party shall or shall not be true to its previous record and true to the pledges which it has given to the people. Shall we in this group follow the example, let me say the temporary successful example, which has been set? We intend to hold a nationwide convention of our party, to reassert and reaffirm those principles which eventually will be triumphant in this country. And when we do so, are we to take as a guide that great convention which was held a few years ago, the party behind that convention having, up to the present time, practically repudiated or refused to put into force every plank, every doctrine, in the platform to which it subscribed? My hon. friends, who sit to my left on this side of the chamber, in fact, I might say, the party which is in morganatic alliance with the Government, a truly morganatic union because it gets none of the honours and yet it is expected to bear its share of the burdens of this entanglement, have supported this morganatic union by voting in this House to absolve, so far as they can, the gentlemen who have gone to the country on one platform and who have come back to this House to put into practice an entirely different platform. They have done so upon the only challenge that has been given in this House since the opening of the session. They will live to see the day when they will rue that morganatic alliance. We do not expect, because we are true to our principles, the gentlemen to our left, who have professed—and they are, I believe, absolutely sincere in their professions—principles largely antagonistic to our own, to look upon our platform with a favourable eye. But it is about time—

Mr. PUTNAM: Hear, hear.

Mr. BAXTER: —and my hon. friend who says "hear, hear" may as well make up his mind whether he is going to say "hear, hear" to every sham and subterfuge which comes from his side of the House, or whether he will, like the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), stand on his feet, follow his convictions, stand by his principles, when his party has gone astray from him. I do not know whether my hon. friend sat in this House last year or not; but if he did, the chances are at least nine out of ten that he joined with the hon. member for Brome in what, although he may not have meant it so, was virtually and really an attack upon the administration of the day. As has been pointed out by my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) cabinet minister after cabinet minister in this administration lined up in the vote last year against the former administration, and where are those principles to-night? When those principles are abandoned, how much may the morganatic alliance depend upon the sincerity of this Government in dealing in even such an important matter as the Wheat Board? I want to tell my hon. friends to my left that they are being jockeyed to-day in regard to the Wheat Board. I am not in favour of the Wheat Board.

Mr. PELLETIER: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BAXTER: It is about time.

Mr. PELLETIER: I really believe my hon. friend is out of order. What he is saying is absolutely irrelevant; it has nothing to do with the question before the House, and it seems to me that he ought to confine himself to the question under discussion.

Mr. BAXTER: Mr. Speaker, you have not called upon to me to justify my stand; but, if it is necessary for me to discuss the point, for the information of my hon. friend, I will tell him that, upon such a resolution as is before the House, a very pertinent, proper and immediate thing to discuss is the sincerity of the Government which he is supporting.

Mr. PUTNAM: What has that to do with the Wheat Board?

Mr. BAXTER: A great deal as, in my humble judgment, hon. gentlemen sitting to my left will find out before the session is over.

Mr. PUTNAM: Or the Board of Commerce?

Mr. BAXTER: If my hon. friend wishes to discuss the Board of Commerce, I suggest he should discuss that privately with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock).

Mr. PUTNAM: The one is as relevant as the other.

Mr. BAXTER: The Board of Commerce is not an issue at the present moment.

Mr. PUTNAM: It is just as much as the Wheat Board.

Mr. BAXTER: If my hon. friend really wants to discuss the question I will give him an opportunity of doing so. I do not mind being interrupted provided the chunk of interruption is a big one, but I do not want our voices to ring together at the same moment.

Mr. PUTNAM: I only say that I am just obtuse enough to think that the Wheat Board is as far away from this debate as is the ill-fated Board of Commerce. I gave that as an illustration.

Mr. BAXTER: I have much pleasure in agreeing with my hon. friend as to his obtuseness. I trust my hon. friend and myself can approach the subject from the same point of view. If my hon. friend wishes to pay himself any more compliments and have me second them. I shall be most happy to do so. If my hon. friend has not yet reached the limit of his vituperative vocabulary as applied to himself, I will give him an opportunity to apply the epithets.

Mr. PUTNAM: I think the House will see that the seconder was nearer home.

Mr. BAXTER: I may say, perhaps, for the benefit of our friends sitting to the left, that, in my opinion—and it is of course, possible that I may be wrong—if the Government of the day really desires to give my hon. friends the Wheat Board that they or some of them profess to want, it would be easy for the Government to do so. I do not want it; I am not an advocate for it; but they can learn, by the translation of yesterday's declarations into to-day's action, how much sincerity to expect from the present Administration. The same sincerity that the hon. member for Brome is experiencing to-night is just the measure of sincerity that my hon. friends sitting to the left may expect. The morganatic alliance will be a splendid institution while it brings the necessary support to a government that cannot live without it. It will be utterly disregarded when it interferes with the interests or desires or prejudices of hon. gentlemen who sit to the right of Mr. Speaker.

I should like, just for a moment, to deal with what the Minister of Militia (Mr. Graham) said. I think he referred to the fact that the party on this side of the House was a defeated party, and his satisfaction is quite evident, quite natural, quite pleasurable. The hon. gentleman should not be too hard upon defeats. I fancy it was only the fact that he too had been defeated that prevented him from joining in the chorus and vote which supported the hon. member for Brome last year, and he probably would have been as busily engaged as other members of the Government to-night in swallowing his previous utterances if he had been a member of the House last year. Fortunately, he had escaped, and he was able to take what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) and, in fact, pretty nearly every hon. gentleman who has spoken to-night believe is the wise, sane and healthy course; for I believe myself that the rewards in political life are all too small to induce the captains of industry to enter political life and give their services to the state, and instead of putting up barriers to keep such men out, I believe it is in the interests of the country that such men should be induced by every possible means to come in and help administer a government. I find no fault with the Prime Minister for having induced such captains of industry, such capable businessmen as he has, although the number is not, by any means, as large as it might be for the good of the country.

I can assure my hon. friend the Minister of Militia (Mr. Graham) that defeats are not permanent. We are in the positon of a party which, when it again meets the country, will present to that country an unbroken record of consistent adherence to what we, at all events, have believed, do believe, and shall believe, is the best policy in the interests of the entire country. When my hon. friends go to that country for endorsement, it will be utterly impossible to tell from their previous performances what their next performance will be, whether they will go back to the platform they discarded or adopt something new. But this will be sure, that whatever they may utter on the public platform, in the discussions of the next campaign, whatever they may print in their handbooks, whatever they may set forth in the newspapers of the country, will, on the word of the Prime Minister, be nothing more than an advertising campaign to get votes, and will not entail, in their eyes, any obligation upon a single man jack of them to carry it out after he gets back to the House. And my hon. friends to my left can take credit to themselves for having voted to endorse that particularly responsible and, I was almost going to say, that particularly honest statesman.

Now, what the people in this country vote for, that they will get. What their representatives in this Parliament vote for, that they will get. And if they vote for sham and insincerity they will have it in full measure; but they will not get it from this group. My hon. friend from Brome

(Mr. McMaster) last year made a declaration, and in tones of most respectful sympathy. I want to commend to him the careful study of his words. Hansard records him as saying: "I know my own leader and can speak for him." Can he tonight? Did his wildest imagination a year ago ever foresee the day when his honoured leader would rise in his place and repudiate him and his resolution, and swallow whole, without an effort at gulping it, the doctrine promulgated last year by my right hon. friend the leader of the official Opposition (Mr. Meighen)? And does the hon. member for Brome think that that is distinctly a good thing in Canadian public life? Is it the sort of thing he wants to subscribe to? It is the sort of policy any man can pursue? Would it not have been at least decent, would it not have been at least fair, to have given the hon. member for Brome some notice of a change of direction, some notice of the back-tracking of the Government, so that he could at least get into line in the procession if he wanted to? That would have been more merciful than to treat an old stalwart supporter to the kicks of absolute repudiation, when he is standing for what he at any rate believes to be an absolute principle and absolute right.

Mr. J. FRED JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): I do not intend to attempt a speech at this late hour. One or two of the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just preceded me would lead one to think that he is very much concerned as to the welfare of this party with which I am associated. I think he made use of the statement that we Progressives were being jockeyed on the Wheat Board proposition. Well, be that as it may, I would inform my hon. friend that when we find ourselves in a bad way we will not look to him or to those associated with him. The hon. member drew attention to himself and to his party in connection with the resolution that is before the House, in words something like these: "We are here to-day, we were here yesterday, and we will continue to be here." Well, Sir, that is the trouble with the hon. gentleman and his whole party. They have been where they are for the last forty years, and consequently we have had no progress when their party was in power.

Now, the reason I rose at all was to make an explanation rather than a speech. It will be observed that the leader of my party (Mr. Crerar) is not in the House, and it is because of his unavoidable absence that I have spoken. I desire to explain why he is not here. He is under the care of his physician, as he has been for the last number of days, and in this age of misunderstanding,—and, I am very sorry to add, sometimes of misrepresentation I thought it well to let the House know that had he been here he would have been where I am and doing what I purpose doing, namely, supporting the resolution of my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster).

Mr. GAUVREAU: Hon. members opposite had a different attitude last year.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): I may say to my hon. friend from Brome, in connection with this matter, that friends may come and friends may go, but he and I, at any rate, will go on forever, and I also will support his resolution.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (East Calgary): The hour is rather late, but I believe that this issue is of sufficient importance to warrant the few minutes I shall devote to its consideration. The member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) in his resolution, and in his most excellent presentation of the case, has given voice to a sentiment and emphasized a principle which I feel sure will receive very hearty endorsation from the people of the country. I wish to congratulate him on his splendid courage, and on the wisdom and moderation which he exhibited in the presentation of his arguments. "Behold a Liberal indeed, in whom is no guile."

I have been rather surprised, however, in the debate which has followed, that patriotism has not been emphasized very much. I do not think there is any class in Canada that is more apt to wave the flag and to prate about patriotism than parliamentarians in general, and we have not to look very far back to find where hon. gentlemen, who have taken part in this debate, waved the flag until the folds were almost worn out. But here is an opportunity for practical patriotism. This resolution calls upon the man of ability, who has proved that ability in the affairs of business, to give his service to the country, not his half-hearted efforts but his whole-hearted service, as well as his complete time, for which the country pays him and is grateful. And yet, not one single parliamentarian has lifted up his voice or waved the flag on this occasion. Surely this is worthy of patriotic emphasis.

Most of us agree with the central thought of the resolution, that no man can serve two masters, and that we are called upon to vote as to whom we will serve, or as to which master we wish to see our administrative representatives serving. It is very clear—and this is the point which has withstood the test of argument, for no one has challenged it so far as I have heard—that when a cabinet minister holds the position of director in any company he cannot give all his time to the service of the country, while at the same time there may be a clashing of interests. For this reason it is well that he should separate from one or the other, that he should be called upon to give his services in a patriotic sense to the nation, or else give his whole time to the industry which has claimed his attention so far.

I think it was the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) who submitted that no harm has been done by this old method. What an argument indeed! Have we been reduced to a miserable negation? Is that the only argument that the hon. member can put forward in support of his position? He very well knows that it is exceedingly difficult to prove whether any harm has been done in a direct sense; but, nevertheless, I am not so sure that we cannot prove in a general way that harm is being done and will be done. We have just had a bank collapse, and, as I understand it, one of its directors was a member of the late administration. He admitted that he had been giving attention to the Government and not to the institution that collapsed. Now, is it not reasonable to suppose that if he had been attending to the bank's business he would have known the condition it was in and would have warned the public, or perhaps even saved the institution? There is a case at least where harm did come. Is it not harmful where a man is so divided in his interests that he cannot give good service to one or the other?

No one will deny that throughout the country there is prevalent an idea that the financial interests, the railway interests, and the manufacturing interests have in the past had a very great deal too much to do with Canadian governments. As to whether that very settled opinion is well founded or not is another question, but the fact remains that a very large section of our people entertain it. Consequently, if we passed such a resolution as this, and implemented it with legislation, it would to some extent remove the ground for that opinion at least, and tend to establish greater confidence in administrative bodies.

If a corporation represents a man's life, as the hon. member for South Wellington put it, let that man stay with that corporation; there is no particular demand that he should give it up. Then the hon. member tried to give this argument a personal turn and mentioned specifically the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin), who, he warned us, was the actual foundation of the present Government and who, if this resolution passed, might resign. I do not know the hon. member's authority for that statement, but personally I do not think that eventuality would be possible. I am willing to admit the greatness of the hon. Minister of Justice. I believe that every hon. member recognizes his ability, and would regret very much anything that would deprive him of the opportunity of serving his country at this time. But it is just because we believe in his greatness that we have no fear in passing this resolution, for surely such a great man as we believe him to be would not, because of a statutory prohibition, as it was termed by the Prime Minister, feel called upon to resign. We believe that the hon. Minister of Justice is too big a man to take such a course; on the contrary, we believe he would be patriotic and continue to serve his country notwithstanding such legislation. No one would imagine for a moment that the hon. minister would fail to rise to the opportunity for patriotic service afforded by this resolution. But let me put it another way: What would the people think of the hon. Minister of Justice if he should resign because this resolution was passed? There is the other side of the question. I do not believe they would think very much of him if he did resign; personally I think he would say: I have been selected to serve my country at a very critical time in her history, and I am going to rise to the patriotic level of this resolution and continue my services for the benefit of the nation.

Now, the hon. Prime Minister went around so many corners in his swift retirement from his previous position that I was not able to keep my eyes upon him, and consequently I cannot follow him in all the turnings he made. The argument which he so ably delivered to-night I am sure could have been delivered a year ago with equally good reason. If the argument put forward to-night is good, it was good a year ago. I believe this is another evidence of the influence of the party system. Either the Opposition to the late administration were wrong in supporting that resolution, or they are wrong now in refusing to support it. In the one instance the Prime Minister was in opposition; now he is in power. Did the Prime Minister vote for a more drastic bill last year to give assurance to the electorate, as he put it, or did he vote for it to discredit the government then in power? Which was the reason then, and what is the reason now? Personally I regret very much that he feels it to be his duty on this occasion to back away from that position, for I do not think it will be taken as a high example by the young men of this Parliament that our Prime Minister so suddenly has forgotten the argument of his party and his own vote and stultified himself on this occasion. I do not think anyone who reads the argument in Hansard—if anyone ever troubles to do so—will feel that he has justified his action satisfactorily, if he was right last year, and I want to say again that I regret very much that he has seen fit to take this action on the present occasion.

The Prime Minister also referred to the practice in Great Britain. I should like to find out if there has been a single case in the last forty years where a member of the British Government has found it necessary to resign from the directorate of any company. If that is not so, what is the reason? Is it not that the members of the British House of Commons do not expect to be called to office if they hold directorships?

The hon. gentleman also made much of the defeat of Swift MacNeil's resolutions in the British House of Commons. Does he not know that they were voted down by Tory majorities? And is that the standard the Prime Minister of a Liberal Government sets up in the twentieth century? I hope it is not. Perhaps he overlooked that.

Then the leader of the Opposition of course comes along to make political capital out of this; and I think perhaps we were as tired of his argument as we were of the argument of the Prime Minister on this question. There is really no credit coming to the leader of a Tory party for not having moved,—because he cannot move. Everyone knows that that is an impossibility, for if he were moving he would not be a Tory, he would have to be something else. He is this year where he was last year; he will be there next year and all the years that are to come. And when he places himself right straight in the middle of the road of progress, we all know there is no necessity to make a long speech about it.

Next the hon. the Minister of Militia (Mr. Graham) comes along, and he is very anxious to forget all about last year. No one blames him for that of course; that is quite human; I think I would want to forget it also. He told us that the argument of the hon. member for Brome unforunately came from the upper regions. Are we to understand that the answers to his argument come from the lower regions? I can see no other conclusion—and really, they sounded like it.

Then came the member for St. John and Albert (Mr. Baxter) swimming an uncharted sea without destiny or direction; and he begins by presuming to give the full interpretation of the resolutions that are passed in this House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman permit me?—he is apparently through with me: does he consider that consistency in public life is a political vice?

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any vice that is more vice-y than consistency that is blind consistency.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Blind what?

Mr. IRVINE: Blind consistency. I was dealing with the statement of the hon. member for St. John, and I say he presumes to give the interpretation of the resolutions and bills that pass in this House. He even presumes to tell the Progressives what they voted for. I believe that the Progressives are quite capable of coming to their own conclusions upon resolutions, without any advice whatsoever from the hon. member for St. John. Now, as it happens, I did not agree with that vote that he referred to, but I think perhaps the Progressives were led into a trap. But if trap there was, it was laid by the party of which the hon. member himself is a member. If some of us were trapped by a Tory trick, it is not anything to boast about; we might as well forget it, and it would be well for the hon. member, I think, if he forgot it also. He went on to say that if we voted for a sham we would get it. Well, we know that, too. We have just had an excellent sham and I presume some did vote for it.

The resolution of the hon. member for Brome still stands, impregnable; his arguments have not been touched. Hon. members who have spoken in opposition to it have brought up various arguments from their point of view, but I think that it will be agreed that those who wade through Hansard to-morrow will find the argument of the hon. member for Brome unanswered; it stands tier upon tier just as he built it up. We are called upon, then, to vote on the question whether we shall give the representatives of the Crown an opportunity of devoting all their time on a patriotic basis to the service of this country, or whether we shall hamper them or let them be hampered by other influences and their directorates and their companies. That is the issue, and I believe the people of Canada expect us to vote for this resolution.

Mr. H. A. FORTIER (Labelle) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I want to state first that I am opposed to the resolution of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) and I wish to give this House my reasons for this opposition. This resolution, I believe, implies a departure from constitutional usage, and any legislation which might be adopted following this resolution would result in depriving the Cabinet of the services of a distinguished citizen, whom the people of his province and county entrusted with their confidence and, who is absolutely needed under the present circumstances for the good administration of Canada.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if this resolution were adopted, that person, who enjoys the confidence of his fellow-countrymen would have no other alternative but to choose between the directorates conferred upon him by important companies and the distinction of being a minister of the Crown. Given such a case, the man who possesses the confidence of every one, would likely choose the directorates; and this is why it would be deplorable for our country to behold men so highly necessary and endowed with such intellectual powers, cast aside; it would be a misfortune indeed, if such men were denied all participation in the administration of public affairs. It would be detrimental to our country, and this is the reason why I shall not support this motion. I am convinced that the resolution of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) is uncalled for and in support of my contention, I may say this. In the first place the country needs the services of able and intelligent men for the good administration of the country's business. The world over, able statesmen are scarce and when we do happen to possess such men, they should be called upon to take an active part in public affairs. In most cases, however, they have already been designated by their fellow-countrymen to fill the important directorship of these large financial companies. This entirely shows their remarkable aptitude and skill and it is incumbent on the country to entrust to them the management of public affairs. If this resolution were adopted, Mr. Speaker, we would be deprived of the benefit of having amongst our administrators men of experience and ability.

Secondly, in any constitutional government, there is a sacred duty which imposes itself upon a Prime Minister, the one of personally choosing his colleagues. But by this legislation you prevent the Prime Minister from calling upon those who are on these important directorships and who are highly qualified; you circumscribe his freedom of choice which it is most important should remain unimpaired, and you tell him: when you are selecting your Cabinet, you shall not be allowed to single out men who are directors of large companies; you shall have to ignore them; you shall have to choose men in whom you have not an absolute confidence, men who have not given proof of integrity and long experience.

My last argument is this: the purport of the resolution is to cast odium on the public man of the day. How? Because this man has private or personal duties to fulfil, you believe he is not broad-minded enough, when his country requests his services as minister of the Crown, to so engross the time in a disinterested manner; because this man has a pecuniary interest in a company, you throw open to doubt his love for his country. I repeat it, I believe this resolution is based on a false principle. I had no intention to take part in this discussion, but I changed my mind after listening to all the arguments which were brought out during this debate, especially to those put forward by the opposition and to those brought out by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Baxter). He stated that, not being a member of this House last year, he takes his cue in supporting the resolution, from the attitude then taken by his leader. For my part, I do not believe that we are inconsistent with our past in voting down the resolution of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), and this is why I deemed it my duty to make known to this House the reasons that have induced me to take such a stand.

Mr. J. L. STANSELL (East Elgin): My only justification for speaking on this resolution at this late hour is its importance and the dearth of argument that has been submitted in its favour. To me this has been an evening of astonishment, not the least part of which was the statement a few moments ago by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Johnston) who, turning to this corner of the House, said that if his party ever got into difficulty they would not come to us for help, because we did not change. That statement was made in spite of the fact that only a few members in this corner of the House had spoken on this subject. He followed that up by saying in his next breath that men may come and men may go, but he and the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) were going on forever. They never changed. I submit that if the hon. member has no more faith in our party and its desire to help forward anything that we believe to be in the interests of this country than he has in his own consistency, I do not blame him very much.

I believe this is a particularly important question to those of us who are in Parliament for the first time. Speaking for myself, I am not inclined to form a hasty opinion upon a subject of this kind. I looked for instruction, for inspiration, if you like, from those who were friendly to the measure. My only source of information has been the record of the debates of last session, which show that fifty-four members of the House were strongly in favour of this measure and voted for it a year ago. Strangely enough they are nearly all in one group to-night and prominent among them is the Prime Minister himself and many of his Cabinet. I had expected that the right hon. leader of the Government would give us some information in support of this measure which he advocated a year ago and let me point out that there is no argument against this resolution that was not just as applicable twelve months ago. As the right hon. leader of the Government has said he did not speak at any great length on this question a year ago. May I be permitted to quote a few sentences from one who is held in very high esteem not only by the Prime Minister himself and his party but by all parties and members of this House? The Prime Minister himself in his eulogy on appointing this hon. member to the position of First Commoner, spoke of his exceptional ability, his great endowments and his distinguished public service. In view of the well known modesty of the hon. gentleman who holds that high position I shall not refer to him more personally, but I am sure he will pardon me if I quote just a few sentences of his remarks in the debate on this question of last year, and which I am sure the Prime Minister himself applauded and concurred in. On page 592 of volume I of last year's Hansard I find this:

> I say is not the honour of being a minister of the Crown, the honour of being sworn in as a Privy Councillor, a reward by itself? In my humble judgment, no man should hesitate, when accepting that honour, to put aside his private interests . . . I say that it is in the interests of the ministers of the Crown, and of good government and of the good reputation of Parliament that public opinion should be satisfied that there are no conflicting interests between ministers as such and any directors of private concerns. . . . It strikes me, after having heard my hon. friend and the objections that were made by some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side—mild objections I must say—that this is a needed reform and one which is consistent with British traditions.

Surely in view of such a careful and well-worded pronouncement on this important subject, we could not look for anything but support of this resolution upon the part of those who were friendly to the measure last year. Among those to whom I particularly looked for guidance is the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), the Solicitor General. I particularly looked to him because I had the pleasure of hearing him a few nights ago, when I was very much pleased with his eloquence and ability. Moreover, his apt quotations from Scripture show that he is at least in touch with a very high authority. So much was I impressed with his eloquence that I was not surprised, on looking up last year's debate to find that he used the words "Wash us and we shall be whiter than snow." I presume that in the meantime he has not forgotten the tune. That may not be necessary now; as it would have to be changed anyway to wash us over again, because to my surprise I find that some who advocated this measure a year ago have fallen from grace, not the least being the Prime Minister himself. I had expected that the hon. member for North Cape Breton would use his missionary powers and great ability in endeavouring to convince those of us who are new members, and are in a sense sitting in darkness, not to mention some of the older members who perhaps have exhibited somewhat sceptical tendencies. I seem, however, to be doomed to disappointment because evidently his time and abilities will be taken up in persuading the leader on his own side of the House. My hon. friend is very apt in quoting Scripture, so no doubt he remembers the parable of the ninety-nine sheep that were safe in the fold but one was wandering on the mountainside, and it is well-known what anxiety that caused. What, then, can we say on this occasion, when although there are ninety-nine safe in the fold, one is lost in the wilderness, and that is the bell-wether, the leader of the flock. Surely, if missionary work is necessary, it is necessary on that side of the House, and we on this side of the House will probably be denied the privilege of that much-needed persuasive power.

I might also have looked for enlightenment to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe), who last year supported this measure. We all know his undoubted ability and eloquence although he has not been particularly generous to the House in that respect this session. I had hopes that he had been reserving his powers in order to try and get this resolution carried by a large majority. Perhaps it is not too late yet for the hon. member for North Cape Breton to secure assistance from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in endeavouring to convince those of us who need information and are in a sense still wandering in darkness.

Speaking seriously, there are something like one hundred and thirty new members in this House, who are anxiously looking to those who have been here and understand the needs of the country, and are in a position to give direction and guidance to those of us who are learning. Are we to be told by the fifty-four members who voted in favour of this measure last year, that the facts and arguments they made in support of it then are not now to be taken seriously? Surely any arguments that could be made in support of the measure last year are equally applicable to-day. Surely now, when the sun of democracy is shining and responsible government has again been restored, we may look for stronger and better guidance in the future.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): I did not intend to speak upon this debate, but after what has been said on the subject I would like to say a few words. This is private members' day, but I think it should be called Brome day. The speech of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) should be enough to let the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) know that his friends have all forsaken him and fled.

The principle embodied in this resolution is an academic one. I do not know what object the hon. gentleman has in introducing the motion. He cannot accomplish anything by it because if it is carried it will not have any effect and will merely be a scrap of paper. The privilege which has been attacked by the resolution has not been abused by the late government nor by the present Government, and I think the present Government should be given a fair show. There are only one or two members of the Government holding directorships. I think the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) was one of the best provincial premiers the province of Quebec ever had. I am sorry he is not here to-day. Judging from what he has done for the municipalities he has accomplished more than any previous premier ever did. He has erected court houses, registry offices and other public buildings for the municipalities in his province. He has done more for the municipalities of the province of Quebec in this connection than has been done in any province of the Dominion.

If there was ever a time in the history of this country, both in Dominion and provincial affairs when the country wanted business men, it is the present. In my province of Ontario we have a government without a single business man in it. Look at the loans they have made and the financial statement in the budget brought down in the Ontario legislature. They say they have a surplus, but nearly a million of maintenance charges has been put into capital. That is the way they run the province. The privilege dealt with in this resolution has not been abused by the present Government. One or two of the ministers hold some directorships but the passing of this resolution will not mean anything to them. They will not lose any directorships by it.

I may say to my hon. friend from Brome, and my friends, the Progressives, that if they went a little farther up than the mere directorships it would be better for the country and the proposition would commend itself to the judgment of the country. Let them take up the question of the banks and their business methods. Let them deal with the question of the Merchant's Bank which had a president who did not preside, directors who did not direct, managers who did not manage and auditors who did not audit. If that matter were investigated something might be accomplished for the country in that direction.

This motion would not prevent shareholders in these large concerns from becoming members of Parliament or Cabinet ministers and probably a large shareholder would be far more injurious to the company if he were in the Cabinet than a director could. The motion does not refer to corporation lawyers and legal counsel. Can they too be retained in the Cabinet to the exclusion of those who are directors? This principle has been discussed in England and it has not been adopted there. They leave the matter to the honour of the ministers. I think we have a very honourable body of ministers here. The Prime Minister must be a responsible officer and has very responsible duties to perform. The ministers work in the mornings, afternoons and evenings. I do not know what time they get to attend to their own affairs or the affairs of any company with which they might be connected. I do not think that the privilege I have referred to has been abused. The principle of the motion may be all right in some respects, but there is no demand for it in the country or in the House, and I do not understand why the time of the House should be taken up with it. The Minister of Justice has given up directorships in La Presse, in The Cockshutt Plow Co. of Brantford, a six million dollar concern, and one or two others, I think. I believe we might leave this matter to the ethics and to the honour of the gentlemen of the Cabinet. There is no demand and no necessity for the resolution and I do not see how any good can come of it. I hope the House will not take up any more time and I ask that the vote will be taken.

Mr. JOSEPH T. SHAW (West Calgary): I think, with all due deference to the member for North Toronto, (Mr. Church) who has just preceded me, that this matter is one of vital importance to the people of this country. I am not concerned as to whether or not the attitude of the Prime Minister is due to what I might term conscientious inconsistency, or perhaps due to party exigency, nor yet am I concerned with the problem of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) as to whether he is standing to-day where he stood yesterday, and where he proposes to stand in the future. It seems to me the hon. gentleman from Brome (Mr. McMaster) has presented to this House a very important and very essential principle, and that, in the discussion which has taken place, and the desire to make party capital out of this situation, we have ignored the question at issue.

The first thing I should like to direct attention to is the fact that the resolution, as compared with last year's resolution, is very much narrower and is confined to what I might call public service corporations, using the term as used by the good people to the south of us. These corporations are the ones which must, of necessity, come frequently to this Parliament, and must very frequently make applications which are passed upon, approved, or disapproved by this Parliament. For instance, the railway companies are under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. The cabinet, the executive of this House, sits in appeal from that Railway Commission from time to time, or may do so. Then take the situation with regard to banks; these institutions are, as one writer has stated, the manufacturers of credit on other peoples' money; they must, at regular intervals, make reports to the Finance Minister, and those reports are subject to inspection by this parliament from time to time. Not only that, but I believe it is the practice every ten years to revise the Bank Act under which they operate. Then again, we have insurance companies, which also are peculiarly under the jurisdiction of Parliament. That, to my mind, is the distinguishing characteristic between the corporations mentioned in the resolution and the private corporations which were included in the resolution of the hon. gentleman from Brome introduced last year. These, as I say, are public service corporations. They are corporations which are performing public functions, and, in that sense, they are perhaps performing a duty of government.

What is the position of a director in one of those companies? He stands, of course, as a trustee for the shareholders. It is his duty to advise on matters of policy, to direct the government and to preserve and to enlarge, if need be, the assets of his company. On the other hand, what is the position of a minister before this House? And I, from my standpoint, see absolutely no distinction between the position of the first minister of the Crown and that of any other Cabinet minister. He is here simply as a trustee, entrusted, perhaps, for a short time or, perhaps, for a longer period with responsibility from his constituents and from this House. He is the trustee of the people and the executive trustee of this Parliament. Under those circumstances, if a man occupies a dual capacity, as a director in a public service corporation and, at the same time, as one of the executive of this House, with the necessity, as I suggested at the outset, for supervision or inspection of his company at various times and in various ways, is it not possible that, at some time or upon some occasion, his interest as director may conflict with his duty as trustee of this House? That, I take it is in short, the neat point for discussion now, and the question is not one of whether somebody took a position six or twelve months ago inconsistent with the position now assumed. That is a matter of special significance, perhaps, at a time like this when institutions, including even this institution in common with all other governmental institutions, are being questioned and analyzed as never before by the people at large. It is absolutely essential that the independence of Parliament should be preserved; that there should not be even the slightest breath of suspicion regarding the conduct of any minister of the Crown in connection with his relation to any private or public corporation.

It is the plain duty and responsibility of this House to see that no one shall be put into such a position of difficulty by having to act in a dual capacity, and if he is, by circumstances, put into that position, then he should resign the directorship or his position as a minister of the Crown. Not only is this in the interest of Parliament itself; but, to my mind, it is equally in the interest of the corporations affected. These corporations have, perhaps, secured much money on the strength of the particular members mentioned as directors. Men of every class and walk in life are, perhaps, expecting, and reasonably so, that these particular individuals as directors will give all their time, energy, and talent to the care of their corporations. Not only are their interests involved; but the interests, perhaps, of hundreds of other people are likewise involved. Therefore, it occurs to me that, while it is a proper thing for a minister upon his appointment to resign his directorships, I think we should have on the statute books of Canada legislation affirming this resolution, so that no one can be put into that dual position. We should divorce private interest from public duty, by a statutory prohibition of this Parliament. I shall, therefore, have much pleasure in supporting the motion of the hon. member for Brome.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, may I direct attention to just one point, to which, I think, attention has not yet been called, and that is the absolute necessity that there should exist in this country some body that will protect the people from the arbitrary power of these great corporations? Within the past few years, as we all recognize, there has been a shifting of power from the political to the industrial field. In the olden days, when industry was a small affair, the employer had comparatively little power. To-day, when industry is on such a large scale, the employer has power such as those in political power know nothing whatever about. We sometimes have talked of captains of industry, of princes of finance, of money kings. These terms are significant of a real state of affairs, because, in many respects, the men, who are at the head of our big industrial, commercial and financial affairs, have more real authority than those who occupy prominent positions in the political life of the country. It has been stated that whoever controls a man's job—I am speaking as a Labour man—controls his life. That is true; whoever controls a man's job, controls his very livelihood, and if he has no one who can stand between him and arbitrary power, his case is perfectly hopeless. Within the last few years we have witnessed a great concentration of capital in this country, so that to-day the big financial institutions determine whether or not there shall be production; they determine in what branch of industry there shall be production, and upon what terms that production shall be carried on. That being the case, it seems to me that it is absolutely essential that, in some way, there should be an impartial authority absolutely dissociated from those big interests, which can protect the people of Canada from the arbitrary power which those industries have gradually attained.

The hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) referred to a chart which had been prepared and which showed the interlocking directorates to which he made reference. He gave no names of directors, giving only the numbers, doing this in order that no personalities might enter into the discussion.

Mr. McMASTER: Was that not a wise thing?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It may have been a wise thing. I can quite understand the position of the hon. member for Brome.

As, however, the discussion has gone on, reference has been made to the one member of the cabinet who is included in the list given by the hon. member for Brome. Some days ago I was furnished, not by the hon. member for Brome, but by a friend who had evidently been working on the same proposition, with a graph of this character, based, I believe, upon the Canadian Annual Financial Review of June, 1921. It seems to me that a graph of this kind ought to be placed definitely before the people of Canada, and they would then have no doubt as to the absolute necessity of this body making some provision for preventing power being placed in the hands of a few men such as we have here. As the hon. member for Brome was reading the list, I was checking this particular graph with his, and I think it is the same graph as it represents the same figures, the total capital controlled being something like $4,295,000,000. The names of the fifteen men who each have directorship in from two to eight of these big companies or corporations are as follows: 1, Sir Augustus Nanton; 2, Sir John Aird; 3, Sir Edmund Osler; 4, Lt.-Governor Cockshutt; 5, E. W. Beatty; 6, Sir Vincent Meredith; 7, Baron Shaughnessy; 8, Sir Lomer Gouin; 9, Sir Herbert Holt; 10, Sir Charles Gordon; 11, C. R. Hosmer; 12, Hon. R. Dandurand; 13, J. E. Aldred; 14, C. E. Neill; 15, E. L. Pease.

It seems to me there is no particular reason, if these men are occupying the most honoured positions in the country, why their names should not be generally known to the public, in order that their position in society should be recognized. I quite realize the fact that they have attained this position because of considerable business ability and all that kind of thing. It is not a matter of impugning their personal integrity in any sense whatever, but it is a question as to how the public itself can in some way control the great power which has gradually been concentrated in the hands of a comparatively small group of men. The resolution of the member for Brome would look to the separation of the Cabinet, on the one hand, from the power which is exercised by great corporations on the other. That may be a temporary measure; but it is in the right direction. The public generally is not going to be satisfied until, in some way, not only do we insist that Parliament shall not be directly controlled by these great corporations, but that, on the other hand, in some way, right within the corporations themselves, there shall be introduced a very large measure of democracy. Political democracy was the watchword of the last generation, and we are all glad to think that we have attained a certain measure of political democracy. But political democracy is an absolutely hollow thing unless we have industrial democracy as well. This resolution which has been presented to day is simply the first step in controlling these great aggregations of capital which have placed almost unlimited power in the hands of small groups. For that reason I believe I am expressing the opinion of a large group of at least the labour and middle class people in this country when I urge that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. McMASTER: I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I will not be long in my closing remarks, but there are just a few things which I think, in justice to myself, and I hope, in the interest of the country, I should say. I will deal with the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). In his eloquent observations he made the statement that I had wrongly interpreted the practice in Great Britain, and that in 1896 a committee of the House of Commons had sat for the purpose of considering the question whether it would be wise to more stringently draw the rules of the House of that great Parliament along the lines of, although not quite precisely in accordance with, my resolution of to-night. It is quite true that it was decided not to change the rules of that House, but that decision was arrived at by a vote of six to five. The five that voted for the purpose of amending the rules, more in the spirit of the resolution I have before the House to-night, were, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. Courtney, Mr. Haldane, Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. MacNeill, while those who were opposed to any change were Mr. Bonsor, Sir W. Hart-Dyke, Mr. Halsey, Mr. Grant Lawson, the Solicitor General and Mr. Woodhouse. Now, I respectfully suggest that the five who voted in support of the principle I now advocate are well worth the six on the other side.

The Prime Minister stated that I had no ground for believing that anything untoward had happened in connection with his administration, and I would assure you, Mr. Speaker, I would assure him, I would assure this House, and I would assure this country, that I never suggested for one moment that there was anything untoward in any action of this Government. In bringing this matter before the House, what have I done? I have simply done what I did last year with the enthusiastic co-operation of the Prime Minister himself. Not only in the debate which has been referred to, as to the advisability of directors in large companies being ministers of the Crown at the same time, but in another debate, was the attitude of the party plainly set forth. There was that debate provoked by me in connection with the railway estimates, in a speech which I made showing the inadvisability of members of the board of directors of the National Railways being also members of the board of directors of any company who might sell things to the railway. It was not precisely the same case, but it was precisely the same principle; for what is the principle? Without imputing wrongdoing to any one, I say that the principle is that a man should not be put in a position where either his personal interest or his fiduciary interest can conflict with any other fiduciary interest. That position was assumed by me on that occasion. I made a speech then late in the evening, and the Prime Minister did me the great compliment of placing largely the same facts before the House in his own budget speech. He did me the further compliment of placing those facts before the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The principles are not the same. The case of members of the board of directors of the railways purchasing for the railways from companies on the boards of which they are also directors, is not parallel to the principle now under consideration. If similar action were attempted by a minister of the Crown he would be disqualified in five minutes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the Bank of Montreal not dealing with the Government now every day?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not at all in that direct way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and to the extent of millions.

Mr. McMASTER: If I might interject myself into the debate, if I remember the circumstances correctly, and I think I do, it was not charged by me or by the Prime Minister that directors of the national railways who were directors in other companies had been selling. The point I made was that they belonged to companies which might sell, and therefore it was improper for them to be also directors in the national railways, who might buy from the companies in which they were concerned. There was a possibility of a conflicting fiduciary interest. Now, let us take the question of banks. I do so frankly, and I would point out to the House that I was careful in my introductory remarks to avoid any personality at all. It is a principle that I am advocating, and I try to keep away from personalities altogether. Let us put the case in a suppositious way. Suppose there were a minister of the Crown who was a director in a bank. Suppose that bank were doing work for the government. Do not even suppose that; suppose the bank were only doing what banks are obliged to do every month, sending in returns to the government. Suppose my right hon. friend were in power; what position would he take in regard to his Minister of Marine and Fisheries, say, when it was found that the bank of which he was a director had to be charged with having sent in false returns to the government. What position would my right hon. friend be in, and what position would his Minister of Marine and Fisheries be in if such a situation existed? I do not need to stress the point, Mr. Speaker. The thing is so patent that it is inadvisable to have ministers of the Crown directors also of banks.

Now, I spoke about interlocking directorates. The Prime Minister said: Well, interlocking directorates should be treated as such. I ask: By whom? By this Parliament, which may contain certain members in the Cabinet who are also members of these companies whose directorates interlock? It seems to me that whatever our opinion may be about the advisability or inadvisability of interlocking directorates, we should see to it that the interlocking does not pass into the Cabinet chamber. That is the position I am putting before the House to-night; I think it is reasonable.

It is true the Prime Minister seems to think that there is plenty of protection in the Senate and House of Commons Act, extracts from which he quoted. Now, if there was not an exception—which he did not read—permitting a company of which a member is a shareholder, dealing with the Government, what he said would, I think, be quite accurate and the necessity for this resolution would to a certain extent disappear. But it seems to me that whether a man is a director or merely a shareholder in the company, the fact that he is such does not prevent the company from dealing with the Government. I think that is a correct interpretation of the law.

Shareholders need not give up their shares; that is quite true. I am sorry that I seem to find myself in the unfortunate position of not being able to please anyone. Last year my right hon. friend situated angularly opposite said that my resolution went too far, and now my critic seems to think that my motion does not go far enough.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend is looking in my direction. I did not say that. I took objection to it on principle as not meeting the case at all.

Mr. McMASTER: I stand corrected then. But last year I remember my right hon. friend saying: Why, you are trying to imply that a minister should not even have the interest that his family gives him. And I recollect saying, with the former Minister of Trade and Commerce, Sir George Foster, in front of me, that it would be impossible to impose celibacy on his government. Shareholders need not give up their shares; that is quite true. I am not going on the assumption that there is something wrong. If there are dishonest men in public life, they will be dishonest no matter what legislation is passed; but what I do say is that we should try to prevent a possible conflict of fiduciary interest. The Prime Minister has said that leaders of political parties should not accept directorships. I agree with him. But I do not agree with him if he sets a higher standard for himself than for members of his government, because my view is that all the members of the Government, especially in view of our constitutional principle of solidarity, stand more or less on the same footing—that the Prime Minister is merely primus inter pares.

My hon. friend stated that my resolution would deprive him of the ability of leading business men. Now, that is exactly contrary to what I wish by my resolution. If first class business men go into the Cabinet, I wish them to be absolutely "off with the old love before they are on with the new" —I wish them to be in a position to devote their whole time and attention to the affairs of the Government. I am of opinion that men of ability, no matter how rich they are, will be glad to do this if they have the proper spirit which we wish to see manifested in our public men.

The Prime Minister implied that in bringing forward this resolution I had given way to a sentiment of juvenile audacity; that I should leave such questions for older and wiser heads.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I was speaking entirely about myself.

Mr. McMASTER: That just shows how one may misunderstand even one's friends. I must no longer detain the House. I have merely one argument to make, and that is in reply to something said by the right hon. leader of the official Opposition. He said: Under this resolution proposed by the member for Brome you might have in the Cabinet men representing the British Empire Steel Corporation and the Dominion Textile Company; that there is nothing to prevent great industrial corporations having their directors in the Cabinet; and the member for Brome says that that is all right. Of course, my right hon. friend sometimes exaggerates. I never said that that is all right. I grant that that abuse is not specifically covered by this resolution. I grant the difficulty of keeping out certain companies and saying that the directors of those companies should not be in the Cabinet. What I have done is to pick out those classes of companies the directors of which have a particular fiduciary relation to their shareholders; thus the banks look after the money of the people, the trust companies look after the estates of the people. The companies I have picked out are large companies, companies which are very powerful and whose operations affect the whole people. It is possible that my resolution does not go far enough, but I say it is a step in the right direction and I trust it will meet with the approval of this House.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. McMaster), which was negatived on the following division:

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW CANADIAN LOAN

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King for the adjournment of the House:

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Before the House adjourns, may I be permitted to announce a very important financial transaction which has just been closed. The Government have sold $100,000,000 of Canadian bonds to Messrs. J. P. Morgan and Company of New York. The bonds will be placed on the market to-morrow at par, bearing interest at five per cent, for a thirty-year period, callable after twenty years. The Government, of course have to pay commission to the banks, but the bonds will be offered to the public to-morrow in New York.

Mr. MEIGHEN: May I ask the Prime Minister what will be the business to-morrow, aside from rejoicing over further debt?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will take up estimates of the Department of Railways as they affect civil government. Then we will go on with Militia and Defence, and, if we finish those, with Indian Affairs.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In the Railway Department, only civil government?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.08 a.m., Tuesday.

Tuesday, April 25, 1922

The House met at three o'clock.

DEBATES COMMITTEE

Mr. GEO. H. BOIVIN (Shefford) presented the first report of the Select Standing Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of Debates, as follows:

TUESDAY, 25th April, 1922.

The Select Standing Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates beg leave to present the following as their First Report:

Your Committee have had under consideration certain matters relating to the publication in the Official Report of the Debates, of answers to questions which must necessarily take the form of long and elaborate tabulated statements covering matter not read in the House and not always of immediate and general public interest.

Your Committee considers:—

1. That the publication of the said answers greatly increases and complicates the work of the Printing Bureau, augments the chance of error and endangers the prompt issue of the Official Report of the Debates;

2. That the printing of the said answers greatly increases the expense of the publication of the said Official Report;

3. That the rights and interests of the members of this House and of the general public would be thoroughly safeguarded by the passing of such questions as Orders for Returns, leaving to the Joint Committee on Printing the responsibility of deciding which of the said returns are of sufficient public interest to warrant printing and publication;

4. That the said returns are always available to members in the office of the Clerk of Sessional Papers;

Your Committee recommend that in future any question placed upon the Order Paper, the answer to which must take the form of long and elaborate tables or tabulated forms, shall at the request of the Minister laying the answer upon the table of the House, be passed as an order for a return as provided by section 4 of Rule 37 of the Rules of the House of Commons.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

GEO. H. BOIVIN,
Chairman.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. J. A. C. ETHIER (Laval-Two Mountains) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 56, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. ETHIER: The purpose of this bill is to designate the court before which the petition shall be presented. Paragraph 4 of section 4 of the Bankruptcy Act is amended by strikng out the word "locality" and substituting therefore the words "judicial district", in order to avoid costs to creditors. I will make a fuller explanation on the second reading.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

CURRENCY ACT AMENDMENT

On the motion of Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance), it was resolved that the House do go into Committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Schedule to The Currency Act, 1910, as amended by chapter nine of the statutes of 1920, by changing the millesimal fineness of silver coins from 4 to 6, and by providing that this enactment shall apply to silver coins heretofore struck since the first day of January, 1920, and also to amend the said Schedule, as amended by chapter six of the statutes of 1921, by striking out the millesimal fineness of nickel five cent coins.

PENNY BANK ACT

On the motion of Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance), it was resolved that the House do go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Penny Bank Act, chapter thirty-one of the Revised Statutes of Canada, by providing that a proportion not exceeding one-half of such moneys as are received on deposit elsewhere than at the place where the chief office of the bank is situated may be deposited by the bank in such chartered banks or other financial institutions as the Minister of Finance may designate as depositaries, and to provide for withdrawals from such depositaries.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. THOMAS SALES (Saltcoats): I should like to draw the attention of the Government to this despatch which appears in this morning's Citizen, under date of Winnipeg, April 24:

The Manitoba court of appeal to-day delivered judgment in the stated case of The King versus the Manitoba Grain Company, declaring section 215 of the Canada Grain Act ultra vires of the federal parliament. This section of the act stated that "no person shall engage in the business of selling grain on commission or receive or solicit consignments of grain for sale on commission, in the western inspection division, without first obtaining such annual license from the board.

The appeal arose from a conviction registered in the provincial police court last year, when Magistrate R. M. Noble fined the Manitoba Grain Company $500 for selling grain without a license. The case has aroused considerable interest owing to the fact that the validity of the Canada Grain Act was attacked by counsel for the defendant company. At the time of the conviction Magistrate Noble granted a stated case.

In this connection I should like to ask the Government what action it intends to take in this matter in order that producers of grain may be protected from the many mushroom grain companies which will inevitably spring up now that sections of the Canada Grain Act are held to be ultra vires.

Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice): I have looked over the record and I find that two cases were instituted in the Manitoba Court of Appeal in connection with the very same affair. One was laid on 21st October, 1921, and the other on 31st December, 1921. I am informed by my officials that there were two stated cases. As we did not know exactly in what case judgment was rendered, we wired this morning asking for copies of the judgment rendered yesterday, and as soon as we are in possession of that judgment, we shall be in a position to inform the hon. member on the subject.

NEW CANADIAN LOAN

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like, with the permission of the House, to make an announcement which, I am sure will be received with pleasure on all sides of the House. Late last night, or to be more accurate, this morning before the House adjourned, I stated that the Government had sold $100,000,000 of Canadian bonds in New York, and that they would be placed on the market to-day. I have pleasure in announcing that the books were opened in New York this morning; that the loan is a complete success; that it has been over subscribed, and that the books are closed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): I notice that in the announcement of the Minister of Finance yesterday, it was stated that certain commissions were to be taken off. What were they?

Mr. FIELDING: The Government received a net price of 97½. The bankers were free to place the loan on the market at any price not exceeding par. They placed it at par and that leaves the bankers and brokers concerned 2½ per cent for their services.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That would be $2,500,000 on the issue?

Mr. FIELDING: If my hon. friend's calculation is correct, that is right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No doubt my hon. friend knows whether I am right or not; I make it $2,500,000. Now, in view of the very immediate success of this loan, properly mirroring, as it does, the extreme high standing of this country and the large amount of idle money at present locked up in New York, is my hon. friend quite sure that he has not made this loan altogether too generous in favour of the American investor?

Mr. FIELDING: I shall be glad to discuss that question at a later stage, and particularly to place it in comparison with the commissions allowed on some loans placed by my hon. friend.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think there is a novel provision in connection with this issue, under which any unfortunate subscriber who desires to live in Canada in the future is to be taxed, while the subscriber who stays in the United States is not to be taxed. I suppose this has nothing to do with any immigration policy that the Government contemplates.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friends opposite sometimes accuse us of following their example. It is a rather bad thing to do, because their example is not always a good one. In this case, however, the provision in that bond with respect to taxation is copied from an issue made by my hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But the issue made by us was in Canada.

Mr. FIELDING: I am referring to an issue made in the United States. However, if we are to talk seriously on this question, we cannot tax an American citizen in the United States; but if this bond at any time is held by a citizen in Canada, subject to the laws of Canada, it must pay the tax.

SUPPLY

The House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the Chair:

Railways and Canals—salaries, $191,970; contingencies, $29,500.

Hon. W. C. KENNEDY (Essex, Minister of Railways and Canals): There is very little, if any, change as compared with last year. The vote is less and the number of employees fewer than was the case last year; but I may say, in justice to my predecessor, that this reduction was made before I took charge in January last. During the time I have been in office there have been no new appointments. There are two vacancies, one caused by death and the other by resignation. The increases in vote are statutory, and the change in the designation of certain employees is the result of the reclassification. When I took charge I told the deputy minister that I was anxious that we should have efficiency, first of all, but with that efficiency we should economize as far as possible. I believe that these estimates have been prepared with that end in view. As we proceed I shall be glad to give any explanations that may be required.

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): There are four increases in salaries to the higher-paid officials of this department, three increases of $180 each and one of $300. As the minister says, these are statutory increases, but I desire to make an observation with reference to the salaries of the higher-paid officials. In the consideration of civil government estimates for some of the other departments, the opinion was expressed, from both groups on this side of the House, that, having regard to the general tendency towards deflation, the salaries of the higher-paid officials might very well be left on the basis of 1921. In connection with this department, in regard to which I have some little knowledge, I think that if the higher-paid officials had directed their unquestioned talents to private and corporate interests with the same devotion as they have applied themselves to the public service, they would be in receipt of very much larger salaries than are provided in these estimates. I entirely support the vote under consideration.

I have no intention of precipitating any general discussion on the railway situation under this vote, as I understand it to be the custom, under the civil government vote, to confine the discussion exclusively to matters of civil government, the general policy with regard to the railways being discussed on the general estimates. But I want to ask the minister a question which, I think, is pertinent, even at this time. The Toronto Globe has been for so long a time intimately associated with the Liberal party and its policies that, in Ontario at least, an editorial statement by that journal is taken as carrying almost the same force as an expression of government policy when the Liberal party is in power. I wish to refer to the leading editorial in the Globe of yesterday. That editorial, dealing with the question of the National Railways, contains two statements:

> The Globe believes there are big enough men in the ranks of Canada's railway operators to carry the national system to success, and that Mr. Kennedy will discover and make use of their talents. Some of them will doubtless be found in the service of the Canadian National and the Grand Trunk; some may even be drawn from the Canadian Pacific.

Further on it says:

> In the end, perhaps, it may be found that there is room within the National System for the C.P.R. itself on terms that will be equitable alike to its shareholders and to the public.

The question I would ask the minister is, does the editorial in the Globe reflect the policy of the Government? Is the policy of the Government in accord with that editorial; or is that editorial intended as a feeler to test public opinion in reference to this important matter?

Mr. KENNEDY (Essex): Like everyone else in the province of Ontario who reads the Globe, I pay considerable attention to its editorials, and I had the pleasure of reading the editorials in question. My hon. friend, as a former minister of this department, knows that the minister is also receiving suggestions as to what he should do in railway matters. The Globe, I suppose, has, like many other papers, kindly made suggestions. Beyond that I do not know anything about the editorial. I would say that it reflects simply the ideas of the editor. As to its reflecting the policy of the Government, I have no doubt that the Government will lay down its own policy when the right time comes.

Mr. HANSON: The right-of-way agent is Mr. Fraser, I believe. Is he confining his duties to the old National railways, or is he right-of-way agent for the whole system?

Mr. KENNEDY (Essex): He is the departmental right-of-way agent and does work in the East that may be necessary for the department and for the railways also.

Mr. MacKELVIE: My excuse for asking the minister a question which would more naturally be considered under the main estimates is that it would relieve considerable anxiety on the part of a number of my constituents if I could have some assurance from him that the pronouncement he made when these estimates were last under discussion, that no new rails would be laid this year, is not, like the laws of Medes and Persians, entirely unchangeable. I have in mind, Sir, that road of which I have no doubt you have some knowledge—the branch line running from Kamloops to Kelowna through the Okanagan Valley. That road has been practically completed for two years so far as the grade is concerned, at an expenditure of five million dollars, involving, of course, a very heavy annual charge for interest, while the depreciation on the roadbed at a conservative estimate must amount to 20 per cent per annum. Good and ample justification could be given for the completion of that line this summer in order that it may be ready to handle this season's fruit and vegetable crops. This road would be second to no other branch line as a feeder for the National railways, and the minister will, I am sure, agree that our National railway system stands very much in need of additional business. The latest figures I have available are for 1919, when from three stations in that district, Armstrong, Vernon, and Kelowna, 320 full cars of fruit and vegetables were shipped and 165,000 odd packages of express; in addition there were shipments of live stock, hay and other products. One section of that line passes through the Salmon river district in which lies probably the most valuable gypsum deposits in the world; they are practically one hundred per cent pure.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Order. I would draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that this subject hardly comes under "Civil Government."

Mr. MacKELVIE: I was going to crave the indulgence of yourself, Mr. Chairman, and the minister, for the reason I gave at the outset. I am deluged with telegrams and resolutions from the local Boards of Trade asking for an immediate response, and if the minister could give some assurance to allay their anxiety I should be much obliged. He has a reputation, well earned I am sure, of being a thorough business man.. For business reasons alone the outlay necessary to complete this line could be amply justified.

Mr. KENNEDY (Essex): Like my hon. friend, I have had many representations in connection with this particular line. But may I say to him that his district is not alone in making representations for railway accommodation? From all parts of the West I have had similar representations of their transportation needs. The policy of the Government in respect to the laying of new lines this year is simply this: We felt that, the new board coming in, the responsibility for any capital expenditure should properly belong to that board, and that for the time being, until they have had an opportunity of ascertaining whether the expenditure would be warranted, we should not go on with any new work. However, we are impressed with the necessity of doing something in the district my hon. friend has mentioned, and I can promise him that when the new board is appointed every consideration will be given to the matter.

Item agreed to.

Militia and Defence—Allowances, Active Militia, $120,000.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry? Carried.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. I think some of us heard the word "carried" before we got to the page. This is rather too important an item to be carried without any discussion whatever, and we would like a statement from the minister in reference to it.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Militia and Defence): I hardly expected it to go through so rapidly as that.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: You are quite right.

Mr. GRAHAM: The militia estimates, I might say, have been pared down to a point as low as is compatible with national safety; in fact, I have been criticized quite severely for some of the reductions. I think it is well that Parliament should discuss this question. Our militia force was not a mushroom or accidental growth, it took a good many years of development before Canada became of sufficient importance and exercised autonomy to such a marked degree that she undertook her own militia defence. The matter was discussed in the Imperial Parliament on several occasions, and it is a well-known fact that not a few of the members of the British House of Commons and some members of the British cabinet opposed Canada being allowed—if I may put it in that form—to have control of her militia, because it was feared that it would tend to encourage the idea of too great independence and would weaken the tie that binds us to the Motherland. That fear, of course, has been dispelled, because the principle enunciated by Lord Grey as far back as 1851 has been fully borne out by our subsequent history, namely, that the greater the responsibility you place on what might be called the subordinate body, the stronger becomes its attachment to the head. So it has been with the Dominion, as year by year she has developed, greater responsibility has been placed upon her to manage her own affairs, and instead of the tie that binds us to the Motherland being weakened, that tie has been strengthened. The further we go along these lines, the greater freedom we have to manage our own affairs, the more devoted do we become to the Mother Country and the stronger do we grow as one of the great self-governing dominions of the British Empire. Now, if the House will permit me to show what I mean by these few remarks, I will read what Lord Grey, then Colonial Secretary, wrote to the Governor General of Canada in 1851, when this question was being discussed:

> Canada in common with the other British provinces in North America now possesses in the most ample and complete manner in which it is possible that she should enjoy it, the advantage of self-government in all that relates to her internal affairs. It appears to Her Majesty's Government that the advantage ought to carry with it corresponding responsibility and that the time has now come when the people of Canada must be called upon to take upon themselves a larger share than they have hitherto borne of the expenses which have incurred on their account and for their advantage. Of these expenses, by far the heaviest charge which falls upon this country is that incurred for the military protection of the provinces. Looking to the rapid progress which Canada is now making in wealth and population and to the prosperity which she at this moment enjoys, it is the conviction of Her Majesty's Government that it is only due to the people of this country that they should now be relieved from a large proportion of this charge which has hitherto been imposed upon them for the protection of a colony now well able to do much towards protecting itself.

Canada undertook her own protection, but it was not until 1904 that the British troops at Halifax were withdrawn and our troops took their place.

Now, we have undertaken, and rightly so as a self-respecting people, our own defence. The question that confronts us to-day is; how far should we go, and what should be the extent of our expenditure in this direction? The people of the Motherland, yes, Mr. Chairman, and the people of the entire world, have had the knowledge impressed upon them during the last few years that when it comes to defending what we believe is right, the young men, and the old men, of Canada—and the women too—have done their duty and done it nobly. We have not only a tradition to carry on, we have a duty to ourselves to perform, and the militia must be maintained at a point where it will be able to protect us from internal disorder as well as from external aggression. I am of opinion and fondly hope, as we all do, that it will be many, many years before we will be called upon to go through such a deluge of war as we experienced a few years ago. But even though we may never be involved in another war, we have a duty to perform through our militia in maintaining domestic order.

Now, are we to have a militia, and is that militia to be kept at proper strength? The answer can only be in the affirmative if we are a self-respecting nation. We must have a permanent militia force, as well as a volunteer force, for conditions that may arise within our own borders. We owe that as a duty to ourselves. But at the present time our permanent force is not of sufficient strength to preserve internal order. That is an absolute fact. Under our law hon. gentlemen, and the hon. lady (Miss Macphail) too, will understand that when disorder is threatened in any municipality, the procedure is for the mayor or the reeve to notify the Government, and then it becomes the duty of the Department of Militia to provide ample force for the maintenance of order and good government. The Department of Militia must therefore be in a position to act under the statute and provide a certain number of men to meet any emergency in any part of the Dominion. As will be appreciated, this involves the maintenance of a permanent force of considerable proportions. At the present time this force is composed of 3,800 officers and men, and is a very small force indeed to cope with emergencies throughout such a vast country.

Mr. ARTHURS: Why is the principal reduction in these estimates confined to the permanent force?

Mr. GRAHAM: The reduction will not interfere materially with the efficiency of the force, being in large measure among officers and non-commissioned officers, under a rearrangement that the chief of staff proposes to make.

Mr. ARTHURS: Does the hon. minister say that the reduction in the non-commissioned officers will be a move towards efficiency?

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not like to go so far as that. My hon. friend is a military man, and he is confronting me with a technique that I am not familiar with. It would be a reduction of the units in various parts of the Dominion, and a rearrangement under a new plan. As I was pointing out, now that we have assumed the status of a nation we must carry on those departments which are incident to that status. Hon. gentlemen have said to me: Why spend money on the militia, seeing that it is non-productive? I reply: Why spend money on fire insurance when it is non-productive? Let there be disorder in any part of the Dominion that the Militia Department is unable to cope with, and immediately we would be criticized because we were unprepared to meet the emergency. Could we, Mr. Chairman, let it be known throughout the entire world that Canada is a country where the militia is ineffective, where the mounted police is to be reduced almost to the vanishing point, where the naval service is to be of little account, and where the flying force is not to function? We would become the mecca of a class of people that would not be desirable in the best interests of the country. It is our duty, even though the militia be not productive, to maintain it at sufficient strength to preserve order and good government within the Dominion. The militia is not productive, but it is highly protective, and if it were not for this force Canada would not be in the position she occupies to-day.

I wanted to make these few observations because as a nation we are at the present time looking forward to standing side by side with the other nations of the world. If we are to realize our aspirations, we must accept the responsibilities that go with those aspirations and be prepared to carry on our share of defence work as part of the British Empire, and that share, so far as the militia is concerned, is provided for in the estimates I am now presenting.

Mr. MARTELL: Does the minister mean that he is going to increase the militia expenditure in this country under present conditions, when people want to get back to a peace basis and are desirous that the militia should be cut down practically to an infinitesimal point?

Mr. GRAHAM: The estimates are not being increased; they are being decreased. So far as the amount is concerned; if we compare this year with 1913-1914, when we were on a peace basis, the estimates this year are less; and if you take into account the present purchasing power of the dollar as compared with 1911-1912, I submit the estimates presented to-day are less than they were that year.

Mr. MARTELL: I congratulate the minister on that.

Mr. HOCKEN: What is the reduction in the number of men in the permanent force?

Mr. GRAHAM: The estimate made by the department and the Chief of Staff is that when the reorganization is completed the reduction will be in the vicinity of 400 or 500 all told.

Mr. HOCKEN: But this vote shows an increase of about $100,000 over last year for clothing and necessaries. How does the minister account for that?

Mr. GRAHAM: I might point out to the hon. member that there are two branches of the force, the permanent force and the volunteers. The $100,000 which my hon. friend mentions is for the volunteer force, which is not, strictly speaking, the militia.

Mr. HOCKEN: Is the volunteer force larger this year than last?

Mr. GRAHAM: It is exactly the same, but we have reduced the amount for annual drill by $100,000. There is also this to be taken into consideration. After the war there was a good deal of clothing on hand, but as that is used up more is required. More clothing may be required in certain lines one year than another. For instance, we have stocks on hand now of certain lines, but in other lines our stock is diminishing.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The expenditure for 1919-1920 for cadet service was $390,000, and to-day it is $450,000. What is the explanation of the increase?

The CHAIRMAN: We have not come to that item yet.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not averse to discussing all the items now, but answering first my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Hocken), if he will look at the increase he suggested in the item for clothing and necessaries, he will find that it is merely a cross-entry, a simple matter of bookkeeping. It is a decrease in war-like stores, transferred from one account to the other.

Mr. SHAW: I want to congratulate the minister for having made a reduction in the estimates as compared with last year. I think he is entitled to some credit for giving us this evidence of economy on the part of his department. At the same time it is only fair to say that I have an objection to register, and it is that the reduction is not sufficient. Without going into details of these items, which I presume will be taken up separately, I should like for a moment to compare the estimates of this department with the amount of less than $5,000,000 asked for by the Department of Agriculture, which is the fundamental and basic industry of this country. I know very well that you cannot always very reasonably compare these estimates under the circumstances. But take the estimates of other departments of the Government. I find that the Health Department, for instance, is asking something under $1,000,000; Administration of Justice, slightly over $2,000,000; Immigration and Colonization, slightly over $2,000,000,—and I think no one will under-estimate the value and significance of the work for which that estimate is being asked,—Fisheries, slightly over $1,000,000; Mines, slightly over $500,000; Labour Department, the main estimates for which are something under $1,500,000; Dominion Lands and Parks, almost $5,000,000; Soldiers' Land Settlement, approximately $12,000,000; and finally, may I just mention the estimates for the Department of Trade and Commerce which total slightly over $3,000,000. I think in comparison with these other necessary and fundamental departments of government, the estimate for the Militia Department is out of all proportion. I realize, of course, the necessity for maintaining in this country not only a militia, but a Militia Department, properly staffed and properly officered, and I have nothing to say with regard to the efficiency and effectiveness of our miltia. I think perhaps it is true, as the minister has stated, that the militia generally has served satisfactorily; but I do think in view of the estimates for other departments of government, there should be a very substantial reduction in the militia estimates, especially as we have just come through a long war, and have had a conference at Washington on the limitation of armaments, and particularly in view of the very difficult economic conditions that prevail throughout this country. I do not propose to move any amendment, but I want to urge upon the minister the necessity for doing something far more substantial than he has done in reducing the estimates of his department.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I should like to say a word on the question of the total amount which the minister is asking for on this occasion, and the remarks which have fallen from my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Shaw), that they show a substantial decrease from the vote of last year.

The vote of last year was $11,954,000, and the total expenditure until 31st March this year, I think I am safe in saying, was under $10,250,000. I have not received the figures yet, but from my knowledge of the department up till the end of December and from estimates I have been able to make since, I think I am within the mark when I say that $10,250,000 will cover every dollar that was spent last year. This year it is proposed to expend $10,788,000. So the reduction is rather more apparent than real, is it not, Mr. Chairman? However, under all the circumstances which we have in Canada to-day, if we are going to maintain a militia force in this country that is to be of any practical use, I do not believe that the minister can cut very much below the figure he has submitted to the House on the present occasion. I am inclined to think that in some instances his figures are too low; in some others perhaps they may be slightly too high. But it is not correct to say that Canada is one of the nations which is engaged in extravagant military expenditure. I went to some pains just a year ago to make a comparison as between Canada and every other country in the world, just to see what we were spending and how our expenditure compared with our neighbours. My hon. friends who are inclined to be critical can go to any country on the face of the globe, civilized or uncivilized, they can inquire in Europe, in Asia, in America North or South, and they will find that comparison shows that Canada is a long way below the lowest of them in all classes of expenditure on armaments—so far below the lowest that one is almost ashamed to make the comparison. These figures were all submitted by experts to a Financial Conference held in Brussels in October, 1921. The figures are accurate, they were submitted as a result of a call by the League of Nations; and in every comparison you make, the expenditure in this country for military purposes is almost nothing as compared with similar expenditure by our nearest neighbour whether it be a British Dominion or whether it be an independent country. The charge that we are extravagant in this respect, is entirely unfounded, if you compare our expenditure with what any other nation in the world is doing. Now, I submit that the minister has cut these estimates to just about as low a figure as he can go. There may be some details, perhaps, that will stand some paring down; but on the whole I doubt very much if he can go any lower without actually injuring the service.

Mr. MARTELL: Are there not many things in connection with the Militia Department that could be dispensed with in view of other public services being starved?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not know about any public services that are being starved, but the point I make is this: If it is the wisdom of this House that we should maintain in Canada a reasonable militia force as was done in the past, if it is the judgment of the House that we should have a militia force at all, then you cannot pay much less than the minister proposes to pay for it this year. On the other hand, if in the judgment of the House the force should be wiped out then he could save that money and apply it to something else. You cannot have your cake and eat it,—if you are going to have a force, and if this force is to be an efficient one, it is going to cost you what the minister is asking for.

Mr. MARTELL: What is the wisdom of permitting drill halls to be lit up all through the winter months and having parades there in order that officers may display their gold braid, while people are starving in this country?

Mr. DUFF: I think, Mr. Chairman, with your permission and that of the minister it might be as well to allow us to deal with the whole series of items connected with this subject instead of limiting the discussion to one item alone. I think that has been the usual practice in previous years.

The CHAIRMAN: The items all form separate resolutions, I am sorry to say.

Mr. DUFF: I think that would be the quickest way—to deal with the entire vote. I also would like to congratulate the minister upon reducing the total estimate from something over $11,954,000 to $10,788,000; but I would like to say that I think. in the present condition of affairs in Canada, in future this expenditure can be greatly reduced. Of course the Minister of Militia has only been in charge of this department for some three months and it was impossible for him in that time to consult the excellent staff of officials he has surrounding him in the department, to discuss matters thoroughly with them, and get such a grasp of affairs, that he could, in respect to a number of the militia items, curtail the expenditure. But the people of Canada are expecting the Minister of Militia to do that in the next twelve months, so that when he presents his estimates to Parliament in 1923 he may make it manifest that those estimates have been cut to the fullest extent compatible with the best interests of the country. I agree with the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) and with the minister too, that it is necessary to have a militia force in Canada, but it seems to me that that force should be managed as economically as possible. I believe it is possible to have a skeleton organization;

4 p.m. I do not think it is necessary to spend some of the large amounts which are being expended in connection with this department. Undoubtedly it is necessary in different sections of Canada to maintain such units or organizations that if it were necessary, owing to trouble, to call out the volunteers the needed personnel for taking charge of these units would be available; but I do not think it is necessary to spend large sums of money in connection with the militia. The people of Canada irrespective of politics will support what the hon. member for Calgary has said in this regard. I believe too that the people will back up any government or any party that will cut to the lowest possible point not only the militia expenditure but the so-called naval expenditure, which latter is absolutely a waste of public money. I am not criticising the present minister, for he has only been in charge of the Militia Department for three months, but I would like to call his attention to one item. I do not wish to ask the minister to reduce his estimates by resolution of this committee. I have a great deal of faith in the minister and some of his officials; they have the best interest of the country at heart just as much as my hon. friend from Calgary or any other member, and although the item to which I am about to refer appears in the estimates I do not think the minister will spend one dollar of that money during the coming season. The item to which I refer is Annual Drill, $1,400,000. The minister and his officials have already shown their good intentions by cutting this item down from $1,500,000 as it was last year to $1,400,000 this year. The mere fact that this item appears in the estimates does not mean that there is any necessity for its expenditure. The hon. member for South Wellington, who was minister of militia in the National Liberal and Conservative Government, told us a few moments ago —and I presume that in so doing he was endeavouring to present himself with a bouquet—that, although last year when he was minister the militia estimates called for $11,954,000, they only spent $10,250,000 or thereabouts. Now, Sir, I have such confidence in the present Minister of Militia that although his estimates call for $10,780,000 it will be a matter of great surprise and disappointment to me if when he comes to present the militia estimates next year he does not show that instead of expending any such sum he has only paid out some six or seven million dollars. Reductions such as that in this expenditure are what the people of this country want. There is one sum that need not be expended this year, as I have already said, and that is $1,400,000 for annual drill.

The CHAIRMAN: I call the hon. member's attention to the fact that that item has not yet been reached. We are now considering the item of Allowances, Active Militia—$120,000. Shall the item carry?

Mr. VIEN: The total of the several items is $10,788,000 and I think that on the title given to all these items we could discuss the whole question.

Mr. HANSON: What does this appropriation of $120,000 mean?

Mr. GRAHAM: If the rules of the House would not be violated by his doing so, I should like my hon. friend (Mr. Duff) to conclude his remarks. Suppose we carry the first item, and then he can discuss the first one on the second.

Mr. DUFF: Before we proceed to the next item, I should like to suggest to the committee that, instead of discussing one item alone, we do as we did in previous years, discuss the whole appropriation. If necessary, I would make a motion that the whole appropriation be discussed.

The CHAIRMAN: I am instructed that it is the rule of the committee that these resolutions should be discussed separately. There may be some items in this resolution, but there is, at present before the committee, one resolution, namely, No. 89, Allowances, Active Militia.

Mr. DUFF: When I was interrupted by the Chair, I was endeavouring to say that the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), who was Minister of Militia in the late government, in the remarks which he made a few minutes ago, when he was discussing what he termed reasonable expenditure on the service, compared the total expenditure in Canada with expenditures in other countries. It is quite true that the expenditure for militia purposes in Canada is much smaller by head of population than similar expenditure in any other country; but we must agree that conditions in Canada are altogether different from conditions in other countries. For instance, nobody in Canada wants to have conditions as they are in Russia to-day. I have read in the newspapers of two or three men in Canada who have said that we should have conditions as they exist in Russia to-day; but I do not belong to that class, and I believe ninety-nine per cent of the people of this country would be strongly opposed to our having conditions as they are in Russia to-day. Furthermore, I do not believe anybody in Canada with any common-sense wants to have conditions as they are in France or in any other European country. Consequently, it is not necessary that the people of Canada should vote for militia purposes such large expenditures as must be made in other countries. Therefore, I do not think that the argument of the hon. member for South Wellington should have very much weight and effect when he says that we should spend large sums of money for militia purposes, because, forsooth, other countries are spending large amounts.

As I said a moment ago, it seems to me that the estimate for annual drill should not be spent this year at least. If ever the necessity arose, we have in this country 400,000 men who are available at any time for service of this kind, in order to maintain peace and order in Canada. It is a well-known fact that during the late war, the men who were gathered in at a few moments' notice and who were outside of the active militia of this country, made the very best soldiers which Canada or the United States or any other country sent to the war. Men who were taken from ordinary avocations in life in this or any other country, after a little training, made as good soldiers as other men who had spent many years in military service. With the available material in this country, if anything happened, we do not need to have a great standing army. I have no objection to the estimate for the permanent force. I notice the minister and his officials have cut down this amount by $755,000. That is a step in the right direction, and the minister should be congratulated that, at this stage in the affairs of Canada, in our present financial and industrial condition, the estimate for the permanent force has been reduced by $755,000. I notice that the item for the Dominion arsenal at Lindsay shows a reduction of $218,300.

The CHAIRMAN: I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that all these items will be reached in due course, but the item at present before the committee is No. 89, Allowances, Active Militia.

Mr. DUFF: If you are going, Sir, to confine me to the one item, I will bring my remarks to a close; but it seems to me that we should be allowed to discuss the whole appropriation. If, however, you rule in that way, I must bow to your ruling. I want to say, in conclusion, that the people of Canada are anxious to see this Government reduce expenditure on militia, navy and anything else of this character, to the lowest possible amount, and this department under the present minister will receive the thanks of the country if, instead of spending $10,000,000, the amount is cut down as low as possible.

Mr. MARTELL: I have a few observations to make in regard to this appropriation, and they shall be brief.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friends say "hear, hear." All the "hear, hear's" in the world will not prevent me from giving expression to the views that, as a representative of a constituency in the federal Parliament, I have been sent here to present to this House.

I want, first of all, to congratulate the Minister of Militia and Defence upon the fact that he has, to some extent, decreased the militia estimates. I have every respect for the Minister of Militia and Defence, but I want to assure him that I believe he has taken too much advice from officials in his department who are fonder of gold braid parades than of the interest of the people of this country. It seems to me that, while we require a certain militia in this Dominion, this militia should be reduced to the finest possible point. We have heard in this House debates about unemployment; we know that agriculture in Canada is being starved; and now, even though this country is in dire straits financially, and whilst the minister—and I congratulate him personally and not his officials upon this fact—has decreased the estimates, this vote for militia is being maintained in order that we shall have in Canada people who, fresh from o'er the seas, give native Canadians the feeling that they are being looked upon with an easy sort of tolerance. These people want to have gold braid marches in order that they may parade before the people of this country their connection with Sir So-and-So and Sir Somebody Else. The people of Canada do not care whether you have an ancestor, a family tree, or not, so long as you are able to do an honest man's work with brain and hand; and we, in this Dominion, as a young nation, a nation within the British Empire, a nation that has a right to control its own affairs, want the least possible amount of militarism. I pray the indulgence of the minister while I ask him that he be good enough to do his utmost to see that these estimates are brought down to the lowest possible point.

What do we find as regards militia camps in this Dominion? Some people who go to these camps seem to forget that they are Canadians at all; they seem to assume, during these camps, a sort of autocratic spirit, and the idea is to grind down the young intelligent Canadian, who goes there primarily for instruction that may fit him, if the time ever came, to defend his native land. The minister, if I may be figurative, is on the hilltop listening to the murmurs of the far off sea, but he fails to realize that young men must be fitted to brave the stream of life. He looks upon the distant sea, but he does not note the rushing tide below him. In my opinion the Militia Department of Canada exists to-day for no other purpose than the holding of gold-laced parades. We are asked to spend the sum of $10,788,400 for gold-lace parades and nothing else, while agricultural exhibitions in the country cannot receive any aid from the Department of Agriculture. We are told that a dire financial condition exists in this country which makes it impossible for us to give one or two thousand dollars to these exhibitions, and yet we can spend over $10,000,000 of the people's money on gold-lace shows. We have heard the question of unemployment discussed on this floor. Children are crying for want of food and clothing, and shoes, and workmen find their slim pay envelopes altogether inadequate to supply their families with even the barest necessities. In the face of that, what justification can there possibly be for spending such a huge sum as this on a mere empty show? I shall certainly vote against the item.

Mr. HANSON: The minister might state what is meant by "allowances, active militia." I might say to my hon. friend for Hants (Mr. Martell) that if he is sincere in his declarations he should get up and move that the vote, or some of the items thereof, be cut in two. We could thereby judge of his sincerity.

Mr. MARTELL: If you put that motion I will vote for it.

An hon. MEMBER: What courage!

Mr. GRAHAM: In regard to command pay, drill instruction, etc., there are certain allowances given to the officers for the number of men brought into their companies and trained. Then there is an item of $20,000 for the care of arms. Where there is no caretaker the different officers are allowed a certain amount to defray the expense of looking after the arms. There are allowances for postage throughout the Dominion, and to cover contingencies, etc., and allowances to trumpeters. Each trumpeter who qualifies is given $3 annually. These things make up the amount of this particular item.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like some information in regard to the permanent force.

The CHAIRMAN: That is a separate item.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It is impossible to discuss these various items separately. If you cut one estimate it automatically affects the other, and the militia should be considered in conjunction with the permanent force.

Mr. GOOD: I desire to question your ruling, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the separate consideration of these items. How can you discuss the general aspects of the whole question if you are to be unduly restrained in considering the bearing of one particular vote upon another?

The CHAIRMAN: Bourinot at page 425 says:

> As in other committees, each resolution must be proposed and discussed as a distinct question, and when it has been formally carried, no reference can be made again thereto. Neither is it regular to discuss any resolution before it has been formally proposed from the chair. Each vote or resolution is necessarily a question in itself to be proposed, amended and put as any motion or bill in the house.

That is the authority on this question.

Mr. DUFF: That ruling holds good so long as the minister submits his items as separate resolutions. The minister, if he desired to do so, instead of placing before the committee a list of fifteen or sixteen separate resolutions, could embody them in one resolution covering the whole amount, so that they might the more freely be discussed. I would ask him to do that in deference to the wishes of the committee.

[Mr. Hanson.]

The CHAIRMAN: These resolutions, prepared by the treasury board, appear before the Chairman as separate items. I have only one item before me now, No. 89.

Mr. DUFF: Could the minister not change the form in which he has placed the items before the committee, so that we might discuss the whole question from every point of view?

The CHAIRMAN: That could be done by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no real difficulty in the matter. The resolutions, it is true, are all for separate items or classes of expenditure, but in the consideration of each item, its relation to the whole may certainly be discussed, and the size of the whole vote is undoubtedly open to discussion. As I understand the ruling of the Chair, it is simply that the question as to the correctness of any particular item not immediately under consideration shall not be discussed. That is quite right, and I do not think that such a ruling hampers hon. members on either side. The relation of any one class of expenditure to another, embraced in the resolution, can be discussed, and consequently the question can be considered as to whether or not there should be a gross reduction. But the rightness or wrongness of any item not under consideration, the Chair has ruled, cannot be discussed. It does not seem to me that there is any restriction to be complained of.

Mr. DUFF: When I was speaking I thought that the Chairman ruled that I could discuss only one item. I was proceeding to deal with other items and he called me to order. Before we go further I want to know whether we are to be confined to just one item, or whether we can discuss the whole militia vote amounting to over ten million dollars.

Mr. GRAHAM: Like the leader of the Opposition, (Mr. Meighen) I do not see that there is much difficulty in the way. I think we can proceed calmly. Each one of the items is an entity in the whole, and in discussing one you can certainly refer to others. The bearing which this item has on the others is discussable. The Chairman is merely trying to avoid any discussion in detail of all the items under one particular vote, and then going over the same items all over again when we take them up in their order. These resolutions have been submitted to His Excellency and must be discussed in their order; but I see no objection to a general discussion of the status of the militia.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What I have to say, Mr. Chairman, concerns not, perhaps, this particular item so much as the underlying principle of the maintenance of anything like a large force in Canada. Some of us are not in a position to discuss the particular items; it is obvious that one item might be reduced and others left as they are, and that the efficiency of the force might thereby be impaired.

The minister has suggested—and I think we can all agree—that the time has come when Canada is quite capable of administering her own affairs. The question arises, then, as to the principle on which we propose to administer our affairs. It seems to be taken for granted that we must follow the example of European nations and proceed to arm; in fact, the minister says that we must have all the departments necessary for the equipment of a nation. Now, I should like to challenge the implication that in order that we may become a self-sufficient nation it is necessary for us to maintain a military force. At this particular time we are talking about international disarmament; it would seem that the best way to bring about international disarmament is by national disarmament. We in Canada are in a peculiarly good position to accomplish this. We have the Pacific on the west, the Atlantic on the east; we are bordered by a friendly nation to the south; why should we be prepared to resist aggression on any of these fronts? We have made it a boast that throughout the past century we have had no warships upon the Great Lakes, and we have said that that in itself is the greatest safeguard we have against warfare between the United States and ourselves. What is true in regard to warships on the Great Lakes is equally true in regard to armed forces; we need not seek to protect ourselves against aggression from the south. It may be said that we ought to be prepared to protect ourselves against any unnamed enemy who might arise from some unexpected quarter and seek to injure our nation. I take it, however, there is a growing sentiment on the part of a large number of the Canadian people that since we professed to have gone into the great war to end war, now that the war is over we should try to get back to an absolute peace basis. This Parliament succeeds the one which administered affairs during the period the war was in progress. Now is the time when we should decide whether or not an armed force means or makes for peace. I for one —and I think I voice the sentiment of a considerable number—have been led to doubt that very much.

It has been further suggested that perhaps we ought to protect ourselves because of probable internal disturbance, I submit that our position in this country is very different from that of European states; we have no subordinate races that must be kept down or are in danger of rising against the nation as a whole, I do not think we have any classes that are particularly dangerous. A good many of our forefathers came here in order to escape the military burdens of Europe; why should we proceed to set up military forces in this country similar to those which they left in Europe? If we provide for the needs of the people, there is no doubt that we shall have a loyal population. Who are we, anyway? We are all anxious to make a living for ourselves, anxious that our families shall have a decent education and so on; that is the feeling of the Canadian people. Under these circumstances, what group is there that we need fear? Now that the war is past we ought to reconsider this whole matter and decide whether we need maintain military forces in this country. Instead of being an insurance against trouble they are rather, it seems to me, provocative of trouble.

Mr. HUGHES: After listening to the discussion and after giving the matter some little consideration, it seems to me that the first thing to be done is to decide upon a policy. The first question is, if we want a military force, why do we need it? Do we fear invasion or aggression from any other country? Are we preparing for a war, and if so, against whom? If that is out of the question; if aggression or invasion on the part of any other country is not to be thought of, then should we have an armed force to preserve internal peace? I think we should, there is no city in the Dominion that does not require a police force, though we are a peaceable people. Then, if we should have a national force, the question is, of what size should that national force be? Having decided that, we can reasonably proceed to have a national force as large as necessary, but no larger. If we are preparing for or expect another war, if we anticipate foreign trouble of any kind at any time in the future, what size of force do we need? It seems to me that these are the questions that should first be settled. I do not think we should anticipate any trouble from foreign countries. I do not think we need fear any aggression on the part of our southern neighbours. We fear no trouble from Europe; we need anticipate no trouble from the Eastern countries across the Pacific. Then the question is—I come back to it—what size of force is necessary? That we should have some force there is no doubt, but I think the present force is too large for internal purposes, and the general policy should be adopted of cutting it down to the lowest possible point. If the force is maintained beyond what is necessary, it is a waste of money, and money is very much needed for other and productive purposes. I shall have a few words to say on the next item—I may not, I suppose, speak on it now, Mr. Chairman—but in my judgment the annual drill is a waste of money. I know it was cut out a few years ago, and I do not think we had the annual drill last year. In any case, it was not general; it may have been held in some places.

Mr. GRAHAM: This estimate is lower than the one last year.

Mr. HUGHES: I know it is, and I think it should be lower still. Now, I used to drill some years ago and I know it was just a holiday. While the country was rich and we had money to spend, perhaps there was no great harm in it, but we have not the money to spend now. I know that captains in the militia, in order to make up the full complement of their companies, had to take men much over age, and in the cavalry regiments horses were used that would be no good for war purposes. The men who went to drill looked upon it simply as a holiday. When war actually broke out very few of them were available or of any use. The young men of the country, and middle-aged men too, volunteered in large numbers and made good soldiers, but only a small proportion of the active militia were available or were any good.

Mr. LANCTOT: It is no good at all.

Mr. HUGHES: My hon. friend says that it is no good at all; well, I pretty much agree with that. If there is one item in this appropriation that ought to be cut out it is that which provides for the annual drill—and there may be others.

To summarize what I have said: the first thing to be done is to decide what policy we should pursue, whether we fear, or expect, or anticipate, aggression from any country within the next few years. If we do not anticipate anything of that kind, then we should not provide for it. We have no money to waste; we have no money to spend on frills.

Mr. GOOD: The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) intimated that we ought to be ashamed of our situation as compared with the situation in some of the European countries. I suggest that we ought rather to be proud of it. In regard to the total figures as indicated in the estimates, I would like to call attention to the fact that a dollar goes a good deal further this year than it did last year, and when allowance is made for that, possibly the comparison between the respective amounts is not as attractive as it might otherwise seem.

I would like to emphasize the sentiments that have already been expressed by several hon. members to the effect that we are spending relatively too much money on the militia. So far as my observation has gone, militia quarters and militia activities are rather in the nature of gold braid and fuss-and-feathers entertainment—a sort of social club—than anything of a strictly protective or military character. I do not say that unkindly or with the idea of reflecting upon any other person who may be connected with the militia. But so far as my observation goes, things tend inevitably that way, and it is not a good way; it does not do the country any good. And occasionally we have exhibitions, that are, to say the least, disgraceful.

In regard to the need for preserving order at home I do think that the member for Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. Hughes) is right when he says that we are overstaffed or "over-forced" so far as the militia is concerned. We have had a great deal of talk about unemployment and about unrest, and I think that lurking in some peoples' minds there is a thought that the militia may be necessary in order to put down agitators—people who are stirring up the unrest which has arisen out of bad industrial or social conditions. Now, let me make this suggestion if $5,000,000 that is voted for militia purposes could be transferred to the solution of the problem of unemployment, we would not need so much miltia and we could have a much happier solution of these labour difficulties and this unrest than we can possibly bring about by maintaining or increasing a force capable of suppressing anything of that nature, I feel very strongly that if that is in our minds at all, we ought to get rid of it; it is not the right way to handle problems of that sort. I do believe, of course, in having sufficient police to maintain law and order. But we must not think that we have to have a large and still larger force for that purpose, because difficulties of that type ought to be handled in an altogether different way. I therefore repeat my suggestion that the diversion of a very large part of this vote along other lines would be very much more satisfactory to this country.

As I said a little while ago, a serious difficulty presents itself to any of us who wish to suggest a reduction in the total vote. If we consider the vote item by item, there are few here who understand the details sufficiently to be able to say that this or that particular vote ought to be cut down by such and such an amount. I feel that the total vote ought to be reduced, but I cannot put my finger on any particular item. I suggest that, if it is in order, we should be able at some time during the discussion to move a reduction in the total vote without having to move a reduction in each particular item. Of course, if we go through each item and pass it, we are not then in a position to move any reduction in the total.

Mr. VIEN: I do not believe there is any difference of opinion among the members of the committee on the question whether we ought to maintain a militia in Canada. I do not think any hon. member would move that the militia should be dispensed with. That being the case, it comes down to a question of proportion, a question of quantity. With what has been said on both sides as to the restrictions which should be made effective with regard to our militia expenditure I am in full sympathy, and I would be much more critical of the items on this page of the estimates were we not to have in the near future a reorganization of the Department of Defence, which will mean that the Minister of Defence will have to look into the reorganization of the militia as well. If it were not for that, I would, with many members on both sides of the House, ask the minister not to expend the money that we are going to vote to him. But I do not think it would be wise under the circumstances, either on this item or on the total vote of $10,000,000, to go into the details of where a cut should be made. It is a good thing, I think, that the opinion of so many members has been expressed and that that opinion has been unanimous with regard to the desirability of curtailing militia expenditure and reducing it to the minimum. But some of the items will, I think, bear investigation and in connection with them some hon. members may wish to draw to the attention of the Government the desirability of not expending the total amount voted. I have been connected with the militia for about twenty years now, and I know something about it. During the last ten or twelve years money has been spent foolishly, lavishly, in many centres, and curtailments are absolutely necessary. For instance, on the staff of each of the various districts the minister has a paymaster, an assistant paymaster and an auditor. Why should there be any necessity for having these three officers in each of the districts? If the paymaster is a responsible officer, no more audit beyond what the Auditor General does and what the General Paymaster does, should be needed. I grant that during the war the volume of business transacted in every district may have justified the appointment of auditors, but the war has been over for three years now, and I think we can dispense with the services of the auditors in the various military districts. That is only one instance. I have asked the minister to give me some information by letter, and I shall have something to say when we come to the item for the general staff. I think that we could dispense with a number of officers who are now employed on the general staff. I pointed out to the minister and the House the other day that we had seventeen generals in Canada to manage the affairs of the militia, whereas ten years ago we could manage the whole business with two or three generals, who were paid between $4,000 and $5,000 each, as compared with between $6,000 and $9,500 which these generals are drawing to-day—and we have seventeen of them. Yet when the minister, carrying out the policy which now receives the approval of the committee, puts some of these men on the superannuation list, he is criticized by the former Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie) and his friends, who almost shed tears on the retirement of these great generals. These generals are being superannuated on a very generous basis indeed. To cite only one case, that of General Burstall, whose name was mentioned the other day, I am told that he is being superannuated on $6,000 a year, which is $2,000 more than the salary he drew in 1914.

Mr. LANCTOT: More than Mr. Doherty, the ex-Minister of Justice.

Mr. VIEN: Some of these cases will bear investigation. I would urge upon the department the necessity for further curtailing the list of staff appointments. We have too many generals in Canada; we have too many officers on the permanent staff. I know that it is the intention of the minister, in the reorganization of his department, to bring about this reform, and if we were not on the eve of passing a bill reorganizing the whole defence of Canada I would be much more inquisitive as to the item we are now discussing and much more critical as to the amounts we are asked to vote. We have curtailed the expenditure by $1,000,000, and I am sure that the minister will not expend all of the $10,788,000 which he is asking for. I am in full accord with the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) when he suggests that next year the Minister of Defence, as he will then be called, should be able to come to this House and tell us that instead of expending $10,000,000, he has spent only $8,000,000 or $9,000,000.

Mr. LANCTOT: Five million.

Mr. VIEN: My hon. friend says $5,000,000. That raises the question how much the militia expenditure should be curtailed. If you have a militia you have to give them some training, or you do away with the militia altogether. I would cut down the annual training—and this will probably be one of my suggestions when the item comes up—to a minimum, for a few years to come. We are in no immediate danger of an uprising within this country or of an attack from outside. I think we could take a holiday for a few years in many lines of military activity. So far as that is concerned I wish to support heartily the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for Lunenburg and some hon. members on the opposite side of the House, urging the minister in the reorganization of his department to curtail expenditure as much as possible and not to expend the amount which he is now asking for.

Mr. CHURCH: The discussion on item 89 has taken a very wide range this afternoon. If a loyal country like Canada is going to amount to anything, I do not see how the minister can have an up-to-date department such as Canada should have, if the necessary money is not voted. I was surprised to hear some of the carping criticism that has been made this afternoon, in view of the fact that the minister has cut down his estimates, and that there are only two items in which there is an increase. There is a small increase for clothing and necessaries, but anybody who has purchased anything in these lines knows the difficulties of buying in the open market to-day. As head of a department of 1,100 police, I know the difficulty we have in this respect in Toronto. The other increase is in the maintenance of military property. There has been a change in the situation in some of the cities and towns. I come from a city where the large military organization is drawn mainly from the working classes. Toronto sent over 60,000 men to the war, nearly all of them under the voluntary system. I do not say that other parts of the country did not do well too; I mention Toronto only as an illustration. Our men have come back to civil pursuits and many of them are now engaged in departmental stores and factories all over the city. It is a workingman's constituency that I represent, and the officers commanding these old units have continually to put their hands in their pockets for the upkeep of the regiment. Take the 12th Battalion, the York Rangers, General Brock's old regiment, with him at Queenston Heights. They to-day have not a house or an armoury, and Toronto has had to provide them with a property. The city has fixed up the old St. Paul's hall, at a great cost to the taxpayers of Toronto. Is this country so hard up that it cannot provide this unit and others with an armoury but must let the officers pass the hat to keep up the regiment? That is only one case; the same thing is true of other regiments. The men of the 12th Battalion are working all day long. They have stored the arms in the old St. Paul's hall. Another battalion has been put in the old town hall, the St. Lawrence hall; another battalion has been put in another old building. These are all old city buildings, and in these are rifles and stores of all kinds, embracing fifteen or twenty different items. And many of the officers who are given the custody of this government property are working men. He is responsible for the care of those arms, and he gets very little for it. Owing to the miserable pittance he receives, he has continually to put his hand in his pocket. We have reached such a state of affairs in Military District No. 2 that the officers have the utmost difficulty in getting returned soldiers to join the regiments. They are not getting any support in this House. I want to say that it is not the fault of the officers of the militia department, because they are most competent men.

I would not cut a cent off these estimates. Canada either needs a militia or it does not. God forbid that the time will ever come in this country when Canada will be without a militia. Where should we have been in 1812, especially as regards the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, had it not been for the militia. Had the militia at that time been treated in the spirit in which it is being treated to-day, what would have happened? Where should we have been in the days of 1837?—in the days of the Fenian Raid in 1867?—at the time of the South African war?—and during the late great war, had we not had an efficient militia? How can we maintain an efficient militia force if we do not provide for expenditures such as appear in the item under discussion? Why the Government makes the most parsimonious allowance for militia officers and in the city of Toronto they have had to buy their own typewriters and even pass around the hat in order to help equip a battalion to go overseas. That is the way Canada treats its citizen soldiers. But it is not the way citizen soldiers are treated in the United States. I visited Niagara camp last year and there was hardly an officer present who had not to put his hand in his pocket to help his unit and many were compaining. I asked in a number of cases the reason for that and all those of whom I inquired told me the same story. It was necessary to pay so much money out of their own pockets. Even the young farmer or the young working man in the city cannot be got to join a regiment. They say they are not given a sufficiently liberal per diem allowance and they have to meet their own expenses out of their own resources. The miserable pittance allowed by the Government would not even buy cigarettes, and yet the cigarette to-day is looked upon as "a work for the general advantage of Canada,"—that is what we are going to hear some day in the Railway Committee if we go much farther along the present line. I am surprised that so soon after the war Canada shows that she has learned so little from that struggle. I am surprised at the criticisms that we have heard this afternoon concerning every branch of the Militia Department. I say that the Militia Department has done good work, especially in regard to the cadet corps of Canada. I saw the excellence of that work manifested at Niagara camp last year. Thousands of young lads aged thirteen, fourteen, fifteen and sixteen were being drilled in connection with these corps, and they received a splendid physical training. In the province of Ontario a few years ago we heard the cry "Close the bar and save the boy." Well, they have closed the bar but they are now forgetting all about the boy. Were it not for the work of the cadet corps the boys would be ignored entirely. A short time ago a vote of a million dollars or more for developing the live stock industry passed this House. This money was intended to promote the raising of cattle, hogs, sheep and other stock. But what expenditure is being made on behalf of the boys of the country? Very little beyond what is being done through the medium of cadet corps. In my opinion the cadet movement forms a recruiting ground for the militia force of the country, and in times of stress and strain we shall need that force. But what kind of a militia force are we going to have if we cut down the expenditure in the manner that has been proposed. It is a most surprising thing to me, in view of the great lessons of the recent war, that we should have to sit here and hear such carping criticism as we have heard directed against this small vote of $120,000 to cover allowances to the active militia. Such an appropriation as this is most necessary if you are to have properly organized militia camps under an efficient militia system. While economy in proper directions is a necessary and desirable thing, I am sorry that we have gone to an unnecessary distance in that direction in connection with our militia. A militia force is not simply a luxury; it is a patriotic necessity. Anybody who has had anything to do with the policing of any of our large cities knows that the presence of the permanent force is necessary in our large centres of population. Considerable unrest prevailed throughout Canada during the last five years but happily it was not necessary to call upon our militia force to the same extent as was the case in the United States. We have happy relations between capital and labour in Canada, and I want to see that condition prevail in the future as it has in the past. At the same time it is necessary to maintain the permanent force which really forms the backbone of our militia system, because it is the force which provides instructions at our various training schools where the officers and non-commissioned officers of the militia get their real training in military matters. In view of all I have said I maintain that the expenditure provided in the item under discussion is necessary and I hope it will not be curtailed to any further extent. I believe that the present Minister of Militia, like those who immediately preceded him in that office, is well disposed towards the militia, but I hope he will not proceed too far in the direction of economy and injure the militia beyond repair. While it is necessary to have economy we do not want to carry that policy to an undesirable extreme so far as the militia is concerned, otherwise the force will be simply as it was in the days of 1812 and 1813. If disaster to the militia is contemplated that result will be obtained by adopting the advice of some of the critics whom we have heard this afternoon.

Mr. GOULD: In rising to speak upon this subject I might ask the same question that has been so often heard among our neighbours to the south, "Who won the war?" My hon. friend who has just spoken seems to claim the credit for the militia of Canada, but I am sure there is no hon. member but will acknowledge that it was the laymen—the men picked from the prairies and from the industries in our towns and cities, the men who desired in their hearts to go out and help the Motherland to defeat the common enemy, and not the trained militia who exerted the greatest influence in winning success. The militia who had been in training for years were a very slight factor in the winning of the war.

Mr. MEWBURN: Will my hon. friend tell who formed the first Canadian contingent of 30,000 men that went overseas? Will he tell me how many Ontario militia were in that force?

Mr. GOULD: That is a mere side issue and does not disprove my argument. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Church) has claimed the credit for the militia of doing all these wonderful things. I maintain that if you take an equal number of men from our farms and factories who have the right spirit and enthusiasm they are the equals in performance of the organized militia. When I spoke upon these estimates last year I endeavoured to point out that the money we were asked to vote was not for the maintenance of a defence department for Canada. I tried to show that the greater part, or at any rate a large part, of the money we were then asked to vote was being devoted to useless purposes. I also stated that in a good many instances, in my humble opinion, the money went to feed parasites. I expressed the opinion that the condition of agriculture in Canada, and the state of unemployment, was such that we ought not to be asked to maintain a military aristocracy, who were living on the fat of the land while the rest of our people were working too long hours and contributing heavily to the public treasury through taxation. It does seem to me that we should discuss here the general principle as to the desirability of such expenditure. As the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) has said, it is at the commencement of a new parliament that we should come to a distinct understanding as to whether we are going to continue military expenditure upon the scale on which it has been maintained in the past. I desire to ask who is the common enemy who threatens us? Why do we want a defence force in this country? These are questions which should be discussed at this time, and if the will of Parliament is that the voting of such moneys should continue we will submit to that decision. Otherwise, such large appropriations should not be continued to be asked for these purposes. It seems to me that a little Peace Conference should be called in Ottawa at this time to decide upon the policy we should follow in the future. Throughout the world different countries are calling for a stop to military expenditures nevertheless in Canada there are individuals clamouring that it be maintained, and trying to imbue the people with the idea that there is a common enemy to be feared and met. My hon. friend from North Toronto, of course, likes to have large military expenditures in the city from which he comes. But when he speaks for North Toronto and takes this attitude I have a right to speak for Assiniboia, a purely agricultural constituency, and take a contrary stand. I think I am right in saying that the greater part of the revenue which this Government receives from the province of Saskatchewan comes from my own constituency, and what do we get in return for it? In former years the views of the agricultural people of Canada have not been adequately expressed here, but they now have a fair representation in Parliament, something they have not had before within the lifetime of this Dominion. The representatives of agriculture are here now and they are going to stay, because they have a real mission to perform, and one of the aims of that mission is to see that this unwarranted expenditure is reduced.

Mr. MacLAREN: I notice that a number of those who have spoken have criticised the expense of the militia on the ground that at the present time there is apparently no need of it. I would like to point out that when trouble arises, or when war breaks out, we do not receive notice. We do not get any such notice as that after a certain number of days a certain nation will proceed to war. That is not the way wars break out; as a rule they break out in the most unexpected manner. Who expected in June, 1914, that war would be declared in August following? I venture to say that no one in this Dominion made that prophecy. The militia of Canada is necessary up to a certain point in order that we may be ready for emergencies, because the most important point of all is that we do not receive notice of trouble. We may say that there is not likely to be any trouble to the south or to the north or anywhere else, or to be internal trouble; but these things arise with startling rapidity. It is the duty of every man in this country to protect his home and family, and, therefore, I say that the existence of the militia is necessary up to a certain point for the purpose of being prepared.

Another point to which I wish to refer is the training of men. There is, amongst members of the House, a great misapprehension in reference to trained men. Men were not taken off the farms nor from the towns and put into the front line without previous training. The men, who went to the front at the first and who were able to carry on until they were supplemented by others, were men who had already undertaken and undergone military training in this country. It was no time to put untrained men into the line, and a certain time for training is required. Apparently a number of members who have referred to this matter seem to think that men can be picked out and, in a short time sent to the front; but men required intensive training for about four months before they were put into the front line.

My other and last point is that the whole list of estimates, as submitted by the Minister of Militia (Mr. Graham), appears to me to be a very reasonable and necessary amount. I have no doubt that, under the new organization, this amount will give us efficiency; but I do not think it is desirable, wise, or safe to attempt to carry on the militia of this country with a smaller amount than that for which the Minister of Militia has asked.

Mr. BAXTER: I do not want to make any lengthy remarks; but there are a few words which might well be said to the committee, because, I am sure, no hon. member has any desire to misrepresent things as they exist. We are, I understand, considering only the first item of this appropriation, and in connection with that, remarks have been made which might lead the committee and the people generally to believe that unwarranted expenditure on gold lace is involved in these items. It is very easy to use the phrase "gold lace"; the words slip easily from every member's lips. They will, no doubt, be bandied about throughout the country, and they will succeed in adding to a prejudice which, unfortunately, exists in certain quarters towards the militia. Would hon. members be greatly surprised if I called their attention to the fact that, in the first item, not one pennyweight of gold lace is involved? Would they also be somewhat astonished if I told them—and if my assurance is not sufficient, it can easily be backed up by many hon. members in this House—that the officers of the militia of Canada pay for their own gold lace out of their own pockets, and they pay the customs duty upon it themselves? Let us deal with plain facts; let us not indulge in slurs and sneers against a large body of gentlemen who are contributing their time, brains and wealth towards keeping up the militia of Canada and who are getting not one dollar of return for so doing. That happens to be the fact; it may not be popular; it is not a good thing on which to make a stump speech; but it happens to be the fact, and, as regards the particular estimate under consideration, I will invite the careful attention of members to some of the items involved in it. One item is "care of arms." Hon. members will realize that, throughout this country, sometimes in armouries, but very often, in the rural districts, in the homes of commanding officers, rifles which have cost this country millions of dollars are placed, and they have to be taken care of by the officer commanding the unit who is responsible for those arms. The allowance for looking after those arms used to be $40.

Mr. IRVINE: Are those rifles that are being cared for Ross rifles, or some others?

Mr. BAXTER: I do not know anything about the Ross rifle. I am not talking about the Ross rifle; I am talking about the rifles that are the property of the Dominion of Canada and that are distributed in many places throughout Canada, the rifles which would be used if any active use should be required of rifles either inside or outside of this country by our militia.

There is equipment as well, as I am reminded, various clothing. There is not only the clothing, but there are the belts and other equipment; there are, in some places, guns, and these have all to be taken care of. In the days that I can speak of, I know the allowance to a rural commanding officer was $40 a year for looking after the rifles and equipment of his company or battery or whatever the unit happened to be. The allowance is a modest one; I do not think it has been increased, but the minister will correct me if I am wrong in so thinking. Where there is an armoury kept up out of the public funds, this allowance is not paid; but where the country saves the expense of a caretaker through some person undertaking to do this work in connection with his unit, he received the modest sum of $40, for this very valuable service. If this service was not performed, the rifles would be destroyed by rust, and millions of dollars of this country's investment would become nothing. That might possibly suit certain people in this country; but I do not think it suits the great majority of this Parliament, or the vast majority of the Canadian people.

The commanding officer is allowed $40 for postage which he has to spend, in rural districts especially, in communicating with members of his unit who live at considerable distances. He has to arrange, prior to annual training, to find out where his men are to see that they are got in, to see to the distribution of clothing to them, and to see that the clothing is returned after the season is over. If that service is not performed, that clothing is lost and millions of dollars are lost to this country. Therefore, hon. gentlemen who wish to reduce this item are really endeavouring to lessen the necessary services for taking care of the property of the country. One hon. member said—and I think he was candid—that he did not know how to attack these estimates in detail because he did not know what they stood for. I would suggest that the hon. member first search the Auditor General's report for the details in order that he may know what the items are, and then he will be in a position to criticise; but he should not rush blindly in and endeavour to strike out an appropriation which may mean the destruction, the loss to this country, of ten-fold, yes, a hundred-fold, of the amount involved in this appropriation.

Another item is "command pay" which is somewhat similar to what I have been explaining. The amount for drill instruction is received only when a man actually gives the time or some instruction in drill or hires someone else to do that work. I do not see how it is possible to maintain the services rendered under this item for one penny less than the amount involved. It is certainly no answer to talk about gold-lace which is worn by officers at their personal expense. If hon. members were keeping in touch with the militia, they would know that, since the war, gold lace has practically disappeared. There is no waste of money for ornament or show; the service is simply practically what a farmer does if he puts a house over his reaper or binder instead of exposing it to the weather, as, unfortunately, happens to be the case in some parts of the country with which I am fairly familiar. It is simply reserving a man's capital. If you want the capital of the country wasted, strike out an item like this and let millions of dollars go to pot.

Mr. IRVINE: My hon. friend (Mr. Baxter) has demonstrated what a great loss to the country it would be if we did not take care of old clothes and rifles at a cost of $120,000. Well, I think it might be advisable to burn these old clothes and destroy these rifles and save that $120,000. We shall have to spend $120,000 next year, and at that rate it would take only a few years to buy new rifles. An expenditure like this is only a waste of money. These estimates can be reduced by about $5,000,000, and I should like to know whether this is the time to bring in a resolution for that purpose.

Mr. GRAHAM: If such a thing were done there would be no militia force in the Dominion.

Mr. IRVINE: If it is proposed to reorganize the militia, it might facilitate and hasten that re-organization if the minister knew exactly how much money he had to spend upon it. If we vote the full $11,000,000, or thereabouts, it is not likely that even he will hurry with the re-organization.

Mr. PUTNAM: What was the approximate cost of the annual drill for the average year preceding the war?

Mr. GRAHAM: If hon. members will allow the item now before the Chair to pass, I could better explain that question on the next vote.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Item agreed to.

Annual Drill, $1,400,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: These estimates are on the pre-war basis. Of course, the entire work of deflation has not, perhaps, yet taken place, but as the cost of everything approaches normal the expenses will be proportionally reduced. The drill in 1913, before there was any war at all, cost $1,800,000. The amount asked for this year, after the war, is really less than the pre-war vote, notwithstanding the fact that the dollar in 1913 was equal to approximately $1.75 now.

Mr. MARTELL: What was the financial condition of Canada prior to the war, and what is it now?

Mr. GRAHAM: Undoubtedly it was better before the war, but in 1913 it was not too promising. At that time we were on the verge of hard times, as was indicated by several banking institutions in the world. That, however, is not the question. Do we need annual drill? That is the question.

Mr. LANCTOT: What were the estimates in 1910, when there was a Liberal party in power with a good government?

Mr. GRAHAM: The last I have are the estimates for 1910-11, but I may point out that, although brought down by the succeeding government, they were the estimates of their predecessors. The expenditure in 1910-11 was $7,067,000. That was practically equal to the estimate of to-day, if indeed it was not more, considering what the dollar could buy then as compared with now. Clothing for the troops now costs 50 per cent, 75 per cent and sometimes 100 per cent more, and so does maintenance. The salaries paid to all officers since the war have been higher because of the increase in cost of living, as recognized by every business man in the country. This year it is proposed to train half, or, at most, 60 per cent, of the number of men trained in 1911. The purpose is merely to keep up what one hon. gentleman referred to as skeleton training, and not full training at all. Full training, as my hon. friends who have been ministers will know, would cost three or four times more. I consulted with General MacBrien, the chief of staff, one of the best men in the Dominion in his position, a man who is careful financially and who made a wonderful record in the war. He is an honour to his calling, and he thinks it is necessary, if we are to have a militia in Canada, that we should keep up some training. If I were asking the committee to sanction a scheme of extensive training I should be open to criticism, but this does not provide for more than 60 per cent, or at most 65 per cent, training. I was criticised by a Toronto paper the other day for reducing the number of days from sixteen to nine. This vote provides for the training of 60 per cent of the force for nine days instead of sixteen, and the only criticism that I have heard so far is that the reduction has gone too far. I would leave it to hon. gentlemen who had sons, relatives and friends in the war. Are your boys, who have come back, looking to be trained? I do not think they are. But if any emergency arose and you needed men, do you think it would be fair for the men who went through hell for four years to be asked to undertake the same task again, without our calling upon the younger men to do some drilling to take their place? I do not expect that there will be war, but if we are to keep up a militia we must have some young men enter the militia every year. It is not fair to those who have gone through three or four years of war that we should stand aside and say we will not train others to take their places but will let them shoulder the burden as they shouldered it before.

Now, in discussing this matter with General MacBrien I took it up from every angle. I asked him what the effect would be on the militia if we had no training. There is a certain overhead expense we must keep up in connection with the officers and organization for the training that is given every year. General MacBrien gave it as his considered opinion that if we do not provide some training for our young men we will do an injustice to the militia that this House will hasten to rectify, perhaps in three or four years, at the expense five times as great as the sum I am asking for to-day. That being the case, I leave the decision to the House. I am strongly in favour of having some training given each year to our young men. Our men who went overseas, God knows, had fighting enough. But those men have sons and brothers who are anxious to receive training and be ready to enter the permanent militia if required. If we expect to retain a militia force without that training, we may as well be prepared to abandon the service altogether.

Reference has been made to the permanent militia that did go overseas—and that did not go overseas, as one hon. member said. Let me point out that if it had not been for our trained officers you would never have got thirty thousand men across the ocean in the time you did. And many of the boys who were anxious to go were the sons of the men who had been in the permanent militia, the men who were trained in our militia camps—the camps we propose to hold this summer—were the men who were put in charge of our boys and trained them. As a result these boys were fit to go overseas in a few weeks; but without that training they would have had to remain here indefinitely and Canada would not have been able to achieve the proud position which she now occupies.

I am not a military officer, or a military man, but two of my boys trained as officers, and my experience was that an officer has to supplement his militia pay with a good deal of his private funds to keep up his company. The money we vote for training does not go into the pockets of the officers; they have to pay out hundreds of dollars of their own money to keep up their regiments. When it is charged that officers are living in luxury and having a lot of government money to put in their pockets, I know from my own experience that those officers spend a lot of their own money as well as all they get from the Government to keep the militia alive.

Mr. MEWBURN: With regard to this item for annual training, I concur with what the hon. minister has said, particularly with the last part of his statement. The annual pay granted for the training of our militia does not go into the pockets of the officers, as some people seem to think. I am speaking particularly with regard to the training of what is known as a city corps. For years prior to the war I do not think any city corps that trained and drew its annual drill-pay ever put one cent of the money into the pockets of its officers, non-commissioned officers, or men; that money went back to maintain the efficiency of the corps which the government did not grant sufficient funds to keep up. Since the armistice the old militia units have been pretty well shot to pieces.

I take issue with some hon. gentlemen regarding the militia which did not serve overseas in the first instance. The first Canadian contingent mobilized at Valcartier was composed, to the extent of over 98 per cent, of officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the active militia. Now the active militia are endeavouring to get on their feet once more. This annual allowance for training is the only means by which these units can rehabilitate themselves. The foundation of the old city corps was kept together during the war period by those ex-officers and others who were too old to go overseas, hoping that when the war was over the old units would come into being again. That has taken place. The officers, non-commissioned officers and men of those respective units that served overseas have to the extent of pretty nearly 90 per cent gone back to their old units again, and those officers are bringing in the new generation of our young men to educate and train them in the work, but they are not getting one cent of pay for doing so. This annual drill-pay will be contributed back to the Government in the maintenance of those units that have been a credit to the country in the past, as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church) said, and I think they will continue to be a credit to Canada as long as Canada is a nation.

I think the vote should not be cut down one cent.

Mr. CHURCH: Increase it.

Mr. MEWBURN: In fact, I should like to see it increased. As the minister goes along, he may not require the whole amount. I know last year a small percentage was spent in training simply because the ranks were not filled up rapidly; but large numbers of the units to-day, as I know personally, are up to their old peace establishment of 1913. All the more credit to them. They are not getting any pay out of it. The item of command pay is in the same category. A small allowance was given to officers commanding corps for command pay, but I do not believe that any officer in our militia ever put a cent of that money in his pocket. We have heard talk about gold lace. I would point out that any equipment officers had was paid for out of their own pockets and never a cent was contributed out of the money voted by Parliament.

Mr. LANCTOT: I have listened with a great deal of surprise to what has been said this afternoon respecting the militia of this country. The hon. member for Prince Edward Island comes nearest to my view in his remarks. I am always astonished when I contrast the attitude of a minister putting his estimates through with his attitude when he sat on the other side of the Chair. When we are on the Opposition side we have not the same views regarding expenditure. I remember very well that last year the Prime Minister of to-day found the militia vote too heavy and moved to cut it down by fifty per cent. I was pleased to support him. Now I am surprised to-day that one of his ministers should, in the first session of this new Parliament, ask for practically the same amount of money to be spent for militia purposes as was required last year. As we all know, our national revenue has in the meantime fallen off very materially. But notwithstanding that, it is now proposed to spend the same amount of money on the militia as was spent last year, although we were supposed to have been engaged in a war to end war. Not only so, but quite recently we sent representatives to the Disarmament Conference in Washington. Is it any wonder that the farmers of this country are tired of the schemes of politicians here in Ottawa to spend money for nothing?

The Minister of Militia said a few moments ago that we are spending very much more money to-day because everything is dearer. We are not surprised to learn that the pay of the militia is higher than it was in 1910 and 1911. But we farmers have also to pay more for our men than we did before the war. What do we do to meet this? We simply reduce the number of our employees. I can speak from personal experience in regard to this, because before the war I used to hire four men all the year around for my farm work at a total cost of $1200; but now that I have to pay $500 or $600 to each man I have to get along with two assistants; I cannot afford more. Now, if that is the condition with the farmer, it is equally the condition with this Government. Things have changed since 1919. We have spent, I understand, over two billion dollars, for what purpose? "To win the war" as we say in this House. Our financial condition is bad and will be for a century to come, I suppose; will any hon. member say this afternoon that we are to raise more soldiers to go into another European war? For myself, I say no. The people of my county will not be satisfied with any suggestion made by hon. members of the Opposition in this House that the militia estimates are too low. I do not like that kind of business. I do not like to receive compliments from my opponents or to have them suggest that we are not spending enough money for militia purposes. I rather think that we are spending too much, and that is what I used to say when I sat on the Opposition side. Now that I am sitting on the Government benches I have not changed my view, nor will I do so.

One of my colleagues declared this afternoon that we should not cut out the entire amount of the vote for training the young men because we have experts at the present time in the Militia Department, and we must use those experts. In reply, I may say this: I want to keep the experts, and if they are not busy during the coming spring and summer, why should they not do some training among themselves—the colonels, the majors and the generals of all kinds? And when they are tired of that training I invite them to spend a few weeks on a farm and work during haying time and harvest time. That would be great training for them.

I do not know what force would actually be required to keep peace in our territory. But our people are all good people, and I think a force of eighteen hundred men would be sufficient for the whole country. The rest of the men can be sent to the east or to the west, wherever they are needed on the farms. The farmers will pay them, so that the country will not be obliged to meet that expense, and the result will be a benefit to the country as a whole.

Mr. MORIN: In the beginning of his remarks the hon. member stated that another hon. member shared his views, and he referred to him as the member from Prince Edward Island. I think he meant the member for Hants (Mr. Martell), did he not?

Mr. LANCTOT: No, I referred to the member for King's, P.E.I. (Mr. Hughes), who said that we were spending too much money on the militia and that we should arrange to have a force no larger than necessary to keep peace within the country.

Now, when we did have a great militia force the country could afford to pay for it. In 1912 and 1913, and in the first part of 1914, the government of the day were preparing for war and we had war. Now the war is over; we have no money to spare for anything that is not necessary, and I therefore intend to move that this item of $1,400,000, in its entirety, be cut out of the estimates for this year. Let us sign an armistice for two or three years under which we shall stop spending money for nothing, and if the time comes when we have need of soldiers, we will find a way, as we did in 1914, to get the men we need.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the minister (Mr. Graham) on this item. As he spoke I recalled what took place in this House last session and the session before, when a similar item was under discussion. I could not help wishing that I had had the present minister's assistance on those occasions when I was trying to explain, in my humble way, why this vote of a million and a half for annual drill should be granted. I took the ground, it so happens, that he has taken to-day. I pointed out that the three or four hundred thousand men who had fought for three or four years in France or Flanders were, perhaps, the most finished soldiers in the world. They certainly required no more training; besides they had done their bit, if any men in this country or any men in the world had ever done their bit, and should not be asked for further services. I tried to show the House that it was advisable to bring on a new crop of trained men, and that for that purpose this money was necessary. But on both occasions hon. members now sitting opposite did not take that view of the situation. In the session before last the leader of the Opposition himself, now Prime Minister, moved to reduce this item by between eleven and twelve hundred thousand dollars, to leave, I think $300,000 odd as the amount for annual drill. And listen to his argument on that occasion. The present Prime Minister stated, page 3675 Hansard of 1920:

> I would point out that we have in this country at the present time an army of experienced men who need no drilling, men who have been through the war and have suffered its hardships. No amount of drilling in the world will make them more efficient than they are to-day, and until we are through with the work of demobilization we can well afford to dispense altogether with annual drills.

In other words, we should ask the very men whom the minister pictured in such glowing terms a moment ago—we should ask these heroes of the war to do the work that younger men should do. We should call upon them to defend the country in order that the present crop of young men that is growing up should be exempted.

[Mr. Lanctot.]

The House, I am glad to say, negatived the motion of my hon. friend the Prime Minister. It was his view then that this item should be reduced by between eleven and twelve hundred thousand dollars, and he so moved. But now he is Prime Minister; he is head of the Government that comes in with the same vote, reduced by $100,000, and there is no explanation from him of the changed situation. Last session in this House the then member for West Kent, Mr. McCoig, now a senator, who always prided himself on being a farmer member, moved that the vote be reduced by $750,000—a pretty substantial reduction. Every member of the Opposition, now sitting on the Government side, who was in the House just eleven months ago, voted for that reduction. They are there to-day, ranged behind the Prime Minister and his friends, supporting practically the same vote they condemned twelve months ago. Into the House at the present moment steps my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). He took the same view a year ago. I have before me his statement on that occasion. He said:

> But, I do humbly submit this is not the time for these things. My hon. friend the member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), himself a gallant returned soldier, the other day reminded us of an important fact. We have 400,000 trained soldiers in Canada to-day—the best material for fighting that the world has ever produced. These men can be called upon if any emergency arises.

That is pretty definite. He goes on:

> Why we should anticipate any emergency at this time it is not easy for anybody to conjecture. If there ever was a time when we had need of but little military expenditure it is to-day, and I believe the men who will be most ready to confirm that view will be the returned soldiers themselves.

That is all the difference between promise and performance. They sat in opposition a year ago and condemned the proposed expenditure. They voted loudly for its reduction and they gave the reasons I have just quoted to the House. And so for the last two sessions. What, then, must they think to-day of the Minister of Militia in their own Government who proposes practically the same vote, with just as good reasons, the same reasons as were given to the House last year and the year before, the same solid, substantial reasons, because I maintain the vote should be granted, and granted without hesitation. But what shall we say of the sincerity, of the honesty, of men who on two occasions during the last two sessions have deliberately voted to reduce? Do you wonder that some of their own followers have been misled? Do you wonder that my hon. friend who last spoke in the committee is a little disappointed? Do you not believe that he had reason for thinking when he came to the House this session that there would be something substantial by way of reduction? I am glad there is not. I am glad they have in the new minister a man who sees the necessities of the situation, and a man strong enough to maintain what is the proper stand in connection with it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to point out to my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Guthrie) that there is something very different in the situation as it presents itself to the House this year, and as it presented itself two years ago and last session. May I remind my hon. friend that two years ago when we took exception to this vote, his government had in the estimates a vote running into several millions of dollars, I think, for the purpose of demobilization. We in opposition at that time took the position that until demobilization had been completed, until the Government had got through spending millions of dollars on demobilization, there was no justification for putting in these large amounts for the purposes of annual drill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Have you not got that vote this year?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, we have not. We may have some claims, but not for the purpose of demobilizing the men from overseas.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is just christened under another name.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not at all. At the time I speak of, the Government were still bringing men under arms from across the sea. There is nothing of that kind in the estimates at this time. There is a great difference. When exception was taken by those of us in opposition at that time to the expenditure on account of annual drill, it was because the Government was asking us at the same time to vote millions of dollars for the purpose of demobilizing men who had been serving actively. We contended that as long as we were paying out money for demobilization purposes, we should not be asked to pay further large sums for annual drill. That is a very different situation from the one that presents itself at the present time, when demobilization has been completed, and we have to decide whether we shall continue to have a militia in this country or abandon it altogether.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I cannot allow my hon. friend to get away with that statement, because it is not correct. He says that at the time we were bringing men home from overseas. I will challenge him to prove that statement. Demobilization at that time was completed, and the hon. gentleman who sits beside me (Mr. Mewburn) retired as Minister of Militia in 1919. Between 300 and 400 men were kept in Great Britain packing up material to be shipped to this country. These men were demobilized in the autumn of 1921. There may have been 200 or 300 men in Europe in the session the year before last, the session of 1920, engaged in packing up, but last session when the vote was made to reduce there was none. We were not bringing men home. The vote called the demobilization vote was not in the estimates for that purpose but it was for the purpose of paying war claims that had not then been adjusted and paid, transportation claims largely, claims with the British Government, and claims of shipping companies. Between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000 was in the estimates for that year and last year between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 was there for the same purpose. This year the Government has changed the wording of the vote. Instead of calling it demobilization they have called it "Adjustment of War Claims." It appears on page 71 of the estimates, and amounts to $8,411,800. If my hon. friend says he moved to reduce this vote in 1920 because there was a demobilization vote, I tell him that he has one there in the estimates now under a different name. If the motion to reduce was made last year because we had between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 for demobilization, I tell him that he has a larger one still in the estimates under a different name.

Why not let us have a candid statement? They were in opposition in those days and they were pandering for what they supposed was popular support; they were pandering in this House, without thinking the matter out as they should have done, for popular support, and they boldly proposed on both occasions to cut this vote down to the vanishing point, where it would have been absolutely worthless as a vote for that purpose, and on each occasion the Government had to muster its followers and vote the motion down. Twelve months have gone and they are now in power and in a position to carry out their ideas. Do you think they intend to do it? Is it any wonder that my hon. friend down there feels disappointed that he has been fooled in the matter?

Mr. LANCTOT: There is nobody to fool me in this House.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not believe anybody in this House can fool him, but he had reason to expect at all events that these deliberate actions of the Opposition only twenty-four months ago would be put in practice at the first session of Parliament. I am glad they were not put in practice. All I want to do now is to show the hollowness of the contention of the Opposition in former years, and particularly in view of what the Government proposes to do at the present moment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If what my hon. friend says is correct, then he deceived the House in the matter of demobilization, as he did in the matter of the purchase of ammunition. He told this House in regard to ammunition for artillery purposes that there was need for a very large vote running into a hundred thousand dollars or thereabouts, because the ammunition for artillery purposes had to be manufactured in our Canadian arsenals. We found out afterwards that my hon. friend was bringing in from the Old Country ammunition, high explosive shells, amounting it is estimated to $6,000,000, out of a credit which was to this country's account in the Old World. He has still to account to Parliament for that expenditure, and I will expect before this debate is over that he will do so. If what he says is true about demobilization, he deceived us in the same way in that regard, for he distinctly led us to believe that the reason why we had to vote this large sum for demobilization was because men were still overseas and had to be brought back, and our contention was, if that were true there was no necessity for voting money for annual drill in Canada.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I assume that my hon. friend will verify his statement. What I said will be in Hansard and I assume that my hon. friend will produce it. I am going to deal with the ammunition question, but as it is six o'clock it would be hardly worth while starting on it now.

Mr. FIELDING: It might be explosive.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the Chair and the House took recess.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

ESQUIMALT AND NANAIMO RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. TOLMIE moved that the House go into committee on Bill No. 6 respecting the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment. I beg leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman):

> That the House do not now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the said bill but that the said bill be referred back to the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines with instructions that they have power to amend the said bill by striking out the word "two" in line eight thereof and inserting the word "one" in lieu thereof, and by striking out the word "five" in line fifteen and inserting the word "three" in lieu thereof.

Mr. GRAHAM: Will the hon. member explain what this means?

Mr. NEILL: I will be very glad to explain. This is Bill No. 6 "An act respecting the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company". The railway in question is a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The bill grants that company authority to build a railway or rather, I should say, renews the authority for them to build this extension of a railway in Vancouver Island from a place called Courtenay to Duncan Bay, a distance of thirty-six miles, in the district that I represent. The bill extends for five years the period in which the company can build this railway which is only to be thirty-six miles long. The bill itself says the company may begin construction in two years and complete the road within five years; but as a matter of fact it really gives them five years to begin and end the construction of the railway because the company do not come, in that regard, under the ordinary provisions of the Railway Act of Canada which requires the expenditure of fifteen per cent of the value of the line within two years upon construction. That provision does not apply to the present bill, it is overridden by a special clause, so that the company really get five years in which to begin to build the railway. Now my amendment will reduce the period in which the company must begin construction to one year, and the period within which it must complete the line to three years. I wish to disavow any spirit of hostility to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in any way whatsoever. I believe they are a great and very well managed company and I would be very glad to see them running our National railways. But that has nothing to do with this situation. If the company are as anxious to build this railway as they say they are—and my constituents are equally anxious—then we are all united on the subject. In that case we want to do the Aaron and Joshua act and hold up the hands of this railway Moses who seems somewhat inclined to let the tide of railway construction, the tide of battle, go against him as in the case of Moses of old.

I can give three reasons why this railway should be built at once: In the first place the company have had five years to build it and have not done so. But apart from that, the construction of the railway would provide a great deal of very necessary work. We hear much in this House about unemployment and we hear of hundreds of thousands of dollars spent in alleviating unemployment, very largely in non-productive work the greater portion of which is a loss. Then too, there could be no more opportune time than the present to build this railway bearing in mind the question of labour. Labour is probably as cheap now as it will ever be, unless the cost of living takes a very great change of which there is no immediate prospect. In addition to that, if this enterprise were proceeded with, it would give a very great amount of very much needed work for the people in that vicinity and relieve the labour situation on Vancouver Island and in Vancouver city. As you know there is a great deal of unemployment in Vancouver at the present moment. In the second place access would be given to a great number of people who have been living there hoping, and praying and expecting this railway for something like fifty-five years. Comox Valley is one of the oldest settled districts in British Columbia. It is a very fine, fertile valley, and these people went in there many years ago with "the sure and certain hope," as the Church of England Prayer Book says, of the railway coming along, and they are living in that hope to-day. Not only that, Sir, but it would lay open to settlement large areas of fine agricultural land. These areas would be made easy of access and would be most suitable places for settlement by some of that herd of immigrants we are told it is the policy of the Government—they have a vote of something like $400,000 in the estimates for the purpose—to bring into the country. We are told these immigrants are coming along, and the Government could not get a more splendid or more fertile valley in which to locate them—if they are going to get them—than in the same Comox Valley. As I say this railway would give access to those lands.

I have cited the arguments in favour of having this railway built. Now, as to possible arguments against it. I am handicapped in that regard because I cannot think of any such arguments, and having to speak first in this discussion it is hard for me to anticipate any possible opposition. The only way in which I could anticipate any opposition is to revert back to the statements made to the Railway Committee when this matter was under discussion there. I may say in passing, Sir, that the transactions in the Railway Committee revealed to me, as a new member of the House, a somewhat remarkable condition of affairs. It appears that, according to the rules, and the dictum of a gentleman named Bourinot—who I understand is an authority and has been dead for some time—when a railway bill of this character comes before the Railway Committee there is allowed to appear before that committee and argue the merits of the case the learned counsel of the law employed by the railway in that behalf. That occurred in this case and I have no objection whatever to the appearance of the counsel in question; he did not abuse his opportunities in any way whatever. I merely state that he was allowed to present his case as fully and as often as he thought necessary. But when it came to the member who represents the district through which this railway is to run, on account of his not being a member of the committee he was not allowed to represent the views of that district at all. As a matter of fact I was able to make some observations concerning the bill because it was not known at that time that I was not a member of the Railway Committee. When it was discovered that I was not a member of the committee, owing to my honesty in not voting when a vote was taken, immediate objection was raised to my activities, and had it not been that Providence—ever kind to the under-dog—sent to my assistance an angel disguised—perhaps I should say thinly disguised—in the fleshly form of the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Martell), I would not have been able to get my amendment before the committee at all. At any rate there is the condition of the rules. It may be argued—I have heard hon. members assert that I have exaggerated the case—that even though an hon. gentleman is not a member of the committee he is allowed to go there and speak his mind provided he does not vote. As to that, let me say that the question was brought up in the Committee on Agriculture a few days ago and it was decided—absolutely decided on the authority of the gentleman I mentioned a moment ago, Bourinot (page 469)—

"That a member of the House who is not a member of the committee has no right whatever to attend such committee for the purpose of addressing it, or putting questions to the witnesses, or interfering in any way with the proceedings."

If that is one of the rules which I and other new members are supposed to receive with reverence, to handle with loving care and to hand on, unimpaired, to our successors, then I would suggest that the sooner we have a bonfire of those rules the better, and let us start out with a fresh set of rules more in accord with those that would be common and customary in an ordinary commercial or industrial undertaking. Let us get a little more down to business and have a little less of these rules. As I have said before, I understand the author is dead, so he will not feel hurt at any criticism, but I think he should have taken some of those rules with him.

I now propose to deal with the arguments advanced before the committee. I think, however, "argument" is an ill-advised word, for argument suggests, does it not, a basis of fact and a superstructure of logic? I could not help thinking, when I heard the statements made in that regard, that both the logic and the facts were somewhat wobbly. I will not call them arguments; I will call them statements made in that connection. The first one was that this was part of a big railway, a main railway I think was the expression used, from Victoria at the south end of the island to the north end of the island; that 140 miles had been built, and there was a general impression given that there was a vigorous and aggressive building movement going on and that, whenever they had a moment to spare, they turned and dug a few more miles of this railway. It is true that the railway runs from Victoria; but it does not run to the north end of the island, and the company has not a charter to do that. It stops at Duncan's Bay. The railway has been built from Victoria to Courtenay, 140 miles having been built recently, we were given to understand. Of this 140 miles, 75 miles were built under the terms of the union of British Columbia with the confederation. That takes us back a good many years, and it was built, not by the Canadian Pacific, but by a gentleman by the name of Dunsmuir who received, for the building of those 75 miles of railway, a large sum, I forget the exact figure, but practically enough to build the road, and he also received a grant of practically one-third of Vancouver island. This grant took in everything, base metals and coal mines as well. One of the members for Vancouver the other night, in speaking of the natural resources of British Columbia, mentioned this land grant to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway, and he said that it was conservatively estimated as being worth $25,000,000. When one considers that there are six or eight very valuable coal mines on the island and a vast quantity of timber and base metals, perhaps he was right; but at any rate, enough money to build the railway and $25,000,000 worth of land were paid to build 75 miles of this railway thirty-eight years ago. Therefore, I do not think it enters very much into the consideration of whether this franchise should be extended to-day or not. Twenty-eight years later, they took another burst of railway construction and they built another sixty-five miles. That was some twelve years ago; and if we are going on the same geometrical progression of railway construction, the cycle when another burst of railway construction to complete this thing will come around will, so far as I can figure it, be the year 1948. I am wrong—1946 was the correct date. About that time I fear—I will not fear, but I trust many of those men, including myself, who have waited so long and faithfully for that railway, will be in a happier country where railways will not be needed and where politicians are excluded also. In that happier clime I would hate to meet my constituents and hear them say to me: "You did not get that railway built."

Another statement that was alleged as a reason why this extension should be granted and against my proposal to shorten the period in which it would be built, was that there was a lack of funds. Lack of funds for the Canadian Pacific to build thirty-six miles of a railway in a comparatively level country! A bait was thrown out to the Progressive members who were present. It was suggested that it would not be fair to the rest of Canada for the Canadian Pacific to concentrate all their building energies on this 36 miles of railway on Vancouver island. But I think the Progressive members and other members who were present have sufficient acumen to understand that their opportunities of getting railways will not be impaired, even if the Canadian Pacific are compelled to spend their vast resources in building 36 miles of a railway on Vancouver island, the work being spread over three years. I may mention that it is supposed—I would not guarantee this—that the Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway is one of the most profitable extensions of the whole Canadian Pacific. I do not believe the Canadian Pacific, that great company with its high standing and reputation, would approve its apologists who say that it would impair its credit or finances if it built that railroad in three years instead of five. About 30 miles from this identical place, I travelled over a logging railroad 40 miles in extent, and as well built and ballasted as the Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway is, and that railway was built by that logging company without any subsidy from this House and without any fuss being made about the matter. I saw that road built simply to get out logs, and there are many reasons why it would be more advantageous to build this particular road.

Another statement that was made as a reason why they should be given practically unlimited time was—I will prove later on, that this is only a precursor of more similar bills, for there is no intention of building under this bill—"you might as well give it to them for if you do not, no one else will build the railway." There may be a certain amount of cynical truth in that statement, because, if there was any prospect of opposition, this railway would have been built long ago. We will consider that point later. The one thing that I am certain of is that no other railway company is likely to come here asking for a charter as long as the great Canadian Pacific has a blanket charter to build this line.

There is one of the best water powers in British Columbia along the line of this railway, and I am told that negotiations are going on to-day by a large English syndicate to harness that power. For that purpose they would require to have a capital of between three and four million dollars. Suppose I come here next year on account of the Hydro-Electric Company asking for a charter, what a howl would go up. I would be a destructionist, a financial Bolshevist and everything else: I would be interfering with vested interests, and I would be howled down. But why not give these people an opportunity?

Apart from that, there is another aspect to which I should like to draw the attention of the House. Some years ago, when the railway boom was prevalent and everybody was building railways, the Canadian Northern, now the National railways, got a charter on the Island to build from Victoria up to Courtenay, the place I am now talking about. They spent $3,000,000 and they got the railway graded, but no steel on it, as far as six miles from the west coast at Port Alberni. Since then they have laid steel to Cowichan lake to get out some valuable timber there. That has been done by the government; it shows that they have it in contemplation, and there is no reason to suppose that they will let the $3,000,000 which they have already spent there, lie idle. It may be in time to come they will extend it, and if they do extend it, the line will run from Victoria to Courtenay and from there north. We were told in 1896 that a vast industrial boom took place on account of the accession of the Liberal party to power. It may be—I do not know—that history will reproduce itself and we shall see another industrial boom. If that is the case, it may well be that, in the course of a few years, the Canadian National Railways may find it possible to continue the railway further north. Amongst other industries that I might mention that would be touched by that line is the anticipated radium mine of British Columbia. I am proud of it. I do not believe there is another spot on the North American continent where radium has been found except in the district I have the honour to represent. Now, radium is not found like placer gold nor is it as easily gathered and put into a suitcase; it is found in rocks and involves an expensive process of handling. It is found within ten or twenty miles of the line of this railway; and this is the day, and British Columbia the place, of unexpected development. We never know the moment some big company may take hold of it, and it might well be that if this railway is not built under this charter some other corporation might be found to build it. The most fatal objection that was raised was the one on which the lawyers and politicians are alike agreed: it was the fatal one of precedent. We find, Sir, that precedent haunts the very precincts of this House. It was stated that we had in the dim past established the precedent that two years to commence and five years to finish was the ordinary rule with regard to railways, and that because we had once laid down that rule, therefore we must forever adhere to it. Now, it would be all very well if this were a big railway, or even if this were the first time that these people were asking for this concession. But this is the second reincarnation of this railway, and it does not necessarily follow that they should have the same time in which to build and finish. They know now what they are up against and have had ample time for preparation; and if an extension is granted now they will come back two years hence, asking another extension. In any case, this custom that is spoken of with such awe and respect has been in force only for a few years; and are we never to learn from experience that if certain legislation or certain regulations do not produce the object aimed at, we should abandon hoary-headed precedent and strike out for ourselves? Are we never to take a chance? Perhaps hon. members of the Government would not be sitting where they now are if the electors, on December 6th last, had not decided to take a chance; and I think that the chance taken by the electorate was quite as great as the chance we should take in getting away from precedent now. It is yet in the womb of time whether the wisdom of the country was justified in her children on that occasion; but, I think, the chance the people took on that occasion was, if anything, much more desperate than the one I am asking the House to take to-night in abandoning precedent for once.

There is something else I want to point out. It has been the custom of this House always to defer to the findings of the Railway Committee. Word will go around that the railway committee has investigated the subject, and we must stand by their decision. At the bottom of members' minds is the idea: "It will save us the trouble of making up our minds for ourselves if we accept the findings of the committee." Well, may I remind the House of the precedent which we established quite recently? Only a few days ago there was introduced into this House a report of the Agricultural Committee in connection with the Wheat Board. That report had been unanimously arrived at in the committee; yet, when it was brought into the House it was torn to pieces, the House unanimously deciding to send it back whence it had come. But this legislation, which I am asking to have returned to the Railway Committee, was carried only by a narrow majority in a comparatively small meeting of the committee. I think, therefore, that we have ample reason for not adhering to the principle that because the Railway Committee passed on the question we must necessarily be prohibited from exercising our own judgment as well.

There is something else about the bill which more than ever convinces me that it is not intended to build under this charter, but to continue for another series of years the present state of things. We are all aware, Mr. Speaker, of the custom in connection with all these bills—and I have another one, No. 5, before me now—to insert a clause specifying the amount of bonds that are allowed to be issued against each mile of railway to be built. That clause was in the original act relating to this railway; but is it in this bill? It is not. They did not think it worth while putting it in. And they have either forgotten, omitted or neglected to put in even the customary clause giving the wretched bill a name. Are they so ashamed of this poor foundling that they have disdained to give it a title in the ordinary way? And when we find the omission of another clause with regard to the spending of 15 per cent in the two years, we are more than ever driven to the conclusion that they regard the whole thing as a stop-gap and have no intention of building under it. If they did intend to build, would they not have put in the clause about the bonds for the money to be provided to build with and would they not have given the poor foundling a name? They will be coming back two years from now and two years thereafter; and will simply regard this as a blanket charter from year to year and from decade to decade. This is unfair and unbusinesslike. It is unfair to the men who are living in that district, the pioneers who are expecting a railway; it is unfair to the men of the past, and unfair to the men of the future; for some hon. members may not realize that immigrants coming from the old country are very often misled by legislation of this character. Real estate men who have farms and lands to sell will show those immigrants this bill and say: "Look at that! There, under the imprimatur of the Government of Canada, is the assurance of a railway." And the poor deluded immigrant, unfamiliar with our system of doing business, will think this railway will be built. I have known cases where men have gone in and built a home ahead of the railway on the strength of such a promise and the railway was not built for twenty-five years. It is not fair to the people who are already there, nor to those who may come hereafter, and I am not asking for anything unreasonable. I simply want a fair and just compromise. I am not saying that we should compel them to live up to the old charter, in which case they would have to begin operations immediately; I am merely asking that they shall begin operations within one year and complete within three years.

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria City): I have listened with considerable interest to the remarks that have been made with regard to the construction of this railway. I am familiar with the conditions prevailing on Vancouver Island and particularly with the proposed route of the railway in question. The Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway is asking for an extension of the line from the present terminus at Courtenay to a point at or near Duncan Bay, a distance of some thirty-six miles. This is not through country that is not fairly well supplied, at some reasonable distance, with water communication; it is located on an island, and there are fair roads through a good part of that country. The case of the railway company was presented to the committee and thoroughly threshed out, and it received the approval of the committee. Conditions have not yet reached normal, and we know that certain expenses are high in connection with railway construction, although prices have a downward tendency; and it is only fair to grant the reasonable request made by this railway—not an unusual request either—for an extension of time in order to complete the road. There is no other railway in that section of Vancouver Island this proposed line could couple up with except the railway now in operation and having its terminus at Courtenay. I do not think there is much danger about settlers being deceived. A settler should know enough to keep his eyes open when coming to Canada, and he should be very diligent in protecting his own interests. Anybody can tell a settler that a railway is to be built in some place or other. It is the settler's business to protect himself by securing proper information. I trust the House will accept the finding of the Railway Committee and grant the extension of time.

Mr. THOMAS VIEN (Lotbinière): The question involved in this discussion has already been fully threshed out before the Railway Committee. That it was not possible for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or any other company, to build the railway is quite evident by the fact that nothing was done under the charter, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company now comes before Parliament for an extension of time. If no extension is granted, it is pretty certain that no other company will build this railway. Even if the extension is granted, it will be fully six or seven months before the promoters are ready to begin work in the field, because financial arrangements will have to be made and extensive engineering plans prepared. So it is not likely that within the twelve months' extension which my hon. friend (Mr. Neill) proposes the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be able to commence operations. As a matter of fact they are asking for an extension of two years. Neither before the committee nor before this House, has it been proven that any other company intend to undertake this work if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company default. If another company were ready to proceed, provided this charter were not renewed, then there might be some ground for refusing the request of the promoters; but in the absence of any such competitors I think the full extension of two years should be granted. Obviously, an extension of only one year would not be sufficient to enable the Canadian Pacific railway to complete construction and it would only necessitate their coming back and asking for a further extension next session. We are asking therefore that the time be extended for two years.

Mr. NEILL: If the hon. member will permit me? When he says "We are asking for an extension" whom does the "we" refer to?

Mr. VIEN: I mean the members who advocate the granting of the promoters' request. I am not surprised at my hon. friend's question. The remarks of those of his friends who were opposing the bill before the Railway Committee almost led to a row on that very same point. The aspersion that the hon. gentleman is trying to cast upon us is weak indeed. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should not curtail the extension of time which the petitioners have asked for, but should give them such further time as will allow them to commence the work and carry it to completion. If they do not begin construction within the specified time, then my hon. friend's argument can be advanced should the petitioners come back for a further extension in future.

Mr. L. H. MARTELL (Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting the motion of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). I think he has taken a very reasonable view of this proposition. The railway company have slept on their rights, so to speak, for a number of years; and whilst my hon. friend from Lotbiniére (Mr. Vien) says that if another company could show that it intended to build this road it would be a good reason for not extending this charter, I submit, in all deference to his opinion, that having this charter upon the statute books is inferentially a prohibition against other people coming in and undertaking construction. If a company were incorporated for the purpose of building this road, when they put their stock upon the market they would at once be met by the assertion—and it would be an assertion of fact—that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company already held a charter for its construction.

We all know that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is a large and powerful corporation, so much so that when a member rises in the House to oppose it, he is to a great extent courting political oblivion. But when principle is involved it matters not to me whether it is the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any humble body of people associated for the purpose of building a railway, I think they are both entitled to equal consideration. So it is incumbent upon Parliament, I submit, to see that neither directly nor inferentially is an embargo placed upon any project to build a railway. As I have already stated, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or its subsidiary, has had this charter for a number of years, and on divers occasions has come to this House for an extension of time. To-day a further extension is being sought without any legitimate reasons therefor being given.

The motion of my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni gives the petitioners an opportunity within the next twelve months to prove their bona fides. If they begin construction within the next eight or nine months, or even within the next eleven months, they will have amply demonstrated to Parliament and to the country that they are serious in regard to this matter, and I am sure they would have no trouble in getting a further extension of their charter to complete the railway.

It is all very well to have railway charters upon our statute books, but I submit that it is in the best interests of the people that no charter be granted to any individual, firm or corporation for the construction of a public utility unless ample evidence be adduced to Parliament that the promoters are financially able to begin construction of the work for which authority is sought. Because, as I have already said, if we enact legislation for the construction of a public utility, it inferentially has the effect of debarring others from building that utility. It is time we called a halt to permitting a corporation or an individual, either the mighty Canadian Pacific or the humblest individual in Canada, to hold charters for the purpose of keeping other people from building railways in a particular section, or of building them when it suits their own convenience, not the convenience of the public at large. I am not a resident of British Columbia—

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friend says "Hear, hear," but I assure him that I am a resident of a greater province—Nova Scotia. I am submitting to-night, however, the same arguments that I would submit were this a charter for a railway in my own province. What is the case of British Columbia to-day, as it has been so ably set forth by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) may be the case of Nova Scotia to-morrow; and Sir, in this age of democracy it is necessary that everything possible be done to retrieve the mistakes that have been made in the past, in order that we may at least retain for the people of the future the rights which are legitimately the rights of the people and not of any corporation.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Neill), which was negatived on the following division:

Main motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Militia and Defence—Annual Drill, $1,400,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, shortly before the committee rose at six o'clock, and while we were discussing this item of $1,400,000 for annual drill, I had taken occasion to comment upon the fact that last session a motion had been made in this House by the then hon. member for Kent county to reduce the amount then in the Estimates for annual drill by one-half, and that the present Prime Minister of Canada and those now supporting him on the Government side had solidly voted in support of that reduction. I had likewise commented on the fact that in the year previous, in the session of 1920, my hon. friend the Prime Minister had himself moved in respect to this item, which then stood at the sum of $1,500,000, a motion that it be reduced by the sum of $1,150,000, to leave it the net amount of $350,000, and I made some comment on what I think I can reasonably call the change of front on the part of my hon. friend the Prime Minister in respect to this particular item. He moved the motion himself in this House in the year 1920.

This afternoon shortly before six o'clock he attempted to make a justification of his change of position. He attempted to justify his change of attitude, because to-day his Government has laid before the House a proposal to expend $1,400,000 for annual drill, by stating that in 1920 conditions were different, that we had then a large number of men practically under arms, undemobilized, and that that fact was present in his mind when he made the motion in 1920. I endeavoured, in reply, to point out to my hon. friend that he was entirely mistaken in that view, that we had very, very few men undemobilized when he made his motion, that there were overseas only some 200 or 300 men who had not been returned to Canada. Then my hon. friend replied to me in language to which I think I may fairly take exception, or, at all events, I may ask him to justify the statement he made. He used this language:

If what my hon. friend says is correct, he deceived the House in the matter of demobilization as he did in the matter of the purchase of ammunition. If what he says about demobilization be correct, he deceived us in the same way in that regard, for he distinctly led us to believe that the reason why he had to vote this large sum for demobilization was because the men were overseas and had to be brought back and our contention was that if that were true there was no necessity for voting money for annual drill in Canada.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that I am what you would call over-sensitive in regard to language that is used in reference to myself, but when the statement is made from his place in Parliament by the Prime Minister of this country that I have deceived the House in regard to the matter of demobilization, and that by reason of my deception my hon. friend then leading the Opposition made a motion to reduce the amount for annual drill in 1920, I think I may fairly ask him to justify his statement by telling the House just what I said in justification of the charge he has made against me. I have in the interval taken a look at Hansard, and I find that on the 16th of June, 1920, my hon. friend entered upon a fairly elaborate discussion of the militia estimates. I am going to quote from what he said (Hansard, page 3646):

But the point to which I wish particularly to direct attention is the minister's endeavour to draw a comparison between the expenditure on militia and defence at the present time and amounts that were voted prior to the war. The minister seems to think that at the present time we ought to vote an amount at least equal to amounts that were being voted prior to the war. That is where I take direct issue with him. Before the war it was pretty generally anticipated; it was certainly said in official quarters that a menace was threatening the world, and that it was necessary to meet that menace by increasing our military and naval forces.

That argument was used as the ground for increasing military expenditures, and it was largely in anticipation of the danger of a great international disturbance that this country voted for military and naval purposes the sums of money which were appropriated at that time. But conditions are wholly different to-day. There is no world menace. Where does the minister expect invasion from?

May I ask the same question again to-night of my hon. friend?

The minister says that this expenditure is needed for the defence of Canada—defence against whom?

[Mr. Guthrie.]

I ask my hon. friend the same question to-night.

There is no answer; there is no answer to be made. There is not an hon. gentleman on the other side who will say that a single nation at the present time has any hostile intention or attitude of hostility towards this country, or that there is the slightest danger of Canada being invaded from any quarter. Yet the minister asks us to-day to vote a sum that will bear comparison with expenditures voted on the eve of the terrible situation which occurred in 1914. I might further point out that prior to 1914, that, to be correct, during the period of the Liberal Administration, because the minister referred to that period, we had surpluses, not deficits in our public accounts, and we had a small national debt. To-day we have a colossal public debt; we have obligations that are wholly different, and we are not in the same position to begin to meet them. It is one thing to lay out sums of money on different appropriations when there are plenty of funds in the treasury, but it is quite another matter when the nation is trying to cope with an enormous deficit and to meet obligations such as the country heretofore has never been faced with, and when conditions are such that there is the strongest reason why we should economize in every possible particular, and especially in those particulars in which no satisfactory reason can be shown for large expenditures.

But the most important consideration of all is this. The minister has spoken about the need for training camps, permanent barracks and the like. Prior to 1914, it was necessary to have men trained as soldiers; we had no trained men, or very few, but what is the position to-day? We have in this country to-day an army of trained men, the most efficient soldiers that will be found in any part of the world, so that the situation is wholly different from what it was prior to the war. The need for training to-day is not what it was prior to the war. We have the experience, knowledge, and attainments of thousands of men as our security and safeguard if there be need for such at the present time. That is a reason why, on this particular score, much could be done in the way of reducing expenditures.

I followed my hon. friend on the same date. I tried to give him full particulars, these are the particulars in which he charges I deceived the House. As reported at page 3676 of Hansard for the same day I stated, in reply to my hon. friend:

There are still undemobilized of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, of all ranks, 2,386 men out of a total enlistment of over 390,000. There is no other country which took part in the war that can show that result, or anything like it. Of these men 1,334 are employed in the depots in this country on military work; 632 are patients undergoing treatment in hospitals; 420 are on the medical and nursing staffs, orderlies and attendants in hospitals; making a total of 2,386 undemobilized out of well nigh 600,000. In addition we have in England undemobilized 36 officers, 154 men and 63 members of the air force who have been transferred to the Canadian Expeditionary Force, or 253.

That, surely, Mr. Chairman, was a plain, direct unequivocal statement of the extent to which demobilization had proceeded on that day in June when my hon. friend made his motion. Now, lest it be said that on the vote for demobilization, which is a separate vote, something was said by me, I have looked that reference up too, and I find that in reply to questions I said on the 30th June, as will be found at page 4552, that we had only between two and three hundred men undemobilized in Great Britain or overseas. I gave particulars that same day of the whole proposed expenditure of the Militia Department in connection with the thirty-eight millions for demobilization. This statement will be found at pages 4550 and 4551 item by item, showing what part of that vote was to be expended in Canada, showing likewise that $9,745,000 of it was to be expended by the Overseas Ministers in Great Britain—every detail, every particular as to money and as to men, and my hon. friend sat in his place and heard my statement. The statement made by my hon. friend in regard to me to-day is the statement which I have read to the House—namely, that my hon. friend based his motion for a reduction in 1920 upon the fact that I had deceived Parliament in connection with the demobilization vote, and that annual camps were not necessary in 1920 because large numbers of men were then coming from overseas to Canada and these were highly trained soldiers. I take exception to the language of the Prime Minister, very grave exception. If he made his statement recklessly, if he made it in a moment of heat, I suppose he can explain it. The Prime Minister has had to turn many pretty sharp corners this session. I have no doubt he had to lie awake at night sometimes to think up new excuses for his many changes of front. I do not mind what excuses he gives to the House for his latest change of heart; I do not know what has caused him to change his opinion in regard to annual drills—it matters not one whit to me. But I ask him if it is quite fair that he should seek to offer as an excuse for his change of opinion a baseless statement that somebody else has deceived the House of Commons? Did my hon. friend not take the same position last year just twelve months ago? Did I deceive him twice on the subject? I do not think I uttered a word in connection with the subject last year; if I did he will produce it to the House now. But I am dealing with the expenditure of 1920, and I have gone over the records and if there is anything else to be stated I trust my hon. friend will give it to the House. Certain it is that so far as I am aware I gave the House in 1920 the fullest, the fairest, and the most exact statement of the situation as it then existed. The true reasons for the motion to reduce annual drill by $1,150,000 in 1920 which actuated my hon. friend were given by him to the House on that occasion when he admitted to the House and which I quoted a few moments ago.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, when we speak of demobilization my understanding is that it is the reverse process of mobilization. When forces are being mobilized they are being brought out for a particular purpose; when they are being demobilized they are being disbanded for a particular purpose. I maintain that when the minister asked this Parliament to vote millions of dollars for the purpose of demobilization, the people of Canada and the members of this House understood by that term that the money was for the purpose of demobilizing the forces that had been mobilized, and if he was trying to get money for any other purpose he was deceiving the House. That is the position I took and I say it is a right and proper position. Now in regard to what I said this afternoon as to my hon. friend deceiving the House in the matter of shells, let me indicate to him just what I have in mind and—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, we have not come to that item yet; we are dealing with the vote for annual camps.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I know my hon. friend is very anxious to get away from this, but he has brought up the question himself and I think he had better stay and hear the matter discussed. He has referred to the Hansard of 1920. I shall also refer to the Hansard of 1920 when my hon. friend came before the House to secure an appropriation from Parliament for the purpose of purchasing munitions. On page 3,717 of Hansard, June 17, 1920, I find the following:

> Mr. Lemieux: Is it not a fact that the Quebec arsenal was quite sufficient for our needs, except for a certain period during the war when munitions were urgently needed on the other side? In normal times, would not the Quebec arsenal be amply sufficient for the needs of our militia?
> Mr. Guthrie: As between the two arsenals I think Lindsay would be the better adapted, but there are military reasons for maintaining both arsenals. I believe the construction of the two arsenals was advised by a high military authority, for reasons which are obvious. I believe that either one has the capacity to turn out a sufficient output in peace times. Neither of them is being operated to its capacity at the present time.

Mr. Lemieux: How many men are there at the Quebec arsenal?

Mr. Guthrie: At the present time, nearly 500. All our heavy ammunition and quick firing ammunition, as well as a large part of our rifle ammunition, is made at Quebec. Lindsay only manufactures at present small arms ammunition; I do not think it has the equipment for making artillery ammunition.

Mr. Lemieux: I am informed that the munitions turned out by the Quebec arsenal were highly commended by military authorities during the war. Is that a fact?

Mr. Guthrie: I understand that our ammunition has been very highly commended, both that made at Quebec and that made at Lindsay. I doubt if any better ammunition is turned out anywhere.

I submit that, when my hon. friend told this House that all our heavy ammunition and quick-firing ammunition, as well as a large part of our rifle ammunition, were made at Quebec, he led every member of this House to believe that the appropriation, which he was asking Parliament to vote for purposes of ammunition, was necessary because we had to get that heavy ammunition from the arsenal at Quebec. That was in 1920. I now come to the Estimates of 1921, when my hon. friend was asking Parliament to appropriate money to pay for the salaries of inspectors of munitions. What did he say? At page 2782 of Hansard of April 29, 1921, I find this statement:

Mr. Guthrie: The inspector of ammunition at Quebec is Mr. Keightley. We have two arsenals, one at Quebec and one at Lindsay. From these arsenals a large amount of ammunition has been turned out, running into many millions, and in that connection it is necessary to have a competent inspector. No loss can be greater or more consequential than that resulting from defective ammunition. The item is reduced this year by $25,000; we have brought it down to the lowest possible figure. There has been no attempt to disguise these items; they are carried now as they have been for fifteen or twenty years.

A little further down he made this statement:

Mr. Guthrie: This item covers arms and ammunition.

Mr. Power: Is this for small arms or for artillery stores?

Mr. Guthrie: About 200,000 rifles came back to Canada at the end of the war, and of these about 40,000 are at the present moment being overhauled. Many of these arms as returned were found to be more or less defective from wear, rough usage, or loss of some trifling detail affecting the serviceability of the whole arm. After these 40,000 are repaired, they will be put back into stock. The amount of money involved in stores of arms and ammunition is very large; we have the stores on hand now, and they must be kept in shape and continually examined and inspected; otherwise, on account of deterioration, heavy losses are liable to be incurred.

I submit that, when my hon. friend asked Parliament for the appropriation for that purpose, he clearly led the House to believe that all the ammunition that was required was in storage in this country at that time; that there were large quantities of it, and that, for that reason, he had to pay a large amount for salaries to inspectors of munitions, for whom he was asking a particular appropriation at that time. I ask the committee to keep together in mind these two statements—the statement on June 17, 1920:

All our heavy ammunition and quick-firing ammunition, as well as a large part of our rifle ammunition, is made at Quebec.

And the statement of April 29, 1921:

The amount of money involved in stores of arms and ammunition is very large; we have the stores on hand now, and they must be kept in shape and continually examined.

Those statements, in the absence of any other reference to munitions available from any other source, I contend, imply and can only imply that we were getting all our munitions in this country and that, for that reason, Parliament should vote the amounts that were asked for. The committee should note what the Minister of Militia and Defence of that day said, which is in the paragraph preceding the one about munitions:

About 200,000 rifles came back to Canada at the end of the war, and of these about 40,000 are at the present moment being overhauled.

He spoke about arms coming back from the other side. Nothing was said about munitions. He made it perfectly plain, or rather he tried to convey the impression that all our munitions were manufactured in the arsenal at Quebec. Elsewhere in the debate, I think it will be found that he defended the fact of the amount asked for being so large by stating that it was because wages had gone up at the arsenals where these munitions were being produced. It was in the light of that discussion, of those statements, that this House appropriated money for munitions, for high explosives for the artillery. What do we find? I have in my hand a memorandum of gun ammunition entered at the outport of Lévis, Que. I will not go any further back than May of last year. Remember it was in April of last year that my hon. friend's statement was made to the effect that we had all the stores here, and that he got the appropriation for the purpose of munitions. What do I find according to the customs entries:

Date of Entry.
31st May, 1921; primers, guncotton, howitzer shells, etc.	$ 334,340
16th July, 1921; percussion fuses, tubes, etc.	12,600
28th June, 1921; fuses, shells, quick-firing, shells, breech-loading, 8-inch howitzer	91,320
15th August, 1921; shells, cartridges and fuses	202,863
15th August, 1921; shells, cartridges and fuses	509,405
24th August, 1921; shells and cartridges	488,269
24th November, 1921; fuses, cartridges and shells	731,553
24th November, 1921; fuses, cartridges, shells, detonators, etc.	509,103
Total	$2,879,453

Or between May, 1921, and November, 1921, within this last year, a total importation, according to the records of the Government itself, of high explosive shells and cartridges to a value of $2,879,453. If there is not deception there, I should like to know where deception is to be found. If this country was entitled to that quantity of munitions, why did my hon. friend not tell the House about these matters? Why did he not, when he was asking this House to vote money for high explosive shells, say that we had a right, if we had it, to bring from the Old Country, out of some credit to which we were entitled there, munitions to the extent of $2,879,453? He said not a word about that; nor would the country have known anything of it, if it had not been that, passing the port of Lévis one day, I saw one of these Government merchant marine ships laden with high explosive shells, and made an inquiry of my hon. friend. What did he say when I spoke of the matter?

Despatch from Guelph, Ontario, October 22:

"No munitions," said Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Militia, at one o'clock this morning, "have been purchased since the war excepting a few spare parts to put in shape such material as we have in Canada."

And in further correspondence I had with the then Prime Minister and the Minister of Militia, which correspondence I shall ask to have brought down so that every hon. member may have the privilege of reading it, they admitted that these high explosive shells were paid for out of a credit to Canada's account in England. What is a credit? It is the same as an appropriation by Parliament. It represents the money of the people of the country; it represents what the people have paid out in the form of taxation one way or another. It is out of that money that this $2,879,453 worth of high explosive shells has been paid. What is to be done with these shells? Of the shells I saw, every box was marked "To be fired or destroyed before June 1925"; otherwise they would be of no value. My information went to show that these shells have been sent all over the country, deposited not in one province but in half a dozen provinces; and I am told, I believe rightly, that the only place in Canada where the militia would think of firing them is the camp at Petawawa where the artillery practise. Whether I am right or wrong in that regard I stand ready to be corrected. But the point is this: we have bought, according to government records, a couple of million dollars' worth of high explosive shells, representing one-fifth of the whole appropriation which is asked for the department for this year. What are we to do with these shells? I am told that they are no good for ordinary practice; and they must be destroyed, according to the indications on the boxes themselves, within a certain period. I shall place on record the statement my hon. friend gave me, and which came from his department, when I wrote him inquiring what had been ordered. This is only a part of the quantity that has been imported. Earlier in the same year, as far back as July 15, 1920, I find that there was an importation of shells and cartridges to the value of $355,865. Not a word was said to this Parliament about any shells or cartridges having been brought from England at that time, but Parliament was asked to vote money in order that this very class of thing might be purchased from the arsenals in Canada which, according to the statement of my hon. friend, made all the heavy artillery munitions. Here are the munitions received from Great Britain, according to the schedule he has given me:

Now, I am informed, from what I believe to be an expert and reliable source that the actual value of these munitions is in the neighbourhood of over $6,000,000, and these are high explosive shells all of which have been brought into this country within the last year or two. They have all been brought into Canada by the Government Merchant Marine, the cost of their transportation being charged to the people of the country. The shells had to be unloaded at Quebec and Levis and distributed over the country at great cost. I believe that at the present time these shells are being gone over by officers of the Militia Department, and that there is still considerable expense involved in connection with their storage and inspection. Now, I leave it to my hon. friend to explain how it is that he never made mention, in any phrase or word to this Parliament, of any right on the part of Canada to shells or munitions of the kind, when asking Parliament to vote moneys for the purchase of munitions; why he told the House, when asking for an appropriation, that we made all our artillery ammunition in this country; and how in accounting for the use of public money at a time like this, he can justify such a waste.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let me refer to the first matter. My hon. friend has put forward what, in my judgment, is a very, very, lame excuse for the language he used this afternoon. He has not attempted to justify it. I am going to put myself in the judgment of the House in regard to this whole incident. But when a man in the position, and of the ability, and intelligence, of my hon. friend puts forward the lame excuse in this House, that the trouble arose because he always believed demobilization was the opposite of mobilization, and consequently was misled by something I said, such an excuse is ridiculous. He sat within twelve or thirteen feet of me, when I explained to him every particular, every item, told him where every man was both here and overseas. Does he insinuate that he moved to reduce this item because he was misled, because he thought the demobilization was still going on and was completed? It would have been much more fair, much more candid on his part, much more manly, I think also if he had told the House: I did make that motion to reduce this item in 1920 just for the reasons that are stated in Hansard, and I was not misled. But I am going to leave myself entirely in the judgment of the House and let the House decide upon a review of all the facts. However, such is the lame excuse which the Prime Minister puts forward to justify his change of front. He has turned some sharp corners this session,—perhaps this is the sharpest corner he has had to turn. I still think the manly way would have been the best way for him to have explained his difficult position.

Now, in regard to the other matter, I absolutely deny the charge that I in any way misled or deceived the House in regard to ammunition shipments and had my hon. friend, the Prime Minister, not gone to Levis and become alarmed and over excited at what he saw there, we never would have had this tremendous ado about something which is capable of a very simple and very satisfactory explanation. The explanation has been given to my hon. friend by me in written form, but he has not seen fit to use it to-night. Even after he received that explanation during the late campaign he did not see fit to use it, but he went from platform to platform shouting at the top of his voice as he did in the city of Guelph according to the report in the Toronto Globe: This ammunition matter constitutes one of the gravest political scandals, if not one of the gravest political crimes, that was ever committed in the Dominion of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are a good many "hear hears" by members who don't understand and I am going to explain the matter briefly to the House. The shell transaction took place before I became Minister of Militia, but I do not seek to shield myself on that account. I have concerned myself enough about it to make inquiries from Sir Edward Kemp, who was at that time Overseas Minister of Militia, and also of my hon. friend from East Hamilton (Mr. Mewburn) my predecessor in office, in whose time the whole transaction took place. I have also gone to the trouble of ascertaining definitely from the Deputy Minister of the Department—who is present on the floor to-night—and from the chief of the general staff, who was personally concerned with the matter, all the facts I could possibly gather.

When I stated in the newspaper interview quoted by my hon. friend and which I gave over the telephone at one o'clock in the morning, that no ammunition had been purchased since the armistice down to date, I said what was absolutely true, or else the officials in my department had not told me all that was going on. The statement was absolutely true—not a dollar's worth of ammunition had been bought. Ammunition had certainly been manufactured in the government arsenals but none had been purchased since the armistice.

How did this matter arise? When the armistice came, it came suddenly. Canada, like the other allied nations, did not know there was going to be a sudden cessation of hostilities on November 11. We, like the other allied nations, were preparing for a year or two years more of war, and we were accumulating large stocks of warlike material of every kind—guns, ammunition, shells, all kinds of military equipment, clothes, medical stores and the like, and when the armistice came we had tremendous quantities of all kinds of military supplies on hand in France, in Belgium and in Great Britain; we had also a tremendous supply in Canada.

Let me deal first with the supplies overseas. The practical question immediately arose: What are we going to do with all these stores? How shall we dispose of them? In ordinary peace times our militia could not use them in a generation, no, I have been told by the officers of the department that we could not use them in two or three generations. A great deal of that war material will deteriorate by lapse of time just as in the case of these high explosive shells which so alarmed the Prime Minister, and which bore on the containers instructions that they were to be used before a certain fixed date, otherwise they would go bad, and be of no use whatever.

What then were we to do with this large accumulation of warlike stores? There is the technical and proper term, and that is the term I have used from time to time in this House. What was Australia doing? What was New Zealand doing? They could not use their tremendous accumulations, nor could we use ours. We simply pooled them all. We all turned our warlike stores over to the British government, and the British government took records of them and agreed to store them for us until some final disposition could be decided upon. We knew we could make use of some of them in our militia in Canada, and the overseas ministry, presided over at that time by Sir Edward Kemp, and General MacBrien, one of the most capable officers this country has ever turned out, and with some others, acting on behalf of Canada, determined that the best course to take was to withdraw from this tremendous surplus store of our own supplies what we could utilize in militia training in Canada. Thereupon lists were prepared of such part of that military equipment, including guns, munitions and all kinds of warlike stores, which it was considered we could use in this country. After these lists were prepared and submitted to the British War Office, they said in regard to guns: We will hand over to you absolutely new guns to take the place of your guns which have seen service, because we have a tremendous stock of new guns on hand, and we will take yours over at inventory prices. For use of those guns we selected a supply of appropriate ammunition.

If one branch of military science has been developed during the war more than another it was the artillery branch of the service. Guns which we were using in Canada at the beginning of the war became absolutely useless as the war progressed. We had to have new modern guns. New guns require new ammunition—high explosive ammunition—and such ammunition had not previously been manufactured at any of our government arsenals. What was the use of eighteen pounder high explosive guns if you had no high explosive shells? We had the guns, and we drew out of the general pool as part of our share a sufficient quantity of shells for those guns for the use of our militia troops in annual training.

Mr. VIEN: Will my hon. friend allow me a question? Do I understand him to say that no high explosive shells, either of the eighteen pounder or higher calibres, were manufactured in Canada?

Mr. GUTHRIE: None were manufactured in our arsenals. We had no machinery for the manufacture of them, so the Superintendent of Arsenals has reported. I understand such shells were made in Canada by some of the munition plants, but I am talking of the government arsenals. We drew out such material as we could reasonably use, and I admit that to the ordinary civilian mind the list appears to be a pretty long one, but if the hon. Prime Minister will consult the Minister of Militia, or the Deputy Minister, or the Chief of Staff, I think he will find that under modern war conditions we had a reserve of just one day's artillery supplies in this country. That is what we have—one single day's supplies. I have received a written memorandum from the Chief of Staff to this effect. It is not a very heavy supply of reserve artillery ammunition under modern war conditions, is it? I do not understand the technique in many of these matters, and therefore I have to be guided by what competent officers tell me, and such is the information I have received, upon very high authority.

Well, we selected what was coming to us, or rather what General MacBrien and his committee of officers in England thought was proper for us to have for militia training. My colleague, the then Minister of Militia (Mr. Mewburn), and the Overseas Minister of Militia, Sir Edward Kemp, both agreed upon the matter, and the question then was: How were we to ship it out to Canada? Immediately after the war we could not get shipping, but as shipping later became available all of this war material, including guns, ammunition, and all kinds of military equipment, was from time to time sent forward to Canada. There was a great lot of it we could never use in Canada. What did we do with the surplus? We were in a bad fix in regard to a lot of our equipment unless some other government would take it over. We could never use it in Canada. Finally the British government agreed to take the whole surplus off our hands. A valuation was made of it, and the War Office allowed us, I think, three million dollars or thereabouts for the balance of our equipment which we did not desire to bring back to Canada. It was all purely a question of salvage. What, I ask, was the best thing to do under all the circumstances. Was it not better to sell the surplus to the War Office and bring back to this country such portion as we could reasonably use? Many of the guns which we decided to bring back had never been seen in Canada before, or, indeed, any guns like them. The ammunition for these guns had never been in Canada before, or anything like them. Bringing the guns, we would need the ammunition. My hon. friend the Prime Minister in some of his speeches assured his audience that some officer in Ottawa had told him that high explosive shells were never used in artillery practice or training. If he had gone to Petewawa or Sarcee or Camp Hughes in 1921 when the troops were there, he would have found them firing 18-pounder high explosive shells. If he had gone to Petewawa last year he would have found the same thing, and if he will go there this year when the artillery is in training he will see our troops firing the identical shells that he saw landed at Quebec last October, brought here for the purpose of training the Canadian militia. What were we to do with our surplus war material if we did not use it in that way? We used what we could—we saved that money to the country, because otherwise we would have had to purchase or manufacture additional war material—and what we could not use in our militia we got the government of Great Britain to take off our hands at a valuation of $3,000,000. In addition, of course, we had on hand this tremendous supply of war material here in Canada, sufficient to carry on the militia of this country for thirty or forty years under peace conditions. We did the very same thing in Canada as we did in England; we selected out of these unused stores as much as we could reasonably utilize in our militia before it should rot or become worn out through old age, and we stored it in the various depots throughout Canada. But there was a large surplus which we could not use in many years and we handed this surplus over to the War Purchasing Commission, who sold it for the best price obtainable—something like seven or eight millions of dollars.

This is the story of the so-called shell scandal, and that is the whole of it. That is the story of the shipment of shells which so excited my hon. friend the Prime Minister during the late campaign. Is there anything wrong about it? There is a little quibble about a word in Hansard; perhaps I had better explain that circumstance. In recent years we have maintained two arsenals, one at Quebec, which is equipped with machinery to turn out certain kinds of artillery and rifle ammunition; another at Lindsay, Ontario, where rifle ammunition only is manufactured—this is the only kind of ammunition which the machinery there will produce. Certain kinds of artillery ammunition can be made at Quebec. All the artillery ammunition which we manufacture in Canada we do make at Quebec; none of the artillery ammunition made in Canada is made at Lindsay. That is the idea which I intended to convey in the language I used as quoted to-night by the Prime Minister. I was asked how many men were employed at the various arsenals and what were they making, and I said: "All the artillery ammunition is made at Quebec." I should have said: All that we make in Canada is made at Quebec; none is made at Lindsay. But it is upon that mere quibble, upon that single word, my hon. friend the Prime Minister has had the effrontery to get up in this House and rest his whole case.

May I explain again the matter of the demobilization vote. During the war none of our war expenditure was charged to the Militia Department; it would not have been fair to so charge it. While active hostilities were proceeding, all such expenditure was charged to a vote called "war appropriation." All supplies, all stores, all guns, all transport—everything was charged to the war appropriation vote, nothing to the Militia Department. We were at war; it was war money we were spending, and a special report of the expenditure from time to time was laid on the table of the House giving every item in detail. I myself laid either one or two such reports on the Table, and they are still available. At the end of the war we adopted a special vote called the demobilization vote. By act of this Parliament we defined what "demobilization" should include. This act is 9-10 George V, chapter 33. It provided that a certain sum should be appropriated not exceeding $250,000,000, towards defraying any expenses incurred by or under the authority of the Governor in Council during the year ending March 31, 1920, for the following purposes:

(a) the defence and security of Canada;
(b) the conduct of naval and military operations in or beyond Canada and the demobilization of the Canadian forces;
(c) the promoting of trade and industry, and transportation facilities therefor;
(d) the carrying out of any measures deemed necessary or advisable by the Governor in Council in consequence of the war; and
(e) payments made or expenditure incurred during the fiscal year ending the thirty-first day of March, nineteen hundred and nineteen, for the purposes mentioned in The War Appropriation Act, 1918, and in excess of the amount authorized by the said act.

That act passed for the first time in 1919, and, I think, was re-enacted the following year and, the next year again in the Appropriation Act. Yet a man of the intelligence and parliamentary experience of the Prime Minister of this country comes before the House to-night and tries to lead the House to believe that he did not know what the demobilization vote was. Well, there is the statute. Why did he not read it? I have no doubt he heard it discussed in the House at least twenty times during each session; since it was passed. The demobilization vote was a continual subject of discussion. I think my hon. friend himself was here in the session of 1919, when the act was passed. Surely his professed ignorance as to what demobilization included makes the excuse he has tried to offer in regard to my first objection a very lame one indeed.

Now, I have given a full account of the "shell scandal" from the point of view of the Government of that day. All the records in connection with the whole transaction are in the Militia Department. The overseas papers are all in Canada now; the overseas minister relinquished his office some time before the Government was defeated and his records will be found in the department. All the particulars are there, and the Prime Minister, if he wishes to do so, can delve into them to the bottom. The same officers are in the department to-day as were there when I was in office, and full information can be had from them. If my hon. friend can find anything wrong in the transaction, anything unbusinesslike in the transaction, anything deceitful in the transaction, let him find it, and make it known to the House. I for one am prepared to say that in anything the Militia Department did in that connection it acted wisely and in the interests of the people, and the Government did wisely to conclude the arrangement with the British War Office which I have outlined and brought that ammunition back to Canada and saved the expense of buying it in the future.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to prolong this discussion unduly, because I think this matter will be better threshed out before the Public Accounts Committee. And I hope the committee will look into it; I am sure that the papers to which my hon. friend has referred will bear examination. When my hon. friend uses the word "effrontery," I think he had better have some regard to his own behaviour. After listening to the explanation he has made of the bringing in of these thirteen or fourteen shiploads of high explosive shells, the House will not have very much difficulty in finding a characterization that will be suitable for his action. When he talks about being manly, I think he might have discarded the lame excuse he laboured under at the outset of intimating that this matter came under his predecessor in office, an hon. gentleman who did not happen to be in the Chamber at the time but who sits beside my hon. friend on other occasions. Every word I read to the House to-night was from the lips of my hon. friend. They were not the words of his predecessor; they were his own words. He has not touched the point of deception which I brought up, which was this: If he knew, as he said he did, that Canada was entitled to these shiploads of shells, why did he not tell Parliament that at the last session, when he was asking us to appropriate money for the purposes of munitions?

Why did he not the year before, if he knew this country was entitled to munitions amounting to $6,000,000 or more from the other side,—why did he not tell Parliament then? I tell my hon. friend that the people of this country will not believe that it was a mere matter of accident that he did not tell this House that we were entitled to all this quantity of ammunition from the other side if we were so entitled. That will not go down with the people of Canada, and my hon. friend would be the last person to accept any such statement from anyone else that might happen to make it. Altogether, there were I think thirteen or fourteen Merchant Marine shiploads of these shells brought into this country. My hon. friend says that they were all obligated for during the time that his predecessor was in office. According to his statement he knew that, and yet he told the House absolutely nothing about it, but came before the House and asked to vote a sum of money for artillery ammunition, telling us that all the artillery ammunition was made in this country and that the money was needed on that account. All of the shells that came in have come in since the debate in which my hon. friend made his statement to the House.

Now in regard to these being our stores, it may be perfectly true, as was said, that there was a certain pooling of supplies after the armistice and that Canada was entitled to draw what she needed out of that pool, but there was a financial settlement made later, according to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Militia himself, which placed to Canada's account a certain credit. That credit represented the money of the people of this country, and if I am not wrongly informed, I think the minister's letter will show that these shells have come out of that credit. He talks about our own stores. If these shells to the extent of $6,000,000 or more in value, had not been brought in Canada would have had to its credit $6,000,000 more on the other side.

10 p.m.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How? That was our equipment. How would we have had $6,000,000 for it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Was there not a financial settlement made in 1921?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The financial statement of 1920 included this. This was our material. We took back what we wanted of it, and the rest we sold for about three million to the British government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All of this represented material which could either have been retained in the possession of Canada as stores, or credited as cash.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who would buy it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In the balancing between this country and the—

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is a case of sale.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has told us he brought stores over here and turned them over to the Purchasing Commission, for sale in this country.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. That was the supply in Canada that was sold.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It comes pretty much to the same thing. If I understand my hon. friend now, what he did was to turn over to the Purchasing Commission supplies that we had here. The Purchasing Commission sells them, and then he brings out these supplies from the Old Country to take their place.

Mr. GUTHRIE: All we had in Canada that we could not utilize we handed over to the Purchasing Commission, and they sold it for approximately $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. All we had in England that we considered we could utilize in our militia we brought back to Canada and what we could not utilize, we sold to the British government for about $3,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I said, I think this is a matter that can be better gone into and threshed out by a committee than at this particular moment. My hon. friends may smile, but I think it is still owing to this House that the ex-Minister of Militia should explain why, if Canada was entitled to these supplies, if she had them in her possession at the time, he told this Parliament nothing about it. He should also explain why he asked of this Parliament, and accepted from this Parliament, appropriations for the purchase of munitions when, according to his present statement, we had these very munitions in our possession.

I wish to say this further, and I think this is a matter that can be decided at the present time irrespective of anything else: The quantity of high explosive shells that he has brought into this country is far in excess of any use that can possibly be made of them by the militia of this country. Apart from the questionable nature of the transaction, these shells have cost us an enormous sum in the matter of transportation and distribution. They are costing this country at the present time a large sum on account of inspection and storage, and I venture to say that they will not be used but will be destroyed before the time for which they are due. Now perhaps my hon. friend will tell the House just why he said nothing whatever about any munitions to which we were entitled when he was asking us to vote money for munitions and when he knew that after his appropriations had passed he was going to bring in ship loads of these munitions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When the vote for munitions came up, I did inform the House that a certain amount of military stores—that would include munitions—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well would it not? On one occasion I defined what the term military stores included. The vote I asked from the House was fully explained, in the printed estimates last year, a copy of which I hold in my hand, just as it is explained in the estimates this year. You will find in those estimates specifications of every kind of ammunition for which the vote was taken, just as you find it for this year. What we selected in England was largely what we did not have in Canada, and what we did not propose to manufacture here. A very large part of it is what we could not make with our present equipment. I suppose, had I been specifically asked whether the term military stores included ammunition I could have said yes. I certainly mentioned guns, and I think I described some of them. I certainly mentioned other military equipment, but I was not asked specifically in regard to shells. When I presented the estimates and asked for the vote, I gave the exact specifications of what we proposed to make with the money Parliament voted to us, just as it is set forth in the estimates to-day.

Mr. POWER: May I respectfully suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the discussion which has been going on for nearly an hour has been out of order and could have been held much better under another item, that of Ordnance, Arms, etc.

The item which we are at present discussing is an item of $1,400,000 to be devoted to annual drill and training of the militia. Last year when this item came before the House, the then member for Kent, now a member of another House, moved that the item be reduced by the amount of $750,000. At that time a large number of members now sitting on this side of the House supported the motion of the hon. member for Kent that $750,000 be struck from the vote. In order to be fair to the government of that day, we thought that $750,000 was a lot to ask a Tory government to take from military expenditure, but to-day the Government in power is supported by members who, at any rate during the last campaign when they were in opposition, announced that they were anti-militarists. In order to give them and the Government an opportunity of showing that the principle which they advocated in opposition will be the same principle which they advocate when in power. I move, seconded by my hon. friend from Laprairie (Mr. Lanctôt), that this item be reduced by $1,100,000. I would move that it be reduced by the sum total of the vote, but perhaps there may be some small outstanding accounts which require to be paid, and I would not wish to deprive any of the citizens of Canada of their just recourse against the Government in case there is any money due. In moving this amendment to the resolution I would suggest that we are opposed to such an expenditure because, in the first place, we have no money for such a purpose. We have been told time and again by the members of the Opposition and by our friends the Progressives that the country is on the verge of bankruptcy. If such is the case we surely have no means that will permit us to indulge in useless expenditure, and expenditure on militia camps, or for military training, at the present time is, to my mind, a useless expenditure. I understand from the minister that we have reduced the period of training from sixteen to nine days. I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that nine days' training is not sufficient for the making of a soldier and cannot be of any use for that purpose. We heard last year from distinguished soldiers —the then member for Skeena, Mr. Peck, the then member for Edmonton Mr. Griesbach, and others, who have held high rank in the army that it took six months steady, continuous and intensive training to make a man fit to be placed on the fighting line. I submit that nine days training—one day of which is spent in going to, and one day in returning from, the camp, while Sunday is devoted to church parades in any God fearing province—means that we really have only six days in which to teach men to form fours. That, I think, is not sufficient and I submit it is not in the best interest of the country that we waste our money in merely giving a holiday to those who can find any useful employment in the country.

I would go further and say that there is no necessity, even though it were useful, for such military training to-day. It was pointed out by my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) that in these days we hear nothing but reports of peace conferences on disarmament, and we spent some thousands of dollars in sending a representative to the Disarmament Conference in Washington. The whole world is talking of disarmament, and we have treaties between the most important powers tending to that end. As has been pointed out for years by members on this side, we are in no immediate danger from any enemy. Last year the then Minister of Militia stated that the militia estimates had been cut down to the lowest point consistent with safety. I repeatedly asked him the question—safety from what, safety from whom? From whom are we liable to attack? Who is about to attack us? The minister could not give me a reply at that time; and I do not know that he can give me a reply to-day. I think it is well known and clearly understood that there is no immediate danger of this country being attacked; that we do not need to at once begin to train the youth of Canada, and that further, the training of young people in the usages and the glorification of war will do more to make new wars than any other propaganda. I say, Sir, that if you teach the youth of this country to use arms, that if you constantly hold before them that the supreme and the sovereign means of settling any difficulty is by the arbitrary method of force, you will lead them to the conclusion that there is no means of obtaining truth and justice in this world but by the use of force. So that for the three reasons I have mentioned: First, because we have no money; second, because such training would be useless, and, third, because there is no necessity for it, I very reluctantly—because I think the members of the House who know me realize that I am a very strong party man; I believe in party government, and I believe in Liberal party government above all party governments, I am very reluctantly obliged in order to be consistent with my stand on former occasions and with what I have said throughout the country and particularly in my own constituency during the last election, to ask for this reduction in the estimates.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment moved by Mr. Power that the item of $1,400,000 for annual drill be reduced by $1,100,000. Shall the amendment carry?

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Chairman, the duel of bomb-throwing we have witnessed has been very interesting, and when we who are new to this theatre of war see the great vigour with which the bombs are thrown, and hear the whiz of them in the air as they pass over the green carpet, we feel that there is really going to be something doing some of these times. But we are disappointed to find that the bombs are always duds and that nothing really does happen.

I think there never was a time when the people of Canada were looking for a lead, a real lead, as they are to-day, a real lead in progress not towards war but towards peace. I think the people are heartily sick of war and talks of war, and particularly sick of voting for war expenditures. When it is noted that the total amount to be voted for the Departments of Justice, Health and Labour, and the government of the Yukon Territory, are altogether $26,701.66 less than what is asked for annual drill, it does seem that too much is being demanded for the last named purpose. Of course, it is quite true that someone will be thrown out of pleasant employment if we drastically cut this estimate; but I think the world will go on just the same, certainly Canada will go on just the same, if we do cut it most drastically. I think, too, that the first thing to be considered by us who are the delegates of the people of Canada—we are supposed to be their delegates at least—is: what do the people want? What would the people whom we represent like to see us do on this occasion? I believe they would like to see us make a drastic cut in these expenditures. For that reason I am going to support the amendment that has been suggested by our military friend who has just sat down, and I am glad the gentlemen on the Government side are proving themselves this evening so favourably disposed to reductions of this character.

Mr. HOEY: I would like to ask the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, if it would not be possible—in view of the reduction in the cost of living, in view of the increased purchasing power of the dollar, and in view of the fact to which my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has already referred, that this decrease is more apparent than real—to reduce this item of $1,400,000 by $400,000. I think we might perhaps agree on a compromise of that kind. I make the suggestion because I have in my possession, as the Minister for Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment (Mr. Béland) is already aware letters from men who have recently developed tubercular trouble but who are not considered eligible to make any claim for remuneration. I am of opinion—and I should like to test the committee in this matter—that this money could be better spent in looking after the fatherless, the widows, and disabled soldiers who were stricken and maimed in the great conflict than spent in this way. In view of what I have stated, I think this item of $1,400,000 could be reduced by $400,000, and I do not think anybody would suffer in the interval. Our paramount duty at the moment is not to provide for the training of men until we have seen to it that men disabled in the great conflict are adequately looked after.

Mr. GOULD: I have noticed with some interest the co-operation which is taking place between the ex-Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Guthrie) and the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Graham). What one says the other appears to corroborate. Incidentally, even when the civil government estimates of the department were before the House, I was quite interested in noting that the ex-Minister of Militia and Defence tendered his services to the present Minister of Militia and Defence, advising that the list was complete; that it had been reduced to the lowest possible point. It seems to me that we in this House should ask the question: Who are the advisers of the minister? As a matter of fact, I have asked questions similar to this on several previous occasions while the civil government estimates have been before the House. There must be, in the Government or in the various departments, individuals who advise the ministers, and it seems to me that the time has arrived, in the annual protest which we make on the floor of this House against gross expenditures of money, when we must issue notice to those individuals who advise the ministers in their departments, that there is, throughout the country, a strict demand for economy, and that the people are going to see that they themselves who furnish this money have representatives or advisers in connection with the spending of that money, who know the position thoroughly. That is, the individuals who are the advisers must take the dual position of understanding the stand of the people who furnish the money as well as of understanding the spending of the money. This is not a newly-found fault or idea with me. It appears to me that the individuals who advise have said unto themselves: "Oh, well, Parliament will provide the money; all we have to do is to find the means of spending it," and they have not had a proper conception of the attitude of mind of the people who, away back home, are watching the activities of the people here, and who are wondering if those whom they have sent to Parliament are going to vote these huge sums of money simply upon the request of those who are, perhaps, the advisers of the ministers.

I recollect a question which I asked last year of the then Minister of Militia and Defence. My question which had to do with Military District No. 12, which is located in Saskatchewan, was if it was the intention of the minister to discontinue Military District No. 12? My question was prompted by the fact that this district had been established during the war period upon the distinct understanding and promise that it would be discontinued immediately upon the termination of the war. The Minister of Militia and Defence replied to my question by stating that Saskatchewan had proved to be such a good recruiting ground that they had decided to keep the district in operation. It was news to me and to the people back home that the part of this country from which I come, supposedly at that time filled with Bolshevists, should be accounted by the Minister of Militia and Defence as a good recruiting ground. Certainly, that was an inconsistent position, and we are justified in assuming and believing, from the reply of the minister, that he was capable, in that respect, of taking a somewhat dual attitude. That military district is still in existence, and I have some figures which I wish to place on Hansard, not particularly for the benefit of the gentlemen in this chamber, but for the people back home who will tomorrow read Hansard. I have made complaints on the public platform that I thought there was extravagance in this department, and I want to cite a few figures in relation to Military District No. 12. I have stated on the public platform that I believe an undue proportion of the moneys voted was going to officers, and I have in my hand figures to show the proportion. In Military District No. 12, that is in Saskatchewan, we have:

18th Battery, C.F.A., 3 officers, 3 N.C.O's, 19 men.

21st Battery, C.F.A., 4 officers, 7 N.C.O's, 42 men.

44th Battery, C.F.A., 4 officers, 8 N.C.O's, 43 men.

77th Battery, C.F.A., 3 officers, 9 N.C.O's, 85 men.

12th Brigade, C.M.G., Headquarters staff, 4 officers, 1 N.C.O.; No. 1 Company, 2 officers, 7 N.C.O's; No. 2 Company, 6 officers, 5 N.C.O's, 13 men; No. 3 Company, 5 officers, 8 N.C.O's, 60 men.

12th Signal Company, C.S.C., 5 officers, 11 N.C.O's, 57 men.

I might say that the other military districts, in many cases, show the same proportion, and, in my humble opinion there are far too many officers for the number of men shown. I think I stated last year that they average practically one officer to every two men, and we are being asked to provide money for salaries for those officers.

The economic condition of this country does not warrant such expenditure, and the people have given a distinct mandate to us, who represent them on this floor, that they will no longer abide by the decision of those who advise the minister to ask for huge sums of money to be voted to provide for these inordinate expenditures. I have made repeated protests on the floor of this House; soon I hope to see the fruits of my labour and the co-operation of others who have worked with me, in the reduction of the estimates of this department of Government. I am pleased to link my forces with those of the hon. and gallant member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) when he asks for a reduction in these estimates. I am very sure that, under the present economic conditions of this country, under the wish and will of the people, expressed because of the promises made throughout the length and breadth of Canada by us who asked that the confidence of the people be reposed in us, the time has arrived when the people have a right, in this first meeting of a new Parliament, to demand that these expenditures should be reduced. Consequently, I feel obliged to vote for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. RINFRET: It is rather an unusual spectacle to find the Government in discussion over a certain matter with its own friends, and the situation was made even more interesting this afternoon when it was found that the Government, on this point, was receiving support from members of the official opposition. But that is a situation which is likely to arise when we have a sudden change in government. Hard as the new administration may strive to drive away from the methods of the old regime, yet members on this side may find that they are not driving fast enough, and they may ask for more radical reforms. I quite understand the position in which the minister finds himself. When he took charge of the office he found an established department, an established staff, and fixed customs. And I will give him credit for the fact that he at once proceeded to use the pruning knife and was able to announce that he would reduce his estimates this year by over a million dollars. The significance of this reduction is fully apparent when it is remembered that he has to meet statutory increases in salaries, ranging as high as half a million dollars. If we recall, however, that not later than twelve months ago we on this side moved to reduce a similar estimate by 50 per cent, the Government must not be surprised if it finds, even on this side of the House, some members asking for a substantial reduction. There is no sort of economy more to the liking of the people than any saving that can be effected in the Department of Militia, unless it be in the Department of Naval Service. I heard this afternoon, in regard to this item, the argument that after all we are not spending more than we did in 1910, because the value of the Canadian dollar has depreciated. Well, we must bear in mind, along with that fact, the different conditions that existed in 1910. Then we were rich and prosperous; we had surpluses and could spend, not only on urgent matters but also on useful works even though they were not of immediate necessity. Such is not the case now. Last year we had to face deficits amounting to some $200,000,000, and although the Government this year has reduced expenses to a large extent, I regret that the revenue of the country is also decreasing; and it is possible after all that the balance sheet this year may be similar to the one we had last year. I say, therefore, that we cannot use that argument, that we are not spending more than we did in 1910, because the value of the Canadian dollar has dropped. What would you think of a business man who would argue that because he spent $15,000 some ten years ago, when his business was prosperous, he must spend $25,000 this year, when he faces bankruptcy, simply because the value of the dollar has gone down?

With regard to the matter of annual drill, I do not think we can consider this an essential part of the regular departmental work. I know that many members of the force are of the opinion that these drills in the country during the summer time are mere camp feasts or holidays, and I think it would be only proper if the holiday this year were enjoyed by the taxpayers. I am not prejudiced; I will not commit myself as regards the future; but I must say that unless a stronger argument is advanced for the maintenance of this particular institution I shall have to vote for a reduction of the vote.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Prior to the last Dominion election a certain newspaper published in this country made the prophecy that the Progressive party might not be the dog that would do the barking at Ottawa for the next three or four years, but would be at least the tail that would wag the dog. It seems to me that the tail is beginning to wag the dog just a little bit away from the old bone of contention back to the real issue before the House in the consideration of these estimates. I desire to ally myself with the motion that has been made across the floor reducing the amount from $1,400,000 to the handsome sum of $300,000. Even $300,000 is a large sum of money for this purpose, when we consider item No. 51, at page 22 of the estimates, which provides for seed, feed and fertilizer control only the sum of $275,000. I was in our western country during the Easter recess and saw some of the conditions as they exist there this spring among the farmers of my own constituency. I found more than one bank closed and the farmers unable to get loans to buy seed. More than one farmer came to me personally and asked if I would finance him to buy seed because he could not be accommodated through the banks. Yet here in our estimates we find only the small sum of $275,000 apportioned by the Parliament of Canada to the business of financing the people for seed for the important industry of agriculture. I submit that agriculture is of far more importance to the Dominion of Canada than the matter of annual drill, which includes pay, subsistence and allowances to officers and men of the active militia during training, as well as transportation and other local expenses. I think that the few thousand men who will profit by this allowance of $300,000, if the amendment carries, are a small body indeed compared with the several hundred thousand men who came from the agricultural lands of this Dominion and showed their worth during the late war.

Mr. CHURCH: If I understand the principle of responsible government, it is the duty of the Minister of Militia and the Prime Minister, and other members of the Cabinet, to defend this vote of $1,400,000 which they have recommended to Parliament. In 1920 there was voted by the House for annual drill, etc., $12,500,000, only $10,000,000 of which was spent. The reason the other $2,500,000 was not spent was that only the city units were drilled at their headquarters. It is all very well for my friends on my left to bring in an amendment like this and think it is economy. It is false economy and not in the interests of the people of this country.

Mr. HOEY: Let me correct the hon. member. The motion to reduce the vote was not moved by hon. members to his left.

Mr. CHURCH: I am glad to hear my hon. friend make the correction, but some of the sentiments expressed by hon. gentlemen of his party endorse the sentiment of the amendment. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think we are at the parting of the ways in this country in regard to militia matters. If this motion to reduce the vote were carried we might as well close up the Militia Department altogether, and it would be a sorry day for the people of Canada if that were done, not only for Quebec but for Ontario and other parts of the country as well. As I have said, the reason why the balance of the appropriation of $12,500,000, amounting to $2,500,000, was not spent in 1920 was the fact that after the war it was difficult to organize and put on a peace footing what might be termed the country regiments. The $10,000,000 expended was largely spent in drilling city corps of the large cities like Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Halifax, Winnipeg, Vancouver, etc. It was devoted to what you might call the city units in the various military districts in Canada. With the small amount of money voted last year the minister reopened the military training camps from coast to coast for the country corps. I attended the Niagara camp at the request of the commanding officer, and I cannot speak too highly of the work done there by the units in training, but I was surprised to hear the discontent among the men both of the rural and the city battalions. Some of the officers of a very fine battalion, the 31st of Grey, then under the command of Colonel Carmichael, a member of the Drury Government, and an excellent soldier and officer, told me that the returned men were getting disgusted at the cheap way the camp was run. The militia estimates were cut down, necessitating the units putting their hands in their pockets to keep things going. I heard the same complaint from men from my own city. The company funds were all exhausted during the war. The 13th battalion, formerly under the command of that fine soldier and patriot—my hon. friend from East Hamilton (Mr. Mewburn), handed over $30,000 of their funds for the recruiting of their war regiments. In a word, the various militia units after the war were bankrupt. I think 206 units attended the camps last June, and the officers who raised those units brought them into camp only 20 to 25 per cent strong because of the insufficient allowances and expenditure by the Militia Department.

I do not say it is the fault of any particular person or party, but, after all is said and done, we must keep up our defensive forces, and if any one doubts the wisdom of this he has only to go back to 1812, when we are told General Brock could not induce the old legislative assembly to grant him sufficient funds to defend the country. What would have happened to Canada if we had had no militia at that time? The legislative assembly then cut down the estimates for annual drills and defence with the result that General Brock got disgusted and is said to have written to the authorities at home requesting to be recalled. A debate similar to the present one took place in 1911, 1912, and 1913, in this House on militia estimates.

I venture to say, that more than 80 per cent of the men from Toronto in the first contingent for overseas were men who belonged to the militia, and had it not been for the military training they had received from militia units the late Sir Sam Hughes would not have been able to send over our first contingent of 30,000 men within a few months after the outbreak of war. The value of preparedness has been demonstrated over and over again; indeed, it has been stated by many eminent military experts that if the British Empire had been as well prepared on land as on sea in 1914 we would have had no war at all.

If we are to have any militia force at all we must have annual training camps, and it is undisputed that those camps today are not what they should be. The money spent on these annual camps is wisely spent, but if you whittle down this vote too much you might as well throw the money into the Ottawa river for all the good its expenditure would accomplish, as it would be inadequate to produce proper results. I do not believe the people either of Quebec or any other province are asking for this reduction. It is false economy and not true economy to reduce this vote, and I hope the Minister of Militia and the other members of the Government will arise and defend the item, as responsible government in my view requires them to do so.

Objection has been raised that these camps inculcate a military spirit. Well, in the days of stress and strain when the war broke out was it not a good thing that we had plenty of young men imbued with that military spirit? If not, we would have cut a sorry figure in the war and in recruiting and Canada would never have rendered the service she did to the Mother Country and to civilization.

Mr. HALBERT: I am sure every member fully appreciates what was done by the Militia Department during the war, and by our young men who enlisted and went overseas. But to-day we are trying to get away from war conditions, we are trying to re-establish ourselves on a peace footing. As a young member a couple of sessions ago I listened with a good deal of interest to our delegates who had attended the Peace Conference while they told us that the signing of the Peace Treaty was to end war for all time to come. We were encouraged to believe from what they said that the day had come when swords would be beaten into ploughshares and spears into pruning-hooks. I am sure we will rejoice at the dawn of a new day when disputes between nations will be settled by ballots and conferences instead of bloodshed and slaughter. Now, we have spent as Canadians a great deal of money in connection with peace conferences and conferences on the reduction of armaments, and some are wondering if we cannot reduce very largely the expenditure on the militia for a year or two in order to pay the expenses of peace conferences and peace treaties. If we are going to have peace I do not think it is a good sign to prepare for war. I do not anticipate a war in the near future, and I do not think anyone else in Canada does. If any trouble is apprehended, then our peace conferences and our negotiations for the reduction of armaments are all in vain. I think the time has come when we should devote more attention to preparing for peace and re-establishing peace than preparing for war. Now, we appreciate the militia just as much as many other people who are advocating it so strongly to-night. The member for North Toronto seems to be terribly excited over the thought that if this vote is not granted the militia will go to pieces and Canada will have no protection. Now, we have a great many trained men in Canada to-day, and in view of the present financial condition of the country we were wondering if some saving could not be made. That is the reason why some of the members on both sides are talking about this reduction.

Mr. MEWBURN: When my hon. friend says there are a large number of trained men, I assume he refers to the men who fought at the front.

Mr. HALBERT: Yes.

Mr. MEWBURN: Is it the hon. member's suggestion that in the event of trouble —and God forbid that we should have trouble—we should call on these men who went through four years of hell and ask them to do this duty again instead of its being done by newly trained men?

Mr. HALBERT: We are not looking for war, we are preparing for peace, and we are spending money for that purpose. We have men going over to peace conferences with a view of preparing for peace. I may say that I had perhaps as many friends in khaki as the hon. gentleman had, so I am not speaking from that point of view. I say I respect the militia; we want the militia, but this is a time when retrenchment is necessary. In the minister's opinion, if the military drill for this year were postponed, would it to a great extent decrease the efficiency of our militia, and what would the saving be? The hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) who is opposed to militarism, has told us that this training is for a period of six days. Well, I really do not think the absence of six days' training would affect the efficiency of the militia of Canada, which has been trained for so long. I really do not think it would for one year, but I want the minister's opinion on it.

Mr. GRAHAM: The object is not to continue the training of the boys who were overseas, but to use the officers who received that training to train new young men. I would not ask this House to vote one cent for the further training of the boys who have been trained overseas; I want to give them a rest. The suggestion that the annual drill is for a period of six days, or, in the case of the city corps, nine days, does not leave a fair impression. Some of these men might be trained a good deal longer than they get paid for training, the idea being to keep up their efficiency. My Chief of Staff, General MacBrien, who is a level-headed man and has given great service to the country, does not, as has been suggested, make his living in the Militia Department; he loves the work and has been selected above a great many for the position. Ten days ago I put the question squarely to him: If we cut out military training for one year what effect would it have? He said: "The effect would be disastrous on any attempt to maintain an organization of voluntary militia throughout the Dominion of Canada." That is the reply he gave me. I have no desire to spend the people's money, but hon. gentlemen talking of economy should remember that some economy has been practised. I venture the assertion that there has been more economy in the cutting of these estimates than has been exercised by any business man in the House in connection with his annual expenditure during the past year. The department has been established since the war on a basis of efficiency and strength by men who have served overseas. On going into a department, the minister, of course, has his own difficulties as well as the officers. But I want to remove an impression which has been created: the officers of the Militia Department have given me every assistance. If hon. members knew the men of whom I speak, they would resent some of the things that are said about them. They are men of practical experience in military matters, and very good business men, some of them. Now, the purpose of the motion is to do away with the annual drill, and if it were adopted I would look for a general degeneration, if not an entire wiping out, of the militia spirit on the part of the young men—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GRAHAM: Now, I do not like to hear that applause within four years of the time when we applauded so many of our young men who evinced that spirit. We applauded every suggestion that the young men of Canada don the uniform in order that we who were older might be defended, and we applauded vociferously every man who enlisted. I am not a militarist, any more than any hon. member of this House—not nearly so much, perhaps as some of those who have spoken to-day. But I do feel that as a Canadian I have a duty to perform, not only to Canada but to the British Empire and to the civilized world. I may be asked how it is that we have any militia vote at all when other countries are disarming. But I ask any hon. member to name a country which has not a militia at the present time and is not maintaining one? Other countries are disarming to a certain extent, but not any more in proportion than we in Canada are, not any more than we are doing in these estimates.

It is not a question of who is going to gain or lose a few votes. It is not simply a matter of the expenditure of money. This is a question of a real national policy, a policy that affects every man and woman living in Canada to-day, and that will affect their children as well. Do we propose, as a young nation, to shirk the responsibilities of a nation while asking for all the privileges? We asked for a seat in the Genoa Conference; we asked for a seat at the Disarmament Conference at Washington; we asked for a seat at the meeting of the League of Nations; we asked to be allowed to take part in the formula-

11 p.m. tion of the Versailles treaty; and now when the time comes that we should maintain our position as a young nation, are we going to shirk, and go back one hundred and fifty years and become Crown colonists to be looked after by Great Britain and not by ourselves? We have a status to maintain as a young people with aspirations, and I must sink my individuality as I believe every member of the House ought to do, in what we might think a little present benefit, because we will be judged as a Dominion in a measure by the part we take as a young nation in the galaxy of nations forming the British Empire and among the nations of the entire world.

I might go on, if it were in order, to mention the navy as well, but I shall leave that until I come to it. We are endeavouring to amalgamate the defence forces of Canada into one department with the object of obtaining efficiency and greater economy, but if the House is to take the attitude that it refuses to grant any money to carry on these services, why amalgamate the defence forces at all, if we are not going to have any such forces? I do not feel strongly on this question on any personal ground. It makes no difference to me personally whether a dollar is voted, but if we are going to strike out, or reduce to the point where it is practically striking out the item for annual training, we are saying to the young man of Canada and to the boys in the cadet service; we do not want you to be trained any more. We smother your aspirations for getting together to develop your manhood and your physical self, as well as getting your military training.

We have talked a good deal about this to-day, and as we were all up late last night I think we had better rise and think this matter over. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. HOEY: I notice that the minister did not answer the question I put before. I deprecate the amount of heat that has been brought into this discussion. I think we should discuss these items calmly and dispassionately as Canadians—

The CHAIRMAN: I would point out to the hon. member that there is a motion before the Chair that the committee rise and report progress. That motion is not debatable.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

Wednesday, April 26, 1922

The House met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GRAIN INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. STEVENS:

1. Referring to the answer of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to Question No. 30, April 5, 1922, does the Government intend to reconstitute the old Grain Inquiry Commission with change of personnel or a new Grain Inquiry Commission for the same or similar purpose, or for any purpose? If so, when?

2. Is the Government not aware that very specific charges of irregularity were made before the present Grain Inquiry Commission now existing during the period it was supplied with funds to transact its work, such charges gravely affecting the conduct of the grain trade of Western Canada?

3. Does the Government propose that such charges so made before the Grain Inquiry Commission shall be ignored and go entirely without investigation?

4. If the Government does not intend that the present Government Grain Inquiry Commission shall continue its work or provide funds for that purpose, does the Government intend to provide funds to enable it to close up the work that it has already done and compile and forward its report?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1. Not unless there is a reasonable demand therefor.

2. The late administration apparently did not require the Royal Grain Inquiry Commission to render a report, though the said commission ceased to function several weeks before the late administration resigned office.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4. The late Grain Inquiry Commission expended the sum of $46,398.02. There is an item of $40,000 appearing in the main estimates for the purpose of resuming the inquiry if a reasonable demand therefor is made.

With regard to submitting a report, this is answered by No. 2.

RIVIERE DU LOUP ARSENAL

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. When will the lease for the use of the Rioux store at Riviere du Loup, Fraserville, known as Arsenal number two, expire?

2. What is the total amount paid to Mr. Rioux for the said building?

3. What is the total amount of money spent by the Government in repairs to this property?

4. Are the repairs or additions to said buildings to remain the property of Mr. Rioux or the Department of Militia and Defence?

5. Is the building insured? If so, for what amount, with what company, who was the agent, and what was the premium?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. Expires on the 19th May, 1922.

2. To Madame Caroline Pelletier Rioux: 3 years at $75 per month, $2,700; 5 years at $90 per month, $5,400; total, $8,100.

3. $2,286.55.

4. Repairs remain as part of the building.

5. Not by the Government.

LANDS—SUB-AGENCIES

Mr. MacKELVIE:

1. What Dominion Lands Sub-Agencies were closed during the years 1920 and 1921?

2. What was the reason for such closing in each case?

3. What offices so closed have since been re-opened, and what was the reason for re-opening in each case?

4. Is it the intention of the Government to re-open the sub-agency at Golden, British Columbia? If not, why?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil):

1 and 2. Saskatchewan:—Yorkton, insufficient business; Weyburn, insufficient business; Shaunavon, services of sub-agent terminated; Kindersley, insufficient business; Ponteix, resignation of sub-agent; Turtleford, resignation of sub-agent.

Alberta.—Westlock, resignation of sub-agent; Whitford, insufficient business; Wainwright, insufficient business; Ft. Vermilion, resignation of sub-agent; Donnelly, resignation of sub-agent; Alsask, insufficient business; Frog Lake, insufficient business; Hanna, insufficient business; Mosside, insufficient business; Pine Creek, insufficient business; St. Paul de Metis, insufficient business.

British Columbia.—Golden, insufficient business.

3. Offices Reopened, With Reasons for Reopening.

Alberta.—Donnelly, for convenience of the public; St. Paul de Metis, for accommodation of incoming settlers; Westlock, for convenience of the public; Turtleford, for convenience of the public; Ft. Vermilion, for convenience of the public.

4. Golden sub-agency.—This sub-agency was closed on account of insufficient business. So far as I am aware, it is not the intention at the present time to reopen same, for the reason mentioned.

CANADIANS EMIGRATING 1911-1921

Hon. Mr. MANION:

1. Does the Department of Immigration keep any records of emigrants from Canada each year?

2. If so, how many Canadians by birth have left Canada in each of the years between 1911 and 1921?

3. How many naturalized Canadians have left Canada during each of the said years?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil):

1. No. Records have not been kept because of the expense thereby entailed.

2 and 3. See answer to No. 1.

WINNIPEG STRIKE

Mr. McMURRAY:

1. Was a Deputy Minister of Justice appointed by the Dominion Government at the time of the Winnipeg strike?

2. If so, what was the name of the appointee and what were his duties?

3. Who were retained as counsel to conduct the trials, and what amount was paid for legal services?

4. Were other moneys paid in connection with legal services rendered during said strike?

5. If so, to whom, and what amount in each case?

6. Did the Dominion Government pay for special police and detective service during the said strike?

7. If so, how many police and detectives were employed and what amount of money was paid for such service?

Sir LOMER GOUIN:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Messrs. Andrews, Andrews, Burbidge and Bastedo; J. B. Coyne, K.C.; Travers Sweatman; I. Pitblado; W. W. Richardson; S. Goldstein; E. K. Williams, and Charles Russell & Co. Amount paid, $150,024.20.

4. No.

5. Answered by No. 4.

6. Yes.

[Mr. J. A. Stewart.]

7. The McDonald Detective Agency was employed and was paid $12,332.09 for its services.

CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. COOTE:

1. What was the number of chartered banks in Canada in each of the years 1901, 1911 and 1921?

1. What was the number of chartered banks banks in each of the above years.

3. What was the total reserve fund of these banks in each of the above years?

4. What was the total amount of savings deposits in each of these years?

5. What was the total amount of deposits on current account in each of these years?

6. What was the largest amount of loans in Canada in each of these years?

7. What was the largest amount of loans outside of Canada in each of these years?

8. What was the largest amount of gold held by these banks in each of the above years?

9. What was the total value of bank premises as of 31 December in each of these years?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING:

1. Number of banks (as of December 31), 1901, 34; 1911, 29; 1921, 18.

2. Paid-up capital (as of December 31), 1901, $67,591,311; 1911, $107,994,604; 1921, $129,317,086.

3. Rest or reserve fund (as of December 31), 1901, $37,364,708; 1911, $96,868,124; 1921, $128,373,499.

4. Deposits by the public, payable after notice, or on a fixed day in Canada (as of December 31), 1901, $233,431,229; 1911, $591,068,932; 1921, $1,240,807,268.

5. Deposits by the public payable on demand in Canada (as of December 31), 1901, $102,309,034; 1911, $335,020,693; 1921, $540,942,522.

6. Largest amount of loans in Canada, (Oct.), 1901, $331,675,202; (Dec.), 1911, $850,025,413; (April), 1921, $1,486,636,165.

7. Largest amount of loans elsewhere than in Canada, (Nov.), 1901, $79,498,362; (July), 1911, $136,879,144; (Jan.), 1921, $365,233,732.

8. Largest amount held of current gold and subsidiary coin, (May), 1901), $11,983,876; (Nov.), 1911, $39,032,004; (Jan.), 1921, $85,118,010 (not including gold in central gold reserves.)

9. Bank premises (as of December 31), 1901, $6,753,172; 1911, $32,557,940; 1921, $69,480,648.

SARDINES EXPORT

Mr. GRIMMER:

1. Has the Department of Marine and Fisheries received a petition or memorial from residents of Maceo Bay or other ports of the county of Charlotte, praying or asking that a minimum price of ten dollars per hogshead be placed on sardines sold for export, during the present fishing season?

2. If so, what action, if any, has the Government taken in the matter?

3. If no action has been taken, is it the intention of the department to take any action in this respect?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Petition urging that this minimum price be fixed for all purposes was received.

2 and 3. The department has no power to fix the price.

PROVINCES AND REPRESENTATIVES, 1877

Mr. RINFRET:

1. How many provinces were there in Canada in the year 1877, and what were the names of said provinces?

2. How many federal members represented said provinces or territories in the said year?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. Seven: Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island.

2. Ontario, 88; Quebec, 65; Nova Scotia, 21; New Brunswick, 16; Manitoba, 4; British Columbia, 6; Prince Edward Island, 6. Total, 206.

RAILWAY MILEAGE, 1877

Mr. RINFRET:

1. How many miles of railways were there in Canada in the year 1877?

2. How many miles of railway are there in Canada at the present time?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1. On June 30, 1877, 5,574.25 miles, including 25.5 miles of wooden rail.

2. On December 31, 1920, 39,38[illegible] miles. Estimated for December 31, 1921, 40,041 miles.

LIGHTHOUSE BOATS—FUEL

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. After trials made by the Marine Department in regard to wood and coal fuel for the use of lighthouse boats of l'Ile Rouge, l'Ile Blanche and Princess Shoal, is it the intention of the Government to return to the old method of supplying the said boats with cordwood instead of coal, if it is found less costly?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Yes.

QUESTION ASKED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

1. What are the names of the trustees, under the Bankruptcy Act, for the district of Montreal?

2. When were they appointed, and what were their respective occupations before appointment?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. BRISTOL:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents relating to the claims for reparations for damages afflicted upon Canadian ships during the war by the German nation. Also a copy of the Order in Council appointing the Honourable Sir John D. Hazen to inquire into same.

Mr. GRIMMER:

For a copy of all Petitions or Memorials from residents of the county of Charlotte, New Brunswick, made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, asking that a minimum price per hogshead be placed on all sardines sold for export during the present fishing season, and for a copy of all correspondence and other documents relating thereto.

Mr. HANSON:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, letters, agreements, contracts, claims, memoranda and other documents between the Caroquet and Gulf Shore Railway Company and the Government of Canada, relating to the purchase of the said railway.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER WATERWAY

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government of Canada should give early and favourable consideration to the report of the International Joint Commission on the St. Lawrence River Waterway, and request the Government of the United States to join with Canada in making an international agreement for carrying out the work so recommended.

He said: I offer no apologies for introducing this motion, which I had intended moving on Monday. The three parties in the House will agree, I think, that it is of sufficient importance to warrant not only an afternoon's discussion, but consideration on a second day as well. A debate on this very subject has been in progress in the United States Congress and Senate for some six weeks, and to-day the question I am bringing up in this resolution is the most important one that has been before the people of Canada since Confederation and the building of the Canadian Pacific railway. Not only is it of great concern to us in Canada, but it is one of the most important economic questions under consideration on the North American continent at the present time. I would point out that it is not and should not be made a political question at all; it is a business question, a great economic question, a transportation question that concerns every citizen both of the United States and of Canada. It should therefore be approached not from the provincial, the local, parish, or sectional standpoint, but from the great national standpoint of what is the greatest good for the greatest number. This subject is so vast and intricate that it is almost impossible to do more than touch the fringe of it in the short time at my disposal this afternoon. It has supporters among all parties in Canada, in and out of the House.

We have three transcontinental railway systems, and in that respect we are far ahead of the economic development of the country. In fact, we could for some years probably get along with one or two such systems, and the money spent on the third could have been spent to much better advantage in deepening this waterway to the sea. Had we done this we would have acquired a gilt-edged security, and solved the transportation question, and from the standpoint of power alone the deepening of the St. Lawrence would have more than paid the cost incurred, to say nothing of saving millions of dollars in freight charges, and so effecting economies in transportation which would redound to the economic advantage of the whole country. And we would have provided a feeder for the National lines, and Canadian Pacific railways to the head of the Lakes and would have solved in the main the transportation problems of this country as well as of the United States.

A review of our canal policy does not disclose what might be called any deliberate, well planned or consistent policy. Money has been spent on some canals that should never have been undertaken; whereas if that money had been diverted to the deepening of the St. Lawrence channel and the Welland canal it would have provided a great national asset. The Welland canal deepening has been more or less a political football. This canal is an important link in the St. Lawrence scheme, and it should have been finished long ago. Indeed, if the work had been prosecuted with the same vigour that characterized the construction of the Chippawa-Queenston power canal, we would have that link in operation to-day. As it is, however, we are told that it may be 1927, and more probably 1937, before the canal is deepened. Until the Welland ship canal is completed a 500,000 bushel barge coming down from Port Arthur has to tranship its cargo of wheat at Port Colborne into smaller boats, at a cost of four cents a bushel, and there is the further disadvantage that most of that wheat goes to Buffalo instead of to Montreal.

With the opening of the new Welland ship canal boats will be able to run from Port Arthur direct to Montreal at a rate of about four or five cents a bushel to Port Colborne, and one cent to two cents for the extra run, Port Colborne to Montreal, without transhipment to smaller boats at Port Colborne, as now.

The St. Lawrence river waterway is being strongly supported by all the Western states,—Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Nebraska, Colorado, Montana, Wyoming and Idaho. The legislatures of those states have for years been voting money for surveys, and for an educational campaign in connection with this important scheme. In Canada the governments of Ontario and Saskatchewan have come out very strongly in its favour. In addition, a thousand chambers of commerce and boards of trade and patriotic bodies in the two countries have passed resolutions in favour of it. The opposition to the project is centered in New York and in some parts of Quebec and Montreal. It should be observed, however, that those in Canada do not oppose the scheme from the economic or transportation standpoint, but because they favour some rival scheme. I am not going to decry those rival schemes, because I think that before many years are past we may need not only the St. Lawrence but the Georgian Bay waterway as well, in the same way as at one time one railway was sufficient for our transportation needs, and later with the development of the country a second and even a third railway system was constructed.

A notable utterance in favour of this waterway was delivered by President Harding at the agricultural conference at Washington on the 23rd January last, in the course of which he said:

> I have spoken of the advantage which Europe enjoys because of its access to the sea, the cheapest and surest transportation facility. In our own country is presented one of the world's most attractive opportunities for extension of the sea-ways many hundred miles inland.
> The heart of the continent, with its vast resources in both agriculture and industry, would be brought into communication with all the ocean routes by the execution of the St. Lawrence waterway project. To enable ocean-going vessels to have access to all the ports of the Great Lakes would have a most stimulating effect upon the industrial life of the continent's interior.
> The feasibility of the project is unquestioned, and its cost, compared with some other great engineering works, would be small. Disorganized and prostrate, the nations of Central Europe are even now settling their hands to the development of a great continental waterway which, connecting the Rhine and Danube, will bring water transportation from the Black to the North Sea, from the Mediterranean to the Baltic.

If nationalistic prejudices and economic difficulties can be overcome by Europe, they certainly should not be formidable obstacles to an achievement less expensive and giving promise of greater advantages to the peoples of North America. Not only would the cost of transportation be greatly reduced, but a vast population would be brought overnight in immediate touch with the markets of the entire world.

There you have the declaration of the President of the United States. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. leader of the House (Mr. Mackenzie King) will, before this debate is concluded, appoint another day for further discussion, as the subject is of such supreme importance that it is impossible to give it proper consideration in the short time at our disposal this afternoon. This is, perhaps, the most important question that this Parliament will have to settle, and full opportunity should be given for an exhaustive discussion of the merits and demerits—if there are any—of this great scheme, and of the report of the Deep Waterways Commission.

In connection with this subject it is relevant to refer briefly to the history of the St. Lawrence river and a few of its physical characteristics, and the artificial improvements made on the Lakes by Canada since 1809, in order that the importance of this waterway and its development may be properly appreciated.

The St. Lawrence rises in lake Ontario and discharges its waters into the gulf of St. Lawrence, but what one might term its primary source is at the head of the St. Louis river at the extreme end of lake Superior, 1,870 miles from the gulf. The basin of the St. Lawrence is a great transverse valley, 309,500 square miles in area, extending from the gulf of St. Lawrence into the heart of the continent. Much the larger part of the basin lies north of the boundary, as all its great tributaries flow in on that side. It is separated by a low divide from the Hudson bay basin, and from the Mississippi basin by an even lower divide. The river is remarkable for the number of expansions in its course.

Many surveys and charts have been made of this river since 1809, and a great deal of money has been expended on widening and deepening its channel since that time. The history of the St. Lawrence ship channel proper between Quebec and Montreal starts in 1825, when Hon. James Young, of Montreal, an intensely patriotic man, interested the government in the matter, with the result that a great deal of early investigation, survey and educational work for improving the channel was carried out between 1836 and 1841. This work was made the subject of inquiry by a committee of the Lower Canada legislature, 1836 to 1841. Their report was published and the work was begun, continued and carried to completion by the Harbour Commission. The gentlemen composing that commission from time to time have done an immense amount of work in improving the St. Lawrence channel and harbour of Montreal, improvements involving heavy expenditures. But, as one of the harbour commissioners for Toronto, I am free to admit that money spent on any of our great harbours, such as Quebec, Halifax, St. John, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, and Victoria, enures to the advantage of the country generally, and should not be considered as purely a local improvement, because these ports are all a factor in the development of deep waterways and of water-borne traffic. When this important work was handed over by the government of Canada to the Montreal Harbour commissioners, the commissioners went ahead and did very good work. They appointed a board of engineers to inquire into the project. The matter was examined from all points of view and a report was brought down recommending the improvement of the channel between Quebec and Montreal. That report of the engineers was adopted by the government and the Montreal Harbour Commission and operations were begun by the commission on the old channel in 1851. By November, 1851, this channel was opened to lake St. Peter to a depth of ten feet six inches. In 1853 a vessel passed through to the foot of lake St. Peter drawfour feet more than the ordinary depth of water. In 1855 the capacity was increased to sixteen and one-half feet, and subsequently in 1857, to eighteen feet. In 1856 the harbour commissioners pointed out to the government the national character of the work which they had been doing, urging that the work had been for the government of Canada and that the money expended had been devoted to national purposes, for the advantage of the whole country. Outstanding success attended the early operations of the Harbour Commission of Montreal, and the channels were further deepened from time to time, until to-day there is a 35-foot channel 450 feet wide. From 1851 to 1888 the harbour commissioners had charge of this ship canal, but in 1888 the work was transferred back to the federal Department of Public Works. There it remained until 1904, when it was transferred by the government of the day to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. That is a short history of the St. Lawrence ship channel. The cost of the improvements to that channel to date, according to a return laid on the table of the House on March 20, 1921, has been $23,867,000.

No proper study of this question can be pursued without an understanding of the territory on both sides of the international border which is tributary to this work. The fourteen states I named in the early part of my address, situated in the central and western parts of the United States, are all tributary to this work and will benefit by it, from the transportation as well as from the navigation, power and economic standpoint. The part of Canada most directly affected by this project as a national work are the entire province of Ontario and the parts of Manitoba and Saskatchewan south of the National Transcontinental. This territory on both sides of the border is the greatest industrial territory. The districts affected in Canada are noted for the production of grain, live stock and dairy products, and forest resources—not only in Ontario, but in other parts of Canada. Then, there is the value of the wood used for pulp manufacture; the value of mineral products, coal and copper deposits; and of manufactured goods generally. The freight traffic on the railway lines running through the territory tributary to this work amounts to 37,000,000 tons annually. I admit that the tributary territory in the United States is suffering to-day, in a railway sense, more than the tributary territory in Canada is, because in the United States they are away behind the times as shown by the congestion of railway traffic. In Canada we have no lack of mileage; we have three transcontinental railways. In fact, we have what I might call useless duplication and waste. But we have not the development of water-borne traffic, and in that respect our condition differs from that of the United States.

I wish to say a few words with regard to this question from the navigation standpoint as it affects the people of Canada and the people of the United States. Many phases of the question have been studied during the past fifty years from the point of view of navigation; I will enumerate only a few of them. One of the results of this development will be the increase of production through improvement of the avenues of transportation and the creating of new ones. The history of water-borne traffic the world over makes it plain that when an important canal or waterway is improved, cheaper freight rates follow, with consequent increased production and closer co-operation between producer and consumer.

Another phase of the question bears upon the effect of improved transportation facilities for water-borne traffic upon the rail route. No less an authority than Mr. Hoover, one of the most eminent men in the United States to-day, gives it as his opinion that if adequate water-borne communications are provided they will act as feeders for the steam roads and have the effect of reducing and regulating rates. I believe that this important work would produce in Canada such revenue for our bankrupt railroads that in a few years they would become a gilt-edged investment. As to the effect upon the railroad congestion, we have the evidence of the new premier of Saskatchewan, Hon. Charles A. Dunning, who refers to the fact that in Canada at the present time there is not the acreage cultivated that there is in normal times, and that with the expansion of agriculture, the cultivation of a greater acreage and the production of a normal crop, there would be very serious railway congestion in the western parts of the country; the railways would not be able to take the crop out. We must provide a route for this water-borne traffic via the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence without transhipment, if we are to solve the congestion problem and problem of freight rates for East and West alike.

Another question arising from the navigation standpoint is, how will ocean rates and inland water rates be affected? The effect will be a saving of five or six cents a bushel on wheat carried from the head of the Lakes to the seaboard. I will not quote the facts bearing upon this point which were placed before the International Commission by some of the gentlemen who came from the West.

Then, there is the effect upon package freight taken from the head of the Lakes to the seaboard and from the seaboard to the head of the Lakes without transhipment. Mr. Richardson, of Kingston, a very prominent man in transportation circles, who has an office in Winnipeg, expresses the view that the development of package frieght transportation on the Lakes will revolutionize things for the small cities and towns. The small freighter can proceed from Montreal up the river, stopping at Brockville, Kingston, Hamilton, Cobourg, passing through the Welland canal and proceeding to Port Colborne, Sarnia and Windsor and thence to the head of the Lakes. Hon. members would be surprised to see the small freighters coming into these lake ports as I have seen them and the boon they are to the public. They put down their package freight without delay; the merchants can have the goods in their retail stores the same day, and they know when they are going to get them. This project will revolutionize the package freight business on the Great Lakes; that is amply demonstrated by the number of package freighters operating on the Great Lakes to-day, notwithstanding the difficulties with which they have to contend.

What will be the relative cost of building and operating lake ships and ocean ships, and what are the characteristics of each? Some large ocean freighters to-day are not constructed for service on the Great Lakes, and vice versa. Many of the old type of boats, commonly known on the lakes as the whaleback, have already gone down the lakes to the Atlantic seaboard ports with freight. We have the evidence of many eminent men who have sailed the lakes for many years, that three-fourths of all the ocean boats in the world to-day do not draw more than twenty-five feet, and these boats could go to the head of the lakes if we adopt this scheme. I shall not take time to read their evidence because there are other speakers. Three-fourths of the ships that go through the Suez and Panama canals could use the lakes with this improvement.

I believe that if this project goes through, it would result in a great expansion of the shipbuilding industry on the Great Lakes, and that would do more to solve unemployment than any other agency that I know of. I believe that we can produce the right type of ships not only for the ocean but for the lakes as well. Salt water boats could then go up the St. Lawrence river one thousand miles, as every navigation man knows. The same is true of the Amazon river, where ocean ships go up 1,000 miles.

What will be the effect if it is practicable to build a composite type of vessel for lake and ocean use. It will stimulate shipbuilding on the lakes and there will be sufficient cargoes both inbound and outbound to keep the ships busy. It will be of the greatest economic value on both sides of the border. The fact that this district is a great consumer, and the home of many of the greatest basic industries on the continent of America, will be enough to provide cargoes to the head of the lakes and to the seaboard.

Those who are opposed to this project talk of ice conditions and fog, but that would be no more an adverse factor than it is on the American seaboard part of the year. Of all the fogs you see, there are none worse than those that envelop the ports of the Atlantic and Belle Isle. So this project stands on an equal basis with the Atlantic seaboard in that respect. The St. Lawrence is all right for five to six months of the year as to climatic conditions.

There are many other features of this scheme that might be touched upon—the competition between lake freighters and ocean vessels, the necessity of cutting channels and deepening inland harbours. With respect to the latter, many inland harbours are to-day ten and fifteen years ahead of their work in anticipation of this project. Cleveland, Detroit, Toledo and Buffalo are deepening their harbours and the United States government are bringing on advance expenditures instead of curtailing expenditure for deeper harbours as we are doing on this side of the border for deeper harbours.

The United States Government are increasing grants for deepening ports and harbours and for providing deeper water in all the channels. They have just brought down a bill in Congress appropriating many millions for lake ports.

Toronto is spending $26,000,000 rebuilding its harbour. The city itself is putting up eighty-three per cent of the cost of all these improvements through its Harbour Board.

It is not a beautification scheme, but a great commercial, economic scheme to provide docks and do something to develop water-borne traffice for the good of the country generally. I shall not refer any further to the navigation aspects of this project, except to say that it will be a very great factor in moving grain to the seaboard, and will obviate the losses that occur in transhipment at Port Colborne and Prescott, for instance, and prevent in the future a railway blockade and reduce heavy freight rates by rail.

Following the consummation of this work I believe Canada will experience an era of the greatest industrial expansion it has ever known. Alternative routes have been proposed, but I shall not deal with them, as other speakers are to follow. I have always been a believer in the St. Lawrence route. It has long appealed to my fancy and imagination, and the more I study the proposition the more I am convinced that it is one of the greatest projects the people of Canada have ever had before them for good and the welfare of the country.

I want to refer to another aspect of this project, and it is one of the greatest questions before the people of Canada to-day—the question of water-power. The water-power that would be developed incidentally in the building of this canal would more than pay for the cost of the work. It is only within the last two hundred years that scientific discoveries have given to the world the power inherent in fuels, namely, coal, oil, gas and falling water, distributed in the various forms of heat, light, and electricity. It has been estimated that the total water-powers of the world amount to about 100,000,000 horse-power, of which only about 17,000,000 have so far been developed. The Dominion of Canada possesses about twenty per cent of the world's total water-power and also approximately the same percentage of the world's water-power already developed. The people of Ontario and Quebec are especially interested in this power situation. In Ontario we have no coal. We have to depend for our coal supply on the maritime provinces, or the far West and the United States. The United States will run out of coal in one hundred years, as has been shown by the report of the Conservation Commission of that country. The first of these stores of energy to be utilized by man was coal, as we all know. This fuel is very widely distributed and exists in immense quantities in various parts of the world, but there is no denying the fact that the supply is limited and the world is not any too economical in its expenditure of coal. The supplies of oil and gas are also limited, and prices very high.

Our remaining source of energy, then, is water-power. The people of the United States are not unmindful of this, for every state in the Union is to-day doing everything it can to develop its internal water-powers with a view to conserving the coal supply of the whole country. The municipalities in the province of Ontario have also done for themselves a splendid work in this respect, and have saved the people of Ontario millions in their combined water-power scheme. For some years the Niagara river was looked upon as one of the greatest scenic wonders of the world and was famous chiefly for its beautiful Horseshoe falls, its small Maid of the Mist, and its rainbow. But a new day and a new era dawned when science discovered the power inherent in falling water—a discovery that has conferred a boon on every man, woman, and child in Ontario, and has been the cause of the greatest industrial expansion in that district that has ever been known in the history of Canada. I have here plates and photographs of some forty companies which have located in the Niagara district as the result of science doing what it did to develop Niagara water-power. In commercial and domestic lighting, this power development has saved my own city $22,000,000 since 1911. This book contains a list of the manufacturing concerns, cement, chemical, paper, electric and metal companies of all kinds, foundries, motor car companies, and those engaged in manufacturing by-products, that have been established in the Niagara peninsula as the result of cheap light and power. Just look at the great basic industries that have sprung up in that district, and we had not one of them before the development of Niagara water-power. What has happened in the Niagara district yesterday and to-day will occur along the St. Lawrence if this Parliament has the courage and vision which I hope it has to carry out this work.

To sum up some of the arguments in favour of this work, those who support this canal argue that not only can the power be produced cheaply and command a ready sale, but that it will pay the bulk of the cost of the improvement. The canal can be linked up with the super-power scheme on the Atlantic coast serving the territory from the 39th parallel, near Washington, D.C., to the 44th parallel, 22 miles north of Portland, Me., and from there to the river St. Lawrence. The St. Lawrence will also be linked up on the Canadian side with a great Canadian super-power scheme, consisting of the Hydro-Electric system in Ontario, and the Ottawa river and part of Quebec, and can supply also power for the electrification of federal railways from Quebec to Fort William.

Now this work will conserve the coal supply. It is figured that three out of every five tons of coal consumed by a railway locomotive is an economic waste, that the present system of steam locomotion is a wasteful and not an economical system. Evidence to that effect appears in a report which is before this House to-day.

The construction of this great waterway will relieve the railways of the burden of carrying millions of tons of coal and will effect a most decided economy. Markets for the consumption of the power to be developed will be created along the St. Lawrence. Cheap light and power will be available and this waterway will become the scene of the greatest industrial expansion in the history of Canada or of the North American continent. Small towns like Three Rivers, Brockville, Kingston, Coburg and others will grow enormously, and their population will be tremendously increased. Not only that but entirely new communities will spring into existence and this spectacle of prosperity will be witnessed all the way up to the head of the Great Lakes. The unemployment situation will be automatically solved: there will be an abundance of work for all. The St. Lawrence route, just as the Niagara river is to-day, will witness the establishment of basic plants of all kinds including chemical companies, iron and steel foundaries, paper companies, motor companies, by product concerns and production plants of all descriptions; and if the people of Canada will only have the same courage and faith in this scheme as the people of Ontario had in the development of the Niagara district, we shall witness wonderful industrial developments in connection with this great project. Let me read a few words from a statement made by Colonel John Finnie one of the greatest electrical engineers on the continent, a gentleman of international reputation, before the Conservation Commission of the United States regarding this question:

> I believe that the water-power of the St. Lawrence is infinitely more value to commerce than any navigation which will use the streams after they have been improved for navigation. But most fortunately, there is no conflict between the two because any proper development of the St. Lawrence for power will at the same time take care of the navigation features. He held that the value of this power would be sufficient to carry the cost of the entire undertaking with navigation and power; that the rates would be reasonable. There was no question as to the possibility of marketing as all the available power on the St. Lawrence could be readily absorbed by growing industries. Col. Finney described the projected superpower line, a high tension transmission line designated to serve the Atlantic sea Board from Maine to Virginia, which will always be the workshop of America, and with the proposed superpower line in Ontario, Quebec and the Ottawa river, each country would have a superpower zone to distribute its alloted share and these would be a great industrial revival on both sides of the St. Lawrence.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two about the financial side of this question because some objection to the project has been raised by the financial interests of Montreal. The same objection was raised when the power development scheme in the Niagara district was launched in 1905. I remember well, when the late Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck proposed the undertaking of the Hydro Electric system from which 374 municipalities derive power to-day and have made such a gigantic success of, the opponents of the scheme bestowed upon its promoters the title of "amateur anarchists". You all know what a magnificent success that system has proved; yet if the promoters of that scheme had been influenced by the doubts and fears and lack of courage which characterize some people who are opposing this great waterway project to-day we should never have witnessed any such hydro-electrical power movement in the province of Ontario, and that province would never have been able to take care, as it did, of the munition plants which manufactured munitions during the war. At one time during that great struggle Sir Henry Drayton, then Chairman of the Railway Commission but later Finance Minister of Canada and now an honoured member of this House, pointed out that Ontario was supplying at one period nearly one-third of the munitions needed for our men at the front. But for the carrying out of the hydro-electric scheme Ontario would not have had the power which enabled it to render such great war assistance to the Empire. At that time also there happened to be a shortage of coal, and what a terrible condition of affairs it would have been only for the Hydro, as there was even then a lack of power as well. As it was owing to lack of power during the war, many industries in Ontario had to close down and hundreds of men were turned out of work through no fault of their own. If we have the same faith and courage now as the men of 1905 displayed in connection with the Hydro Electric development the present project will be boldly taken up with the result that the revenue from the power developed will be more than sufficient to meet the cost of the work.

Let me mention another interesting feature in connection with power development. The privately-owned power companies in the Niagara district, representing an investment of $32,000,000, are now being taken over by the city of Toronto and the Hydro-Electric Commission. This will result in the establishment of public ownership throughout the entire Niagara power zone on the Canadian side and will avoid the evils of duplication. Lack of vision is by no means an uncommon thing in our public men. The late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie had some doubts about the building of the Canadian Pacific railway. He argued that it would be better to tear the rails up and store them at Port Arthur rather than to construct a railway to the coast which would be a colossal failure. Let me read a few lines from what he said on one occasion:

> It would be better to pile the rails up at Port Arthur and leave them unused rather than lay two streaks of rust to the Pacific Coast.

Now, any one who had been rash enough in his day to predict that in the year 1920, such a volume as 335,000,000 bushels of grain would be taken out from the West would have been deemed a lunatic away back in 1874 or 1878.

In other countries vision and courage have been displayed in dealing with questions of this kind. Take the deepening of the canal at Frankfort in Germany; take the building of the great ship-canal from Manchester to the sea, the latter a deep waterway 35 miles long and 450 feet wide. Manchester was dead commercially in the year 1880. There were in that city 5,000 vacant houses and 200 factories closed down—actually the place was stagnant. To-day as the result of the building of that canal it is the third largest shipping port in England. Liverpool fought the deepening of that canal as likely to injure Liverpool and then built the docks on the Mersey, but it was the best thing which ever happened for that city. Liverpool will acknowledge that to-day although it fought the project for many years. Some of the financial interests in the city of Montreal look upon the present project in somewhat the same light that Liverpool once did the Manchester ship-canal. Let me say that I am a member of the Port Authorities Association. There should be no sectional jealousy in an enterprise of this kind. Toronto itself feels that what will help to develop the ports of the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces and the Pacific coast will be for the good of Toronto as well. There may be some differences of opinion about the St. Lawrence waterway project, but I plead with the opponents of this measure not to hold up Montreal to-day as opposed to this work. There has been a change in the sentiment in Montreal from that which prevailed three or four years ago. I have been told by one of the Montreal Harbour Commission that they are not opposed to the construction of this canal and have not passed any resolution in regard to it—they have an open mind with respect to the project. The stand taken to-day by the financial interests in Montreal is that they do not oppose the deepening of the canal, but they say that when the ships from the West come to the port of Montreal the cargoes from the head of the lakes will have to be transhipped to larger vessels in that port for conveyance overseas. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that argument is futile when we bear in mind the attitude of Montreal at the time the ship-canal between that city and Quebec was undertaken. The idea then was to make Montreal the terminus instead of the ancient city of Quebec, and no such objection was raised at that time by Quebec. They never thought that by taking it to the port of Montreal they would be transferring most of the business from Quebec to Montreal. If that were true, the port of Montreal is no more an inland port than Windsor. It is an inland port built up by deep water channels at the expense of the people of Canada, and we say the inland deep water channels should be extended to the head of the lakes in the interests of the people of this country, and in the interests of navigation. Opposition to the project also developed at the Montreal hearing of the commission and again it is the interests of Montreal against the country at large. The arguments advanced at Montreal, however, were of a somewhat different nature than those of New York state, the contention being that while the St. Lawrence should be deepened and made suitable for vessels of large capacity between the great lakes and Montreal, they should not proceed further than that city but transfer "their cargoes to ocean vessels" at Montreal; also that it would not pay ocean ships to make the passage up the lakes.

That may be Montreal's view of the matter, but they will not find many who will agree with them. When it was decided to bring ocean vessels to Montreal and make it the terminus for ocean trade instead of the ancient city of Quebec, Montreal had no objections to offer on the ground that by so doing it might injure the city of Quebec, and they have as little right now to object to ocean ships passing Montreal and proceeding further. At one time the maximum depth between Quebec and Montreal was only twelve feet, but by continuous dredging we now have a channel thirty-five feet deep and 600 feet wide through lake St. Peter.

I am surprised at the stand taken by the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Taschereau, whom I looked upon as a very capable and progressive public man. I may say that, like his predecessor, he has done a great deal for Quebec in building good roads, in erecting court houses for the municipalities, registry offices, lands titles offices, and other provincial buildings, which in Quebec are built by the province. I commend him for doing that. I believe he has done a great deal in the way of promoting good legislation. I do not agree with him in a great many ways but I appreciate what he has done in that line. He is considering the problem from a local and a provincial standpoint. What he says regarding the erection of a dam and power house on the American side is not confirmed by the report of the Deep Waterways Commission, which takes the opposite stand. This site for the dam and power house will have to be selected later by agreement. In another part of his statement he says, "We want to see the interests of Quebec protected." But the interests of Ontario are not going to be sacrificed, with 700,000 horse-power belonging to Ontario. Why should Ontario sacrifice part of this power because Quebec will not let us have it?

I would like for about five minutes to sum up some of the important advantages of this canal, and to cite some of the evidence I gave before the Deep Waterways Commission. I will read a few paragraphs. The first paragraph I will read says:

> The advantages of the St. Lawrence route.
> (1) It is one of the great natural waterways of the world.
> (2) The cost of improvement is less than other routes moreover it would be divided between the two nations sharing its benefits.
> It is a high speed highway avoiding long passages.

Eighty per cent of the vessels used on the Suez canal are not more than 25 feet draught. If we insist on an all Canadian route we are going to have a rival American route and both of them will not be successful. I believe there will be a distinct advantage in joining hands with the United States in this work. Millions of horse-power are available incidental to the project. This development would represent a saving of coal running into millions of tons annually. Coal miners may go on strike, but the St. Lawrence never goes on strike. This freight development is a by-product incidentally of carrying out this work. Nature has provided this flowing route to the sea for two reasons. For a great waterway to the sea, and for a great power plant for the development of Canadian commerce. The fact that this work is feasible is proven by what happened in 1911 before the Rivers and Harbours Committee at Washington, where they stated that they were willing to deepen the river to a depth of 30 feet for the privilege of obtaining that water-power. Every year 4,000,000 horse-power of electric energy is going to waste in the St. Lawrence; the equivalent of $800,000 worth of coal is being wasted every year, and the finest system of inland waterways is lying idle because deep-draught vessels cannot pass forty-six miles of the St. Lawrence river on their way to the upper lakes.

The St. Lawrence ranks with the Suez and Panama canals in its magnitude and importance. To provide for a continuous deep waterway, 2,300 miles from the head of the lakes to tidewater, 46 miles of the St. Lawrence would have to be made passable. The cost will be $250,000,000 as I stated in my evidence, but I think it will be found by the report that the cost would be $270,000,000.

We have choked railway facilities in Canada with the high freight rates and cost of transportation, equal on an average to 20 per cent of the value of the goods to be transported, with also a shortage of coal. People are demanding that use be made of the waterways, deeper canals and the use of the millions of horse-power unused and available. The only opposition is in New York and Montreal. Montreal is opposed for local reasons as distinguished from national reasons. They are looking for a larger Montreal. They will readily secure one from this canal. Canada and the United States are not as much interested in the local aims and objects of this place and that as in furnishing the necessities to the great bulk of the people as cheaply as possible. Montreal is no more a sea port than Toronto or Fort William. It is an inland port made an ocean port because of deep river channels. We say these should be extended to the head of the lakes. Montreal's other plea is that it is not practical. Some people said the same thing about all the hydro development and the deepening of the Welland, but eminent engineers in the United States and Canada say it is practical. Canada and the United States are all bottled up because of lack of an outlet to the sea, although both produce vast amounts of all the necessities of life, far more than we can use at home. They have no adequate outlet, with the result that much of our production goes to waste. I may instance the way fruit and vegetables in the Niagara district have gone to waste every fall for lack of transportation.

The great bulk of the developed power will belong to Canada. Some say Canada will want to take it all. Not so, Canada raises wheat and other agricultural products and sells them abroad and will also do the same with part of this power. The Dominion will not monopolize the power of the St. Lawrence. What Canada needs also is with this canal a forward national shipbuilding policy that would have Canadian ships go out on to seven seas and bring trade to Canada up the St. Lawrence to the head of the Great lakes. Nature has carved out a great highway from the lakes to the gulf of St. Lawrence on the east and to the gulf of Mexico on the south, both routes offering a downhill haul. To Canada and to the great nation that built the Panama canal this should prove an easy task. Had Europe such an opportunity, the project would have been completed and progressively improved for a thousand years or more. China did this more than three thousand years ago. Our great inland seas must be connected to the east with salt water. To the south, to the United States, the Mississippi offers her one logical channel. To the east, and I say it with equal confidence, the St. Lawrence offers the one logical channel to Canada and the United States in unison. The natural route, by the St. Lawrence, is already made for us, except for some forty-six odd miles obstructed by rapids. Overcome this obstruction and there is clear sailing all the way to the sea. It is a national duty—a Canadian duty—an international duty to develop water-power wherever possible. Give us this mighty co-labourer with coal in keeping the wheels of industry revolving and you will put the country beyond the power of any man or group of men to cripple and imperil as the country is crippled and imperiled to-day. It is the shortest by some hundreds of miles from any of the lake ports to Liverpool or northern Europe and the Mediterranean, as will be seen by the following.

From Chicago to Christiana by way of New York is 5,767 miles; from Chicago to Christiana by the St. Lawrence is 4,927 miles—a big difference. The St. Lawrence is also much shorter to Liverpool than New York. To the Mediterranean also the way is shorter by the St. Lawrence than by New York. And is shorter also—to Italy, Greece, the Black sea, and India by the Suez. Now distance is not everything, but in this case it means both time and money. Improvements of the St. Lawrence route will not in any way lessen the value of other waterways which are regarded by some as rival routes.

We have engineering and commercial assurance of these three facts:

(1) It can be done; it is practical.

(2) The cost would be less than other routes proposed.

(3) There would be developed water power running into millions of tons of coal per annum and millions of horse power available for trade and commerce and industrial development. I believe that one joint route for Canada and the United States is better than two rival routes. I believe that such a route can be accomplished more cheaply, that it provides a more direct way to the markets of Europe, that it is more practicable, more serviceable, better than any other plan yet offered. I believe that this improved St Lawrence will bring great commercial development to our own country and corresponding benefit to the people of the world with whom we shall trade. The St. Lawrence route has long appealed to my interest. I was hopeful, and at last we have got a report which gives us in concrete form the cost and the possibilities that will grow out of this great international waterway. The water has been running to waste through all the ages.

The United States spent something over $400,000,000 to construct the Panama canal, but as far as serving the business interests of that country and the world are concerned, the benefits are not comparable to those that would come, through the development of the St. Lawrence waterway to the sea, to Canada, the United States and the world. One objector in the United States said that the canal is to be built in conjunction with Canada. The waterway is for some distance the natural boundary between these two countries. Both nations are equally interested in its development. It is big enough to accommodate both countries. These countries live in amity together, and this great improvement would benefit both. Canada has expended $95,000,000 in improvements in the St. Lawrence river and she has voted $55,000,000 for improvements in the Welland canal. She should have a route to the sea for her vessels, and this project is the least expensive that makes for an ocean waterway. It has within its development to pay for its own expenses, and no one will deny that, because practical engineers have made the demonstration of what is possible. The idea that the people of the two countries own a waterway one thousand miles in length, reaching into the heart of a continent which is the greatest in production and consuming power in the world,a channel of still water, running to the ocean, and do not provide proper access for it, especially when that project promises to be self-sustaining from its power development alone—seems to me to speak such a lack of courage on the part of our people that I cannot believe it is true. Increased facilities of transportation to meet the ever enlarging demands of distribution can only be provided through the improvement and utilization of our waterways and aiding water borne traffic. Navigable waterways are intended primarily for commerce; and the expenditure of public moneys can only be justified when they are to be so used.

Speaking as a Toronto Harbour Commissioner of twenty years practical experience, I believe that eighty per cent of the present ocean-going craft can reach the upper lakes by the present channels when the way is opened through the St. Lawrence and the new Welland. More than ninety-six per cent can reach lake Erie by the same improvement. In seeking a route to the Atlantic, we must have the best highway that can be obtained.

I have heard at the various conventions of the port authorities of the world which I have attended some arguments against this project; they were more fancied than real and sectional rather than national. Let us consider this question from a national standpoint—not the narrow, local parish point of view—and thereby do the greatest good to the greatest number. I have noted some of the objections and give them here, with the answer to each:

(1) It would be an economic failure and waste of public money. Answer: The power incidental will pay for the work.

(2) The cost would be prohibitive. Answer: The deep waterway reports say that it would not.

(3) Fogs and ice make the St. Lawrence route too hazardous. It is all right for six or seven months. Answer: The fogs and ice on the Atlantic play havoc with the steamship service there as well.

(4) Ocean vessels cannot navigate in the restricted channels nor afford the delays of lockage in canals. Answer: This objection is not sound, the report says so.

(5) There will be no return tonnage, and one-way traffic cannot be developed. Answer: The west is a great consumer.

(6) The purpose is to enable Canada to control the export grain trade. Answer: That is not so.

(7) It is designed to destroy the competition of the barge canal. Answer: It would cater to a different form of trade, and would be a feeder to the barge canal.

(8) The power is not needed. Answer: It will soon be badly needed in Canada and especially in the United States.

(9) It would expose the United States to the peril of invasion by Great Britain. Answer: The British fleet has been for six centuries the defender and protector of civilization. It saved civilization and liberty in the days of Philip of Spain, Louis XIV, Napoleon and the Kaiser. Only for the British fleet in the years from 1914 to 1918, we would have had the awful horror of the German war on our own soil, in Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Boston, New York and Chicago. The British fleet saved America's shores. There is no danger of the invasion of the Great Lakes. The hope of the peace of the world is in amity between England and America.

We talk about disarmament. The case of the Great Lakes is a shining example to the world of what can be done by two nations in this regard. What could be more significant of the spirit that inspired the Disarmament conference than the simple fact that from the river St. Lawrence to the head of the Great Lakes there is not to-day any sign of a single armed vessel or armed fort? It shows that two peoples, with the same ideals and aspirations, can live side by side in friendly relations without any resort to works of defence.

Before I conclude I desire to read three of four paragraphs from the report now before me of the International Joint Commission, appointed by both governments. That commission was given certain instructions and it submitted answers to nine questions asked them. I shall not read the questions; I shall leave that duty to some other hon. member. The questions, as do the answers, speak for themselves. Having considered the question from every economic standpoint, and having heard numerous witnesses, the commission have now brought in a report strongly in favour of the proposed work, from the navigation, the power, and the financial standpoints. The report states that an analysis submitted before the commission made it clear that the consensus of opinion of the two countries, as revealed in the public hearing, was on the whole distinctly favourable to the improvement of the St. Lawrence. There are two or three sentences I wish to read:

> The opposition to the suggested improvement centred largely in the State of New York, but was also supported by representatives of various public bodies in New England and in some of the Atlantic Coast States south of New York as well as in the City of Montreal.

But the few Canadians who opposed it did so because they favoured a rural route. P. 156. Further on, the report says:

> The Commission is inclined to the view that the St. Lawrence route would afford a material saving in transportation rates over any of the existing routes between points in the territory economically tributary to the St. Lawrence and overseas points.

The report refers to the time factor as follows (P. 161):

> The Commission is of the opinion that losses of time—due to delay in locks and restricted speed in canals and river channels would not prove a serious obstacle to the use of the proposed route—by ocean-going vessels.

At page 166 the report says that there is nothing in the evidence to warrant the belief that ocean-going vessels could not safely navigate the waters of the St. Lawrence river, and further on it states:

> The terms of the reference make it clear, in the opinion of the commission, that the intention of the two Governments was that the proposed improvement of the Upper St. Lawrence should serve primarily the interests of navigation and commerce and only incidentally those of water power.

In answer to the statement made by Mr. Taschereau and others that the matter was being really engineered by the American water-power interests to serve their own ends, the commission has this to say:

> The Commission is confident that there is no justification whatever for these assertions.

As a matter of fact, public attention, as I have pointed out is centered on the question from the point of view of the general improvement afforded in transportation, navigation and powers, and the economic advantage to Canada.

Now, this is the most important question this Parliament will have to deal with, and I would ask hon. members on all sides to approach the consideration of it with an open mind. Do not let us consider only from the sectional point what is good for Montreal, or Toronto, or Quebec, or any other single section; let us consider what is good in the national interests and that of the whole country, in order that we may obtain some relief from the heavy freight charges and solve our transportation problems aright. I submit that action is necessary in this matter for several reasons: to develop our water-power and improve our traffic; to solve the unemployment question; to develop the great interior of this country and particularly the great West which is suffering to such an extent to-day; and generally to make Canada a better place "for our war heroes to live in." As things are many of our unfit soldiers are out of work in many large centres of population to-day, going about seeking charity in the larger centres of population. This canal would do more to solve the unemployment problem than any other agency, and I urge the Prime Minister to take steps in the matter immediately. The question was considered of sufficient importance in the United States to justify six weeks' discussion in the two houses of Parliament there, and the committees. It has been made a football long enough by legislators, and I think it is time for the Parliament of Canada to do something practical. We have had a number of minor questions discussed in this House. On Monday afternoon and evening, for example, we had under discussion an academic question which, though important, was of trivial concern to the people of this country as compared with the question we are now considering. That discussion on Monday was no doubt interesting from an academic point of view, but this subject transcends in importance any of the minor questions that we have been debating. I do urge the Government, the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen), the Progressives, and all parties to get together and so arrange matters that all those who desire to speak on this question might have ample opportunity to put their views before the House. For, I repeat, this is the greatest question this Parliament will have to settle, and one of the greatest questions since Confederation. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to thank yourself and the hon. members of this House for the courteous hearing and attention that has been given me. As I said, I could only begin to touch the fringe of this great and intricate problem in the very short time at my disposal. I have, however, dealt with the most salient points affecting the economic, the transportation, the navigation, the power and light, the unemployment, the shipbuilding, the rates and tolls, and the financial sides of this big question.

Mr. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): I had not anticipated the honour of taking part at an early stage in this debate, but I feel that if we may congratulate the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church) on bringing this very momentous question to the attention of the House, some endeavour should be made at once to place before hon. members the other side of the case. The hon. member in a very able, although not very comprehensive speech, has presented his own side of the question; and, while it is not my intention to try to follow him in every step that he has taken, I shall attempt to sum up in a general way the arguments on the side of the case which my hon,. friend has not put before us. I want to remind the House also of some of the very good reasons which have been advanced why the Government should be very cautious in this matter, should approach the whole question warily, and, in fact, should refrain at the present time from taking the least practical action. If the flow of the St. Lawrence was as abundant and tumultuous as the faculty of speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Church), we might take chances with it, but in my view the St. Lawrence is too precious an asset to this country for us to lightly and without the strongest motives either attempt to alter its navigability, or enter into partnership with another country in regard to it, or place a mortgage on our property rights in it.

It has been pointed out, and very properly, that the deepening of the St. Lawrence river to permit ocean vessels to reach the Great Lakes is no more than an engineering problem. I grant, Mr. Speaker, that, given the money, it is possible for engineers to provide a twenty-five or even a thirty-foot channel from Montreal to the Great Lakes. But that is not the point. There is a financial and also an international side to this question. Can Canada bear her share of the cost of this undertaking? That is one point. Further, will the results expected warrant the expenditure? That is another point. But a more important point than either seems to me to be this: Is it desirable to enter into a partnership of this kind with the United States?

As to the cost, the situation is very obscure. We have not any precise data as to what this great enterprise would cost. It has been reported that a twenty-five-foot waterway can be constructed for $250,000,000. But it has also been pointed out that this estimate does not cover the deepening of the lake harbours, of the channels of the Great Lakes, nor of the connecting rivers. In this connection I need not remind this House that every time an enterprise of this kind is launched in Parliament the estimated cost is always very much lower than the actual cost of construction.

But the point of my argument this afternoon is not directed so much against this scheme as to show that we do not have enough information at the present time to warrant us entering into it. As to the cost, I would point out from the International Joint Commission's report on this St. Lawrence waterway, which was distributed to us at the beginning of the session, that it is rather dubious what the cost will be. From the summary of conclusions on page 178 I quote the following paragraph:

> The whole question of the distribution of cost has given the commission some concern.

May I interject that it should give us even more concern?

> If the area to be benefited were all in one country, the problem of financing the improvement would be a comparatively simple one, but as the matter stands the situation is complicated not merely by the fact that two neighbouring countries are joining in the project, but that these countries are unequal in population, unequal in wealth, unequal in their ability to make effective use of the waterway. That is the situation to-day, but it does not necessarily follow that it will always be the situation.

On the same page this matter of cost is further discussed and I read:

> Objection may be made that the proposed principle of dividing the cost in proportion to the benefits each country derives from the improvement could hardly be put into effect until the works had been completed and in operation for a sufficient period to secure reliable data on the subject.

Again on the same page the commissioners state:

> In other words, each country should be debited with its share of the entire cost of all works necessary for navigation, including the cost of the Welland ship canal, based upon the proportion the cargo tonnage carried to and from its own ports by way of the St. Lawrence bears to the entire tonnage by the same route. The ratio to be charged to each obviously would require to be readjusted periodically.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I have quoted sufficiently from the report of the commission to show that there is no precise information as to what this scheme would cost Canada, and to show that we would be altogether in the hands of our powerful partner to the south as to what proportion of the cost should be assessed to us.

The estimate that this waterway would cost $250,000,000 is certainly much below the actual cost. But even if we accept that as a correct estimate, and assume that we would be responsible for one-half of it, I submit that in the present state of our finances it would be very unwise indeed to add to our obligations to that extent.

As to improving the navigability of the St. Lawrence, there is a lurking suspicion that this is only the ostensible purpose, and that the real purpose of the promoters is to promote water-power.

But, in objecting to this scheme generally, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that I am not offering the profane opinion of a mere city member, but that I am rather summarizing the arguments that have been advanced against it by men whose opinion is authoritative and deserves great respect. The effect of those arguments is that it is not at all evident that there would be any improvement in navigation as a result of carrying out this scheme at all commensurate with the expenditure involved. You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that deep sea vessels cannot compete with lake vessels because the latter have three times the cargo capacity for the corresponding draught; also the deep sea vessel has to be built more strongly and costs three times as much per ton as does the lake vessel. Therefore the claim that ocean vessels could come up the river to our inland ports in competition with our lake vessels is indeed one that is very much open to question.

I think we may reasonably come to the conclusion that while many of the experts have pronounced on the feasibility of a deep waterway of this kind, and that it might bring lake vessels to Montreal, yet it would not at all enable the ocean vessels to profitably proceed to the head of the lakes. In other words, the truth about this water navigation from the middle west to the ocean is that it would require two, and possibly three kinds of craft to complete it. First, it would require the lake vessels proper, built light and inexpensively for cargo-carrying purposes exclusively; then barges to traverse the intervening areas between the lakes and the seaports, and, finally, the heavy and costly sea vessels with large crews, staunchly built, requiring expensive insurance, to carry the cargo the rest of the way. But, Mr. Speaker, we have strong suspicion, as I have said, that the navigation side of the project is only an accessory feature; that the water-power project is the essential motive that has inspired the promoters of the scheme. I quote in support of this contention the New York Times. Of course, it will be argued that New York stands very much with Montreal on this matter, but as I have said, I am merely placing before the House the argument on our side. The New York Times says:

> The people of New York, under our constitution, own the lands under water along the St. Lawrence valley. No one has suggested a way to compensate these owners if their land is condemned. And condemnation proceedings, under the federal statutes, may be brought only where the rights condemned are to be used for navigational purposes. Hence the camouflage of benefiting navigation.

As for Canada, it has been submitted that we have in this country water-power possibilities much greater than we employ at the present time, and that if this scheme would give the United States a vast amount of water-power which they need, it would be practically using Canadian resources to supply them with that water-power, while we on this side would only sacrifice our right to those resources without any compensating benefit. But the main argument and the main objection to this project, Mr. Speaker, is that it would involve an international partnership with a very powerful neighbour, a neighbour whom we expect to exact the letter as well as the spirit of all contracts; and it would give rise to innumerable conflicts in the future. We know that we have been at peace with the United States for a long while, but we also know by experience that every time there has been a dispute we have bought peace, sometimes dearly, by sacrificing our part of the bargain. Need I remind the House that on the occasion of the Maine boundary controversy Canada maintained peace only by sacrificing a portion of territory which should be included in the province of Quebec and which now forms a very wealthy and prosperous part of the United States? Need I remind the House that when the question of the Alaskan boundary was discussed, again we had to buy peace by sacrificing what we thought was our property in that part of the country?

The other day the member for Westmount-St. Henri (Mr. Mercier) brought to the attention of the House a despatch to the effect that the United States representatives were already discussing this matter with the British Embassy at Washington. I say in all confidence, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe the British Embassy has gone into this matter with the American representatives; but I do not think I am far from the truth when I say that if the British Embassy had been disposed to do so, the American representatives would have been only too glad to settle this matter over our heads. Anyway, if we are to judge by editorials and articles in the American press with regard to this matter, we can well make up our minds that this partnership, as I say, would be very dangerous to our own side of the bargain. I do not wish to quote at length; I realize that, especially on Wednesday, when we have to adjourn at six o'clock, it is only fair that I should give as much time as possible to other members who desire to speak on the subject. But I would like to place on Hansard a couple of quotations on this matter of partnership. The first is from the report of the New York State Commission. It reads thus—I will quote only one paragraph:

> For a hundred years the two nations have been in perfect accord and no thoughtful person would suggest that these cordial relations should ever be severed, but as a matter of prudence and good statesmanship, if a ship canal were ever to be built down the St. Lawrence river, and for nine-tenths of the distance from Lake Ontario to the gulf of St. Lawrence wholly within Canadian territory and under the sovereign control of the Dominion of Canada, if not the British Empire, then there should be a cession of territory the entire length of the St. Lawrence river, five or ten miles back from the river, constituting a zone like the Panama Canal Zone, secured by treaty with the Republic of Panama.

I would like also to quote again from the report of the International Joint Commission, to show you, Mr. Speaker, that this partnership with the United States would involve innumerable causes for possible conflicts. I quote again from the conclusions of the report; and I would like to point out that I should at least be given some credit for taking my arguments from the very report which is supposed to support this scheme. The report says, on page 179:

> In regard to the method of control, the commission is conscious of the fact that the peculiar character of the St. Lawrence, partly international and partly national, creates an unusual situation, and it believes that, in order to combine the fullest possible liberty of action on the part of each country in its own territory, with the efficient co-ordination of the several parts of the completed improvement, all "navigation works" lying wholly within one country and capable of economic and efficient administration as complete and independent units, should be maintained and operated by the country in which they are located—

Nobody can find fault with that, so far.

> —that "navigation works" not lying wholly within one country and not capable of economic and efficient administration as complete and independent units, should be maintained and operated by an international board on which each country would have equal representation; and that this board should also have the right of inspection of those "navigation works."

I admit it is proposed that we should have equal representation on that board, but who will pretend for one moment that even if numerically we have the same representation as the United States on a board of that kind, the representatives of Canada, able as they might be, powerful as they might be in their own country, can ever counter-balance the influence of the representatives of the United States if an important conflict should arise regarding those works which are of a national character?

Further, as part of the recommendations of the commission, found on page 181 of this report, it is said:

> 5. That, assuming the adoption of the plans of the engineering board, or of other plans also involving a readjustment of the international boundary, in order to bring each of the power houses on its own side of the boundary, appropriate steps be taken to transfer from one country or the other, as the case may be, the slight acreage of submerged land involved.

Again I submit, that over this one little paragraph in the recommendations of the commision an important and involved discussion could take place over what they call the slight acreage of our territory, and if we entered into a discussion of that matter, we do not know where it would end. I might also quote paragraphs 7 and 8 of these recommendations to show that in more than one respect there could be discussion between the two countries on matters of territory, on navigation, on the distribution of water power, and in every case we would be in the position of being the much weaker and the much smaller nation discussing these matters with a very powerful neighbour who could practically get from us all that it demanded. I shall say no more for the reason that I gave only a moment ago. I would like to hear from the House on this question. I do not say that the House should condemn altogether this enterprise, but I think it will agree with me that there are grave doubts on the different aspects of this project, as to its cost, as to its value for navigation purposes, and for the international development of power, and finally as to the political consequence of such a partnership with the United States of America. The report makes it very clear that the commission itself did not reach a definite conclusion, for at page 180 I find this:

> The commission believes that, before any particular scheme is finally adopted, all the available engineering data, including the report and plans of the engineering board and all comments thereon or alternative plans, should be referred to a special technical board for careful consideration and report.

And paragraph 4, on the next page:

> That there shall be an exhaustive investigation of the extent and character of the damage through flowage involved in the plan of development finally adopted.

These paragraphs show amply that the commission themselves feel that before they arrive at a conclusion, they should get the two countries together once more and make a further investigation, and that even this report, which is supposed to favour the scheme, is not at all definite in its conclusions. These doubts are sufficient, in my mind, to lead the Canadian Government to exercise the strictest caution.

It rests with the promoters of the project to create and instill the strongest conviction, if they ever hope to have it carried out. But for those who do object to it, it is sufficient to point out the dubious, questionable, and altogether obscure character of the whole enterprise. Only the strongest evidence could bear out the project. This does not exist even in this report. I think we have shown, on the contrary, that the project coasts along dangers and threats, both economic and national, at every turn and winding of its course. I therefore would urge the Government and the House not to accept this resolution.

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to speak for a few minutes on this matter, to protest against acceding to the request of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church) that another day be set apart for the discussion of this resolution.

I am not going to discuss whether the project is feasible or not, but if we spend the time of the House in discussing questions like this, which are not pressing at the present time and, indeed, are not to be thought of, very important and urgent questions will have to be compressed into a very small space at the end of the session or not dealt with at all. There is no doubt in my mind that if this project is carried out, the estimated cost of $250,000,000 will be doubled by the time it is completed.

What is the situation? I do not want to deal at any great length with western conditions. I think those have been stressed sufficiently for the House to realize the seriousness of the situation. I shall just mention one incident in order to give point to what has already been said. Two days before I left my home, the man who rents my farm said to me, "I can go out now and buy oats for less than it costs to thresh mine." Farmers at the present time are in need of help to buy seed. There are very many urgent matters for which we need money, and I think that is sufficient reason for me to arrive at the conclusion at once that the idea of starting on this project of deepening the St. Lawrence river and the Welland canal so that ocean vessels may go up to Fort William, while it may be quite practicable in the future, and I think will be, at the present time is simply out of the question. That being the case, if another day is set apart for its discussion, where will we be?

I came here with a very good impression of Parliament, and since I have been sitting here, that impression has not lessened; I think as much of Parliament today as I did when I arrived. But I have found what I expected, that occasionally a great deal of time is wasted. I have attended large conventions enough to know that it is impossible to prevent that. I have arrived at the conclusion that there are some cities in this country that are rather expensive. Judging from the pages that are put on Hansard by the representatives from Toronto, I fancy that Toronto is rather an expensive city. One argument made in favour of this project was that it was going to build up small cities into larger ones, and, I suppose, make the large ones still larger. I believe that the attitude of this party in the House is sometimes misunderstood. We have been charged with being narrowminded and with not being able to see other interests besides our own. I wish to make it plain just what our attitude is with regard to these matters. When it comes to a question of developing a great industry which, when developed, will cause life to flow through the channels of trade throughout the whole country, you will find us very, very generous. That includes such works as agriculture, fisheries, and the development of our mines and forests. But I submit that when money is poured out freely into the large cities it works in very narrow channels and in very small circles, and it is a question to my mind whether this country would be any better off in any respect if Toronto, or Montreal, or Hamilton were doubled in size to-morrow. It is just a question if it would not prove a greater burden on the country at large, than a benefit. The cities are overgrown now; in comparison with the country, they are over-developed. Therefore, I think the policy of Canada at the present time and for some few years to come should be to decentralize, to cause people to go from the cities to the country, so that the country may be built up and take a position of greater relative importance as compared with the cities. That is what we need, not a policy to cause our cities to grow larger. Where does the money expended in the large cities go? It goes into the pockets of the retailers, and then into the pockets of the wholesalers and manufacturers—the movement operates in a small circle. If a city grows larger it probably helps the surrounding country within a radius of ten to twenty miles; but I cannot see that it is any great benefit to the country at large to have these urban centres grow larger than they are now. The present debate ought to be closed at six o'clock so that we shall not have to waste another day over the subject, because when the question is brought up once more, as it undoubtedly will be, the whole ground will have to be covered again.

Mr. E. A. LAPIERRE (Nipissing): I wish to concur in the remarks just made by the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) in objecting to this Parliament giving its endorsation to any scheme in which we have to enter into partnership with a foreign country. We of northern Ontario have had a waterway scheme under consideration for the last twenty-five years.. Away back in 1899 the late J. W. Poupore, then representing the county of Pontiac, advocated in this House the building of a canal entirely within the bounds of Canada—a canal to be built with Canadian capital, by Canadian labour, and controlled by the Canadian people. Therefore, when my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Church) says that all Ontario is in favour of a joint ship canal I can—on behalf of the electors of Nipissing, whom I have the honour to represent—say that we are directly opposed to the construction of the St. Lawrence deep waterway. The Georgian Bay ship canal project will meet all the requirements that the St. Lawrence deep waterway will give us, and it would confer upon Canada, western Canada in particular, all the benefits that are claimed for the latter project. The Engineering Board of the International Joint Commission have estimated that the cost of a 25 foot ship canal would be $252,000,000. As detailed plans could not be prepared within the limited time of one year mere outline plans and lump estimates were submitted, and we are safe in concluding that these estimates will fall far short of what the real cost of this enterprise will be. Canada's initial share in the construction of this canal would be $151,000,000; and I ask hon. members who have been clamouring since this session opened for more economy and more retrenchment in expenses if this is an opportune time to add $8,000,000 in interest charges to the annual expenses of this Government. The economic advantage claimed for this scheme as far as Canada is concerned is merely the cheapening of the export of our north west grain by avoiding the cost of elevating at Kingston and Montreal. All other advantages favour American lake ports. Incidentally the advocates of this scheme claim that 1,500,000 horse power of hydro electric energy will be developed along the route and delivered in each district for a great distance at one-fourth the cost of power in New York city. It is the development of this electric power that is expected to finance the enterprise and lay the basis of an issuance of bonds to enable the waterway to be built. It is this aspect of the water-power development that we of northern Ontario hold in great suspicion as a mere subterfuge to grab the water-power of the St. Lawrence river. The proposition, in our opinion, is mere camouflage. The Buffalo News makes the following declaration:

> There is an ulterior motive back of the whole project—a desire of the "power-ring" to get control of all the water powers along the St. Lawrence river.

And by a strange coincidence the report of the International Joint Commission contains a recommendation that 1,464,000 horse power be developed between Kingston and Cornwall concurrently with the building of the deep waterway by erecting a dam at the Long Sault. Knowing as we do the great tendency toward centralization, knowing how the United States have developed during the last twenty-five years and knowing that the great industrial development that has been going on in the middle west necessitates some means of relieving the traffic congestion to the sea board, we must realize that when we are invited to go into this project we are asked to subscribe a portion of the large amount that will be necessary to relieve the railway congestion in the United States. In this enterprise the American government would be the dominant party. By virtue of its larger expenditure it would demand a larger share of the control of the enterprise, and this would inevitably give rise to misunderstandings and some recrimination. This would eventually have to be decided by arbitration and, as was said a few minutes ago by the member for St. James, we should hesitate before we enter into any project that may have to be adjudicated upon by an international arbitration tribunal. The consequences flowing from our past experience in this regard should be sufficient for us to look very seriously into this project. That an organized move is being made in order to gain control of the south shore of the St. Lawrence between Sorel and Cornwall has been stated.

In the report of the Joint Commission, between pages 154 and 155, we find a map of the water-power installation on the St. Lawrence, Richelieu and the St. Maurice rivers. If hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to look at this map, they will observe the international boundary the Richelieu and the south shore of the St. Lawrence rivers, form an irregular triangle of which, it was said in the St. Louis Globe Democrat a few days ago, would be one of the most remarkable industrial centres of the world. I read from the St. Louis Globe the following:

> Under American control and with the power of the St. Lawrence made available, the area might become one of the most remarkable industrial districts in the world. Acquisition of it would give us jurisdiction of the river bank opposite Montreal, as well as for some distance east of there and that city would lose some of its most flourishing suburbs on the southern shore.

In the Montreal Star of April 21, I find an article of about the same tenor, which reads:

> Washington, April 21.—Asserting that the Secretary of State "has been instructed to negotiate a treaty with Canada relating to canalization and water-power development of the St. Lawrence River," Representative Ten Eyck, Democrat, New York, in a letter to House members yesterday asked that they get behind his resolution seeking acquisition by the Government of half the land adjacent to the proposed canal and half the land to be improved by such development.

> Mr. Ten Eyck said he had written chambers of commerce and other organizations requesting them to urge the House Foreign Affairs Committee to set a date for public hearings on his resolution.
> "A treaty," he said, "will shift to a certain extent the future of this important project directly to the Senate, which enjoys joint responsibility of the treaty making powers of the country. I feel that before any treaty with Canada or Great Britain relating to the St. Lawrence project is negotiated due consideration should be given to the land adjacent to the power development.
> "It is essential that we own half the land so that we may be a fifty per cent beneficiary in the future before we pay 50 per cent of the cost of its development."

These are the reasons, Mr. Speaker, why we from northern Ontario oppose the deepening of the St. Lawrence. This country has already expended $250,000 in making the necessary surveys for the construction of the Georgian Bay canal. That canal would be entirely within Canadian territory. It would assist in developing what we, in northern Ontario, consider the richest area in natural resources on the entire continent. Have the members of this House ever considered that we in northern Ontario possess one of the richest mineral deposits in the world, that the district of Sudbury at the present moment is producing 85 per cent of the world's nickel, that less than 100 miles further north we have one of the largest silver countries in the world, that a few miles further north we have one of the richest gold countries in the world, and that we have in that district one mine which alone in the last eleven years produced $56,000,000 in gold bullion. This industry is in its infancy. The surface has only been scraped, and it is just a question of time when with proper development we will have in that northern country an area of sufficient size to give homes to many thousands prosperous Canadians. We say that the Georgian Bay ship canal is of paramount importance, and that before this Government gives its consent to any such project as is the St. Lawrence deep waterway they should consider the right of the people of northern Ontario to have their claims considered.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): As another representative from northern Ontario, I fear I shall have to differ slightly with my hon. friend (Mr. Lapierre) who has just spoken. I am not at all surprised at his attitude, because I know his district very well. I know that he represents the city of North Bay and naturally that city is particularly interested in the Georgian Bay canal. I have no quarrel with the hon. gentleman for taking that attitude, because, after all, Canada is unfortunately so immense in area and so scattered in population that anyone who represents a constituency in this House is more or less controlled in his attitude upon any question by the feeling of his constituency upon that question. And I shall frankly admit most of those who have spoken, or who will speak perhaps, upon this question favourably to this project, are those who represent constituencies or sections of the country which will be to a certain extent benefited by it; and those who speak against the scheme will speak from an absolutely opposite standpoint.

One point that struck me as a little curious is that my hon. friends to my left are not quite as assiduous in their attendance in the House to-day on this question as they usually are. To do them justice, I believe they attend the House—and perhaps it is because most of them are new members—as a rule much more assiduously than any of the rest of us; but here is a question which I believe affects them more than it affects any other section of this House, is of more real interest to them than perhaps any other question that will be discussed in this House, or at least of as much importance, and yet a great many of them are not taking as much interest as usual, the reason being, I presume—and I am not saying it in any critical spirit at all—that they have not perhaps looked into the question as fully as they might have. It is a question that is of distinct interest to them, and I think I shall prove it before I am through. The very point I make about the fact that they are not taking quite as much interest in this is the reason I believe this discussion is a good discussion.

This is a question of importance, not only to my hon. friends to my left, but to the whole country. I regret that of my hon. friends among the Government supporters only two have spoken, neither of whom has supported the project, though the first speaker did not oppose it very strenuously, except by quoting from the report of the commission, and I venture to say that some of his quotations did not really offer any criticism upon the project. But last year I remember when this question was up before the House there were a number of hon. gentlemen who are now on the Government side who supported it very strenuously. None of them have spoken to-day. But I hope that if this subject comes up again some of them will put themselves on record as they did last year. In fact, I am sure they will. Among those who supported it were the Minister of Railways (Mr. Kennedy), the Solicitor-General (Mr. McKenzie), the member for Quebec County (Mr. Lavigueur), the member for Stanstead (Mr. Baldwin), the member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill), and the then member for West Lambton, who is now a senator. There were others, but those I have named I recall from a quick perusal of the names in Hansard of last year. I find that in the main these hon. gentlemen supported the proposal.

Mr. CAHILL: Let me correct the hon. member. I did not support this resolution last year; I supported the Georgian Bay canal scheme.

Mr. MANION: Well, I have not time to look into Hansard now, but I looked over the hon. gentleman's speech a few moments ago and I was quite sure that he supported the project. However, I may be wrong and I accept his correction. But it does not matter in any case. I do not remember the Georgian Bay canal having been discussed last year except in relation to this question, but, as I say, it is immaterial.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh. oh.

Mr. MANION: I did not mean that as an offence to the hon. member. It seems that his own friends wish to make it so.

Mr. McMASTER: Oh, no.

Mr. MANION: I was going to say that there are three questions to-day before the people which I believe are the most important problems that are engaging public attention. One of them is the tariff, upon which there are differences of opinion in various sections of the country. Next is the matter of immigration; and last of all, perhaps as important as the others, if indeed not more important, is the question of transportation, which embraces not only railways but also such questions as the one we are discusing to-day, namely, canals and waterways. I admit that if this project were carried out it would involve the expenditure of a large amount of money, and I am also aware that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has made the statement, at least as reported in the press, that at the moment the Government is not in a position to consider this question. That, of course, does not say that at a future time they may not consider it, but I understood, from my interpretation of the press announcement, that that was the attitude of the Minister of Finance, speaking on behalf of the Government. But if the question of expense precludes immediate practical action, that is all the more reason why there should be a thorough discussion of the subject now, so that the people of the country might become familiar with it in its every aspect; and if finally the matter should be decided in the negative, then the discussion will have served the purpose of indicating the various grounds of opposition to the scheme, and making clear the inadvisability, if that should be the ultimate conclusion, of building the canal. But I believe that any one who reads the report submitted by the International Joint Commission, and carefully studies it from every standpoint, will be fairly well convinced, if he starts out with an open mind, that the ultimate building of the canal is something which will be accomplished in the future in this country. There has been considerable discussion on the question not only in Canada, but also in the United States, and I have under my hand a copy of the Congressional Record, of a week ago to-day, in which it was presented both pro and con in the United States Senate.

Now, we should bear in mind that Canada is a great undeveloped country. We have in this Dominion a country of an immense area, and only by comparison can we really fully appreciate its vast extent. It is larger in area than the United States and twice the size of Europe, leaving out Russia. And yet, in that part of Europe excluding Russia, there are 300,000,000 people, compared to eight or nine millions in Canada, which has double the area. If this work is finally decided to be undertaken and the canal is built, it will bring about a greater development of our resources, it will attract more people to the country, and, to my mind, will very materially help my hon. friends to my left in reducing the expense of transporting their wheat from the prairie provinces to Liverpool. Furthermore, it will make for cheaper production in the development of power on the St. Lawrence waterways. We should not forget that anything that can develop the country will bring more people to the country, and in that way serve to reduce the national debt. If in twenty years you could double the population of Canada you would cut your per capita debt in two; and Canada is one of the few countries in the world to-day that are in the happy position of being able to open their doors to an extensive increase in population and thus secure a diminution in the national debt. Most of the European countries are not in that fortunate position. The British Isles are to-day as crowded as they wish to be, and Germany, France, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, and in fact any of those countries you care to name, are more or less completely developed. And even the United States is practically fully developed. So that Canada, as I say, is in the position of being able to open its gates to a larger flood of the right kind of immigration and so, by increasing its population, cut down its debt.

The agitation on behalf of this proposal aims at making the Great Lakes, not from a sentimental standpoint, but for business reasons, the Mediterranean of America. Any one studying the commercial history of the world will find that such cities as Venice, Carthage and Alexandria, and such countries as Great Britain, Holland, Spain, the Baltic cities of Germany which formed the Hanseatic League, and various other countries and cities that have come into the limelight or are prominent to-day as trading centres, attained that status by virtue of the fact that they had access to the sea and had cheap transportation facilities that enabled them to carry on easy commercial intercourse with other countries. Water transportation, as all hon. members know, is very much cheaper than rail transportation. Some authorities estimate an advantage of ten to one in favour of the former, but certainly a conservative estimate would be that water transportation is three to five times cheaper than the other.

All Canada is interested in this question, and I believe that the majority of the people, after carefully considering it, will be in favour of the ultimate building of the system of canals proposed. I admit that both in the United States and in Canada there are certain centres of population opposed to the project. In the United States it is being opposed by New York and Boston, because these cities feel that a certain amount of business would be taken by way of the St. Lawrence and that they would lose traffic in consequence. That may be true. And yet I do not know that New York, immense as it is, has any particular reason to fear for its future growth. In the United States there is one other city, Buffalo, which opposes the scheme, because that city is at the head of the Erie canal, which carries probably 65 per cent of the grain of western Canada to New York to be exported to Europe. Naturally, that city fears that it may lose a certain amount of traffic, and for that reason it offers opposition. And, in Canada, places like North Bay oppose the proposition on the grounds that have been mentioned, while Montreal so far has taken an attitude antagonistic to it. I do not believe that Montreal would suffer if this undertaking were carried through. Directly it might do that city some little harm, but indirectly it would undoubtedly do it a great deal of good, inasmuch as it would help to build up Canada. And anything that builds up the Dominion cannot possibly help benefiting a magnificent city like Montreal. In any case, suppose it did to some extent harm Montreal in Canada, or Buffalo or New York in the United States, that would not be a sufficient reason for abandoning a proposition of this kind. This country cannot be governed on sectional lines; it must be governed from the standpoint of what is good for the country as a whole, even if occasionally some particular section suffers in consequence. The question is of great importance to Ontario and the prairie provinces, because Ontario is directly adjacent to the Great Lakes, and the prairie provinces grow the wheat which goes over the lakes and upon which, it is claimed, a great saving in transportation would be secured if the canal were completed.

To realize the importance of the lake traffic of this country, let us for a moment consider the tonnage that passes through three great canals that are known to all of us—the Panama canal, the Suez canal, and the Soo canal. Taking the 1920 returns, the traffic passing through the Panama canal amounted to nine million tons; that passing through the Suez canal to twelve million tons; and that passing through the American and Canadian Soo canals to seventy-nine million tons. In other words, the traffic passing through the Soo canals betwen Canada and the United States was almost four times the combined traffic passing through those other two world-famous canals. The value of that seventy-nine million tons of traffic was over $1,000,000,000. We do not realize the importance of our waterways until we make some comparisons of that kind, and therefore I have made them for the benefit of hon. members who are doing me the courtesy of listening to my remarks.

I might point out also that our harbours, starting with St. John and Halifax in the east, and going to Victoria and Vancouver in the west, and taking in Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Fort William and Port Arthur, are practically fully developed, and it would not take very much additional expenditure on any one of them to meet the most exacting shipping requirements of to-day. So that that is not an expense of any very great amount in this scheme.

For the special benefit of my hon. friends to the left, I would draw attention to some facts in regard to the production of wheat and other grains in this country. They know that roughly 300,000,000 bushels of wheat are grown in the prairie provinces annually, most of which goes to the head of the lakes, for shipment by boat either to Port Colborne or Buffalo. If shipped to Port Colborne the wheat is usually transferred to smaller boats or to freight cars, and taken down to Montreal, in each case at considerable expense. If it goes to Buffalo—and sixty-five per cent of it in the past has been going there—it is usually transferred to small boats on the Erie canal and taken down to New York for export.

Now, it is claimed by those who are supporting it that by the building of this St. Lawrence-Great Lakes canal at least five cents per bushel would be saved in transportation charges on the wheat of western Canada. That means not only on the wheat exported, but it would be saved also on the wheat that is used within Canada, because all hon. members know that the price for the wheat of the world, including Canada, is set in Liverpool, that being the world market. So if you saved five cents per bushel on transportation, naturally that saving should go to the farmers of the West. Julius Barnes, whom all hon. members know by reputation, the former head of the American Wheat Board, has stated that this scheme would save ten cents to the farmers of western Canada and the western states. I could quote his exact words, but I do not wish to take up the time of the House. He has estimated that there is lost annually to the farmers of the western states through the lack of this deep-water communication from the head of the lakes $200,000,000. In other words, he figures out that more than the American cost of the building of this canal is lost every year to American farmers. If you take 300,000,000 bushels of wheat as being roughly the annual production of the prairie provinces a saving of five cents a bushel in the aggregate would amount to $15,000,000 every year to our western farmers. But that saving of five cents a bushel is a conservative estimate. Herbert Hoover, an international figure to-day, agrees with the statement of Julius Barnes that ten cents a bushel would be saved to the farmers of the western states and of western Canada. Consequently this question is of particular importance to the farmers of the West. That is the statement I started with, and I think the House will agree with me, because transportation rates on wheat are a direct tax upon the farmers who grow it.

But in addition to that saving of wheat, the building of this deep waterway would mean a saving of freight charges on all freight transported from the East to the West to the head of the Great Lakes or the reverse because package freight is increased in cost by the shipping charges, and also coal and various other commodities. I think it was my hon. friend, the Solicitor General (Mr. McKenzie), who pointed out in the course of his speech last year that coal from Nova Scotia, by virtue of these canals, might be shipped up even to the head of the lakes. I believe that is a possibility. To-day Ontario and Quebec get most of their coal from Pennsylvania. The building of these canals would facilitate traffic on the Great Lakes to such an extent that there would be a very good opportunity of coal from Nova Scotia being used as far west as Toronto, and even perhaps as far west as Fort William and Winnipeg, Pennsylvania coal being now used in Winnipeg and a short distance beyond.

Let me point out also another important fact. It deals particularly with the remarks of my hon. friend from Nippissing (Mr. Lapierre) who preceded me. It is estimated that one-third of the population living in the States is tributary to the Great Lakes. In other words, it is claimed by the advocates of this scheme that forty million of the population live in those states which, so to speak, are tributary to the Great Lakes. Much of the wheat and other traffic of those states is tributary to the Great Lakes. It is also claimed that seventy per cent of the foodstuffs and raw material produced in the Union are produced in those states. In Canada half of the population may be regarded as feeding the Great lakes, by their traffic, because Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have a little more than four million people among them; and those four provinces containing half the population of Canada, roughly, and I should say giving more than half of our production, are tributary to the Great Lakes.

Mr. VIEN: If I may interrupt my hon. friend? What advantage would accrue to the maritime provinces and to Quebec, which would be called upon to contribute to a large extent to the expenditure involved, by the construction of the canal?

Mr. MANION: I might reply by asking my hon. friend: What advantage to the prairie provinces was the building of the Intercolonial railway, for example?

Mr. VIEN: The answer is quite obvious —the prairie provinces had not much to say when the Intercolonial railway was built.

Mr. MANION: That is quite true, but they have contributed to its deficits just the same, I notice. However, I will try to answer my hon. friend's question. There may not be any direct benefit to the city of Montreal or the province of Quebec except to this extent, that if these proposals I am laying before the House, and which the advocates of this scheme support, are correct, the whole of Canada would be built up, and in that way Montreal and Quebec would profit also. But before my hon. friend came in I had pointed out that we cannot govern this country in sections. We cannot take every proposition that comes before the House and prove that every section of the country is going to be equally benefited by it before we consider its merits.

Mr. VIEN: It must be for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. MANION: It might be for the general advantage of Canada, perhaps, but not for the particular advantage of Montreal.

Mr. McMASTER: Impossible!

Mr. MANION: I advanced arguments before my hon. friend came in that I do not want to go over again in regard to the effect of this undertaking upon Montreal and Quebec. So far as the maritime provinces are concerned, anything that builds up this country will also enure to the advantage of those provinces: and of Quebec also, and as I was arguing a moment ago coal might be brought by this route as far as the head of the lakes— I do not claim that that would actually happen—and to that extent Nova Scotia would get the benefit.

My hon. friend from Nipissing spoke of the Georgian Bay canal route. There is no doubt that good arguments could be advanced in favour of that route—that is, sentimental arguments, and from the standpoint of a route which would be entirely within Canadian territory. But from the standpoint of tapping the densely populated sections of the country, the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes canal system is very much superior to the Georgian Bay canal system, because it goes directly down to southern Ontario, and, what is much more important, perhaps, from the traffic standpoint, goes directly down to those states bordering on the Great Lakes, south of Lake Ontario, Lake Erie, Lake St. Clair, and thereabouts. It is true that the Georgian Bay canal would tap these also, but only in a roundabout way.

The statement has been made to me in private conversation that none of the ocean steamers would patronize this route; they would not go up to the Great Lakes to supply traffic necessities in Canada and the United States. In that connection I should like to point out that over three-quarters of all the ocean-going vessels in the world are of less than 25-foot draught. The picture which some people draw of the Olympic or the Mauritania docking at Toronto or Chicago is, of course, purely an imaginary picture, and any one who has regard to the facts will admit that that would not be the result of the operation of this canal system. But small ocean-going boats are much more numerous than large ones. If I may be permitted a personal reminiscence, I would point out that twenty-five years ago, when I was a boy, in my home city of Fort William I saw a Norwegian ship which had come straight across from Norway, passed through our canals, landed at Fort William, unloaded the cargo there and took a cargo back. If twenty-five years ago that could be done with our canals as they were at that time, certainly with the enlarged canals it would be done on a much larger scale. I remember also crossing the ocean on a passenger ship of the Anchor line which was very much smaller than many of the passenger ships on the lakes to-day. Smaller ships, I repeat, are much in a majority on the ocean.

I would point out also that Montreal is four or five hundred miles nearer to Liverpool than is New York. Buffalo and Port Colborne, by the St. Lawrence route, are as close to Liverpool as New York city is. That is something one can hardly believe until he actually examines the map. But due to the fact that Great Britain is much farther north than we are, and due to the shape of the earth, Montreal is 400 or 500 miles nearer Liverpool than New York, and Port Colborne and Buffalo are the same distance as New York from Liverpool. That indicates the advantage which would be derived from shipping wheat or freight of any kind in this direction.

There is another point which has not been mentioned. We have already spent on the development of the Welland canal approximtely $42,000,000 and it is intended to spend in the neighbourhood of $90,000,000. Well, any one who looks at the map and sizes the matter up will realize that the Welland canal, enlarged through that vast expenditure, is of practically no use to this country unless the further development of this ship canal system is proceeded with. Without that further development, boats from the western end of the lakes may proceed only one lake further than they go at present; they could not go on to Montreal. So that if the Welland canal improvement is proceeded with, the only logical and reasonable policy in that connection must be that the proposed canal system is to be one of the ultimate solutions of the transportation problem.

Then, the power question has been referred to. I do not wish to argue this matter on any false premises. The statement has been made here to-day by somebody that the power development of the St. Lawrence canal would pay for the canal. I do not think that would be the case. It is estimated that 4,000,000 horse-power of electric energy could be developed to-day on the St. Lawrence river, but there is nc great demand in Canada to-day for the three-quarters of that which would belong to this country. Canada to-day has only 2,000,000 horse-power of electrical development, though we have a potential development of 18,000,000 horse-power. There would, however, be a demand for some, and the development of part of it as required would help to meet the cost of this project. But I do not believe at the present time it could be said that the development of horse-power on the St. Lawrence would wholly pay for it.

Mr. VIEN: Does not my hon. friend think that the export of electric power to the United States would help build up their industries to the detriment of Canadian industries?

Mr. MANION: Of course, this development of water-power might be carried on and the power exported, but it is for the Government to say whether or not the power shall be exported or whether or not the falls shall be developed.

Mr. VIEN: My hon. friend has just said that there is no market for the power to be developed in Canada, so that if any power of value is developed, it would be for export purposes.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend should not put words in my mouth. I did not say there was no market; I said there was not a market for the 3,000,000 horse-power which would be Canada's share of the development. There is some market in Canada for it, and I have no doubt that by the development of some of this horse-power, hives of industry would be established along the St. Lawrence, and part of the cost of the development could thereby be met. But the question which my hon. friend brings up is a matter for the future. It would have to be decided by the Government whether the export of this power should be permitted.

The development of electric power would reduce the use of coal on the railways; certainly the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National lines between Toronto and Montreal would be operated entirely by the power developed from the St. Lawrence Canal system.

Now, anybody who wishes to get the arguments on this question from the Canadian standpoint can get them by referring to the Congressional Record of April 18th last. Senator Calder, representing New York state, opposed the building of these canals, mainly upon the ground that they would be of more benefit to Canada than they would be to the United States. I wish to quote just a few short passages from a very lengthy speech which he made. He said:

> From the wheat growers' standpoint, therefore, the St. Lawrence waterway must be judged upon the basis of its effect upon a bushel of wheat laid down in Liverpool.

Then he quotes Mr. Craig, of Duluth:

> Then, says Mr. Craig: The Canadian Northwest can double its acreage, multiply it fourfold, eightfold even, before its land is utilized to its last acre.

Then the Senator continues:

> That is the vision—a Canadian acreage multiplied eightfold—with which Craig would comfort the American wheat grower.

Further down he says:

> With these figures that I have submitted to you in mind it is very easy indeed to understand why our Canadian brethren should be willing, even anxious, for us to construct a highway to the sea that will bring Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta a few days nearer to Liverpool. And it is easy to understand why Great Britain, the master wheat merchant of the world, should look with favour upon any plan we undertake that will make the resources of her own rich provinces in any way more accessible to her.

And further on:

> There are other reasons why Canada should be interested in the canal. She is a growing country. Her own commerce is increasing by leaps and bounds. She is particularly concerned with the fuel problem, being, as her editors and statesmen are accustomed to remark, now dependent upon the United States for coal. The Canadian Deep Waterway and Power Association makes out a very convincing case—for Canada. It says:
> During 1919 Canada imported 13,000,000 tons of bituminous coal from the United States at a cost of $130,000,000.
> In Alberta and in the Maritime provinces—

This, perhaps, will answer to a certain extent the question put by my hon. friend (Mr. Vien).

> —Canada has a plentiful supply of bituminous coal, but the high rail freight rates prevent its distribution.
> Open the St. Lawrence locks to large freighters and Canadian bituminous coal will supply the Canadian market.

Then he gives very excellent reasons why the canal should be constructed by Canada. I will give two more short quotations:

> By this showing, Canada's interest in the proposed waterway outruns that of Uncle Sam's by the ratio of 3 to 1. Then, too, Canada looks to the canal to save it five cents a bushel on its wheat. It is seeking an outlet for its millions upon millions of undeveloped land.

Finally he says:

> I cite these facts for the purpose of calling your attention not only to Canada's interest in the proposed waterway but to its preponderance of interest. Its wheat farmers have a greater stake in the proposed canal than our own.

To anybody interested in this question that is a very interesting speech. There was a reply by Senator Townsend, who favoured the canal in an impromptu speech. He was not prepared because he did not know the matter was coming up, but both speeches are very informative on this question.

Somebody, I think it was my hon. friend from St. James (Mr. Rinfret), spoke as if this matter was being decided on a theoretical or idealistic basis, without an investigation. We are not speaking on this question without an investigation. As a matter of fact, on January 21, 1920, the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States united in instructing the International Joint Commission to investigate this whole question. The commission had hearings all over the United States in cities where it was necessary, and in Canada, from Montreal in the east to Calgary in the west, until December 19, 1921, two years less one month, when they put in their report. So they had nearly two years to consider this question. They listened to all sides of it. They heard the engineers and had their reports. They heard the question debated pro and con, and their report in brief is as follows. Despite what my hon. friend from St. James read from the report, this is its substance in a very few words.

First, they think the canal is advisable from shipping, economic, and transportation standpoints.

Second, the cost will be $252,000,000 plus the cost of the Welland canal. Canada has built the Welland canal, but the commission propose that the Welland canal cost be included, and I believe it should be, although this canal is entirely within Canadian borders. The commission recommend that the cost of the Welland canal should be put in and ultimately divided between the two countries. The United States would pay a larger proportion than Canada because it is more populous, has a much richer population, and will make more use of the canal, as the commission recommend that the cost of the St. Lawrence canal and Welland canal should be divided between the two countries in proportion to the benefits received. In other words, the commission propose that the cost should be paid to a much greater extent by the United States than by Canada. For instance, if the total cost was $252,000,000, the United States would pay more than half of it, perhaps $152,000,000, although the commission do not go into that, but the United States, being a much larger country and having much heavier shipping, would naturally pay more than we would.

In closing, there is one sentimental reason which I have not yet touched upon. I do not believe it is a good thing to mix sentiment or patriotism with business, but at the same time it is worth remembering that this country and the United States have lived side by side for over a hundred years without having had any serious differences. We have a border of three thousand miles, with not a gun or a fort on either side. There has been no war between these two countries since 1812. That seems to me a very fine example, to the European world particularly, of what two countries with friendly feelings and decent common sense can do if they wish, settling their differences, not by fighting each other, but by arbitration. I should like to point out, although there is nothing original in this, as it has been said before, that the building of this canal might well be a magnificent monument to the international amity and good understanding between the United States and Canada.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): I had not intended to take part in this debate, but I cannot very well refuse to take up the challenge that has been made to the Progressives by the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion). He seems to have taken it for granted. either that we are entirely ignorant of the subject, or not interested in it at all. I am glad that the hon. member has made his confession that he, as well as perhaps others in other parts of this House, is sometimes dominated by sectional interests. It would, perhaps, be in order for some of his colleagues to express the same interest in their own moral welfare as they have already done in the moral welfare of the Progressives lest we be unduly carried away by that demon of selfishness.

Like the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Manion), I have a great vision in regard to these Great Lakes. I have sufficient faith in the wisdom of Providence to believe they were put there for a great purpose, and that some time these lakes will be serving to a much greater extent than they are to-day the purpose for which they have been located in the heart of this continent. It is, of course, a question whether these lakes are being used to the fullest possible extent to-day. The statement is made in some quarters that this is the case. On this point I do not presume to pronounce an opinion, but I do know that the statement is made that we can better afford to pay the cost of the elevating charges that are rendered necessary under the present system, besides paying many other expenses, than we could afford to build this canal under present conditions. Whether that is so or not, I do not know. That the project is a great possibility from an engineering standpoint, I do not suppose any person will deny. That it can be made a commercial success is, of course, a question that can well be taken into consideration.

I think it is unfortunate that some of the objections that have been made to this great project have borne too clearly the evidence of sectional interest. It is unfortunate that a great scheme of this kind could not be considered on its merits, first, as an engineering project, and next as a commercial possibility. So far as any political question is involved, I for one would have no hesitation in putting aside any objections that might be raised from the standpoint of the relations between Canada and the United States. I am glad the hon. member for Fort William has also put himself on record on that point. I am not so sure that some of the friends with whom he is associated will feel on that point as he does himself, remembering as some of us from the West do, the attitude they took in regard to the great question of reciprocity with the United States. I am rather inclined to the opinion that the hon. gentleman will not find himself in very congenial company if that question should come up again.

Mr. MANION: I supported reciprocity.

Mr. BROWN: I know he did, and I am very sorry that he is in the company in which he finds himself to-day.

Mr. MANION: I find it very good company.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Of course, of course.

Mr. BROWN: Some of us who represent farmers' organizations in the West had the privilege of attending a conference called in Winnipeg by the Great Waterways' Association a few years ago, and we listened with a great deal of interest to this project as it was placed before us by that association. Two stipulations were laid down in regard to the matter: One was that we should not accept it as an alternative to the Hudson Bay railway, and if there is any seeming indifference on the part of this section of the House towards this project I think it will be explained in large measure by the fact that we still pin our faith to the Hudson Bay railway as affording us an outlet for our products. It will be interesting when that matter is again under consideration by this House to find just how far a sectional interest will dominate in the discussion of this great project.

There was another difficulty that we saw in our way and it was this: We could not see that it was advisable to spend large sums of the money of the Canadian people in the development of canals and great waterways unless we could see very clearly that these waterways would accrue to the benefit of the people, and also, as shippers of grain, to ourselves. That is, we do not propose to spend large sums of money in the development of canals and harbours and then let all the benefits be absorbed by such interests as the combine of lake shippers that exist to-day.

Now, as to being indifferent to this matter, it is only fair to say that there is no indifference among those who occupy this corner of the Chamber. We recognize, as all of us recognize, that the transportation problem is the big problem of the day. There are no people more interested in the question of transportation than the farmers of the West, and I was glad to get such a very candid admission from the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River —one we shall remember on all occasions— that the price is set at Liverpool and that we take that price less the cost of transportation. We shall remember that statement and we shall have occasion to remember on more occasions than the present.

I have some vision in regard to this matter, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that at some time this project will be realized and become an actual factor in the development of our commercial and national life. At the present time, however, it is simply not possible for us to consider it. Whether the canal could be constructed for the amount of $252,000,000 that has been mentioned is certainly open to question—we know that estimates have always been exceeded. But even if it could be carried out for that amount we recognize that it is not an immediate possibility, and I for one would like to echo the sentiment that was expressed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) that since the project is, for the time being, outside the range of practical possibilities, it is very questionable whether this House can afford to take time at this session to discuss it in view of the fact that we have so many other great problems demanding our immediate attention. I hope that this enterprise may become a practical reality some day and, of course, we must remember that if we have no vision we will never accomplish anything. In the meantime I think we can well afford to look upon this as a vision of one of the things we are going to do in the future, and turn our attention to some very practical things that demand our consideration.

Mr. F. S. CAHILL (Pontiac): I had not intended to take part in this debate until the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) referred to me as having supported this resolution, or a similar one, last year. I did not take the trouble to look the matter up in Hansard but I have a very distinct recollection of speaking in opposition to this resolution.

Mr. MANION: May I just say a word at this stage. The hon. member is quite right. I have looked the matter up since, and I find that he did oppose the resolution, but I was misled by his opening words into thinking that he supported it. For that mistake I tender the hon. gentleman an apology. I wish to say, however, that the other hon. member from whose remarks I quoted did take that stand.

Mr. CAHILL: Perhaps the hon. member has not had time to look up the record with respect to the other gentlemen to whom he has referred.

Mr. MANION: Yes, I have.

Mr. CAHILL: I wish to say that I oppose this plan of a canal being built through Canadian territory on the basis of a joint arrangement with any other country. If we are to build such a canal in Canada I think it would be advisable for this country to carry out the work. I may point out to my hon. friend from Fort William and Rainy River, as well as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), the latter of whom maintains that there exists no danger of any complication arising between Canada and the United States over this project, that complications did arise in connection with the Suez canal when Disraeli bought the stock of that canal. Egypt was not then a protectorate of England but she has since become a protectorate due to the former country acquiring the stock of the Suez canal and controlling that route through Egypt. We are likely to have a similar condition of affairs in connection with the present project if we go into partnership with another country for the construction of a canal through our territory. If we wish to develop a canal for the benefit of Canada why not undertake the Georgian Bay canal which is entirely through Canadian territory, and does not involve a joint arrangement between United States and Canada. The hon. member for North Toronto has pointed out that this enterprise would be of great benefit to the cities of Cleveland, Toledo and Detroit. Those cities are not in Canada and I entertain the idea that this Dominion has no money to spend in developing the United States, which is perfectly capable of developing its own territory. Until we have developed Canada it would be wiser for this Parliament to look entirely to Canadian development rather than to help the development of the United States. If we develop the Georgian Bay canal—and I am not advocating that project at the present moment because I do not believe the country could afford the expenditure that would be involved even though that money would be altogether spent in Canadian territory—we shall develop a canal that will give Canada better service because it will develop the adjacent country and promote the growth of Canadian towns. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Lapierre) has a town in his constituency which would be developed; I refer to the town of North Bay. It would be far better to develop such towns as North Bay than to undertake enterprises calculated to develop towns in the United States.

Mr. MANION: I would like in the best spirit, to ask my hon. friend a question. Is he interested in this project because the Georgian Bay canal would be closer to his constituency than the St. Lawrence canal?

Mr. CAHILL: I will be quite candid with my hon. friend and say that the Georgian Bay canal would develop territory in my constituency, and in developing the constituency of Pontiac, of course, we should be developing the greatest part of Canada.

Mr. MANION: No doubt, you are the proof of that.

Mr. CAHILL: Naturally, therefore I would favour such development. If you can see your way, Mr. Speaker, to calling it six o'clock I would like to adjourn the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by Mr. Cahill that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. HOCKEN: I wanted to say something on the question and if the debate is adjourned I shall be debarred from doing so this afternoon.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not six o'clock yet.

Mr. CAHILL: I want to make a few more remarks on the question and wished you, Mr. Speaker, to call it six o'clock in order that I might procure some documents pertaining to this question when the debate is resumed. I did not know the motion was to be discussed this afternoon.

Mr. MANION: If Mr. Speaker calls it six o'clock the motion goes to the head of the Order Paper and my hon. friend will get a better chance to speak again than if the debate were formally adjourned. I would like to ask the Prime Minister what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will take up the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs, Mines, and Public Works.

At six o'clock the House adjourned without question being put, pursuant to rule.

Thursday, April 27, 1922

The House met at three o'clock.

CONSOLIDATED REVENUE AND AUDIT ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 57 to amend the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. He said:

The chief purpose of the bill is to facilitate an earlier closing of the public accounts at the end of the fiscal year. Under the law as it stands the fiscal year ends on 31st March, but the practice has been to allow a considerable time for the closing of the accounts. That makes for delay in the completion of public documents and in one way or another affects the whole business of the House. In England the fiscal year ends at the same time, 31st March, but there is no delay as to the closing of the accounts; the accounts are taken as they stand that day. We purpose to adopt the English system, with a proviso that any accounts outstanding can be dealt with in the following year. But the great object is to close the accounts early and thus facilitate all stages of the public business to which they relate. There is another clause, as to bonds which are held by the trustees of estates of persons who have died abroad, and it deals with the method of giving absolute and proper proof of transfer. It is only a technical matter.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INSURANCE ACT, 1917, AMENDMENT

Hon. Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 58 to amend The Insurance Act, 1917. He said:

This is one of three bills which hon. members will notice on the Order Paper dealing with the Insurance Act, the Loan Companies Act, and the Trust Companies Act. They are all more or less of a technical character, important in their way, but I think the House will approve of the suggestion I make, that in each of these cases we deal with the bill by first and second readings, and then refer it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce where opportunity will be afforded to all persons who so desire to make representations; and the House will not be asked to commit itself to the bills until they have been fully inquired into by that committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LOAN COMPANIES ACT, 1914, AMENDMENT

On motion of Hon. Mr. Fielding, Bill No. 59 to amend the Loan Companies Act, 1914, was introduced and read the first time.

TRUST COMPANIES ACT, 1914, AMENDMENT

On motion of Hon. Mr. Fielding, Bill No. 60 to amend the Trust Companies Act, 1914, was introduced and read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

OVERAGES

Mr. MILLAR:

What financial benefit, if any, did this Government derive from overages at Fort William and Port Arthur terminal elevators in the year 1921?

Hon. Mr. ROBB: For the crop year 1920-21 the total value of the overages to be delivered to the Government was $130,524.06. Accounts have been rendered for this amount, but no payments have yet been made.

SS. CANADIAN EXPORTER

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Was any inquiry ever held by the Dominion wreck commissioner at Victoria, British Columbia, into the loss of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine steamship Canadian Exporter?
2. If so, what was the result of said inquiry?
3. Was any appeal entered to the Supreme Court of British Columbia by the captain of the ship?
4. If so, what was the result of said appeal?
5. Did the Department of Justice give any opinion at the request of the Marine Department as to the results of this appeal?
6. If so, what was this opinion?
7. What is the mode of appointing these nautical assessors for such trials?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. An investigation was held by the wreck commissioner for British Columbia at Vancouver, B.C.

2. Master and first mate were found at fault. Certificates suspended for six and four months respectively.

3. Yes.

4. Finding set aside so far as it purported to affect the master.

5. Yes.

6. That the practice prescribed by paragraph 7 of Canadian Shipping Casualties Rules, 1921, does not leave anything necessary to be desired.

7. Selected by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

EXPORT LIQUOR WAREHOUSES

Mr. MILLAR:

1. How many bonded liquor warehouses, operating in the province of Saskatchewan, have been licensed by the Dominion Government?

2. Has the Saskatchewan Government, or any of its members, approached the Dominion Government with a view to having the numbers of said bonded liquor warehouses reduced or increased, or having the powers of said warehouses restricted or altered in any way?

3. Has this Government granted licenses to any export liquor houses now operating in the province of Saskatchewan?

4. If so, how many?

5. If not, are said export liquor houses carrying on trade over which the Federal Government has jurisdiction?

6. Can the Federal Government prevent said export liquor houses carrying on interprovincial trade?

7. Has any provincial government or any one representing any provincial government approached the Federal Government with a view to having operations of said export liquor houses restricted or altered in any way?

8. If so, what provincial governments, and what was the nature of request or requests made?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU: With reference to this question, I would ask the hon. gentleman to see the officers of the department. They claim there is no such thing as an export liquor house in any of the provinces. He might see the officers so that they may have an understanding as to what he means by that term.

MOUNTED POLICE—DR. LOVERING

Mr. CLARK:

1. Has Dr. D. A. Taylor, acting surgeon of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at Lethbridge, been removed from office, or requested to resign?

2. If so, when and why?

3. Has Dr. J. E. Lovering of Lethbridge been appointed acting surgeon?

4. If so, when and why, and was the appointment made by the Civil Service Commission or by the Government?

5. Was the said Dr. J. E. Lovering a Liberal candidate at Lethbridge in the last general election?

6. If so, how many candidates were there in such election, and how many secured more votes than Dr. Lovering?

7. Is the Government aware that Dr. Lovering, consistently and openly, opposed military service of every description from the outbreak until the termination of the late war?

8. Were applications for the position in question called for by advertisement?

9. If so, what was the nature of the advertisement; how many applications for the position were received and how many, if any, of the applications were from returned soldiers?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Dr. Taylor, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, was retired and a general physician and surgeon appointed.

2. 22nd March, 1922.

3. Yes.

4. From 1st May, 1922. This is not an appointment which comes under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission.

5. Yes.

6. No information.

7. No.

8. No.

9. Answered by No. 8 .

REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE

Mr. RINFRET:

1. What was the population of Canada in 1877?

2. What was the federal revenue for the fiscal year 1876-77?

3. What was the expenditure for the same period for (a) current account, and (b) capital account?

4. What was the total revenue of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1922?

5. What was the expenditure for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1922 for (a) current account, and (b) capital account?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING:

1. 4,013,000 (estimated by Dominion Bureau of Statistics).

2. $22,927,760.

3. (a) Chargeable to Consolidated Fund, $23,519,301. (b) Capital account, $7,599,709.

4. As shown by the books of the Finance Department at March 31, 1922 (not closed for the year), $371,519,454.

5. As shown by the books of the Finance Department at March 31, 1922 (not closed for the year): (a) Chargeable to Consolidated Fund, $324,758,377; (b) Capital account, $16,742,081.

MAJOR-GENERALS BURSTALL AND GWATKIN

Mr. WARD:

1. On what dates were Major-General Sir Henry Burstall and Major-General Sir Wil loughby Gwatkin retired from the Active Militia of Canada, or on what dates are they to be retired?

2. What pay and allowanes were they receiving at the dates of their retirement?

3. Are they pensionable on retirement?

4. If so, at what rates?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Burstall, K.C.B., K.C.M.G.

1, 3 and 4. Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Burstall was granted leave of absence, with full pay and allowances, from 20th March, 1922, to the 28th October, 1923, at which date he is to be retired with a pension of $5,993.14 per annum, under a statute providing for such cases to be increased after 16 293/365 years by $126.86 when all unpaid pension dues will have been recovered, such pension to commence from 29th October, 1923.

2. $9.000.

Major-General Sir Willoughby Gwatkin, K.C.M.G., C.B.

1. Major-General Sir Willoughby Gwatkin resigned his appointment under the Air Board, with effect from 1st April, 1922. He was granted one year's leave of absence from that date, with the same remuneration as he is at present receiving.

2. $4,196.80 per annum. This officer is in receipt of an imperial pension.

3. and 4. Not pensionable upon retirement by the Canadian Government.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY—REPAIRS TO CARS

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. Have contracts for the repairs of cars, all kinds of cars, belonging and used by the Intercolonial Railway, been given to private companies instead of having these repairs done by the different Intercolonial Railway repair shops?

2. If so, to what companies?

3. Is it the intention of the Department of Railways to have repairs and improvements to locomotives, cars and other equipment done by the employees of the different workshops of the Canadian National Railways?

4. What amount, if any, has been paid to private companies for repairs to the rolling stock, for the section of the Canadian National Railways from Montreal to Halifax?

Hon. Mr. KENNEDY:

1. Contracts for repairs to a portion of the box cars only, belonging to the Canadian National railways were given to private companies in order to help out the unemployment situation in the different parts of the country.

2. Canadian Car & Foundry Co., Limited, Eastern Car Company, National Steel Car Corporation.

[Mr. Ward.]

3. The company has always, and will continue to make repairs and improvements to locomotives at their own shops. As to cars, these will be done in our own shops as far as is practicable.

4. The amount that has been paid to date to private companies for repairs to rolling stock for the entire Canadian National railways is $389,961.93. The rolling stock belonging to the Canadian National railways is used for the benefit of the system as a whole and it is not possible to allocate charges for repairs to equipment that is being or will be used on any particular section of the line, such as Montreal to Halifax. The amount of above paid to car companies Montreal and east amounted to $371,600.83.

SALES TAX

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. What was the value of goods imported into Canada, on which the Sales Tax was collected, in each month of the past fiscal year, and what was the amount of such tax collected per month?

2. What was the value of goods manufactured in Canada, on which the Sales Tax was collected, in each month of the past fiscal year, and what was the amount of such tax collected per month?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU: No record is available of the value of goods imported or manufactured in Canada on which sales tax was collected.

The amount of sales tax collected monthly during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1922, on goods imported and goods manufactured in Canada was as follows:

	Sales Tax on Imports	Sales Tax on goods manufactured in Canada
April, 1921	$ 686,567 34	$2,328,232 39
May	1,062,292 37	2,123,628 34
June	1,362,396 96	3,114,552 71
July	1,364,309 51	4,051,762 31
August	1,492,634 59	4,367,194 10
September	1,415,466 54	4,050,871 93
October	1,485,759 22	4,589,278 65
November	1,598,218 16	4,019,838 64
December	1,242,466 24	4,749,386 31
January, 1922	1,330,333 10	4,280,908 70
February	1,372,919 69	2,935,733 48
March	1,981,132 04	3,208,508 60
Total	$16,394,495 76	$44,819,896 16

L'ORIGNAL WHARF

Mr. BINETTE:

1. What amount of damage was caused by the fire at the wharf at L'Orignal, in the county of Prescott, during the year 1920?

2. What persons helped to fight the said fire, and how much did each receive for his services?

3. What was the cost of the repairs to said wharf?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. $6,500, based on estimated cost of replacement of landing head, portion of approach and freight shed.

2. O. Dubois, $4.90; Jos. Bertrand, $4.90; Ernest Brabant, $4.90; P. Dubois, $4.90; Charles G. Smith, $4.90; C. Dubois, $4.90; E. Landriault, $4.90; P. Brabant, $2.10.

3. Repairs made, due to damage caused by fire, cost $3,969.13.

EXCISE TAX ON ALCOHOL

Mr. HUBBS:

1. Does the Government intend to reduce the excise tax on alcohol to the retail druggists?

2. If so, will the said tax be made the same as that charged the manufacturers at the distillery or bonded warehouse?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: Announcement of such taxation changes as the Government will propose will be made in the Budget speech.

RAILWAY RATES

PROPOSED SELECT COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

Hon. W. C. KENNEDY (Minister of Railways) moved:

That notwithstanding that the regulation of railway rates is a matter within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, it is advisable that a Select Special Committee be appointed to make inquiry into the question of railway transportation costs, it having been disclosed by recent conferences held between the Government and the chief executives of the various railways with respect to the reduction of freight rates that the representatives of the railways deem it inadvisable immediately to reduce rates on basic commodities because of the expiration, on July 6th, 1922, of the suspension of the Crow's Nest Pass agreement;

That, in the circumstances, it is advisable to afford opportunity to all interested parties to submit their views upon the subject matter of the inquiry to the said committee with particular regard to the effect of the rates established by the Crow's Nest Pass agreement upon Canadian National railways and other lines, as well as upon agricultural development and Canadian industry generally;

And that the said committee shall have power to send for persons, papers and records, including the minutes and evidence taken before the Committees of this House in previous Sessions, to examine witnesses under oath, and to report from time to time.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak to this motion, but merely to say, I do not think the Government has any right to go on with it this afternoon. This is an important motion —relative, at least, to anything else on the Order Paper; and, questioned last night as to what the business to-day was to be, the Prime Minister answered:

We will take up the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs, Mines, and Public Works.

There was no intimation whatever that this motion was to be gone on with. It is unfair to the Opposition—indeed, it is unfair to the House on both sides—that it should be gone on with when it was not mentioned last night.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I agree entirely with my right hon. friend; that it was not mentioned last night was an oversight. Possibly we might have an understanding now that we proceed with it on Tuesday next.

Motion stands.

STATEMENT OF PREMIER NORRIS

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I desire to ask some questions of the Government as to a reported statement by Mr. Norris, Premier of Manitoba, with relation to the subject or railway rates and other matters. In the Montreal Gazette, but as well in many other papers, Mr. Norris is reported to have said at a public meeting, after a rather prolonged sojourn in Ottawa, that the Railway Commission had come to a decision on this subject of railway rates, and he virtually announced what the decision was to be. For exactness, I read very briefly his words:

Important pronouncements were made by the Premier in connection with the freight rates and the natural resources questions.

With respect to freight rates, Premier Norris announced that the fight put up by the provincial government for reduced rates had been successful, and that before the 1922 grain crop began to move a reduction would be effected which would mean an annual saving of approximately $8,000,000 to the province.

Later the quotation is as follows:

Mr. Norris, who returned from Ottawa, a few days ago, reviewed in his address to the convention the fight during the past three years to obtain lower freight rates. Arguments presented to the Railway Commissioners by counsel for the province had resulted in breaking down the railways' case for continuance of what he called present excessive rates.

I am not asking whether this is a correct report of what Mr. Norris said; if, however, the Government desire to make a statement on that, it is for them to decide. Knowing that a provincial election is near at hand, I assume for my part that this report as to what Mr. Norris said is substantially correct. I ask the Government, assuming it is correct: had Mr. Norris any foundation for the statement? Had he authority to announce a decision of the Railway Commission in regard to the most important question which has come before it since its inception? If so, does the Government believe in the practice of the Railway Commission of announcing its judgments through Liberal politicians?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I confess I cannot see much point in my hon. friend's question, unless it be the implication, in the concluding portion of it, of a political significance in the press report which, probably, could not reasonably be attached to it. I am unable to say whether or not the report which appeared in the press of what Mr. Norris said is correct; Mr. Norris will have to speak for himself on that matter. There has been no official communication between the Government and Mr. Norris on the subject of railway rates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not the question. Is it correct, as Mr. Norris is reported to have said, that the Railway Commission has come to a decision? If so, is the decision as Mr. Norris says it is?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall have to ask the Railway Commission before I can answer my hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Exactly so. Does the Prime Minister wish to have us understand that, in respect to a subject regarding which the Minister of Railways has a motion on the Order Paper, for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the matter of railway rates, a decision has already been, or may have been, made known to the Prime Minister of Manitoba, although wholly unknown to the Prime Minister of Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly not. No anouncement as to the policy of the Government in this matter will be made until the House has had full opportunity of discussing the resolution of the Minister of Railways and of considering the matter in committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am entitled to an answer.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: No provincial campaign can be carried on here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the Prime Minister or the Government aware of any decision whatever by the Railway Commission on this question?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is this an electoral campaign?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There has been no decision whatever.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have another question, as to which there will be no difficulty at all in the Prime Minister answering "yes" or "no." Mr. Norris, having referred to the suspension in 1918, confirmed by statute in 1919, of the Crow's Nest Pass Agreement, and having made reference to section 325 confirming that suspension, is further reported:

> While in Ottawa he and Hon. T. H. Johnston, Attorney General, have been successful, said the Premier, in securing the consent of the King Government to letting this clause lapse, and, consequently, rates would revert automatically to the 1919 level.

Is that correct or is it not?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The consent of the Government has not been obtained to anything appertaining to railway rates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then if Mr. Norris said this it is wholly erroneous.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. FIELDING: Ask Mr. Norris.

SUPPLY

The House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Indians—Nova Scotia, $50,140.

Item agreed to.

Mr. CARROLL: I was not here when the item was agreed to and I should like to say a few words on this subject, as it is important.

The CHAIRMAN: The item has been carried.

Mr. CARROLL: Then perhaps I shall have another opportunity to speak on the question.

Mr. CALDWELL: I move that the committee return to the item. It is hardly fair to pass it without giving the members from Nova Scotia an opportunity to discuss it.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. CARROLL: I understand that there was some intention on the part of the Government of removing the Indians from their present reservation at Sydney to a location outside of that city. Those people who have the interests of the Indians at heart are very much opposed to any such removal. I do not say that they are opposed to the removal of the Indians to a proper location, but the Government has bought some land near the city of Sydney where it is quite undesirable that the Indians should be placed. The situation is anything but a proper one for Indians.

Mr. DUFF: Or any other Indians.

Mr. CARROLL: Yes, or anybody else. I understand that this purchase went through some time ago. As to this place, near Sydney, to which it is proposed to remove the Indians, people from Nova Scotia who have not seen it are at any rate familiar with the general reputation it bears. I desire to impress as strongly as possible upon the minister that, notwithstanding the fact that this location near Whitney pier has been purchased, it would be a crying shame to put the Indians there. I have received strong recommendations from Bishop Morrison of Antigonish, and the Catholic clergy at Sydney—and I believe the minister has also had similar representations made to him—opposing the placing of the Indians on the proposed reservation. These recommendations are made by the clergy of the Catholic Church because the Indians belong to that faith, and they point out that it would be eminently undesirable and shameful to take the Indians from their reservation at Sydney and place them in the proposed location, which was purchased from a gentleman now deceased. I do not take the ground that it would not be desirable to remove the Indians at all, if there were any sentiment in the city of Sydney in support of that intention. But the minister will understand that we object to putting the Indians on a reservation which is altogether undesirable. The situation is such that there are some aspects of the matter which I do not wish to discuss in committee, and for the time being I would urge upon the minister the necessity of deferring action until we can have an opportunity of discussing the subject with him in the privacy of his room.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil, Superintendent General of Indian Affairs): I am not aware of the objections my hon. friend has indicated. The land was bought from a Mr. J. A. Gillies and the proposal is to move the Indians there. However, I am perfectly willing to discuss the matter further, if, as the hon. member says, there are aspects of the situation which it is undesirable to introduce in Committee of the Whole. I could take it up in private with him.

Item agreed to.

Indians—New Brunswick, $28,784.

Mr. HANSON: There is a band of Indians located in the town of Devon in my constituency. They have been there for a number of years. The reserve is a small one of about five or six acres in the heart of the community, and the Indians were located there, I presume, before the place became a town. There are also in the same constituency two other reserves, one at French Village, so-called, and the other ot Oromocto. The town of Devon is an ambitious and growing community and has lately become incorporated. I happen to know that the town council have petitioned the Indian Department to have the Devon band removed to either of the other two reserves in the immediate vicinity, and the Indians themselves are agreeable. It is considered in the interets of the growth of the town that the band should be removed. It is also considered in the interest of the Indians themselves that they should no longer be located there. If the minister will look into the files of his department I am sure he will find memorials from the council of the town of Devon asking that this proposal be carried out, not against the will of the band themselves but, I believe, with their consent. Nothing has yet been done in the matter and I have been asked by the officials of the town to bring it to the attention of the department so that the proposed change may be facilitated. The band are small in number, there being less than one hundred I am quite sure, and probably not more than fifty. Their location in Devon prevents the development of the centre of the town practically, and I am sure that if the minister obtained a report from the officials of his department on the subject he would agree with the contention which is being made by the town council itself, that it would be very much to the interest of the town if this band were moved out either to the French Village district or to the Oromocto district. I am quite satisfied that the Indians themselves have no objection to the change—at least that is my impression after having talked the matter over with a number of them. The council have also investigated the matter and they have found that it meets with the consent of the great majority of the band. I hope, therefore, the minister will look into the matter.

Mr. CALDWELL: Before the resolution carries I would like to ask the minister a question with regard to a matter which I brought to the attention of the department last year, in regard to the illegal cutting of lumber on the Tobique Indian reserve, in Carleton county, New Brunswick. I would like to ask whether the damage assessed has ever been collected from the parties who cut the timber, and just what the final outcome of the matter was?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I promise the hon. gentleman I will give careful consideration to the matter suggested by him. The officials of the department are on the way here. I have no knowledge of the question myself, and have no memorandum in regard to it, but when the officials arrive I shall be in a better position to make a statement.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec, $183,115.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We should have the information that is usually given on the voting of the estimates as to the amount spent last year with respect to each of these items. I observe that in three of the votes for Indians there is a considerable increase, commencing with this item, and that in the case of the general vote and the vote for Indian education there are two decreases. The minister has contrived to make the decreases tally to a cent with the increases so that the total amount of all the items is the same as last year. Now apparently there is to be more expenditure in administration in Ontario, in the western provinces, and British Columbia by approximately $140,000 than previously, and in order to recoup the treasury the minister is going to take it out of Indian education. I do not know whether the minister believes in education or not. I expect that some of the reduction is owing to the contraction of the "greater production" work—perhaps I am wrong in that. Anyway my point is this: The Indian Department estimates expanded largely because of the increased cost of the supplies that we have to provide the Indians with. As prices increased the estimates expanded accordingly.

[Mr. Hanson.]

I have not the figures before me but last year, I think, we managed to make a little reduction. This year we have no reduction at all. But this is the year of rapid deflation of prices—perhaps I should not have said "rapid" but of constant, and undoubtedly of certain, deflation of prices—and with even an academic intention to retrench I think the minister could have found an opportunity in these estimates to make some reduction. But he comes before Parliament with the same figure as last year, notwithstanding the fact that there is undoubtedly an opportunity to reduce because of decreased cost. There may not be opportunity in relation to the salaries—it may not be possible to reduce them at all—but there are certain production costs where there would be an opportunity, and unquestionably there could be a very substantial saving in respect to material.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Repairs to roads and bridges and drainage are largely responsible for the increase. I am told by the officials that there has been rapid road development both in Ontario and Quebec by the municipalities and provincial governments and in many cases repairs have been needed to roads leading through the Indian reserves otherwise the continuity of the roads would be broken up, and requests have been insistent that the department should carry out its share of these needed improvements. I have no personal knowledge of the matter but that is the information the officials give me with respect to that particular item. Practically the whole increase is made up of expenditure of that character. Where it is not particularly needed for the benefit of the Indians themselves it is required in the interest of the general public who travel across the reserve, and the money is intended to complete road work undertaken by the province and by the municipality, I expect conjointly. The matter of education is one that I want to make some explanation about, because although through desire to keep down the appropriations the cause of Indian education appears to suffer, yet actually such is not the case.

I intended to make plain to the committee that while the estimates were prepared in that way, I find, on careful examination of the situation later, that that sum will be required for educational purposes, and that there will be a general increase, and the committee will have to pass it, because it will come up in the supplementary estimates for Indian Affairs. Had I been more familiar with the estimates this would have been provided for, but the matter did not come to my attention in time. My hon. friend has raised this point, but I intended to deal with it when we came to it, and inform the committee, so that we may not be accused of unfairness. In my estimation it should have appeared here, and we should have shown the increase in these general estimates. I shall be prepared to give an explanation of the matter. We shall require practically the same sum for educational purposes as last year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Government's proclaimed policy of retrenchment has been changed into a policy of increased estimates, with explanations.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I scarcely think that that complexion should be placed upon the matter. I have been frank with the committee, and I have stated what I would have done if I had known the situation. I have no desire that the estimates shall be misleading to the committee. That is the last thing in my mind. If it is objectionable to have this increase in the expenditure, we will have to discuss it from that standpoint, and give the explanation as to why these items appear. I have mentioned as to the item of $9,300 in the general expenses, and the memo I have in regard to that is—

Of this increase $3,300 is required to meet increases in salaries which may be granted under the Civil Service Act and the balance, viz. $6,000 is required to replace the steamboat formerly in use by the Indian Agent at Kenora, Ont., on the lake of the Woods for many years, but now no longer serviceable and unfit for further use. As the several reserves in this agency can only be reached by water, it is necessary for the Indian Agent to be provided with a suitable boat. Tenders for the construction of a gasoline launch are being invited and the cost estimated at $5,000. A boat house will also be required at an estimated cost of $1,000.

I do not know anything about that matter, except the fact that the officials are asking for it and the necessity appears to be great.

Mr. ETHIER: While we are dealing with this item I desire to call attention of the minister to the conditions at the Indian Reserve at Oka in the county of Two Mountains. An Indian Agent has been appointed there to attend to the business of the Indians. His name is Mr. Bertrand. He has been there for some time. There are complaints against him because he does not speak the language of the Indians. I do not know whether he can even speak English. That reserve is composed of Iroquois, Algonquins and a few Hurons. The Indians sent a deputation to Ottawa a short time ago, asking for the appointment of an agent whom they might understand and by whom they might be understood. I presented the matter to the department, before the hon. minister took office, and nothing was done. With the permission of the House, I read a letter which I received from the chiefs of the Reserve:

OKA, QUE., April 25, 1922

Mr. J. A. C. ETHIER, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—As chiefs of the Oka band of Iroquois Indians, we beg to ask your assistance in bringing the claims of Mr. Joseph Perillard to the office of Indian Agent at Oka, Que., before the Civil Service Commission at Ottawa.

I thought it was proper to bring this matter before the House directly.

His qualification for the said office is unquestionable. He has served in that capacity in the past with satisfaction. His knowledge of the language of the Indians fits him for the office.

I would say that I know personally that Mr. Perillard speaks Iroquois, Huron, Algonquin and French perfectly.

Mr. JACOBS: How can the hon. gentleman say he speaks those languages perfectly?

Mr. ETHIER: I do not know that he speaks them perfectly, but I heard him in court when he acted as translator when some of the Indians from the Iroquois were brought before the court at Ste. Scholastique, district of Terrebonne. He acted as the official translator of the Iroquois language. He has been there ten or fifteen years as Indian Agent. He was there before 1911.

You would do us great service in pressing his claim. Mr. Bertrand is really not fit for the position, because he is utterly ignorant of the Indian language, and because he is not understood by the Indians, owing to his impediment of speech. Moreover, being engaged in business which is his first consideration, he is at a disadvantage to arbitrate difficulties between Indians for fear of antagonizing the goodwill of the people and thereby lose trade. Of course we do not wish to go into details of Mr. Bertrand's unfitness. We think we have pointed out clearly why we think Mr. Perillard's appointment would be for the good of all concerned.

We trust you will do all you can to further the interests of our people.

We remain, yours respectfully,

Chief NOAH CORENTHE,
Chief PETER ANGUS.

Representations in regard to this matter have been made to the department by the band. Their representatives have been in Ottawa. These Indians have an agent there who is not understood by them. I am informed that in several cases when the Indians had dealings with the department they had to go to Mr. Perillard, to have their claims translated, and to come here on their behalf. It is impossible to negotiate with the Indians satisfactorily with such a man as Mr. Bertrand. I submit to this House and to the minister that, in the interests of the Indians at Oka, the man who is living there, who has been there about fifty years, speaks their language, knows their needs, and knows them personally, should be appointed as agent there. The agent of course should be familiar with their language, and the man at present in the position is not competent to deal with their affairs in that locality; and should be replaced for the best interests of interested parties. The request made by these Indians should, I submit, be looked into very thoroughly and be given careful consideration by the minister and his department.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and North West Territories, $661,092.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is a total increase of $74,282. One item of increase is hospitals, medical attendance and medicine.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The net increase is $34,810, which is accounted for as follows: Grant to the Dynevor Hospital, increased from $1 to $1.25 per patient per day.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister mean to say that as the cost of living goes down, the grant for medical attendance and medicine goes up?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Not exactly; the question is not one of the cost of living; it is a question of medical attention given to the Indians. I cannot say as to the future, but I understand that there has been a persistent request from those hospitals for increased grants for medical attention while Indians are inmates of the hospitals.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There always will be; but the fact is that now that the cost of attention and everything else is going down, the minister is yielding to these demands and letting the cost of attendance to the Indians go up. We have always allowed so much a day, why should this time be seized to increase that allowance?

[Mr. Ethier.]

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I presume my right hon. friend will agree that hospital expenses seem to be continually increasing, and I would personally think it rather a favourable arrangement, although I am speaking without knowledge as to the actual facts in this matter. Speaking without positive information, I think $1 per day would not pay full compensation for attendance upon an individual in the hospital, as I think my right hon. friend will agree. I understand that this hospital is maintained by private individuals. Perhaps I should not make the assertion, but I think that we have been trying to get off rather cheaply with the Indians who are wards of the Government. On a very superficial examination, I think that we have been delegating the care of the Indians very largely to private individuals and church organizations, when it seems to me that the responsibility is on the Canadian people. I am not suggesting radical increases, but I think, as I say, on a somewhat superficial examination, that we must increase some of the expenditures in connection with Indian affairs.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly we employ and co-operate with church organizations and charitable institutions, and the Indians will never be properly taken care of without that co-operation. Those are the organizations that can do the work best, as time has proved and as history has shown, and we shall have to continue to co-operate with them. The minister's present contention may be stated in just so many words, that, in this work, the late Government carried its economy to the point of penuriousness.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I would be inclined to say that perhaps that is true; my observations would lead me to say that. I say that in no critical mood; I agree with my right hon. friend that this work can best be done by the organizations that are already doing it; but I think, in fairness to the organizations and private individuals, we shall, perhaps, be called upon to be a little more generous in our dealings with these various organizations.

Mr. SHAW: What provision, if any, is made for medical attention to the Indians on the Stony Indian reserve at Morley, Alberta? I may be misinformed, but I understand that no hospital provision is made at the reserve and that occasionally some medical practitioner comes from some particular place and makes a cursory examination. I should like to be assured by the minister that proper medical examination of the Indians will be not only made, but continued.

Mr. NEILL: I can heartily endorse the attitude taken by the minister in regard to increasing the grants to Indians. The question is not one of economy, it is one of justice. These local hospitals have been grossly underpaid for a number of years. I have in mind a hospital in my district, but this can be duplicated in many others. We have, in my district, a hospital kept up partially by government grants, but largely by personal subscriptions and money contributed by means of dances or other entertainments. Every year, however, that hospital goes behind between $2,000 and $3,000. When we came to analyse the situation at a recent annual meeting, we found we were doing the Indian work at about half the cost. The question was raised—why should the white people put their hands into their pockets as a matter of charity in order to maintain the wards of the Indian Department? The question is not one of co-operation with churches and similar institutions. These Indians are certified by the local doctor to require medical treatment; they are put into the hospital, and hitherto the hospital has been drawing $1 a day per patient while the cost in our hospital has been somewhere around $3 a day. In addition, of course, we had the Government grant to help out; but we sustained a heavy loss on every Indian we treated. This is unfair, uncalled for, and I am heartily glad that the minister has taken the stand which he has to-day.

4 p.m.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The medical officer on the Stony reserve is Dr. A. W. Park at a salary of $600.

Mr. SHAW: Does he live on the reserve?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am told that his home is at Cochrane, Alberta.

Mr. CALDWELL: What items are covered by the vote of $335,805 for general expenses? This seems to be a very large item for miscellaneous expenses, if that is what it means, and there is an increase of $41,760 over last year for the same purpose. The New Brunswick appropriation is passed, I notice that the item for miscellaneous and unforseen expenses in that province is only $850.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I will give the items that make up this sum.

Mr. CALDWELL: I want just a general idea of what it covers.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think I can give that better by reading the items it covers. The increase is accounted for as follows: $2,760 provided for increases in salaries which will be granted under the Civil Service Act for the fiscal year; $39,000 to meet additional expenditures to carry out the terms of Treaty No. 11, negotiated in 1921 with the Indians of the Great Slave lake and Mackenzie river district, as explained in the special items of this estimate. This sum was voted for the last fiscal year, 1921-22, under the general vote, but is transferred now to the vote, "Northwest Territories," where it properly belongs. It is therefore not an increase in the appropriation asked for 1922-23 over that for 1921-22, there being a corresponding reduction made in the general vote. The $39,000 is a transfer from the general vote to this special vote.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to bring before the committee the condition of affairs which, I believe, exists on the Blood reserve in Alberta. When I was on the reserve this winter I was interviewed by about twenty Indians, who presented me with a lengthy memorandum setting forth a list of grievances which they have against the Government. In addition to those grievances, they personally stated that they had a lot of complaints against the treatment which they were receiving, and that they had nobody to speak for them; that the means of communication between them and the department at Ottawa seemed to be closed; that since 1918, when the Indian office was established at Regina, they seem to be able to get no relief from what they consider to be ill treatment. At their request I promised to take the matter up with the Government. I have brought it to the attention of the Minister of Indian Affairs, and I believe he will give it very sympathetic consideration. At the same time to satisfy some of the friends of the Indians in the vicinity of the Blood reserve I want to bring the matter before the members of this committee.

The Indians complained particularly that the department had broken faith with them. I think that is a very serious complaint, as the Indian always deals by word of mouth, not by written agreement, and therefore we should be very careful to do everything to maintain his belief that the word of the Government may be relied upon implicitly. They claimed that faith was deliberately broken with them in connection with a lease of part of their reserve while the "greater production" campaign was on, and that whereas they were promised $24 per head in consideration of this lease, they got a cash payment of only $6 each; and they claim that the balance is due them. That is only one of the grievances referred to in the memorandum, although possibly it is one of the most serious. I am not going to weary the committee by recounting all the grievances covered by the memorandum, but I want to bring to the attention of hon. members and also of the minister, in case I do not have an opportunity to do so later, the complaint of individual Indians that they are often in want of food and have to go hungry. One Indian—who, by the way, is well educated and speaks perfect English—stated to me that no matter how many children he might have—and he had a family of eight—he would only be allowed to draw from the rations house ten pounds of meat per week. Now, that might seem enough for a white man and his family, but we must remember that Indians live largely on meat and bread. The same Indian informed me that any member of the tribe with a small family is allowed only five pounds of meat per week. I was informed that as a result of under-feeding many of the Indians are sick, particularly during the winter months, and that the more-than-usual amount of sickness among them is to be attributed to this cause. I was also informed that whereas they used to have a resident doctor on the reserve, all the medical attendance they get now is from the doctor in the neighbouring town when he makes periodical visits to the hospitals. I am speaking simply from notes which I took when I was on the reserve and these Indians made their representations to me.

It would seem to me that there must be mismanagement of this reserve. The area of the reserve, I am informed, is 354,086 acres. The last returns available show 1,161 Indians on this vast territory, or a total of over three hundred acres for every man, woman and child. It would appear therefore that if any ordinary business management were applied to the affairs of that reserve, sufficient would be produced to keep the Indians in decent comfort.

Before I sit down I wish to urge upon the committee and upon the minister the importance of not in any way cutting down the grants for the education of the Indian. I was greatly impressed with the beneficial results noticeable on that reserve in the improved homes of those Indians who had been educated in the industrial schools, they having very comfortable homes compared with those of the older Indians. I was told by some of the best friends of the Indians in the district that the hope of the Indian lay in education, that if all our Indian boys could receive a proper education in what we have called in the past industrial schools, the problem of the Indian would, so far as the Blood reserve is concerned, be taken off our hands within the next twenty years, for they would become self-supporting. Therefore I ask the committee, whatever estimates be pared down, that they should not in any way endeavour to reduce the estimates for the education of the Indian.

Mr. GOOD: I desire to call the attention of the minister and, incidentally, of the members of this committee, to a little pamphlet written by Doctor Peter H. Bryce and published in the city recently. I got a copy through the mails, and I presume that the pamphlet was distributed among all hon. members. It is entitled, "A National Crime," and contains rather serious charges of maladministration in the Department of Indian Affairs with respect to medical attention to Indians. I have not the pamphlet with me at the moment, but I read it with a great deal of interest, and if the facts are anywhere near as they are stated, then I think the minister ought to look into the matter without delay. As I say, I only wish to draw the attention of the minister and of the committee to the pamphlet; I do not wish to take up any time discussing the charges it contains, because the minister can peruse them for himself.

There is another matter which I think should be mentioned. In one of the Indian reserves in my constituency there has developed a situation of a rather serious character about which I have been in consultation privately with the minister. I do not know whether it would be worth while for either of us to make any explanation; I shall leave it to his judgment. But as there is one question at least of very general interest involved, I thought perhaps the committee would like to have a statement from the minister, and undoubtedly it would come better from him than from me. I do wish to emphasize the necessity of looking into the charges made in this little pamphlet.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have had a considerable amount of correspondence in connection with matters under dispute on the Blood Indian reserve. It would appear that the department was unfortunate in one or two of the agents appointed, but I am informed that the recent appointment of an agent will tend to remedy many of the complaints made by the Indians on this reserve.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend refers to appointments made, when?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Last fall, I understand.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before that, I think.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I may be giving a wrong impression, but my understanding was that the difficulty was owing largely to the action of the local agent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is, an agent some time ago.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. However, I intend to make it my business this year, as soon as the session is over, to visit as many of the Indian reserves as I can, possibly a few in each province. I confess that outside of a knowledge of the Indians of the northern portion of Alberta, their educational and hospital institutions, I know very little about Indian affairs generally; and one can get a very much better idea of the conditions if he visits the reserves. He may then form an opinion as to the best method of dealing with this question.

The matter raised by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good), is in connection with difficulty on the Six Nations reserve. This difficulty, which is one of long standing, may be attributed primarily to the fact that a great many members of the band do not consider themselves wards of the Government, but, rather, allies of Great Britain. There was also some difficulty about military service during the war; a large proportion of the band were opposed to any members of the band enlisting, and that opposition they expressed most vigorously. I would not have time to go into all the details of the difficulties existing in connection with this band; but out of the incident of the war appears to have arisen a state of affairs that is most unpleasant. During last season the reserve was visited by a hail-storm; conditions of drought prevailed, and there was a crop shortage. Many Indians on the reserve who had been obtaining employment at fairly remunerative wages found themselves out of work last winter, and a considerable amount of distress was occasioned. That, perhaps, along with other matters in dispute, led the council to make a demand on the government for a cash distribution of the capital funds of the band to the extent of $20 per head. But this we found it impossible to do. The accumulated band funds are held in trust for the general purposes of the band; under the Indian Act they may be distributed for various purposes, but this is not one of the purposes. If any such distribution were made, therefore, the authority of Parliament would have to be obtained. In addition, owing to the unfortunate circumstances of last year, the Indians found themselves in many cases in need of seed. The government offered to meet all cases of distress that were approved by the agent in charge—and there have been no complaints, so far as the representations of the council are concerned, with respect to the agent in charge. The department agreed to provide the necessary seed and to ask for an appropriation from Parliament for the purpose of doing so. This did not meet with the approval of the council; indeed, it was refused, and a peremptory demand made that consideration be given to their request for the distribution of $20 per head. We have not deemed it wise to accede to that demand; we have stood by our offer to give relief where relief was needed and to issue seed to those who found it necessary to obtain it from the department.

There is another difficulty that has now become very serious. Of the soldiers, six hundred in number, who enlisted from the Six Nation Indians, about 80 applied to the Soldier Settlement Board to be placed upon the land under the provisions of the Soldier Settlement Act. In one case an Indian named Hill obtained an allotment. Bear in mind that if there is any transaction in Indian lands it is with regard to improvements only; the ownership of the land is in the band itself, not in any particular individual. This man Hill was not prepared to go upon the land when he had met the requirements of the board and the money had been granted to him. A relative of his was in the meantime to take possession and hold the land until he was ready to go upon it. In all other cases, so far as I am aware, the men entered immediately into possession and proceeded to operate the lands allocated to them. But the council, or a portion of it at least, is opposed to the use of any of the Indian lands for the purposes of soldier settlement, and to the soldiers operating on the reserves under the provisions of the Soldier Settlement Act. I am not aware of the reasons for this, except that they feel that some of their rights are being jeopardized. In this particular case they have opposed by force any attempts on the part of Hill to take possession.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In referring to the council, does the minister mean the council of the band?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. In this case it is hereditary; it is not elective. The difficulty has come to the point where legal action has been taken and Hill's ownership has been sustained in the court. But still the band have resisted. The sheriff a few days ago undertook to oust the incumbent and place Hill upon the land, but he was resisted by force; and matters have come to such a pass now that he asks for assistance to enable him to carry out his duties in this connection. Throughout the whole affair I have endeavoured to avoid difficulties. We have had representatives of the council here on two occasions. The member for Brantford (Mr. Raymond) and the member for Brant (Mr. Good) met the members of the Council, I believe, or at least the chiefs of the band, to discuss the matter, but they did not seem willing to permit the operation of the Soldiers' Settlement Act on the reserve their intention being apparently, to resist this, if need be, by force. It is very difficult in a case of this kind to avoid what may develop into a serious situation, but personally I feel that we have a duty to stand behind the men who were willing, in the face of serious danger, to don the khaki and fight for us; it is our business as a department and a government to stand behind them. But we must also endeavour as far as possible to avoid any serious difficulty with the wards of the nation. At the moment the matter is in the hands of the sheriff of the county and the Attorney General of the province of Ontario. I do not know that I can say anything more on the matter. There are one or two things that might be said in regard to the desirability, if it were possible, of changing the system of the election of the council. But, again, these Indians stand very strongly upon their rights, and a conciliatory method would be the best if it could be effected. At any rate it should be tried to the limit before drastic steps are taken. I do think, however, that we must protect the men who were loyal enough, and who had our interests sufficiently at heart, to get out and fight for their country.

Mr. LEWIS: Just two questions: Does this Government recognize the council of which the minister has been speaking? And does the council claim the improvements made on the land by the Soldier Settlement Board, or just the land?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They have not made any claim. They are resisting the method that is being pursued in dealing with the lands in their reserves. It is the land in every case that they are claiming.

Mr. LEWIS: But there are improvements?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. GOOD: Perhaps I might supplement the statement of the minister by describing briefly the interview which my hon. friend (Mr. Raymond) and I had with a number of the chiefs the other day. The chairman of the council stood definitely and firmly by this position, that they were not subject to Canadian laws within the territory of their reserve. He said that the Canadian people, acting through the Canadian Government, were invaders of their rights as an independent people and an ally of the British Crown. That is perhaps a rather unique position, but they have taken it very definitely and it lies behind the difficulty which the minister has referred to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the particular matter concerning the Six Nations reserve, save to make this comment. I think the minister is not quite correct in saying that the Soldier Settlement Board operates the Indian reserves, treating the Indian returned soldier just as they have power to treat the white returned soldier. My recollection is that the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs was given the powers of the Soldier Settlement Board in respect of the Indian returned men, and he is enabled to operate the Act in regard to them. But the Soldier Settlement Board, as such, does not interpose itself at all. That, I am quite certain, is right, because the Soldier Settlement Board could not act, in view of the fact that the Indian, whether a returned man or not, is not subject to the law, in that he is not liable to have contracts enforced against him. Consequently it is merely the Soldier Settlement provisions adapted to the Indians, which the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs supervises.

I do, however, want to say something as regards the general question of complaints from reserves. As superintendent general for something over three years, I came in contact with them frequently, and I have not the least doubt that the present superintendent general will have the same experience as I had. I do not want what I say to have any special application to the Blood reserve, or, indeed, to the Six Nations or any other reserve, although it has just as much application to these two as to any others. The Indian population, perhaps more than any other body of people, are easily susceptible to imposition at the hands of the cleverer white, and nowhere do the agitator and the charlatan reap a readier harvest than among the Indian people. I have gone into the complaint raised by the member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), and I have had some acquaintance, too, with the situation in the Six Nations, the complaint being very much in the nature of that brought up this afternoon. In respect of this charge from the Blood reserve, I want to say frankly that after the most careful investigation I was able to make, after all sides were afforded an opportunity to present their evidence, the case of the departmental officials was so overwhelming, and the complete crushing of the complainant's case was so marked, that there was no doubt left in my mind at all that it was mainly the result of agitation—

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Did you have Mr. Wilson's letter before you?

Mr. MEIGHEN:—agitation, I am afraid I must say, on the part of those who seek to gain something for themselves. The British Columbia Indians have been subject to this perhaps more than any other body of Indians, and although the matter has been up year after year for I do not know how many years, I do not think there is any one who would say that it has not been simply a matter of chicanery, an attempt to profit by and live upon agitation, in the case of these British Columbia Indians. Now, in respect of our dealings with these people, no one is more decided than I am that those dealings must be characterized by humanity, by stern fidelity to all our treaties, by justice always—as everything we do must be just—but, at the same time, by firmness. The minister in the discharge of his duties will be entitled to the co-operation, in this regard, of the members who come from the districts inhabited by Indians, and I for one propose to give him support in a policy of firmness in this matter. I purpose to support him against the operations of people who want to profit by agitation and stir up unrest among the Indians, because I came out of the department profoundly convinced that that is the attitude of mind that will be most useful and, indeed, most just on the part of my successor.

Mr. FORKE: I endorse the remarks of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen). I have lived for a great many years in very close proximity to a band of Indians, and I appreciate their child-like qualities. In many respects they are very easily imposed upon. I hope, Mr. Chairman, you will not think it egotistical on my part if I say that one of the things that gives me the greatest pride is that the Indians believe what I say, and I am just as pleased with that endorsement as I could be with a certificate of character from white people anywhere. I am sorry to say that the Indians where I live, that is the Oak Lake Indians, are almost always in a chronic state of pauperism. I do not think they are treaty Indians. They are not in receipt of any fixed income of any kind from the Dominion Government but are largely dependent on their own efforts for a livelihood. I cannot but think, Mr. Chairman, that the Indian question is one of the tragedies of our modern civilization, or perhaps it would be better to say of the progress of development in a new country, and I would like to impress upon the minister at this particular time the desirability of a most careful examination into all the conditions on our Indian reserves. I know individually the Indians in my own locality, I am thoroughly familiar with their circumstances, and my heart has bled for them many a time. We sometimes blame the Indian for the condition in which he finds himself. We say that he is not as persistent as he might be, and that he does not adapt himself to our modern way of living; but where in all history, have you ever found it possible for a people who have been living in a state of semi-barbarism to adapt themselves to civilization and all its methods of living just in one generation? We must treat these people with sympathy and consideration and give them all the support and help that we possibly can. Unfortunately it is but too true that white people, to a very large extent, are blameable for a great many of the vices to which the Indians are addicted at the present time. When I knew the Indians on the Oak Lake or Pipestone reserve forty years ago they were a truthful people, you would trust them everywhere. To-day I am sorry to say, you cannot repose the same confidence in them, and I attribute that to their coming into contact with the white population dwelling all around them. That is a serious charge to make, but it is true. I hope the minister will give this class of our population his most serious attention and consideration.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What has been done with regard to the "greater production" scheme? Is it to be continued, and if so under what head shall we find the appropriation for it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It does not need any appropriation.

Mr. COOTE: While the minister is looking for an answer to that question I am prompted by the remarks of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) to say that I live a distance of sixty-five miles from the Blood reserve. The information that came to me emanated from a great many white people residing in the vicinity of that reserve, and I felt it my duty to bring the matter up as the Indians themselves are asking for an impartial investigation. I was very pleased to hear the minister say that he hopes to visit these reserves. If he will do that I am sure it will give great pleasure to the people who have been agitating in this matter. I would also like to say with respect to what my hon. friend from Brandon has said, that in talking with a former missionary on the Blood reserve he stated that the treatment which the Indians had received not only from their agents but from some white people living in the vicinity, was enough to make Bolshevists out of them. Under all the circumstances I hope that an impartial investigation will be held into the conditions which exist on that reserve with a view to seeing if the matter cannot be cleared up to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is no vote for the "greater production" programme but there is a very substantial amount of cash on hand. Perhaps it would be interesting to the committee to know something about the scheme and the method adopted for closing it up. I may say that Mr. Graham has just left for the West and it is our desire that as soon as possible the area under cultivation under this scheme, and managed by Mr. Graham for the Government, shall either be turned over to the Indians to cultivate, or the work closed out in a manner that will not involve any loss to the department. On 20th February Mr. Graham showed a cash balance of $328,810.17. To this balance should be added cash, amounting to $32,055.41, which was realized for the cultivation of a farm which was handed over to the Blackfeet Indians to be paid for out of the Band's funds, making a total of $360,865. It is proposed to return at once to the department $250,000 from this amount, which will leave a cash balance of $110,066.21 in the hands of Mr. Graham to carry on his operations this year. That is, he turned over $250,000 of the original fund and retains $110,066.21 for the closing-out process. I may say that last year a very considerable proportion of this land was turned over to the young students who graduated from the schools, and that is the method by which we hope to dispose of the balance of the land under cultivation. It is not the intention of the department to continue the cultivation of this land purely as a departmental enterprise any longer than the time required to dispose of it. As soon as it can be turned over we shall, with just that speed, close out the greater production enterprise.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Can the minister inform the committee what the net profit was per acre each year the scheme was in operation, for example at the Blackfeet reserve?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know that the department have that information. I presume it could be secured but it will take some considerable time. I would be very glad to prepare the information if it could be had by areas.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would draw the attention of the minister to the charges made by Dr. Bryce who was from 1904 until very recently Chief Medical Officer for the Indian Department. The charges made by Dr. Bryce against officers of the department, I think, are entitled to very serious consideration. Let me read two or three extracts from Dr. Bryce's report: The first reads:

> By Order in Council dated January 22nd, 1904, the writer was appointed Medical Inspector to the Department of Interior and of Indian Affairs, and was entrusted with the health interests of the Indians of Canada.

Dr. Bryce goes on to say of himself:

For each year up to 1914 he wrote an annual report on the health of the Indians, published in the departmental report and on instruction from the minister made in 1907 a special investigation of thirty-five Indian schools in the three prairie provinces.

Dr. Bryce continues:

The annual medical reports from year to year made reference to the unsatisfactory health of the pupils, while different local medical officers urged greater action in view of the results of their experience from year to year.

Dr. Bryce, in conjunction with Dr. J. D. Lafferty examined the 243 children of eight schools in Alberta with the following results:

(a) Tuberculosis was present equally in children at every age; (b) In no instance was a child awaiting admission to school found free from tuberculosis; hence it was plain that infection was got in the home primarily; (c) The disease showed an excessive mortality in the pupils between five and ten years of age; (d) The 10,000 children of school age demanded the same attention as the thousand children coming up each year and entering the schools annually. Recommendations, made in this report, on much the same lines as those made in the report of 1907, followed the examination of the 243 children; but owing to the active opposition of Mr. D. C. Scott, and his advice to the then Deputy Minister, no action was taken by the Department to give effect to the recommendations made.

I would commend this report to the very serious consideration of the minister. I do not intend to discuss the matter at present but I shall bring it up at a future time, and I hope the minister will then be able to give some further information with respect to it.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have not read the report mentioned by my hon. friend so that I cannot express any opinion upon it.

With respect to the request of my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland), I have the report here, but I know perfectly well, before giving it to him, that it is not the kind of statement that he is desirous of getting. It takes into account all costs in connection with operation and breaking land, and it shows a very large amount, of course, for which the department could get no remuneration, inasmuch as it is all turned over to the Indians. That would have to be deducted before I could give him the report. However I will be glad to get that information for him.

Mr. CALDWELL: The minister gave us the items covering $41,760 in the general expenses of this item, but there is still $294,045, general expenses, not accounted for by the items he gave us, and in this connection I would like to deal on general principles with this matter of general and miscellaneous expenses appearing in every item brought down by every minister. Not wishing to criticize this more than any of the other departments. I find in this whole vote there is an item of $487,160 that is attributed to the different provinces as general expenses and miscellaneous expenditure, not itemized at all. Then we find a separate vote, item 281, $157,500, for general expenses, making a total of over $600,000. On general principles I think there is too much money voted as general expenses or miscellaneous expenses, without explanation of what it is for. The tendency seems to be growing, as I observe these items are larger than last year. I think we criticized these votes for general expenses last year, and I think we should warn, not only the minister for Indian Affairs, but the others as well, that in the future we will expect more of an itemized account when votes are asked for expenditure for purposes of government. I think it is no more than right that the House should have the information.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I confess I did not follow my hon. friend.

Mr. CALDWELL: I was referring to the matter of items in each of these votes for each province for Indian affairs under general or miscellaneous expenses, without any items, amounting in a great many cases to more than half the vote. If it were a small vote it would not be so bad, although the principle is the same. I was not criticising the estimates of this department any more than any other department, but I think there is too great a tendency with the ministers to ask for a vote in the shape of a blank cheque, without giving the items the expenditure is required for. I find in the part of the item for the different provincial votes for Indians an amount of $487,160. Then there is a separate vote for general expenses of $157,500.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): For the Northwest?

Mr. CALDWELL: No, in the general vote, No. 281.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We are dealing at the moment with the vote for the territories; $85,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: I know that, but I was just summing up the amount of the total vote, put in as general expenses. It amounts to $644,660.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The hon. gentleman is objecting to the total miscellaneous vote for the Indian Department, although it is allocated to various provinces and the amounts given for the various provinces.

Mr. CALDWELL: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know that I can meet that objection unless we bring down a statement for the various services for which they are used, but in the aggregate it looks like a large amount. Taken by provinces it is not very serious. For example the votes for the provinces are: Manitoba, $14,827; Saskatchewan, $13,158; Alberta, $9,868. This, with the $47,000, makes a total of $85,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: Where do you get the $47,000? If this were a small item it would not look so bad.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I will give the allocation of the whole $335,000. The salaries amount to $152,990.

Mr. CALDWELL: Are salaries included in this?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Oh, yes. I will give the amounts making up the $335,825. They are as follows:

Salaries	$152,990
Employees rations	34,900
Miscellaneous	85,023
Fuel, feed and light	18,181
Livestock	2,050
Equipment	10,719
Buildings	31,924

Mr. CALDWELL: I do not want to be misunderstood. I am not objecting to the vote on the ground that possibly it is not needed, but I say that these items should be given in the vote. For instance, in the other provinces the items for salaries are given, and there is no item in this as salaries. Apparently the minister has the details.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The provinces are all alike in that respect. The salaries are not given, except lumped as they are here. If any hon. gentleman desires to know what any particular agent is getting in the way of salary, I can give him the information.

Mr. CALDWELL: In the Nova Scotia vote we find $6,240 for salaries, in New Brunswick, $3,184, and in Prince Edward Island $1,160. In British Columbia there is an item of $72,730. The salaries are not itemized in this vote.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Yukon, $15,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We are carrying items at a speed just a little too fast for the celerity of my mind. The previous item is for $38,060 "miscellaneous and unforeseen", as against $19,560 last year, virtually a doubling of the estimates for the unforeseen. How can the minister know what is going to be unforeseen so accurately as that? Last year there was no increase at all.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Under the heading of "Office, miscellaneous and unforeseen" $19,560 was appropriated in 1921-22. It is anticipated that the same amount will be required to meet expenses in 1922-23, and that, in addition, it will be necessary to provide $18,500 for expenditure as follows:

5 p.m.

To provide for irrigation work on Kamloops Reserve, No. 1, which is in the "dry belt"		$12,000
To provide for payment of taxes which have been levied in the West Nicomen dyking district for dyking on the Sumas Indian Reserves, Nos. 4 and 10, on Nicomen Island, in the New Westminster agency, which work became necessary under the British Columbia dyking regulations. This year the interest and sinking fund charges amounted to	$ 312
The upkeep to	150
The maintenance charge was.	1,400
		1,862
Probably the maintenance charge will be less next year. The total cost, therefore, is estimated at		1,500
To provide for alterations to Babine Agency House at Hazelton		3,000
To supplement band funds in defraying cost of dam at outlet of Scowkin creek and to irrigate approximately 500 acres of land south of the Thompson river, Kamloops agency, Department of Interior in charge of work		2,000

Item agreed to.

Indians—general, $157,500.

Mr. CALDWELL: Along the line of my recent criticism, I should like to know what these general expenses are.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I see the decrease here is really not a decrease at all. The $39,000 is simply taken out of this appropriation and transferred to the appropriation for the Northwest Territories.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, for the payment of Treaty No. 11, which appeared in the Estimates, but it is a transfer only.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is an obligation that we have to pay, and it comes under the Northwest Territories appropriation instead of under this, so that, in the end, the estimates for Indian Affairs will be increased very substantially, by something like $140,000.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We have covered practically all of the decreases inasmuch as we shall have to come down with supplementaries covering the decrease in the educational item.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no decrease in this at all, and there is no decrease in education; at least, what decrease there is, is going to be made up in the supplementaries?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Indian Education, $1,226,643.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): Does this item cover anything outside of salaries and such like in connection with education?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The appropriation for the fiscal year, 1922-23 is divided as follows:

Per capita grants for residential schools:—
Ontario	$119,375
Manitoba	118,305
Saskatchewan	142,180
Alberta & N.W.T.	145,225
British Columbia	173,800
Yukon	14,300
		$ 713,185
Bonus for residential schools at $20 per capita		100,000
Salaries for day school teachers and matrons:
Prince Edward Island	$ 850
Nova Scotia	5,250
New Brunswick	5,750
Quebec	20,265
Ontario	22,600
Manitoba	30,470
Saskatchewan	20,630
Alberta & N.W.T.	6,810
British Columbia	41,025
Yukon	5,520
		159,170
Inspection of schools		9,000
Tuition and assistance to graduates		4,000
Fuel, rental, janitors, truant officers		27,000
Transportation of pupils		3,000
Class-room equipment, texts, stationery, desks		16,000
Repairs, alterations and day school buildings		195,288
Total		$1,226,643

Mr. SHAW: I confess that it is with some apprehension that I receive the reason of the minister for the reduction in this estimate for educational purposes. I am not blaming the minister, but to my mind it would seem to be a reflection on the officials of his department, because if there is one thing we must be particularly careful about it is to see that our treaty obligations with respect to education are fully and completely discharged. I say that, Mr. Chairman, also in the light of the fact that in answer to a question which I addressed to the minister with regard to the Stony reserve school namely: How many Indian children are there at the present time of school age on the Stony reserve at Morley, Alberta?—I was informed: "Approximately, 110." The information which I have been given indicates that there are probably 140 children of school age on that reserve, so I take it that "approximately" has perhaps a very wide interpretation in the department. The second question and answer were:

> Q. What provision, if any, has been made for the education of such Indian children?
> A. No provision since boarding school was closed in 1908 and the last day school closed in 1919.

Now, I suggest that that is a most tragic state of affairs, and I am delighted to know that the minister proposes to visit some of these Indian reserves during the coming year. If he will take the trouble—and I am sure he will—to visit the Stony Indian reserve, he will find the request for educational facilities for the children in that particular reserve comes from the Indians themselves. That band of Indians do realize, so I am informed—at least, a number of them—the necessity for educating their children and they are anxious that acommodation should be provided.

I should like the minister to give us his general idea as to how he proposes to carry on the education of the Indian children, and to co-ordinate with that education the taking care of their health, the gravity of which matter, I am sure, he fully appreciates. I do not know the policy of the former government, but I understand that in relation to the province of Alberta at least the intention is to erect a school at Edmonton and to transport the Stony reserve and other Indian children from points over two hundred miles distant and keep them there at school, transporting them back to their parents, I presume, at the end of the school year. I am frank to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have not very much sympathy with that method of education, especially where you find at least 120 children on the reserve of school age whose parents are anxious to secure school facilities. I should like the minister to give us some indication of the policy of his department in connection with educational affairs, and to advise us if he has any intention of co-ordinating his health with his educational activities.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I must confess that my knowledge of the particular reserve my hon. friend has mentioned is rather limited. From what I have observed of the system followed in the northern portions of Alberta, I would be in favour of recommending its continuance. There the children are gathered into schools, largely under the supervision of various religious bodies, and are provided not only with a good, sound general education, but are given religious instruction as well, which I think is decidedly helpful to them. My hon. friend has questioned the wisdom of that policy being carried out in all cases. The Indians on the Morley reserve may be of a different type, but from what I have observed of Indians generally, unless they are settled down at farming very few of them continue to reside in any particular spot during the entire summer season. Therefore the children can be better educated in schools of the character I have mentioned than in rural public schools such as we have throughout Western Canada. There may be cases where the rural public school system could be carried out, but I am inclined to think that the other method would be more successful. When the Supplementary Estimates are brought down, the vote for education will come up for discussion. A great many problems enter into the education of the Indian child, and it seems to me that a more lasting impression—I may be wrong about this—can be created in the mind of the individual child in the church boarding school, where the child is living continuously over a stated period, than when it is attending intermittently a local school, as undoubtedly would be the case in connection with any school of the character of our public schools. My own opinion at the moment is that the education of the Indian child can be managed much more successfully at such a boarding school.

Dealing with the whole question, I find this difficulty—that the religious organizations are pressing very strongly for increased facilities in the way of buildings for educational purposes. There is no doubt that I could ask the committee for a very large sum of money to be spent in this way. But I am going to ask for a considerable vote to repair some of the buildings that the clergymen in charge claim are almost useless, in order to avoid a heavy capital outlay all at once, and year by year, and to endeavour to meet the necessities of the case by expenditure of this character in the construction of new buildings. The whole matter is bound up between the department and the religious organizations that have undertaken this work. I think a great deal of credit is due to those religious organizations for what they have done and the sacrifices that many of them have made, particularly in the outlying portions of Canada, in connection with their work among the Indians.

With respect to the health of the Indians, the hon. gentleman has introduced another very difficult problem. I know the difficulty of handling the situation in our own province among the white population, and it is much more difficult to handle among our Indian population. Perhaps tuberculosis is the most serious menace we have to face to-day. I am not prepared on this occasion to make any statement with respect to what ought to be done, or what would be the policy of the Government, except to say that I am prepared to give the matter the most careful consideration, with a view to adopting that method which appears likely to produce the best results, and to stop, as far as is within the power of the Government, the ravages of this disease among our Indian population.

Mr. MILLAR: I wish to ask if the grants to the different educational institutions carried on by the various religious bodies are included in this item of $1,226,000. I would like to say a word in regard to educating the Indians in those institutions carried on by religious organizations. I have not had much opportunity of comparing the results of the two methods; I have seen the results on one side only. I live not far from an institution carried on by one of the religious bodies, and I must say that the results there are very satisfactory—so much so indeed, that it is my belief that the method suggested by the minister is preferable to that advocated by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Shaw).

Mr. MEIGHEN: To what school does the hon. member refer?

Mr. MILLAR: Fort Qu'Appelle.

Mr. SHAW: I am not suggesting that the policy followed by the department was not a correct one. I am suggesting that in this particular case, where there are 140 children available, that policy might be followed—not at Edmonton, however, but on the reserve itself.

Mr. MILLAR: In the school to which I refer there are nearly 200 pupils, and they are making remarkable progress. The improvement in their manners is noticeable, and I can understand that their instruction by efficient teachers would have much to do with preventing the spread of tuberculosis. One of the greatest difficulties is to get the Indian to realize the danger of spreading the disease. With the children in an institution of this kind, the necessity of cleanliness will become apparent to them, and during their whole afterlife, as they move among their own people, the value of that education will be demonstrated. As I say, I have not had an opportunity of judging of the beneficial effects of the other methods of education, but this method is certainly very successful.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I had not seen the answer to the question put by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Shaw), and as I was responsible myself when this action was taken I want to make a statement about it. In the first place, I really, with all respect, want to suggest that the answer is not correct. It is not complete; it gives an impression that really cannot be true. I remember very well coming to the conclusion that the day school as a means of educating young children had failed. As to the soundness of that conclusion I had no doubt at all; and in pursuance of it, day schools one by one were closed and we resorted in toto to the policy that we never had abandoned, of educating through institutional schools—large boarding schools under religious supervision. When this school was closed it doubtless was in pursuance of that policy; but to say it left these Indians wholly without any institution to which they could go for instruction and education is surely not correct. I remember, even in very difficult times, the acquirement of a tract of land for the purpose of going on at once with the building of the Edmonton school to take the place, among others—two or three—of the one that was at Red Deer.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The difficulty is that the building has not been put up.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well; but has the Red Deer school been closed, and is there no school in Alberta to which they can go?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I cannot answer that question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, it cannot be correct; that was never my intention.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The Red Deer school is within a very few miles of my own home, and I have been there a great deal. It is a fact that that school has been closed and that the children have been practically transferred to Edmonton. In fact, that was the condition of the agreement on which the church which owned the property relinquished it. I am sorry to say that as far as I have been able to ascertain, the bulk of the children who had been attending the Red Deer school now attend no school at all, because the school at Edmonton, which was to have taken care of them, is not in operation—in fact, is not constructed. Most of the children in that district, therefore, are at present without adequate means of instruction.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Neither the Red Deer nor the Edmonton school was intended to be the only school in the province. I have not, of course, looked the matter up preparatory to this discussion, but I remember now that the Red Deer school was in a somewhat dilapidated condition, and either unsafe or unhealthy for the pupils. But this I am positive of; it never was the intention of the department while I was Superintendent General that those Indians or any others should be without opportunity of attendance at an educational institution. I hope that since that time nothing of the kind has been allowed to take place.

Let me say, on the general question as to the means of education, that the day school is a failure. It was tried for many years; it had a long, winding, struggling, but by no means successful existence. The Indian, to be educated, must be in an environment that permits of education. You cannot get it on the Indian reserve; you cannot get it around his parent's home. There the Indian is under the influence of his parent; the parent is not very anxious that the child attend school, and there is a constant battle between the parent and the department in an endeavour to secure the child's attendance. The influences of the reserve are wholly alien to the purposes of education. Furthermore,—hon. members can give such explanation of it as appears sound to them; I can come to no other conclusion—I do not believe you can ever educate Indian children unaccompanied by religious instruction, and you cannot have religious instruction unless you have it, for these purposes at all events, under religious denominations. For these reasons, therefore, only a boarding school such as is to be established at Edmonton, such as we have had always through the western country, is the institution for the care of the Indian child. Never was the intention that there should be an interregnum during which it would not be possible for children in any reserve to receive their education. Instead of the department having been niggardly during all these years in the matter of providing Indian schools, I am disposed to think it provided rather too many. That may not apply to Alberta, but it applies elsewhere. Why, I know of competition, fighting among different schools to get enough pupils to warrant the carrying on of the school at all.

Mr. FORKE: The Elkhorn school was closed, was it not?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and precisely because of that. It has been established by experience that the larger institution gets better results: you can educate the children at a lower cost per capita and obtain a better grade of instruction, a more rounded education. As an example, the Qu'Appelle school to which the hon. member refers could be instanced. I have been through that school myself and I know the work it does. It is a large school; you should have a school of about that size to get the best results. On the whole, therefore instead of too few, I think we have had too many. I should be sincerely sorry, no one more so, if, through accident or any other cause, there has been allowed an interregnum in Alberta when there was no access to some suitable institution for all Indian children there.

The matter of health is still greater; at least, whether it is a greater question or not, it is more difficult. The Indian is disposed to tuberculosis. Why? Because Indian life, through the influences of civilization, has been changed. Down through the generations the Indian has led a wild life, roaming the prairies and the woods, and just in proportion as you coddle him and enable him to lead a life of ease, to that extent is he likely to drift into tuberculosis. One of the essentials is to enable him to take the gradations, from his old state to his new mode of life, by degrees, and to help him,—nay, compel him—as far as possible to live an outdoor life. That is one of the important things, and in pursuance of that policy the department, under my supervision, endeavoured, and successfully endeavoured, to re-establish the herds of reindeer up in the Ungava district, the eastern shore of Hudson bay, and elsewhere as well, in order that the Indian and the Eskimo might have means of livelihood in a manner comparable with those their ancestors had. We found that no matter how liberally or completely we supplied them with the means of living, and as rapidly as we did so, in that proportion the Indians were being eliminated by the ravages of tuberculosis. The same thing holds true throughout the length and breadth of the Indian world in this country. Of course, besides that, as my hon. friend says, the educational institutions do good in teaching habits of cleanliness and the prevention and spread of the plague, and so forth. But I think that most can be done by such a policy as puts the Indian on his resources and makes it his business to work in the open in order to gain the livelihood he must have. The worst thing you can do for him is to provide such conditions as enable him to live at ease—although, of course, that life would not satisfy white men—and without that hard work in the open air which made the ancestors of the Indians healthy and strong.

Mr. LEWIS: I am not so much interested just now in the merits or demerits of education under religious bodies or under a national system, because I presume that this subject will come up later for discussion. At least, we have been so informed by the minister. But I am interested in the education of Indian children, and in view of the statement of the minister that the educational authorities in the religious bodies were asking for increased estimates, I should like to know what accounts for the reduction in this estimate. Looking over the estimates as a whole I find that the amount is about the same as last year. In three or four places there is a large increase, but the large increase in connectioin with the three prairie provinces seems to have been deducted from the item for education in order to level the totals. Has there been any cause for this reduction? Are there fewer children today than there were a year ago, or fewer schools in operation, requiring a smaller number of teachers? We should know these things before voting for this reduction, because we believe to-day that education is one of the most important subjects. There is something else I want to ask in regard to the health situation, as referred to by the leader of the Opposition. Are the religious schools subject to the same supervision in regard to air space and light as schools under the public system, or do the churches build schools promiscuously according to their own plans? If not, must those plans conform to certain federal regulations?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My hon. friend could not have been in the chamber earlier in the afternoon. I made an explanation covering the question.

Mr. LEWIS: Your explanation was as regards the repairing of buildings. You did not explain the reduction.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I explained that the reduction of $100,000 odd is made up in an increase elsewhere for repairs, and I stated that we would come down at a later date with supplementary estimates asking for a necessary sum for educational purposes. In the general estimates we are asking for an increased expenditure, which we have discussed item by item, and later on we will ask for practically the same amount as voted last year for education. With regard to the question of ventilation, air space per pupil, and so forth, I have no definite knowledge, but I should judge that this has been left to the bodies who build the schools. Possibly a great deal of attention may not have been paid to that particular matter, but in the newer bulidings which are being constructed by the Government it is being given the fullest consideration. Indeed, the plans are prepared practically by the architect in the department.

Mr. WARNER: I desire some information regarding the prospect of a new building at Edmonton. I have been asked to inquire regarding that matter, and I should like to know if there is likely to be any provision in the supplementary estimates for the erection of a new building there. I understand that there have already been erected other buildings on the farm that has been purchased in connection with the Indian school, but there is no suitable school building yet. It seems that it is necessary, in order to properly carry on the work of education there, that there should be a new building. The lack of a proper building has been a handicap for the last three years since the school was moved from Red Deer to that district. I have had several conversations with the man in charge, Mr. Woodworth, and since coming here have received several letters. The people are anxious to know whether they are going to have this building in the near future. I believe, as has been suggested by the leader of the Opposition and some other hon. members, that the religious organizations can best take care of Indian education. For the greater part of my life I have been in a position to observe the education of Indians, and it is my opinion that this education can be better conducted by the religious bodies than by any system of education on the reserves. I do not think there is any doubt but that the result is better. We are trying to educate these children to live as civilized people live, but on the reserve there is a greater influence retarding their progress in that direction than there is in districts where religious bodies can care for them entirely outside of and apart from the reserve. I understand that not only are children coming to this school from the old Red Deer school but that they are also coming from other localities in Alberta, or should do so when once arrangements have been made to take care of them. As my colleague from Red Deer has stated, many of these children who should at present be under instruction at Edmonton are receiving no instruction at all. The result is they are forgetting the religious and other knowledge which has already been imparted to them and are going back instead of progressing. I would like to have some information as to whether we are likely to have an appropriation in the supplementary estimates for the building at Edmonton, and if so what the character of the edifice will be?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I may say that on two occasions since becoming minister I have been visited by the representatives of all the religious bodies, who apparently come together to discuss this matter annually with the department, and a great deal of pressure, in favour of construction has been brought to bear by the Methodist body who are interested in this school. I think there can be no question but that the school is deserving of consideration and that there is a necessity for it. However, that does not mean that Alberta is being entirely neglected in so far as education is concerned because there are twenty-two other points at which educational facilities are offered, although perhaps not to the extent they should be, by this particular religious organization. What the leader of the Opposition has just pointed out I find to be true, namely, that there is considerable rivalry between the organizations as to who shall have the larger proportion of the amounts voted, and that each particular organization shall get its full share of consideration. It is one of the positions in public life where you have to be politic and delicate as well. It is a case in which you have to use your judgment as to what can be done, or as to what can be spent for the extension of this work. The matter of the Edmonton building is still under consideration by the department and I shall be able to give a fuller explanation when the supplementary estimates come down—that is the supplementaries because we have not asked for any new vote for the beginning of this school in the general estimates. Still, I have not decided not to ask for some consideration for this particular building this year. The difficulty is this: Apparently every one of the organizations has old buildings of the character mentioned by the leader of the Opposition —old buildings that should be abandoned. In regard to some of them, I am recommending a small expenditure for the continuation of the work for another year. At least one of them in British Columbia is represented to me as being dangerous to the pupils and liable to fall down upon them. But even so, I am taking chances and asking for a small sum of money for one more year hoping that perhaps prices will have been reduced next year. I want the committee to understand that any delay is not with the idea of depriving the Indian children of a year's education but rather that we may have fuller information. Then there is this other feature—and I think my hon. friend will understand the situation—that in delaying with the question you have to keep in mind the outlook as a whole and treat all fairly in comparison with the value of the work they are performing. That is also part of our difficulty. I will be very glad to answer my hon. friend, perhaps, more fully when we are discussing the supplementary estimates. All I can say at present is that the matter is under consideration as far as the Edmonton building is concerned.

Mr. CALDWELL: I would like to know whether the minister is yet in possession of the information I asked him for earlier in the sitting in regard to the illegal cutting of timber on the Tobique reserve last year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not appear to have that information yet but I will get it for my hon. friend.

Mr. KENNEDY (West Edmonton): Will the minister be good enough to give the names of the different religious bodies that are carrying on this work and the rule that is followed in allocating the government grants to them?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The government grants are not allocated to them as religious bodies; the grants are on a per capita basis according to the work performed. The religious denominations are—Roman Catholic, Church of England, Presbyterian and Methodist. These are the religious bodies that are carrying on this work.

Mr. CALDWELL: Are the Baptists doing any of this work?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am not sure, but I know that the denominations I have mentioned are.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister tell us how many Indian schools there are in Alberta and the number of children in attendance? The feeling is prevalent in Alberta that we have not enough schools to educate the children.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We do not happen to have the figures grouped separately. In the case in question they are for Alberta and the North West Territories. For that area there are 8 day schools; 22 boarding schools; and 1 industrial school. The number of pupils enrolled are: Day schools 198, boarding schools 1,020, industrial school 44. The average attendance is: day schools 77, boarding schools 886, industrial school 40.

Mr. COOTE: Is the Indian school at Dunbow open now, and if so how many pupils are in attendance?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Is it the High River school my hon. friend has reference to?

Mr. COOTE: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There are 50 pupils in attendance.

Item agreed to.

Mines and Geological Survey—amount required by the Lignite Utilization Board for expenses in connection with the carbonizing and briquetting of lignite coal, $125,000.

Mr. GOULD: Some time ago I placed a question on the Order Paper concerning the briquetting plant at Bienfait, Saskatchewan. The replies to my question indicate that the plant is closed down at the present time. I desire to ask if this item has to do with the research work that is being carried on, which I maintain is a national necessity, and should be considered as a national expenditure, because the results obtained from these experiments may be available for any other industry or organization in Canada. I see the vote has been reduced, and I should like to know, if possible, why it has been reduced.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am very much interested in scientific research, as my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) appears to be. This is one of the problems that came under my notice since I became minister. There is no intention of discontinuing experiments. Without going into a detailed report of what has happened there, I may say, in the first place, that the organization which controls this experiment is the Research Council. The money is voted through the Mines Department and it became a live question with me, because of the fact that they had expended the appropriation last year and were out of funds. I was desirous of knowing what stage the experiment had reached and what they had learned by that experiment, and I had some difficulty in ascertaining the facts, but I think sufficient has been discovered to warrant continuance, at least for another year, of this experiment. I know my hon. friend will agree with me that it will be very important to low-grade lignite fields in the vicinity of this plant and to all low-grade lignite coal fields in Canada. The experiment had proved fairly successful up to the point of the carbonizing. They had some difficulty with the feeding of the carbonizing units. I think one of the questions asked by my hon. friend related to the damage done by an explosion up there. They have had some difficulty with the six units of the carbonizing plant. We are suggesting that they continue the experiment with one or two units only, to prove that the carbonizing, under the system they have adopted for the experiment is going to be successful without changing all of the units, and then to prove that the briquetting will also be successful. As this plant was built for experimental purposes, very great saving can be made in the construction of a new plant elsewhere. In the meantime we are asking for sufficient funds to prove the experiment in a small way, leaving the question of the possibility of the manufacture of those briquets, as a commercial undertaking, for another experiment altogether. I do not want to criticize anything that has been done in the past, but I do think it is impossible to combine a commercial experiment with a scientific experiment in connection with this problem. Therefore, we are anxious to devote this money to the purpose of pursuing the experiment in order to first prove that it is possible that the experiment will be successful, and then afterwards to work out the commercial problem. We are not asking for a large sum of money. Explanations have been given to the provincial governments and both have agreed to assist with the money in carrying out this particular experiment.

Mr. GOULD: The next question I would ask is perhaps unfair to the minister, but it is known that the deposits of coal tributary to this district cross the international boundary or the 49th parallel. I have wondered if the minister has any information as to, or whether he has seen, any of the experiments carried on by the United States similar to those carried on at Bienfait.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, they have been carried on in Dakota. New Jersey has also carried on similar experiments.

Mr. GOULD: I was prompted to place the question on the Order Paper because I heard of the explosion to which I referred and I went to the plant in my car the same afternoon. A goodly number of pressmen had arrived, but the manager would not allow them to look the plant over; however, he courteously allowed me to go through, and, during the visit to the plant, I met the individuals who were experimenting with the binder for the holding up of the coal after it had gone through the carbonizer. At that time I think there were five small carbonizers being tested there, and one had previously been condemned. That is the one which was the cause of the explosion, but they were testing it out once more, under a different supervision, to see if it could not be made use of before being abandoned altogether. I understood the carbonizers which would not stand the test would be replaced by those which were successful, and larger ones installed perhaps. But it seemed difficult to find a binder that would hold the ignite coal up under strong heat, and that is the reason I asked why the vote was being reduced, because I am very much interested in the work of the scientific department, and I had hoped they would soon make it a real success, so that, as a commercial asset, this lignite would be available for the people of the country. I believe there is enough coal in that southeastern country to energize all the wheels of industry in the southern parts of Saskatchewan, and I would urge upon the Government to explore the Bienfait coal fields on behalf of the people who live tributary to that point.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I share with my hon. friend some doubts as to the success of this experiment, and I do not want to ask Parliament for money unless we feel that success is in sight. I want to back up at every stage scientific research, but before venturing on heavy expenditure for plant to carry out scientific work, I think we should have a fair amount of assurance that there is going to be some success. I have been very much interested in this experiment. I had a long conversation with the chemist in charge, Dr. Stanfield, when last in the city of Edmonton. After discussing the matter very thoroughly with him and after having, since that time, had a report from him with respect to the whole experiment, I am convinced that there is a strong possibility that this experiment will prove successful. My hon. friend has, perhaps, touched the one doubtful phase of the experiment, that is, the briquetting rather than the carbonizing. We are, however, going to go to work at that, to ascertain all we can as to what success our friends across the line have had in this particular field, and to apply scientifically if we can, all we know about these experiments to the experiment at Bienfait this summer. There is, in the department, a report made upon the matter from the standpoint of commercial possibility but really we must first prove the possibility of the experiment itself before attempting to make it commercially possible.

Mr. LOGAN: How much has been spent altogether in the experiments?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): About $820,000.

Mr. SHAW: I take it that the first item for organization and equipment of the explosives division has reference to the Explosives Act, which was brought into force by proclamation a couple of years ago. I presume the equipment is for the purpose of testing explosives and determining matters of that kind. Has the minister considered the advisability of having that work done by the arsenal authorities under the Militia Department?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think my hon. friend will agree as to the necessity of this work; but the matter that he has just raised is one that the Government will have under consideration this year. It has come up from various angles, and I confess I am in favour of making a thorough exploration, at least, into various activities of the Government that seem to be duplicated. I cannot speak with authority; but as regards the explosives division, I can readily understand its great necessity and value for the safety of the public, as regards testing the safety and strength of explosives.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

For investigation of mineral resources or deposits; of the mining and metallurgical industries, and of mineral technology, wages, expenses of testing and research laboratories. For publications, English and French editions of reports; purchase of books, laboratory supplies, instruments; miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $184,500.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): The minister might explain the increase here.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I cannot locate the details of this particular item except to say that there is an increase of $10,000 in the mineral resources division to provide for marking the mineral deposits found in the various provinces. The major portion of the $5,700 required for ore-dressing plants goes to British Columbia. These plants appear to be necessary in order to bring our minerals to the attention of the general public. There is an addition of $2,000 for investigation of road materials and clay products. My information from the department is that the clay products industry is assuming more importance yearly, and that in order to carry on the investigational and chemical work in connection therewith this increase is necessary. In the fuel and fuel testing item there is an increase of $900; a reduction of $5,900 in connection with the peat investigation work, and an increase of $18,300 in the other three divisions.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): In connection with the investigation of clay deposits, has anything been done along this line in Saskatchewan during the past year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Nothing in the past year.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I see an item for wages—which I presume is investigation of wages—occurs in the Labour Department as well as in this department. Does each department do the same work, or is this particular item with respect to a different line of investigation?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This is the wages of the men in the field.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I notice $100,000 for the establishment of an ore-dressing plant in British Columbia is left out. Needless to say, no part of the money voted last year for that purpose was spent. Has the Government wholly abandoned the idea of establishing an ore-dressing plant?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The matter came up particularly on the representation of members representing constituencies in the interior of British Columbia. The department has not abandoned the idea entirely, but has come to the conclusion that it would be well to delay construction of the necessary plant for another year at least. The information I get from interested parties is that this expenditure will have to be made in the interests of the mining industry of British Columbia.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Government seems to have a cold shoulder for British Columbia generally. Is the minister from that province inactive? So far, all the Government needed to know was that something was to be done there when they abandoned it permanently, or temporarily —which, perhaps may be only a disguise for permanence. There is no doubt as to the need of it; not at all. Outside of that there is an increase of $12,400 which the minister has given some explanation of. Is there any possibility of a saving in the publications? They should be cheaper now than before.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My right hon. friend means, I suppose, that the printing should not cost so much. I cannot say as to that; I have no information. The deputy minister informs me that at present the publications are all used.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the money all used?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Of last year's vote, $12,568 was not used. I do not see why the printing should be very much larger than a year ago; the demand for publications should be about the same throughout the years.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the minister might have saved $10,000 here.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It does not appear as though the full amount would be required.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not wish to be pressing it unduly, because I have quite a lot of confidence in the departmental officials, but I suggest that the minister himself move to reduce that vote. May I ask the Government if they purpose to continue the services of the Editorial Committee? It is as appropriate to put the question on this occasion as on any other. About three years ago the late government established an editorial committee composed of three practical men in the service, one of whom is from his own department—Mr. Lynch. The business of this committee was to review all printed matter for all the departments where they thought money could be saved, because the expenses of printing were becoming prodigious and it was difficult for the minister to tell whether all printing asked for was necessary or not. Wherever they thought there could be reduction of the amount of printing done, the matter was taken up with the proper officer and gone into thoroughly. In practically every case, of course, the officer resisted; but by the persistence of the committee, which reported to a permanent subcommittee of Council,—I cannot recall the exact amount they saved to the country, but I know it ran into the millions, although there was no penury applied to the publication work of the government. I hope it is the intention of the Government to continue that committee, because if the work is abandoned it will not be long until all these publication items start to rise in amount.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I understand that this committee examines the printing in all departments, so that it would not affect only this vote. It would be a matter of the importance or necessity of the publications issued.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might, perhaps, answer the leader of the Opposition on that point. It is true, as my right hon. friend has said, that this committee has been revising the different publications. It is also true that two members of the committee are chosen from other departments to carry on these duties in addition to their regular work. They have represented to the Government quite recently that there should be some extra consideration in view of that additional service. If the work of the committee is as important as my right hon. friend indicates, probably the members of it might well give their entire time to those duties rather than be withdrawn from their work in other departments. The Government has thought it wise to look into the work of the Editorial Committee when the present session is over, along with the work of some other officials of the Government. In the meantime, the committee will continue.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My comment on the Prime Minister's statement is this. The difficult part of the Editorial Committee's work is done. The continuance from now on will not take anything like the amount of their time that the initial part took, as one can easily understand. This committee, consisting of Mr. Cook, Mr. Lynch and Mr. O'Hara, had to acquaint themselves with the details of the publications of every department of the government. They were able to do that and carry on their work as well; and they did their work very thoroughly. While, of course, there is no objection to the work being looked into I want to say right here that there is a lot more that might be looked into with better advantage than the work of the Editorial Committee. What I am anxious about is that it be continued. I do not think it is necessary to get men to give all their time to it. These men are capable of doing it and performing their other services as well. I am not in favour of additional remuneration to servants of the Crown, but if ever there was a case in which additional remuneration could be justified it is this one. I am not making any statement as to whether they should be allowed something or not for what they did. The great body of the work, the difficult part of it, is done. Speaking generally, though, as a principle, I think that servants of the Crown should be paid a salary and be expected to give all their time, for that salary, in whatever sphere the Government directs them to act.

[Mr. Charles Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think on examination I can recommend a reduction in that $40,000 of $8,000. I move that the item be reduced by that sum.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GARDINER: Is any investigation being made into the tar sands of Alberta? What has been done in the past, and with what result?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Mr. Ells has been employed by the department and for a number of years has carried on investigational work there. There is a great deal of investigational work done outside the purview of the Government in the matter of the development of tar sand, but Mr. Ells is the special investigating officer of the Government. There is a full report published by him on his work there.

Item as amended agreed to.

Dominion of Canada Assay Office—for maintenance of Assay Office, Vancouver, B.C., $26,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What are the receipts from this office?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We have not the exact information before us, but I am informed there are about $4,000,000 annually.

Item agreed to.

Geological Survey, $332,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In connection with the surveys, I addressed myself, shortly before leaving the department, to the question as to whether or not the survey work of the Government as conducted in many departments, in the Interior Department, in the Mines Department, in the Indian Lands, and, as well, in the Militia Department, could not be brought together under one branch of one department and thereby a considerable saving be made. I had a committee at work on it when I left. Has the minister given any attention to that question?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The same question was raised by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) the other night, but I did not have the information then. The committee to which my hon. friend refers consists of the following gentlemen: for the Department of Interior, Dr. Deville and Mr. Thomas Shanks, assistant surveyor general; for the Militia Department, Major J. B. Cochrane and Colonel S. H. Osler, and for the Mines Department Dr. W. H. Collins and Mr. W. H. Boyd, chief topographical engineer. The work of this committee is to see that there is no overlapping in connection with examination, and to provide for the preparation of maps, in regard to which, again, they see that there is no overlapping. The board has authority to advise on all questions that may arise in relation to topographical surveys, outline maps, modes of projection and selection, unification and improvement of scales, uniformity of symbols and conventional signs, the use of colours, and other topographical subjects.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would my observations on the previous vote for publications not equally apply here? I refer to the item of $60,000. There has been a reduction of $5,000, and it occurred to me that a larger one could be made. What was the amount spent last year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There was spent last year $42,409.78, and we have made a reduction of $5,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It should be $15,000.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is cutting it rather close, in view of the fact that the amount has been subject to careful supervision by the committee in charge.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is nothing that went up faster in price, and should come down faster, than the preparation of maps.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I can assure the committee that I have no desire to have more money than is necessary. However, I move that we cut the appropriation by $10,000 which, with the $5,000 already deducted, makes a reduction of $15,000.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was done last year in respect of the purchase of specimens, and is anything special contemplated this year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Does my hon. friend mean museum specimens?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, geological specimens.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am informed that last year the purchases consisted of specimens of birds and minerals. I think they formed the largest items of the purchases that were made.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What I had in mind was whether the department was securing any of the dinosaurs that have been found in Alberta. I would hardly think the department would get them at the prices they paid last year. Is any effort being made to secure one of the largest of these specimens for our own museum?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I understand there are specimens in the museum already.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Some of the largest specimens?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): So I understand.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Comparable with the largest that have been found, one of those tremendous specimens we have been hearing so much about lately?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I was in the museum last Saturday and there are some fairly large specimens set up there. I do not know whether there are any larger ones in existence or not.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, $3,000.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This vote has been in existence for as far back as I have made examination.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is the amount the same?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is the same as last year. It is intended to defray the cost of the publications of the Institute, and in general to meet the expense incurred by the Institute in promoting the interest and general welfare of mining in the Dominion.

Item agreed to.

Grant to Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau. $7,300.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I wonder if the minister would mind explaining in a word or two just what the functions of the Imperial Resources Bureau are?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The functions of the bureau as stated are:

(1) To collect, co-ordinate, and disseminate information as to resources, production, treatment, consumption and requirements of every mineral and metal.

(2) To ascertain the scope of existing agencies, with a view ultimately, to avoid any unnecessary overlapping that may prevail.

(3) To devise means whereby existing agencies can if necessary, be assisted and improved in the accomplishment of their respective tasks.

(4) To supplement those agencies if necessary, in order to obtain information not now collected which may be required for the purposes of the bureau.

(5) To advise on the development of the mineral resources of the Empire, or of particular parts thereof, in order that such resources may be made available for the purposes of imperial defence or industry or commerce.

The Imperial government contribute £10,000; the Dominion of Canada £2,500; the Commonwealth of Australia £2,000; India £2,000; New Zealand £1,000; Newfoundland £250; the Crown Colonies and Protectorates also make contributions. The total amount voted is £20,000. This year the vote has been reduced by £1,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When was this vote first made?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In 1917.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There must have been some reason for reducing the estimates; what was it?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): One reason is that I think a great deal of this work has been done. There is an annual convention and the British government reduced their vote—I am not sure whether it was this year or last year but they reduced their vote at all events. I felt that we could probably get along with a reduction of £1,000 in our vote. We will be represented at the convention and it would appear that we could make this reduction without impairing the efficiency of the organization or creating any difficulty.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is the bureau of any advantage?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am told it is, I cannot speak authoritatively about the matter.

Mr. CHURCH: What value have you derived from this expenditure? The minister seems to have lots of money for these bureaux and also for the museum and for mummies in glass cases in museums, but he seems to have no money for the militia?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Department of Militia is not under my control, and therefore I cannot discuss it. I see no reason why the meeting of these experts and the information derived therefrom should not be of value to the various dominions of the Empire. I cannot speak with any great authority with respect to it, but it would appear to me that annual meetings of this character would have considerable value.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the vote is entirely justified. The purpose is not so much for the meeting as to make known in all the different parts of the Empire the resources of the other parts, in what form they are found, what is done with them within those dominions, in order that those minerals which may be the property of one dominion may be known to the other where in many cases they are not found at all and in order that trade may be thus secured and developed through the various dominions and a market found for the minerals of each. Canada, I think, shares in the benefit, proportionately to the money she spends, because she is more of a mineral country, with the exception, perhaps, of South Africa, than any one of the other dominions. Great Britain, for example, is supporting this Mineral Resources Bureau to the extent of the sum the minister mentioned, but Canada, proportionately, is much more a mineral country than Great Britain, and gains, I think, more proportionately than the amount she subscribes. I think the reduction is right, because the work of the Mineral Resources Bureau is, of course, mostly done when it is thoroughly established; from that time on it would take very much less money.

Amherst Drill Hall, grading etc.. ..	$ 5,000
Baddeck, Public Buildings—alterations to Post Office fittings..	1,000
Halifax, quarantine station, repairs and improvements..	11,000
North Sydney quarantine station—alterations and repairs..	2,600
Total..	$19,600

Mr HANSON: Will the hon. minister explain the first item in this resolution, $5,000 for grading.

Hon. J. H. KING (Kootenay, Minister of Public Works): This amount is required to complete the water-proofing, facing of the walls and construction of stone foundation and undergrading. Part of the work has already been contracted for. The amount required for completion of the contract is $3,219; for drainage and driveway, $1,300 and contingencies $481.

Mr. HANSON: Is that a new drill hall at Amherst?

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the contract for this work? When the Prime Minister was leader of the Opposition he very much objected to this item, gave an abundance of reasons why it should not go on and kept us discussing it for a long time.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract was entered into last year, I think.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Surely the deputy minister could tell us when the contract was entered into.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): November 1921.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is the work now going on?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Or is the contract let without the work going on?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Part of the contract has been completed. This is for payment when the work is complete.

Mr. CHURCH: Does the minister know whether the Government has made up its mind to discontinue drill halls or not?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no provision in this vote for a new drill hall. It is to maintain and carry out a contract.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Could the minister tell us how much has been spent to the end of the fiscal year? The vote was $25,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $3,400 have been expended on the contract.

Mr. HARRIS: We are told that last year $25,000 was voted. How much of that was spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $3,400 odd.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That was till the end of last month.

Mr. McDONALD: Is this conversation carried on for the edification of two gentlemen across the table?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am sure the hon. gentleman has heard me all the time.

Mr. McDONALD: I cannot hear the minister and cannot hear the others.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Was there any money spent in the calendar year, up to the end of the year 1921?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, $3,400.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thought the hon. gentleman said it was spent up to the end of last month, the fiscal year; I mean to the end of December—the calendar year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract was let in November.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Was anything gone on with?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am advised they spent that amount before the end of the calendar year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And nothing was spent between the end of the calendar year and the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I understand not during the winter season.

Mr. MEIGHEN: December is the winter season too.

Item agreed to.

St. John quarantine station, Partridge Island, repairs and improvement ..	$35,000
Sussex, public buildings—improvements..	6,500
Tracadie Lazaretto—repairs and improvements..	7,000

Mr. HANSON: I regret very much to see that there is nothing in the estimates this year for the building of a post office and public buildings at the town of Edmundston in the county of Madawaska, represented by my friend who is not present to-night. That is the one town in Madawaska which, I am glad to say, is going ahead by leaps and bounds. I understand the post office quarters there are so inadequate that the banks and institutions who have money coming into the town, are obliged to bring it in a certain way, in order that it may not be necessary to leave it in the post office over night. In other words, the public service there in regard to postal facilities is wholly inadequate. The customs house is in another place, and, from my own observation, I can say is wholly inadequate for the business carried on there. The immigration service is in another part of the town, and that, too, is inadequate. If there is one place in the maritime provinces, at all events, that is crying for a proper Dominion building in order to carry on the public service in a proper manner that place is the town of Edmundston. While I quite appreciate that this is a very bad year in which to ask for any expenditure of that character, I might point out to the minister, as he probably already knows, that, at that point, there is great need for improvement in the public services to which I have referred. Money was found by the late government to pay its share of the cost of an international bridge. That bridge is about completed, and it will supply a great need to the community. This Parliament and the Government owe to the business people of that community, where one of the largest industries in the province is located a duty, to supply post office facilities, and I would ask the minister if he would be good enough to give this matter his consideration between now and the time that the supplementary estimates are brought down, in order to see if he cannot find enough money to make a start, at least, by the purchase of a lot on which to build a new post office in the town of Edmundston.

Mr. GRIMMER: While supporting the proposition of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) in regard to post office and customs facilities at Edmundston, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King) and the Government to the fact that, in the town of St. George in the county of Charlotte, a post office was promised prior to the war. The people in that town have been perfectly willing to stand back and wait patiently until the Government were in a position to build a post office and customs office. I understand the department went so far as to look at lots and to purchase one; but owing to the war the people of the thriving town of St. George, in which are situated the granite quarries of the province of New Brunswick, were willing to wait until the war was over and the Government were in a position to grant their request. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works and the Government to the fact that the war is now over, that the people have waited patiently, and that the time has, I think, now arrived when the Government should undertake the building of a post office and customs office in the town of St. George, Charlotte. I hope the Government will give this matter their early consideration.

Mr. MacLAREN: I wish to support the remarks of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) in regard to the need of better post office facilities in the town of Edmundston. I am quite satisfied that the need is an urgent one, and I, therefore, urge upon the minister that the suggestion that a new post office be erected at Edmundston receive his serious consideration.

Would the minister give the committee some further particulars as to what he proposes to do in the way of improvement to the quarantine station at St. John? Does he propose to extend and enlarge the buildings?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As regards the suggestion from hon. members in connection with post office requirements in the town of Edmundston, N.B., and also in the town of St. George in the county of Charlotte, I may say that representations have been made regarding these post offices, and they are receiving and will receive careful consideration.

9 p.m.

As regards the appropriation for the quarantine station at St. John, the amount of $35,000 is required to complete the construction of power, disinfecting and bath-house under construction, $25,000; general repairs and improvements, and towards construction of a new third class detention shed or building, $7,000; contingencies, $2,118.

Mr. MacLAREN: Can the minister inform the committee if the number of cases in the Lazaretto at Tracadie is diminishing, or is it about the same as it has been for the last ten or twelve years?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the information regarding the inmates of that institution, and that can be ascertained from the Health Department. This appropriation deals with improvements to the drainage and building, some painting and general improvements, amounting in all to some $7,000.

Mr. HANSON: This statement that the matter will receive consideration is a stock phrase that does not carry us anywhere, and I should like to know what hope is held out in regard to post office facilities at Edmundston. I am very serious about this matter. It is not in my constituency, and the constituency is one that I do not suppose, in the memory of living man, has ever been represented by a Tory or ever will be. But I happen to have business friends in that constituency who are interested in the matter, and they have asked me to supplement what should have been said to-night by the hon. member for Restigouche and Madawaska (Mr. Michaud), who, I have no doubt, is better engaged. There is a real need in that town for improved postal facilities, and things cannot be permitted to run along as they are or, perhaps, some night there will be a very severe loss to the Government and to the public by reason of the wholly inadequate facilities for safeguarding His Majesty's mails.

Mr. CALDWELL: I should like to support the hon. member for York-Sunbury in his claim for better post office facilities at Edmundston. I know something of conditions there, and I would not want the minister to rest on the fact that a post office which was good enough five years ago is good enough now, because no town has developed as rapidly as Edmundston, on account of the fact that a pulp and paper mill has been established there in recent years and the population has increased to a greater degree than can be accounted for by the natural increase in population. The town is getting to be an important centre; a large amount of business is done there and I should like to add my support to the hon. member for York-Sunbury in his request for consideration of this matter.

Mr. HANSON: We should have a statement from the minister that the department either is or is not going to do anything in the matter this year. We should have some declaration of policy.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As regards the post office at Edmundston, I believe statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite have been confirmed by information in the department, and it is true that there is a crying need for improved post office and custom facilities at that point. The matter is receiving serious and careful consideration.

Mr. ANDERSON: I have heard the criticism that sanitary conditions are very poor at the quarantine stations at Halifax and St. John. Has the minister any information on the subject?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Alterations have been made this year, and alterations that will be made during the coming year will do much to improve the sanitary conditions in both of these institutions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister advise me how much was spent last year out of this New Brunswick vote of $93,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $65,562 was spent on the quarantine station at St. John.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If $65,000 odd was spent out of $75,000 odd, how could there be a re-vote of $35,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A sum of $46,000 was transferred from the militia demobilization vote of last year, which no doubt the right hon. gentleman is familiar with.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister does not answer the question. What was spent out of the demobilization vote is not money spent out of the $93,000. I asked the minister what was spent out of that $93,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Out of the public works estimates last year $65,000 was expended on the quarantine station.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That could not possibly be.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Of that sum $46,000 was from the demobilization vote; $1,500 was spent at Sussex. The total expenditure was $66,000 odd, and $20,000 was allowed to lapse.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am sure no member of the committee is any the wiser since the minister got up, for, in the first place, very few could hear him, and. in the second place, those who did would not be enlightened. Here is a vote of $93,000 that was passed last year for New Brunswick and divided under three heads. So much money was spent and charged against that vote. There may have been some more money spent on St. John and charged against the demobilization vote, of course, but we are not asking about that at all. Now, the minister is not listening, and I will get just the same answer next time. It means nothing. I have asked three times, and now this is the fourth time: How much was spent and charged against that $93,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The total expenditure last year out of the $93,000 was $65,552 on the quarantine station at St. John, and $1,500 on the public building at Sussex.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister not understand me? There could not have been $65,000 spent out of this vote on the quarantine station, because the minister this year asks to have re-voted $35,000 of the $75,000 allotted last year. How could you re-vote $35,000 out of $75,000 if you had already spent $65,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The appropriation in the public works estimates for 1921-22 was $75,000 for the quarantine station, and $65,552, I believe, was expended at that time. I am told that, in addition to that expenditure, $46,000 was transferred from the militia department demobilization appropriation. $58,688 was expended on the contract for disinfecting houses, and $6,864 on repairs, making a total of $65,552.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much was transferred from demobilization?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $46,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Besides?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. Those two items total $65,552, leaving $20,000 that lapsed, thus requiring this time a re-vote of $35,000 to complete the contract at that point.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hope this is not my fault and that I do not appear to be unduly harrassing the minister, but really what he says is the result of wrong information or else he is misstating it. He says that $65,552 was spent on the quarantine station, and that besides $46,000 odd was spent upon it from the demobilization appropriation. Surely the minister follows me? Let him forget about this demobilization. We will deal with that amount when we come to the demobilization vote. How much money was taken and charged against that $75,000 for the quarantine station? Now, if the minister intended to say that of the $65,552 spent on the quarantine station, $46,000 odd was from the demobilization vote, then it follows that only $19,000 was spent on the quarantine station and charged against the $75,000. Is that right? If $19,000 odd was charged against that $75,000, then it is quite natural that the minister should only want $35,000 more. It may be that he intends to spend only that amount, and that the whole $35,000 is a re-vote. That is understandable. But let him say exactly what was spent and charged against that $75,000. Was it $65,552, less the demobilization amount of $46,000? If so, that is $19,000 odd. I hope the minister follows me. It is perfectly clear in my mind, and I am sure it is so in the minds of other members of the committee.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Does the right hon. gentleman want to know the amount of money that came from each vote?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I want the amount charged against the $75,000 vote of last year; the amount charged against the $5,000, and the amount charged against the $13,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $40,000 was charged against the $75,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And actually spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Actually spent. $25,000 was charged against the $46,000, demobilization.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We will get to demobilization when we reach it. The first part of the minister's answer is understandable: that $40,000 was spent out of the $75,000. Now then, may I ask what was spent out of the $5,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The $5,000 was not spent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much was spent of the $13,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That amount was not required and not expended.

Mr. MEIGHEN: So that the total amount spent last year out of the whole $93,000 was $40,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, I congratulate the minister that we have reached it at last. The amount asked this year is $48,500, or $8,500 more than was spent last year.

Mr. MICHAUD: While I was out of the House on duty from 8 to 8.30, the question of the post office building at Edmundston, New Brunswick, came up. I may say that a delegation came from Edmundston to Ottawa and made representations with regard to this matter, to the Minister of Public Works, the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Copp). I have watched this question very closely, and I am much obliged to the hon. members from New Brunswick who, in my absence, brought the matter up. There is not a town in Canada which needs a public building more than Edmundston does. I am not going into the reasons, but this town, the population of which is about 5,000, has contributed to the treasury of Canada about $1,000,000 during the last fifteen years. We were glad to do it and will continue to do it, but I think we are entitled to our share, in view of that large contribution. The present post office accommodation there is very small and does not meet the requirements of the public. I am sure the minister did not forget me when remarks on this subject were made not very long ago by my hon. friends from New Brunswick. He is aware of the efforts I have made in this direction; I hope that after I have resumed my seat he will express to the committee what I have endeavoured to do in connection with the matter.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The expenditure proposed for New Brunswick is $48,500. For the sake of comparison, take item 144, already passed, for Nova Scotia. Am I right in saying that the only expenditure under item 144 for last year was the single expenditure the minister has mentioned, $3,600 on the Amherst building?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the information as to the full amount expended last year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister gave it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I gave the expenditures on the contracts we were proceeding with.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Evidently there was nothing voted but the four items in No. 144 that appear here. Was the total expenditure $3,600?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Out of the item of $25,000, shown in No. 144, some $3,400 or $3,500 was expended. That was all out of that vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And this year, out of the same vote, you propose to spend $19,600?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Before this vote carries will the minister not give the member for Restigouche and Madawaska (Mr. Michaud) the certificate of character he asked for in the plea he made a moment ago? And if he will not answer me on the point, will he not be good enough to tell us what he has to say in reply to the hon member's representations?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The hon. member for Restigouche is well able to take care of himself. He has made very clear and concise representation regarding the necessity for public buildings in the town of Edmundston, and I have no objection to informing him that the matter is receiving the careful consideration of the department.

Mr. MICHAUD: My hon. friend (Mr. Hanson) appears to be very much interested in my behalf. I do not represent as large a constituency as his, with great public buildings, but I can assure him that we are making rapid strides, and although I do not want to make any rash predictions, I think in the near future we shall have substantial buildings in the northern part of New Brunswick.

Mr. HANSON: Are my hon. friend's optimistic remarks based on any promise from the minister?

Mr. MICHAUD: I can assure you the promises are to my own satisfaction for the moment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What are they?

Item agreed to.

Maritime provinces generally—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $38,000.

Mr. HANSON: There is an increase in this item of $13,000. How is it accounted for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the estimates this year Dominion public puildings, improvements and repairs are carried as one vote. Last year there was a special item for the city of Halifax, the city of St. John, and probably the larger city in the island. This year, under the advice of the chief architect, these are being carried as a separate vote. Last year there was a sum of $25,000 for improvements, etc., in the maritime provinces generally, $13,000 for Halifax, and $7,000 for St. John, or a total of $45,000. The vote this year is $38,000, and as it includes the whole of the provinces with the cities there is a decrease of $7,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not follow that.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Last year there was just one bulk vote of $25,000 and this year the vote is $38,000, which is an actual increase of $13,000. What does the increase represent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not last year's estimates, but my hon. friend will find that for the maritime provinces generally there was $25,000, for Halifax Dominion buildings, $13,000, and for St. John $7,000, a total of $45,000 as against $38,000 this year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have last year's estimates here and the minister is wrongly informed. Item 131 in last year's estimates asked for $25,000, just exactly the same as the year before that again.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What does it include?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is worded just the same as the item here, "Dominion public builds—improvements, repairs, etc." and the amount is $25,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If my hon. friend will now turn to the item for the city of Halifax and the city of St. John he will find just what I have stated, $13,000 for Halifax, $7,000 for St. John. This year the amount for these cities is included in this $38,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: These are under another vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what the minister says. He has already taken credit for that reduction and he cannot get credit for it again. He cannot claim to have made a reduction above and seek credit for it again.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think I have made this matter plain to the committee. We are consolidating three votes this year, whereas last year we had $25,000 in one estimate for Dominion public buildings in the maritime provinces, in another portion of the estimates we had a sum for Halifax, and elsewhere a sum for St. John, making a total expenditure of $45,000. This year Halifax and St. John are included in the one vote of $38,000.

Mr. CHURCH: What is the principle on which this money is spent? I suppose the minister has some information in regard to this increase of $13,000. Now, some of the Government buildings in the maritime provinces are new and others are in a state of disrepair, and it is a poor policy for the Government to keep its buildings in such a state. This is a large item to pass without some details, with which the minister should make himself familiar. What are the buildings that are to be repaired; what is the principle on which the repairs are made; does the local engineer of the Public Works Department go over the buildings every year and see what work is necessary to be done: and what generally is the plan followed in regard to this work? The minister might give us some information on these points. Are tenders called for and does the department furnish the supplies, or is the work done by day labour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As I have already stated, there is no increase. As a matter of fact there is a decrease. This expenditure is for general repairs and maintenance of Dominion buildings in the maritime provinces. These buildings are reported upon from time to time by the representatives of the Government in these localities. Either the engineering or the architectural branch reports upon them and the work of maintenance is carried on. The definite amount that will be expended on each building is not stated, because that must develop as the season's work proceeds.

Mr. HANSON: Has there been a return to the patronage system in the minister's department in that part of the country? I believe that on the 6th December last the gentleman who did me the honour of opposing me in that election sent out a series of letters to parties in the city of Fredericton to the effect that the work in connection with the public buildings there would go to Mr. So-and-So, to this man and the other. I would like to know if that was done under the authority of the department, or if he did that off his own bat? I would also like to know who is the officer in charge of these public buildings in New Brunswick at the present time? Has Mr. Waterbury been retired, and if so has his superannuation arrangement been made; also who has succeeded him, and if no one has been appointed to the position who is acting as district architect down there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In answer to the hon. gentleman I may say that Mr. Waterbury is retiring and Mr. Chambers is acting for the present. There has been no appointment made as yet.

Mr. MICHAUD: Has my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) any recommendation to make as to who should be appointed?

Mr. HANSON: Yes, if the minister will do me the honour of asking me I will be very glad to give him the name of a very competent man.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would like to inquire what amounts were actually expended for this purpose upon public buildings in the cities of Halifax and St. John last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the case of the Dominion buildings in Halifax the following expenditures were made up to 19th April, 1922:

Bedford Row Dom. Analyst. ..	$ 346 29
Custom House..	2,117 48
Post Office..	2,069 52
Bellevue Hospital..	2,946 92
Generally..	210 13
Rockhead Hospital..	135 10
	$7,825 44

In the case of the Dominion buildings in the city of St. John the expenditures to 27th April, 1922, were these:

Customs House	$2,403 37
Old Customs House	1,425 71
Savings Bank	588 02
New Post Office	2,629 70
St. John West P.O.	86 95
Old Penitentiary	39 05
Creaghan Building	4 50
Total	$7,177 30

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know now what the minister has sought to convey. It amounts to this, that whereas last year a certain amount was voted in respect to public buildings in Halifax and another item in respect to public buildings in St. John, this year, instead of having those items appear separately, the minister is adding them to the present vote. The former item appeared last year as one of the $195,500 appropriations not required as regards Nova Scotia and in the $13,000 appropriations not required for New Brunswick.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not required for this year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not required for this year. That is the way the appropriations of last year that are not required appeared. So the minister, after admitting he is asking for more than was spent, takes the credit for that lopping off. What I want to call attention to is this: Why has the minister made this change in the allocation? It just means that whereas last year we knew where some money was going, this year we know nothing about it. I call this particularly to the attention of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Caldwell). It is making still worse the habit of gathering within one miscellaneous item various details that formerly appeared—and that ought, if possible, at all, to appear—one by one under the appropriate designation. Why has the minister made a change? Is it merely so that the minister—judging his course by the exigencies of the hour, and perhaps by the complexion of the locality—will be able to distribute his money where he thinks it will do the most good?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): These expenditures are made for maintenance and repairs, conditions that are unforeseen, and the chief accountant of the department has advised that these votes be consolidated. There is no great advantage in setting out an expenditure of $15,000 for Halifax any more than to set out a vote of, say, $30,000 for the province of Nova Scotia when the details are not now known. They will be known next session, however, and can be given to the House at that time. I cannot see any objection to consolidating the votes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Apparently not. I made the correct guess all right.

Mr. LOVETT: Before the item is passed I would like to direct the attention of the minister to the inadequate accommodation provided for post office purposes in the town of Bridgetown in the county of Annapolis which I have the honour to represent. That accommodation is so limited that the citizens are compelled to stand out on the sidewalk while the mail is being separated and distributed. The people there feel that they have been patient in putting up with this drawback and now that the war is over are anxious to have better accommodation provided. I direct the attention of the minister to this matter, and ask his favourable consideration towards placing in the supplementary estimates an amount sufficient to provide a creditable post office for the town.

Item agreed to.

Quebec—Dominion Public Buildings, improvements, repairs, etc., $80,000.
Grosse Isle Quarantine Station—repairs, $10,000.
Montreal—Ordnance Stores Buildings, $27,200.
Quebec Post Office—Party wall, $10,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much of last year's vote was spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In round figures $55,000.

Mr. CHURCH: There is an item of $10,000 to provide a "party wall" in Quebec. Have you not sufficient seats in Quebec now without erecting a party wall to hold them?

Item agreed to.

Public Buildings, $349,200

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much of the appropriation was spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $707,000 odd.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Could the hon. gentleman tell us how that was divided?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not that information.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The total amount of the vote last year was some thing over a million dollars, and a line at the bottom says "Appropriations not required for 1922-23, $707,000 odd." Now the minister says some $707,000 was spent.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That amount was used last year and was not required this year.

Mr. CHURCH: There are a number of post offices in Ontario in need of repairs. The returns from the Toronto post office are nearly $5,000,000 which is almost double the returns from Montreal. The main post office in Toronto to-day cannot handle the business, and the public have been greatly inconvenienced. A statement of that fact has been made to the minister on several occasions. The business of that post office is almost as large as that of Montreal and Winnipeg combined. The Government should do something to relieve the situation. Toronto people are busy and they cannot do their business properly at the present time. A new custom house is also needed. I might refer also to the city of Hamilton, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mewburn) representing that city is present to-night and can deal with that. When we are voting large sums of money for the various post offices throughout Canada, Quebec, Manitoba, or any place else, I think these post offices I speak of should be put in a proper state of repair, so that the public will not be inconvenienced. In order to operate a post office or a custom house properly, you require a proper plant. The Hamilton post office handles a large volume of business. I have a table here showing the business done in the various cities and towns throughout the country, but I will not read it to-night. Certainly, more money should be spent on the larger post offices and custom houses throughout the province of Ontario because they are in a bad state of repair and can not handle the business. Business men are complaining, but matters remain as they are and nothing is being done. The minister's deputies have been in Toronto post office and know the situation. If the business is to be handled properly, there must be some change. I wrote the minister in regard to the congestion in the temporary Toronto customs house, where people who are doing business have to waste a great deal of their time standing in line. The Government have a rented custom building in Toronto, and if they keep on the way they are going, they will have a tent next for their custom house. Surely the Government should take up this matter. The sum of $707,000 was appropriated last year for Ontario buildings, and reports were made in regard to necessary repairs throughout Ontario; the money was available but, for some reason or other, it has not been spent. The Toronto post office and custom house come under this item for repairs. I should like to hear what the minister proposes to do regarding the post offices of Toronto, Hamilton and other places where at present they cannot possibly handle the volume of business. The table I have before me shows they are making money out of these offices.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Mr. MEWBURN: I am glad to know that the suburb of Hamilton still has a friend, as far as the post office is concerned. I notice the very extravagant figure of $2,000 has been placed in the estimates for repairs to the Hamilton post office. I trust that amount will be spent at an early date, because, goodness knows, it is needed badly enough. Has the Government considered what action they are going to take in Hamilton regarding the new building they intended to erect, which was to include both customs house and post office? The Government to-day are leasing properties in the city of Hamilton for which they are paying large rentals. I think the money they are paying for rentals would help pay the interest on the cost of construction on a building there which is badly needed. There are rumours around Hamilton that the Government is contemplating selling the piece of land on which it was proposed to build the customs house and post office.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I may advise my hon. friend, in regard to public buildings in Toronto and Hamilton, that the policy of the Government will be to maintain those buildings as best they can at the present time. The matter has received serious consideration. I think there has been a suggestion made in the department that there should be some exchange of property in Hamilton. That matter has not yet been very seriously considered.

Mr. MEWBURN: How could there be any exchange? Not for any other Government property surely?

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the minister's policy on the matter of revotes? A few years ago a sum was voted by Parliament for the very much needed repairs to the St. Catharines post office. It was carried a second year as a revote, but has been dropped now. Can the minister not go back and revote the amount proposed to be expended several years ago? If the engineers in the department thought it was necessary three years ago to put an item in for repairs on the building, what must be thought of the proposition now?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The fact that a vote has lapsed does not necessarily mean that it will be revoted the next year. I would not like to be held accountable for the many votes that have been lapsed throughout Canada.

Mr. CHURCH: What does the Government propose to do, to take care of the increased volume of business in the Toronto post office? If the minister does not know, he can ascertain from his deputy. The same question applies to the customs house. The Government has bought a large lot of land for the new custom house. The customs receipts of that port are very considerable. The Government has a vacant lot, and has rented a temporary customs building, and perhaps they will have the customs building eerected on that lot. Surely the minister can tell the committee what they propose to do to handle the business, which has been increasing 15 to 20 per cent each year. They have the same equipment now that they had years ago and it is very poor. The Government should have one policy for the whole of Canada and I am not asking anything for Toronto that other municipalities should not get. The minister has the reports of his deputy, and I think the committee should be informed as to what is to be done to provide increased facilities to handle the post office business.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Improved facilities have been provided in Toronto recently, and a new postal station, and, I believe, new equipment has been provided at the Union station. I should be very glad to see the business increase in Toronto, and when it does we will, as in the past, provide further facilities. It is not proposed to make any further capital expenditure this year.

Mr. MEWBURN: In answer to the question I asked the minister about the Hamilton post office, I understood him to say that the department was considering the question of exchange or sale of a portion of the property on which it was proposed to build an extension. Would the minister be willing to bring down the papers in connection with that, because the matter is one of vital interest to the citizens of Hamilton?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a suggestion that has been made, probably newspaper talk; but no consideration has been given to the matter by the department, and I am not sure whether there are any papers in connection with the matter in the department.

An hon. MEMBER: There must be some papers in connection with it.

Mr. ELLIOTT (South Waterloo): I should like to call the attention of the committee to the condition of affairs in the post office in the city of Galt. This post office was built many years ago when Galt was but a town; it has grown to be a city now, and the post office facilities are quite inadequate for present conditions. On some occasions when a large quantity of mail is received, some of the mail has to be dumped outside, because accommodation inside the post office is not nearly adequate for existing conditions. I understand that last year an appropriation of $15,000 was made for the building of an extension to the post office in the city of Galt. Is an addition to the present post office still in contemplation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I believe that was for an addition to the present building, but the work was not gone on with last year.

Mr. ANDERSON: I should like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that we have also a town in the county of Halton, where an appropriation was made early in 1914 for the building of a new post office. A site was purchased, and it still remains without a building having been erected on it. The minister can find in his department a good deal of correspondence in regard to this post office. The one that is there at the present time is not a post office, but simply a store. The place has grown from a village with a population of 1,000, to a town of over 2,000 population. It was incorporated last year; the surrounding country is developing very much, and the consequence is that the present post office is very inadequate. Would the minister look up the correspondence and inquire into the matter a little further in order to see if, now that the war is over, the appropriation can be made and the post office built?

Mr. ELLIOTT (South Waterloo): Is the appropriation for the Galt post office still extant?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It has lapsed.

Mr. ELLIOTT (South Waterloo): I might say further, in this connection, that in the city of Galt we have a large rural centre which further aggravates the situation. I think the Government and the minister would be well advised to take into consideration the enlargement of the present building, or the sale of the present building and the erection of a new one which would accommodate the customs as well as the post office. Under present conditions, the customs is in a separate building and this entails quite a rental every year, the expenditure, as a rule, being very largely increased on this account. It would be well if the minister would look into this question and give the city of Galt proper consideration in the way of postal facilities.

Mr. McKENZIE: I quite agree with hon. gentlemen that it is highly important that we should have proper customs houses and post offices, and that the country generally should receive necessary accommodation in public matters of that character. I am rather startled, however, at the general hue and cry which comes to us to-night from the great province of Ontario. I have been sitting in this House for the last ten good, long years of Tory rule, with my good friends from Ontario, who, with a few exceptions, are here to-night, sitting behind the then Prime Minister, the then Minister of Public Works and the then Postmaster General, and I cannot recall any complaints whatever about accommodations that were handed out to the people of Ontario. They may have been in the secrets of this chamber with the then Prime Minister; but I invite him to search the pages of Hansard when the estimates of his ministers were going through, to find any complaints, for instance, from hon. members for Toronto. It is true that the people of that city had but third or fourth or fifth-rate men compared with what they have been sending us lately; but nevertheless those men thought that they were doing the best they could, and yet we heard nothing about the post office. I believe Toronto was on the map during the last ten or fifteen years; at all events, it was on the map while the hon. gentleman (Mr. Church) who represents that city, was mayor. He was on the map during those years; he is on the map now, and it is too bad if the city was so badly neglected that, to-day, when there is a change of government for only three or four months or less, the deplorable condition of things, which hon. members for Toronto present, and present truthfully, exists in that city. I am surprised that they should have put up with this, but they have put up with it until they are beginning really and thoroughly to understand that they are being neglected in the way that they are. I am sorry that the affairs of the province of Ontario, in Hamilton, in Galt, in Toronto itself and all around, have been so neglected; and I think it is only fair that I should mention that, if the government of the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) who now leads the Opposition, was such a good government as hon. gentlemen used to say it was, and if it was doing its duty to the people of Toronto in public matters, it is surprising that, after it has been out of power only for three or four months, conditions which have been put forward to-night should be found to exist. There is only one way in which that could have occurred. Ten years ago when the Laurier government went out of power, we had no such complaints. Although we had, in those days of the Laurier regime, a very vigorous opposition from Ontario, we heard very little about those things. I cannot recall any particular complaints; and for that reason and because that vigorous opposition did not find much fault, I can only explain the matter in one way, that a fair distribution of public money was being made and that public buildings were being kept in excellent repair. Ten years of the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite have passed by, and the condition we find is as it has been described. I would be sorry to think, for one moment, that hon. gentlemen would give a description of the condition in which that province is left other than what it is. If it is what they represent it to be, there is only one story, and that is that their friends, in whom they had such confidence and in whose hands they left the administration of this country and would have continued to leave it, have neglected them to the extent they have. It is hardly fair that the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. King), who is here but a few weeks, who is a stranger to his department, who is making the most of the legacy that has been handed down to him by the outgoing Minister of Public Works of the Tory administration, should be catechised unduly. It is proper to ask questions; but it is hardly fair that with bell, book and candle he should be criticised and held responsible for conditions that have been handed down to him and that he has just begun to acquaint himself with.

10 p.m.

I am not trying to be critical of anyone, but I think it is only fair to point out to the committee and to the country that the present ministers who are getting along as best they can with these estimates are taking up the burden that was laid down but a few days ago by their predecessors in office, who of necessity were better acquainted with their departments than the present ministers can be expected to be after having been in control for only a few months. It is well to point out that such improvements are necessary, but I do not think that hon. gentlemen can afford to give themselves such airs and be so critical and fault-finding when they reflect for a moment that this is a legacy which they themselves have handed down to the present Government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Chairman, the committee could not help but lament while listening to the masterly speech of the Solicitor General that a gentleman of his talents should now be cribbed, cabined and confined within the comparatively inactive environment of the Solicitor General's office. It is too bad that a large department demanding the application of business talents is not under his charge.

I will try first to extract the point he intended to make and that perhaps somewhere is drowned in the deluge of his words. He says: If there is a dearth of public buildings in Ontario the fault is with the late government, and you should have made bitter complaints during the tenure of office of the late government, rather than address those complaints to the novice ears of the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. King), who really, so the Solicitor General intimates, knows nothing about the department. That apparently is the point the Solicitor General tries to make. Yes, there is a dearth of public buildings in Ontario, a dearth for which the late government holds itself coresponsible. But what the Solicitor General forgets and has too often forgotten in recent years is that the late government carried this country through a war, that the late government turned the energy of the nation into the war, that the late government devoted the resources of the country to the war, and that consequently public works throughout that period had to wait. We said to our members, and they accepted our words, that until we got through the war, and the after effects of the war, we could not go on with the construction of further public works unless imperatively necessary and we did not, as evidenced by the words of the Minister of Public Works to-night, as respecting one item after another, he tells us only a small amount was asked for of which only a trifling portion was spent. That is the actual fact, and members accordingly did not press unreasonably for public improvements. We had to go along with just as little expenditure on public works as possible, having in mind the major necessities of the nation, and that we did so is a matter for general congratulation. That was the position we took on the floor of Parliament, and hon. members and the country accepted our answer, because it was a good answer. That is the reason why these needs face us to-day. We have needs, it is true. We do not want to press any more than do hon. members for expenditure beyond the financial resources of the country. I do not think we should go on with large public expenditures—none except those which are quite unavoidable. But I cannot help recalling that though I went through province after province, and made no promise of public expenditure for the sake of getting a single vote, made, for example, in Prince Edward Island, near the minister's home, a frank statement that we would not claim to be able now to go on with the widening of the railway gauge in that island, I was followed by his leader, who criticised me from the stump throughout the Island because I failed to make a promise to spend millions of dollars on that enterprise. Possibly the recklessness of his leader's promises and intimations counts in some degree for a measure of the support that is found in his party in the House now; I do not doubt that it does; but upon their fulfilment depends what little there is left of the reputation of the Government, and there will be some penalty to pay in respect of their nonfulfilment, just as in recent days we have witnessed the penalty that the Government has had to pay in respect to other pledges that they have abandoned.

Mr. CHURCH: Perhaps the Solicitor General takes his politics and his religion too seriously. He is, I understand, a doctor; he is a D.D., anyway—I do not know whether a Doctor of Divinity or not. I think the hon. gentleman might be better employed in helping his young colleague to explain this item. I wish to give the Minister of Public Works every support, and it may be that he is not getting the support that he should receive. But the Solicitor General must understand that there are no politics in this so far as Toronto is concerned. I have already laid it down very clearly that what we want is a proper post office and custom house to efficiently take care of the great volume of business there. These public utilities should be considered from the commercial aspect only. Away back when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in power the then member for South Toronto, Mr. Claude Macdonell, year in and year out called the attention of the government of the day to the deplorable state of affairs of the Toronto post-office and customs house. The government tore down the old customs house, but no new accommodation has yet been provided. If they did not intend to build a new customs house, adequate to the present day needs of the city, why did they tear down the old building? I complained for seven years about these things to the late government. It is the duty of the government to give proper administration of the post-offices. There should be a reduction in the rate on drop letters. Although $5,000,000 is taken out of the pockets of the citizens of Toronto, they are still charged two cents for drop letters. The rate should go back to one cent for drop letters. It is not creditable to public ownership that the administration of our post-offices and customs houses either in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg or any other city should be so inadequaate that the public suffer through the lack of proper plant or service. Only a few days ago the Postmaster General of the United States said that the time had come when the public should be given the best accommodation in the shape of post-offices and customs houses. And the public are entitled to it. Why should the people have to line up at the customs house in Toronto or any other city to wait as long as seventy-five minutes before they get up to the wicket? Why should politics be brought into this matter? I would make the same complaint in regard to Montreal, or any other post-office in the minister's own riding. I may be a little unfair to the Minister of Public Works in asking him about post-offices and customs houses which are not under his department, but this is the only opportunity we get under the rules of the House to bring the matter up. When the Government derives $5,000,000 revenue from Toronto's post-office, they should certainly provide a proper plant for the accommodation of the public. Those who have to go to the customs house are losing thousands of dollars every day owing to the grossly inadequate accommodation. I do not care whether a Liberal government, a Conservative or even a U.F.O. government be in power, the people are entitled to proper post-office and customs house accommodation. I venture to say that a great deal more revenue would be derived from the Toronto post office if proper accommodation were provided, and from fifteen to twenty per cent more revenue would be received from a customs house in which the public could get proper service. Adequate accommodation should be provided, whether it be in Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver or any other of our cities. I hope during the recess the Minister of Public Works, the Postmaster General and the Minister of Finance will look into these things and give the people some relief. They have been clamouring for this for ten or twelve years, but nothing has been done. The Solicitor General would be better advised if he would preach fewer sermons and give us more information; there is plenty of time for sermons on Sunday. There is one minister on the treasury benches who is a pulpit orator and takes his turn on Sunday; the next to do that, I suppose, will be the hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. HARRIS: How is this $95,000 for improvements, repairs, etc., to be distributed through Ontario?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not able to give that information. It is to meet the requirements as they come up throughout the year.

Mr. HARRIS: In view of the fact that Toronto and suburbs have postal receipts equal to those of Montreal or any twenty other cities in Quebec, is it possible to say how much of the $95,000 will be devoted to the Toronto district?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; it will depend on the requirements of that district.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister's answer to me a few minutes ago with respect to that revote at St. Catharines was not, in my estimation, a very satisfactory one. Would he, when his estimates come up again, give us some information with regard to that revote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The Solicitor General twitted us with not having last year pressed the then government to make improvements in our respective counties. The Solicitor General himself was never backward in coming to the committee and pressing very hard for whatever was wanted by Nova Scotia.

Mr. McKENZIE: That is why I expected hon. members to have the courage of their convictions when they believed things were needed in Ontario, and to put their case before the House. When no such complaints were made, I had reason to suppose that everything was all right. But when it was a Tory government and there was Tory neglect, everything was regarded forgivingly and nothing was said. The ex-Prime Minister told us to-night that they could not spend any more money for these purposes. Up to the sixth of December, any requests for these things were met by the answer that all the money had been used and was being used for war and demobilization purposes, but what a tremendous change took place following the election! The first week in the House under the new administration that excuse was forgotten; it was no longer good. Well, if the lack of money on account of war expenditure was a good answer to these requests while the war was on and for the three years following the war, surely it ought to be an answer to be given by this Government, at least until it has an opportunity of settling the bills left unpaid and unprovided for by the late administration. These are the reasons I give for expecting hon. gentlemen to be reasonable in their criticism.

Mr. HANSON: I am sure we are glad to have the second instalment of the hon. gentleman's lecture. But I do not think the minister has been unfairly treated; he has asked for no quarter and has made no complaint. I know I have been courteous in my remarks, and I do not think the lecture of the hon. gentleman is called for. But I would say this in reply to his remarks: we are getting further from the war every day, and as the business of the post offices increases, as exemplified by Toronto, for instance, these necessities become more pressing. The situation in Edmundston is due to a large increase in the activities of the commercial life of the community, and it is absolutely necessary that postal facilities be provided there. It is for that reason, and not because there has been a change of administration, that gentlemen on this side are doing their duty in directing the minister's attention to these circumstances. There is no necessity, therefore, for the Solicitor General rising up in his righteousness and giving us a lecture on propriety.

Mr. CHURCH: At the last election the Liberal candidates in Toronto district promised a new post office and customs house for Toronto if their party was returned; the public were assured that they would not have to suffer long. I hope that during the recess a survey of the situation will be made; there have been a hundred surveys in the past fifteen years. I hope something will be done to do away with the condition under which the people have to transact their business owing to congestion. The custom work will be transacted next out on the sidewalk if it continues—because that is what it is coming to. The same state of affairs prevails in Hamilton; there is positive congestion, and I do not see how they get on with the business. I hope the Government will look into these things in the interests of efficiency and with a view of retaining the confidence of the people in these public services.

Mr. STEWART (Hamilton): I wish to say a few words in reply to the remarks of the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. McKenzie). I was somewhat surprised at the argument he put up to-night. If he lived in Hamilton as I do and saw the treatment which has been meted out to that city for the past few years, he would tell a different story. Some years ago the old buildings were torn down, two or three hundred thousand dollars spent on the purchase of land and an appropriation of $300,000 or $400,000 put in the estimates for a new post office building. In 1914 the war came on and the matter was allowed to stand. I do not blame the government for that; they had their hands full, and I do not think anybody could find fault with the way they acquitted themselves. But three years have passed since the conclusion of the war, and for the last six or seven years we in Hamilton have not received a cent of money for improvements of any kind. Hamilton has not been fairly treated, particularly in view of the revenue it produces, and I think it is about time we got some money for the buildings that we so badly need.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Last year the total vote under this item was $1,012,267. I understood the minister to say that the sum of $700,000, in round numbers, was spent last year. Is that correct?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The sum of $700,000 was either spent or lapsed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What proportion was spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the items.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is now drawing towards the hour of adjournment, and my leader, who has just gone out, is anxious to have this information before this item is carried. If the minister has not the details now perhaps he would be so good as to let the item stand and give us the information on another occasion.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): It seems to me that the discussion on this estimate is somewhat different from what we have been accustomed to in connection with all the various other estimates that have come before us. Usually we have been striving for economy, but to-night it seems that everybody wants a new post office or public building of some description. Some of us since coming to Ottawa have come to the conclusion that there is rather a surfeit of public buildings, and we have failed to understand the reason for this. How many public buildings are there in this city occupied by the Dominion government, and are they occupied to capacity? I should like particularly to have some information regarding the item for departmental buildings, fittings, etc., amounting to $75,000. I note that there is a reduction of $25,000, but on the next page I see an item of $700,000, which seems pretty much to cover the same thing. Is that an annual charge for depreciation against office fittings, etc.? The next question I would ask is as regards the Daly building. What is that building used for? I observe an increase in connection with it of $54,000. These things appear rather important to some of us as we go around the various departments, especially in view of the bombardment to which we are being subjected by the civil servants in regard to the bonus; and I at any rate have been forced to the conclusion that possibly the Civil Service has after all been overmanned. If it is overmanned is it not possible that the buildings provided for the service are also more than the actual necessity calls for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The $75,000 referred to is required for the purchase of metal file casings, shelving, and other things required in the departmental offices in Ottawa. There are five hundred drawer steel cabinets, at $45 apiece, amounting to $22,750; Supreme Court library special fittings, $3,000; Trade and Commerce Department, $110; special metal fittings, $49,140, making a total of $75,000. The Daly building was bought in 1921 on the instalment plan. The first payment was made in 1921-22 of $100,000 and the payment this year will be $154,000, the total being $1,270,000, payable in ten years.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): I also asked the minister whether the buildings occupied by the Dominion government in this city are not more than are required. Was it necessary to purchase that building at the time to accommodate the Government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Government deemed it cheaper to purchase than to pay rent.

Mr. HARRIS: In view of the fact that the minister cannot give me a precise answer to my question and is unable to give the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) the information he desires, will he not let this item stand?

Mr. CHURCH: The public business is greatly expanding in Ottawa, and in my opinion the individual buildings which the Government is buying cannot adequately accommodate the public service. The business of the various departments year after year is increasing enormously, and now that the war is over I hope the minister will look into the policy adopted at Washington, of co-ordinating the different properties in the capital city with a view to economy. In the next ten years there is bound to be a tremendous expansion of public business in Ottawa, and instead of having rented property on every street, buying small buildings here and there, and renovating old buildings which are really of no use for the purposes for which they are required, a great economy might be effected by a proper system of co-ordination, besides the advantage that would be gained from such centralization of Dominion property. Look at the new House of Commons as an example of it. Ottawa needs a modern office building built for to-morrow. As it is, it is difficult for one to find his way around if he wants to get in touch with the various departments. I realize that the Government has been in office only a few months, but if they gave this matter careful consideration they could economize considerably not only on capital account but in regard to maintenance, because the upkeep of these various old buildings is a serious item.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is the Income Tax office at Hamilton situated in the post office building?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No; it is in the Imperial building.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is that a Government owned building?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. CALDWELL: An item in one of the Toronto newspapers says that four of the North West Mounted Police have been guarding the building with automatics and carbines although there was only $2.90 in the vault. If that is the case it would appear hardly worth while having this force keep guard over the place.

Mr. GRAHAM: Probably they did not get there soon enough.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no objection to letting the item stand. As a matter of fact I have a summary of the expenditures making up the $707,860, but I cannot say now whether it has all been expended. There may be payments that have lapsed. If my hon. friend desires that information it can be obtained and given later.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What the leader of the Opposition wanted was the amount that had been actually expended on each of the items during the past year. If my hon. friend will give us the information at the next sitting of the committee he will probably expedite the matter.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will be very glad to do that.

Mr. HANSON: I would like to know where the vote for the Dominion government's share of the new International bridge at Edmundston can be found?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): On page 42, I think, under the vote for roads and bridges.

Item allowed to stand.

Saskatchewan. Dominion Public Buildings: Improvements, repairs, etc., $17,000.
Moosejaw, Public Building: Improvements, $10,000.

Mr. EVANS: What is contemplated regarding the Saskatoon post office? The rent being paid out at present would be more than sufficient in a couple of years to provide ample room in the existing building to properly carry on the work there which is at present suffering from lack of accommodation. I know that a survey of the present building was made some two years ago and it was decided to enlarge the premises. Why that determination was not carried out I do not know, but certainly with the labour at present available the work should be gone on with this year. I would also like to know if the government owns any vacant property in Saskatoon upon which it is contemplated to erect a new post office; also the cost of that property and what is proposed to be done in that connection?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I understand that the Government has property in Saskatoon that is available as a site for building, but it is not intended to proceed with construction this year.

Mr. LEWIS: The vote for the province of Saskatchewan is the smallest but one of the votes for all the provinces, and evidently not very much money is going to be expended on public buildings in that province. I would like to know if the department owns the post office at Swift Current. The present building there is very small and wholly inadequate for the purpose, being on the ground floor of a business block. I would not wish the department to build a post office because in that city there are numerous empty buildings quite adequate for postal facilities, but certainly something should be done promptly. I wonder whether the item of $17,000 had any reference to Swift Current.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For the information of my hon. friend I would say that the Government owns property in Swift Current but not any public buildings. It is renting premises there now, but there is no intention to build this year.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I would like to emphasize the remarks of the previous speaker as to the small vote for public buildings for the province of Saskatchewan. The name Saskatchewan is of Indian origin but the people out there are not all Indians, nor does the land consist of desert or Indian reserves either. In line with my hon. friend who preceded me, I maintain that this vote is the smallest appropriation made for any province. The apportionment of public money for Nova Scotia would look to be smaller but if you combine the vote for Nova Scotia of $19,600, the vote of $48,500 for New Brunswick, and the vote of $38,000 for the maritime provinces generally, it will be seen that the average for each of three maritime provinces is over $35,000. Our province of Saskatchewan is a real large block of land and the population is 200,000 larger than that of either Manitoba or Alberta. Now it seems to be that an injustice has been done the banner province of Canada—so far as wheat producing goes it is the banner province. I would like also to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that in the town in which I have the honour to live the post office is housed in a small rented shack, and I was informed by the postmaster that he is compelled to move, as the Bank of Commerce which owns the building, is going to haul it away out on the prairies in order that risk of fire may be eliminated. The postmaster accordingly will be compelled to move and find other quarters. It seems to me that this young and growing province should have more consideration in the way of public buildings than apparently it is receiving judging from the estimates before us. However I do not advocate following the policy of the hon. members for Toronto, who believe that money should be spent lavishly. I recollect that our national debt is large and that money is needed for other purposes. I simply desire to point out that justice should be done to the prairie provinces because comparing the votes for this purpose with similar votes for the other provinces of the Dominion we are suffering from a glaring injustice.

Item agreed to.

Alberta—Dominion Public Buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $17,000.

Edmonton—Public Building—alteration for post office accommodation, $14,000.

Mr. SHAW: In the general discussion regarding post offices perhaps I may be in order in asking the minister what provision, if any, has been made for building a post office in the city of Calgary. I do not know if the minister is aware of the situation in that city, part of which I have the honour to represent. The fact is that the Dominion government have a very valuable site there on which a stone post office was constructed many years ago. The late government, I believe, pulled down that post office so that at the present time there is absolutely nothing but a hole in the centre of the city to represent where the Dominion government building formerly stood, and in the meantime all the public offices which could properly be housed in a properly constructed post office building are located in rented premises in various portions of the city. Some time ago I asked for a return showing the amount of rental paid by this Government for public buildings in the various parts of the city of Calgary, but that report has not come to hand. I have not any doubt that it was a very large item indeed. The amount paid for rental for post office purposes alone must be very considerable. In view of these facts, has the minister under consideration, or does he contemplate in the Supplementary Estimates, provision for the erection of a post office in Calgary in the not too distant future?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I can well understand the nature of the hon. gentleman's inquiry, because there has been great disappointment in the matter of public buildings in that city for a number of years. It is true that a building was torn down, and plans and excavations were made for a new building, but I do not think it is within the power of the Government, or that it would be wise this year, to undertake the construction of a large and expensive building such as the post office in Calgary would be. I am afraid it will have to go over until financial conditions improve, and the Government can adopt a more aggressive policy in regard to public buildings. We can rent buildings, and probably will continue to do so, at least for the present.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): Reference has been made—and I cannot refrain from repeating it—to the comparative insignificance of the grant to the Prairie provinces for public works, and I could not help but wonder if that was a continuation of the policy from which those three provinces have been suffering for a number of years. We have not been asking for much in the West in the way of public facilities and public works. I rose to point out that unless the Western provinces are granted the measure of relief for which they have been struggling so hard for the past few years, they might just as well eliminate themselves, because they have not been given anything.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I would like to point out to my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Johnson) and the gentleman who preceded him, that all these votes the committee are being asked to pass this evening are for repairs of existing buildings, and there is no way of measuring the necessities for repairs by the population of one portion of the country. I suppose it is true that in the older provinces, there being more towns and cities, there are more public buildings; consequently, the annual repairs would be larger than they would be in Saskatchewan, which, I think, has fewer towns and buildings than any of the older provinces.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Public Buildings—improvements, repairs, etc..	$35,000 00
Vancouver post office, fittings, electric wiring and elevator.. ..	5,500 00

Victoria, old post office—taxes due city for 1921..	1,019 77
Williams head quarantine station repairs and improvements to existing buildings, fittings, etc..	7,500 00

Mr. TOLMIE: Can the hon. minister inform me as to the repairs made to the Victoria post office?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The items are as follows:—

New box installation equipment	$6,500
Installation clearing house in registry branch..	500
Installation of observation gallery..	1,600
Contingencies..	400
Total..	$9,000

Mr. McBRIDE: I have heard a good deal this evening about post offices. I was not asked to get much when I came down here. I was merely asked to get four post offices, but I am not asking that to-night. If there is a place in British Columbia which needs a post office it is Kamloops. We need a building from several standpoints. We have in Kamloops no land or no forestry office accommodation, no telephone office, and several other branches of the Dominion government need accommodation. We should have a post office building there. Money was voted for it some years ago, and I do not see why that money should not be voted again, and, at least, a start made on it. The present post office is a menace to public health. It has been condemned twice by the health inspector of that district. Kamloops is in a central location. It is a distributing point for the North Thompson, for the southern portion of that district and for both east and west, and they have no facilities there for such business. I think it is up to the present minister to take action, and I would like to know what he intends doing with regard to the Kamloops post office.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think I have any further explanations to make in regard to post offices. I know that my hon. friend from Cariboo (Mr. McBride) has made representations previously to those he made in the House to-night, and, although we sympathize with him, and the conditions in some parts of the constituency which he represents and the necessity for better buildings, still the conditions must be applicable to British Columbia at this time, as well as to the other provinces.

Mr. LADNER: I should like to ask the minister for two or three post offices for Vancouver South or Vancouver, but we are most interested in a dry dock out there.

Mr. DUFF: Cannot get it—nothing doing.

Mr. LADNER: Did the hon. gentleman say there was something doing?

Mr. DUFF: No.

Mr. LADNER: I have been looking through the estimates for some clue or suspicion that perhaps the minister has given the matter consideration. The minister should know that an anxious public awaits the fatal word which may fall from his lips and messages by wire of one kind or another have permeated to and from the coast. Some tell us that a dry dock will be built at Victoria, others say one will be built at Vancouver, and still others say a dry dock will be built at neither place. I think it will be an appropriate occasion at nearly the eleventh hour—having regard to the clock—that we should have from the minister some information as to whether the project of a dry dock at Vancouver will receive some encouragement in the way of an appropriation during the coming year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think we will confine ourselves to the estimates for public buildings. Later on, when we reach capital expenditure, the question might be considered.

Mr. McBRIDE: I am not quite satisfied with the minister's answer. We have out there a large number of idle men, and Kamloops has not been asking the Dominion government, or any other body, for assistance to give the idle men employment. I think the least this House can do is to revote the amount that was voted to do the excavating and to put in the foundation of that post office at Kamloops, this spring, which will give the men some employment. A large number of them are returned men.

who are out of work and who have been living there from hand to mouth. Many of them went there for their health, and I think as little as this House or this Government can do is to revote what was voted some years ago in order, at least, that the excavating may be done and the foundation put in. I trust the minister can see his way to have that done.

Mr. FIELDING: I think, on the question of buildings generally, I ought, in fairness to my colleague the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King), to take more than a fair share of the responsibility. He is a kindly disposed new member, and I believe he would like to yield to the many requests made for new buildings; but ever since he came here, indeed, almost before he came, I have been preaching to him, warning him against putting into the estimates items for new public buildings. If there is anything in which we can afford to economize this year, it is along that line. I am not referring to any particular building; but I have taken the responsibility of urging all my colleagues along certain lines of economy, and particularly I have asked the Minister of Public Works to resist the applications, many and urgent, for the construction of new public buildings. If that is a bad policy, do not blame the Minister of Public Works entirely for it. I am largely responsible for it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a small item of $1,000 odd for taxes. How does that item arise? Is this not government property?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am advised that this is an old post office property which the Government rents, and this is an item that has been appearing in the estimates for years. I thought probably it was a local improvement tax. I know there are local improvement taxes which the Government have from time to time, consented to pay in the province.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is a local improvement tax, I understand?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a general tax.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Crown is not supposed to be taxed for general purposes.

Mr. GRAHAM: The building is rented to people for stores.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In Ontario, and in, perhaps, a number of other provinces, certain local taxes appear in the larger cities and towns and are imposed upon the principle of so much per front foot. We have, in a number of western Ontario cities, under the authority of our municipal law a tax known as the garbage tax. This is assessed on all the streets of the cities and towns; but when you come to government property, the Government refuses to pay the tax, and I think the refusal is very improper. This tax amounts to a good deal in some of our smaller cities, and complaints have been made in St. Thomas, Galt, Kitchener, Guelph, Stratford and other places. A city council, for instance, divides up the tax over the different lots on the main street, and everybody on that street is taxed so much per front foot for the collection of garbage. When you come to government property, the waste paper and ashes are thrown out and the city garbage man takes them away; but when the bill comes in, the Government has made it a rule to refuse payment. The Government will pay for local improvement, for city water; but when the question is one of collection of garbage, it makes a distinction and refuses payment. This is most unfair; it means that people who are on a street on which there is government property—and sometimes the government property covers a large block—have to pay so much more than they should have by reason of the refusal of the Government to pay this tax. The minister should take this matter into serious consideration.

Mr. DUFF: Is that a new tax? When was the law put into force?

Mr. GUTHRIE: We have had it in Ontario for some years.

Mr. DUFF: Why did the old government not fix the matter?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Payment has always been refused.

Mr. HANSON: It will be news for members from New Brunswick to learn that Crown property in the Dominion pays any taxes at all. At all events, I never heard of any in the province of New Brunswick paying any local improvement taxes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is a general tax.

Mr. HANSON: I understood the minister to say that this Crown property in Ontario paid some local improvement tax. I venture to say that the Dominion Government own half a million dollars worth of property in my city, and it has not paid one dollar of municipal taxation or local improvement taxes or anything else from the beginning of time. If the Government property pays taxes in Ontario, then I think the Dominion government should, in all fairness and justice, contribute something towards the municipal burden of keeping up sidewalks in front of its property. It does not even do that in New Brunswick. To what extent is that practice prevalent?

Mr. GRAHAM: As I understand the garbage tax in Ontario, the Government has refused to pay the garbage tax which was very high on its large blocks; but it gets no service from the municipal garbage collector. It looks after the collection of garbage and pays for that. Consequently, it pays no taxes when it does the work.

As regards Government property, the Government is not a landlord; it is not going into the landlord business. When it has property which it leases to some other person, as that other person, if he were on other property, would pay taxes, the Government, under those circumstances, acts like any other landlord and pays the taxes. When, however, the property is used by the Government for Government purposes, it does not pay taxes.

Mr. STORK: In reference to the post office situation, if there is anything in the way of precedent in the matter of getting your order in early or of having some justification for your claim, I wish to state that Prince Rupert has been on the map for fifteen years, and it very urgently requires a post office. We have heard a good deal of criticism to-night against the minister for his failure to provide post offices. When the proper time comes, we shall be on deck with our demand for a post office; but I wish to pay a little tribute to the minister. We have had, in Prince Rupert, under the system started some years ago, a very extravagant system of rentals. We have had in that city a federal building housing the post office and the customs department, and various other buildings, for which the Government has paid an annual rental of $11,100 a year. The minister, I understand, has a proposition before him to remove these offices to other premises at a rental of $6.540 a year, and that, I think, is a step in the right direction. The Government is practising economy; it is practising economy in the right direction as regards Prince Rupert. We approve that at present; but when the proper time arrives, Prince Rupert will be on deck for a post office of its own.

Mr. CALDWELL: I was much interested in a statement made by the Minister of Militia (Mr. Graham) that, if the Government owns property and rents it to someone else, it invariably pays the tax. The matter has not worked out in that way in my province. As regards soldier settlement farms, farms that have been salvaged from the original settler by the Government and rented to a private individual, the Government is possibly getting a larger revenue from the private farmer than from the soldier settler, and yet it has refused to pay the taxes, even the school tax. This is crippling quite badly school districts in my immediate part of New Brunswick. Perhaps I may be out of order; and if I am, I presume the proper time to discuss this matter will be when the committee's report on Soldiers Civil Re-establishment is before the House. I want however an opportunity of hearing the minister's statement, in regard to the Government paying taxes, and then I shall be pleased to follow it up to see that we get some of these taxes.

Mr. GRAHAM: It should be understood by all members that the Minister of Public Works is not responsible for the erection of buildings. Consequently, criticism should be directed against all the rest of us in the other departments for whom the Public Works erects buildings or rents them, because we really are responsible, and the Public Works Department is merely the agent for providing us with that accommodation.

Mr. NEILL: I wish to add my little wail to the complaints that have already gone up in connection with post offices. I will spare the minister getting on his feet to give us the usual excuse, for the department has already turned down my request for the only post office I wanted, the claims for which were so great as to make the claims of Kamloops, Prince Rupert, Victoria and Vancouver shrink into absolute insignificance. I will not weary the committee with details, because I am sure they will take my word for it. I was going to suggest, in view of the statement made by the Minister of Finance, that he with the Minister of Public Works should form a roster, so to speak, and begin it to-night, of those post offices in British Columbia which were to get attention next year, and in order to prevent any disagreement among hon. members I would suggest that the list be made alphabetical in its character; the post office I want is Courtney.

I was somewhat struck by the modest violet-like innocence of my friends from Vancouver and Victoria when they sought to criticize this vote and, like Oliver Twist, asked for more. I find some $59,000 in this vote, every cent of which will be spent in the constituencies of Victoria and Vancouver from which my hon. friends come. I would remind the Government and particularly the Minister of Public Works, that there are places in British Columbia outside the confines of those municipalities, incredible as it may appear from looking at the public accounts of the last five or six years. I am almost compelled to think that the right hon. leader of the Opposition is a man of far vision and sympathetic touch, for I heard him to-night in the House, unsolicited by anybody from British Columbia, tell one of the Cabinet ministers that in his opinion British Columbia always got the cold shoulder from this Government—an opinion which I very heartily share in, as I think do some other members. I hope the Government will take that into consideration when some of the other public works estimates come down, of a more important character perhaps. I wished to refer to another item but I have forgotten it. I do not suppose it will materially advance the interests of the post office, and probably the House will be glad to be spared any details.

Mr. TOLMIE: I should like to tell the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat that I did not criticize the vote for Victoria. I may have thought a little about it, but I did not say anything. All I wanted was some information about how the money was to be spent.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1921-22

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates for the year ending March 31, 1922, was presented by Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the House, and referred to the Committee of Supply.

On motion of Mr. Fielding the House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

Friday, April 28, 1922

The House met at three o'clock.

DEBATES COMMITTEE

On motion of Mr. Geo. H. Boivin (Shefford) the first report of the Select Standing Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates was concurred in.

REPORT

Report of the Chief Electoral Officer, of the Fourteenth General Election, 1921.—Mr. Speaker.

CIVIL SERVICE BONUS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Medicine Hat): I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to take the House into his confidence with regard to the question of the bonus to civil servants. I understand that on the last pay day the civil servants did not receive their bonus. I would be much obliged if the Prime Minister could give us any information on the subject.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The matter of the bonus to civil servants is still under consideration; the Government has not reached a final decision on it. The House will be informed in due course.

SUPPLY

The House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Public Works—Ontario—public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $349,200.

The CHAIRMAN: This item was allowed to stand yesterday.

Hon. J. H. KING (East Kootenay, Minister of Public Works): The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) inquired yesterday with regard to St. Catharines. In 1919-20 an appropriation of $28,000 was voted for an addition to the public building in that city, but was allowed to lapse. An appropriation of $34,000 was included in the estimates for 1920-21, but after it had been given some consideration it was dropped, and since then it has not been further considered. In reply to the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Stewart), I beg to table the correspondence with regard to public property and public building sites in Hamilton. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) asked that a statement be given with regard to the appropriations amounting to $707,867 not required for 1922-23 and which were included in the estimates for 1921-22. I now wish to give them in detail, as follows:

	Appr.	Expenditure
Alexandria—To reconstruct public building destroyed by fire	$ 32,000	$ 965 17

Toronto—St. Andrew's College — Government's share of cost of local improvements	4,252	.....
Walkerton — Public building — electric wiring	2,000	29 40
Total	$707,867	$390,774 69

Mr. GUTHRIE: What did the minister say was the total?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The total appropriation was $707,867, and the expenditure $390,774.69.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister not realize that that is very substantially different from the figure he gave last night?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No different.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes. The minister last night stated the expenditure was some $700,000 odd. That is what it sounded like across here, although we have some difficulty in hearing.

Mr. ANDERSON: Can the minister now state the policy of his department with reference to the revote for the post office at St. Catharines?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Perhaps the hon. member was not in his seat, but I have already stated that no consideration has been given to that expenditure this year.

Mr. ANDERSON: What is the policy of the department with regard to revotes for other places?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is open for consideration each year. It does not necessarily follow that because the revote has not been used, it should appear in the estimates next session.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Has the minister considered the question of a post office at Weston? The minister knows that the public have no proper accommodation there. The very small quarters are shamefully overcrowded, the congestion is tremendous. Three rural mail routes come in, and there are no proper conveniences for them. I understand that the department have requested insistently that something be done. Has the minister considered the matter?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Representations have been made, but we are not considering new construction this year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How does the matter stand? Is it a case in which the department think the work ought to go on, and it is being held up on the ground of economy?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): On the ground of economy.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister did not seem to think my memory was correct when I referred to the fact that he informed us last night that $707,000 odd had been spent on public buildings last year. On reference to page 1289 of unrevised Hansard I find this:

> Public Buildings, $349,200.
> Mr. Meighen: How much appropriation was spent last year?
> Mr. King (Kootenay): $707,000 odd.
> Mr. Meighen: Could the hon. gentleman tell us how that was divided?
> Mr. King (Kootenay): I have not that information.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the committee will understand why I replied as I did. The statement I had before me showed as do the estimates the expenditure not required of this $707,000. When questioned last night I told the committee it was not possible to give the information. In fact, it required the work of an official this morning to get it. I think that was understood by the committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister should not say that. The minister was asked, not the amount that was not required this year, but the amount spent last year, and the information he gave was $707,000 as clear as words could give it. Why does he seek now to avoid it? He simply made a mistake.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—Chargeable to income—Generally, $225,000.

Mr. CHURCH: With reference to the item of $5,000 for flags for Dominion public buildings, is this for flag waving?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the expenditure under these different heads last year?

Mr KING (Kootenay): I have not that information here. I am informed that it has not been the custom in the past for the minister to be familiar with these details, and as far as I am concerned, I am not, and I have not the figures here.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have no doubt the deputy will have the information.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): He may possibly have the information in his head, but he has no information in writing, I understand, of the expenditure under these heads.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He can send for his folio.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: How is the item of $30,000 divided by provinces?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This item is required for certain items of expenditure which have to be met every year in connection with public buildings, together with such special outlay for works, and so forth, that cannot well be charged against any one particular item of the general appropriations made by Parliament. It covers such items as travelling expenses, stationery, drawing instruments, printing, telegrams, miscellaneous.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What are the details for last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The expenditure for 1921-1922, up to 21st January, 1922, which is as far as my information goes, is as follows:

Brantford, Ont., general shed—taxes		$601.67

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Having found those particulars I wonder if the minister cannot turn up the other items and show the total spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not got them.

Mr. GUTHRIE: During my experience in this House in Committee of Supply, as we are at this moment, it has always been the custom to ask at the outset what amount was spent on votes the previous year, and it seems strange to me that the deputy minister of this department, who has been a long time in the service, does not remember that such has been the practice. It it not very full information that we get from looking at the printed estimates. For instance in the present vote the first item is:

Armouries—Fittings and Alterations—Revote, $40,000; 1922-23, $50,000; 1921-22, $87,000.

Apparently there is a saving of $37,000 this year in that vote; but the committee want to know how much was spent last year. Now, in the case of the information given by my hon. friend a few minutes ago in regard to item 148—Ontario—in the item after the vote that he enumerated there was a very small expenditure apart from the money spent in Ottawa and Toronto. Last year we voted $87,000 for fittings and alterations to armouries. This year we are asked to vote $50,000. Did we spend the $87,000 we voted last year? If we did not, what was the reason? Why should we be called upon to vote $50,000 this year? And so with every item on the list. I notice there is a re-vote of $40,000 in connection with fittings and alterations to armouries, consequently there could not have been more than $47,000 spent, although $87,000 was voted. There is one other item that appears this year that did not appear last year:

Military Hospitals—repairs and improvements, $65,000.

I would like some information regarding that item. I assume, although I do not know, that it must be in regard to the military hospital at Winnipeg. Every year we have had a tremendous amount to pay out in connection with that hospital. Nobody grudges the expense for a military hospital where the expense is necessary; but I should think the time was now approaching when the expenditure, for military hospitals at least, should not be extended. The expenditure and the establishments for this purpose ought to be wellnigh complete by this time, but apparently we are asked to spend $65,000 more this year on the military hospital in Winnipeg. I would like to know how many patients there are now—the number must be pretty well reduced—and what the money is wanted for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend no doubt is familiar with the fact that this work is being carried on by the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and that they indicate from time to time to the Department of Public Works, as other departments of the Government do, their building requirements. They have indicated to us this year that they need a certain amount for the repair of, and improvements to, the military hospitals throughout Canada. This matter has been gone into by departmental officials and the amount of $65,000 has been asked for.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is not, then, for work in connection with the Militia Department, it is for the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. I can understand the latter may have requirements, but the military patients must be reduced by this time to almost the vanishing point.

Mr. HOCKEN: Cannot the minister tell us where this money has been spent? Has he not got the details?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, I have; the details are as follows:

Ste. Anne's Hospital, Ste. Anne de Bellevue	$10,000
Unit "A" Office, Montreal, Que.	1,500
Campbell Hospital, Halifax, N.S.	2,500
Jordan Sanatorium, River Glade, N.B.	1,500
Unit "B" Office, Halifax, N.S.	500
Sydenham Hospital, Kingston, Ont.	4,000
Mowat Sanitorium, Kingston, Ont.	2,500
Christie St. Hospital, Toronto, Ont.	10,000
Euclid Hall Hospital, Toronto, Ont.	5,500
Brant Hospital, Burlington, Ont.	1,500
Westminster Hospital, London, Ont.	10,000
Sunnyside Hospital, Calgary, Alta.	12,000
Shaughnessy Hospital, Vancouver, B.C.	1,000
Contingencies	2,500
Total	$65,000

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why is the title "Military Hospitals" given? These are Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Hospitals.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that is the title they have always carried, at least I am so advised. Of course the work in those hospitals is under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. The expenditure heretofore has been from demobilization votes, but this year we are asking a vote for that purpose; there is no demobilization vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is a vote for the very same purpose as demobilization. Surely it is sufficiently large without transferring items which were formerly under it to this vote. If there is one enquiry more important than another in connection with votes, it is the inquiry, how much money was actually needed last year, how much was spent. Time after time we come to this Committee and ask the question and we are told by ministers "We do not know". We get an estimate given the next day and find the original amount was twice too large. Why is it we have to ask and beg for this information on almost all items of the minister?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Last night I discovered after reducing my estimates for the year 1922-3, that the payments for 1921-22 are not completed. Unfortunately for me, my deputy was not aware of that, and I cut the estimate for the present year not understanding that the expenditure is bound to be greater than I thought. Now, I discover that practically the whole vote of last year will be required, that there are accounts yet to be paid. It is only fair that the minister should be protected on accounts still unpaid.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I quite agree, and I think it is well to warn the officials that the information furnished should be correct.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Absolutely.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But the fact that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) is furnished with incorrect information is no reason why the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King) should refuse to give any information at all. Let him give the best information he can.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My hon. friends, who are well informed about all the departments, who have been in charge of those departments, must of necessity have more knowledge with respect to these matters than a new minister who has to depend absolutely upon the information given him. Once in a while we make a mistake in regard to information, and it is fair to assume that those amounts that were criticized severely last year, when they were under control of members opposite, were cut down to about the minimum. The hon. gentleman asks for the definite amount spent, but that cannot be ascertained, because the accountants in the departments do not know what the items outstanding may amount to. They show, to a certain date, what is paid. When you apply to a department for information of that sort it is sometimes hard to get it. I am not complaining of what happened to me. I will get along with the money, but it is fair that the committee should know that the accounts of the departments are not yet closed, and that all the accounts for 1921-22 are not yet in.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There may be very exceptional cases where the accounts would not be in, but the accountants would know that they were not in. Take the case the minister presents to us. Yesterday he came here with his deputy or officer, Mr. Camsell, beside him, and told the House this was the expenditure. Mr. Camsell goes back to the department and finds that that was not correct and that there was more. Are we going to understand that that information just came in between the time it was asked for in the House and the time the minister went back to his office, or this morning? Not at all. That information was all there yesterday, but the minister with his deputy came without it. That is what I am complaining about. The information the minister has was available yesterday.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is not a correct impression at all. The department does not know what is outstanding, though the officials may have an idea of it. Take the $22,000 which was cut last evening by $15,000; nearly all of it will be required to pay the accounts of 1921-22. But I cannot, nor can the accountant, tell definitely what the amount will be. It is perfectly reasonable to say I should have had that information yesterday, but I think it is fair to assume that the most of these votes are pretty well exhausted—at least that has been my experience—and those two particularly which were cut yesterday.

Mr. MEIGHEN: With reference to an account such as the minister presented yesterday for publication, there is no excuse for any deputy or accountant not knowing, on the 28th day of April, what the amount required was. Everything was ordered—must have been ordered—long before, and though they may not be paid, the totals are there, and they know the particulars.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is pretty difficult for the accountant to know what the costs for publication will be.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, not will be, but have been.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is difficult to know what they have been. The fact remains that the accounts are not yet in. Of course, 31st March is the end of the fiscal year, but accounts come in after that date which are charged against the appropriations of the year just ended. There has been an extension. I did not allow for that yesterday; I know it to-day. Therefore I draw the attention of the committee to the fact that many of these accounts may turn up, and that a statement of expenditures down to to-day or to the date the estimates are made up, does not always show the true state of affairs.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It ought to; if not, it should be for some very special reason; and if there is a special reason the committee should be told of it. What reason is there, in the world, why we do not know what money was spent last year on armouries—fittings and alterations?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am not discussing the particular items.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that. But my remarks apply to the minister's estimates. I have not the slightest doubt that if I had five minutes with the secretary of the Mines Department, or with the deputy minister with the secretary present, they could tell me all the commitments last year for publication, though they might not all have been paid, but here we are now discussing the item "Armouries—fittings and alterations" and the minister cannot tell us what has been paid.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I understand the votes will be practically all expended.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well. There is no reason why the minister cannot tell us what has been spent for fittings and alterations of armaments.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If my hon. friend wants that information, I have it here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I was asking for.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I think not. My hon. friend was asking for appropriation not required for 1921-22.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is what I was asked to bring down last night, and I have brought it down to-day—a special return. With regard to the expenditures last year, I will give the House the items.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why does the hon. gentleman say that? We know what the appropriation not required for 1922-23 is. It is right in the estimates, is it not?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, that is right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We know that, but we want to know what is not given in the estimates—the amounts spent last year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend knows that last night the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) insisted that we give details of that amount, and I have brought it down to-day.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is on the last item.

Mr. FIELDING: There are two classes of information which the minister was publicly asked to give; that is, as to the estimates of last year in comparison with the amounts as set forth here. We are now just at the close of the fiscal year. That year is actually closed, and the accounts are still coming in, and the actual expenditure of the past year changes from day to day, and must change until the final day when it is closed; and, therefore, I am not surprised the minister is not able to give it to-day. But there is no difficulty in getting it, if it is desired. The minister could bring down to-morrow the actual expenditure to date—and the next day it would be a different thing altogether. There is no difficulty in obtaining it. If the hon. gentleman wants the actual expenditure on any item up to to-day he ought to have it, and it can be given, if desired.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can the minister tell me whether any Order in Council has yet been passed extending the time for closing the books, and if so, to what date? The books are closed now.

Mr. FIELDING: No, my information is that the time will be extended till the 15th May, but, as a matter of fact, the Order in Council has not been passed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As the matter now stands, the account is closed.

Mr. FIELDING: No, because we have the power to expend the money.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I thought we exercised that power in advance. However, I appreciate my hon. friend's delicacy in connection with the Order in Council.

Mr. FIELDING: They are very necessary.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I quite agree with that. While there is difficulty in stating what the exact payment will be, having reference to dates and that sort of thing, I have never experienced the same difficulty with reference to the commitments. I thought our officers understood what obligations they had entered into, and what contracts they had made. We do not want to know merely what is paid, but what has been paid already and also what we are obligated to pay. I think that is practically the same thing. I do not think my hon. friend wanted to hold himself down to the first question. The proper information is the cost of running this service for the last year, as represented by what has already been paid, and what may have to be paid.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The total amount authorized up to March 7, 1922, was $42,714, and the estimated expenditure from March 7, 1922, to the end of the last fiscal year is $4,286, making a total expenditure of $47,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Last year we actually spent on armouries $47,000. This year we intend to spend $50,000. Is that right?

[Mr. Fielding.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was the expenditure last year on experimental farms?

Mr. HUGHES: In this item I see an amount of $30,000 for Dominion public buildings generally. I wish to ask the minister whether from this amount or from the amount in item No. 146, "Maritime provinces generally," a sufficient sum can be taken to make some very necessary repairs to the post office at Montague, P.E.I. I do not wish to ask the Government to expend one dollar unnecessarily. I appreciate fully the present financial condition of the country; but necessary repairs to public buildings are very often the wisest economy. I have already communicated with the minister in regard to that building, which is very much in need of repairs. I see no special item in the Estimates for that work, and I should like the minister to see if it is possible to make the necessary repairs to that building.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The expenditure on experimental farms, out of an appropriation of $100,000, was $81,043, to the 31st January, 1922.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Flags?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The expenditure on flags was $2,897.65 to the 31st January, 1922.

Replying to the hon. member for King's, P.E.I. (Mr. Hughes), a few minutes ago I read out a statement showing how those expenditures were made. I do not think it will be possible to make a large expenditure from that appropriation on the public building to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. HUGHES: I think the expenditure would be small. If it cannot be made from this appropriation, it would be desirable to have an appropriation made for the purpose.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I see no reason why the matter should not be considered.

Mr. DUFF: I noticed the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) asked how much money was expended last year on flags for public buildings. If he had been taking a proper interest in the proceedings of this House, he would have noticed an answer to a question which I asked earlier in the session. If he will look up Hansard, he will find a reply to that question giving the cost of all flags on Dominion public buildings to December 31, 1921. In this appropriation there is an item of $5,000 for flags for this year. When everybody is speaking of economy, this is an item the larger part of which might be saved to the Canadian taxpayer. I have no objection to every public building in this country possessing a flag, and I believe that flags should be flown, say on Dominion day, the King's birthday and other special occasions; but, in my opinion, it is a great waste of money that a flag should be flown on a public building every day of the year and, sometimes, not only flown all day, but left flying all night. This $5,000 may seem a small sum; but if you capitalize the $5,000 voted for this special purpose, that would mean $100,000, which would not only cover the cost of repairs to a number of small public buildings in this country, but build a number of post offices in rural districts. It is not necessary that flags should be flown on public buildings from one end of Canada to the other, day after day for 365 days in the year. I would suggest that the minister issue instructions to janitors and other people, who have charge of flying flags on public buildings, that money could be saved to the country if instead of these flags being flown every-day, they were flown only on special occasions.

Mr. FIELDING: I am not sure but, possibly, I have more faith in flags than has my hon. friend (Mr. Duff). I like to see the flag flying on our public buildings. When we stand on the border line between the United States and Canada, we find the American flag is everywhere in evidence, and we, in our modesty, do not make enough use of the flag of the nation. Far from complaining of the flag being flown 365 days of the year, I think, if we made a better use of the national flag on our public buildings, that would help to stimulate and interest us all in what, I hope, is the loyal spirit of the country generally.

Mr. DUFF: I do not think I will take second place even to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in the matter of flying flags, because it is my business to fly flags more than it is, perhaps the business of any other member of Parliament. But I do not profess to be a flag-flapper in this country; I cannot see the necessity of flying flags every day in the year, and I do not think that to do so will make us more loyal. It is a useless expenditure of public money at this time, when, if I want $1,000 or $2,000 for repairing a breakwater, or establishing a postal route, or building a small post office in my constituency, or if any other hon. member wants these things, we cannot get them, because, we are told, there is no money. We could very well do without expending money on flying flags except when it is absolutely necessary that flags should be flown. I do not think the flying of flags will make us any more loyal or disloyal. If we are to depend upon flying flags to maintain the loyalty of our people, then I say: Heaven help the people of Canada.

Mr. HOCKEN: I was very glad to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) speak in favour of displaying the flag. We all know his loyalty, and we appreciate his sincerity in speaking in the way in which he has done. There is this to say for the flying of the flag. This country of ours is composed of a good many races; we live under one flag; we ought to venerate that flag, and one of the ways in which we can teach loyalty to our institutions under the Empire of which we form a part, is to have evidence, before the rising generation and newcomers to this country, the emblem of authority, of our country and our Empire. This Government surely can afford to pay for the flags necessary to be flown from the public buildings of the country. In some of the provinces the law requires the flag to be flown from all public schools. That is particularly the case in the West, and it is one of those things, small, I admit, and probably to some people of insignificant value, which in my judgment are of distinct importance as serving that very much desired end we all have in view, national unity. Let there be one thing on which all the people can agree,—the veneration of the flag of the Empire and of the country. Manitoba and Ontario are other provinces where the flag must fly on the public schools every day, and if these provinces can afford to put the flag on every schoolhouse in all sections of the country, this federal Parliament should be able to afford flags for all public buildings.

Item agreed to.

Public Buildings—rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc., $4,959,600.

The CHAIRMAN: It is proposed to take this vote up item by item. I shall therefore read the first:

Ottawa Public Buildings—Dominion Observatory and Geodetic Survey Building—repairs, maintenance of grounds, etc., $5,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does it cost $5,000 a year to keep this building in repair?

Every year, it seems, we vote $5,000. The building is a very small one, and I should not think it would require that amount of money to keep it in repair.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The expenditure varies. In 1920-21 it was $4,158, and last year as low as $2,683. Since 1919, however, the average appropriation has been $5,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not see where they spend it; however, I do not object.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was the total amount spent last year out of the entire vote, taking all the items together?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the summary but I will give the detail for each item as we proceed. On the first item the amount spent last year was $2,683.42.

Mr. FIELDING: It must be understood, in all these cases where the expenditure of the past year is given, that the sums must necessarily be incomplete, and in some cases there will be substantial additions. If that be clearly understood there is no reason why the information my hon. friend asks for should not be given.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not agree that they must necessarily be incomplete. They may be, but if they are there is no reason why the information should not be given. I think, however, that it is rather unlikely that these sums would be incomplete.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa Public Buildings—water, $42,000.

Mr. HOCKEN: What accounts for the increase in this item? Is the water any dearer this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The expenditure last year was $35,000 as compared with $42,000 this year. The increase of $7,000 is due to the increased consumption of water in government-owned buildings, as a result of the taking over of the Daly building on Rideau street and the new Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment building. The quantity of water supplied during the first half of the year 1921-22, on which the estimates of 1922-23 are based, was greater than in the corresponding period in 1920-21.

Mr. HOCKEN: Is this water purchased on meter rate?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is not the water rate for the city of Ottawa?

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understood it was for the special water in the Tally-Ho water bottles.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Provision for that water is in the House of Commons expenditure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That water is supplied to every department.

Mr. ANDERSON: I see further down in this vote $60,000 for water. What is that for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is for buildings throughout Canada, outside of Ottawa.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Spent $35,000.

Item agreed to.

Elevator attendants, $70,000

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was the expenditure for the fiscal year on elevator attendants?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $59,940.

Mr. FIELDING: The minister's information seems to have been prepared up to the end of December with the expectation of the estimates coming on earlier, and as the actual expenditure will vary from day to day I quite understand why the minister may not have it. The figures given up to December 31 would be for only nine months.

4 p.m.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Some of the figures are given up to the end of the fiscal year; there is no use taking this one for nine months. All the commitments are known. Every man's salary is known; he is under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BOYS: Does the minister say the total expenditure up to 31st March was $59,940?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BOYS: That is a pretty safe estimate, because I presume the minister would know exactly what these attendants are paid. That being so, why the increase of $10,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Uniforms are not included in that amount—$2,205; and contingencies are estimated at $7,855.

Mr. GOOD: Do I understand that included in this item of $70,000 for elevator attendants there are some other expenses not so described? If so, that would explain the apparent discrepancy.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no discrepancy. There is temporary help, and that is provided for in the contingencies.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understand the minister to say that last year's expenditure was $59,940. If that is the case, is there any reason to anticipate a larger expenditure this year? While in the total vote there is a slight reduction from last year, the main estimate this year is higher. What we want to know is whether there cannot be a reasonable reduction in these main estimates.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have given the expenditure on salaries for last year; with contingencies, uniforms and wages, it would amount to $70,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then the minister has given us wrong information. He said the expenditure last year was $59,940; now he puts it at $70,000. Which is right?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The $59,940 was for salaries only. With uniforms and contingencies the estimated expenditure last year was $70,000. We are asking for the same amount this year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is clear now.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa public buildings—lighting, including roads and bridges, $90,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was the expenditure last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Up to the 31st December, 1921, we had expended $69,059.44, but it is expected that the full $90,000 will be expended during the current year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I really do not like these statements about expecting certain amounts to be expended. A certain amount was spent or committed up to the end of the year; if there is special reason to expect anything else this year, we should know that reason. The mere statement that it is expected it will all be needed is of no value to the committee. What is the actual amount that we are committed to pay? There is no reason why it should not be known; if the information is not here, we should adjourn until we get it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is asking for the expenditure to date. The notes which I am using were prepared, I believe, before I entered the Government. I am giving the expenditure up to December 31, 1921, and it is expected that the $90,000 will be expended. I have not the accounting of it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It may be true that this information was prepared before the minister came into the department, but that does not absolve him from the duty of bringing his information up to date, because information up to the end of December is almost valueless to this committee. Now that he is coming at the end of April to get his estimates through Parliament he should have the information up to 31st March; there is no reason why he should not have it here.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If this item is to carry and all items are to carry without any information at all, this committee might just as well adjourn and go home. There is really no consideration being given to these estimates; they are just asked to flow by at the word of the minister. Now, I am not going to be meticulous about a single item, but if the minister is in the same position about all these items as he is about this one, I do not see what value this committee is.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My right hon. friend knows I am following the usual procedure in this House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I know the minister is not.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): To revise these estimates would mean a good deal of work. I have no objection to having any particular item stand over so that the information may be brought up to date, but I am told we are following the usual practice.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister need not come to Parliament and in his first session tell me that it has been the usual practice to give information as to expenditure only up to four months before the date on which the information is given. If this was the month of January, it would be all right; the figures would run up to December 31 and might not be absolutely accurate; but the minister could give them, together with the reasons for any inaccuracies. But to come to the end of April and say that because these figures were made up in December the minister is doing the usual thing and cannot take time to bring them up to date—that surely is a statement that does not do very much credit to the minister. Last night he gave us this information as to item after item up to the end of the fiscal year. When it came to Ontario he said he did not have it, but gave a total which turned out to be wrong. We asked that the item stand until to-day, and he comes back to-day with the full information. Now, all we ask is that he do as to this what he has done as to Ontario. It is no answer, and it is not in accordance with the facts, to say that it has been the practice in this Parliament to give the House information only up to four months before the time the information is given.

Mr. BOYS: There is no trouble at all in getting it. I have sent for and hold in my hand a copy of the Canada Gazette, the second number for April, where the expenditure for the minister's department is shown in detail up to the end of February, $8,640,615. If we got the Canada Gazette of just two weeks ago, we should find there the total expenditure in connection with public works up to March 31. Certainly the Finance Department has that information, and the minister could easily get it on the items we are discussing.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the total is given, the details must be known to the officers of the department.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some items are brought up to 31st December, and some later. I am giving them as I have them here. I regret they are not all brought up to the end of the year.

Mr. BOYS: When the minister says the items are not brought up to the end of the year, he is referring to the portfolio before him, but the Finance Department has an absolutely accurate statement of the cash disbursements not only up to 28th February but to the end of the year. I think it is the issue of the Canada Gazette for the second week in April which has the complete cash statement up to the 31st of March. I have sent for it and will give the minister the total. The total is all it gives, but we want the items that make up that total.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is getting to be a farce—

Mr. DUFF: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the objector to the flags agrees with me.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. DUFF: I wish to object to any such remarks from the hon. leader of the Opposition. I think that is a contemptible remark to make, and it could only come from a contemptible gentleman in this House. He is Meighen by name and mean by nature.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We will not disturb the level of the discussion by paying any attention to the hon. member.

Mr. DUFF: You have got down to a pretty low level.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It has been shown and, of course, hon. members have known, that the totals of these departmental expenditures are not only known but recorded up to the end of the month. Now we are voting the details. Let the minister be fair. He must agree that his department knows the expenditure for each detail. Otherwise, how can his department supply the Finance Department with the totals—you cannot get the totals unless you have the details. The minister may not have the details before him, but they are in his department, and he should have that information here before he asks the committee to vote this money.

Mr. GOOD: May I make a suggestion? This seems to me a very unfortunate condition of affairs. In order to satisfy everybody, would it not be better to let the item stand over until next week when the minister can have the information for the committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am quite prepared to accept the suggestion, and further, to go on with any estimates the minister may have complete.

Mr. BOYS: May I ask what is the practice in the payment of these amounts? Are they paid by the Finance Department in every instance, or some by the Finance Department and some by the minister's own department? If they are all paid by the minister's own department, he does not have to go to the Finance Department, for he will have a complete record himself. I presume that when the Deputy Minister of Finance prepares this statement in the Gazette, what he has before him is the expenditure in detail in the Public Works and other departments; this he audits in some way, then signs the statement, and it is printed. If that is the case, the minister must have in his own department the information we are asking for.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have the details in the department and the totals are supplied to the Finance Department. There is no question about that.

Mr. BOYS: Then they can easily be got.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Are there any of these items on which the minister can give us the details? If so, I have no objection at all to going on with them.

Item stands.

Harbours and Rivers—Nova Scotia, $182,680.

Mr. MEIGHEN—Can the minister give us the expenditure for last year?

Mr. FIELDING: I do not see how the minister can give the expenditure for last year, because these votes are not for continuing the service. Wherever you are continuing the service, you could give the information as to each item.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There would be only three in which he could give the information; the rest are new.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It would appear that last year the total amount voted for harbours and rivers of Nova Scotia was $365,000, and that of that the amount not spent was $270,000, leaving the actual expenditure for last year the comparatively small amount of $95,000, in round figures. The proposal this year is to double that and bring the expenditure up to $182,000. We treated these improvements just as we treated our expenditure on public buildings. It was considered that they should be pared down to the very core, and that unless an expenditure on harbours and rivers was an absolute necessity, it should not be made at all. We treated post offices and all public buildings in the same way; not a single new building appeared in the estimates anywhere. This year public buildings have been similarly treated in the estimates. Glancing over them I see no provision for new public buildings. But here is a proposal to double last year's expenditure for harbours and rivers. I think we should have a good deal of information before we agree to doubling our expenditure in the province of Nova Scotia, notwithstanding the fact that Nova Scotia did return a solid block of supporters of this Government.

Mr. FIELDING: If the hon. gentleman's idea is that this expenditure is being doubled, he is entirely mistaken. If it is thought desirable to have a statement of the actual expenditure on those items, and the hon. member wishes the vote to stand over, I have no objection, but I am perfectly sure he is mistaken in his calculations.

Mr. HANSON: If you deduct the amount of $270,000 appropriations not required for 1922-23, from $365,900, the amount in the third column, it leaves exactly $95,000, representing what has been expended. That seems to me to follow as day follows night. If it does not, the estimates are entirely misleading.

Mr. FIELDING: This term "appropriations not required" is misleading hon. gentlemen. It does not mean anything of the kind. It is a mere book-keeping entry in balancing the accounts so that we may show the total appropriation of last year on one side and the estimated expenditure of the new year; but it does not imply that all that sum was voted and not expended. If my hon. friends have got that idea I hope the minister will bring down a statement showing what the total expenditure for that item in Nova Scotia is. It certainly does not mean what has been contended.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not wish the Minister of Finance to think I understood that because an item appeared in the "appropriation not required" for this year none of the money was spent last year. I understand the matter exactly as the Minister of Finance does. It means that the items that were in last year amounting to that sum are not in this year.

Mr. FIELDING: Certainly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But still we ought to have—and I understand we do have it or the minister would not have called this item—details of what actually was spent.

The CHAIRMAN: The first item is:

Baddeck—repairs to wharf, $3,500.

Mr. MEIGHEN: These are new items and of course we cannot ask for details of what was spent last year because there was no expenditure.

Mr. HANSON: Under the head "Harbours and Rivers, Nova Scotia" we ought to know what was spent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We ought to know what was spent under the head of this entire item, No. 155, and charged to that vote last year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I can have that information prepared and brought down at the next sitting, I have not got it here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then the item had better stand.

Item allowed to stand.

Prince Edward Island, $39,700.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister give us the information as to the amount spent last year on the total of this item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If my right hon. friend is insistent on this information it will require considerable time before we will be able to proceed with these estimates. I understand it is an unusual request, one that has not been made before, and compliance with it will involve a considerable amount of work. This item will therefore have to stand like the other one.

Mr. CANNON: Before the item is allowed to stand, will the minister state to this committee what official in his department is supposed to prepare the information respecting the estimates for the Public Works Department to be submitted when we go into committee on them and particulars regarding them are asked for by hon. members?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The staff of officials in the department known as the "Estimates Branch" prepare this information for use in the House.

Mr. CANNON: Then that staff ought to be improved.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would suggest that, next year, if the minister hopes to be in his office, he adopt the plan that I feel certain from memory was adopted in the Interior Department, in accordance with which the items appeared in a series of columns and there was one which gave the expenditure, if not for the year before, up to the last date on which it could be given, and that applied throughout.

Mr. FIELDING: My recollection is that the information is not commonly given. I am not objecting; in any case where an hon. member desires information it is our business to produce it; but I rather think the question asked in this case is an unusual one. The estimates are brought down and weeks elapse before the minister is able to bring them before this committee, and in the interval there is a change every day in the amount expended. The information sought by my hon. friend is not usually asked. I am not objecting to it. I think perhaps in a particular case when an hon. member asks for such information, I would give it to him even though this involves holding the estimates over to meet his wishes. I repeat that I am not objecting; I believe in giving the fullest information to the House, even when it is not reasonable.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Surely the Minister of Finance does not suggest that it is unreasonable to ask for the amount expended the year before, months after the year has expired, subject to any reservation that might reasonably have to be made. The minister says it is not usual. That, of course, is a matter of opinion. I will not stand here and say it is always done. I know I have given the information frequently. And I do say this—it is manifestly the most important information the committee could ask. It may be that information manifestly the most important is not always asked, but I know it is often asked, and I know it should be asked. The minister says the information will have to be revised from day to day. Not at all. If we came here a month from now no one would expect information but to the end of March. If we were here a month earlier, no one would expect the information quite to the end of March, but we should expect it to the end of February. We expect such information as makes up the total that is furnished to the Department of Finance. That is all we ask. That does not need any day-to-day revision at all. I am not doing this—I do not think the Minister of Finance had any impression that I have—to embarrass the minister in the least. I want the information—and it should go forth adequately—as to what was spent last year for the purpose of throwing some light on what should be voted now. There has been very much reduction already and in the light of the information to be given there may possibly be more estimates to be reduced.

Mr. FIELDING: The information that is asked for is usually given in the Auditor General's Report at the end of the year. My right hon. friend is trying to anticipate by a year. That may be a very commendable object, but I am sure the question is a very unusual one. I cannot recall an occasion when the request has been made as my hon friend makes to-day. However, I am not going to object to it; members of Parliament should be given all the information they desire.

Mr. BOYS: Will it involve any extra work to give the information to the end of any month? Because, if I am not misinformed, under the prevailing practice, a statement is prepared at the end of every month containing all these details and is handed to the Finance Department. Of course, if the preparation of such a statement meant costing the country a great deal of money there might be some objection to it. But if I am rightly informed no more work will be involved in preparing such a statement for the House than is necessitated by the preparation of the statement given to the Finance Department?

Mr. FIELDING: The information given to the Finance Department consists only of totals, in order to make a general statement of the financial condition of the country; but if each item is to be set forth from time to time giving what has been expended in every case up to a given date it will involve a good deal of work and will not serve any good purpose.

Mr. BOYS: If I am wrong I want to be corrected, but it seems to me that before the Deputy Minister of Finance puts his signature to the statement referred to he must have an itemized account from every department showing exactly what the expenditure is. The Minister of Finance shakes his head. I realize that he knows far more about this matter than I do. It would seem to me, however, to be a most extraordinary thing that the Deputy Minister of Finance should certify, as he does over his own signature, the total expenditure for each department without having the details supplied to him from each department showing what the total for the month is. They give it for the month and for the year. Let me give one illustration; we are dealing now with the Department of Public Works. The statement I have is only down to 28th February, but there is one available for 31st March and it is certainly published, for I saw it myself. We find that for the month of February the total is given at $948,995.92. Is it not perfectly manifest that there must be a statement with details furnished which permits of arriving at that total?

Mr. FIELDING: There must be a statement in the Public Works Department to make the total, but it does not follow, in publishing this statement, that we deal with totals. It is not necessary to do so. My hon. friend omitted to read—I am not complaining because he did not reach it—something which is always put in with that statement. I had a hazy recollection of it, and I find it appears in this statement and reads:

> The above statement represents only receipts and payments which have passed through the books of the Finance Department up to the last day of the month.

Mr. BOYS: Quite so.

Mr. FIELDING: And we get those statements in the other departments, and have to refer to them for details.

Mr. BOYS: I quite agree with the hon. minister, and, if I rightly understand the matter, this relates to cash items. I am told that, between the departments, they have some credit system, for which reason these statements are not complete, and, although the fiscal year ends 31st March, because of the credit system prevailing between the departments we cannot be certain of the totals until these credit systems are squared in some way. I quite appreciate that, but the minister does not get my point. All I am saying is that in the department we are now dicussing, which is Public Works, for the month of February the total expense was $948,995.92, and for the year, up to that date, $8,098,664.82. Surely there must be some statement with details which shows how these figures are arrived at, and we should have that statement.

Mr. FIELDING: That statement is in the Public Works Department, and you can take the totals and compare them without much labour, but if you are going over the pages of the estimates, taking all the estimates, taking every item every month, all that has been expended, all that I can say is that, while you have been anticipating the report of the Auditor General, you are going to add a considerable amount to the labour of the department. Whether the game is worth the candle is a question.

Mr. BOYS: The only statement I am asking for is the one on file with the department, which is completed for the purpose of this financial statement published every month, which statement is given by the particular department to the Finance Department. I admit it might be a month old, but it could not be more than a month old. That is not going to entail any extra labour on the part of anybody, but will give the information we want.

Mr. FIELDING: In view of the desire of the hon. gentleman, I am quite content that the minister shall make an effort to procure it, and, if that is the disposition of the hon. gentleman with regard to this whole estimate, we might as well pass this estimate and get on to another, so that I will ask the House—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If we give the hon. leader of the Opposition the total expenditure on each vote, rather than each item, would that be sufficient?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would not feel like holding the House, if the hon. minister can give the totals, but the item would be more useful if we had the details. I refer to the totals for Nos. 144 and 145. If the hon. gentleman is getting the details for to-morrow, one by one, there is no reason why it should not be brought down.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the total vote, but that can be had within a reasonable time. If the total vote for each item is required, it will take up a considerable time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If it is going to delay the work of Parliament, I will not ask for it, but if the hon. minister will give the totals for each vote in item 144, without going to any special labour, up to as late a date as he has it for each item, so that we can get the fair estimate for the year, that will be satisfactory.

Mr. DUFF: Take for instance item 156, referring to Prince Edward Island; there is absolutely no information which the minister can bring down to-morrow, or at any time, with regard to all those items. There is a new item for repairs to wharfs and breakwaters, and consequently the minister has no information in his office, except what is contained in his estimate. Therefore, there is no reason why that item should not pass. Then take the item for Nova Scotia, $182,000 odd, every item is new except harbours and rivers generally. Every item from Quebec to Yarmouth Bar —I am not referring to any particular bar —is new. For that reason, I think we could very well pass these items, and if the hon. gentleman wants any information about "Harbours and rivers generally, $60,000," the minister could bring down the information and details with regard to the item. It is impossible to get information as to every item in the Nova Scotia vote. The same remark applies to New Brunswick. The only item with reference to which the minister has any information as to the expenditure is the fifth item in the list, "Harbours and rivers generally, $40,000." The first item, "Black's Harbour, wharf extension, $8,200; Burnt Church, repairs to wharf, $900," and every item in the list is new work, except "Harbours and rivers generally." The same remark applies to Quebec. Every item in that long list totalling $396,000 on page 40 is new work except "Harbours and rivers generally, $75,000." What is the use of moving that the committe rise and report progress on the estimates of the Public Works Department when we can get through a lot of work? If the Opposition desires certain details, the information can be obtained. The same remarks apply to Ontario. I notice that the Government have been good to that province. They give them $398,-000 odd. All these items are new and some of them very large. The amount for North Bay is $30,000, and Owen Sound $34,000, Port Colborne, $75,000. That is almost as much as the whole vote for Nova Scotia. I have no objection to it, but the minister can give no information about it. The only item which he can give information about is the fifth item, "Harbours and rivers generally, $65,000." The same remark applies to Manitoba. There is only one item there, "Harbours and rivers generally, $15,000," on which this committee can get any information. Saskatchewan and Alberta, item 161, are given $21,000 for harbour and rivers generally. That is the only item for those provinces, and I presume if the Opposition want the information they can get it on the whole item. Then the vote for British Columbia is $193,000, all for new work, except $95,000. It seems to me there is no necessity for us to delay this committee. We can pass all the items with the exception of those to which I have referred for harbours and rivers generally.

Mr. GOULD: While these large sums are under consideration, I should like to interject the remark that we all have recollections of the time when agriculture stood up and asked for certain appropriations and assistance in the various districts and there was more or less criticism from different quarters. The items under discussion pertain particularly to urban centres—

Mr. DUFF: Not at all.

Mr. GOULD: To a great extent.

Mr. DUFF: No.

Mr. GOULD: The agricultural districts provide a very fair proportion of the funds required to meet these expenditures. As the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) suggests, the Manitoba and Saskatchewan appropriation in this connection might well be continued because it is a small amount.

As a matter of fact, I think those provinces deserve a little more money in this connection.

Mr. DUFF: How many breakwaters are there in Saskatchewan?

Mr. GOULD: The amount voted for the province of Ontario under the present appropriation should satisfy even the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), who protests vigorously that Ontario does not receive her fair proportion of the revenue. It is only just to interject the remark that agriculture, while it has not said very much this afternoon in this regard, has its eyes open, and is following the debate with much interest.

Mr. MACLAREN: Is it possible for the minister to bring forward item No. 157, New Brunswick, this afternoon? It would be convenient if he could do so.

Mr. FIELDING: I think we shall have to adopt the same principle as regards all hon. members. If we select a province and select an item for the convenience of one member, others will want other items brought on. I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) is reasonable. There are many items that might go through without discussion; but if my hon. friends opposite wish to delay them, let them all be delayed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The point which the hon. member makes is that, in connection with items that are wholly new, items that are not a continuation of last year's appropriations, we might go on; but the exceptions are far more than he stated. There are always the appropriations not required. In connection with the new items, it is of some importance to know what was spent under the whole appropriation of last year; in fact, that is of more importance than any other single piece of information. Consequently, I would not very seriously object to going on with the new items; but I do not think any time would be saved, because it takes very little time to have these considered and passed after we have information as to the total amount spent last year under the appropriation.

Mr. FIELDING: I think, instead of putting the items through en bloc, we can hold over, not the whole item, but any particular item for a province, concerning which item any further information is needed. Subject to that, we might go on and put them through.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will illustrate what I mean. Supposing it turns out that in New Brunswick, although $118,000 was voted, we spent only $42,000. In that event, it would seem to be the part of wisdom to consider the items very carefully before voting all these sums for new items. The same thing applies to Ontario, Quebec and every other province.

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend will realize that each item must stand on its merit, and that what was spent last year will make no difference. If a particular wharf requires repairs, the question, whether we are willing or not to vote the money for that purpose, must depend on its merits.

Mr. DUFF: These are not new items. These are wharves or breakwaters constructed, perhaps, ten, twenty or thirty years ago, and the amounts put in the estimate for their repair are very necessary. During the last seven or eight years, it would have been a great deal better had more money been spent on breakwaters in this country. These breakwaters were allowed to go to wreck and ruin, with the result that larger amounts have to be inserted in the estimates. These large amounts would not have been necessary had proper care been exercised when the breakwaters needed slight repairs. There is, however, no reason why items which are new should not be passed. The leader of the Opposition is quite right in asking for information as to the total amount expended. That can be given on Monday when the Minister of Public Works will also explain expenditures in connection with harbours, rivers and improvements generally; but I do not think it is fair that the committee should rise and report progress on these new items when no information can be given by the department.

Mr. FIELDING: My suggestion is that we return to the question of harbours and rivers, take each item individually, and if, in any case, there is a desire for further information which can be given later, we can hold over that item.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If there is no other minister ready to go on,—

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, there is.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then I think it would be better to go on with a minister who can give information and let the other minister come back later.

Mr. FIELDING: Very well. We will call an item of the estimates of the Minister of Justice, and take up his estimates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would suggest that we take New Brunswick.

Mr. DUFF: Nothing doing.

Mr. FIELDING: We will not agree to that.

Mr. DUFF: The right hon. gentleman does not get anything like that off on us.

Mr. MACLAREN: As regards New Brunswick, my remarks were going to refer to what was not in the estimate.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Administration of Justice—Supreme Court of Canada:—

Contingencies and disbursements, salaries of officers, (sheriffs etc.), books, magazines, etc., for judges, not exceeding $300, $7,500.

Law books and books of reference for library, and binding of same, $10,000.

Printing, binding and distributing court reports, $10,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the minister give us last year's expenditures on these and also explain why an increase is asked for?

Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice): The registrar reports as follows:

I am asking for an additional $2,000 on account of law books. There have been no changes in the requisition for this item for some fifteen years, notwithstanding the increase in the price of law books, but as a matter of fact I have been running behind in recent years and carrying over some of my obligations into the next succeeding year, and have not bought so freely as I felt the requirements of the library demanded. For this purpose I require the additional amount.

You will also see that the amount for printing and binding the Supreme Court reports is now placed at $10,000. This item practically appears only by reason of the requirements of the Audit Act as the results from the sales of the reports to the Law societies and others, plus the value of the stock on hand for future requirements, will equal the amount of this vote.

It is only a question of audit.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is just one thing to which I should like to draw the minister's attention. It is something that I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is interested in and that again shows the necessity for a reform which we have already discussed. I think my hon. friend and I are entirely at one as regards the necessity of the Finance Department having some real control over expenditures and the real necessity of having a proper system of pre-audit. The letter that has been read from the registrar shows that that officer of the Supreme Court does not conceive himself bound by the appropriations which are voted for his department. Instead of keeping within the appropriation, he goes on and carries over liabilities. I am surprised to see that in connection with such a high tribunal. The Supplementary Estimates which were tabled last night show that on this very head, as to the further amount required for publication of the Supreme Court reports, they overdrew their account last year no less than $6,000, and I suppose the Minister of Finance has to pay it. How long has the matter been dealt with in the way the registrar points out? Are we cleaning up everything now with that $6,000?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: When we come to the supplementary estimates I shall be able to explain that. This has been running for years now.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It has been running behind some years and that is what I want to find out.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would gather from the letter from Registrar Cameron that all the money was spent last year on each of these three items, and more than the vote.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: More than the vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then I would suggest to the minister, that, in pre-election years at least, he instruct the registrar to keep within the vote and not spend the money himself and have it charged against the late administration that did not authorize him to do so at all.

Item agreed to.

Exchequer Court of Canada, $10,833.34.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The item does not seem objectionable on the face of it. How much of the vote was spent last year?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The contingencies were all spent. The money voted was sufficient to meet all obligations for the year. The details are found at page L-7 of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. POWER: Last year when this item came up several members from Quebec city and district called the attention of the minister to the fact that in Quebec city at the present time in Admiralty cases the pleaders have to pay for justice. When a case comes up we must pay the fees of the judge from Montreal before he will consent to sit. I do not remember how much it is per day, but we have to pay it, and also the travelling expenses, before the judge will come to Quebec to deal with the matter. Judge Routhier, the judge in Admiralty in Quebec, has never been replaced. The Hon. Mr. Doherty, the late Minister of Justice, stated on several occasions that the matter was before him and that he intended to give it his best consideration. I hope the present Minister of Justice will see his way to appoint a judge in Quebec. At present Judge MacLennan comes from Montreal and must be paid his fees in advance before any cases are tried before him.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: By 9-10 George V, Chap. 59, section 2, it was provided:

> No salary shall be paid to any local judge in Admiralty of the Exchequer Court under the provisions of this section who is a judge of any provincial Superior Court. Provided, that the provisions of this subsection shall not apply to any Local Judge in Admiralty who was or is appointed before the coming into force of this act.

In November and December last judgeships in Quebec and Nova Scotia became vacant by the death of Sir Adolphe Routhier and the retirement of Judge Drysdale, and their successors, Judge MacLennan and Judge Mellish, receive no salaries as Judges in Admiralty. I did not know that the pleaders had to pay the fees of the judges. I will see what can be done to remedy this condition of affairs, which is somewhat extraordinary.

Mr. POWER: The situation is simply this, that before the judge will sit he must be paid his fees.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: On what date was Judge MacLennan appointed?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I do not know the exact date, but I can ascertain and inform my hon. friend later on. He was appointed last fall.

Item agreed to.

Yukon Territory, $36,800.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: There has been a slight increase in salaries. The former court stenographer, George Craig, received a living allowance of $1,800. Mr. A. G. Blankman has been temporarily appointed, at a salary of $2,100, 5 p.m. to replace Mr. Craig, who was retired under the Calder Act. Owing to reduction of business a decrease of $4,000 appears feasible in miscellaneous expenditures, which during the last few years have been going down.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much was spent of the vote last year?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The first three items were spent in full. Of the $20,000 voted for miscellaneous expenditures only $2,000 was spent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If only $2,000 was expended out of a vote of $20,000, it seems that a reduction of more than $4,000 is warranted this year. With the diminishing population of the Yukon, the per capita cost of administration has really become very great. I know that only a portion of it comes under the Department of Justice; a greater proportion comes under the Public Works and the Interior. I am safe in saying that a reduction of almost half was made in the Interior estimates, and in the Public Works Department the maintenance of that long telegraph line is the chief item. We find that the Yukon is costing us possibly $23 per head for the administration of justice alone. It is, of course, abnormal. I know the minister's difficulty: judges have been appointed for the Yukon; sheriffs have been appointed, and it is difficult to interfere with them. In fact, the judge is appointed for life, and unless he were transferred, any interference would be unfair. But I would ask the minister to consider, and to make effective at the earliest possible day if he deems it wise, the union for judicial purposes of the Yukon with British Columbia. If that was done, a judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia could attend to the requirements of the Yukon, with great saving to the national treasury. As it is now, we keep up an entire judicial system there for what is really the population of a very modest-sized town.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We spent only $2,000 last year. I assure my hon. friend that we will not spend any more than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would it not be well to reduce the item to $10,000? The minister is new, and I do not like to place too much temptation in his way.

Mr. BLACK: The right hon. leader of the Opposition is correct in his suggestion that the population served by the courts of Yukon territory is much smaller than it was, but I do not think it may exactly be compared to that of a modest-sized town. The Yukon covers a very large area in which very important interests are involved; and I am not prepared to agree with the leader of the Opposition that the needs of justice would be well served by uniting, as it were, the judicial matters of the Yukon with those of British Columbia. It would entail the travelling of judges from British Columbia into that territory at various seasons of the year, and at great expense. In the earlier days of the Yukon we had there a comparatively large population. Of recent years the business of the mining of placer gold has decreased; the mines have passed into the hands of large companies which mine by means of up-to-date machinery at a smaller margin of profit than had been made by individual miners. But I am happy to be able to tell the committee that in very recent times,—since 1919—large discoveries of silver ore have been made in that territory; industry is fast developing, and I think I am quite within the mark when I predict that within two or three years we will have in the Yukon some of the largest silver-mining camps in the world. The administration of the Yukon is now carried on on the most economic basis—too much so, in some cases, for efficiency. One branch of the service that has been properly maintained there through all these trying years has been that of the Department of Justice, and I submit that it would be a mistake at this time to cut down this estimate. If the money is not required, it will not be spent. Notwithstanding the fact that the present administration is a new one, I myself have every confidence in the Department of Justice of this Dominion, under whatever party may be in power. I submit that the estimate should be allowed to stand as it is.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—expenses of litigated matters conducted within the Department of Justice, $33,000.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This amount varies from year to year and the expenditure cannot accurately be foreseen. The expenditure for 1919 was $1,200; for 1920, $7,600; for 1921, $13,000. The usual annual vote is $13,000. The additional $20,000 is asked this year to provide for the expenses of the reference to the Privy Council of the Newfoundland-Labrador boundary question.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—expenses under Pecuniary Claims Convention with U.S.A., $10,000.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: For some years previous to the war the annual appropriation for this service was $25,000, which covered the expenses of preparing the Canadian schedule of claims and one-half the remuneration of the United States and Canadian arbitrators, Mr. Charles Anderson and Sir Charles Fitzpatrick. As negotiations are pending between Great Britain and the United States for the preparation of a second schedule of claims, and a resumption of the activities of the convention is hoped for during the year, it becomes necessary to provide for working expenses. We have quite a list of claims that are to be submitted to that tribunal.

Mr. HANSON: I must confess I never heard of this convention before. Would the minister be good enough to explain just what it is?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The Pecuniary Claims Convention between Great Britain and the United States providing for the settlement by arbitration of pecuniary claims outstanding between the two countries was signed at Washington on 18th August, 1910. The first schedule of claims was prepared and several cases argued before the tribunal in 1914 and awards made in many cases, while in a few cases the awards have not been yet made. A second schedule was in course of preparation when the war interrupted the proceedings. The United States national arbitrator is Mr. Chandler Anderson; the Canadian, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick; the umpire is Mr. Fromageot, of Paris. Under the arrangements the Canadian Government is responsible for payment of half of the expenses and remuneration of the two arbitrators and the umpire at $40 per diem during the sittings of the tribunal.

Penitentiaries, $1,670,900

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The main items of increase are as follows:

$69,500—Statutory increases, retiring allowances and extra officers due to increased population which amounts to 421 inmates in the first 8 months of fiscal year 1921-22, or about twice what it was in the whole of the last fiscal year, (1920-21.) Statutory increases 1922-23 will total $18,690. Gratuities paid in 1920-21 totalled $71,709.41 and gratuities paid to date in the fiscal year 1921-22 total $20,710.00.

12 times current month's pay roll amounts to..	$559,295 76
Add statutory increases payable 1922-23..	18,690 00
Amount available for retiring gratuities and employment of any extra officers..	38,014 24
Amount asked in above estimate under this sub-head..	$616,000 00

$55,000—Increase asked for maintenance of convicts. This is necessary to provide for the food, clothing and medicines necessary for increased population. Population, March 31, 1920, 1,931; March 31, 1921, 2,150; November 30, 1921, 2,571. Most of this increase has taken place in the past few months and shows every sign of continuing in increasing ratio. In the month of November last, 93 was the total increase of all penitentiaries.

$133,000—Increase asked for completion of buildings now under construction, or urgently required, due altogether to the increase in population. Less than four years ago our population was 1,463, and it is about 2,600 to-day.

Mr. CHURCH: I do not wish to criticise these items at all. No doubt the money is necessary, but there is one matter I wish to bring to the minister's attention. I have received from different organizations a number of communications in support of prison reform which I am going to hand to the minister. Canada is away behind the times in this respect. After all is said and done, the war taught Canada a lesson, and particularly did the Red Cross, which through its noble work discharged seventy-five per cent of the soldiers passing through its hands, fit to go back to the front. The population of these penal institutions are an economic wastage in Canada. Many men steal to-day trivial things who would not think of doing it if it were not for the hard times and being out of work, and they are sent to these institutions. Their wives and children suffer and are left to shift for themselves.

I would like to know from the minister what is being done in Canada along the line of prison reform. I appreciate the fact that this Government has been in office only a few months, and I suppose the minister has been over-worked and perhaps may not be in a position to give me any information to-day, but he has a number of technical experts in his department and during the recess at all events they should be able to gather some information along this line. What about the commission's findings being adopted at Kingston?

I received a pamphlet and report from the federal government at Washington only the other day showing what they are doing all over the United States to restore these people to a useful civil life. Fancy!—a postman, a returned soldier in my constituency, who stole $1.27 out of a letter because he was paid a small salary and his bonus was cut off—and it was a deplorable thing to cut the war bonus off postmen's salaries—was hauled before the police court, and although a petition was presented in his favour by the Salvation Army signed by one hundred and twenty-seven business men on the street where he delivered letters, this young soldier. hard-up, unable to make ends meet on his small salary—coal $15.50 a ton and so on—was sent down by the magistrate for three years. The magistrate said, "I have no discretion," he felt he had to send the man down. This young soldier has a wife and family. In the United States, in the Old Land, in Australia, and New Zealand, they are taking up prison reform in a very vigorous way. The minister should send his experts down to Atlanta, Georgia, to see what they are doing there. A prisoner works at some useful trade and can earn up to $18 a week, and his wife and children do not suffer. Toronto has gone into this question of prison reform and has established two municipal farms, at a cost of nearly $1,000,000, on Yonge street, one for men and another for women. This jail farm is about 800 acres in extent, and I wish some of the Progressives would come up and see that work. They would learn something useful on prison reform because it is an up-to-date farm run in a model way. There is a farm for women as well, about two miles from the men's farm and similarly conducted. They can earn a living there and some of them receive $12 and $14 a week for the work they do. Their families get what they can in money. I only mention this to-day because I am afraid that a number of the men appointed at the head of these penitentiaries have not the necessary technical qualifications. I do not say this or that government is blameable, but we had a government of the same type of politics before and I know some of the appointments they made. All the governments have been in the same category and have done little or nothing for modern prison reform. The adoption of patronage in connection with this particular department is entirely wrong—there should be no patronage at all. I know a liveryman, a man who kept a livery stable in an Ontario town, who was appointed to one of these institutions out west. He was afterwards transferred to one of the largest institutions in another province. He had no technical training and was appointed on the patronage basis.

Mr. CANNON: Would my hon. friend permit me a question? Does he mean that this Government or the late government was exercising patronage to send people to the penitentiary?

Mr. CHURCH: I do not want to answer for any government—all governments are alike in the matter of patronage. Patronage is the only thing they consider when making these important appointments. Politics should be entirely eliminated when it comes to the consideration of appointing leaders and officials for institutions of this kind. The trouble is that when commitments are made to these institutions the families of those sent down in many cases are the ones that suffer and many become a charge on the municipalities and charities of this country. I am not blaming the present Government and my friends opposite in connection with this matter any more than past governments, but I do say that we want to get somewhere on this particular question. The Government, in the recess of Parliament, should get together and take this matter up and start some prison reforms. Toronto is doing this reformation work in the interests of society. It is a prime necessity to get this work made Dominion-wide and where possible re-establish these people back as good citizens.

It is necessary to recover this economic wastage that has gone on all these years in Canada.

Some of these individuals when rescued would work at some useful employment and thus provide for themselves and their families, and at the same time cease to be a charge on their friends and society. I appeal to the minister to take this matter up and seek to provide a method of checking this human wastage that is going on. Think of youths of sixteen being sent to these institutions. Only the other day I read in the Montreal Gazette of a boy at Fredericton on his sixteenth birthday being sent to one of these penitentiaries in New Brunswick. Is that a proper institution to care for youths of that age? This child may not have had a proper start in life; he may have literally been dragged up without being brought into contact with any beneficent or humanizing influence. Such institutions are not proper places to care for them. Last year I wrote the then Minister of Justice on the subject and enclosed some communications sent to me on the subject. The present minister will find the documents on file in the department because it resulted in a communication being sent to the government of the maritime provinces where they have not a gaol farm or a proper institution, I understand, for caring for those of the age mentioned. If the minister would only send an official down to Atlanta, Georgia, as I suggested, he would learn what excellent work is being carried on there. It is an education to learn how successfully they are caring for human wrecks and rehabilitating them in society. When that stage is reached they no longer become a charge on the public and are able to care for their families and are restored to society. I sincerely hope the Minister of Justice will take this matter up.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. LOGAN: The subject which has just been discussed should be very seriously taken up, but this, I think, is scarcely the right time. The treatment of criminals, as we all know, is changing all over the world, and in my opinion the treatment of criminals throughout Canada deserves consideration by this House. I think it would be well worth while to appoint a special committee to consider the question of penitentiary reform, if you can call it that. Under our present system a man may be committed to penitentiary for some small offence although perhaps he may not have been in his right mind at the time. Nevertheless he is made to suffer as well as his wife and family who are bereft of his companionship and support.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Would not the Criminal Code have to be re-considered too in that connection? That seems to be an important point.

Mr. LOGAN: Doubtless my hon. friend is right but I throw out the suggestion to the Minister of Justice to appoint a committee of this House to consider the matter of amending the provisions of the Criminal Code with respect to the treatment of prisoners in this country and any other questions relating thereto. While on my feet may I be permitted to pay a tribute to one of the penitentiary wardens in Canada who I believe is endeavouring, in so far as he can, to carry out a system of humanitarian treatment of prisoners, and that is the present warden of the Dorchester penitentiary. I think it is only just to him to state that he is doing splendid work in that institution along that line. Our idea should be, not to keep a man in gaol simply to punish him for crime; we should endeavour to restore him to society as a reformed citizen. That is the kind of work that is being successfully carried on to-day by the warden of Dorchester penitentiary, and I hope that his splendid example will be followed by other wardens throughout Canada.

Mr. GAUVREAU: I brought this question to the attention of the Minister of Justice the other day, when I asked if the Government was prepared to establish prison farms in the interest of young men condemned to the penitentiary. The answer of the Minister of Justice was that the matter will be dealt with by an amendment to the Criminal Code. I think this announcement should settle the question for the present.

Mr. McBRIDE: Do I understand the Minister of Justice to say that the number of penitentiary inmates is increasing?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Mr. McBRIDE: And that under prohibition?

Mr. CHURCH: I would suggest the desirability of amending the statutes so as to provide that the grand jury when assizes are held should have the power of visiting these institutions in the towns or cities where they may be located. There should be some protection for the inmates of these institutions; it will not do to leave that duty entirely to inspectors. They have this principle in Great Britain where, under the law, a Grand Jury can enter and inspect any one of these institutions. What protection to the inmates does the present system provide? The officials know when the inspector is coming. The Grand Jury is a bulwark of liberty, and should be given the right to enter and inspect these federal institutions in the interest of society.

The CHAIRMAN: I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that this item is for expenditure upon the penitentiaries; it has no relation to the amendment of the Criminal Code, or questions dealing with the suppression of crime.

Mr. CHURCH: All right, I will bring the matter up again.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I entirely agree with the general sentiments expressed by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church) in relation to the matter dealt with by him, but I rise for the purpose of again pointing out the necessity for fiscal reform. These estimates were fully considered by the House last year and the amount was set aside which could be legally used for each and every division of the department. Nevertheless, I notice from the supplementary estimates brought down for the last fiscal year that the department has committed itself to the extent of $150,000 more than Parliament gave it any right to do, and that was done without the passing of a Governor General's warrant. It is quite true we have to look after this amount, but there is a proper way of doing it, which will still leave the Finance Minister in a position to know where he stands. He is very apt to be in the position—and Parliament is apt to be in the position—of having to look after $150,000 of moneys which have been spent without the Governor General's warrant. It is a trouble which I had, which I do not think we ought to have, and which, I think, the present Minister of Finance will agree we ought not to have. I entirely agree that we will have to look after our obligations. I do not know that I can particularly congratulate the new administration upon the tremendous success they are making of immigration into the penitentiaries. That is a line of industry which has received an impetus in the last few months.

Mr. FIELDING: Not as late as that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think so. I think we have had an increase of 600 in the population of the penitentiaries—an increase of 30 per cent.

Mr. COOTE: What percentage of the inmates of the penitentiaries are foreign born and what percentage native born?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Two-thirds in the West and about one-third in the East for foreign born.

Item agreed to.

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—Capital expenditure, $75,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I had an idea that we had just finished with capital expenditures on account of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment; that, while we would have a lot of expenses, and properly so, in looking after the work, our capital expenditure was at an end.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment): This amount of $75,000 includes $30,000, which is part of the $235,000 voted last year as a grant to the Calydor Sanitarium. Members of Parliament who were here last session will remember that, by reason of the recommendation made by the Re-establishment Committee last year, an amount of $35,000 was put in the estimates as a grant to the Calydor Sanitarium. It was supposed to represent one-half of the cost of an extension to it. The amount has been reduced by $5,000, because it is expected the extension will cost $60,000. I understand the authorities of the sanitarium are having the plans prepared and work will be proceeding shortly. An agreement has been arrived at, that the department shall have the privilege of sending there, I think, as many as twenty patients for special observation. The sanitarium is very well equipped for that work. The balance of $45,000 will cover ordinary capital expenditure on a very small scale. As my hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Finance will notice, there is a very large deduction. It is supposed to cover fixtures, equipment, and so on, for the hospital in the sanitarium. We have eighteen different hospitals under our care.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can the minister inform the House what expenditure was made under that head last year?

Mr. BELAND: $161,000 was spent last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Out of a vote of $235,000?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Care of patients and medical examination of pensioners, $4,000,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can the minister inform us how many patients have been looked after as of to-day, and how many were looked after as of the same date a year ago?

Mr BELAND: On the 31st December, 1920, we had 5,893 in-patients, and 8,599 out-patients On the 31st December, 1921, we had 5,450 in-patients, and 5,785 out-patients. On the 31st December 1921 we had in our hospitals and in hospitals with which we have definite arrangements, a total of 5,930 patients.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Altogether?

Mr. BELAND: Altogether. There is a large number of out-patients, of course, who are not included here, but who come somewhat irregularly into the hospitals to receive treatment.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Do I understand the minister correctly as stating that we have now 5,930 patients as compared with something like 14,000 in 1920?

Mr. BELAND: No, the last statement covers only in-patients. We have 5,930 in-patients. If you want the whole number of patients that were being attended on the 31st December outside and inside, you will have to add 5,785 to 5,930.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have difficulty about the figures, because the minister first gives me as of December 31, 1921, 5,450 in-patients and 5,785 out-patients. Then he says that altogether this makes 5,930, as I understood it. That does not jibe with the other figures.

Mr. BELAND: Yes, there are 480 out-patients included in the 5,930. I should put my hon. friend right. He is, in one instance, including the out-patients. There is a very small difference in the number of patients in hospital between the 31st December, 1921, and the same day of the previous year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: 440, is it not?

Mr. BELAND: About 440.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the actual expenditure last year?

Mr. BELAND: Last year, to April 20, $3,885,082.41.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is against the appropriation of $5,250,000.

Mr. BELAND: That is not complete, I am informed, because the last accounts have not been received from the different hospitals.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That brings the accounts down to what date?

Mr. BELAND: The accounts that were in on the 20th of April.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is pretty late.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is it not a fact that, within the last year, a change has been made in the method of examining pensioners? Has the department not done away with certain district officers and substituted a board for the examination of pensioners?

Mr. BELAND: I am informed that there is no change in this regard.

Mr. CALDWELL: Has there not been a change within the last two years?

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend is quite right. Travelling boards were established about two years ago.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does the minister find that that cuts down the expense of this branch of the service; that it is giving as good satisfaction and that it is as efficient as the former method?

Mr. BELAND: It provides for an examination by a board instead of by an individual doctor. It is considered that a little economy is effected thereby.

Mr. CALDWELL: Has the minister found any criticism regarding the services rendered by the travelling board?

Mr. BELAND: I must admit that a certain number of complaints have come into my office, but not so very many.

Mr. ANDERSON: Is it the policy of the department to pay those who have less than 14 per cent disability a lump sum, and to tell them that their pension will be discontinued?

Mr. BELAND: A pensioner, who has a disability ranging between 5 and 14 per cent, both inclusive, is at liberty to commute his pension for a lump sum which, of course, is determined by the Board of Pension Commissioners and is rated according to the degree of disability. A pensioner, with a disability above 14 per cent, has no option.

Mr. ANDERSON: And with a disability below 5 per cent he has no option?

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend is quite right. A man with a disability below 5 per cent has no option; his case is settled by payment of an amount, which is called a gratuity, depending upon the extent of disability.

Mr. ANDERSON: Has that change been made in the last year or the last few months?

Mr. BELAND: If my memory serves me aright, the commutation provision was adopted by this House in 1920, the session before last, upon the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON: The point I wish to make is that certain members of the Expeditionary Force, who are receiving pensions and who are rated at 5 per cent disability, received notices that they could have the privilege of having their pensions paid monthly or of taking so much as commutation. Those who took their pension monthly and who received it in that way for a year or more, were finally told that they would be given a certain commuted amount and discharged from the service.

Mr. BELAND: That is only in case of disability below 5 per cent, and, as my hon. friend is aware, it is in accordance with the provisions of the Pension Act.

Mr. CALDWELL: In case a man, who has under 14 per cent disability, commutes his pension and his disability subsequently becomes greater, is he not entitled to go back for further examination and entitled to a pension for that increase of disability?

Mr. BELAND: If his condition changes, he is entitled to re-examination, and then he may receive treatment or his pension may be increased, if that is deemed advisable by the board.

Mr. CALDWELL: But if his condition has not changed, he is not entitled to hospital treatment?

Mr. BELAND: Yes, he is always entitled to treatment, as long, of course, as the disability or the illness from which he suffers can be traced to his service.

Mr. CALDWELL: Notwithstanding the fact that he had commuted his pension and had received the lump sum?

Mr. BELAND Notwithstanding that.

Mr. CALDWELL: The reason I asked the question was this: Certain cases were brought to my attention where a man had been refused medical treatment in a hospital because of his having received final payment by way of commutation of his pension, and his disability had not increased.

Mr. BELAND: That must evidently be because the illness, of which he complained and for which he claimed treatment, was not recognized as being due to service.

Mr. CALDWELL: That might be possible.

Item agreed to.

Vocational expense, $85,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What amount was spent last year?

Mr. BELAND: Last year, only $154,900 was spent for vocational training.

Mr. MacLAREN: How many men underwent vocational training last year?

Mr. BELAND: On February 29th, 1920, the department had on strength for training purposes 17,222 disabled and 8,800 minors, or a total of 26,022. In the previous year there were only 16,000 disabled. On the 31st of December, 1920, there were 4,714 and on the 31st of December, 1921, only 605 disabled men and 29 minors, a total of 634. My hon. friend will notice that there is a big difference between 4,714 and 634.

Mr. CALDWELL: When did the time expire at which applications could be made for vocational training?

Mr. BELAND: On the 1st of February, 1920, unless the men are still on the strength.

Mr. CALDWELL: As the time has expired for applications for training what will the $85,000 be used for?

Mr. BELAND: The amount is to complete the training of men on the strength, but my hon. friend must remember that all men now receiving treatment are always admitted, regardless of the date of expiry previously set, if they wish to receive training.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—DAYLIGHT SAVING

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: Before moving the adjournment of the House, I desire to call attention to the fact that daylight saving comes into effect in Ottawa on Sunday. It was understood some time ago, in answer to a question, that while it was not proposed to make any general law on the subject, the policy of the Government was to adapt itself to the local decision in the matter of daylight saving. That being the case, I trust it is now generally understood that on Monday, when we meet again, we shall meet under the local municipal law. In other words, while there is nothing legal on the subject, we will observe daylight saving because it is the rule of the municipality.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the Government is acting wisely in following the example of the late government in this regard, as in all others, and I commend them. I cannot help observing that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was not at all influenced by the resolution of the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Kay), and so far from restraining municipal regulations we are, on the contrary, complying with them.

Mr. FIELDING: There have been cases in which the attitude of the late government was excellent, and they are so exceedingly rare that it is perhaps well that we should mention them. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister did well to move the adjournment and so shut off any comment I might make. We will observe on this side with interest, and the country will observe with pity and remorse, any departure of the present Government from the precedent of the late administration.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 6 p.m.

Monday, May 1, 1922

The House met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 61, respecting Niagara Bridge Company.—Sir Henry Drayton.

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 52, respecting The Canadian Transit Company.—Mr. Rankin.

Bill No. 53, respecting Itabira Corporation Limited, and to change its name to "Itabira Corporation."—Mr. Maclean (Halifax).

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 20, respecting the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec.—Mr. Charters.

ROOT VEGETABLES AND FERTILIZERS—POINT OF ORDER

On the Order for the first reading of a bill to regulate the Sale and Inspection of Root Vegetables—the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell):

Mr. SPEAKER: Before the hon. member proceeds I would point out that this Bill, "An Act to regulate the Sale and Inspection of Root Vegetables," and possibly also the third bill on the Order Paper, "An Act to regulate the sale of Agricultural Fertilizers," would come within rule 50 which provides:

> No bill relating to trade, or the alteration of the laws concerning trade, is to be brought into this House, until the proposition shall have been first considered in a committee of the whole House, and agreed unto by the House.

I would, therefore, ask the hon. member to let these bills stand. As his other bill on the Order Paper, a bill to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, seeks only to amend an act, he may proceed to introduce it by way of motion.

Bill stands.

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 62, to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

Mr. TOLMIE: Explain.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This bill provides for a rearrangement of the scale of indemnities paid upon animals slaughtered under the original act, in accordance with reductions in values. The new scale proposed will be subject to any change that the Committee of Agriculture or the House thinks it is desirable to make.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Will that apply to swine?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the first time.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I move that this bill be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization.

Mr. SPEAKER: That motion can only be made after the second reading of the bill.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I desire to call the attention of the Government to the delay or dereliction in bringing down returns to Orders of the House. I refer, first, to an order passed on the 24th March regarding correspondence between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Quebec Harbour Commissioners with regard to dismissals. The 24th March is now about five weeks and a half past. The correspondence, I am informed, consists of only three letters. I do not know why it takes over five weeks to have three letters copied.

The next to which I call attention is an order for production of the correspondence relating to the appointment of Sir Robert Borden as Canadian representative at the International Disarmament Conference. This was moved for by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) and amended to meet a fuller requirement by myself. While there would be more than three letters in this correspondence, yet there would be very few, sufficient perhaps to occupy an hour in the copying. That has been three weeks delayed.

Then there was an order passed on the 3rd of April for correspondence passing between the late government and Hon. E. C. Drury respecting the activities of Hon. Manning Doherty in England. That correspondence consists of two letters, but the External Affairs Department apparently has not yet had time to copy them.

There was an order passed on the 27th of March regarding the dismissal of employees at the Sorel shipyards. That would take longer in preparation, but I cannot see why it would take any length of time. There has been no return as yet.

There are others, notably the correspondence relating to the deportation of Lee Holland, the order for the production of which was passed on the 24th of March. There has been no response as yet. It is a mystery to me why more than one or two days should have intervened before that return was brought down. I am quite aware there have been orders passed by this House that required lengthy correspondence with people far away to be brought up to date, gathered in, and copied, but these to which I called attention are not in that category at all. I do not know why any one of them should have been delayed more than two or three days, and I think they should be brought down at once.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In regard to some of this correspondence, I may tell my right hon. friend that where it is marked secret or confidential it has been thought advisable and necessary to seek permission from the British Government to bring down such parts as the British Government are parties to. I refer now particularly to the correspondence relating to the appointment of Sir Robert Borden as representative at Washington.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the only instance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps my right hon. friend will remember in that connection that there was also correspondence with General Smuts of South Africa: the Government thought it advisable to communicate with General Smuts before bringing down that particular correspondence. These cables have occasioned delay, but I am happy to be able to inform my right hon. friend that the Government has permission to bring down practically all the correspondence. There are one or two communications that my right hon.

friend would probably like to see before they are placed upon the table. If so I would be glad to let him see them and he can exercise his own judgment as to whether they should be brought down; but in the opinion of the Government all the correspondence for which permission has been given should be brought down.

As to the other correspondence: It has been a little difficult to locate some of the communications which have been asked for. It is quite true, as my right hon. friend has said, that this correspondence ought to be available; but in making inquiries from the different departments we have been unable on two or three occasions to locate any of the correspondence. So far as correspondence in the Department of External Affairs is concerned, some of it has come to light one week, and some of it two or three weeks later. Of course an incoming minister has to rely on the officials of the department to get for him all the information that is required, if it is to be found. I will have inquiry made into all the cases my right hon. friend has mentioned, and if there is no special reason for delay the correspondence will be brought down immediately.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I might mention the correspondence as regards the Quebec Harbour Commission. That has all taken place under the present Government, and there should be no difficulty in getting it.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I thought this correspondence had already been tabled. My right hon. friend refers to letters exchanged between the Harbour Commission and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I understand?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Letters to the Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My right hon. friend mentioned the word "dismissal." There were no dismissals. As far as the Sorel shipyards are concerned, a question was asked in the House and answered. I do not know that any correspondence was asked for in that connection.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say "correspondence"; I said there was a motion for a return passed on the 27th of March in regard to the dismissal of employees at the Sorel shipyards. The return has not been brought down. The minister says there was no dismissal of any of the Quebec Harbour Commission. I hope he will not reaffirm that, unless he says that a request for resignation is not a "dismissal."

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think there is quite a difference between the two modes of proceeding. I know my right hon. friend was accustomed to the first mode during his time; we have not gone so far.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When I do a thing I like to do it directly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As regards the correspondence respecting the appointment of Sir Robert Borden I have it under my hand. I am quite prepared to lay it on the table at once unless my right hon. friend wishes it to stand. If he wishes to look it over and withhold any of it I shall hand it over to him to do so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know of no permanently confidential correspondence at all with which I was concerned in regard to the appointment, although there may have been some. I know of no reason why it should not be laid on the table. The hon. gentleman has read the correspondence, and therefore he is in a position to know whether there are letters of a confidential character which should be still withheld.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I see no reason why the correspondence should not be laid on the table.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend has read it, and I have not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am giving my right hon. friend the alternative. If he wishes to read it, I will give him the opportunity; if he does not, I will lay it on the table.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no request to make, because I remember nothing concerning it. My hon. friend must exercise his judgment and do as he thinks fit.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADA STEAMSHIP COMPANY—LIFE SAVING EQUIPMENT

Mr. ST. PERE:

1. Are Canadian navigation Companies doing business in Canadian waters compelled to comply with the terms of the Lavergne Act?

2. If so, why does the Canada Steamship Company, in many of its boats, omit to publish in both languages the advice or instructions, as to how to use life saving equipment?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. There is no legislation of the Parliament of Canada known as the Lavergne Act.

2. No information.

CIVIL SERVICE CLASSIFICATION

Mr. FONTAINE:

Why are many appeals regarding the Civil Service classification in the Post Office Department still in abeyance, and when will the results of such appeals be given?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

All personal appeals in the Post Office Department have been finally disposed of with the exception of a small number of cases in the Money Order Branch which were reinvestigated at the request of the department to determine if any error had been made in the final decision reached by the Trial Board in the original investigation. The supplementary reports referring to these are now before the Board of Commissioners and it is expected that they will be finally disposed of at an early date.

GRAND RIVER BRIDGE

Mr. SENN:

1. What repairs were planned by the engineers of the Public Works Department last year, to be undertaken on the Grand River bridge, at York, Ontario?

2. What was the estimated cost of said repairs?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1 and 2. The county of Haldimand was notified by letter dated February 18, 1922, that the Public Works Department did not intend to make any further expenditure on the Grand River bridge at York, Ontario, for the reason that this bridge is not one that should be maintained by the federal Government. The district engineer made an examination of the bridge and reported that, in his opinion, the replacement of the timber trestle for a length of 132 feet, approximately, with a reinforced concrete trestle, at an estimated cost of $6,500, was required.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION INTO CANADA

On the question being called:

Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Under what conditions and regulations are Japanese immigrants admitted into Canada?
2. In what way are the rights of Canadians in Japan limited as to ownership of land, franchise, mercantile pursuits, fishing, shipping (coastwise and foreign), mining, agriculture, and other pursuits and such as are engaged in by Japanese in Canada?
3. What is the number of Japanese immigrants that have entered Canada yearly in each of the ten years ending March 31, 1922?
4. How many Japanese have left Canada for Japan, each year, during the same period?
5. How many Japanese have returned to Canada from Japan each year during the same period?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Stands.

Mr. TOLMIE: Could the hon. minister tell me when I may expect an answer? I would like the information as soon as possible as the matter will come up later.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might say, in regard to this question as to certain rights of Canadians who obtain lands in Japan, that has necessarily been the subject of communication with the Foreign office in the Old Country, and we had some difficulty in getting replies which would enable us to make the returns my hon. friend is looking for, but I shall do the best I can to get the information as soon as possible.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT moved

For return showing a list of the names of the permanent employees of the Montreal Harbour Commission, the salary of each, date of appointment and salary on appointment, age, occupation, and the respective previous occupations of said employees.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This motion asks for the information which is contained in the answer to question No. 9, by Mr. Denis (St. Denis). I suppose the question might be dropped, and we will adopt this motion?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. MACLEAN (Prince):

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, contracts, tenders and other documents, relating to the employment or use of the tug "Pekin", and any other tug or tugs hired or used by the Government in connection with the Government dredges, in and around Prince Edward Island, from June, 1911, to March 31, 1922.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

For a copy of all papers, documents, correspondence and reports exchanged directly between the Health Department of Canada and J. A. Foisy, Dominion Drug and Chemical Company, and the North Eastern Drug Chemical, Limited, of Montreal, regarding narcotics reports in the years 1919-20-21, and principally reports made by the Mounted Police.

Mr. PARENT:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence and other documents exchanged between the Post Office Department at Ottawa, and the Officers of the said department at Montreal, and the Civil Service Commission, regarding the appointment of Mr. Taylor as Assistant Superintendent at Montreal Post Office.

TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

On the Notice of Motion:

Mr ARCHAMBAULT:

For a copy of all papers, documents, correspondence and reports exchanged directly between the Health Department of Canada and J. A. Foisy, Dominion Drug and Chemical Company, and the North Eastern Drug Chemical, Limited, of Montreal, regarding narcotics reports in the years 1919-20-21, and principally reports made by the Mounted Police.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, reading over this motion, I am somewhat doubtful as to the advisability of rendering public some of the reports made by the Mounted Police in connection with the traffic in narcotics in Canada. For that reason, until I have had an opportunity of discussing the matter with officials of my department, I would request that the motion stand.

Motion stands.

FINANCIAL CREDIT

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (East Calgary) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House a representative Parliamentary Committee should be appointed to investigate the basis, the function and the control of financial credit, and the relation of credit to the industrial problems.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I trust I may be permitted what may seem for a moment to be a digression, but which I consider to be a reasonable avenue of approach to my theme. I think it will be agreed that what we call the science of government trails far behind other sciences to-day, and this is due chiefly to its lack of facilities for experimentation. Not only are no means provided for scientific inquiry and experimentation with a view to improvement; but party government, as it has been conducted in the past, practically prohibits such. For instance, no allowance whatever is made for mistakes on the part of either a government or a government department. The ordinary Opposition feeds itself and grows strong on the mistakes of the Government in power, and consequently, a government is so afraid of making mistakes that it succeeds in making more of them than of, perhaps, anything else. This is a natural consequence, because, through sheer fear of mistakes, as a rule, not only a government, but everybody, would rather continue to make the mistakes that we know best how to make, than to risk a new way which, while it might possibly lead to a new mistake, on the other hand, might culminate in an improvement. In this way we continue, for example, to tax ourselves wealthy by a tariff, and that has been the policy of governments of this country for a long time. We continue to increase the national wealth through such a means as unemployment, and to borrow ourselves to opulence by paying an eternal interest on our credits which, if we would, we might use for nothing. So, perhaps, the greatest advance that could be suggested in this transition period, when all methods are crumbling in our hands and when thousands of new theories are being propounded, would be to establish what might be called a sociological laboratory. What the world, what the Canadian people, are asking for is analysis and demonstration, because they recognize that, by these means is found safety. These are the ways that are followed by other branches of science—by the chemist, the astronomer and the biologist. In what better way, for instance, could the agitators, generally, and the Bolshevist, the socialist, the single-taxer, and numerous others be settled than by giving a demonstration of either the fallacy or the value of what they are advocating? But we make no attempt to do such a thing; we go on drifting from one course to another until the crash comes, and then the nation is taking a leap in the dark, not knowing where it is going to land.

While the resolution which is before the House does not go so far as to ask for what I have termed a sociological laboratory which, if it were established, would, I admit, by the nature of things, be seriously limited in many important respects, yet it asks that provision be made by this Parliament for gathering data in connection with one very important factor in our national life, namely, the credit system. You will notice, Sir, that the resolution is so modest, so reasonable and so necessary, that I do not anticipate much objection to it, excepting that there may be amongst us those who are invincible opponents. I will read the resolution carefully in order that each one may have an opportunity of listening to it and of knowing whether there is anything objectionable in it or not. It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House a representative Parliamentary Committee should be appointed to investigate the basis, the function and the control of financial credit, and the relation of credit to the industrial problems.

This resolution, it will be observed, makes no rash demands; it does not even hint at establishing a new credit system or attempting to uproot the old. It merely asks for a committee to secure, for the benefit of Parliament, all possible information on a subject of vast importance, a subject with which this Parliament has to deal. Not only has this Parliament to secure credit for national purposes, but it decides by whom and on what basis the whole credit of Canada is to be handled by the banks. I therefore claim that this resolution is opportune. The Banking Act, I understand, is to be revised by this Parliament at the next session. Not only so, but the industrial machine has broken down; it has failed and is now failing to provide for the nation's requirements, and many are ascribing this failure on the part of the industrial machine directly to the credit system. If then, credit, its control, the manner in which it is issued, the rate at which it is issued, be deemed fundamental to industrial progress—and who will deny that those things are so fundamental? —and if it is considered to be such a complicated development of our industrial process that it baffles the average layman, surely the layman who is called upon to deal with this fundamental, complicated affair will not object to all the knowledge that it may be possible for him to attain on the matter. While dealing with the interpretation of the resolution, I might add that it also asks for a representative parliamentary committee. By that I mean simply that the various groups in this House shall have representation on any committee which this Parliament may see fit to appoint; that that committee may be selected with a view to having upon it members of the Government, of the Opposition, of the Progressives and of Labour.

I do not propose to enter into an analysis and criticism of the credit system that is in vogue, because to do that would be to anticipate the work of the committee which, I hope, will be appointed as a result of this resolution; but will say briefly that there are suspicions, of such import and to such an extent, of the credit system being one of the chief contributing factors to the present world-wide industrial collapse as to warrant any parliament in taking the step which this resolution calls for. No one would deny that we are to-day menaced with what might be called a lop-sided industrialism; that is to say, we have developed the power of production to such an extent that we can produce not only enough for the world's needs and our own national necessities, but more than could possibly be consumed, and through the control of credit by a few we have never been able to reap the full benefit of man's inventive genius. No sooner has some one invented a way to increase productive power than we find, through the decrease in purchasing power brought about by the credit system, that we are unable to avail ourselves of that which has been produced by the invention. And so, as I tried to point out in the speech which I delivered in reply to the speech from the Throne, credit has perhaps more to do with the present industrial collapse than anything else. The unemployment situation which we have heard so much about during the last two years at least has now reached a point which is serious, and I believe that the present credit system has more to do with that unemployment than any other single factor.

I desire in passing to call the attention of the House to one or two other points in connection with the credit system, and what I say in this particular regard will not be considered as giving an analysis of the system but merely as offering a comment or two touching some of the most important phases of the subject. I want to refer, for instance, to the gold standard or basis of value. Now, there are great signs indeed that the financiers of the world are going to make an attempt to bring back the old gold basis. I think most of us will agree that gold is neither a basis nor a real standard of value, for a standard of value must be constant,—it must be the same at all times. If you had a yardstick which to-day measured two feet four inches, to-morrow two-feet eight inches, next year three feet, and thereafter two feet six inches, or something like that, you could not possibly use it as a standard of measure. And yet that is precisely how the gold standard of value operates. The financiers are trying to bring back this standard, and it will be interesting for the committee proposed, if we are successful in having such a committee appointed, to find out how they purpose doing this. How can it be done? Let us look for a moment into the question.

The total amount of gold available in the world is £2,000,000,000. Now, the national debt of Great Britain alone is approximately £8,000,000,000. And yet we are going back to the gold basis of value when the national debt of one country alone is four times greater than the total amount of gold available in the world. As a matter of fact, our national credit is to-day the basis of our currency system, and it is appalling to me why we should see fit to exchange our own superior credit for the inferior credit of a bank, and have that charged to us at a high rate of interest.

The next point I want to emphasize is this: The banks are run on faith, there is much more faith than money in the banks; but so long as people are not conscious of that fact the banks are permitted to carry on. When we put money into a bank we expect to be able to have it produced to us as, when, and where, we desire it. But as a matter of fact the banks could not do that if every one should decide to demand his money. The banks therefore do business on the strength of the belief that people will not come back for their money, which is consequently lent out. The banks to-day are actually handling what might be called community power for private interest; and inasmuch as that community power so handled for private interest is very fundamental to the industrial life of the people, it is well worth while inquiring whether there is any possible means by which we can issue and control our own credit and thereby prevent individuals from using that which is essential to our national welfare.

The old idea was that credit was possible only by reason of the prior production of a surplus stock of food, clothing, etc., desired for consumption, by those who owned and might have consumed it, but preferred to save it. The idea of credit advanced by modern thinkers, on the other hand, is that credit is the power to produce goods as, when and where desired; that is, you are actually getting credit on the future producing and consuming potentialities of the nation; and it is not based on what you have already gathered in store. If we look at it from that point of view we shall find that Canada has a great credit power indeed. It has the power to produce a great deal more than it is producing to-day if it were desired. It has the plant, the natural resources and the workmen; and it has need or demand for consumable goods. Consequently, if we accept the latter theory of credit, this country's credit is very excellent.

Those who control credit—which I claim is community power, and which to-day is in the hands of individuals—dictate, for instance, whether a capitalist shall produce or shall not produce. They dictate what we shall and shall not produce, and they also control the purchasing power of the nation. The purchasing power is affected very materially by such acts as the creation of new money and the recalling of loans, and these result in stopping the wheels of industry. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, the Brussels Conference, held some two years ago, when the financiers of the world were in session. Professor Gustave Cassels, who is now one of the representatives at Genoa, said of that conference that it had been deliberately brought about by the leaders of finance in order to increase the value of money. They wanted to bring about deflation so that money might increase in value, and the average citizen or consumer would be called upon to pay the difference, the financiers not being affected by the alteration.

In conclusion I desire to make a suggestion. Hon. members may not agree with me, but I ask them, at any rate, to consider what I have to say as a possibility. I think it is possible that we could handle our own credit and lend it to ourselves, thus becoming a lending rather than a borrowing nation. Let me instance what I mean. I understand that we have just floated $100,000,000 worth of bonds in the United States. Now, what is behind that issue? Is not the real wealth of Canada back of it? If the real wealth of Canada be considered by Wall Street as being sufficient security for that loan, why should not Canada consider that is is sufficient for her own credit and lend the money to herself? Moreover, if we had lent ourselves this money, we should save, to begin with, $2,500,000, which these brokers earned by one-half of a day's work. That, I suggest, is rather a high-wage. Those of us who have been speaking about the high wages paid workmen will surely have something to say about paying two and a half million dollars for a half day's work in order that we may obtain a loan.

[Mr. Irvine.]

Now, are there no means by which we can issue our own credit on the strength of our own real wealth, thus cutting out brokers' commissions and the interest that we have to pay? That is one of the questions which, I would suggest, is necessary to be investigated by such a committee as this resolution calls for. If there is no better way than that which we are following now, we shall set our teeth and go on to the bitter end, dying gamely; but if there is any better way, it is only right that we should seek until we find it; and that is really all that my resolution calls for.

As I have said, I am not going to enter into a detailed discussion of a subject that I have been informed from many sources Parliament has no ears to listen to, even if I had the ability to do so. I merely put forward this resolution that a committee be appointed in order that they may collect the information necessary and bring it before the House, for it is of vital importance that we should be fully seized of all information on the subject before we deal with our credit system further, as I believe we shall have to next session.

In conclusion, let me say that as far as I am aware there is no good reason why this resolution should not pass. Here are the reasons that I can think of why it should not pass:

In the first place, this resolution should not pass if we are already in possession of all the knowledge it is possible to have of the credit system which we as a Parliament have to do with, and which we delegate to the banks to handle.

In the second place, this resolution should not pass if this Parliament has nothing at all to do with the credit system. But I think we are very intimately interested in the subject when we are dealing in loans involving hundreds of millions of dollars, and when we place this great power in the hands of our banks by a vote of this House.

In the third place, this resolution should not be passed if we can deal with our banking system to better advantage without any knowledge of our credit system.

Those are reasons why we should not pass this resolution; there are no others. If we are sincere, as I believe we are, we want to get full knowledge of all subjects that come before this House. If we consider our credit system as fundamental to industry, if we believe that our credit is the actual wealth of Canada, if we believe that this community interest should not be controlled by any individual or clique, then it is necessary that we get all available information to discover if it is not possible to issue all credit to ourselves and so save interest, and thus be able tc get enough new money, if you will, to run the business of Canada without those periods of inflation with their corresponding periods of deflation incident to the present system when new money is created.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In the absence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) I would ask the hon. member to allow his motion to stand. I do not know that the Minister of Finance has any objection whatever to the resolution, but I should like him to have an opportunity of expressing his views upon it. Perhaps my hon. friend would be agreeable to the resolution going over until the minister's return?

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Speaker, I am quite agreeable.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the debate was adjourned.

ST. JOHN AND QUEBEC RAILWAY

PROPOSED CONNECTION WITH THE EASTERN MAINE RAILWAY

Mr. T. W. CALDWELL (Victoria and Carleton) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is advisable that a branch line connecting the St. John and Quebec railway with the Eastern Maine railway be built as soon as financial conditions permit.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my object in moving this resolution is to point out to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Kennedy) and to the House a means of cutting down the operating expenses of the Canadian National Railways in the maritime provinces. I had this matter up with the then Minister of Railways in 1920, when I arranged a meeting between him, the president of the Eastern Maine Railway and the president of the St. John and Quebec Railway with a view to forwarding this proposition. The minister was very favourably inclined towards the project, in fact, later when it was discussed on the railway estimates, he expressed himself in these words, which will be found at page 3376 of Hansard, 1920.

Mr. J. D. Reid: I am familiar with the proposal to which my hon. friend (Mr. Caldwell) refers. About four years ago it was suggested that the Government should build that connecting line; it was shown that its construction would result in a great saving in the matter of traffic originating in the lower province and destined to the Eastern States. On account of the financial situation, action was delayed. There is no doubt that the construction of this line should be carried out.

A little further on he said:

I have no doubt at all that when we get back to normal conditions the Government will take up a scheme such as the one suggested and deal with these matters in the way that it is practically understood by the department and the railway officials that they should be carried out.

At the present time the Dominion Government is operating the St. John and Quebec Railway under lease from the provincial government of New Brunswick. The province guaranteed the bonds for the construction of this road by the St. John and Quebec Railway Company, but that company having failed to carry the road to completion, the provincial government took the work over and to-day practically owns the line.

4 p.m.

As I stated on a previous occasion, under the agreement between the provincial and Dominion governments it was provided that as the road was built in twenty-mile sections, the Dominion government should take it over and operate it as part of the Canadian National Railways. This has been done, something in the neighborhood of 160 miles having been constructed to date. For the year ending December 31, 1920, the operating deficit on this railway was $346,015.49. The agreement between the Dominion and provincial governments provides that the Dominion government shall have 60 per cent of the gross earnings to pay operating expenses, the other 40 per cent going to the province of New Brunswick to pay interest on the cost of construction. The 40 per cent of the gross earnings received by the province has failed to pay interest on the construction cost by $220,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the House may say: Well, this is not a very good showing on which to base a request that the Dominion government build a further extension of this road. But the reason for the deficit is that the road has never been completed as first contemplated. As originally planned the road was to run from St. John to Grand Falls, there to connect with the Transcontinental. Only part of that construction has been completed, there being still about 40 miles running from Centreville to Grand Falls to be built. On approaching the provincial government of New Brunswick at the head of a delegation some two years ago to see what promise we could get for the completion of this northern section, we were informed that unless this connecting link between the St. John and Quebec Railway and the Eastern Maine Railway were built it would not be possible for the province to undertake the construction of the balance of the road as originally planned.

If the Government road is given no connection with the Eastern Maine Railway, then in all traffic to the United States we are confined to the Canadian Pacific. Now, there are two facts to be considered. The first is that two-thirds of the traffic which originates on the Canadian National Railways in the maritime provinces is destined to the United States; the second is that shipping to the United States by the Canadian Pacific we have to send our products over three railways. Every hon. member who has had any shipping experience knows that you pay a much higher freight rate to ship over two roads to a given point than over one, and if we have to ship over three roads, it makes it even more expensive. I believe it has been estimated that, due to this fact, we pay in excess freight yearly $100,000. The proposed link of railway I am advocating today is estimated to cost $1,000,000. Therefore, the saving in freight alone would pay for this piece of road in ten years. More than that, if this link is built it will enable the provincial government to construct the balance of the Quebec and St. John railway running north, which will open up that country and provide railway facilities for possibly the best section of New Brunswick, a section that has been settled a long time with the prospect of this road coming in to give them transportation facilities at a much earlier date than this.

This road was projected before the war. You will remember that last year the charter granting a subsidy of $6,400 a mile by the Dominion government was extended two years. It would have expired on 31 December last, but it was extended by this House on the request of the premier of New Brunswick. In the discussion that took place at that time it was shown why this road had not been constructed sooner. It was under construction when the war broke out. The Dominion government had agreed not only to give a subsidy of $6,400 a mile for every mile of this road that was completed, but it had also promised to build three very expensive bridges that would be necessary on this road, one on the northern section and two on the southern. Owing to war conditions and the fact that railway material had advanced in price very rapidly, that labour had also advanced, and money was dear, this construction was not gone on with. The federal government at that time was under just as great an obligation with regard to the completion of this road, so far as the building of bridges and a subsidy of $6,400 per mile was concerned, as the provincial government. The subsidy for the bridges has lapsed, and has not been renewed, but the subsidy of $6,400 per mile was renewed by this House last year. Now, in order to make it possible for the province to complete this road and for the government railways to operate economically, it is very necessary that the section I am advocating to-day should be built. At the present time the Eastern Maine Railway have a road surveyed, and I believe that construction is taking place, beginning this month from Houlton to Bancroft, Maine. The Eastern Maine Railway Company have agreed to build a spur from that road to the boundary line to meet the extension proposed by me to-day. They came to that agreement with the Minister of Railways two years ago, and they even agreed that if the Dominion government would build its section in 1921, they would build theirs in 1920, for the Minister of Railways, at that time Hon. Mr. Reid, asked these people, "What guarantee have we that you will build your end if we will build ours?" Hon. Mr. Reid promised the delegation, in my presence, that if he was Minister of Railways in 1921, he would bring in a bill for an appropriation to build this 22 miles of road. Last year, due to the heavy railway deficits, the stringency of the money market, and other conditions, the government did not see fit to go on with that work, although I think they could very well have done it at that time. To-day I think we are back pretty nearly to normal conditions so far as railroad construction is concerned. The price of labour and material has gone down, and I think the members of this House will agree that unemployment never was so acute as it is now. The building of this section would not only provide employment for the unemployed in the eastern provinces but, as I think I have clearly shown, though it would mean an initial outlay by the Government, it would pay for itself in ten years in the saving in freight alone, and the St. John and Quebec railway, the part now built and the balance that will be constructed if the section I am advocating is gone on with, instead of being a liability to the Dominion government and the province of over half a million dollars a year, would become the best paying railway in eastern Canada, due to the fact that all the freight originating on the whole government system in the maritime provinces and destined for the United States would be routed over the St. John and Quebec Railway to get to this outlet. That would make the St. John and Quebec railway, instead of a deficit producer a revenue producer. I do not wish to take up the time of the House at any greater length, but I would urge upon the minister the advisability of the proposition I am putting before him at the present time.

Mr. RICHARD B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not wish to delay the House, but as this proposed road would start and end in my constituency, I should like to give the House the benefit of my views on the matter. This is not a new proposal by any means. I have no doubt that had it not been for the war this piece of railway construction would have been carried out by the government. The idea of building this section dates back to 1915, when Mr. Gutelius was the general manager of the Canadian Government railway lines. He was the originator of the idea, and it appealed to him because he felt the necessity of having an independent outlet for the Government lines into the New England states in order not to be obliged to turn over to the Canadian Pacific railway all the traffic originating on the government roads in the maritime provinces to reach the Boston and Maine railroad and through it to be distributed to the New England states.

I quite appreciate that this is not a very favourable time to ask the Government to embark on any new railway proposals, but I would suggest to the Minister of Railways that in the files of his department he will find, I am sure, data which will well repay his perusal, and which will, I believe, fortify and justify him when the time comes, as I have no doubt it will if he remains in power, in asking Parliament to build this branch line so that the Government railways may have an independent outlet into the New England states. I am not at all sure that it should be done through the Eastern Maine Railroad Company which has been referred to by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Caldwell). I hope that the company will be able to carry out its proposals, but I have very grave doubts as to their financial ability to do so. However, I would not like anything I say in that connection to prejudice the mind of the minister against that particular company.

As to the principle involved, and as to the benefits that would be derived by the Government railways, I do not think there are any two opinions. While I have no doubt the minister will not be able to do anything this year, I would suggest to him that this is one of the construction proposals that he might well keep before him is any construction programme that is undertaken in the immediate future. I am sure that he would find the building of this section beneficial from a purely business standpoint to the department over which he presides.

Hon. W. C. KENNEDY (Minister of Railways): As my hon. friends have said, this matter has been before the House on former occasions. I am informed by the board of directors of the Canadian National railways that they have investigated this project, and while they are willing to admit that from the standpoint of interchange of traffic there is much that might be said in favour of further construction, yet they do not feel that the time is opportune to go on with it at the present time.

There was another point brought out by the mover of the resolution. The board is called upon to decide which of the railroads mentioned by my hon. friend would be the proper line to make connection with. As I understand there are five possible connections with two different railroads, and for the management of the National railways, or for the House, to commit themselves for the present time to either one might prejudice their views when they come to definitely decide which would be in the interset of the Canadian National lines. For the reason I think my hon. friend will agree that it is perhaps not desirable that we should state definitely at the present time with which line the connection should be made. However, I can assure my hon. friend that we will take the earliest opportunity of again bringing the matter before the attention of the Board of Directors. The attention of the board will be directed to what my hon. friend has said this afternoon, and I am sure that when the time is opportune they will give the matter every consideration. Under the circumstances I would therefore ask my hon. friend to withdraw the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The mover of the resolution is now about to exercise his right to close the debate. If any other hon. member wishes to speak he should do so now.

Mr. CALDWELL: I merely want to assure the Minister of Railways that I hold no brief for the Eastern Maine Railway Company, and I realize the force of what my hon. friend for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) has said. In this connection, Sir, it might be well if the Eastern Maine Company were willing to give the undertaking they did two years ago that they would build their section of the line this summer, and that our Government would agree to build theirs next summer. I may say further that I am not particular as to which road our government system makes connection with, so long as we get an outlet to the United States. So long as we can get connection with some road leading immediately to the centre of the eastern states, so that we may get an outlet for our traffic, I am not particular which road they connect up with.

I am pleased with the statement of the Minister of Railways although I cannot help recalling the promise I had from his predecessor both last year and the year before. We now have a new Minister of Railways and I would urge that he should give us something stronger than the mere assurance that the matter will be given due consideration. I would like the minister to give us an assurance that if the Eastern Maine, or any other railway company, is willing to build its share of the connection this year our Government would build our share next year—I think he might well go that far. I repeat that I am not particular which of the American roads he connects with; I certainly would prefer to leave that to the judgment of the board of management of the National Railways because they are in a much better position to decide what is feasible than I am. We desire this connection not only because of the outlet it will give to the centres of the eastern states but also because it will open up a splendid tract of country in our own province to the north which has been settled to some extent owing to the prospect of this road coming in at an early date. I hope the minister will give an assurance that he will connect with an American road which will provide the necessary facilities.

Mr. McKENZIE: What would be the mileage involved?

Mr. CALDWELL: It would be twenty-two miles by the route called for under the resolution. A road built up through the valley of the St. John would run through an easy piece of country, I understand. I do not know what the mileage involved by the other proposed connections would be.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. KENNEDY: I think my hon. friend will agree with me that in so far as recommending the road being built this year, or next year, it is the duty of the Board of Directors of the National Railways to advise the minister rather than for the minister to advise the directors of the National Railways. I am not in the position to say to these gentlemen that this or that road should be built; it is their duty to recommend to the Government that a particular road should be built in the interest of the National system.

Mr. CALDWELL: May I ask the minister—

Mr. SPEAKER: The debate is closed. Is is the pleasure of the House that the hon. member have leave to withdraw his motion?

Mr. CALDWELL: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker, I have not asked for the withdrawal of the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the Minister of Railays asked the hon. member to withdraw it.

Mr. KENNEDY: I did ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Mr. CALDWELL: My hon. friend asked me, but I did not agree. If I may be allowed to say so, I do not think it is advisable to withdraw motions like this. The resolution only expresses the hope that the Government will take this matter into consideration and the minister has already stated that it will do so.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Lost on division.

Resolution declared lost on division.

FEDERAL ELECTIONS ACT

Mr. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, in view of the fact that the present federal Elections Act disfranchises a person who moves his residence from one electoral district to another during the two months previous to the issuing of writs for an election, action should be taken to amend said Elections Act, Article twenty-nine, paragraph C, so as to preserve the right of said elector to vote either in one or the other electoral district.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it necessary to support this resolution with a long speech. Its purpose is so evident that it will suffice, I am sure, to bring it to the attention of the Government and the House to ensure its adoption. It deals with an obvious omission in the present federal Elections Act which seems to have escaped the attention of the last Parliament, but which the practice of the general elections of 1921 has made very clear, and demonstrated to be very annoying. According to the provisions of the present electoral law, adopted in 1920, a person who happens to move his residence during the two months preceding the issuing of writs is virtually disfranchised, and the law offers no way to reserve his right to vote. At least this is the condition that obtains in provinces, like Quebec, where new lists require to be prepared at every election. If you turn to paragraph 29 of that electoral law you will find that the qualifications for an elector are: (a) Must be a British subject by birth or naturalization; (b) Must be of the full age of twenty-one years; and (c) Must have "ordinarily resided in Canada for at least twelve months and in the electoral district wherein such person seeks to vote for at least two months immediately preceding the issue of the writ of election." That seems a very simple provision, but you will understand at once, Mr. Speaker, that a person who happens to move during that period of two months cannot qualify in the new riding to which he has transferred his residence because he has not lived there two months. On the other hand he cannot safeguard his right to vote in the old riding either, because he has not been there during the required full period before the issuance of the writs.

This applies both to the rural constituencies and city ridings, but cases which are very scarce in the rural parts of the country can be very numerous in city ridings. The last election was held on 6th December, and writs were issued some time in October. October first is moving day in large cities like Montreal. It happened to fall within this two months specified by law, and, by that omission, persons who should have had the right to vote, who merely happened to move their residences a few blocks in some instances, perhaps only across the street, from one riding to another, were actually disfranchised. A much greater number retained the right to vote, in spite of the law, simply because no demand was made to have their names struck off the lists, but if such a demand had been made, the revising officer would have had to comply with the law and strike their names from the list. When the candidates become keener to the possibilities of this election law, if it remains as it is, in a city like Montreal alone thousands of voters could be disfranchised, if the election happened to be held in May or in October, the two moving dates in large cities. In order to leave no doubt in the minds of hon. members as to the effect of this statute, I should like to place on Hansard the opinion of no less an authority than Colonel Biggar, Chief Electoral Officer of the Dominion. During the last election he had to give decisions in cases similar to the one I have referred to, and in every case he authorized the statement that the law disqualified such persons, and gave instructions to the registrar and revising officers accordingly. When I placed this resolution on the Order Paper I wrote him asking his opinion, and his reply reads, in part, as follows:

> During the election campaign I received a large number of inquiries on this point, and in the later edition of the Election Instruction (31st December 1921) prepared for the by-elections at which the procedure was considerably different from that followed at the general election, I made an addition to paragraph 137, as appears by the copy of these later instructions which I also enclose. This addition further emphasises the undoubted effect of the provisions of the statute on the point.

I have here the election instructions prepared for the by-election of a new minister, and here is the addition which Colonel Biggar refers to in his letter. It will be found on page 48, section 137:

> The effect of the statutory provisions on the subject of residential qualification is that everyone whose residence has been out of Canada during the year immediately preceding the date of the issue of the writ, and everyone who has changed his place of residence in Canada from one electoral district to another within the two months before that date is disqualified from voting.

The most remarkable feature about this is that if the elector happens to move after the issue of the writ then he can retain his right to vote in the electoral district where he has resided before that date, but if he happens to be unlucky enough to move at the very moment—that is at one of the sixty days preceding the issue of the writ—then he cannot qualify in the new riding, and he is bound to be disfranchised, if proper application is made to strike out his name. I think there can be no doubt, after the authority I have just given, as to the effect of the present law.

This resolution does not specify any remedy. If I were to give my humble opinion, I think there should be a provision to allow the voter to retain his vote in the old riding, where he resided before he moved, and not in the new riding where he has moved his residence, because, in the latter case, the door would be opened to many misunderstandings and frauds. But I am not stressing that point. Earlier in the session the Government led the House to understand, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Marcile), that the electoral law would be amended in some way. My opinion is that the act with which I am dealing would stand amendment on more than one point. I consider that the theory of allowing these lists to be revised just previous to the election may seem very equitable, but its practice is full of danger and may lead to abuses, and even to frauds of the worst kind. I think the whole system of preparing electoral lists at fixed dates during the time of peace—so to describe the period between electoral campaigns—is much better than the present practice. If we are to retain the present law, I say we should, at least, remedy the evil referred to in my resolution. It is altogether unfair to have a law which allows an individual voter to qualify at the last moment for an election, when this same law will disfranchise that voter simply because he happened to move at a certain date from one electoral district to another. I trust that when the occasion arises the Government will consider this matter. I would ask the House to accept the resolution in its present form. It is not contentious, and it only embodies the expression of a wish. I, therefore, beg to move, seconded by Mr. Prevost, the resolution standing in my name.

Mr. JULES EDOUARD PREVOST (Terrebonne) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, It is with pleasure that I support the motion of the member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) because I consider it points out a rather serious omission in the Elections Act, a deficiency which should be remedied immediately and an amendment to the act brought down at this present session. By enacting that a person's name cannot be inscribed on the voters' list unless he has resided in the division where he wishes to vote, for at least two months previous to the issuing of the writs, hundreds of persons are, as a natural consequence, disfranchised, and it is always a serious matter to disfranchise a citizen.

I admit, the question is of special interest to large cities which comprise numerous electoral districts where citizens often move from one district to another, but it is also important to small towns and rural parts. With reference to the last general elections, those who find fault are not so much the candidates who were returned by large majorities, but the people who bitterly regretted, and are still sore of having been deprived of their vote.

I mentioned that the question was an important one for the rural districts, and I believe it to be so. I am aware that the act allows a voter, even on election day, if his name is not on the list, to register his vote. However, he must be in a position to swear that he possesses all the qualifications prescribed by the act. Now, amongst these qualifications is to be found the one which we are at present discussing and which requires of a person, in order that he may exercise his franchise in an electoral district, to reside in such district for two months previous to the issuing of election writs; so that, notwithstanding this clause in the act which seems to open up a wide door to the voters who are not registered on the list and to enable them to make use of their right to vote, the omission which we pointed out would prevent the voter from exercising such franchise. I therefore deem it advisable to submit the question to this House and we have reason to hope that the Government will bring down an amendment to the Dominion Elections Act, such as mentioned in the motion of the member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) and which will be in the whole country's interest.

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (West Toronto): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give the House the benefit of my experience in this regard, and it will, perhaps, be a surprise to some of the members. I am thoroughly in accord with the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Rinfret). I am not sure that such a provision is required in the rural districts, because moving and shifting about in rural parts of the country is perhaps, not very great. When, however, we came to make a canvass in my riding in the last election, we found that between fifteen and twenty per cent of those whose names were on the list could not be found in the riding. Those people had moved, and, by moving, they had opened the way, if any person had desired to be corrupt, to having all their names voted. Furthermore, a man is deprived of his vote, because he has moved, say from one side of Spadina avenue, in my city, to the other; that is, if he moves merely across the street, he is disfranchised. The only fact which I want to bring to the attention of the House is this, that, in a large city like Montreal or Toronto, many people otherwise entitled to vote are disfranchised on account of moving their residence immediately prior to an election. Perhaps, the percentage is greater in Toronto than in Montreal, because houses in Toronto are rented on a monthly tenancy basis, and in my riding between fifteen and twenty per cent of the people were disfranchised under the present act.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.): Mr. Speaker, I rise to approve the resolution also, because I know, even in rural or semi-rural places, many worthy citizens who were deprived of the privilege of voting at the last election under the law as it then stood and still stands. Therefore, a change is very desirable.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the matter referred to in the resolution of the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) is one worthy of consideration. It was considered when the present Dominion Franchise Act passed the House. Our difficulty then was our difficulty now, namely, to find a remedy. The same question came up in this House in 1897, when there was a discussion on the subject; and it was then felt, as it was felt two years ago, that probably less difficulty would arise from leaving the law in its present position than if we were to seek to change or amend it. The question arose more particularly in 1897 in regard to school teachers and, I think, also in regard to Methodist ministers. School teachers, particularly in Ontario in the rural sections, change their places very frequently; the ministers of some of our churches also change their residences periodically; and in many cases the teacher or the minister was disqualified simply by reason of the change. Then, in cities, it always occurs that men and women will move from one division to another. Nobody, however, has yet suggested a proper remedy for this condition of affairs. If you permit men, who have actually moved away from a riding, to come back and vote you may be opening a door to the payment of expenses and to bringing voters from all parts of Canada, and that was looked upon as a great objection, both in years gone by and in the discussion that took place in this House two years ago. But it is certainly a hard thing that any large body of our citizens should be disfranchised simply by reason of the fact that they have changed their residences immediately prior to the issue of an election writ. There may be something in the suggestion of my hon. friend that they could be permitted to vote in the place in which they formerly resided, but that would not, I believe, cure the evil for men and women who had moved to any great distance. Men from Ontario, from Quebec, go West, and these men would certainly be disfranchised; but the greatest hardship, I think, takes place in cities where a voter moves from one division to another, but still remains practically in the same municipality. The motion is one well worthy of consideration, and I only wish the hon. member for St. James had suggested something like a remedy for the difficulty. I agree with him that when the Franchise Act comes up for amendment or consideration, this is a matter that should be considered.

Hon. D. D. McKENZIE (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I take it, from the expression of opinion on both sides of the House, that there is no objection to accepting the resolution of the hon. member for St. James. As has been stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie), perhaps, the difficulty is to find a ready remedy. Of course, the first and natural impulse with every one is that he wants to have the right to vote, and after having the right to vote, he has some predilection for one place or another. The natural and most effective place for one to vote in is where he resides or where he proposes to reside for some time to come. The basic philosophy of the right to vote or the purpose of voting is that a person has a right to select a representative in Parliament; and if a man who lives in Montreal finds that he is moving to Toronto, he says: "Well, you may give me a vote in Montreal; but I am leaving Montreal; I am going to live in Toronto, and, after this I want to put myself in touch with the representative of the city in which I am going to live." To allow that man the right to vote in Montreal would not satisfy him, because he wants to have a representative in the city or province in which he goes to reside. It is more difficult to find a remedy for the situation of that man. It is a simple proposition to legislate or to amend the act so as to leave with the man the right to vote where he is qualified and where he resides, so to amend the act that his right to vote shall continue for the first election that may take place after he has left that particular residence. It is not, however, so easy to furnish machinery by which you qualify him to vote in any other part of Canada to which he might move. I have not been able to come to any definite conclusion, but the only thing that suggests itself to me as practical in a case of that kind, would be that he might be permitted to vote on the certificate of the chief electoral officer. A man living in New Brunswick, for instance, might satisfy the Chief Electoral Officer that he was fully qualified to vote in any riding in Canada, and on going, say, to British Columbia, he could get from that officer a certificate under seal which, on presentation to any presiding officer in the latter province, would give him the right to vote at the first election thereafter. It is possible that some such machinery as that might meet the case. The other case is far less difficult, and if a voter were given the right to come back and vote where he resided, I do not think there would be any room for hardship. Most of these cases arise in the cities, and the matter of travelling one way or the other would not be very important. As has been suggested, many of these moves are merely across a street or alleyway, and it really does not make very much difference. It is quite likely, and I believe almost certain, that this matter will be dealt with and a proper remedy provided.

The hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret), referred to our present franchise law, and the law as it stood years ago. Personally I think that the old franchise system was better. When we entered Confederation in 1867 the provincial franchise was adopted all round. In every province then in Confederation, members were elected to this House, I understand, under the local law, and that continued until 1885 or 1886, when a Dominion franchise was adopted by legislation of this Parliament. At that time officers, who were entitled revising officers, were appointed to prepare the lists in all the provinces. That practice was observed until 1898, when by common consent—I was not in the House then, but I understand there was no objection at all from either side—Parliament went back to the old condition and once more adopted the provincial franchise. That continued down to the election of 1917, which was the first Dominion election since the reinstitution of the provincial franchise, at which members were returned to this Parliament under a Dominion system. The election of 1917 and the election of 1921 were both held under Dominion franchise. But the very large majority of the elections in Canada since Confederation have been held under the local law. In our own province we have what I regard as ideal conditions in regard to the franchise. Our lists are revised every year whether there is an election or not. On the 27th of April of each year the lists are closed and are ready for any election that might be called. Of course, they are not now used in Dominion elections; they are subject to certain additions and subtractions before they can serve the purposes of a Dominion election. I should have no hesitation whatever in recommending ours as a general system for Dominion elections. I am not speaking for the Government, but solely for myself, but in my judgment it would be the ideal practice for every province in Canada to have the lists prepared every year so that they might be ready at any time an election might be held. The expense, in our province at any rate, is not considered any objection at all. As a matter of fact, there is no great expense involved in preparing these lists every year.

However, the matter with which we shall have to deal in this connection will be simply the introduction of some slight amendment to secure the right to the voter to come back and vote where he resides, or otherwise to carry the franchise with him. There must be some such certificate as I have mentioned that he could carry with him so as to enable him to vote at the first Dominion election held after he has received it. I think the resolution of the hon. member is quite timely and I am sure the House will be pleased to deal with the matter when it comes up.

Mr. A. J. LEWIS (Swift Current): I think we are all agreed that every Canadian citizen eligible to vote should have the right to do so, and the mere fact that a man is forced sometimes, by circumstances beyond his control, to go to another constituency should not penalize him and prevent him from exercising the franchise as a Canadian citizen. I can readily understand that the provision that has been incorporated in the Election Act on this point has some basis in reason. It may have been placed there to make sure that no individual would vote twice. But we are told by various hon. members that it appears to infringe upon the rights of voters more in the cities than anywhere else. In the rural districts very few people are penalized in this respect by moving; but in the cities, where people are continually on the move, it may be a great hardship, and I can see that there is likely to be some difficulty, no matter what you may do, to remedy the existing law. We do find, however, that in the resolution No. 12, relating to proportional representation and the alternative vote, there is a safeguard not only to the man who wishes to exercise his franchise, but also to the public interests of Canada, and I believe that when this subject is brought before the House and we have time to study it carefully we shall be able to remove a great many of the electioneering difficulties that at present exist. In this connection, I might refer to proportional representation in the cities. Under proportional representation I understand that no matter where a man may reside in the city, or whether he changes from one district to another within the pale of the city, he still has the right to vote; and I think that when that system comes up for consideration it will be time enough to indicate the benefits to be derived by the removal of a great many of the difficulties and anomalies of the Franchise Act. By the adoption of a proper system then we shall be able to ensure, not only to the individual who votes at an election, but also to collective bodies of voters, in the actual returns of men to this Parliament, a fair proportion of representation for every constituency. If it is necessary to change the existing law for rural districts, well and good. But as we have been told that the great majority of inequalities that result from the present law are to be found in the cities, and as these inequalities can be finally removed only when we have a system under which every man will have the right to exercise the franchise under a city list rather than under a list in an electoral division, I believe that action should be delayed until the question of proportional representation is before the House for consideration.

INCOME TAX ACT 1917

PROPOSED AMENDMENT RESPECTING ALIENS

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act, 1917, as amended by subsequent acts by providing that there shall be paid upon the annual income of all aliens, not being residents of Canada, who are employed in Canada or derive income for services rendered in Canada 8 per cent upon all such incomes exceeding one thousand dollars.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this resolution is not of a particularly compulsory character, because it simply suggests that "the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act, 1917." It is quite possible that many hon. members do not quite grasp the true meaning of this resolution, and therefore I desire first of all to point out why it has been introduced.

Prior to November, 1921, the Income Tax Act of the United States was practically the same as our Income Tax Act, giving similar exemptions to married and unmarried men and fixing the rate of taxation at the same rate on all those earning incomes in the United States whether resident in that country or elsewhere. But in November of last year Congress amended the Income Tax Act and made section 210 to read as follows:

> That, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1918, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a normal tax of 8 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216: provided, that in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such excess amount shall be 4 per centum.

The exemption provided for in section 216 subsection (e) is as follows:

> In the case of a non-resident alien individual or of a citizen entitled to the benefits of section 262, the personal exemption shall be only $1,000, and he shall not be entitled to the credit provided in subdivision (d).

But an American citizen is entitled to an exemption of $2,500 or $2,000.

This Act of Congress does not expressly mention Canadians, but there are no other non-resident aliens that I know of working in the United States. There may be some from Mexico, but those need not be taken into account.

The result is distinctly to the disadvantage of Canadians. Take the concrete case of the county of Welland that I have the honour to represent—and I know the same thing prevails in the county of Essex, and no doubt in the county of Lincoln and in every other constituency bordering on the international boundary line—Canadian citizens working in the United States—and there are at least 400 working at Niagara Falls, New York, and Buffalo—if they have an income of $5,000, whether married or unmarried, their exemption is only $1,000, and they are taxed 8 per cent on the balance. In contrast with that the American citizen is allowed an exemption of $2,500 if he is a married man or a man with dependents, and he is taxed at the rate of only 4 per cent on the balance of his income.

Our law makes no distinction between Americans and Canadians. For instance, a United States citizen working in Canada is granted an exemption of $1,000 if he is an unmarried man, and he is taxed 4 per cent on the balance of his income; if he is a man with a family or other dependents, he is allowed an exemption of $2,000 and is still taxed only 4 per cent on the balance.

Now, as a rule I am not inclined to favour the adoption of retaliatory measures, but it seems to me that in so far as this Act of Congress affects Canadian citizens, it works a very grave injustice. Although a good many of our citizens work in the United States and live in Canada, it must not be forgotten that so far as our border constituencies are concerned there are just as many United States citizens working in Canada and living in their own country. Therefore, I claim that unless Congress remove this discrimination and make their law the same as our Income Tax Act, we should do our duty and place the same burdens on United States citizens that are now imposed on our citizens by this discriminatory legislation.

I have a letter from the president of a large manufacturing concern at Niagara Falls, Ontario, and I should like to place his views on Hansard. He is a United States citizen, and he writes as follows:

> I am pleased to note that you have handled this matter in a very fair and reasonable way. We certainly trust that the problem can be solved without retaliatory legislation, although it is manifestly evident that such legislation should be taken by Canada if the situation cannot be corrected in any other way. We think that the move which you are taking may help to bring the seriousness of the situation before the United States Government.
> As we have written, we are doing everything possible in the way of soliciting pressure from as many sources as possible to have this corrected and we have made the situation known to a large number of senators and representatives in Washington.
> The situation is serious and aggravating to all manufacturers along the border and a great hardship to many employees of such manufacturers.

There is practically nothing more to be said about this subject. What I want is that Parliament should approve of this resolution, which will fortify the Government in saying to the United States Congress, "We have the authority of Parliament to pass retaliatory legislation if we choose to do so, but we hope that you will consider it in the best interests of friendly relations and in the best interests of the people who are working on the two sides of the international boundary line to amend your law so as to make it conform with the law of Canada. In default of your doing so, it is quite possible that we may be forced by Parliament to pass retaliatory legislation that will place the same burden of taxation on your citizens working in Canada as is imposed on our citizens working in the United States." That is what I want this Parliament to do, and that is what I think this Parliament should do, irrespective of the friendly relations which now exist and have existed for so many years between the United States and Canada, and which I trust will continue to exist for many more years to come. I think it is our duty to stand by our own citizens and see that they are properly protected and safeguarded in regard to such legislation as this that has been passed in the United States. We hope of course, that conditions may be such in the near future that this burdensome taxation may be done away with, but it is in existence yet, and in all probability will remain in existence for several years to come—longer than we would like. That being so, I ask Parliament to approve of this resolution so that the Government may with the authority of Parliament say to the United States: "Unless you change your legislation and give our citizens the same rights that we accord to American citizens we will be bound to pass retaliatory legislation—it is a harsh term perhaps—"

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Why not call it reciprocal treatment?

Mr. GERMAN: Gentlemen on the opposite side and perhaps some on this side were opposed to reciprocal treatment some years ago. We will call it retaliatory legislation. It is more emphatic, I think, and suits the situation better. That is the object of the resolution, and I sincerely trust that the House will approve of it and that it will be adopted by the Government.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was not quite certain from the terms of the resolution until I heard the address of the hon.

member for Welland (Mr. German) just what he had in mind. I was aware of the legislation, though not in any detailed way, that gives rise to his resolution, that is to say, the legislation introduced in November last in the United States legislatures. To that legislation we in Canada cannot take exception from our special standpoint; it is legislation that is applicable everywhere; it is not discriminatory against our country, nor is its purpose to deflect the course of domestic policy in Canada. Nevertheless, it is legislation that of itself invites retaliatory action; it is legislation against which another country can protect itself only by retaliatory action. If the United States chooses to place upon the citizens of this country and of countries other than itself, earning money within its borders a burden beyond that borne by its own citizens, there is only one thing, it appears to me, for the neighbouring nation to do, and that is to act in a similar way. Otherwise, it places its own citizens at a disadvantage as compared with those across the line. Consequently, this would appear to me to be a timely resolution and one well worthy of the consideration of the Government and of this House.

There is, however, a class of legislation to which I think we in Canada can take just exception. It is that class of legislation which is directed not against all outside nations equally, but directed solely against ourselves, legislation designed to deflect the course of domestic policy within this country. There have been efforts made in recent times to have such legislation passed by the United States. I fear those efforts have been, or appear now to be, more or less successful. Such does not seem to me to be a course of policy designed to foster and improve the good relations that have subsisted between us for so many years. At the same time, if it is the course of policy that in their best judgment they see fit to adopt, it will be one that will have to be met in our country, not in a spirit of antagonism, not in a spirit wanting in friendship, but in a spirit of stern and immovable self-reliance.

I have pleasure, indeed, in offering commendation to the hon. member for Welland, and I hope that his suggestions will receive at the hands of the Government serious and sympathetic consideration.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. J. E. FONTAINE (Hull) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Dominion Government should consider the advisability of devising ways and means for the establishment of a system of old age pensions in Canada.

He said (Translation): At the outset, Mr. Speaker, allow me to urge upon this House the desirability of legislation enabling the Government to grant a pension to old men. In so doing so, I am impelled by a deep sense of humanity and justice. Indeed, having for the last twenty-five years resided in the city of Hull,—an essentially industrial centre,—I have been able, more than any one else perhaps, and many a time, to realize that a great number of workmen after having spent the best part of their lives in factories and worn themselves out, become, in their old age a burden to their children, unless they seek refuge in a poor house. Is it not a painful sight, Mr. Speaker, to see these old employees, after contributing their share towards their country's welfare and development, after labouring for thirty, forty, nay fifty years to enrich others, once they have expended the whole of their assets,—for their physical fitness is truly an asset to them,—the moment they are disabled, worn out by age and work, reduced to poverty. I say that it is the duty of the state to assist these old men by paying them a pension in the form of annuities or endowment. Some might perhaps object that these men should have economized and laid aside their savings whilst they were young; but every member of this House knows perfectly well that their salaries are never sufficient to allow savings, because wages paid are always based on the cost of living. The following is an illustration. During the unfortunate war just ended, workmen obtained an increase of wages because the cost of living was increasing continually, and now the war is over, employers insist on a reduction in wages because, according to them, the cost of living has been reduced. It is therefore a well established fact that wages are fixed by the cost of living. We figure out how much it costs a workingman to live and support a family of five or six children, and the result of this calculation determines the salary he shall receive. How can he economize when he is paid just enough to provide his family with the strict necessities of life? Yet, the working man is entitled, as well as the rich man, to some comfort in this world. The working man has a heart, he loves his children as much as the rich man loves his own, and he would like to give them better means than he has himself had for the battles of life. How can he attain this end with such meagre wages as two or three dollars a day? —I especially refer to the working man, because it is he who would benefit the most from such a Pensions Act, but it should be fully understood that all those who attain the age, say of 65 years, man or woman, and are in need, whatever may have been their trade or business, would benefit from such a pension, provided they had been honest citizens.

Now, Mr. Speaker, allow me to discuss the question from another point of view. You know how the late war has expanded the outlook of classes in this country; the farmers movement has spread, the labour movement has developed; and the labourer now says to himself, and not without cause, that if he has been useful during the war, if he has participated in destroying German militarism and in saving civilization, he is fully entitled to some reward. Truly, amongst all the classes of society, it is the labouring class which supplied the most men and which was the first to respond to the call to arms, and now that the war is over, they bear the greater part of the burden of taxation. Therefore, I believe that an old age Pensions Act would only be evidence of our gratitude. I believe that it would help materially in creating a better understanding between capital and labour; it would be a public acknowledgment by the Government of this country that it wants justice for all classes, and it would perhaps abolish forever this unfortunate conflict between the capitalist and the labouring class. In proof of the soundness of our contentions, I have received, since I inscribed this resolution on the Order Paper, a number of letters and resolutions of labour unions in support of my views. They all wish me the greatest possible success in regard to this old age scheme. Amongst others, I might mention the following, from Mr. Beaulé, president of the National Catholic Unions; from Mr. Tom Moore, president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada; from the secretary of the Liberal Labour Union of the city of Hull; from Mr. Achille Morin, vice-president of the National Catholic Unions. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, this question is not a new one. An act for old age pensions was passed by the Imperial Parliament in 1908, and in 1911 the present Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Lloyd George, brought down in the British House of Commons a bill under a different form, known as "The People's Insurance." In presenting this bill, he gave the following explanation: "Considering that the people are willing to help in furthering the progress and welfare of this country, the State, on the other hand, should give ample proof of its willingness to foster the welfare of the labouring class.

For ever so long France has had pension laws for old age and the disabled; it is, however, since 1905 that pensions have come to the fore. As early as 1883, there existed in Germany, insurances to provide for the workman, but it is especially the act passed in 1889 and amended in 1899 which brought relief to old age and the disabled. There exists in Denmark, an old age pension law; in New Zealand, parliament adopted such legislation in 1908.

After having shown what has taken place in Europe, Mr. Speaker, are we not allowed to hope that soon, we also shall have a law enacted which will provide for old age. Moreover, this question has already been considered by our own statesmen and the Canadian Parliament. I see, in Hansard, that during the 1907 session, Mr. Pringle, then member for Stormont, moved the following resolution: "That in the opinion of this House, the subject of improving the condition of the aged, deserving poor and of providing for those of them who are helpless and infirm, is worthy of and should receive the early and careful attention of the government and of Parliament."

This motion, after having been discussed, was withdrawn. However, Mr. Pringle returned to the attack during the session of 1908, and moved the following resolution: "That a select committee be appointed to inquire into and consider a scheme or schemes by state aid or otherwise for making provision for the aged and deserving poor, with special regard in case of any proposals of which they may approve, to their cost and probable financial results, and that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses on oath and affirmation." This resolution was adopted but nothing further was done. During the session of 1912, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) and the then member for Peterborough (Mr. Burnham), the same person who was defeated by the present Deputy Speaker (Mr. Gordon), had both placed on the Order paper of the House a motion which called for the naming of a select committee to inquire into and report on a scheme of life-annuity for old age in Canada. As you will notice, Mr. Speaker, it is already more than fifteen years ago since the Canadian Parliament first took up this important question of old age pensions. I believe that public opinion is ripe and that the Government should not delay any further action on this question. A pension fund has been provided for all those brave warriors who went overseas to protect civilization against German militarism and who have returned to this country sick and disabled, and it is quite right. A pension fund has been provided for the Civil Service; banks and other financial concerns provide a pension for their employees; alone these brave toilers, this army of workmen who were the pioneers of our industrial life, have not a pension fund to sustain them in their old age. I maintain that it is the duty of the nation to act immediately. It seems to me that men who have given thirty or forty years of their best years to the development of the resources of our country have a right to claim a pension when they come to the age when they are no more able to provide for their own support.

I have heard as an objection to this scheme, Mr. Speaker, that it would discourage thrift and personal ambition; the workman would not be as provident, knowing in advance that the Government is going to grant him relief in his old age. Well I do not consider this as being a serious objection. If this law should lead to abuses, as some people believe it would, the European countries where it is now in force would abolish it; but, on the contrary, they improve on it every year. Then the Government ought to abolish the retirement fund of the Civil Service and the banks and corporations ought to discontinue the pension fund for their employees. My opinion is that the law would stimulate the energy of the working men who would feel that they are backed up by the state. Immigration would also greatly benefit by the scheme when it would be known that in Canada we look after our people when they have grown old and disabled.

I do not intend going into details, for instance as to the age at which the pension should start, or the means of raising that pension fund; this can very well be determined when the bill is presented. What I want now is simply the recognition of the principle by the House, so that the Government would realize that they cannot delay any longer the passing of such legislation.

I have before me now the copy of a speech delivered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier at a large meeting, held in Montreal, on the 27th of September, 1916, at which you were present, Mr. Speaker. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that as soon as the war would be over —the great Canadian foresaw already the victory of the Allies—one of the greatest questions would be that of the establishment of old age pensions, and to this end, he said he had entrusted to some of his most prominent Liberal supporters the task of inquiring into the subject. At the great Liberal convention held in Ottawa, in August, 1919, a special resolution was moved and adopted to that effect.

I do not wish, Mr. Speaker, to raise a political question out of this resolution; I am fully confident that hon. members of this House, whether they sit on your right or on your left, will consider it on its merit. But I hope I shall be permitted to say that it is an essentially Liberal idea and that it would be proper for the Liberal party to carry it out. We, on this side of the House, should consider that wish expressed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1916 and embodied in a resolution at the great convention of the Liberal party in 1919, as an order to be cheerfully complied with.

I know that we are in a rather serious financial position, that we have an enormous debt and that the Government is endeavouring by all possible means to balance their budget for which they have the unqualified approval of the people. But this question of old age pensions should not be delayed any longer. Moreover I do not believe I am committing an indiscretion when I say that knowing the feelings of the hon. Prime Minister as I do and owing to the fact that he has made a thorough study of the social and economic conditions of our country, he is agreeable to this resolution and he will find a means of placing it on our statutes which will be a credit to him and a great asset for this country.

Motion agreed to.

PENSIONS TO WIDOWED MOTHERS

Mr. CHARLES G. POWER (Quebec South) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient to amend the act to provide pensions to or in respect of members of the Canadian Naval and Military Air Forces, 1919, so as to provide that the pension of a widowed mother of a member of the forces who has died on active service shall not be reduced on account of her income; and further that pension shall be granted her of right whether or not there are other living children.

He said: This is a resolution which, in one form or another, has come before the House for the past four sessions. In 1918, under the terms of the Pension Act for members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, the widowed mother of a deceased soldier was entitled to a pension of so much per month; but in case she earned anything, by working at any occupation whatsoever, the amount which she earned during the month was deducted from her pension. This provision, I am happy to say, has now disappeared, and the widowed mother, generally speaking, does not have any deduction made from her pension on account of her earnings. Further improvement was made in her lot somewhat later, when it was decided that even if she owned her own residence no deduction would be made from her pension by way of an amount to be attributed to rent; and a still further improvement was made somewhat later when it was decreed that the fact that she had one or more living children who were in a position to earn money and look after her should not be used as an excuse on the part of the Board of Pension Commissioners to take away the small pension which was given to her. At the present time the widowed mother, provided she is in a dependent condition, is entitled to $48 per month. Should she, however, have any income whatsoever the amount of this income is deducted from the pension. Should she have an income of $25, or $35, or $40 per month she receives that much less pension—that is to say in case her income is $30 per month, her pension would be only $18 per month. The object of this resolution is to place the widowed mother on exactly the same basis as the widow of a soldier who fell in France—in other words to give her a pension irrespective of whether she has or has not any income. As the members of the House are doubtless aware—and as I am sure, you, Mr. Speaker, know—the widow of a soldier who was killed at the war receives a pension without it being necessary for her to show that she is in a dependent condition. The object of this resolution is to place the widowed mother in exactly the same situation. During the past few years, those who are interested in soldiers and their dependents have noticed that there are a large number of complaints continually coming in to the Board of Pension Commissioners, to members of Parliament, to clergymen and others, that the widowed mother is being almost constantly visited by representatives of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment who enter into this lady's home, ask her how she is getting along, take a survey of the furniture, and inquire as to what her means of support are. If the old lady—because in the majority of cases, as the House can easily conceive, the recipients of these pensions are fairly well up in years—is unfortunate enough to explain her financial position and to state that she is doing nicely and getting along very well, the chances are that within two or three weeks a letter arrives from the Board of Pension Commissioners saying "You are in receipt of such an income; therefore your pension will be diminished by so much." It is with the object of avoiding any such occurrences that I would ask the House to approve of this resolution.

I have a number of cases which have been cited to this House and which have been brought to the attention of the pension commissioners on a number of occasions, and I do not think it is necessary to recite them here. I base my claim on behalf of the widowed mothers on the ordinary natural law and natural right. It has been urged on behalf of the former government that the mothers were not entitled to support from their children in other provinces of Canada except the province of Quebec. In that province the son, or the children, in fact, must support their parents, and an action at law will lie against those who will not do so. In other provinces of Canada, I understand, there is no such legal sanction to what, to my mind, is a natural right and a claim based on natural law. If it does not exist in the other provinces, I am sorry for those provinces, and I am sorry their legislators did not see fit to inscribe on the statutes of those provinces a law which has existed since the beginning of the world, and a law which should exist on the statute book of every province and every country. It is a purely natural law, and it is a natural thing that the son should support his mother when his mother is not in a position to support herself and should, in all cases, look after the mother who bore him, to see that she lives in comfort, if it is possible for him to do so. I submit it became the duty of the government of this country, as soon as the support of the family fell in battle, to look after those whom he left behind. In such a case I think it is the duty of the state to step into the breach and take the place of that son, who, no doubt, if he had not answered the call on behalf of his country, would now be able to keep his mother in good circumstances. There is the further argument, that we have recognized in the Pension Act a class, which though it is entitled perhaps to some consideration on the part of the government and of the state, surely is not entitled to as much consideration as the class of widowed mothers. Section 34, subsection 1, of the Pension Act says:

> A parent or any person in the place of a parent with respect of a member of the forces who has died shall be entitled to a pension when such member of the forces left no child, widow, or divorced wife who is entitled to a pension, or a woman awarded a pension under subsection three of section thirty-three of this act, and when such parent or person is in a dependent condition and was, at the time of the death of such member of the forces, wholly or to a substantial extent, maintained by him.

Let us see what that means. The widowed mother of a soldier is entitled to a pension when the soldier has left no children—there is no objection to that,—or has left no widow, no divorced wife under certain conditions, or no woman awarded a pension under subsection 3 of section 33 of this act. Let us see who the woman referred to under subsection 3 of section 33 of this act is. That subsection says:

> A woman who, although not married to the member of the forces, was living with him in Canada at the time he became a member of the forces and for a reasonable time previously thereto, and who at such time was publicly represented by him as his wife may, in the case of his death and in the discretion of the commission, be awarded a pension equivalent to the pension she would have received had she been his legal widow. The Commission may also award a pension if in its opinion an injustice would be done by not recognizing a woman as the wife of a member of the forces, although there is no evidence that she had been publicly represented by him as his wife.

Here is a case. The widowed mother whose son was killed at the front may obtain a pension, provided the man's mistress is not alive. If the mistress is living she has a prior claim to a pension from the state to that of the mother who bore him. It is not for me to criticise the legislation which has been placed on the statute book for what has been called the unmarried wife. I know that in a large number of compassionate cases something had to be done where there were children and where there was fraud on the part of the man who was unfortunately killed. I recognize that, and I do not ask to have this provision removed from the act, but I do ask that the widow be placed at least in the same position as the woman I have just mentioned. I think it is only fair, and only plain justice, to give to the mother, who, after all, has probably suffered more than any other class of person in this war, an opportunity of obtaining a pension. Let us, at any rate, be fair enough to admit that if there is one class that did suffer, if there is one class from whom bitter tears were wrung during the war, it was the widowed mother. It is more likely the widowed mother had more to endure, spent more anxious nights and wept more tears than any other class in the community. We have given pensions to almost everyone else, but this particular class. We have in the past, I think, been sadly deficient in our duty. It should be the duty of the House to support this resolution and put an end to the anomaly which exists in our present legislation.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment): Mr. Speaker, I was not in the House when my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) brought to its attention the question referred to in his motion. Therefore, I have been unable to appreciate the argument which he has submitted. As my hon. friend stated in the last part of his remarks, the particular case of the widow who has been deserted or abandoned by her husband is pitiable in the extreme. Although I am not in a position to discuss the question on its merits at the present moment, I would not prolong the discussion and would very humbly suggest to my hon. friend that he consent to withdraw his motion and submit the matter to the special parliamentary committee which has been appointed for the purpose of studying these questions, particularly, those relating to pensions and re-establishment. The committee would hear the representations which have been submitted by my hon. friend and could then offer a recommendation to the House when the time comes to prepare a report. I hope my hon. friend will find it agreeable to him to comply with this request. If, however, he desires to secure the opinion of the House on this question, I have, of course, no serious objection; but, as I said a minute ago, I think it is advisable that the committee should be advised of this matter, study it thoroughly, examine it in all its different phases and aspects with the idea of making a recommendation on the subject.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Militia and Defence): Mr. Speaker, this question of pensions is, day by day, becoming a matter of education; that is, we are receiving, as the days go by, more information as to the condition and the situation. Since the war and since the passage of the act, conditions have arisen that probably were not contemplated when that act was being passed, and I think we ought to have an open mind to deal with all these matters in the light of the new information we have. The hon. member for Quebece South (Mr. Power) spoke of instances in his experience where injustice had been done, unwittingly, of course, under the pension scheme provided for by the Pension Act as formerly drawn, to widowed mothers on account of their having some income from some other source. I must not criticise the Pension Act, of course, because one's hind-sight is wonderful; but, in the town in which I live, I came across two or three instances where the widowed mother was plainly entitled to a certain pension, but, as she had from a house a rental that did not begin to keep her and two or three other small items of income, she was deprived of a pension which, to my mind, she really ought to have received, as her two sons, one of whom was killed, performed magnificent services overseas. Under the peculiar working of the act she did not receive her pension, but that matter has been remedied.

In justice to my province, I might call attention to the fact that, in Ontario, we have an act such as the one my hon. friend mentioned, whereby children are compelled to support their parents. My hon. friend has given the House good reasons why this act should prevail throughout the Dominion of Canada; and if it were within the province of this House to make this a federal act, I would say: "Do so," because I firmly believe that there is nothing so lamentable in the world as to see parents moping about, uncared for, living, perhaps, in penury, depending on the charity of friends, while their children live in fairly comfortable circumstances and some far beyond comfortable circumstances. If a child has no regard for his or her parent, that is a time when the law ought to step in and compel him or her to perform that duty. I feel confident that, during the last two or three years, we placed such an act as that on the statute books of Ontario.

I am heartily in sympathy with the main point brought up by my hon friend in his resolution. As the House has undertaken to cure the defects which applied to the widowed mother as regards the war land forces, the same action cannct be wrong if applied to the naval and air forces.

As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is away, I am not in a position to know how much this involves; but I am heartily in accord with the principle of the resolution as proposed by my hon. friend, and I should like to see some way by which it could be placed in a statute of this Parliament.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, possibly my hon. friend (Mr. Power), in the absence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), would not press this particular motion to a division. I think it would involve some consideration as to the extent of the financial liability that is likely to be incurred, and the House should have knowledge on that point. In the meantime the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment (Mr. Béland) has suggested that the committee might consider the matter. My hon. friend will know what to say as regards that; but I would like to ask him to consider the advisability of allowing his motion to stand, at any rate, until the Minister of Finance shall have an opportunity of speaking on it.

Hon. Sir HENRY L. DRAYTON (West York): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that what we ought to do at the present time is quite clear, perhaps, in some way, the motion of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) goes a little further than he intended it to go. There is no doubt as to the intent of the act, and that is to recognize the mother as she ought to be recognized, but, at the same time, treating the matter, as many other matters of pension are treated, namely, as a matter of application having regard to her necessity. If, in other words, she were a wealthy woman, I do not think my hon. friend believes that she should get a pension. I think his attitude is that the money should be left for other widows, widowed mothers and soldiers who are badly in need of it and that, as was the attitude of the late government, the need of the beneficiary of the pension was something that should be very much considered, and that the mere sacrifice itself was not sufficient, because it is impossible for Parliament to do justice to the sacrifice. It seems to me that the proper thing would be, not to have the motion withdrawn, as has been suggested, but to have it referred to the Standing Committee on Pensions where proper evidence can be taken and the matter properly considered and not lost sight of. I would suggest to the hon. member for Quebec South that the motion, instead of being withdrawn, should be referred to that committee.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Pensions Committee, I should like to say a word of assurance to the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) who moved the resolution. This point has been and is at the present time under discussion in that committee, and I can say that it is being discussed from a sympathetic standpoint. I think the ground we have taken in the discussion so far as it has gone, is that, as regards the point of having that pension cut down by the amount of income which the widowed mother received from other sources, every dependent, whether a widow or a widowed mother is entitled to a comfortable livelihood. We are trying now to amend the act so that that comfortable livelihood will be secured; but, as my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) says, the money will be applied, as far as possible, where it is most necessary. There are many cases of widows as well as widowed mothers where a small income is received from their own labours, where, in spite of lack of strength, they take in washing, or do small jobs around the place, or go out sewing, or take up different classes of labour for which they are not fitted, in order to augment the pension so as to make it sufficient to enable them to live in decent comfort. In those cases, the opinion of the committee is—perhaps I had better not say—

Mr. POWER: In those cases, legislation has already been introduced and passed to the effect that widows and widowed mothers do not lose any of their pension owing to their earnings, so that the committee was probably discussing something that was passed two or three yeas ago.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I was going to say that we included in that small incomes from other sources which were not sufficient in themselves to keep the widowed mother in decent circumstances. Our aim is to bring in a recommendation as soon as possible that will amend the act to cover these cases and provide as far as possible for the decent, comfortable maintenance of those women who have given their sons to the service of the country. We believe that the foundation principle is this, that the country owes them this as the least it can possibly do for them; and that is what we are trying to do. I am not speaking against the motion; I am in favour of it. But I simply wish to reassure the hon. member that if the matter is referred to us it will be treated from a sympathetic point of view.

Mr. L. H. MARTELL (Hants): While possibly it is not strictly relevant to the subject before the House, nevertheless I think that the matter to which I wish to call attention now is apropos of the motion that has been proposed by my hon. friend. I wish to refer to a case that occurred in the constituency I have the honour to represent. Four or five weeks ago a woman, whose son was killed at the front and who was receiving separation allowance and assigned pay, found herself in need of a pension. At the time her son was killed she was in receipt of separation allowance and assigned pay. She had a son-in-law who was assisting her and by means of that assistance, and other small aid and with what she had saved from her separation allowance and assigned pay, she was able to make out. But about six months ago she found herself absolutely without means, and she was faced with the alternative of securing a pension or going to the poorhouse. She appealed to me and I took up the matter; but I am sorry to say that the department at Ottawa ruled against her. This woman's son met his death overseas; yet it was held that she was not entitled to a pension because three years had elapsed between the young man's death and the date of application for the pension. If that is the system that obtains in the matter of granting pensions in this country, then the sooner our people are informed to that effect, and the sooner we have done with this idle pretence about providing for the relatives of returned men, the better it will be for us all in Canada. I wrote to the minister and I think that probably I was very plain in the observations I made. I received very little satisfaction.

It is all very well for people to say that they have sympathy with the relatives of the men who were killed overseas. But sympathy will not support people of old age who have given their sons to the country's service. Sympathy and fine words will not keep them from going to the poorhouse, and the sooner we put away such maudlin pity and get down to the realities of life, the sooner we administer pension affairs on a basis of what is fair and equitable, the better it will be for all concerned. A few minutes ago the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Graham) was telling the House that he would like to see a federal act, if it were within the competence of this Parliament to pass such, that would compel sons and daughters to protect and support their parents. I believe that there is at the present time a law similar to this, if not on all fours with it, in the province of Quebec. My hon. friend should remember that that province sets this Dominion a lesson in her urbanity and filial affection. Indeed, the people of Quebec are princes of the principles of urbanity, and the fact that an English-speaking minister rises in this Parliament and says that he would like to see enacted in this country such a law as he has described, is not going to better things. Quebec has been very much abused, and coming, as I do, from the province of Nova Scotia, I must say that every true Canadian is thankful for the fact that there is such a province as Quebec where filial affection reigns supreme and urbanity prevails everywhere. I advise the Minister of Militia to go to his own province of Ontario and ask them to put this sort of thing into effect, rather than to ask the House of Commons to do it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I might remind my hon. friend that we have such a law in Ontario.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. POWER: Mr. Speaker, some other hon. members, I think, desire to speak on this subject.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HANCE J. LOGAN (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, the resolution of my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) certainly commends itself to hon. members, particularly to those who have had any experience of pension matters. Therefore I am not going to take up the time of the House, except to express my concurrence in the resolution and to suggest that its subject matter be referred to the committee which is now inquiring into pension grievances, as proposed by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman).

We could multiply many times the grievances of fathers and widowed mothers in reference to refusals of pensions on the ground of the parents still having some earning power, but to do so would be only to repeat what has been already said this afternoon, and what is known to everyone who has had anything to do with pension matters.

I remember one case in particular of a mother whose four grown up boys volunteered for service when war broke out and went overseas. Her husband was subsequently injured in the spine in a mining accident and became an invalid. Three of the soldier boys were killed in action, and the survivor is still suffering physical injury due to war service. The invalid father died after lingering a few years, and the widowed mother is now compelled to maintain her other children, all quite young, and to do so she has to undertake work of the most menial character. She is a dear little woman, is an active worker in the Salvation Army, and has all the attributes of a good mother. This widowed mother of three sons who "lie in Flanders' fields" has now to maintain her family by cleaning the men's waiting-room in a railway station the floors of which are generally in a nasty condition. It is not creditable to Canada that this brave mother should be forced to do this disagreeable, menial work to maintain her family. She was granted a pension of $48 a month, but not long ago the Pension Board, on the ground, I believe, that this little mother was earning something, reduced the pension to $40—and to earn that "something" she has to go down on her knees and wipe the filth from waiting-room floors. That condition of affairs is a disgrace to this country and should never be allowed, and I hope that when this and like cases are reported to the committee they will make such strong representations that there will be no occasion for these mothers being any longer subjected to these indignities in order to discharge a duty to their dependents that should be discharged by the state.

I know of another case where a boy was forced to leave school at 14 years of age to maintain his mother. He volunteered when only eighteen or nineteen, went overseas, and was subsequently killed in action. His mother is now forced to maintain two little children by getting up at seven o'clock in the morning and working for nine hours in a casket factory sewing shrouds on coffins. The Pension Board refused one cent of a pension either to her or her crippled husband, stating in their letter to the husband, dated March third last:

> Under the provisions of the Canadian Pension Act pension may be awarded to the parent of a deceased soldier when such parent is in a dependent condition and is incapacitated though mental or physical infirmity from providing for his or her maintenance.
> The Board of Pension Commissioners has decided that as you are not totally disabled but able to accept certain kinds of employment when available—

I may say that this man is without some fingers of one hand and naturally is not able to secure employment when it is very difficult even for a man with both hands to get work.

> —and as your wife and son are both earning, it is not possible to award you pension under the act.

I have already referred to what the wife is doing. The boy who is left, and who has now reached the age of fifteen years, has had to leave school in order to earn the paltry sum of $5 a week to help keep his mother and father from starving to death. His mother works in the casket factory, and the board have refused to pay her any pension although the boy was the means of her maintenance before he went overseas. These are cases, it seems to me, which will bring into disrepute the pension scheme of this country. Of course, we all realize how dangerous it is, from the financial standpoint, to open the door perhaps too wide. There are cases brought before the Pension Board which are not deserving, and no doubt somewhere the endeavour will be made "to put one over" the board, to use a common expression. But, Mr. Speaker, there are also cases such as the two I have mentioned, which show the necessity for an amendment to the act or for giving more discretion to the Pension Board of this great country.

I am not going to take up time further, believing that this matter will be thoroughly investigated by a committee, and that there will not be in the future such instances as I have brought to the attention of the House this evening, of parents whose children have made the supreme sacrifice being refused a decent pension because, forsooth, they are able to scrub a floor or work in a factory.

I would suggest that the hon. member have this matter referred to the committee, but if he does not do so, I shall vote for the resolution.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): I unfortunately left the Chamber about half-past five this afternoon and did not hear the discussion, but in reading over the resolution again—I had read it before—I feel that it has practically my total sympathy. I have had a number of cases at different times where the widowed mother of a soldier who was killed overseas in some branch of the service was receiving what seemed to me to be a very unfair deal. Such a case as my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Logan) has mentioned is an example of that kind. While it is true we are paying out an immense sum of pensions in this country, and true also that somebody may attempt to impose upon the Pension Board, at the same time I believe it is the duty of this Parliament and of the people of this country to do everything in their power to see that the mothers, as well as the wives and children, of the men who served overseas get a fair deal. I had a case very recently, which I think I have mentioned just in passing on another occasion, where the mother of a boy who was killed overseas had a couple of small houses rented in Port Arthur—she was not in my constituency but wrote me regarding the matter—and she went to England while she was getting a small rent from these houses. Later they became vacant, but because her case had been investigated and it had been reported that she was receiving a small rent her pension was cut down, or cancelled altogether, if I remember rightly, and according to her letter, which was almost pitiful, she was then receiving no rent at all. There is a great danger, I think, in taking into account some income which a widowed mother may have, because the investigator may be a little careless in his investigation, or even if he is thoroughly sincere, circumstances may change after he has made his investigation.

I am wholly in sympathy with such a resolution as this. I also agree with the last speaker (Mr. Logan) in his suggestion that perhaps this is a proper subject for discussion before the committee that is now sitting; but if the resolution should go to a vote, my sympathies would be entirely with it, and I should be compelled to support the mover.

There is just one other point I would mention. Occasionally there may be cases where some mother who does not receive a pension may impose upon the Pension Board and so upon the people of this country, but I believe the mothers of that type will be small in number. At any rate, it will be far better for this country to make the mistake of being too generous than to err on the other side and be too parsimonious in a matter of this kind.

Mr. T. W. CALDWELL (Victoria and Carleton): As a member of last year's Pensions Committee I should like to say a word on this resolution. In the first place, it has my hearty sympathy and support. Although the act was amended last year to penalize the widowed mother more than she had ever been penalized before, it was done simply on the majority vote of last year's committee. As one of the committee, I was very much opposed to the amendment last year, which was to this effect: The original act provided that a widowed mother who had sons living at home with her would be supposed to be receiving $10 a month from each. The amendment last year widened that to include girls as well as boys. I believe the word "children" was substituted for the word "boys". Further than that, the amendment left it to the discretion of the board to decide whether or not that $10 should be deducted from the pension. I believe the exact wording was "any of the children either living at home or abroad who are contributing or are supposed to be contributing to the widowed mother's maintenance". That was partially offset by another provision which was made last year. Up until last year the widowed mother's earnings were deducted from her pension, I think, in toto, but last year it was provided that she could earn up to $20 without any deduction being made, this $20 including what was supposed to be contributed by the children.

With regard to referring this matter to the Pensions Committee, I sincerely hope that the mover of this resolution will not do that, for this reason: I was a member of that committee last year and am again this. We had a difference of opinion over this question in the committee last year, and we had a difference of opinion over it the year before, and the act as it now stands was only approved by a very small majority of last year's committee. I think the House itself should decide this important question rather than shelve it on to a small committee. Therefore, I hope that the mover will not withdraw the resolution or have it referred to the committee. I think the House itself should settle the matter.

Mr. POWER: There seems to be a slight misconception with regard to the purport of the resolution due, I think, to a misprint on the Order Paper. The resolution as printed on the Order Paper reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient to amend the act to provide pensions to or in respect of members of the Canadian Naval and Military Air Forces.

The resolution should read:

Canadian Naval, Military and Air Forces.

Some hon. members were under the impression that the widowed mothers of members of the Canadian military forces had already obtained certain benefits which members of the naval and air forces had not obtained. In order to correct this impression, may I state to the House that the widowed mothers of all ex-soldiers and sailors and airmen are all on exactly the same basis?

I forgot to state this afternoon that not only are the ordinary widowed mothers, that is to say, the widowed mothers of Canadian soldiers, affected adversely by this legislation, but certain widowed mothers of Canadian soldiers who do not reside in Canada are more severely affected than others.

For instance, take the widowed mother of a soldier who enlisted from the United States. Take the widowed mother of a soldier who enlisted in Canada and was killed, who now resides in Scotland or in England. She is not treated with the same generosity as the widowed mothers who reside in Canada. Certain legislation was passed improving the lot of the Canadian widowed mother, but it was expressly stipulated that these improvements would only affect her so long as she remained in Canada. If she were to return, possibly to her old home, in Scotland or in England, her pension would be reduced by so much. If she returned to the United States the same thing would occur. I submit that the loss to the mother who resides in Scotland or the United States, or anywhere else in the world, is the same as the loss to the mother who resides in Canada; and legislation such as is aimed at in this resolution would do a great deal to improve the circumstances of these people.

Now with reference to the request which has been made by the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, by the Prime Minister, and by the Minister of Militia, I have no objection out of deference to them, to referring the matter to the Pensions Committee; but let me say this: For five sessions I have moved this resolution in the House. On every occasion when it was debated as a resolution it would meet with almost unanimous support. Member after member has risen from his seat and given examples of the manner in which widowed mothers were treated throughout the country. The resolution was always sent to the parliamentary committee with the best wishes of, and a strong recommendation from, the members of the House; yet invariably when the findings of the committee were brought down and put in the form of legislation we found that the committee had been unwilling to go further than grant a paltry five or ten dollars a month extra to the widowed mother. On every occasion when the report of the committee came before the House I have endeavoured to have this legislation amended in order to give greater opportunity for this class to obtain proper pensions, and on two occasions at least, and possibly on three, my amendment has been ruled out of order by the Speaker on the ground that I have no power to amend the resolution of the committee on matters pertaining to a money bill. So that though I agree with my hon. leader and his colleagues, and, out of deference to them, have no objection to referring the resolution to the committee, I have very little hope that it will be put into legislation unless the members of the committee who are now present make it their business to see that a hard, strong fight is put up in the committee and that the wishes of the House are for once carried out by them.

Mr. SPEAKER: Am I to understand the motion is referred to the committee?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member cannot amend his own motion. Another hon. member will have to propose that such motion be referred to the special committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nobody can propose that now. The hon. member has closed the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: It can be done by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know at the moment what it is that the House is asked to give unanimous consent to, but the debate on this motion is now closed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

PENSIONS TO MOTHERS OF DECEASED SOLDIERS

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that the Board of Pension Commissioners be given discretionary power to award pensions to mothers of deceased soldiers in cases where such mothers have been deserted by or become separated from their husbands, such pensions to be paid at the same rate as those awarded to widowed mothers.

He said: There is very little to be said with reference to this resolution. It asks the House to go on record as approving of the principle of treating the mothers of deceased soldiers who have been deserted, or become separated from their husbands, on the same basis as widowed mothers, provided always they can show their case a deserving one. It is in order to give effect to the latter provision that the resolution proposes to grant certain discretionary power to the Pension Commission. I may say it has been the experience of most of those who have had to do with the Board of Pension Commissioners that the less discretion we allow them the better it will be for the pensioner; but the number of and variety of cases dealt with here under this resolution is so great, that I do not wish to tie down the commission by any hard and fast rules. It may be possible later on to amend the law so as to give greater justice to all concerned; but I fear that if discretion is not allowed to the commissioners, a certain number of undeserving cases may obtain pensions.

In order to illustrate the cases I would like to see covered by legislation, allow me to cite one instance which occurred in my own constituency. There is a certain family in Quebec the children of which I have known for a number of years. When war broke out there were three boys, all of whom enlisted for service overseas. Two returned very badly wounded, so badly wounded as to be unable to earn a living. One is now, I understand, under the care of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and the other is drawing a full disability pension. The third boy was unfortunately killed at the front. After some time his mother, whom I had always known as a widow, obtained a pension. Subsequently she was able to obtain a small position as a charwoman in the post office. This year, two years and a half after the pension was granted, a visitor came to see this lady, and after making inquiries as to her financial condition, etc., went away. Two weeks afterwards a letter arrived which stated that the pension was cut off owing to the fact that this lady was now earning a certain amount of money at her employment at the post office. The case was referred to me, and I wrote to the chairman of the Board of Pension Commissioners calling their attention to the legislation which provided that the pension of a widowed mother was not to be reduced on account of her earnings. The reply I received from the Board of Pension Commissioners was, that everything I said was quite right but that the lady was not a widow. On making further inquiries I found that she had been deserted in the year 1894 by her husband —who would to-day be eighty-eight years of age if he were alive—and she has never heard of him since.

She will not obtain her pension unless she proves that she is a widow. It is to remedy cases like that, where, taking advantage of pure technicality, the Board of Pension Commissioners decided to cut off the pension that I propose to give them power to treat a woman in a case such as I have mentioned on the same basis as a widowed mother. It is not necessary to explain to the House that it would be a very costly proceeding for this old lady to employ detectives to find out where her husband was, and to advertise in the newspapers for him.

I need not say to the House that, under the law, at any rate of the province of Quebec, with regard to civil rights and with regard to property, after five years' absence a man can be declared an absentee; nor need I explain that in criminal matters—and this applies to the whole of Canada—a person can plead against the charge of bigamy that he or she has not heard from the other party for seven years. So that, when we have such provisions in our statutes already with reference to these matters, surely there should be a similar provision with reference to pensions. I submit it is absolutely unjust and unfair to ask a lady, in a case such as I have mentioned, to go to the expense of proving that she is a widow. I have been informed by the Board of Pension Commissioners that a large number of such cases exist throughout Canada, and that it would be a good thing if legislation were introduced to cover them. I think the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment (Mr. Béland) agrees with me that such cases should be looked after. I know a number of cases where, perhaps, there might be attempts at fraud, and it is for that reason that, at the present time, I propose to give a certain amount of discretion to the Board of Pension Commissioners. I think this resolution should, at least, on the face of it carry, and that it would not be necessary to refer it to any committee whatever. The case is absolutely plain and I look for an expression of approval on the part of the House.

DAYLIGHT SAVING

House resumed, from April 19, consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Kay.

That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that legislation be introduced during the present session to prohibit the adoption of Daylight Saving Time in any part of Canada.

And of the proposed amendment thereto by Mr. Duff.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Som hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Lost.

Mr. SPEAKER: I declare the motion lost.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER WATERWAY

House resumed, from April 26, consideration of the following proposed motion of Mr. Church:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government of Canada should give early and favourable consideration to the report of the International Joint Commission on the St. Lawrence River Waterway, and request the Government of the United States to join with Canada in making an international agreement for carrying out the work so recommended.

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (West Toronto): When the House adjourned on the day that this question was previously under consideration I had not had an opportunity to say the few words that I had in my mind on the subject. I commend, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Church) for bringing this question before the House. It is a subject of very great importance to the Dominion of Canada, and one which, I think, it is quite necessary to discuss more thoroughly than it can be discussed this session before we can bring the House and the country to realize their responsibility for carrying out this great project. For that reason I entirely disagree with the hon. member from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) who indicated that it was a loss of time for the House to discuss a motion of this kind. It is only by discussing a project like this that the House can be brought to understand what it really means and that the country can be educated as to the necessity of so great a work.

My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle seems to think the object of this scheme is to increase the size of the city of Toronto. He may have got that idea from the fact that a representative of the city of Toronto brought it forward, but I think, if he will give it a little closer examination, he will discover that it is really to serve those parts of the country that are not congested in the form of great cities. To my mind this is a well balanced project that will be of benefit to every province of Canada, and it is one that has the approval of the International Joint Commission, and all members of the House have the report of that commission, I believe. It not only has their approval on the basis of an exhaustive examination of all the phases of the work, but it has the support of the President of the United States.

One of my hon. friends, I think the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) rather argued that that was an objection to it, that a partnership between the Dominion of Canada and the United States in a project of this kind was not desirable. I entirely disagree with that idea, because I think that a partnership that might be entered into by these two great countries to carry out this work is something that is desirable, and brings the project easily within the possibilities of the next few years. I am not at all alarmed, Sir, about entering into a partnership of this kind with the United States. I think these closer relationships in the development of both countries by a great project such as we are discussing is one of the things that bind us closer together, without bringing us under the same flag or under the same political system, and is calculated to continue for another century that hundred years of peace we have had between the two countries. I think, Sir, that the amity that has existed between the United States and Canada is due very largely to the maintenance of commercial and financial relations, and it is a happy thing to find the Dominion of Canada and United States co-operating with the International Joint Commission to carry through a work which is calculated to be of tremendous service, in my judgment, to every province in confederation.

This country has been endowed by Providence with the most wonderful system of inland waterways that can be found in any part of the world and while we have, in the past, done a good deal to improve those waterways, we are now face to face with a greater development than has ever before been conceived, and one which, I think, a close examination will show to be well within our financial resources and calculated to produce such results as would warrant the two countries in going on with the work. If we should sit down and refuse to develop the possibilities that are within our reach, we would surely be charged by later generations with lack of vision and courage. In the history of this country, there have been times when the amount of money involved would have been staggering; but, during the last ten or twelve years, we have got into the habit of speaking in terms of millions and sometimes of billions; and $100,000,000 or $250,000,000 is not to-day nearly so staggering a sum as it was a few years ago.

The hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) drew attention the other day to the remarkable economy of using water instead of railway transportation. I do not think I need emphasize that further than to point out that, having such possibilities for water transportation, we ought to show some courage in developing them, because the saving in cost of transportation is going to be so enormous and because, with a recurring period of prosperity, the railway systems of this country and of this continent will be overtaxed as they were a few years ago. Canada has more miles of railway per thousand of population than, perhaps, is entirely necessary for the trade of the country. At the same time, if we can reduce the cost of transportation, especially to and from the great West, we are going to save the farmers of the West a tremendous amount of money, and we are going to make it possible for them to puchase goods manufactured in the East, and thus make our trade run east and west under the best and most economical conditions.

About two years ago, what is called car shortage occurred in Canada; men could not get cars to carry their goods. That was due to the remarkable prosperity that we enjoyed at that time. That condition is coming back, and it will not be many years, two or three, perhaps, before we shall be again faced with the same conditions that existed two or three years ago, when there was not a sufficient number of cars to handle the trade of the country. We cannot, of course, construct this waterway in time to meet that condition; but as we are certain to be faced with that in recurring periods in the future, we ought now to begin considering at what time we shall undertake this work in order to increase the transportaion facilities.

I said I thought this project was of great advantage to every province in the Dominion. What will be the effect of it upon the maritime provinces? I believe it would enable the miners of Nova Scotia to sell their coal in the greater part of Ontario. With a deep draught in the canal, with large boats carrying, perhaps, 10,000 tons, Nova Scotia coal could be sold as far west as Hamilton and the Niagara peninsula; it might go as far north as North Bay or further. If we could produce a condition of affairs by which coal from Nova Scotia could be sold throughout Ontario, that would be one of the greatest boons that could be given to that province. What is true of coal is true of steel, which is manufactured in Nova Scotia in large quantities. Steel is a kind of freight that requires cheap transportation, and vessels could be loaded at the steel mills and the product of those mills carried as far west as the head of the Great Lakes. Surely that would be of advantage to Nova Scotia. What is true of Nova Scotia is, of course, true of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island if those provinces have anything to sell. Probably the potatoes of New Brunswick would still go into Maine; but there have been times when potatoes of New Brunswick would have been very welcome in Ontario, and potatoes require a low freight rate. It would be easy to market, in the great centres of population, all that the maritime provinces generally produce. if we had cheaper transportation, and the only way of getting cheaper transportation is by water instead of by rail. This plan proposes and provides for that.

I think this project would be of equal value to Quebec. I know some hon. gentlemen think that Quebec will be injuriously affected by the canalization of the St. Lawrence. They probably think that the head of ocean navigation would be extended from Montreal further west. That would be true as regards tramp steamers and other regular lines of freight vessels; but Montreal would continue to be the head of ocean navigation for passenger traffic, because it is not designed, at least not in my mind, that passenger ships should go further west than the city of Montreal. The benefit that would accrue to Quebec, as I see the proposition, would be to have the products of the factories and industrial establishments of that province carried from the place of manufacture to the head of the Great Lakes at one-fifth or, perhaps, one-tenth of the freight cost that is now imposed by the railways. Many different manufactured products of Quebec could be sold in the western provinces under very much better conditions, if the cost of freight were reduced so enormously as it certainly would be by having the goods carried by water instead of by rail. In addition to that, no part of the Dominion of Canada can prosper without the great city of Montreal and other manufacturing cities of the province of Quebec enjoying their share of that prosperity.

I do not think any province in Canada can be prosperous without all the other provinces having their share of that prosperity; what makes for the good of one, makes for the good of all. And in this particular this proposed project, which has the approval not only of the men who have studied it most exhaustively but also of the great Republic to the south of us, is one that ought to commend itself to the business men of Quebec who are conducting the great industrial establishments there, as well as to the financial interests of that province which are all more or less tied up, inevitably and inextricably, with the prosperity of the manufacturers and industrial enterprises down there.

I do not think that any place would profit more by the carrying out of this project than would the city of Montreal itself. It is the great financial centre of Canada, and in that fact alone it would draw to itself a very large share of the prosperity resulting from the completion of this undertaking. I sometimes compare those who are writing against this project in the press of Quebec to those workmen who resisted years ago, and those who still resist, the introduction of labour saving machinery. I take it that increased efficiency in any part of our industrial or transportation systems would work to the general advantage of the whole country, and in that way the province of Quebec stands to gain quite as much as, if not more than, the province of Ontario. Ontario, I think, would gain, but not nearly as much as the province of Quebec. Quebec has a longer distance to carry its manufactured goods than Ontario and has to pay higher freight rates. But if we had a waterway with regular lines of ships leaving Montreal and going up the St. Lawrence to the head of the lakes, any advantage western Ontario now has in the way of freight rates as against the province of Quebec would be wiped out; for the difference in the freight rate on a ship between Montreal and the head of the lakes, and between Toronto and the head of the lakes, is the merest possible fraction. So that I emphasize my argument that the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec stand to gain more than the province of Ontario.

I should think that all hon. gentlemen to my left would be among the protagonists of the project. It has been estimated that the cost of carrying grain from the West would be reduced by between five and ten cents a bushel. Let us put it at seven cents, and my hon. friends can figure out from that what a saving there would be in carrying the grain of the three western provinces by waterway instead of by rail.

Mr BROWN: On my hon. friend's calculation, how many million bushels of grain would it require to save the interest on the amount that would be spent on the undertaking?

Mr. HOCKEN: I shall come to that question later. If we could reduce the cost of carrying grain to somewhere about 7 cents a bushel, and if we could proportionately reduce the cost of carrying manufactured goods to the West, the people of the prairie provinces would gain both ways. They would buy what they required from the East at lower prices, while they would sell to the East and to the markets overseas at a higher rate. So that it is my conviction that, if we except the province of British Columbia, every part of Canada stands to gain enormously by the construction of this work.

I am not going into the details of this matter, because they are to be found in this book to which reference has been made; and my hon. friend from North Toronto gave a great many details the other day. I am rather trying to deal with the subject in a general way. My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown) wants to know how much it would cost. Well, Sir, I am going to argue that it would not cost anything; I contend that the building of the canal would not cost the Dominion a cent. I have no doubt that that assertion strikes my hon. friend from Lisgar as rather a startling one. But the basis of my argument is that in building the deep water canal in the St. Lawrence there would at the same time be developed for use in the Dominion of Canada—particularly in Ontario and Quebec—two million horse-power of electrical energy; and there would also be developed two million horse-power of energy for the United States. I venture to say that that four million horse-power of energy could be sold for enough to pay all overhead costs of the work both from the electrical and from the navigation point of view. If you take four million horse-power at $20 or $25 per horse-power, you have $100,000,000 a year, which, besides paying overhead costs, would probably pay all the costs of distributing the electrical energy and administering the navigation of the canal.

Mr. HUGHES: Would there be a demand for that horse power?

Mr. HOCKEN: Not immediately, but if this work were started it is conceivable that it would take two or three years, or perhaps longer, to complete it, and during that time a good deal could be done to prepare the market for the energy that would be developed. But I would point out in this connection the fact that in the United States they are finding it not only desirable but profitable to electrify their railways, and a market would be found for a great deal of the power that would be developed as a result of this undertaking, in the electrifying of the railways of eastern Ontario and perhaps the western part of Quebec. At all events, it would not be a difficult or costly thing for the National railways to make preparations to operate all the line from Montreal to the Niagara frontier by electrical energy. And the time is coming when that system of transportation will be much more widely employed than it is to-day. There are a great many hundred miles of railway in the United States that are operated by electricity, which is by all odds the best motive power that a railway can have. In the first place, it saves about 10 per cent—I think it is estimated at 12 per cent—of the total weight that a locomotive has to haul. In water and fuel the steam locomotive has to haul 12 per cent of the weight of the train, and this could be eliminated by the use of electrical energy. In the next place, electricity is much more efficient in cold weather, such as we have in this country occasionally. The electrical locomotive never freezes up, so that it is more dependable the colder the weather becomes; and, as an hon. member suggests, it absolutely removes the fire risk wherever it is employed. I think it will be found, before ten years have passed, that electricity will be recognized throughout this continent as the ideal motive power for all railways, and there is going on in the United States at the present time a discussion as to whether they should not construct great central power plants to develop electrical power by coal at the pitmouth, transmitting that power to operate the railways two or three hundred miles away.

I am quite satisfied, Sir, from my amateur study of the railway problem of this continent that that is a development of the near future, and I make this digression in order to answer my hon. friend who asked me if there would be a demand for this power. I can tell him, as my hon. friend from North Toronto pointed out the other day, that where electrical energy is developed in large quantities there industrial activity is intensified, and what were formerly little villages or small towns soon develop into great industrial communities. Take the city of Welland alone, where there is an abundance of electrical power, and we find an outstanding example in our part of the province, of the growth of a small place into a considerable city. In the whole of western Ontario you will find few industries that are not operating with electrical power. In a word, electrical power is one of the principal factors that make western Ontario such a prosperous part of the Dominion. Electrical power has three great advantages over steam power—it is cheaper, it is cleaner, and it is more efficient. I could give you facts out of my own experience, Sir, if that were necessary, but I do not think I need do so to bring myself within the judgment of hon. members. I have no fear that within a reasonably short period of time after this power were developed there would be a sufficient market to take up every horsepower of energy generated.

My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown) asked me about the financing of this project. There is a plan, Mr. Speaker, that I have discussed with one of the men who have been prominent in advocating this movement in the United States, and it commends itself to my judgment at least; whether it will satisfy the House or not is another question. The plan is that this Government and the government of the United States might constitute a commission, for service and not for profit, with power to issue bonds to be guaranteed by both governments. I am afraid there are some persons in this country who do not like that expression; they would like to develop this great power on the St. Lawrence if it could be done for private profit. I think that would be a mistake. I am of opinion that we have gone far enough to discover that there are some things that can be done successfully by the public for the public; in fact, we have demonstrated this so fully in our own province that I feel satisfied this undertaking could be worked cut in an equally satisfactory manner.

Let us suppose, Mr. Speaker, that an international commission such as I speak of were created to carry out the plans that have been or will be prepared at a cost, say, of $250,000,000 or $300,000,000. That commission would undertake to work upon a reasonable recompense for their services; but not a cent would go to pay dividends; there would be no stock to pour water into. The commission would have power to sell the bonds, and I do not think any hon. member would hesitate to believe that if an international commission were created they could sell twice over all the bonds necessary to carry out the project, those bonds to bear a reasonable rate of interest, for they would have at their back the security of the whole North American continent, and would rely upon the earning capacity both of the canal and of the power to be generated, but particularly of the latter. It is primarily a navigation project, designed to take advantage of the great endowment that Providence has given to us; but with it goes the possibility of developing an enormously valuable asset as a by-product of the extension of our deep-water navigation system from the gulf of St. Lawrence to the head of the lakes.

I should like hon. members to consider this project, not from any narrow, provincial or sectional standpoint, but from every standpoint. I have no expectation that we are going to settle it to-day, nor at this session, nor perhaps next session, but I anticipate that some member, if not my hon. friend from North Toronto, (Mr. Church) then his colleague from West Toronto (Mr. Hocken), will certainly bring this question before the House at some subsequent session. If in the meantime hon. members will examine and study its relation to every province and realize the benefits that will accrue to each province from the completion of the project, I am satisfied that in the course of another session or two—I hope next session—the House will see its way clear to take a decided step towards inaugurating this work and carrying it to completion.

If we were asked to-day to raise $150,000,000 or $250,000,000 to carry out a work of this magnitude, I think we would all hesitate to take action. That is what my hon. friend from Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) put to us the other day as an alternative. He said: If we are going to create a new navigation system, let us develop the Ottawa river practically from Montreal to lake Nipissing. Well, if we did that, we would have to go down in our own pockets to raise the necessary funds. We could not get a joint international commission appointed for such a purpose, we could not get assistance in financing from any other quarter. That consideration alone would seem to me to put that alternative out of the question at the present time. All the horsepower that could be developed from the Ottawa river, according to the figures of my hon. friend, is a million and a half. And that would be developed where? Not where it is needed, not where there is a market for it, but hundreds of miles away, with the result that much of that power would be lost in transmission. Besides, you cannot develop industrial communities of any size along the Ottawa river from this city up to lake Nipissing; that is absurd. Therefore any such electrical development would not amount to anything; but the development of electrical energy along the front of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec is something entirely different. There you already have a market, and there are the possibilities of a much more extended market. Further, by the use of this power that market would be constantly increasing and new industries would be established all the time, resulting in these two provinces becoming the great manufacturing centres of the Dominion—they are now, in fact, but they would then be much more so—and they would bring within reach of our country the possibility of developing foreign markets for our goods, because with cheap power we ought to be able to get lower costs of production, and with cheap transportation a vessel could load at any place in lake Ontario, lake Huron or lake Superior, as well as in the gulf or on the St. Lawrence river, and carry our manufactured goods to any part of the world.

Surely that is an alluring prospect that we ought to regard with keen sympathy and deep interest. I submit, Sir, that there is no undertaking facing the people of Canada to-day that is so promising of results, so promising of increasing our national prosperity and of such extraordinary value to us as the carrying out of this great work; and the adoption of this resolution submitted by my hon. friend from North Toronto would be the first step to this desirable consummation.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland): I cannot allow this resolution to be finally disposed of without taking some part in the discussion. Knowing the circumstances surrounding this matter and the conditions in connection with electrical power development fairly well, I feel that there is no question of greater importance or of greater interest that could come before this Parliament at this or any other session than the resolution which is now under discussion.

I notice that my hon. friend from St. James (Mr. Rinfret) in his speech on Wednesday last said:

> As to improving the navigability of the St. Lawrence, there is a lurking suspicion that this is only the ostensible purpose, and that the real purpose of the promoters is to promote water-power—

I wish to disabuse my hon. friend's mind of that idea at once. He is quite mistaken in supposing that the ostensible purpose of the promoters is to promote water-power, and when he speaks of promoting water-power, I apprehend that he means promoting water-power in so far as the development of electrical energy by water-power is concerned.

This proposition took its rise, in the first place, in the middle western states. Some eighteen or twenty of these important states feeling that it was necessary for the wellbeing of that great country that there should be better water transportation facilities between the Great Lakes and the ocean, formed an organization called the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the United States government the necessity of making the St. Lawrence river navigable from the Great Lakes to the ocean. That was practically the inauguration of this scheme, and the electrical power development only came into it when Canadians here interested in this matter took the question up themselves.

The American Tidewater Association had its formation twelve or fifteen years ago, and spent enormous sums of money in propaganda and publicity through the United States. Some four or five years ago a number of enthusiastic gentlemen in Canada felt that there should be a greater interest taken in this matter not only by our Canadian citizens, but by the Government of Canada, and they formed in the city of Windsor an association known as the Canadian Deep Waterway and Power Association, to act in conjunction with the United States association for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the two governments the benefits that would accrue from the undertaking and completion of this project, and through the Canadian association the great possibility of paying for the whole project by the development of electrical current. That is where the electrical element entered into the consideration of the matter.

A good deal has been said about the enormous expense, and I intend to-night to devote my time and what ability I have to dealing with that side of the matter. I notice my hon. friend from St. James in his speech the other day said:

> I want to remind the House also of some of the very good reasons which have been advanced why the Government should be very cautious in this matter—

I agree with him that the Government should be cautious.

> —should approach the whole question warily—

I quite agree that we should act warily.

> —and should refrain at the present time from taking the least practical action.

Why refrain? We can act cautiously, we can act warily, but it would not be the part of courageous citizens of Canada for us to refrain altogether from taking up this matter and endeavouring to deal with it as a business proposition in connection with an application to the United States government with a view to arriving at some practical understanding in regard to it. I think that we are quite capable, so far as the business end of it is concerned, of taking care of ourselves. We understand the matter as fully as they do, and I have no fear at all from that point of view.

Let us see in the first instance what the expense of this project will be. We have the engineers' estimates. It was stated by my hon. friend from St. James that possibly their estimate would not cover one-half the cost. Let me state that the engineers prepared their estimates last summer. They were published in August, and the details of the expenditure were also published. Those details have been in the hands of engineers who have been opposed to this project from that hour until now, and the fact that they have not up to this minute pointed out one error in the calculations of the engineers is the best evidence to my mind that their estimates are correct.

What do the engineers say? They say that the cost of the project will be $252,723,200, and that this amount will be required to make the St. Lawrence navigable from the lakes to the ocean and create an electrical power development on the international section of the river by which there will be developed 1,464,000 electrical horsepower. Those figures $252,723,200 are rather staggering, and it is necssary that we should know where this is going to lead before we attempt such enormous expenditure, even in conjunction with the wealthy United States of America. What does it mean? I agree with the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Hocken) in his remarks as to the financial end of this proposition. I understood him to say that he favoured the appointment of a joint commission. If the Government should incorporate what might be called the Joint International Navigation and Power Company with authority to issue, say, fifty year debentures, those debentures to be guaranteed by the governments of the United States and Canada, I submit to hon. members of this House that those debentures so issued could be readily sold at four per cent interest. Assuming that to be the case, the annual interest at four per cent on the capital expenditure would be $10,108,928. The annual cost of operation and maintenance as outlined by the engineers amounts to $2,562,000. The sinking fund to pay off that capital expenditure in fifty years would amount to $3,300,000 a year, making a total expenditure of $15,970,928 a year. This is an enormous expenditure but what have you got for it? You have electrical power amounting to 1,464,000 horse-power and at $12 per horse-power on the switchboard that would amount to $17,568,000, or a surplus over the annual expenditure sufficient to wipe off the whole indebtedness, upkeep and maintenance of $1,597,072.

Now I appeal to my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Rinfret) if the Montreal Light Heat and Power Company sell current at the switchboard at their works in the St. Lawrence river at $12 a horsepower? That is an exceedingly cheap electrical power at the switchboard, and if you sell the current at $12 per horsepower you have an annual surplus over what will be the whole cost of construction, the interest and sinking fund, in a period of fifty years, leaving a balance of $1,597,072 a year. Speaking broadly, that answers the financial situation. And these figures are not fictitious or visionary; they are the figures given us by the engineers who have made a thorough study of the situation. All these figures are agreed to by the joint commissioners of Canada and the United States, who have made a thorough study of the whole situation, and state that as far as they can ascertain by the evidence given they are actual. That would be on a basis of an equal share between the two countries, but we find that it is not at all to be the situation if this report is adopted, and it is only the adoption of this report that is asked. The United States Government may say that they want better terms than that report gives; but we are asking this Parliament and this Government to proceed on the basis of the adoption of that report. Now what does this report say in so far as expenditure is concerned.

In the first place let me point out what the report says in relation to the Welland canal, but first I want hon. gentlemen to remember this: We are at the outset faced with an expenditure of $80,000,000 for the construction of a new Welland ship canal. The Government of Canada is faced with that proposition. The estimates for the expense of that work were made in 1912, and the original estimate made at that time was for $50,000,000. The work would have been completed long before this, and well within that expenditure, had it not been for the cruel war which upset everyone's calculations and set the world back many years. Now with the increased cost, that expenditure is extended to about $80,000,000. The commissioners say this:

> Another factor in the situation that should not be lost sight of is the peculiar relationship to the proposed improvement of the new Welland ship canal, a portion of which is now under construction. As pointed out in an earlier part of this report, the completion of the Welland ship canal and the adoption and completion of the St. Lawrence improvement would remove the only barrier to the creation of a deep-water route from the head of the lakes to the sea. This would give at least 25-foot navigation from the sea up to the Detroit river, with a present minimum of about 20 feet above lake Erie. Although entirely outside the strict terms of the reference submitted to it by the two governments, the commission has been impressed by the fact that the new Welland ship canal is such an integral part of the waterway, and is so inseparately interwoven with the project under immediate consideration, that it should properly be considered as a part of the whole scheme and the expense of its construction should be apportioned between the two governments upon the same basis as the works recommended for the upper St. Lawrence.

So that we have at the outset this International Joint Commission recommending that the Welland ship canal be taken into consideration as a part of the whole project, and that the cost of this construction be apportioned between the two countries on the same basis as the upper St. Lawrence. Then they say in their recommendation:

> 1. The governments of the United States and Canada enter into an arrangement by way of treaty for a scheme of improvement of the St. Lawrence river between Montreal and lake Ontario.
> 2. That the new Welland ship canal be embodied in said scheme and treated as a part thereof.

Now how is that to be apportioned? It is recommended:

> That, except as set forth in recommendation (11), the cost of all "navigation works" be apportioned between the two countries on the basis of the benefits each will receive from the new waterway: Provided, That during the period ending five years after the completion of the works—and to be known as the Construction Period—the ratio fixing the amount chargeable to each country shall be determined upon certain known factors such as the developed resources and foreign and coastwise trade of each country within the territory economically tributary to the proposed waterway, and that that ratio shall be adjusted every five years thereafter and based upon the freight tonnage of each country actually using the waterway during the previous five year period.

Now will any hon. member say that if that proposition of the commissioners was carried out, the ratio of cost would be a fifty per cent ratio? Everyone knows that the United States will benefit eight or ten times more than Canada will for the next fifty years from the construction of this St. Lawrence waterway, and that is the basis of their calculation but, assuming the ratio is three to one, that we pay one-quarter of the expense and the United States government pay three-quarters—I am not committing myself to that ratio of expenditure; I think it would be too great so far as Canada is concerned, but let us assume as a basis of argument for submitting this question to the people that the ratio of expenditure would be as three to one, three to the United States and one to Canada—what does that mean at once? The Welland canal will cost $80,000,000. Instead of Canada paying $80,- 000,000 for cost of construction of the Welland ship canal, this country will pay $20,000,000 and the United States will pay $60,000,000.

Now what will be the expense of the St. Lawrence waterways? Figuring on that basis—because that is the basis I submit we should figure it on, not a fifty-fifty ratio but something in the nature of the proposition submitted by the commissioners—the St. Lawrence river is divided in so far as this project is concerned, into five sections. The first three sections are below lake St. Francis leading into Montreal. The cost of those sections amounts to $93,531,000. That cost is unquestionably on navigation. One-fourth of that, which would be the proportion assigned to Canada, would be $23,382,750. Then the commissioners recommend that Canada should pay one-half of the cost of sections 4 and 5, which constitute the international section. One-half of the cost of these two sections would amount to $79,596,100 or a total to Canada of $103,178,850 for the cost of navigation of the St. Lawrence and for the cost of the electrical development proposed in connection therewith.

The interest on that amount—I am devoting myself here to Canada's proportion of the expenditure—the interest on that amount at four per cent would be $4,127,154. The cost of operation and maintenance would be $1,671,000 according to the engineer's report; and the sinking fund to pay off that total amount in fifty years would amount to $1,300,000 or a total per annum of $7,098,154, which would be Canada's separate liability in connection with this project assuming that Canada was to pay one-fourth and the United States three-fourths of the total expense.

Now, what do we have? Canada's part of the electrical power development would be 732,000 horse-power which at $10 per horse-power would give $7,320,000. At $10 per horse-power it would pay Canada's whole liability in connection with that matter and leave about $300,000 per annum of a national profit. At $12 per horse-power the proceeds of the sale of the power would be $8,784,000, or a surplus over and above Canada's share of the expenditure of $1,500,000 a year. If those figures are accurate, if that is what it will produce, if the construction of this project, the development of the electrical current, the completion of the waterway, will work out in that way truly from the figures, surely it is a good financial proposition for Canada to enter into and we need not fear the consequence. Those figures are accurate, so far as we have them up to the present time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the very next question which will be asked will be: Can that power be sold in the market? Can 732,000 electrical horse-power be sold either at $10 or $12 per horse-power readily and speedily? I submit, without any hesitation, that it can. In connection with the electrical power development and the disposal of electrical energy, there can be no market for that electrical energy until the electrical energy is produced. It does not create a market itself, in advance of production. The experience of the past has shown that. People will not prepare for taking electrical energy, or establish plants for using electrical energy until it is ready to be distributed to their plant and their operation. Let us see what happened in the case of Niagara Falls; because it seems to me that what has happened in the past is very likely to happen in the future, and that we can govern our future action by the experience of the past. Twenty years ago there was not one horse-power of electrical energy developed at Niagara Falls, or in the Niagara peninsula. At that time the Ontario Power Company first began to develop its power, and it was said publicly and privately that it would be practically impossible to transmit electrical current from Niagara Falls to Toronto with commercial success. From that day till now there has been developed in that Niagara district. Niagara Falls and DeCew Falls, and is being distributed, used and paid for, not throughout Ontario, but from Toronto west to the Detroit river, about 600,000 electrical horse-power, the existence of which was not known twenty years ago. It has developed the resources of that whole country most tremendously. There is now in course of development, ready to be distributed within a very short time, about 400,000 further electrical horse-power, which will make altogether 1,000,000 horse-power, which will be developed and sold, used by the people of Ontario between the city of Toronto and the Detroit river. So that when you say that large blocks of electrical power cannot be disposed of, you cannot regard it in the same way as you would regard a cargo of wheat, barley, pork or any other commodity that may be uesd or manufactured. It produces its home market when it is created. But let us see what the commissioners say. They had the opportunity of investigating the uses of horse-power, and the possibilities of the future in regard to the electrical development and this is what they say:

The commission has before it graphs Nos 3 and 5 showing the present use of power on both sides of the boundary within a radius of approximately 300 miles of the Long Sault rapids, and also the probable future demand. It appears from these graphs that at the present time (1921) the total primary power installation on the United States side of the 300-mile area is approximately 9,900,000 horse-power and on the Canadian side 1,900,000 horse-power. The estimated demand on the United States side in 1925 is 11,000,000 horse-power and on the Canadian side 2,350,000 horse-power; and in 1930 on the United States side 12,500,000 horse-power, and on the Canadian side 2,875,000 horse-power.

That is within 300 miles of the Long Sault rapids, which is the place of development of this electrical power which we are now discussing; so that by the time this work would be completed, we would have, to be used, according to this report, on the Canadian side, in 1925, 2,350,000 horse-power, and in 1930 2,875,000 horse-power. That is the report of the commission, and, in the face of those figures, I submit we can safely take it for granted that there will be a market for that electrical power as soon as it is developed and ready for use.

But, Sir, you may say that is conjecture. Let us get down somewhat to the actual. There was a resolution moved in this House some weeks ago in reference to electrifying our steam railways. My hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Hocken) referred to that question to some extent, but I wish to enlarge a little, because I have some figures as to the actual power which will be used. In the first place, in operating railroads with electrical energy they do not consume anything like the amount of power that is required in the case of operation by steam, because, by some system in connection with the operation, the electrical energy is returned to the line. When the electrical locomotive is standing still the current is not being used, when it is going down grade the current is not being used, but it is being returned to the line, whereas with the steam locomotive the fire is kept up and the steam is being generated continually, whether it is in motion or not. Let us, in the first place, consider whether the railroad can be economically operated by electrical energy. I have in my hand a little pamphlet which has been issued by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, and in this pamphlet I find the following:

From the outset the operation of electric locomotives has been a success, and he states that they have practically eliminated the mountain grades. The large number of helper engines originally used to handle the passenger and freight trains over the mountain grades has been replaced by one or two electric locomotives, which alone are sufficient to handle the greatly increased traffic of the present year (1915). The movement of trains is so uniform and failures of electric locomotives so infrequent, that one set of train despatches takes the place of two sets employed under steam operation.

Electrification has made, it possible to increase the tonnage on maximum grades from 1,700 to 2,500 tons per train and this latter will be further increased to 3,000 tons shortly. This increased tonnage is now being handled at a speed of 15 mp.h. as compared with 8 m.p.h. by steam.

The winter of 1914-15 demonstrated in a practical manner that while the steam engine is at its lowest efficiency in cold weather, the electric locomotive, on the other hand, is at its maximum.

There were long periods, in the Rocky mountain district, when the thermometer registered 40 degrees below zero and it was impossible to move the trains by steam locomotives. The electric locomotives, however, were always ready for service, and always able to work to the maximum.

In the practical operation of the transcontinental trains of the C.M. & St. P. over the Rocky mountain grades the train is brought to the summit at a speed of from 23 to 25 miles per hour. There is no difficulty in obtaining a speed of 60 m.p.h. on level grades, with 10 all-steel cars.

Experience has shown that the electric locomotive handles about 3½ times as many ton-miles per month as the steam locomotives, and it also appears that the electric locomotives cut 30 per cent from the time necessary to do a given business, partly by running faster and partly by moving heavier trains.

This is conclusive proof that steam railways can be electrified and operated to advantage by electric current. There would, to my mind, be no better place on the North American continent to test out the working of electric railway operation than over the Canadian National lines between the city of Montreal and the city of Toronto. Between Montreal and Toronto there is used approximately 25,000 steam horse-power for road service and yard service.

Mr. GRAHAM: Over what period?

Mr. GERMAN: Per annum. It costs $120 per annum to generate one horse-power by steam. That figure is likewise authentic, and it can be borne out by the evidence of experts who are operating steam railways. What does that mean? It means $3,000,000 per annum for operating by steam trains on the Grand Trunk between Montreal and Toronto. What can be done by electricity? Everyone who knows anything about electrical operation, knows that it takes very much less electrical horse-power to operate the same train service than steam horse-power, and that that 25,000 steam horse-power would be represented, at any rate, by 20,000 electrical horse-power. I think it would be less than that: but if we take it at 20,000 electrical horse-power at $12, per horse-power, that would mean $240,000 a year for operating the trains on the Grand Trunk railway between Montreal and Toronto by electricity, as against $3,000,000 by steam, a saving of $2,760,000 thus being made. Is that worth going after? That is not a visionary proposition; those figures will stand scrutiny and bear investigation. Such a saving should, by itself, be sufficient to warrant every hon. member and, indeed, everyone in this country in considering very carefully whether this proposition should be entered into or not. I have no doubt that test could be extended. It is only about 300 miles from Montreal to Toronto. Electrical current is being transmitted now from Niagara Falls west 250 miles. The Long Sault rapids, at which the development of the electrical energy now under discussion would be, perhaps, 200 or 250 miles from Toronto; 250 miles east of that would take you a long way beyond the city of Montreal. All the railroads running north from the international boundary line to Ottawa and further north could be electrified and operated by electric current.

Of course, I know quite well that the electrification of steam railroads is not a cheap proposition. It costs about $30,000 a mile to electrify a steam railway without taking into consideration the cost of electrical locomotives; but I submit that we should not take into consideration the cost of electrical locomotives, because they are replacing steam locomotives which can be used elsewhere, and which, in course of time, would have to be replaced anyway. Therefore, it would cost, perhaps, $18,000,000 or $20,000,000 to electrify the Grand Trunk between Montreal and Toronto; but if you can save, as without a doubt you can, at least $2,760,000 per annum on the cost of operation of that line between those points, how long will it take to pay the $20,000,000 which it costs to electrify the line? When that is paid, you have that for all time to come. You need have no fear of a coal shortage or a strike; you have a perpetual source of supply of electrical energy which you can take to the utmost pound, and still there is as much to give. The Canadian Pacific, if the proposition is the financial one outlined, would very shortly electrify their line between Montreal and Toronto. Further lines could be developed; and in this time of deficits in railway management, in this time of high freight rates, should we not exert all our energies to bring about a reduction in the cost of transportation and freight rates?

Mr. HUGHES: Would the electrical energy developed by the water-power be divided between the two countries in the same ratio that the expense of development would be divided?

Mr. GERMAN: Not at all. That is not the suggestion of the commission. The suggestion of the commission is that the electrical power developed on the international section of the St. Lawrence river, which is from lake Ontario down to the foot of the Long Sault rapids, should be divided equally between the two countries. That total is 1,464,000 horse-power, and each country would have one-half of that and each pay one-half of the expense.

Mr. HUGHES: Of developing that power?

Mr. GERMAN: Of developing that power, and I have given the figure of what that would be. Below the Long Sault, there are sections 1, 2 and 3, and let us see what the result of those will be. The people of Montreal, when they consider this proposition carefully, cannot be opposed to it. The city of Montreal is now the head of, perhaps the greatest railway organization in the world, and when this project is completed, the city of Montreal will be the centre of the greatest electrical development in the world. According to the engineer's report on section 1, which comprises the Lachine rapids, there can be developed 1,076,000 horse-power, at an approximate cost of $83,797,000. I believe, not one of the cheapest, but the cheapest electrical power development in the world, less than $80 per horse-power. I understand that the development of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company is not only exceedingly efficient, but exceedingly inexpensive. But I will venture to say that its expenditure is greater than $80 per horse-power. Then the second section is from the head of lake St. Louis to the foot of lake St. Francis, and there can be developed 1,560,000 horse-power at a cost of $150,688,000, or about $100 per horse-power, which is as cheap as any electrical development I know of in the country. So that we are only on the verge of electrical development when we have solved the problem of dividing the power that can be developed on the international section of the river.

It can very fairly be said that if there were no market in Canada for the one-half of the electrical power that can be developed on the international section of the St. Lawrence, it would be advantageous to us to sell it to the United States, temporarily at any rate, until we could secure a market for ourselves. But when, practically within a stone's throw of the great metropolitan city of Montreal, we can develop 2,636,000 horse power at a cost of very much less than $100 per horse power, how can any one stand up and fairly argue against this project being not only undertaken but carried to completion at a very early date? The power that we shall have is not for a day, nor for a year, nor for a hundred years. So long as the sun shall shine, so long as moisture rises from the earth, and rains descend from the clouds, so long as the eternal hills shall stand, so long will this mighty St. Lawrence roll that enormous wealth of power from the Great Lakes to the ocean. And shall we stand idly by and allow this wealth to go past us undeveloped and unused? My hon. friend from St. James said the other day:

> If the flow of the St. Lawrence was as abundant and tumultuous as the faculty of speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Church), we might take chances with it, but in my view the St. Lawrence is too precious an asset to this country for us to lightly and without the strongest motives either attempt to alter its navigability, or enter into partnership with another country in regard to it, or place a mortgage on our property rights in it.

We are not asking any one to enter into partnership with any country, nor do we propose to alter the navigability of the river. It is navigable now going downstream, but it is not navigable upstream. It has a mighty current of power going from the Great Lakes to the ocean, power which will flow for all time and furnish the motive force to turn every wheel of commerce within the radius to which electrical energy can be transmitted; and if that mighty power is to be put to use, now is the time to do it. Now is the time for us in Canada, with all the enormous obligations we have to shoulder, with our great railway deficits, to put to use this, the greatest available power which this or any other country has. Enter into partnership with other countries? Let me assure my hon. friend that at this hour the United States government, under treaty rights with Great Britain, has the free right to the navigation of the St. Lawrence, just as we have. We could not stop them without violating that treaty, and all that they are asking for now is that that river be made navigable, so that ocean going ships can go from tidewater to the head of the Great Lakes. We say that we in Canada could not possibly consider that enormous expenditure for one instant unless there were coupled with it a development which would pay the cost of that construction; and we point out to this House and to the country the advantages, not only possible but certain which would accrue from the electrical development, and we ask the House to join us in supporting the resolution.

Now, can we not go further? If this is a financially feasible proposition, is the navigable channel not in itself advantageous? Can we not with confidence appeal to our Progressive friends from the prairie provinces to assist in the completion of this project? Hon. gentlemen from that section say: "We want the Hudson Bay railway built." Very well, I supported appropriations for the construction of that railway in the past, and I am prepared to support appropriations for the same purpose in the future. I believe the Hudson Bay railway to be a necessary part of the transportation system of the great Northwest. Will the people of the West not more speedily secure the construction of the Hudson Bay railway by increasing the national wealth of the country? And can you not increase the national wealth by constructing this St. Lawrence waterway? The people of the West say they want cheap freight rates and greater transportation facilities. Then let hon. gentlemen from that part of the country join with us in bringing about the completion of this project, which would reduce freight rates by at least ten cents a bushel on over 300,000,000 bushels of wheat which is to be moved from the great prairies to the city of Liverpool. My hon. friend (Mr. Hocken) figures upon a saving of seven cents a bushel. I say that undoubtedly ten cents a bushel could be saved on wheat shipped from the prairies to Liverpool if the grain were carried by water. It is well known that water transportation is by far the cheapest system of transportation there is. I urge hon. members to support the completion of this great undertaking. We cannot afford to stand idle any longer in this important matter. As was said of Britain's statesmen by one of her noblest poets, "Let us know the season when to take occasion by the hand and make the bounds of progress broader yet." That is the idea we have in mind in endeavouring to carry through this proposition.

Let me put three points in a nutshell. In the first place, at the lowest calculation, we could save $60,000,000 in the construction of the Welland ship canal. Is that worth going after? In the next place, we could save $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 a year in the operation of the Canadian National Railway system. Is that worth considering? In the third place, there would be saved to the farmers of Canada 10 cents per bushel on over 300,000,000 bushels of wheat shipped from the Northwest to Liverpool. Is it worth while trying to secure that advantage? Place those three factors by themselves and then say to yourselves: Can we secure these three things without costing the taxpayers one dollar? If we can, it is our duty as citizens of Canada, true to our country and true to ourselves, to enter into this project wholeheartedly and carry it to completion at the earliest possible date.

We cannot, I say, afford to wait. I have no fear of any complications arising between Canada and the United States regarding a few acres of submerged land in the St. Lawrence river; that land is covered by water now, and it will be covered by water for all time to come. I have no fear of any serious questions arising between Canada and the United States regarding any agreements which we may enter into in respect to this matter. Peace has reigned between us for the last one hundred years, and I feel confident that peace will continue to reign for hundreds of years yet to come. We are all Anglo-Saxons talking the same language and holding the same religious convictions practically, and there can be no serious differences of opinion between these two great countries.

Let us enter into this undertaking energetically, let us carry it out intelligently and as economically as possible, and then this great Canadian ship of state will be headed down the channel of time to a sure harbour of unbounded prosperity.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): Mr. Speaker, this question must be looked at in the broadest manner, for it is a continental question; it concerns the whole North American continent and not merely the United States or Canada. It is part of the policy of the development of the St. Lawrence river by the United States, and there should be the same policy in Canada for this development of our St. Lawrence waterways. We have a splendid example in the achievement of the United States in building the Panama canal. That canal is a little slow in bringing its usefulness to the world in cheaper transportation, but it is doing so now. That canal cost billions of money to build, and it was completed in less than ten years. It was undertaken largely through the enterprise and foresight of the late President Roosevelt. Now President Harding has taken up this question, and he has been moved to do so by two main arguments put forward by the farmers of the United States for cheaper transportation. The Farmers' bloc at Washington is now so strong that at every point they are securing the majority support of Congress and of the President's cabinet, and only the other day the President himself made a deliverance in favour of the development of the St. Lawrence waters that committed him and his party to its support.

The farmers of the western states have found out, just as have our farmers in the western provinces, that railway rates are too high, principally due, perhaps, to bad management of their railways. Indeed, all the railroad organizations of the United States have come to the same conclusion, and they are now shaping up a policy for the rehabilitation of their properties, and through their chief speakers and organs they have declared that to lower freight rates and so increase traffic they must electrify their roads. There cannot be the cheap transportation we expect from our railways unless they are driven by electrical energy. There is an abundance of electrical energy along the St. Lawrence, coupled with other water-powers, to drive the trains on every railroad line in the northern portion of the states from Chicago to Philadelphia.

As my hon. friend (Mr. German) pointed out a few minutes ago, until quite recently electric energy could not be transmitted for more than fifty miles because of the excessive leakage of current; but the latest discoveries of science point to the feasibility in the near future of electrical energy being transmitted for five hundred or even a thousand miles without any appreciable leakage. The electrical art is developing very rapidly, and the employment of new methods render possible to-day what was out of the question a few years ago. Take the introduction of aluminum, for instance: only a few years ago it was regarded as a curiosity, but to-day it is being used for transmission wires, and in that way the length of transmission is greatly extended. The first company to discover its possibilities was the Aluminum Company of the United States, and ten years ago they very nearly obtained control of valuable water power at Cornwall on the St. Lawrence. It was just by a mere chance that a few members in the railway committee at that time prevented that great water-power passing into the hands of United States citizens.

The pressing need of the railways of the United States to-day is electrical energy. I quoted some of their articles to that effect when I last spoke in this House. They are now trying to reorganize their railroads into ten regional divisions and electrify them. That electrification will cost a lot of money, but it will be spent in labour and equipment to the advantage of the country generally, and with electrification will come reduced freight rates.

Our farmers know that the supreme question to-day is cheap transportation. They know how high freight rates have been and still are by reason of the use of steam power and other circumstances, and they have reached the same conclusion as the President of the United States and the Farmers' Bloc, that electrification of the railways must come and will come almost immediately. The United States railways have their plans prepared for this electrification, and the president's move to develop energy on the St. Lawrence waterways has two objects in view—first, the improvement of the waterways for navigation and transportation purposes, and, secondly, the production of energy for the electrification of the railways of the United States.

Now, all the American railways to-day have placed themselves on record in favour of the substitution of electrical energy for steam. They have done so for several reasons, among others, because electrical energy is cheaper, because it is more reliable, and because the supply is unlimited, and they all know that scientific discoveries are proceeding at such a rapid rate that the transmission of electrical energy is already practical for long distances.

Let me tell you what took place in our own province of Ontario on the Niagara river. Sir Adam Beck has been much criticised for the expenditure involved in developing the Chippawa-Queenston generating plant. In one year from now that plant, owned by the municipalities of Ontario, will be developing 500,000 horse-power, and I believe within two years 1,000,000 horse-power, and will be driving every train in Ontario not only from the Detroit river to Montreal but even up to lake Nipissing. That may be merely a dream in the opinion of some people, but I do not think so. Would anyone have dreamed twenty-four months ago of the present radio development? No one would have prophesized that such rapid progress would have been possible. No one can foretell its ultimate development, nor what it may mean in revolutionizing the whole world through the use of radio waves. The use of these radio waves is going to reorganize probably the whole world. The hope of scientists is that they are going to be able to transmit electrical energy even without the wiring. That is not a dream; it is almost at hand. So we do not need to go by visions; it is in sight now. In twelve months there will be a quarter of a million, and in two years half a million horse-power developed at that one plant. There may be a change even in the developing plants on the river bank there. The Chippawa plant would probably scrap some of the plants now developing near the river in not so advantageous a position. This project, then, is no impractical vision.

The statement is made in this House and in some of the papers that Montreal would object to this project because its supremacy in transportation would be threatened. The effect will be to make Montreal a greater city. How could Montreal people talk that way, living within a few miles of the home of La Salle, when they think of the dream he had of what the St. Lawrence would eventually become? He was the first man to go up the Niagara and build the first boat near the Falls and sail up to lake Superior. So as far as Montreal is concerned, this project will make it an even greater city. Most of the water-power is near that city, and this development will make it one of the greatest cities on the continent. No matter how much power is developed there, it will always find an immediate market. The American roads will be ready to buy it, for they have already made up their minds that they must electrify, and they must get power. The President of the United States has committed the government of that country to this development, and the farmers in the United States are behind him, just as our farmers here are beginning to see that the relief to transportation must come from the competition of the waterways. The competition of the waterways in former days failed largely because of the opposition of the railways, but the new doctrine of to-day is that the railways are the complement of the waterways and the waterways the complement of the railways, and both working in competition will produce lower freight rates. They will be bound to produce lower freight rates, and the saving will be such that it will justify ten times over the commitment in connection with the construction of the waterways on the St. Lawrence as outlined in the commission's report.

I had intended when the railway question came up, which we may be discussing in the House this next week, to refer to these things, but the opportunity seemed to present itself to-night to speak on the line I have followed. Certainly I have not come to my conclusions in a short time simply by reading what has been said recently, for the whole tendency of investigation and of scientific discovery is in the direction of the development of water-power and of the development of waterways for transportation. In this case it will work out both for the development of power and the improvement of transportation. That development of power will be for the benefit not only of the railways but of the cities. It will make the provinces here in the East better off, and the provinces in the West better off. To say that it might stop at this city or that, or that what is now in Montreal would go to Toronto, is not to appreciate the effects of this development. There need be no rivalry; there is room for all. All the cities will improve, and they ought all to join together in the proposition, as I believe they will eventually.

I want to tell my friends from the West that years ago there were men in this country, as there were in the United States, who not only saw these waterways being extended to lake Superior, to the so-called head of navigation, but that canalization could be carried on to Winnipeg and to the foot of the Rocky mountains. That has all been worked out, and it is quite a feasible proposition to canalize the waters of the St. Lawrence up to lake Superior and right through to the valley of the Assiniboine and the Saskatchewan, connecting them up with other water systems up there to provide a system of canals that would carry the freight of the West right down to the seaboard. Some might say, would not that injure our railways? I say, no; it would develop the West. Link up these waterways and there will be all the business our Canadian railways could ever want or ever handle. There is room for both; one improves the other; they are complementary, not in opposition. This development would carry improvement to other cities and provinces. As for Montreal, it has a great future before it. There are millions of horse-power right at her door. She has developed her horse-power in the past. All I would like to see is that hereafter the great development of this electrical energy shall be done by the state, and not by private owned companies. We are doing that in Ontario, and we have set an example to all the world in that one plant at Chippawa. It is a new river that has been made use of, and a most powerful one; on that river we see the greatest development of electrical energy yet known to the world, and within two years or a little more, it will be producing one million horse power with a revenue of $10,000,000, and it will not have cost $100,000,000 for its construction. That power will be the life blood of Ontario just as the development of the water-power on the St. Lawrence will be the life blood of Montreal and the province of Quebec.

There is no question of rivalry between cities or provinces, for the whole project works out to the benefit of all the cities and provinces, and not only for the benefit of Canada but of the United States as well. It is a great continental question. The United States is looking at the great problems of the day from the national point of view. I have been reading to-day, and I have read a good deal of late about it, the report of a special Senate committee in Washington in the way of improving the banking system of the United States. They have made a great deal of progress in their banking system. They have a scheme now before Congress for the creation of a great organization backed by the credit of the United States to develop some kind of national marketing of the wheat and cotton crop and all the products of the Mississippi valley so as to get the best prices, and in connection with that they are going to develop the water-powers and waterways so as to give cheap transportation. All of these questions are in the air now, and you will see them move very rapidly. You will see the people of the United States who built the Panama canal prepared to do their share in the development of the St.

Lawrence waterways, both for power and transportation.

The expense is comparatively a small one, after the experience of the United States with the Panama canal. I should not like to say how many millions it has cost, but it cost a very large sum of money, and the United States never felt it. The Panama canal is one of the things that has made the United States the commanding power it is in the world to-day. They have built the Panama canal and they propose now to assist us to develop the St. Lawrence waterway. They have set an example to the world in great legislation for improving transportation, for improving the condition of the farmers; in making these issues national issues, and making them national propositions instead of company propositions. I have nothing to say against the railway companies which have done so much both in Canada and the United States in the way of developing transportation. But in the United States they have not been very successful. The net result of their exploitation of the railways there is that eighty per cent of those railways would be bankrupt to-day if it were not for the assistance which the American government gave them in connection with the war. The same authority will have to find money for them now for the reconstruction of those roads and they are going to do it; but the end will be that the railroads, like the waterways, will be publicly owned. The great thing about a waterway is that it is like the King's highway. It is the people's road. The King's highway has never passed from the people; and the railways never should have passed from the people any more than the waterways have passed from them. In this new birth which is coming to America, which is coming very rapidly, the idea of newer and greater propositions in the way of transportation, in the way of developing power, in the way of using the national credit for the benefit of all the people and securing co-operative marketing —all these things will be taken up in the United States and in this country. And there will not be any trouble to get the money necessary to carry them out.

There is a lot of capital in the world which is ready to-day to be invested in propositions of this kind. There will be no trouble in selling bonds. And no portion of Canada need fear this development. The Canadian Pacific Railway, even though it is located in Montreal, need not fear it. There will be all the railroad business which the Canadian Pacific Railway and the National Railways can ever do in this country, even if they do have the competition of waterways. And the traffic will not move in one way. Traffic will come from Europe; return cargoes will come into our country. It may be of a nature that will make competition with our manufactures but they will have to accept that situation and adjust themselves to it. All the information that I have been able to gather, either by my reading or by talking to people, has led me to believe that the president and the government of the United States have struck the right idea. They are organized now to develop these things and to develop them immediately. Even if the money we need could not be found in this country the United States would perhaps be ready to be our bankers for a portion of the needed sum. But we do not need even to go to them for it—we can get our comparatively small portion of it in our own country and in Great Britain. I agree with my hon. friend from Welland (Mr. German) when he said that our portion will be a good deal less than one-half; the Americans have already admitted that. I also agree with him when he says that we have not any exclusive control of the St. Lawrence river or the Great Lakes, and that these waterways belong to both countries. It is a good thing that such is the case. It will have a tendency to maintain good and friendly feelings between the two nations; it is a bond of friendship and not a cause of jealousy between them. It is also cause for congratulation to ourselves. I hope the House will continue to discuss this question session after session until we reach some conclusion. It is not going to be long until that time arrives. Pressure is at work in the United States for applying these two means of relief—transportation for the farmers of the West in both countries, and water-power to electrify the railways. These two things are so pressing and so great that I have no doubt the necessary legislation, either in that country or this country, will be forthcoming at a very early date.

It was not hard to put the Panama canal scheme through the Congress of the United States. When they once took hold of it in earnest they soon accomplished it. As I said, the project has not brought results as quickly as was anticipated but it has given the United States the control of navigation in a surprising way. They are dominating the American continent to-day and the American continent above all others is our continent. We are an American people but we are of British tendencies and believe in our own system of government. There is no reason for jealousy between us and the United States. Each of us can work out our own destiny whether it be in transportation or economic issues, and if we do that we will have no reason to regret it. We have had occasions in the past to disagree with the United States, and have had one or two small wars with them; but now the whole sentiment of that country is for our co-operation in a continental way, to develop these waterways just as they have developed their own. They have been somewhat misled by trusting too much to railways in the past but now they are coming back to waterways; and I have no doubt that before they are through the American government will own their own railroads just as we are finding we have got to own the railroads in this country. That does not mean any disadvantage to the Canadian Pacific railway, even though it is a company owned enterprise it will have to adjust itself to the new condition of affairs.

It is with pleasure and with a keen sense of duty that I intend to vote for the present resolution and to argue in favour of it on every occasion that may present itself. As I said before, I hope this discussion will not end now. I hope our friends from the West will assist in the improvement of these waterways just as the American farmers began to do when they realized the importance of them. If there is a Farmers' bloc in the United States there is also perhaps a Farmers' bloc in this House. I am glad to realize that our farmers are imbued with the idea of progress, that they have come here with the idea of assisting in the solution of these problems. The best way to solve such problems is by the nation working them out rather than individuals. that has been proved in the case of the development of power in Ontario. Power development has also been well worked out in Montreal by private companies; but in Ontario we are going to set an example to all the world in the development of water-power for the people by the people, and to make that power as cheap as possible, not simply to realize profits for shareholders. It will be with some pride that we will be able to show that Ontario, under all the criticism that has been passed by the men who favoured the private development of power, has worked this project out thoroughly and is making a successful use of the power developed. I make this prediction: that within ten years every railroad in Ontario—certainly from the Soo right across almost to Hudson bay—will be electrically equipped and will be able to carry freight at lower rates. The train services will be broken up into what I may term street car services. As to the passenger service, instead of there being three or four trains a day between cities like Toronto and Montreal, or Ottawa and Montreal, cars will run at frequent intervals. They will run every hour, the speed will be greater, the service will be better and the cost much less. It will be economical, we will have improved service, our western plains will be filled up with farmers and that is what we want in this country. It will reduce the cost of transportation. Whether this scheme began with the United States or this country, it is now a continental scheme, bigger than Ontario and Quebec, and bigger than our East and West. It is as big as the whole continent of North America, and the greatest continent in the world to-day is the North American continent. The richest valley in the world—and I do not like to have to say it—is the valley of the Mississippi, but we share largely in it, and we have our portion of it. The next greatest valley in the world is on the American continent, and it is the wheat valley of the Assiniboia and Saskatchewan. I believe the canalization of those valleys will come and the provinces in the West will soon have a great farming population, they will have reduced transportation rates, and we will soon get improved combinations for marketing.

That is the whole tendency of the discussion going on in Washington and in Canada, at the present time. That is why we have this talk of the Grain Growers, and why people in Canada say it is unconstitutional to have a grain board in Canada and that we cannot have it. But we will have a grain board, and the constitution and the lawyers will have to adjust themselves to it. That is one of the new signs of the times which have come into prominence since the war. The war is going to broaden the views of the nation and make the lawyers think differently. When law officers come to us and say we cannot have a wheat board and the farmers cannot organize a co-operative association, they cannot read the signs of the times. And this House will not read the signs of the times if it fails to do its share in the development of the St. Lawrence waterway for two great objects—the improvement of transportation and the development of water-power, not only for railways but for all the industries, for lighting the farmers' houses and driving their machinery.

All this is immediately in sight, because the simplicity of transmission of electrical energy has wonderfully improved. Hon. members may say I am a dreamer when I say that electrical energy will go through the air without wires, but it is all coming. Did anybody ever believe two years ago that you would have seen this radio development? It is a mystery but it is there. It is going to make great changes in the world, but it will be for the benefit of humanity. I observe that the Minister of Militia (Mr. Graham) is in rather a humourous vain to-night, because he is smiling. The hon. Minister of War, as Peter Mitchell used to call him, will perhaps see that electrical energy, if war is to continue, will be of assistance. The greatest thing in the war—and it only came out in this war—was the radio wave, which transmitted some kind of energy through the air, and put an end to the war. It was a discovery the United States was able to disclose just at the end of the war, and it meant the destruction of scores of great warships by a man up in a balloon, directing by radio waves through the air attacks on warships. That is what put an end to the war, and that is the reason the navies have been scrapped. That is the real story of the war, it is coming out now, and I think the Minister of War will change his views somewhat. I do not know where the minister was at the time an effort was made to take away all the water-powers of the St. Lawrence and to give them to the Aluminum company of the United States, but thank goodness we have those great powers, and I hope we will keep them. While the United States have said in a way that they were against public ownership, they are going to have public ownership in the water-powers of the waters of the St. Lawrence. That is the greatest progress made in favour of public ownership.

Mr. BUREAU: What is that?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The United States to-day is developing these water-powers as a public ownership proposition for the electrical energy that can be developed by them. When somebody comes to me and tells me the United States are against public ownership, I will be able to cite that case. The United States has had to go to the assistance of the railways, in order to save them from absolute wreckage. The American railways are organizing themselves into ten or twelve regional systems and are going to the government to get the credit they require. They cannot find the money for the reconstruction of the roads, especially for their electrification.

Mr. BUREAU: The railroads were ruined by public ownership during the war.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Which railroads?

Mr. BUREAU: The United States railways.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): When?

Mr. BUREAU: During the war.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): They were taken over by the United States during the war as a necessity.

Mr. 'BUREAU: And the United States ruined them.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): And we ourselves have had to adopt public ownership. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau) does not quite like the idea of publice ownership. Would he like to see the King's highway go to private ownership. He does not like this new idea of the King's highway helping out the farmers to market, nor the idea of the public ownership of the waterways and the development of electrical energy, to be distributed to everybody at the cheapest possible price. It will not be ten years till electrical energy of some kind will be sent to every farm house in America. This is not a dream. The scientists are all working at it. When you see what they have done in the last two years by these radio waves, you will not have any doubt as to what the future is likely to be. The effect of the development of electrical energy by public ownership will be to increase the number of the common comforts of life, and to widen their distribution at the smallest possible cost. That is the theory of government ownership, I do not care how you put it. It is coming to the front very rapidly in Canada and the United States. I hope to see the day—and it will not be very long—when sufficient power will be generated right on our rivers to drive every train, not only in Quebec, but in Ontario. Sufficient power will be developed on the St. Lawrence and Niagara rivers to drive every train almost all over Canada, and to put cheap light and power in every house. It is coming.

The ground plan of the whole scheme is before us to-day in that report issued by this commission, and endorsed by President Harding, as he did the other day. As soon as he got the facts he went right to the people, and while the railroads have been able, by reason of their influence, to stop the discussion to some extent, the people are all thinking about it. The farm papers are all thinking about it, and the newspapers of the cities are coming to realize that their cities will all be greater, that if a city is greater on account of railroad development, it will be still greater when that railroad development is supplemented by the development of waterways and of electrical energy. Therefore, I am going to vote for this motion. There is going to be another election in this country—it may be soon or it may be some time off—but I am going to make a newer and broader national policy out of the development of our waterways in co-operation with the United States, if we can secure the co-operation of that country, or of a smaller development on our own account. We have started on our own account; we shall be able to improve the St. Lawrence and the Welland canal of our own motion, if we have to rely on ourselves, and it may be a good thing if we do this work ourselves. But I want to see it done for the benefit of this whole continent, as a great continental proposition, not as a national proposition in the United States or Canada; least of all do I want to see it discussed in this House from the point of view of provinces, or classes, or cities. America is great enough to take care of all our cities, of all our provinces, of all our peoples; and the greatest continent to-day and the one continent on which the hope of the world rests more than in any other country in the world is the continent of North America. That continent of North America happens to be possessed by us and our neighbours to the south of us. As my hon. friend opposite said, the United States and Canada have the same ideas in regard to government, and things economic, and we have no fear of the future. While Europe to-day is discouraged and broken into pieces by reason of racial and trade jealousies of one kind or another, there is a much better outlook for the whole North American continent and, I hope, also for the South American continent if we set the example. The beginning of this new development will be brought about by the co-operation of the United States and Canada for the development of the waterways of the St. Lawrence, and that proposition, which happens to be embodied in this resolution, is the greatest question that has ever come up in this Parliament of Canada.

Mr. BUREAU: May I ask a question of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Yes, two, if my hon. friend so desires.

Mr. BUREAU: One is enough. Do I understand him to say that he suggests the development of the St. Lawrence river power by a partnership with the United States if we cannot do the work ourselves?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): No, I said that I should like to see it developed by both countries; but if it has to be done by us, we can develop it ourselves on a smaller scale. As the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) has said, we have the Welland canal under way now. Is my hon. friend opposite not prepared to co-operate with the United States in the development of the St. Lawrence?

Mr. BUREAU: I have no opinion to give. My hon. friend is advocating his side of the question.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The hon. member is a minister of the Crown, and I am sorry to see a minister of the Crown has not an opinion on this question.

Mr. BUREAU: I have an opinion, but I say I do not have to give it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): All right; keep it, and Heaven be with the hon. member while he has it. This Parliament must tackle this question and do something with it.

Mr. BUREAU: That does not answer my question as regards a partnership with the United States in developing the St. Lawrence water-power.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I would not object to that, and I hope my hon. friend is in favour of the proposition of developing the St. Lawrence water-power.

Mr. BUREAU: Do not worry about me. Let the hon. member speak for himself.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I am speaking only for myself. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had no fear of joint action; I have no fear.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. member had —"No truck or trade with the Yankees."

Mr. MACLEAN (York): That is a different question. The late Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in favour of co-operation in regard to the devlopment of the waterways of the St. Lawrence. Is my hon. friend in favour of the proposition? That is the question before the people of Canada.

Mr. BUREAU: I am not preaching the gospel. Let the hon. member give his own opinion.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I am giving mine. Will the hon. member kindly give his?

Mr. BUREAU: When the time comes, I will.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I am quite sure my hon. friend will come to see this proposition in the same way that I see it, and he will see that his province and his great city of Montreal—

Mr. BUREAU: It is not mine.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): —and I am not mentioning that city in any special way—will share in the development of Canada which will be brought about by the development of this waterway proposition to a greater extent than by any other proposition I have heard discussed in this House since I have been a member of it.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (Westmount-St. Henri): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) is considering the proposition from one particular point of view. He is endeavouring to convince only one side of the House, and he turns always towards our good friends the Progressives. I had hoped, before he finished his argument, he would turn and appeal again to the whole House of Commons.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): If I turned in that direction, I did not do so for the purpose my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. MERCIER: My hon. friend is perfectly right in doing that. I know that he tries to convince only one side of the House that he is afraid of; but those hon. members have already decided to vote in accordance with their own interests, and as regards the solution of the railway question, they will be satisfied without any St. Lawrence waterway.

As regards the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German), everyone may have his own opinion. I know from his constituency, the hon. member for Welland lives on the shores near the great Welland canal, and he is well aware that, if this proposed scheme were carried into effect, he would see transatlantic steamers passing the fine city of Toronto, going through the Welland canal, to ports on the upper lakes, Erie, Huron, Michigan, and Superior. Everybody in that part of the country would like to see those steamers go further, even to the ports of Detroit, Port Huron, Chicago, Fort William and Port Arthur. It is the duty of the representatives of Ontario to advocate whatever is for the welfare of their province; they are entitled to vindicate their right and to do the best they can for their province. Everyone is entitled to work for his province and to make the best use of the opportunities he finds on the floor of this House to secure the passage of certain measures. We have the same aim in Quebec; but in doing all these things, we have only one thing in sight, namely the welfare of the whole of Canada. I hope I do not hurt the feelings of my good friend the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church), who moved the resolution before the House, when I tell him that this is a dream, a lovely dream. Conditions in Canada at the present time, if we disregard the financial situation which is pretty bad, are not worse and are, perhaps, better than those of any other country in the world. Our railways are practically in a stagnant condition, but, if we give them a fair trial, better days may come for them. Our trade is suffering somewhat on account of the aftermath of the war; but to bring back prosperity to trade and commerce, and to our factories, you do not need to develop the St. Lawrence waterway. You do not need to tamper with nature's creations and demolish the natural gifts which Providence has bestowed upon each province. Let us take them as we find them and make what use we can of them without encroaching, one province upon another. Let each province strive to obtain from its natural resources all the wealth that lies hidden therein; but do not let us interfere with the rights of others. I was somewhat surprised at the views expressed by my learned friend from South York (Mr. Maclean).

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Not learned.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend has much learning.

Mr. MERCIER: And by the time this session is over I predict that he will be still more learned. The hon. member is always talking about the hydro electric question and he seems to take to himself all the credit for whatever has been done in this direction. I was going to say, as the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau) remarked a moment ago, that in 1911 the Conservative members from Toronto—perhaps not the same gentlemen who actually represent that city in the House of Commons to-day, at any rate, members of the same political persuasion, the same policy, and animated with the same spirit—were not so very eulogistic of the United States and its enterprises. We know very well what those gentlemen in 1911 said of the Liberal party; they told us that we were going across the boundary too frequently, that we had too much to do with the Yankee, and other things to the same effect. Then, as now, they waved the flag. To-day the situation is somewhat changed, however, and if the present tendency of some members continues, we shall likely see in the future the United States flag flying over the channel between Montreal and lake Superior.

On motion of Mr. Mercier the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Tuesday, May 2, 1922

The House met at three o'clock.

HON. MANNING DOHERTY

CATTLE EMBARGO

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I desire to lay on the Table a return to an Order of the House dated 3rd April, 1922, for a copy of all correspondence passed during the year 1921 between the Prime Minister of Canada and the Prime Minister of Ontario relating to the activities of Hon. Manning Doherty in England on the subject of the cattle embargo. My right hon. friend yesterday made special mention of this report. I think it is perhaps due to him that I should give the explanation as to why the return was not brought down immediately. I will therefore read a memorandum which has been handed to me by the Under Secretary of State for External Affairs:

I send herewith the return ordered by the House of Commons on the motion of Mr. White for correspondence relating to the activities of the Hon. Manning Doherty in England. There is no correspondence on this subject in this department other than that contained in certain papers which the private secretary of the late Prime Minister left here about the time of the change of Government. I was not sure whether these papers were sent here for safekeeping, or to be accounted official and placed on the files of the department. I wrote two letters to the late Prime Minister's secretary asking this question, to neither of which I have received any answer beyond a verbal message, whereas I asked for a written reply. Inasmuch, however, as Mr. Meighen is now pressing for these papers I assume there is no objection, in so far as he is concerned, to bringing them down. The papers have been ready since the 13th April.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I presume that by "secretary" he means the former secretary who is not now under my charge.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would point out to my right hon. friend that he left all these papers in charge of this secretary. They were not left in charge of the department.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They were, as far as I was concerned.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 63 (from the Senate) for the relief of Ethel Turner.—Mr. Duff.

Bill No. 64 (from the Senate) for the relief of Walter Michie Anderson.—Mr. Rankin.

Bill No. 65 (from the Senate) for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Fredenburg.—Mr. Rankin.

Bill No. 66 (from the Senate) for the relief of Sheriff Elwin Robinson.—Mr. Rankin.

Bill No. 67 (from the Senate) for the relief of Rhoda Renfrew McFarlane Brown.—Mr. Macdonald (Pictou).

Bill No. 68, to Incorporate the Frontier University.—Mr. Macdonald (Pictou).

EXEMPTION FROM PILOTAGE DUES

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House do tomorrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend Section 477 of the Canada Shipping Act, chapter 113 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, by adding the provisions that ships of war and hospital ships belonging to such foreign nation or nations as may be specified by the Governor in Council; and ships registered in Canada engaged exclusively in fishing; shall be exempt from the payment of pilotage dues.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of this resolution and has given his assent to it.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

Resolved, that the organization of the staff of the House of Commons adopted on the second day of June, 1920, be amended by striking out the words "Assistant Curator of Reading Room" in paragraph (e) under the heading "Miscellaneous Branch," and substituting therefor the words "Two Assistant Curators of Reading Room"; and that the organization of the Department of the Sergeant-at-Arms, adopted on the same day, be amended by striking out the figure and words "7 Parliamentary Messengers" and substituting therefor the figure and words "6 Parliamentary Messengers."

Motion agreed to.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House do tomorrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider a proposed resolution to provide for certain advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of this resolution and has given his assent to it.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—DEFENCE FORCES

On the motion of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King (Prime Minister) for Committee of Supply:

Mr. J. A. CLARK (Burrard): Before the House goes into Supply, I would like to address a few remarks on the work of the Militia of Canada, and of preparedness on the part of this country. Many arguments have been advanced in this House as to shew why this country should dispense with defence forces, and it is my intention to deal with a few of these arguments, and to attempt to give this House some information which I have been privileged to gain by having seen certain things, so that we may be in a better position to deal with questions relating to the military forces of Canada when they come before us. The main arguments advanced against this country maintaining defence forces are: First, that there is no one proposing to attack us; second, that we have plenty of men trained now; third, that the people are sick of war; and, fourth, that disputes in the future will be settled by conference rather than by arms.

With regard to the first question viz.: who is about to attack us, I would remind hon. members of the pre-war assurances which were given by the Prime Minister of England to the House of Commons of England and to the people of the British Empire, that war with Germany was not only not impending, but was out of the question. I would also remind hon. members of the futility of making prophecies about war, and would recall the examples we have before us of the past hundred years— the example of war with United States in 1812; our own civil wars, the American civil war; and the fact that we are to-day faced with greater armies than the world has ever before been faced with—armies which are to-day mobilized by Russia, France and many other countries.

As to the second argument which has been advanced—that we have plenty of trained men now: The only inference, Mr. Speaker, that one can gather from that argument is that those advancing it propose that those men who took part in the late war should be called upon again to defend the country should there be a war. I was particularly struck by a question which the hon. member from East Hamilton (Mr. Mewburn) put to the hon. gentleman for North Ontario (Mr. Halbert), the other evening when he asked whether it was the intention of that member that these men should again be called upon. The reply was "I had as many friends in kahki as the hon. gentleman who asked the question had." I do not think that many hon. members wish to take credit to themselves for what their friends did in the late war, but there has been altogether too much talk about the number of trained men that we have to-day. We have many trained men, it is true; but they will be useful in this country only in teaching the coming generation the lessons gathered during the late war. I do not expect that there will be war in our time, or war, at any rate, that these men will be called upon to take part in; but they should be called upon now to complete the duty that they attempted to perform overseas, by passing on the lessons which they learned.

Then, there is the third argument—that the people are sick of war. The people who are really sick of war to-day are the people who served, the people who gave their sons, who gave their all during the war; but the people who talk most to-day about being sick of war are those who are sick of their shame at not having done their duty in the past. Let me read the remarks of General William T. Sherman in this connection:

> I confess without shame that I am tired and sick of war. Its glory is all moonshine. Even success, the most brilliant, is over dead and mangled bodies, the anguish and lamentations of distant families, appealing to me for missing sons, husbands and fathers. It is only those who have not heard a shot, nor the shrieks and groans of the wounded, friend or foe, who cry aloud for more blood, more vengeance, more desolation.

It is safe to say that those sentiments are the sentiments of every soldier; but despite those sentiments, I feel convinced that the great body of returned soldiers are still prepared to sacrifice themselves, should the honour of this country require them to do so in the future.

Then, we hear this argument advanced: We look forward to the day when disputes will be settled by conference and not by arms. I agree, and I think all hon. members will agree, that we look forward to that day; but statesmen of all ages have recognized that the way to prevent war is to be reasonably prepared for war. What, for instance, would be the position of Mr. Lloyd George in the conferences which are taking place in Europe to-day if he were not backed by the force which is represented by the British army and navy? Would any one suggest that he would be listened to if he had demobilized the British army and navy? Had he done so, no respect whatever would be paid to the remarks or arguments which might be advanced by him in those conferences. We have Sir Henry Wilson's classification, based upon that principle recognized by statesmen, of armies into three classes: First, those armies which are strong enough to prevent war; second, those armies which are too weak to prevent war, but which are strong enough to win war; and third, those armies which can only lose a war. Into which class does Canada fall? Canada has no army; Canada does not fall into any of these categories. But hon. members will say: What about Canada's part in the late war? True, Canada did magnificently in the late war; but it was fully three years after the war had commenced that Canada was prepared for war; that she was prepared to strike as an independent country should be if it is going to be able to stand as an independent nation, and apparently hon. members desire that Canada should stand as an independent nation.

[Mr. Clark.]

I should like to bring to the attention of the House a comparison between the achievements of the forces of Canada and the forces of that great republic to the south of us during the last hundred days of the war, for the purpose, not of reflecting upon that great republic, but of showing what can be accomplished by a country with a trained army and what is accomplished by a country which is not fully prepared. The United States, unfortunately for them, were three years behind Canada in entering the war, and the result was that they were not able to make the showing per capita that the Canadians were able to make. I should like to give a few figures of the numbers engaged, the casualties, and the success achieved during that period. For instance, during that time the Americans had 650,000 troops engaged; the Canadians, 105,000. The Americans were engaged during 47 days of operations; the Canadians, 100 days. The battle casualties of the Americans were 100,000; of the Canadians, 45,830. The prisoners taken by the Americans were 16,000; by the Canadians, 31,537. Guns captured by the Americans numbered 468; by the Canadians, 623. Machine guns captured by the Americans numbered 2,864; by the Canadians, 2,842. Trench mortars captured by the Americans numbered 177; by the Canadians, 336. Territory freed by the Americans covered 610 square miles; by the Canadians, 336 square miles. Villages freed by the Americans numbered 150; by the Canadians, 228. German divisions met and defeated by the Americans numbered 46; by the Canadians, 47. Casualties per German division defeated by the Americans numbered 2,170; by the Canadians, 975. The maximum advance by the Americans was 34 miles; by the Canadians, 86 miles. These favourable results were made possible only by the fact that the Canadians had benefited by the experience of training and hard fighting during the previous years. My point is this: Is there any one here who will take the responsibility of denying the youth of our country an opportunity of learning the lessons learned by the men who took part in that war? Is there any one who would take the responsibility of unnecessarily exposing the youth of succeeding generations to useless slaughter when by taking full advantage of the lessons learned we could prepare them to take their part in any operations which may become necessary in the future?

We hear much talk about Canada being an independent nation. The Minister of Militia (Mr. Graham) the other evening asked whether we were going to go back one hundred and fifty years and become Crown colonists to be looked after by Great Britain and not by ourselves. We hear a great deal of talk about Canada's responsibility as a nation. We hear it vehemently stated that we are an independent nation, independent of Great Britain and of all other countries. I suggest that we should not deceive ourselves. We have no army in this country; we have no forces which can be counted upon even to defend ourselves. We are sponging to-day, as we have in the past, upon the Mother Country, both for defence and for possible offence. We are absolutely dependent upon Great Britain for our protection both on land and sea.

We in this country are not preparing for war. The proposal has never been made by the Minister of Militia or by any member of this House that we should prepare for war. If we were to prepare for war it would require for a period of years a vote of at least fifteen times the amount which it is proposed to make for annual training. We could not actively prepare for war on a vote of less than $150,000,000 per annum over a period of years. That was conclusively proven during the late war by the operations in which the Canadians took part. The ex-service men in this country resent the suggestion that by training and passing on these lessons we are preparing for war. They resent still further making a political football of the issue of national defence in Canada. We have had in this House the sorry spectacle of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) opposing in the past estimates for the purposes of the militia, and this year bringing down similar estimates as a part of Government policy. We have heard him protesting against Canada having a reserve of ammunition for her guns, Attempts have been made during the past six months to make political capital out of the bringing into this country of a few shells which already belonged to Canada, and which would have been wasted if we had not taken them. Those shells, Mr. Speaker, which we have wasted so much time in talking about, could be fired in one hour by the artillery of Canada to-day. Yet the Prime Minister has spent twenty or thirty hours in talking about those shells. With regard to their cost, even if we had been called on to pay for them, the amount required would not exceed the amount which was required to supply our guns for one day during the last hundred days of the war. I venture to say that the forces which are lining themselves up to-day to oppose training consist of those who are uninformed, and in that class I have no hesitation in placing the Prime Minister himself. Secondly, I would include those who would profit by disruption in this country and by the disintegration of constitutional government in Canada.

It has been suggested that a break in the training of our militia for a period of one year or more would do no harm.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, I submit that the hon. member is not in order in discussing on a motion to go into Committee of Supply the question of annual training, which has already been referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CLARK: I do not propose to discuss the question of annual training. I think the hon. member is mistaken. Possibly I did refer to annual training, but I intended to refer to it only in its broad aspect and in connection with the militia as a whole.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think every one is familiar with the old rule of the House of Commons, that a motion to go into Supply is the occasion for any hon. member to present his grievances. "No Supply without redress of grievances," is the old standing rule of British parliamentary government, and when a motion is made: That the Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Supply,—any member can rise and discuss any grievances which he may have. I will read to the House the comments made on this point by Bourinot, based, I may say, on May, the highest authority on parliamentary procedure:

> The order of the day for the House to go into committee of supply having been read, the Speaker will put the question "That I do now leave the chair."

That is the question now before the House. He goes on:

> The same question is always put whenever the house is to go into committee of supply, in order to afford an opportunity to members to propose amendments. On this point it is observed by an eminent authority that the ancient constitutional doctrine that the redress of grievances is to be considered before the granting of supplies, is now represented by the practice of permitting every description of amendment to be moved on the question for the Speaker leaving the chair, before going into committee of supply or ways and means.

Further on he says:

> The ordinary rules of debate are applicable on this occasion; for instance, a matter already decided by the House, or of which notice has been given, or which stands upon the orders of the day, cannot be discussed; nor can any subject or matter of detail which should be discussed in committee, be debated on these occasions; nor can debate or amendment be permitted relating to grants already agreed to, or to resolutions which will be proposed in the committee, or in the committee of ways and means, or to items in the estimates.

In the present instance I do not find the point of order is well taken, because the hon. member is speaking on the necessity of maintaining our militia on its present footing, and his remarks are of a general character. If he were speaking of the estimates of the Militia Department which were under discussion last week, he would be clearly out of order; but so far I think he is in order, and such is my ruling.

Mr. CLARK: I was dealing with the assertion that a break in the training will do no harm. I have no hesitation whatever in saying that such a break, even of one year, will do an irreparable injury to the militia. We have to-day a large class of returned officers and non-commissioned officers who, under great pressure, have been persuaded to stay with the militia, to teach our youth the lessons learned and so pass on to them their own first-hand knowledge acquired at the front. Many of these officers and non-commissioned officers have already quit the militia in utter disgust because they are not receiving that encouragement which they might reasonably expect to receive; and although others are remaining, they are becoming discouraged by the apathy with which they are faced. Those men feel that while they performed a certain duty in fighting for their country, there is still the all-important duty for them to perform of passing on the knowledge gained at the front. That is why they are prepared to remain with the militia at their own expense and at great personal sacrifice.

There is also this danger, that should a man drop out of active training for even a short time, he rapidly loses touch and would soon be classed among those soldiers who in the late war were known as "dug-outs". I do not use that term disparagingly, because it applied to a very large class of retired ex-officers who promptly came forward at the outbreak of war and gave their services to their country. But if our men do not continue their training they soon get out of touch with the latest methods of offence and defence and their usefulness is to that extent impaired.

I need not enlarge upon the patriotic effect that a little training will have upon our youth, or upon the improvement in their physical well-being. I think we can compare the individual with the nation, because after all our nation is only a combination of individuals. We may very well take the example of the boy at school. How much prouder we are of a boy who is brought up to defend himself and to be proud of his physical well-being—of the boy who is not "too proud to fight," to use an expression we have heard a good deal in the last few years.

The proposals which had been before this House in the past are merely to enable us to maintain and train a nucleus of instructors so that if we are called upon to take our part in any future war we will have the few men necessary to instruct the large body of recruits that will constitute our army. The fact that this country is spending less per capita on its military training than any other country in the world, including all the British Dominions, is surely proof that we are not preparing for war. Certainly there is no class in this country less imbued with the idea that we should prepare for war than that class which at present compose our militia and ex-service men generally throughout the country.

How are our militia units maintained? It is generally supposed, I imagine, that our officers, non-commissioned officers and men are being paid by the country for their militia services. In the past they have received, it is true, a small grant for their training, but the money which has been granted has been returned to the units so that they may efficiently "carry on" with their training. The farmers of this country have benefited by that grant, because from it are purchased the supplies used in the military camps.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I close these remarks—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARK: I know it is distasteful to some hon. members to hear our national defence discussed. I know also that there are many members here who probably disapprove of Canada's participation in the late war. But I felt it my duty to give hon. members—at least, those on the Liberal side—an opportunity of considering this matter, because I understand that a caucus will be held tomorrow when they will decide whether they are going to scrap the militia or not, and before they do so I thought I should at least place the matter before them as squarely as I could, even although they do not appear to be prepared to listen to my arguments. At any rate, I feel that I have done my part. But I should like to congratulate the Minister of Militia (Mr. Graham) upon the manly stand he took on this subject when the estimates of his department were being discussed. I should like also to express my sympathy with the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) and other members of his party who do not see the benefits and advantages of a limited defence force, because I quite appreciate that they have been taught in the past, and have apparently grown to believe, that in principle any expenditure on the militia is wrong. Their own leader sought to teach them that. Therefore is it any wonder that to-day, even though their own party now brings down as Government policy certain estimates, those hon. members are not convinced by such a sudden change of front, and bring forward the amendments that were proposed last week? I would like to see the Liberal party consider this question from the point of view of the national honour of this country. It is a national question; and I hope that if they do meet in caucus before the estimates again come up for discussion, they will seriously reflect before accepting any compromise proposed by men so ill-informed on the subject as the member who moved the amendment to the item which we were discussing the other evening. I believe that the militia estimates which the Government have brought down have been pared to the bone; and if any criticism can be offered in regard to the manner in which the Government has dealt with them, it is that they have been too niggardly rather than too extravagant in their proposals.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Militia and Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will not discuss questions which will more appropriately be dealt with in Committee of the Whole. But I want to say in defence of the member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), that he won distinction in the war, he won the right to take any position he likes on this question. And I have every respect for his opinion. So far from being misinformed, he is a man who is fully informed. We may disagree on details, but I want to point out that the member for Quebec South is in a position, through years of service on his own part and on the part of other members of his family, to speak on military matters.

As to the caucus, I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Clark) cannot get in, and if he did, he might not stay long. However, the Liberal party, notwithstanding anything that has been said on the estimates is here as a unit to do what it thinks is in the interests of this country, and it will emerge from all the criticism with credit to itself and to the men in it, no matter what their individual views may be. I do not want to say a cross word to my hon. friend, but if he wants to go back to the time when people were taking peculiar positions, I would refer him to the year 1911, when he was standing side by side with the men who did not want to do anything for the British Empire.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—salaries, $5,620,000.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that there is a reduction of $505,000 as compared with the amount appropriated last year. On page 24 of the Estimates it will be noted that last year $625,000 was voted for salaries and contingent expenses of the Board of Pension Commissioners. During the year the activities of the Board of Pension Commissioners were, to a very large degree, merged with those of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and this year for the same service only $71,000 is asked for, being a reduction of $554,000. Adding to this the $505,000, therefore, the reduction in appropriation for salaries this year is over $1,000,000.

4 p.m.

Mr. MANION: How much of the $625,000 was spent last year?

Mr. BELAND: In round figures, $500,000. After careful consideration of the whole matter and consultation with the officials of the department, we have come to the conclusion that a further reduction may be effected so far as provision for salaries is concerned. Therefore, I would move, that the item of salaries be reduced by $195,000. It is the opinion of the officials, and of myself, after surveying the field, that we will be able to meet all our obligations even after this reduction is made.

Mr. MANION: I commend my hon. friend for cutting down all the expenses that he can, but I would ask him if the reduction is not entirely due to the fact that the work of the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment is lessening owing to the condition which prevails—that is that most, or a great many, of the men have been attended to medically, and from a vocational standpoint, and that there has been lessening in other branches of the work? I would like to have my hon. friend's opinion upon that point.

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend is partly right in that there is a great contraction in the activities of the department. That applies especially to the vocational training. My hon. friend was not in the House the other day when this question was under consideration, otherwise he would have heard the statement I made as to the reduction in the number of men who are actually being trained. I think the reduction is from some four or five thousand last year to six hundred this year. A great reduction in the expenditure has also been effected through the amalgamation of the staff of the Board of Pension Commissioners with the staff of the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When was that effected?

Mr. BELAND: It was effected during the course of last year. The staff, I think, was merged in the month of July.

Mr. MANION: I would like to ask my hon. friend another question. He said the cutting down of the expenditure was partly due to the natural reduction of the staff owing to the work being completed. I thought it was wholly due to that fact. If not would my hon. friend explain to the committee what the other part of the reduction, in addition to the natural reduction because of the lessening of the work, is due to?

Mr. BELAND: I explained to my hon. friend that there was a reduction due to the fact that some of the activities of the department were lessened, also that a reduction was effected owing to the amalgamation of two important staffs.

Mr. MANION: I quite understand, but the point I was trying to make was exactly what the minister has pointed out—that the reduction is due to the natural lessening of the work that is going on in the department. What I wanted to make clear was that there was no real cutting down in these expenditures due to any special economies. The reason I want to make that point clear is, not in order to establish that my hon. friend has not made any special reductions, but because I do not believe this is a department that can particularly stand reductions, except where the lessening of the work permits of that being done.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presume the cost per capita will be greater now than it formerly was on account of fewer men being taken care of?

Mr. BELAND: I am informed that the cost has not materially increased—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not materially increased?

Mr. BELAND:—and that high salaried officials are being let out, although not in as large number as the lower salaried officials.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presume they were let out last year, too?

Mr. BELAND: No doubt there was a reduction last year.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does not the minister think the time is approaching when it would be safe and proper to amalgamate the department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment with some of the other departments of government—perhaps in somewhat the same manner as was done in the case of the departments of naval service and militia? When the department was created during the war, it was understood by everybody that it was a department for purely war purposes and would not continue indefinitely. The work at the time of the creation of the department was enormous, but I suppose that in 1917, 1918 and 1919 that work had reached the peak. I do not know what the estimates for those years were but I observe that the amount for the year 1920-21 was $40,000,000. For 1921-22 it had come down to $19,307,000; and for this year the estimate has again come down to $15,-148,000. From these figures one can see that the work of the department is contracting, and rapidly contracting, each year. Now, will the minister consider the question of wiping out the department, or, at all events, amalgamating it with some other department of government? The time cannot be far distant when the work of this department will be finished, just as the work of the Soldier Settlement Board will be finished. The work of the Pension Commission, I suppose, will go on for many years to come; but the number under vocational training has gone down from 4,000 last year to, in round numbers, 600 this year. Next year I would think that work would be completed. Perhaps the minister could give the committee some information as to what, in his opinion, would be the approximate time when this department might cease to exist? It is an extra department of the Government and was only created for the purposes of the war. Some day the purposes of the department will be finished. As the expenditure this year is down to $15,000,000 I would think the time is not very far distant.

Mr. BELAND: I cannot state even approximately when the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment should disappear in some other branch of the ministry. Undoubtedly that day will come; the activities of the department have decreased in a large measure. But my hon. friend will note that those activities have decreased mainly in those branches of the work for which a certain period had been set after which no applications could be received—as for example in the case of vocational training. In that case, 1st February, 1920, was the date fixed after which no application could be received, unless it was from a man who had been on the strength of the department in one of our institutions. As far as the patients are concerned, it is almost impossible to give anything like an exact idea as to when this activity will come to an end. The number of patients now being treated by the department is almost as large as it was a year ago, there is a difference only of about 400 out of 5,000 to 6,000, and the probability is that the decrease in the number of patients on our hands in the future will be very small indeed. A number are developing into chronic cases. Eventually the country will have to provide for them in some institutions other than regular hospitals. Among those chronic cases I might mention the mental cases, which ultimately will have to be dealt with perhaps in a different manner from the way they are being dealt with at the present time. Personally I would have no objection to merging this department in some other department, but I do not believe the time has yet come, in the interests of the returned men, to adopt such a course.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am much obliged for the information. I quite see that, in regard to the mental cases, and the hospital cases, the work that is being performed by the department will have to continue for a number of years. But that does not necessarily involve the maintenance of the department; the work could be carried on in connection with some other department. I assume that, perhaps, the majority of the cases in the hospital at the present time are in the nature of chronic cases. It will be the duty of Canada to look after these patients, probably, throughout their lives, and some department of the Government will have to function in the matter, and that applies to the majority of the mental cases. But it must be remembered that the Department of Militia has a hospital system of its own and is accustomed to looking after military patients, and I think it is worth while considering whether we are not now approaching the time when all the work done by this department might be handed over to the Department of Militia and carried on there without the additional expense of maintaining two departments. I will refer to the items in the present estimates on page 59. I do not know what the first item "Capital, $75,000" refers to. The second item, "Care of patients and medical examination of pensioners $4,000,000," will probably have to continue for some time, but it can be administered by another department with a great saving of expense. The next item, "Vocational expense," is decreasing to such an extent that next year, I should imagine, it will be wiped out altogether. The next item, "Salaries," I am glad to know, is coming down. I assume that that includes salaries in connection with the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment hospitals that must come down very rapidly for a great many years yet to come. Then we have the item "Pay and allowances $3,500,000"; that is pay and allowances of the men who are actually in the hospitals according to their ranks. That could all be done by the Militia Department quite as conveniently as by the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, with a single expenditure where a double expenditure is involved at the present time, with both departments paying these salaries. Then we have "Vocational loans $75,000." I assume that will vanish by next session. We have "Interest on war service gratuity," a very small item, which, I imagine, will vanish. Then, "Unemployment relief," is not in the nature of a fixed charge; on that score something may have to be granted for some years to come, but another department could handle that with a saving in expense. The next item is "Operating expenses and working capital $700,000." I am not sure to what that item applies, but I notice there is a substantial reduction in it. It is more than cut in two, showing that it is rapidly diminishing, and will some day, I hope, reach the vanishing point. In the whole list there is no work, I submit, which could not be performed by the Militia Department, which has hospitals accustomed to the care of patients. Their pay staff is organized for the purpose, the main items could all be taken care of, and the department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, which was only temporarily adopted in this country, would soon come to the vanishing point and a large overhead would be saved to the country. I know the minister is quite reasonable in his view of the matter and will not prolong the existence of the department a day more than is necessary. I would like to impress upon him the desirability of bringing it to an end as soon as possible, because the whole department as now constituted can, I believe, be well administered by another department and the expense of one department be saved to the country.

Mr. ROSS: (Kingston): I wish to say a few words in regard to the salaries. I will only refer to one branch. There is a reduction here of $500,000 in salaries, but I am sorry to see that that is taken off one very important class, namely the nursing class. The bonus has been taken off the nurses this month and last month. There has also been taken off the nurses $40 a month for board, and on that $40 a month the nurses are paying income tax. I would ask the minister to consider their case. If the bonus is taken off, then I think the Government might, at least, remit the income tax on that $40.

Mr. BELAND: There is no change in this regard. The nurses are being paid to-day in the same way as last year or the year before. I am informed that a certain amount was always kept from their salaries for board, and my hon. friend has, perhaps, in mind the fact that the bonus was not paid last month. I think that is the case with every civil servant, because this question does not appear to have been settled definitely by the Government. Should the Government decide to grant the bonus for this year, of course the bonus for last month will be paid as previously.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Would the hon. minister consider the question of the income tax to which I referred?

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. BELAND: I am afraid my hon. friend will have to direct his remarks to my colleague the Minister of Finance.

Mr. CALDWELL: I was not in the Chamber when item 291, "Salaries, $5,620,000", was under discussion. Does that include salaries in the different branches throughout Canada? I understand this does not include the salaries at head office.

Mr. BELAND: This covers all salaries except those under civil government, for which a sum of over $30,000 has already been voted.

Mr. CALDWELL: How many are there on the staff in Montreal under pay who come under this item?

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend knows that the country is divided into so many units. There is a unit known as the Quebec unit, with headquarters in the city of Montreal. That, apparently, is what my hon. friend refers to?

Mr. CALDWELL: Yes.

Mr. BELAND: At Montreal, we had, for the province of Quebec, on 31 December, 1921, a staff of 518. That would include, of course, Ste. Anne Hospital, Ste. Agathe Sanatorium, and the inspectors at headquarters, Montreal. Does my hon. friend desire to know the number of medical doctors in attendance?

Mr. CALDWELL: In addition to the 518, there would be some medical doctors?

Mr. BELAND: No, this comprises all.

Mr. CALDWELL: What is the average number of patients cared for by that staff of 518?

Mr. BELAND: In that unit, we have Ste. Anne Hospital, with a total of 474 patients; Ste. Agathe Sanatorium, with a total of 117 patients; and I think, in Quebec, we have also a few patients in one of the hospitals. We have besides that, in some of the institutions of Montreal, a certain number of patients.

Mr. CALDWELL: The minister does not know the total for the whole province?

Mr. BELAND: I do not believe I have under my hand the exact number for the whole province. Of course, there is a large number of outside patients besides those who come into our clinics.

Mr. CALDWELL: The facts brought out would indicate that there is, on an average, practically one man on the staff for every patient that is treated.

Mr. BELAND: If you take the whole unit, my hon. friend is right.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does the minister not think this is an indication of overmanning of the staff? What would the average salary of the 518 people be? The reason I am asking this question is that my information is that the department is very much overmanned, and that there should be a great reduction of staff. The minister's answers to my questions would indicate that.

Mr. BELAND: The average salary of the men in our employ throughout the country is about $1,200. In the particular unit to which my hon. friend has referred, the Quebec unit, we have, of course, a large number of doctors in the service. It will be of interest, perhaps, for hon. members to know that not only are patients being treated in our hospitals and clinics, but we have to make examinations throughout the province for the Pension Board. That work requires quite a large number of physicians. I have in my hand a list of the men who are employed in that unit and, for that matter, of those who are employed in every unit in the country, with their salaries. My hon. friend will realize that the doctors would naturally receive a fairly large salary, though not running, on an average, much over $3,000,—perhaps, less than that. The same staff also looks after vocational training and the different activities of the department where medical services are required.

Mr. CALDWELL: Are the medical men all on salary, or does the department have different local doctors who do some of this examination work?

Mr. BELAND: We have for reasons of economy, also local doctors, whom we call doctors in the field, who, make examinations of pensioners or of men who seek treatment. We have, for instance, in the Quebec unit with headquarters at Montreal, 30 men in the field. In the unit of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, with headquarters at Halifax, we have 99 men in the field. In the unit of Kingston, we have 43 men in the field; in the unit of Toronto, 68 men; in the unit of London, Ontario, 31 men; in the unit of Winnipeg, 57 men; in the unit of Regina, 14 men; in the unit of Calgary, 42 men; in the unit of Vancouver, 72 men; a total of 456 doctors in the field.

Mr. CALDWELL: On salary?

Mr. BELAND: They are not paid regular salaries; they are paid by a fee for each case.

Mr. CALDWELL: Do the doctors who are paid fees come under this appropriation?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: Will the minister give the number on the staff under pay in the different units, and the number of patients?

Mr. MARTELL: Will the minister at the same time give the number on the staff at Toronto, and the number of patients?

Mr. BELAND: The figures which I give now represent the staff in each unit for all possible activities connected with the department, comprising treatment, inspection, examination in the field, orthopedic and surgical appliances' branch, unemployment relief, and training:

	Staff
Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island unit	395

Mr. CALDWELL: That is all in the Halifax office?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Quebec unit, headquarters at Montreal	518
Eastern Ontario unit, headquarters at Ottawa	338
Central Ontario Unit, headquarters at Toronto	1,159
Western Ontario unit, headquarters at London	369
Manitoba unit, headquarters at Winnipeg.	186
Saskatchewan unit, headquarters at Regina	74
Alberta unit, headquarters at Calgary	375
British Columbia unit, headquarters at Vancouver	374

Besides that, we have the overseas office, located in London, with a staff of twenty.

Mr. CALDWELL: You have no staff at St. John, N.B., at all?

Mr. BELAND: We have no unit, but we have a medical and hospital staff.

Mr. CALDWELL: How many? I do not want to seem to delay the committee, but, due to some information I have received, I want to get the facts for the Pension Committee, and I want to get them from a reliable source.

Mr. BELAND: We have at Lancaster hospital, 97 patients, with 6 doctors on full time, 2 doctors on part time, 8 nurses, 3 orderlies, and 4 technicians, making a total treatment staff of 23. We have no dentist there. We have also the general and administrative service composed of cleaners, engineers, and so on, connected with the hospital.

Mr. CALDWELL: You have a travelling medical board in New Brunswick, have you not? Or do they come under the Halifax office?

Mr. BELAND: I think we have a travelling board in New Brunswick for the examination of pensioners and men seeking treatment.

Mr. CALDWELL: Would the minister give us the number of patients that come under treatment in these different units?

Mr. BELAND: The total number in hospitals is 5,930.

Mr. CALDWELL: What is the number of patients in each division or under each unit?

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend, of course, is aware that a certain number of hospitals are administered by this department, indeed, are practically owned by the department. I will give the names of the hospitals in each unit and the number of patients in each.

In Unit "A", Quebec, we have in one hospital 474, and in the other 117 patients: Unit "B", in the maritime provinces: Camp Hill hospital, 309 patients; Jordan Memorial, 36; Lancaster hospital, 97. Unit "C", Ottawa district: Sydenham hospital, Kingston, 238 patients; Mowat Memorial Sanatorium, 82. Unit 'D", Toronto: Euclid Hall, which is for incurable tubercular cases, 26 patients; Christie Street hospital, 548 patients; and Brant House, 264. Unit "F", London, Ontario: Erie hospital, 7 patients; Westminster hospital, 408. Unit "G", Winnipeg, Manitoba: 69 patients, in Deer Lodge hospital. Unit "I", with headquarters in Calgary, Strathcona hospital, 168 patients; Sunnyside, 38; Colonel Belcher hospital, 117; and Central Alberta, 67. Unit "J", Vancouver: Shaughnessy hospital, 223 patients. The total number of patients of 3,288.

Mr. CALDWELL: I think you missed the Regina unit.

Mr. BELAND: I am informed that we have no hospital in Regina, but we have a sanitarium in Saskatchewan, at Fort Qu'Appelle, with 77 patients. I do not know whether by hon. friend wants a list of the tubercular cases in each sanitarium.

[Mr. Béland.]

Mr. CALDWELL: Would that be in addition to the figures read?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: Do they come under the treatment of the staffs as enumerated here?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: I would like the number of patients in each unit, if possible.

Mr. BELAND: Tubercular cases at Kentville, Nova Scotia, 144; St. John county hospital at East St. John, 15; Mountain hospital, Hamilton, 110; Muskoka Cottage, Gravenhurst, 18; Calydor sanatorium, Gravenhurst, 11; Queen Alexandra, London, Ont., 182; in Manitoba, at Ninette sanatorium, 72; King Edward sanatorium, Winnipeg, 2; Fort Qu'Appelle, Saskatchewan, 77; Tranquille, B.C., 107.

Mr. CALDWELL: What about Calgary?

Mr. BELAND: We have besides, a number of hospitals with which we have definite arrangements for accommodation.

Mr. CALDWELL: Those patients would not come under the care of your staff who are on salary? They are paid out of a different vote, are they not?

Mr. BELAND: No, they all come under this item.

Mr. CALDWELL: Under the item for salaries?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: That is, out-patients you are caring for at private or public hospitals not under the direct supervision of the department. Do you have officials there under salary?

Mr. BELAND: All salaries come under this item—all the attendants.

Mr. MARTELL: What are the terms of the arrangement between the department and the provincial government of Nova Scotia with regard to soldiers who are being treated in the provincial sanitarium at Kentville?

Mr. BELAND: We pay to the provincial government the cost of treatment, which is assessed evry six months.

Mr. MARTELL: How does that compare with the department's own cost, say, in Toronto? I understand there are about 1,100 attendants in Toronto looking after about 700 patients.

Mr. BELAND: The average amount paid to the provincial authorities for treatment in the Kentville sanitarium is $3.36 per day, and the average expense throughout Canada for the same service is $3.32.

Mr. BROWN: In regard to the auditing and accounting branch of the department, how many are engaged in that work at Montreal, and what amount of money do they handle?

Mr. BELAND: I am afraid I cannot supply my hon. friend with that information. All the money that is being paid out at headquarters in Montreal is paid, of course, through the auditing branch. As to the exact amount which goes to the unit in Montreal or anywhere else, I have not the information under my hand at the moment.

Mr. BROWN: Certain information has been given to me indicating that the system of accounting and auditing is rather expensive in proportion to the amount of money involved. For instance, I am informed that 23 accountants and 8 auditors handle only $194,207 in Montreal, and apparently the same condition runs all through the system. Has not the minister any figures in regard to this?

Mr. BELAND: I do not wish to dispute the figure quoted by my hon. friend, and of course if it is correct the staff would indeed be too large; but I am informed that a much larger amount is being paid out at Montreal.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): Would the arrangement which obtains in Nova Scotia apply to all the provincial sanitaria. For instance, the sanitarium at Fort Qu'Appelle is maintained jointly by the provincial government of Saskatchewan and by public subscription.

Mr. BELAND: In connection with all the sanitaria as to which we have definite arrangements we pay the cost of treatment to the provincial authorities.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): Is the cost per patient uniform in the various provinces?

Mr. BELAND: I am informed that it varies somewhat, but not very much.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): What is the rate per patient at the Fort Qu'Appelle sanitarium?

Mr. BELAND: I think I have that information here.

Mr. SHAW: While the information is being looked up would the minister inform me if I understood him correctly some time ago in giving the number of officials of his department in the Alberta unit as totalling 375 to look after 390 patients?

Mr. BELAND; Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Surely the minister does not mean he has that number of doctors, orderlies and others attending that number of patients? The hospitals I am acquainted with are not overstaffed, the average being eight or ten doctors and ten or twelve nurses. Contrast this number of nurses with the twenty-four nurses in the Kingston general hospital. The number of officials in each unit does not represent those connected with the treatment of patients only. What should be given is the number of doctors, nurses, orderlies, cooks and so on, connected with the hospital. For example, there is no such condition of affairs as 1,100 officials attending 700 patients in Toronto.

Mr. BELAND: Of course, the committee will realize that it does not require 375 doctors to look after 390 patients; but the whole staff numbers 375. As my hon. friend has stated, only a small number of this total would represent doctors and nurses. But the number of patients to be looked after does not represent all the activities of the staff. One must bear in mind that the examination of pensioners has to be attended to all over the province, and also the examination and treatment of all outside patients who come to the clinics periodically; in addition examinations have to be made on the order of the medical director of applicants for admission to the hospitals.

The hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Johnson) asked me what was the cost per patient per day in the sanitarium in Alberta.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): The sanitarium at Fort Qu'Appelle, Saskatchewan.

Mr. BELAND: The last cost was $3 per day per patient.

Mr. MANION: When speaking of the members of the staff, does the minister include members of the medical profession in other cities who work part time? In my own city there is one medical man who does the work for the department on part time; would he be included on the staff and would his work be covered by these figures?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): The minister has said that the rate per patient in Nova Scotia is $3.36 and in Saskatchewan $3. What is the reason for the difference?

Mr. BELAND: It is a matter of agreement and assessment between the 5 p.m. authorities of the hospital and the department. The department usually accepts the statements of the different institutions in this regard.

Amendment agreed to, and item as amended agreed to.

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—vocational loans, $75,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: What is meant by a vocational loan?

Mr. BELAND: It is a loan up to $500 for equipment for men who have been vocationally trained and wish to enter into certain occupations.

Mr. MANION: I notice that $150,000 was the vote last year, and in 1920-21 the appropriation was $2,000,000. Of the $150,000 of last year, how much was actually paid out by way of vocational loans?

Mr. BELAND: The total was $64,118.

Mr. HANSON: What is the experience of the department in respect to the repayment of these loans?

Mr. BELAND: The loan is made against promissory notes repayable in annual instalments over a period of five years. Out of a total of 1,635 loans, 107 have been repaid.

Mr. CALDWELL: Have a good percentage of yearly payments been met?

Mr. BELAND: Yes, about all, I think.

Mr. CALDWELL: The fact that so many are still unpaid is no indication of default; it simply means that certain payments are not yet due?

Mr. BELAND: That is right.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Returned soldiers who are fishermen in my constituency are desirous of obtaining loans for the purpose of carrying on their fishing operations. Has any consideration been given to that subject?

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. BELAND: This matter was discussed last year and the year before by the parliamentary committee, and I have no doubt it will engage their attention this year also. So far, no recommendation has been made for the granting of such loans.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): I hope that this matter will be taken up seriously and something done. These fishermen work under conditions of great hardship and risk, and they are just as much entitled as farmers to any assistance that may be given.

Mr. MANION: No doubt there are many good arguments in favour of the suggestion my hon. friend makes, but if those arguments are good as applying to fishermen they are good also as applying to other classes of the community, and I presume that is where the difficulty comes in. I know that was the difficulty mentioned in the report of the committee last year. Do I understand the minister to say that the matter will come before the committee again this year?

Mr. BELAND: That is my impression.

Mr. CALDWELL: I have received letters from returned men who enlisted under age and who did not know about the provisions with respect to applications for vocational training until it was too late. Is there any provision in the act for such cases?

Mr. BELAND: There is no provision, I am sorry to say.

Mr. CALDWELL: I am glad to hear the minister say he is sorry. I assume he will bring the matter before the committee and have the time extended in order that these men may have a chance.

Mr. BELAND: I hope my hon. friend himself will do that.

Item agreed to.

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—interest on war service gratuity, $18,500.

Mr. MANION: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. BELAND: Last year the appropriation was $4,000 short, and this year the vote is larger by that amount, plus $500 to provide for increased interest.

Mr. CALDWELL: Will the minister explain what is meant by interest on war service gratuities? Are they gratuities which the soldiers did not avail themselves of and on which the Government is paying in the interest to them?

Mr. BELAND: Yes. These men were transferred from the Militia Department to the strength of Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment,—for treatment, for instance.

Mr. CALDWELL: They have not yet drawn their gratuity?

Mr. BELAND: No; as long as they are not discharged from our care they are on the strength, and their gratuity is not paid to them.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): These sums will ultimately have to be paid to the men?

Mr. BELAND: Yes. The rate of interest was formerly 4½ per cent; I am informed that it is now 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—unemployment relief, $500,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: How much of the $600,000 voted last year was expended?

Mr. BELAND: All but $19,000.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Was that money expended in the cities generally, or in the agricultural districts?

Mr. BELAND: In both.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Largely the cities?

Mr. BELAND: Naturally.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Can the minister give us the proportions?

Mr. BELAND: I am afraid I have not that information.

Item agreed to.

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—Operating expenses and working capital, $700,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: I think we should have some explanation as to why we require $700,000 for capital expenditure now, and why that item is incorporated with operating expenses. Expenditure on capital account and operating expenses are not usually placed in one lump sum.

Mr. BELAND: The word "capital" there is perhaps misleading; it is working capital.

Mr. CALDWELL: Then it would be operating expenses?

Mr. BELAND: Well, we have a large number of hospitals and this amount is to provide for general administrative services and expenses, such for instance as: telephones, telegrams, postage, transportation of staff, travelling expenses of staff, stationery, automobiles and insurance on same, mechanical transport expenses, advertising, legal costs, operating costs and contingent expenses, provision for financing treatment and examination of Imperial and Allied ex-soldiers or pensioners in Canada, treatment and re-examination of Imperial pensioners in the United States, and provision for the making of advances to officers of the department subject to recovery. Amounts expended on account of the treatment and examination of Imperial and other Allied ex-soldiers and pensioners are subject, of course, to periodical recovery from the governments concerned.

Mr. MANION: I would like to offer a suggestion. Last year when the estimates came down they contained very much more detail than appears in this year's estimates. I do not know why the details have been omitted. For example, take the item we are now dealing with, "Operating expenses and working capital, $700,000." Last year certain details were given in connection with this item, and I believe it would facilitate the passing of all these items if the same procedure were carried out. Last year the item set out "Operating expenses and working capital, cost of administration, stores, printing, stationery, transportation and travelling expenses," and then a number of other details were given occupying in all perhaps three-quarters of an inch. Last year the statement of the details for all the items occupied a little over half a page whereas this year they take up only about an inch and a half. I would suggest to the minister, and to other ministers as well, that if a few more details were given in connection with such estimates as these they would be useful to the House and would facilitate the passing of the estimates. To ask for the passing of fifteen or twenty million dollars of estimates and give details occupying a little over an inch of space is to unduly curtail necessary information that should be given. I would therefore offer the suggestion to the minister that it might be well to revert to the system of last year in regard to giving the details of such estimates as these.

Mr. BELAND: I have no doubt my hon. friend is right in this regard. He has made a very good suggestion, and personally I would benefit by adopting it. I intend, therefore, next year to carry out the suggestion.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend may not be there next year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Order.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is it the policy of the department to continue the hospitals that are owned and operated by the department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, or will these institutions be discontinued and the patients treated at private hospitals or hospitals that are publicly owned?

Mr. BELAND: It is the intention of the department to dispose of some of these institutions as soon as possible. That is as soon as arrangements can be definitely made for the treatment of patients in some other institutions, which would conduce to greater economy.

Mr. HANSON: I would like to ask the minister if the department has given any consideration to the establishment of soldiers' homes for the care of indigent ex-service men? I am satisfied the care of these men will have to be taken up sooner or later by this Parliament—sooner, I fear, than later—and it seems to me that not only should the matter engage the attention of this department, or some other department of the government, but that a definite policy should be laid down in respect to it—the treatment of these veterans should not be left to local charitable persons. I happen to know of a case in my own county where a man is in a state of incurable illness. I regret to say that he is a returned soldier. He has been examined by medical boards, and they say his present disabilities were not the direct result of war services, consequently they have declined to take care of him and he is now being cared for by friends. Whether the official statement is well-founded, I cannot say, but the man went overseas and has no means of support—he will have to go into an almshouse or some other institution, and I regret to say that in the province of New Brunswick there is no institution in which he can be placed. His case may be one of many, and it does seem to me that some policy should be adopted and something done to take care of cases of this kind.

Mr. BELAND: This is a matter which should indeed engage the careful attention of the present administration, or of any government. As my hon. friend has said this country will, sooner or later, have to provide homes for ex-soldiers who have become invalids. It is a problem that we should cheerfully face with the object of reaching a solution that will be creditable to the country and advantageous to the men who fought overseas.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: How many hospitals, if any, have been closed up during the past year?

Mr. BELAND: The following hospitals have been closed during the year 1921:

Fredericton Hospital, Fredericton, N.B., bed capacity 125.

Sir Sandford Fleming Hospital, Ottawa, Ont., bed capacity 74.

Davisville Hospital, Toronto, Ont., bed capacity 450.

"The Hut", Hamilton, Ont., bed capacity 20.

Earl Grey Hospital, Regina, Sask., bed capacity 81.

Craig Darroch, Victoria B.C., bed capacity 110.

Esquimalt, Victoria, B.C. bed capacity 136.

Item agreed to.

Employers' Liability Compensation, $175,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: Explain.

Mr. BELAND: Of the vote of $100,000 a very small amount was spent, because the provisions came into existence only in January of this year. The amount that is being asked for is estimated to be sufficient to meet the necessities of the situation in providing security for the employers who employ men disabled to the extent of 20 per cent or over. Hon. gentlemen will realize that employers will be somewhat reluctant to employ disabled men, and it is in order to make up the deficiency in pay given these men and the pay given the fit men that this vote is proposed. The parliamentary committee of last year made a special recommendation to this effect, and it was carried out by an order in council About $175,000 would cover the exigencies of the situation.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Cases have been brought to my attention in my constituency of men who went overseas and were killed, but, before being killed, were insured and informed their parents that they had taken out insurance policies on their lives. The parents claim insurance, but have nothing to show in what companies they were insured, and they think that the officers in command should be able to ascertain the name of the insurance companies. I understand the system of insurance was very general among those men coming from Quebec.

Mr. BELAND: We have no information as to that. These men were insured in ordinary insurance companies before they enlisted.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): No, after their enlistment, while they were at the front.

Mr. BELAND: The department is in possession of no information in regard to this matter. The officials, I have no doubt, are always disposed to seek any information that may be of use in this regard, but my hon. friend will realize that it is not one of the activities of the department. It might very well come within the province of the Great War Veterans' Association or some other veterans' association, or within the province of the Militia Department. This item does not deal with soldiers' insurance.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Application was made by these people to the department, to require from those in command of the battalion information as to how this insurance was brought about and what companies it was in. This insurance was effected by the men who were in command of battalions at the front. These men wer actually in the trenches when they were insured. They were killed and their parents do not know the names of their companies. Part of their pay went to pay for the insurance, and now the parents have written to the department to ascertain by what means these companies can be compelled to make good. The claims are very fair ones.

Mr. BELAND: The cases referred to by my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) are certainly sad cases. He might refer such cases to the Militia Department. The officials there would be in a better position to procure the proper information in this regard than any one else.

Item agreed to.

Pensions—European war and active militia, $33,000,000.

Mr. BELAND: The House will be interested to know the exact number of pensions that are being paid. It will be realized that pensions are paid in respect of death and in respect of disablement. The number of pensions issued monthly in respect to disablement is 47,327; in respect to death, 19,490, a total of 66,817 pensioners in Canada. That does not include, of course, the dependents of either the disabled or the soldiers who have fallen. The last time these estimates were before the House it was my privilege to explain that pensioners with a disability ranging between 5 and 14 per cent have the option of taking a lump sum or of receiving their pension monthly. A large number of pensioners have availed themselves of this provision and have decided to accept a final payment. The number of pensioners who have done so is 22,351 and the total amount paid in lump sums to these pensioners is $9,210,-312. Besides that disabilities of a very minor nature, not over 5 per cent, are settled by the Board of Pension Commissioners regardless of the wishes of the men, and this amount is called a gratuity. Gratuities have been paid in lieu of pensions to 17,000 men, with a disability ranging between one inclusive and five exclusive, and the expenditure on this account has been $821,000. The total expenditure on pensions to date is $113,589,414.50. It will be noticed by the committee that an increase of $2,041,640,- appears in this appropriation. The amount which was voted last year was $30,958,359; but that amount did not meet the requirements of the year, because a large amount had to be paid for commutation,—the payment of the lump sum to which I have just referred,—and when the supplementary estimates for the year ended 31 March last are before the House an amount of $4,000,-000 will have to be provided for that object. Therefore, in reality, there is not an increase in this item. The Board of Pension Commissioners who, as members of the committee know, are alone responsible for the awarding of pensions, expect that, with $33,000,000, they will be in a position to meet the obligations for pensions for the year just commenced.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada, $71,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: The minister has given us the total amount of pensions paid to date. Is it possible to give the total amount paid to date in the administration of pensions by the Board of Pension Commissioners.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): What is the explanation of the large decrease in this item,—$554,000?

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend was, perhaps, not in his seat when I first gave this explanation. It comes from the fact that the staff of the Board of Pension Commissioners was transferred to the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment during the course of last year.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): What are the names of the commissioners?

Mr. BELAND: Col. Thompson is Chairman of the Board. The commissioners are Dr. Davis and Dr. McQuay.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Has the minister given any consideration to the idea of having the province of Quebec represented on the commission?

Mr. BELAND: I have.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): What is the result of his consideration?

Mr. BELAND: My cogitations have not yet come to an end. As regards the question of the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell), I will give him the information to-morrow.

Mr. SPENCER: What are the salaries of the Pension Commissioners?

Mr. BELAND: The chairman receives $7,000 a year, and the two other commissioners, $6,000. Those salaries are fixed by statute—the Pensions Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the minister any complaint or any comment to make as regards the efficiency of the board and its staff?

Mr. BELAND: The Board of Pension Commissioners is a tribunal and, in the short space of time that I have been at the head of the department, I have been unable to study very deeply the work of the board during the time it has been in operation. I have full confidence in Col. Thompson and the two other gentlemen who are associated with him; I think they are honest and impartial in their decisions. In the awarding of pensions they rely mainly upon the reports, mostly medical, which are submitted to them. The task is not an easy one; it is difficult. It may happen that, throughout the country, a certain number of pensioners receive pensions to which they are not entitled. On the other hand, it may happen that the number of men applying for pensions have been deprived of or refused such pensions or turned down when they should have been awarded pensions. The question is one of information on the part of the commissioners, and also one of appreciation on the part of the medical doctors who are in charge of the different examinations. Medicine is not an exact science; doctors disagree in their appreciation of the same case. Some doctor may think the ailment of one particular ex-service man is to be traced to his war service, whilst another doctor will think it cannot be traced. The whole question of the awarding of pensions is summed up in this phrase—a pension is awarded to a disabled ex-service man when his disability can be attributed to his war service. The pension commissioners have to govern themselves by this principle. To say that I have not received any complaints would be not to state the facts correctly. I have certainly received a large number of complaints from men who thought they were entitled to receive a pension and who were refused the same. In reply to the remarks of my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen), I am not in a position to say if, in every case, justice has been done entirely; I am absolutely satisfied that the three commissioners have acted conscientiously in the discharge of their duties, but they are fallible like every human being.

Mr. MANION: I agree with practically everything the minister has said in regard to this matter. May I offer a suggestion regarding pensioners or those who think they should be pensioned? I believe my suggestion will probably meet with his approval, and I think it will meet with the approval of most hon. members. When men wish for another board, they should more easily obtain it than is, perhaps, the case at the present time. In other words a man, let us say, has had his pension discontinued or he has not received a pension when he thinks he should receive one, and he sometimes finds it rather difficult to obtain another board. That is, some medical board has passed upon his case and decided that he has no right to a pension. but the man is firmly convinced that he has a right to a pension. He may or may not be right; probably he is wrong, for I believe that when the board decides against the applicants, in the majority of cases the applicants are wrong. If there is any doubt on the question and certainly if there is doubt enough to enable the man to obtain from another doctor, perhaps a civilian, a letter to the effect that he thinks perhaps the man's conditon is due to war service—he should be able easily to obtain another medical board and have his case reviewed. I should like to impress on the minister what has been impressed on me many times in my capacity as a private member of Parliament—I was not long enough minister to have it impressed upon me in that capacity—and as a medical man, and that is that these secondary boards, and boards later than secondary, should be obtained fairly easily when a man feels very strongly that he should receive a pension, or that his pension should not be cut down.

Mr. BELAND: This question is now engaging the attention of the parliamentary committee, and I have no doubt a recommendation on that point will be made to Parliament at a later date.

Mr. MANION: I thank my hon. friend for that information. I did not know that the matter was being considered by the committee. I understand that the pension commissioners also handle Imperial pensions. Is there any extra pay to the commissioners for that work? Or under what conditons is it done?

Mr. BELAND: The department administers the Imperial pensions, and is paid three per cent of the amount paid out in pensions. That amount is turned over to the Receiver General.

Mr. MANION: No extra salary is paid to the pension commissioners for their work in connection with Imperial pensions?

Mr. BELAND: No.

Mr. CALDWELL: The minister has said that a large part of the staff of the pension commissioners has been taken over by the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. Does the Pension Board retain any medical men on its staff, and if so, how many?

Mr. BELAND: Yes, eleven or twelve officers.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is that all the staff the board has?

Mr. BELAND: They have a clerical staff of 21 I think.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does this $71,000 pay the salaries of these 11 medical men and the whole staff of the board?

Mr. BELAND: With the exception of the commissioners; I shall presently ask for a vote for the commissioners' salaries.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does the minister think the board can carry on as effectively with the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment practically controlling the whole staff, with the exception of a few medical men, as it did formerly? I have found it something of a problem even to get a man's file from the Pension Board.

Mr. BELAND: The merging of the two staffs thoroughly would take a few months of course. It may be that my hon. friend has experienced some difficulty in regard to files in the past, but this difficulty is being straightened out rapidly, and I believe there will be greater efficiency in the future than in the past, when the work was done by two different staffs.

Mr. CALDWELL: Do the commissioners themselves think the present arrangement is a good one?

Mr. BELAND: I am not informed to the contrary.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presume the minister is aware that these three commissioners are all returned soldiers, that two of them are doctors with previous public service as well, and that the chairman is a lawyer of very brilliant and very severe and trying war service himself.

Mr. BELAND: That is right.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): In putting the question I put a moment ago with regard to representation of the province of Quebec on the board, I want it to be understood that I did not want to detract in any way from the merits of the commissioners; but as this is a bilingual country and there is a large number of people dealing with the board of French origin and using the French language, I think we should keep up the time-honoured custom of giving representation on these important tribunals to the minority of the Canadian population. It was for that reason I called the attention of the minister to the fact that the province of Quebec had at the present time no representation on this board, and not for the purpose of criticizing in any way the conduct of the present commissioners.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Surely my hon. friend would not ignore the minister at the head of the department.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): I understand that the board is entirely independent of the minister.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I agree generally, indeed cordially, with what the hon. member for Bonaventure says. I was of the impression—I may be wrong—that at one time there was a French Canadian on the board. There have been several resignations from the board because the duties were such that the commissioners entrusted with them felt the remuneration was not sufficient, and new ones were appointed. It is not always the easiest matter to get an appropriate man for a post of this sort. The feeling among the returned men is such that the appointee has virtually to be a returned man. Then he has to be a man with the experience—medical better than any other, except for the chairmanship—and also of some measure of business experience; and besides he must be willing to act. He must be a man of such standing as to command authority in his position. It is not always the easiest matter to get a man of that sort ready to take office. I remember, there was one—I shall not give his name, I do not think I should be asked to—who was pressed for appointment to this post. So far as political allegiance was concerned, everything that could be said was in his favour, but it was felt that the qualifications were not there. There was no other reason in the world why there was not a French Canadian appointee on this board. I agree with the hon. member for Bonaventure that if it can be done it is better, even though it is not essential as respects either English or French, that there should be representation of both races on important boards.

Item agreed to.

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—unemployment relief—further amount required to give effect to provisions of Orders in Council, P.C. 1615, dated the 13th of May, 1921, and P.C. 75, dated the 16th of January, 1922: and to provide for salaries and other expenses of administering the provisions of said Orders in Council (Governor General's Warrant, January 16, 1922), $1,500,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister state what machinery is employed for the distribution of this relief; when it operated; and the amounts distributed, geographically among the provinces, as fully as he can?

Mr. BELAND: The information will cover operations for the last year. I have not exact details of the relief administered for the period extending from the first of January this year.

Unit A, Montreal, 1,742 men; relief granted, $178,000

Unit B, Maritime provinces, 485 men; relief granted, $43,000.

Unit C, Ottawa, 790 men; relief granted, $68,000.

Unit D, Toronto & Hamilton, 4,031 men; relief granted, $429,000.

Unit F. London, 596 men; relief granted, $38,000.

Unit G, Winnipeg, 727 men; relief granted, $71,000.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Unit H, Regina, 344 men; relief granted, $31,000.

Unit I, Calgary, 858 men; relief granted, $82,000.

Unit J. British Columbia, 1,712 men; relief granted, $184,000.

Unit K, New Brunswick, 605 men; relief granted, $58,000.

That is for the period from January 1 to May 28, 1921. There is another period from May 29 to December 31, 1921, and the figures run about the same. The consolidation of those figures shows that the number of men who received relief were classified as follows:

January 1, to May 28, 1921, 3,907 single men, 7,799 married men, 184 widowers.

May 29, to December 31, 1921, 1,392 single men, 2,796 married men, 93 widowers.

The total number of men receiving relief last year was 16,171. I am not in a position to furnish information of the number of men receiving relief at the present time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister adds those who got relief in the last period to those who got relief in the first period to arrive at his total of 16,000 men?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would not they be the same persons?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Mr. MANION: The minister gave the number of men receiving relief in the last half of the year. What was the amount in money?

Mr. BELAND: From May 29 to December 31, 1921, $325,729; whilst for the former period from January 1 to May 28, 1921, the amount is $1,184,000.

Mr. MANION: That amounts to about a million and a half. I have not a copy of the Supplementary Estimates, but I think the amount is $1,500,000?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Mr. MANION: In the items we passed a little while ago there is a figure for unemployment relief amounting to $500,000, which, with this sum of $1,500,000, totals $2,000,000. Those two amounts are taken in together, I presume?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The $500,000 was voted for general relief and had no relation to Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment?

Mr. BELAND: Quite likely.

Mr. BELAND: The million and a half we are asking for is for the last quarter from 1st January to 31st March, 1922.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A million and a quarter?

Mr. BELAND: A million and a half.

Mr. MEIGHEN: For the three months?

Mr. BELAND: My right hon. friend will notice that last year from January 1 to May 28 the amount granted for relief was $1,184,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The figures run in my mind like this, and perhaps the minister will tell me if they are tolerably correct. Last year for disabled soldier relief the total was about one million and a half, and for our contribution to general relief about half a million. Then, of course, there would be the amount from the 1st January to 31st March; but I am referring to the calendar year. Does the minister say that for disabled soldier relief for the first three months of this year the expenditure has run to a million and a half?

Mr. BELAND: I am not sure that I can supply the exact information, it being difficult to differentiate between the calendar year and the fiscal year. The figures I have here would give for 1922 a total of $1,184,000, plus $325,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, that is about right. It would look as if these three months were the worst we have ever had.

Mr. BELAND: The last three months?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes; a million and a half for three months is a very large figure.

Mr. BELAND: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is unexpectedly large to me.

Mr. BELAND: I am informed that we did not have enough money to run through December, and the amount of one million and a half was to cover from 1st December of last year, while the one million and a half which is now voted is not at present all spent, though the fiscal year has started.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We were in hopes a year ago that we would be able to discontinue relief—if not wholly, very largely. If the Government intend to pursue the course they have pursued—namely, the course we pursued—it would be their duty to present an estimate to the House rather than follow the course of getting the money by Governor General's warrant and a subsequent estimate.

Mr. BELAND: It is difficult to foresee the conditions of next year. We hope that next winter will not be so hard as the one just passed. I may inform my right hon. friend that an item of $500,000 was voted this afternoon for the ensuing year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the Government continues the fractional divisions as to general relief, namely, paying one-half itself and putting one-sixth on the municipality of the excess cost of works, I am not very optimistic that they will meet with a less expenditure this year.

Item agreed to.

Pensions—European war and active militia—further amount required, $4,000,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister give us an explanation of this item, including in his information figures as to the amount voted and the amount actually spent, so as to account for this extra estimate, and, as well, what was met with that was unforeseen? The late government put in the estimate of what the Pension Commissioners felt was going to be sufficient, in the light of their experience. What turned up in the nature of unforeseen expenditure that ran so far ahead of what the Pension Commissioners deemed they would require?

Mr. BELAND: Perhaps my right hon. friend was not in the chamber when I explained this vote. The total annual liability for pensions last year was $30,480,351. A large number of pensioners had the option of commuting their pension when their disability ranged between 5 and 14 per cent, and it is to cover such commutations that this amount is required.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is really money paid in commutation of pensions, so it will mean that much less in the future?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

At six o'clock the House resumed and then took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

ESQUIMALT AND NANAIMO RAILWAY COMPANY

House again in committee on Bill No. 6, respecting the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company.—(Mr. Tolmie)—Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Neill has given notice of his intention to move:

To amend the bill by striking out the word "two" in line 8 and inserting the word "one" in lieu thereof, and by striking out the word "five" in line 15 and inserting the word "three" in lieu thereof;

To amend clause 1 by striking out all the words after the word "railway" in line 17.

To add a new clause to be known as,—

3. The securities issued by the company shall not exceed fifty thousand dollars per mile of the railway authorized by this Act and may be issued only in proportion to the length of railway constructed or under contract to be constructed.

Mr. STEVENS: I could not follow you, Mr. Chairman, in the bill when you were reading the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendments are not in the bill. They appear in a notice given by Mr. Neill which is to be found in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. NEILL: I do not wish these amendments to be taken as one. If the first one passes I do not wish to bring in the other two. I only wish the first one to be discussed at present.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved by Mr. Neill that the first amendment be considered by the committee.

Mr. NEILL: This amendment is the same as the one I introduced a few nights ago—at least the effect of it will be the same. I am not bringing it forward in any spirit of obstruction. I simply believe that what transpired the other evening justifies me in again introducing this amendment to-night. Some hon. members who voted on the last occasion did not fully grasp the situation; others perhaps were absent. I feel, under the circumstances, that it is legitimate for me to introduce this amendment again. I will not waste the time of the committee by going over the arguments I used on the former occasion, but there are one or two points to which I wish to draw attention. If any hon. member will turn up Hansard and read the arguments in support of the bill passing without amendment advanced on that occasion, I believe he will be compelled to admit that there was very little solid reason given why my amendment should not pass. If hon. members will look at the speeches for and against the bill in its present form which were made the other night, they will find that there certainly was not a very strong argument advanced in favour of the measure. The amendment I ask is that the company shall begin operations within one year of the passing of this legislation. You will observe, Mr. Chairman, that the bill as drafted does not bring this railway under the Railway Act of Canada as regards the commencement of construction. Under that act the commencement of construction involves spending fifteen per cent of the money authorized for the building of the road within a particular period. By a special clause in the present bill however, the company take themselves out of the operation of the Railway Act of Canada and therefore that section is not operative with respect to them. The effect of it is this: While they ask for two years in which to begin and five years in which to finish, the bill really gives them five years to begin, because "beginning" under the present bill means a most perfunctory operation. A few men with shovels could, in half a day, perform the perfunctory attempt at commencement which could be constructed as a commencement within the meaning of the bill. Consequently while the company ask for two years in which to begin, they are really asking for five years provided the line is completed within that time. I therefore ask that that illusive period be reduced to one year in which the company shall at least make a pretence of beginning operations. I wish to read a letter and it is only a short communication, that I have received in connection with this bill. It is one of a number of letters that I have received but I will not burden the House by reading them all. I shall just read this communication because it is a typical one:

At the last meeting of the local branch of the United Farmers of British Columbia I was authorized to write to you to ask you to use your influence in every possible way, in the coming session of Parliament, to prevent the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company from getting the extension of time they are asking for. We feel very strongly here that the railway company ought to put this extension through for three reasons: Frst, it would provide a considerable amount of work for men and teams; Second, it would open up a considerable amount of country where there is much good land available for agriculture and which would be cultivated if transportation were provided at a reasonable rate; Third, if would cut down the cost of freight. At present it costs about 70 cents per hundred to haul freight from Victoria to Courtenay 145 miles, and it costs 20 cents per hundred to haul it from Courtenay to Merville by motor truck a distance of 8 miles. This disparity in cost presses very hard on the farmer. We firmly believe that this system of railway companies getting their charters extended from year to year is a most pernicious one. They ought either to build or relinquish the charter; unless there is some really legitimate reason why the railway should not be built at the time.

Trusting you will give this your earnest consideration.

The communication is signed by the secretary of the association which I may mention is mostly composed of returned soldiers. I could read resolutions from boards of trade, and other organizations, but the letter I have cited is a typical illustration of the feeling in that district. It may be true, as alleged the other night, that if this railway is not built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company it will not be built at all. That may or may not be true but at least we can give somebody else an opportunity. The other day when we western members were enjoying the hospitality of the city of Quebec—a hospitality that was given, I may say, with the grace and kindliness so characteristic of the French-Canadian people—we were shown, amongst other places the Montmorency falls, and it was a pretty sight. But I could not help thinking while we were gazing at it that the Campbell river falls along the route of this railway would produce five times the amount of electrical power. Whilst the latter falls are not so high as the Montmorency falls they have a far larger volume of water and if, as it is rumoured, there are negotiations pending for harnessing these falls, it would be a mere flea bite for that company—because they could incorporate with four or five millions—to build this jerk-water road to connect with the Canadian Pacific railway—It would pay them to build it to bring up supplies for this work. And whilst it is not an absolute fact at present we are not likely to obtain the building of the road by any other company while there is the assurance that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will have a blanket charter over it for all time. I have no hostility towards the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in this matter nor have the people whom I represent. I will say this, however: I will withdraw all opposition to this bill going through as it is framed if the hon. member in charge of the measure will postpone any further action upon it to-night and give me a written undertaking by that company that they will really build this railway within the time limits asked by themselves. That is all we ask.

If we had this assurance, and if there were anything like a reasonable probability or possibility that this road would be built, I would cheerfully concede the extra year to begin, and the extra year to finish that road, but I am perfectly certain that that assurance will not be forthcoming. Can hon. members of this House believe that I should stand here and oppose a charter of this kind, if there were any possibility of the road being built under it. What would my constituents think of such an act? Would I not be deluged, and would the House not be deluged, with telegrams and letters urging that I should consent to it? But the reason that these things are not forthcoming is that everything suggests that there is no probability of the line being built. I mentioned the other night the absence of the provision allowing for the issue of bonds for the road. That is an indication that they are not sincere in this matter to-night, and I think I can say without fear of contradiction that if this House passes this measure to-night, or this session—because it will not pass to-night—these people will be coming here two years hence asking for a further extension. It is not a revolutionary thing or an epoch-making thing. It is a simple amendment to give these people an opportunity to do what they declared on paper they wanted to do—to build this railway within a reasonable time.

Mr. TOLMIE: It must be pointed out that this is only a reasonable request made by the railway company. It is quite a common thing for railway companies to do, particularly under the conditions which prevail now and have prevailed for a number of years. I do not think the railway company can be criticized for having delayed the building of the road, particularly when one is familiar with conditions in that part of Canada, and the difficulty in obtaining the material required for railway construction. This road goes through a section of country that is very rough, with very large trees, and in many cases it will require as high as one case to a case and a half of powder to blow out a single stump. It is only reasonable that the railway company should be given every opportunity to build this road at as reasonable a cost as possible. Many of the roads built in that section of British Columbia have not paid from the very beginning, on account of the tremendous outlay, the slow settlement, and the heavily timbered nature of the country. The primary reason for building the road, as I understand it, is to bring out the timber from that section of Vancouver island, and it is only after that timber is removed and the land has been stumped, or partially stumped, that it will be ready for production, so that the delay in building the road will not be a very great inconvenience to the settlers in the very beginning. As to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway giving up this charter, and it being immediately taken up by some other railway company, I think that is very improbable indeed, because the Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway is the only railway in that section of Vancouver island, and if this road is to connect up and do any business, it must certainly connect up with the Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway at Courtenay. As far as giving a guarantee that this railway is going to be built is concerned, I am not in a position to do anything of the kind. I have not consulted the representatives of the railway with reference to this matter. This is a big company, well-known in Canada, doing business here, it has done a great deal to open up the West, and I think we can take its word just as well as we would that of any other business organization. Under these conditions, Mr. Chairman, I think the committee should not hesitate to grant the very reasonable request of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Much as I would like to agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), who has, in this House, spoken a good word for the province of Quebec, I am obliged to dissent from the opinion he expressed in reference to the extension of this charter, which I believe is being sought for very good reasons. The hon. gentleman has stated that not many good reasons were advanced in favour of the bill a few weeks ago when the bill was before the House. But there are many good reasons, and some of the members on this side of the House, who were not present at the committee meeting, have not had time to go fully into the facts of the case concerning this application. I do not see the harm in extending for two years more a charter to a company which everybody knows is aided by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That railway company has built up this country and is one of the greatest railways in the world. We must consider also that there is no possibility, practically, of any other railway coming into competition with this railway or desiring to get a charter for the construction of this road. There is also another factor. The hon. member for Comox has mentioned the possibility of immigrants, or other people from foreign lands, coming into this country, who might have to go away, because there were no possible facilities to enable them to go into the district of the Island of Vancouver which this railway is supposed to traverse. I might point out that I do not think there are very many immigrants coming from European countries who would go out very far on the Island of Vancouver, or even in the province of British Columbia. Most of these people settle in the central provinces of western Canada, and I think these people would suffer no great injury if a good company, like the one which has this charter at present, should have an extension granted for another two years. I do not hold in this House any brief for the company which is asking for a renewal of its charter. When a company comes here supported by reliable people, and tells this House openly and frankly that, on account of certain conditions which have existed in this country for the last two years, they have not been able to proceed with construction, an extension of a charter for two years has never been refused. My hon. friend has spoken of 15 per cent of a certain amount which had to be expended in a certain time. I think that provision which may have been contained in other charters of other railways, and provided for in the Railway Act, is made to prevent abuses by small companies, and people who might have charters which they wished to deal with, but not in the case of such a responsible company as the one we are dealing with. We know that it has the backing of the great institution to which I have just referred. That provision perhaps should only be invoked in the case of the Central Railway of Canada or other railways which have existed only for a few years, where the people, who are at the head of them, are only after charters to try to bargain and make money with them. When we understand the reasons advanced in the Railway Committee on this occasion on behalf of the granting of this charter and also those propounded last week by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Vien), I do not see what reason this committee would have for refusing to grant an extension of this charter for two years more nor what harm there would be in granting that extension. We know this company intends to do this work when conditions improve somewhat. I am informed that the construction of this part of the railway in that particular district of Vancouver Island forms part of a construction plan of a big organization; and while I do not know, it might be possible that it is not able, as my hon. friend has just pointed out, to commence immediately the construction of this part of the railway. When a company like that asks this Government and this House for an extension for two years and states that, within that period, it will probably be able to commence operations, I think we should believe the truth of its assertions and grant its request. Many members on both sides of the House, and especially on this side, are, I am sure, in favour of granting this request, and I think it would be a good move on the part of members of the Progressive party if they would support this bill and not support the amendment that the time for commencing operations be cut down to one year, as requested by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). I have not seen many such amendments agreed to in the last few years that I have been in the House. The Railway Committee has always taken into consideration the reasons advanced by these railway companies for renewals of their charters, and it has always granted what is fair and just. Therefore, I do not think we should make an exception in the case of this railway, but that we should give it the same terms as have been granted to many other railway companies.

The committee divided on the motion (Mr. Neill).

To amend the said bill by striking out the word "two" in line 8 and inserting the word "one" in lieu thereof.

Yeas, 70; nays, 70.

The CHAIRMAN: I vote against the amendment. I declare the amendment lost.

Amendment negatived.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is on the motion of Mr. Neill:

To amend the said bill by striking out the word "five" in line fifteen and inserting the word "three" in lieu thereof.

Mr. NEILL: I intended those two amendments and the insertions to go together. It is all one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN: The question has been put on one.

Mr. NEILL: Owing to the feeling shown in this committee, and owing to the fact that some more hon. members have come in since the vote has been taken, I think they should have some time to consider the question. I, therefore, move that you do now leave the Chair.

Motion negatived: Yeas, 65; nays, 84.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the amendment to strike out the word "five" in line 15 and insert the word "three" in lieu thereof, carry? I declare the amendment lost.

Amendment negatived.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is now on the third amendment, to amend clause 1 by striking out all the words after "railway" in the 17th line of the said bill.

Mr. NEILL: We have not yet taken a vote on the second amendment. You divided the first amendment into two, Mr. Chairman. I have no objection to your doing that, but I think we might very profitably discuss until nine o'clock the amendment to strike out the word "five" in line 15 and insert in lieu thereof the word "three".

The CHAIRMAN: That amendment has been declared lost.

Mr. NEILL: We have not taken a vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN: A vote was not asked for. The question is now on the third amendment, to amend clause 1 by striking out all the words after "railway" in line 17 of the said bill.

Mr. NEILL: I have been accused from time to time of speaking too fast. I have determined to cure myself of that fault. The subject before us to-night is one of the most momentous that might well engage our attention. It originates as you are aware, Mr. Chairman, with Bill No. 6. The official title of that bill is "Bill No. 6, An Act respecting The Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company." I see it is marked down here for its first reading on the 21st day of March, 1922, and that it has the signature of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie), who endorsed it, presumably, on its first introduction. The hon. member for Victoria, I might mention is not a resident of the district through which this railway runs, and therefore it is natural to suppose that he is but imperfectly acquainted with the situation of this railway in that district. It therefore becomes necessary for a humble representative of that district to go somewhat fully into the details of the situation. I address myself more particularly to the first clause of the act, but in order that the committee may get a correct grasp of the situation, I will read the preamble as well.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. NEILL: I resent the levity with which some hon. gentlemen are treating this serious and important subject. As the thread of my argument has been somewhat disturbed by the interruptions, I had perhaps better begin again. The preamble reads as follows:

> Whereas the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company has by its petition prayed that it be enacted as hereinafter set forth, and it is expedient to grant the prayer of the said petition: Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

Then clause 1 of the bill follows:

> The Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company, hereinafter called "the Company," may within two years after the passing of this act commence to construct the line of railway which it was authorized to construct by section two of chapter seventy-seven of the statutes of 1920, extending from a point at or near its present terminus at Courtenay, thence in a general easterly and northeasterly direction to a point at or near Duncan's Bay on the east coast of Vancouver Island, and may within five years after the passing of this act complete the said line of railway; and if within the said periods respectively, the said line is not commenced, or is not completed and put in operation, the powers of construction conferred upon the Company by Parliament shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the said line as shall then remain uncompleted.

I wish to point out a decided discrepancy between the language used in this bill and in the original act to which it refers. You will observe that this bill says that starting from Courtenay the line will proceed "in a general easterly and north-easterly direction." If we refer to the act of 1920, which is chapter 77 of George V., second session of 1920—

Mr. McMASTER: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would the hon. member be able to speak a little louder so that we would have the full benefit of his argument on this side of the House?

Mr. GAUVREAU: And of his wit.

Mr. NEILL: I am perfectly willing to yield the point, but I wish to warn my hon. friend of this. In my younger and unregenerate days I once used to drive a team of oxen and any one who has had anything to do with driving oxen will agree with me that it can only be done by a man with a very loud voice and an absolute command of profanity. I much fear that the force of habit is so strong on me that if I do raise my voice to the pitch required to make myself heard, I shall inevitably slip back into the old habit. If the hon. gentleman is ready to take that risk, I am quite willing to raise my voice. I understand that the hon. member imperfectly heard my opening remarks, so I am afraid I shall once more be compelled to go over the same ground again. Perhaps, however, it would be better to go through with the thread to begin with, and then I can rehearse my opening remarks afterwards, if I get through in time.

Section 2 of the act of 1920, which was assented to on the 11th of May of that year, provides that the company may construct and operate a line of railway from a point at or near its present terminus at Courtenay—the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) is not paying attention to my remarks. Mr. Chairman, I am here to drive my points home if I have to repeat them a thousand times. You will observe that section 2 of the act of 1920 provides that this company, > —may lay out, construct, maintain and operate a line of railway from a point at or near its present terminus at Courtenay, thence in a general northerly and northeasterly direction—

You will notice that the original act says "in a general northerly and northeasterly direction," but the bill before us says "in a general easterly and northeasterly direction." Why, if this route is followed, the railway will have to be built in the gulf of Georgia, because that is the easterly direction from the point here named. We have seen many changes in the last three or four years, among them great political changes, but I do not think the direction of the cardinal points has shifted so much as is indicated in these two acts. I should like to know from the hon. member who is sponsor for this bill if he can tell me why the act in its original form describes the railway as running in a northerly direction, while the present bill has it going in an easterly direction. If the hon. member would like to make an explanation I am sure we would all be very happy to hear it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. NEILL: I am sorry the hon. member will not oblige us on such a vital point. I know that a distinction of that kind is well calculated to sway the opinions of this House.

I think I have now indicated in a general way, Mr. Chairman, what is the purport of this bill. I think I should take a point of order on this subject, for the bill purports to be an amendment to this act; but it is not in ordinary fact an amendment. It has been contended, I was informed the other day by one well in a position to know, that the original act with the powers contained in section 3 is still in existence, and that this bill is an amendment to it. But I would submit to hon. members who are lawyers that that is neither good law nor good parliamentary practice. This act will cease on the 11th day of May of this year, and I cannot see how this present bill can in any sense be considered—shall I say?—as concomitant or a part of it, unless it specifically says that section so-and-so shall be amended.

To illustrate the point I wish to make. If this amending bill purported to amend section 3 of the original act by striking out the date and putting in another date two years hence, that would be perfectly proper and correct and in accordance with parliamentary practice; but when it simply says, as it does here, that it has power to build the railway mentioned in section 2 of the original act, then I submit it cannot be held to be an amending bill, and consequently the original act will disappear on the 11th day of May, 1922. What then becomes of this section in the act dealing with the bonding privileges of the company? Section 4 of the act provides:

> The securities issued by the company shall not exceed $50,000 per mile of the railway authorized by this act, and may be issued only in proportion to the length of railway constructed or under contract to be constructed.

Now, Sir, that section has disappeared in the so-called amending bill. Where then is the authority to be found to obtain money to build this railway? Is it not driven home to you, Mr. Chairman, and every member here that that has been omitted because the promoters know they will not need the money? In other words, they do not intend to build the railway, and they will be coming here two years, four years, ten years hence, and then it will be time enough to put in the bonding clauses. It has been contended, as I said, that the bonding clause in the original act governs this bill; but it cannot do so, for the reasons I have pointed out, that the act is not amended specifically, this bill only alludes to it in an indirect manner, so that—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is dealing now with the last amendment, whereas what he should discuss is the amendment after the word "railway" in line 17, as to the time for construction and completion of the railway.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I accept your direction, and I shall be very pleased to address myself more particularly to the amendment. In my haste to get the discussion over I was going on to the third amendment, but I will now devote myself more particularly to the amending of clause 1 by striking out all the words after "railway" in line 17. That, Sir, I am sorry to say, compels me to refer to section 3 of the Railway Act again, Chap. 68 of the Statutes of Canada of the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nineteen. Perhaps I ought to read the act from the beginning.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: Well, it is somewhat extended and I will not inflict it on hon. members. The heading of section 3 is "Construing of special acts." Subsection (a) reads as follows:

> Except as in this act otherwise provided, (a) this act shall be construed as incorporate with the special act.

I need not explain the meaning of that to hon. members. Subsection (b) provides:

> Where the provisions of this act and of any special act passed by the Parliament of Canada relate to the same subject matter, the provisions of the special Act shall, in so far as is necessary to give effect to such special Act, be taken to override the provisions of this Act.

If hon. members do not understand that language it is not my fault; it is due to the peculiar legal phraseology employed. Put in plain English, it means that when a company comes to this House and brings a special railway act, it is supposed in its general lines to conform to the Railway Act of Canada, and what this special act does not specifically mention the general covers. But in this particular case they had inserted the words which I propose to strike out by that amendment. In that way the promoters are trying to take this bill out of the jurisdiction of the Railway Act, because the words that I propose to strike out read as follows:

> —and if within the said periods respectively the said line is not commenced, or is not completed and put in operation, the powers of construction conferred upon the company by Parliament shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the said line as shall then remain uncompleted.

To the ordinary layman, Mr. Chairman, those words would not appear to take this bill out of the jurisdiction of the Railway Act; but these provisions are always so astutely and so subtly phrased that they do not always mean what on the surface they appear to mean. I have my eye on it too, Mr. Chairman, and we will be a unit when it comes to nine o'clock! But, as I say, the insertion of these words, which to all appearances have nothing to do with the Railway Act, take the bill out of the jurisdiction of that act. Therefore I want to cut these words out, and then the bill would come under another section of the Railway Act, which I propose to read with your consent, Sir.

This is the same Railway Act that I alluded to before, Chap. 68 of the Statutes of Canada of the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nineteen, in two volumes—this is the first volume. Section 161 dealing with the powers of construction of railroads and the limitation of time for construction provides:

> If the construction of the railway is not commenced and 15 per cent of the amount of the capital stock is not expended thereon in survey, purchase of right of way, and actual construction work, or in the case of a branch or extension of the railway, if 15 per cent of the bond issue authorized therefor is not expended thereon in actual construction work within two years after the passing of the act authorizing the construction of such railway, branch or extension, as the case may be, or where the Parliament of Canada grants an extension of time for commencing such contruction within the time so granted, or if the railway, or branch or extension, as the case may be, is not completed and put in operation within five years from the passing of such act, or where the Parliament of Canada grants an extension of time for completion within the time so granted, then the powers granted by such Act or by this Act shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the railway, or branch or extension, as the case may, as then remains uncompleted.

The common sense interpretation of that section is that the Railway Act of Canada specifies that a railway shall within two years commence construction and by construction is meant spending 15 per cent of the amount authorized of the bond issue for the building of that road or branch to be extended. Incidentally, I would like to ask, how does this railway company expect to arrive at this 15 per cent when they have not taken any authority to issue bonds? One can come to no other conclusion than that the bill is intended only as a stop-gap. My object in moving this amendment is to make the company come under the operation of the Railway Act of Canada, by striking out the words I have alluded to in clause 1 and putting nothing in their place. The company would then become obliged, under section 161, to spend 15 per cent of the capital cost of the railway in commencing operations within any period decided upon. So that while the House has decided, by the vote of the Chair—I should think the case almost unique in Canada—that this company shall have two years within which to commence operations, under the bill as introduced they have practically five years, because they do not really need to do anything definite in the way of commencing. A man can go out before breakfast with a shovel and do enough work to call it "commencing construction." I knew of a company which started construction in that way: they fulfilled the contract by stealing a couple of rails from a coal mine siding and laying them out along the route. That gave them three years more in which to carry on. It is to prevent something of that kind that my amendment is formulated. If this amendment passes, and the company, by the action of the committee to-night—I trust it may be only for to-night, for I presume there will be other opportunities of bringing the question up; as hon. gentlemen grow older, it is customary for them to grow wiser. We saw how the vote went last week; give us a little time and we will sweep this amendment through the House, probably by a unanimous vote. But I have got off the thread of my remarks.

Mr. VIEN: I rise to a point of order. Rule 18, paragraph 2, provides that a member who talks for the purpose of gaining time may be ruled out of order. The hon. member clearly intimated his intention of talking the matter out until the clock should strike nine. Moreover, his arguments for the last ten minutes have been a tedious repetition, which brings them under the wording of Rule 18.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I presume that is debatable.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand that the hon. member wishes to speak to the point of order.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member (Mr. Vien) has referred, I think, to rule 18. To what book of rules does he refer? Is it Bourinot? There is a great divergence of authorities as to points of order. There is May, and there is Bourinot, and there are several others which I do not recall at the moment.

The CHAIRMAN: I would point out to the hon. member that this rule is definitely indicated. It is rule 18, clause 2.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, here it is:

Mr. Speaker or the Chairman, after having called the attention of the House, or of the committee, to the conduct of a member who persists in irrelevance, or tedious repetition either of his own arguments or of the arguments used by other members in debate, may direct him to discontinue his speech.

I submit that I have not deviated from the amendment under discussion. I may have said in a jocular way that the discussion would end at nine o'clock, but is that not so? Is not that the rule of the House? I submit that my remarks were relevant to the amendment at the very moment when the hon. member for Lotbiniere interrupted me. Is it not desirable that this railway company should be brought under the operation of the Railway Act, thus preventing it from going out and doing the so-called commencement work in an afternoon with a shovel—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. NEILL: I am speaking to the point of order. I also have rights in this House, Sir. I call your attention to rule 19, which says that no member shall use offensive words against any other member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN: While it may be said that the hon. member is, perhaps, at the point of divergence from relevancy to the matter under discussion, I think I should give it as my opinion that the point of order is not, under the circumstances, well taken.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your decision. While you may be a little shaky on an even vote, you are all right in your rulings. It is very embarrassing to be interrupted in this way by hon. members; it quite destroys the thread of my argument. I think I have made my case good; clearly it is desirable to pass this amendment so that my constituents will have at least the satisfaction of knowing that this company will pay out 15 per cent of the construction costs during the period decided upon. That is a substantial concession, but it is a reasonable one.

9 p.m.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I draw attention to the fact that the hour for private bills has expired. Shall the committee have leave to sit again?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

SUPPLY

The House again in committee of supply, Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

PENSIONS

Pensions—European war and active militia, further amount required, $4,000,000.

Mr. MANION: When the Committee took recess at six o'clock I was about to ask the minister one question in regard to this item. He mentioned a sum of $4,000,000 as being for the commutation of pensions, and he spoke of this as lessening the expense of this year. But I notice that in addition to that sum there is also asked for this year $33,000,000 which makes a total of $37,000,000 as compared with $30,000,000 in the regular estimates of last year. Will the minister explain why there is an increase of expenditure if the amount paid for commutations effected a decrease? That is what I do not understand.

Mr. BELAND: Perhaps my hon. friend did not thoroughly understand the explanation given. The $4,000,000 which are now being asked for, are not for the current year 1922-23 but for the year that is just ended.

Mr. MANION: Then $4,000,000 is in addition to the $30,000,000 of last year.

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Item agreed to.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

Department of Trade and Commerce—Bounty on linen yarn spun in Canada from Canadian flax, including expenses of supervision; under Orders-in-Council of September 3, 1918, and June 30, 1920, $26,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: We would like to have a little information in regard to this item? Will the minister tell us exactly what this expenditure involves?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce): This is the last year of these grants towards the cultivation of flax and the manufacture of linen yarns in Canada. The act under which assistance was granted was to run for three years, and this is the last year we make payments under the system adopted by the supervisors. The amount paid last year was about four thousand odd dollars but we have not received all the returns from the mills. We are asking for the same amount that was established last year.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think this item should be held over until we get a little more information. The details given to us by the minister are not very complete.

Mr. ROBB: If my hon. friend desires any further information I am quite prepared to give it to him. He will notice there is no change in this vote. So far there is only one company receiving bounty, the Dominion Linens Limited of Guelph and the expenditure has been as follows: In 1920-21 on 139,796 pounds, bounty was paid of $5,096.11. The cost of supervision was $150.40. This bounty, as I have already told my hon. friend, was authorized under the War Measures Act to run for three years from April 1, 1919, and later was changed by Order-in-Council to run for three years from April 1st, 1920, so that it will expire in 1923.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Are we to understand that this is a re-appropriation?

Mr. ROBB: The appropriation has to be voted each year, and in accordance with parliamentary procedure if the money is not earned within the year ending March 31st, it lapses and returns to the Treasury, but it must be voted each year.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Perhaps I can explain this item because I know something about it. It so happened that in the summer of 1918 it was impossible in Canada to get linen yarns. It was also impossible in Canada to get those classes of material into which linen yarns are manufactured. The question, I think, arose in the first instance through want of cloth for aeroplanes. An embargo was placed by Great Britain on Irish flax or linen yarns coming to this or any other country. The stock here had run out, also the stock in the United States. The threads that are used by shoemakers and harnessmakers was also exhausted, likewise fishing twines, and a serious question arose as to how these could be obtained; they were not manufactured in Canada at that time. The flax industry was being encouraged to some extent and there was a good deal of hope that it would develop into a large industry. The government of that day accordingly passed under the authority of the War Measures Act, an appropriation to the extent of $25,000 a year as a maximum to be paid in bounty on the production in Canada of linen yarns. No factory was ready to start that work, no factory in America was equipped for the purpose. A factory had been started in Philadelphia but it had not been able to compete with the Irish, or Belgian linens, or with the linens from Japan. But the machinery was available there, and was subsequently purchased and brought to Canada. The bounty is paid at so much per pound.

[Mr. Campbell.]

Mr. ROBB: Three cents.

Mr. GUTHRIE: With reference to linen yarn manufactured in Canada, only a small portion of the bounty has been earned. The factory in Guelph is the only one that has gone to the extent of actually manufacturing these linen yarns. I understand the amount earned last year was only five or six thousand dollars. It may be that that is not a full year's accounting, and that more will have to be paid, but the maximum as to amount was $25,000 per year, the limit of time was three years, and this is the last year.

Mr. JACOBS: May I ask the hon. gentleman, who seems to be acting as substitute for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, how much has been paid on account of this bounty?

Mr. ROBB: Less than $10,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Perhaps the hon. gentleman can give us some information as to the possibility of this becoming a paying industry in Canada or if the money is to be merely thrown away.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend must remember that the bounty was given for the purpose of starting the industry. Our information is that this mill is running. The amount paid varies according to the quality of the thread. It provides for a bounty of 3 cents a pound to be paid on linen yarn not coarser than 12 lea, or finer than 20 lea, and 6 cents per pound for yarn 20 lea and finer but coarser than 40 lea, and 9 cents a pound for yarn 40 lea and finer. The amount appropriated under the original act was not to exceed $75,000 in all, and not to exceed $25,000 per year. My hon. friend will observe that, in placing this in the estimates, we are simply carrying out the Order in Council of 1920, and if the money is not earned there is nothing to pay.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not like to press it very much further, but, in view of the fact that this amount of money is not ordinarily required, I do not see the necessity for voting it. Could the hon. minister not cut it down to the actual amount required?

Mr. ROBB: No, we cannot cut it down one cent, because Parliament three years ago advertised to industries that $25,000 a year was available for three years. You would not ask us to repudiate an act of Parliament. This is the last year. There is only one way of correcting it, and that is to repeal the act.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Bureau of Statistics (including census 1921), $415,000.

Mr. HANSON: I think we should have from the minister some rather detailed statement as to how far advanced these statistics are, and when they will be ready for the country.

Mr. ROBB: This information is handed out to the press, when completed. The information with respect to the provinces has been handed out, but we have not yet fully completed all the details for the different counties, cities, towns and townships. The staff is working at it continuously and we hope before long to be able to hand out a complete statement.

Mr. MILLAR: Will the minister tell us why, when the census was being taken, those who are born in Canada and have lived all their lives in Canada, cannot be registered as Canadians?

Mr. ROBB: I have read that inquiry frequently in the newspapers. My predecessor, was responsible for starting machinery to take the last census, and I imagine he followed the procedure of previous years, but I am forced to believe that the omission to which publicity was given in the last census will not occur again when we take the census of 1931.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can the minister not give us more information as to when the census is to be brought down? I am surprised to learn that the details are not ready. The final results are ready, and the final results, one would think could only be made up from the mass of details which the census department already has. What is the reason for the delay in knowing what the census is in the smaller group, when we have the information for the larger group?

Mr. ROBB: I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me that there are volumes of figures to be compiled and checked, and, incidentally, I may take the House into my confidence, and say that we have discovered some irregularities in the census. For instance, we discovered in some of the western towns that the census had been padded, and whole blocks had been put in which did not exist. Four enumerators were brought before the court and fined. We had complaints from some of the eastern cities that there were omissions in the census. It is important that all these should be checked up carefully before the final report is handed out.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When do you expect it to be handed out?

Mr. ROBB: I have urged the department to work as fast as possible and get it out.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister has taken the House into his confidence, and I am going to be similarly frank with my hon. friend. Some people think the Government are not at all in a hurry to redistribute.

Mr. ROBB: I heard that of the last government.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is thought to be a common fault with governments, and that the present Government are not at all anxious, at any rate, to provide for proper representation at the present minute.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why not?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I leave that to my hon. friend to answer. I do not know why. Redistribution is very much overdue, and my hon. friend will tell us, of course, that we should have looked after it some months ago, although he says it cannot be looked after now. But a very easy way of preventing redistribution would simply be to delay bringing down the details of the census.

Mr. ROBB: We have no desire to do that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am delighted to receive that assurance. Can the minister tell us the cost of the census as against the other ordinary administration costs of the department?

Mr. JACOBS: I see, in the estimates for 1921-22, an item of $1,860,000 for expenses in connection with the taking of the census. This year, the amount is $415,000. Could the minister give us some idea as to the actual cost of taking the census of 1921?

Mr. ROBB: That is a similar question to the one asked by the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton). Up to December 31, last, we had paid out on account of the Statistics Bureau including census, $1,626,540.07. Of this amount, there was expended $97,194.58 for the bureau, and $1,529,345.49 for the census.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I did not receive from the minister any approximate date when he thought the census returns would be available for the House. The returns which, he understands, we are most anxious to have are, of course, those which would guide the House in the preparation of a redistribution bill. I think the House will agree that that is one of the most important things which we have ahead of us, and a matter which should not be delayed any longer than is absolutely necessary. The figures are all in the bureau at this time. The census was commenced last June, eleven months ago, and, under ordinary conditions, it should have been completed by this time—yes, before this time. The census returns are indispensable in the preparation of a proper redistribution bill, and until we get them, we cannot move in the matter. I was a little surprised, at an earlier date in the session, to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) announce that the Government did not intend to proceed with redistribution at this session. I do not know that this affects Ontario so very much; from what I see in the newspapers, it may be that Ontario may lose one or two seats. That is not the point; the point is that the people are entitled to proper representation, no matter whether they live in Ontario or the West; and the minister, by putting on a few additional clerks, could bring down the necessary information to this House within a very few days. The question I asked the minister was: Are we to have this information or are we not? Those who live in parts of Canada where the representation is going to be very much affected, I should think, would join in the demand for early figures in regard to the census. I should be very glad if my hon. friend would give us to-night an approximate idea when he expects to lay before the House sufficient details of the census to enable the House to deal with a redistribution bill. The item which we are discussing now is the census item, and I think we should get that information before the item is passed.

Mr. ROBB: I think I can go so far as to assure my hon. friend that, barring unforseen events, the census will be completed and brought down in plenty of time to prepare a redistribution bill before there is a general election.

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the purest kind of evasion. I think the minister must see that himself. There could not be a general election held in this country without a redistribution bill, unless we are going to administer a very severe wrench to our constitution. We must have the census figures. What is the reason for the delay? The statement of the minister to-night will not account for the delay. The employment of a few additional clerks would give us those figures next week, and I think, before the committee passes this item, it should get from the minister a definite promise that we are going to have those figures. It is all right to say that we shall have them before there is a general election. This Government is not in that altogether happy position that it can exactly say when we should or should not have a general election. All the more reason why we should have the census figures to enable us to have a proper redistribution bill.

Mr. ROBB: To-morrow morning I will give instructions to the bureau to spur up a little, if it is possible to put on more help, and bring down the complete census.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman say that the chief of the census staff is of opinion that they have not sufficient information now to warrant the introduction of a bill?

Mr. ROBB: I did not say that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is he not the authority?

Mr. ROBB: I did not say so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I say he is.

Mr. ROBB: Say what?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Chief of the Statistics Branch. Will the hon. gentleman say that he is of opinion that the returns are not sufficient to warrant our going on with redistribution?

Mr. ROBB: I have not offered any opinion in that regard. The question was asked when the census would be completed and brought down. I replied that some irregularities had been discovered in the census and that instructions had been issued not to give out complete returns to the printers, until the returns were all checked up and we could hand out a census that would be fairly satisfactory. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Meighen) was absent when I intimated to the House that we had discovered certain irregularities in western Canada; that four men had been fined for padding the lists, and that we have a grist of complaints from eastern Canada, from some cities, that names have been omitted. I am sure my hon. friends will agree with me that it is important that we should check up these returns and satisfy the people that the census handed out is a fair census. That work is being done as rapidly as possible. If my hon. friends desire that we should put on more help, I will ask the chief census enumerator to put on more help, if possible, and to spur up the work. We have no desire to delay completion of the census.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Small complaints as to persons being left out are one thing; I know nothing about that; but I saw some time ago census returns published as to several provinces, and I have read the address of the chief statistician. From that address no one could come to any conclusion save this, that the census is now and has been for some time quite sufficiently advanced for all the purposes of redistribution.

Mr. JACOBS: Is the right hon. gentleman aware of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) announced to the House the other day that there would be no redistribution this year? I think the Prime Minister this year is master of the situation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That may be a question. I was not discussing that. I was merely saying that, as regards the census returns, there is no excuse for lack of redistribution this session.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the minister should let this item stand over until he gives us some more definite information as to when those figures will be available, and what is holding up the completion of the work. For the last two or three months, we have expected that those figures would be available. Some of my hon. friends around me seem to think this is not of a great deal of consequence for the province of Ontario. There is this to remark, that the part of Canada to which it is of real consequence, is apparently very quiescent and very acquiescent as regards the Government's action in not bringing down the figures. I should have thought, if people in any part of the Dominion of Canada showed urgency in regard to this matter, it would be hon. members from western provinces; and if they are prepared to acquiesce in the delay and to postpone any possibility of redistribution this session, I do not know that people from Ontario are so very much concerned about the matter. But the wonderful silence on the part of all hon. members from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba in regard to this question is certainly most impressive.

Mr. HOEY: It is encouraging, almost inspiring indeed, to learn that my hon. friends to my right have become converted to the necessity for redistribution. I want to say that silence is no indication of acquiescence. There is on the Order Paper to-day, I understand, a resolution by a member of this group calling the attention of this House to the desirability of enacting a measure of redistribution this session, if possible. I want to associate myself very heartily with the earlier statement made by my hon. friend from South Wellington, that it is very desirable we should have the actual facts concerning the recent census at the earliest possible date with the object of passing a redistribution bill.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I would also like to point out a reason for urgency in this matter. I come from the county of York, a riding that is partly urban and partly rural. In the last election the total number of voters on the list of South York was 49,700. That constituency is entitled to at least three seats. While the city of Toronto and the county of York have ten members in this House, they are really entitled according to population, so far as we know the figures, to twenty members. We ought to have twenty. It is now proposed to introduce the principle of proportional representation in electing representatives to this House. The city of Toronto would like to know how long it is going to be without a fair representation in this House, and whether the principle of proportional representation is to govern at the next election. If so, it will effect an absolute revolution in the city of Toronto and the county of York, and that being the case, we are entitled to know the actual census figures at the earliest possible moment. I believe the figures could be easily prepared and given to the public; I do not think it is necessary to take so much time over it. We cannot have the information too soon, especially in view of so much talk about another election being held any day in this country. We want to have these figures so that we can study them and devise some means of bringing about an equality between the representation of the cities and of the rural portions. While Ontario would not have any more seats, surely the cities by reason of their growth in population are entitled to greater representation than they now have. As a matter of fact, the city of Toronto and the county of York include about one-fourth of the population of Ontario, and if one man's vote is as good as another man's, we ought to have one-fourth of Ontario's representation in this House, whereas we have a good deal less than one-eighth.

Mr. MANION: With reference to the Bureau of Statistics, I should like to ask the minister what progress has been made in unifying the work of gathering statistics for all departments of the Government. At present, if one wants statistics dealing with a certain branch of the Government, it is sometimes very difficult to get them without hunting up a certain branch, or a certain section of that branch, or a certain department, or something of that sort, and being referred from one to the other. On one occasion last year I was referred from one branch to another seven or eight times before I succeeded in getting certain figures I required in regard to minerals. That is very annoying. There should be one central place where we could get statistics relating to any department and any branch of the Government, and I should like to know what advancement has been made in the working out of such a central system.

Mr. ROBB: That work is being gradually co-ordinated. I myself have had occasion to find fault with the duplication of information that is asked for throughout the country. In so far as it is possible, this duplication is being eliminated and the work centralized in the bureau of which Mr. Coats has charge.

Mr. MANION: The object ultimately is that Mr. Coats' office will be able to give statistics relating to any branch of the government?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is there, if anything, that is not in the statistics office now?

Mr. ROBB: The Department of Labour have a statistical branch, as well as the Mines Department and the Department of the Interior.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no statistical branch in the Department of the Interior. There is a Natural Resources branch, which gathers information of course, but that is not statistics, and such figures as it does gather go immediately to the statistics office. If there is a branch gathering statistics in the Department of Labour, it would occur to me there is no need of it, as the work should all be done in the Statistics branch.

Mr. ROBB: Perhaps my hon. friend is right. I know that the figures that are gathered in the Interior Department are sent to Mr. Coats' office. I remember some months ago a man wanted to be transferred from that work in the Interior Department to Mr. Coats' branch.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that every requisition of the hon. gentleman's department to the Interior with regard to the transfer of statistics was met by the Interior Department. There was no reservation.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): How many enumerators were employed on the last census, and what proportion of them were soldiers?

Mr. ROBB: There were 11,414 enumerators. We have no record as to the number of returned soldiers employed, but a number of returned soldiers were engaged on this work.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): In my riding in every case where the work of taking the census could be given to returned men, that was done. The majority of the work was done by returned men and done fairly well.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): The British North America Act has very wisely provided that the representation of this House should be based on the representation of the province of Quebec. As a commissioner of the city of Montreal for some years, I am familiar with conditions existing in that city, and I cannot approve too strongly the stand taken by the minister to make doubly certain that the census figures, for the island of Montreal more especially, are authentic and accurate. It is a well known fact to those who read the Montreal papers that when the preliminary census figures were given out, several newspapers in Montreal, La Presse, La Patrie, the Montreal Star, as well as the Chambre de Commerce and others, protested against the figures and alleged that the census that had been taken within the city limits was inaccurate and incomplete. Petitions were signed and circulated calling on the Government to verify the figures, so I hope the minister before a final announcement is made, if he has not already taken the necessary steps to verify these charges, will do so, so that when we get the census report for the province of Quebec and of the island of Montreal we shall know that it is absolutely accurate and complete. The figures for the city of Montreal, properly speaking, are misleading because they only give the population within the municipal limits. The outlying towns, Westmount, Outremont, and so on, are left out of the complete figures for Montreal as they are generally given.

Generally speaking, I think it is the duty of the minister and of the Government to make doubly sure that these charges have been fully investigated so that the figures finally given out may be absolutely satisfactory. This is a matter in which not only the province of Quebec, but every province in the Dominion is interested. If the members from Ontario and the West are anxious to have a change in the representation of this House, they must be certain that the basis on which the work is done is absolutely accurate, and that the figures that are finally given are the correct figures which the country should have.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is it not a fact that the checking up has all been done as respects Montreal? There is no doubt now as to the figures?

Mr. ROBB: The checking up as respects Montreal has been fairly well completed. It is only right to say that in many cases we discovered the complaints were scarcely justified. There were many irregularities, but they were not of as grave a character as was at first thought and reported through the press. For the further information of my hon. friend, I have here the last report of the Commissioner of the Census up to the 20th of April. He intimates that the returns were being handed out as finally revised, but that in the case of the province of Quebec there was more than the ordinary amount of revision found necessary, and he would like to spend a few days longer on the final revision. I imagine the returns will be completed in a very few days.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does he indicate how much revision still remains to be done?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: On the 20th of April he intimated that the final work would be done in a very few days. That is twelve days ago. Does not the minister think this vote might well stand over until he has those final returns?

Mr. ROBB: If my hon. friend insists upon it I do not object, but I can assure him that we will speed up the work tomorrow. We are just as anxious as he is to have it completed.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Have all the enumerators and other census officers been paid in full?

Mr. ROBB: So far as I know all those whose reports have been passed upon and approved have been paid; but only a few days ago some cases were brought to my attention where enumerators—one in the eastern part of Quebec—had failed to send in final returns. Until we get those final returns we are not going to make payment. In those cases we have had to send men especially down to look into the returns.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I feel that I should—although I do not hope to change any opinion as a result—say a few words with regard to a remark that fell from the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey), as regards those on this side of the House only lately favouring redistribution. The fact is, as was stated in the House last session—although I do not suppose the statement got very wide circulation where such circulation was not profitable—that I made every attempt to have the census so advanced that we could introduce a redistribution bill last session. I conferred with the Chief of the Statistics Branch, who informed me that owing to a change in the law made about ten years ago the census was taken on the first of June instead of three months earlier, as had previously been the case. I canvassed with him the possibility of advancing the date again to the first of March and rushing the census so that redistribution could be introduced during the session. Upon investigation the Chief of the Statistics branch reported to me that it would be impossible so to do, that even by advancing the census three months not more than one month at the very outside would be gained, owing to the difficulty of getting work done at that unfavourable period of the year, the roads and weather conditions being what they would be, and that consequently it would not be possible to be through with the work earlier than September; but that taking the census at the time fixed by law, namely, the first of June, it would in his judgment be possible to have the return ready in October. I had a letter from him to that effect.

During a discussion last session I stated that in my judgment we would not be justified in dissolving Parliament at that time in response to demands from hon. gentlemen, then in the opposition. One reason I gave was that it was very important to have redistribution before dissolution, and I stated that I was most anxious to have it.

It developed in the fall, at a further conference with the Chief Statistician of the Census branch, that it would be the month of December before the census returns were ready, such had been the slow progress made as a result of many unforeseen difficulties that had been encountered, and that there would be no possibility of securing census returns sufficient to warrant going on with a redistribution bill until at least the month of December, that that month would be late enough and by that time the census returns would be available. That meant redistribution could not be put through at any special session, and that if it was to be attended to before dissolution we would have to have a regular session. Under the circumstances I feel that a regular session would not be justified even for the purpose of redistribution. Those are the facts.

It now transpires that it would not have been possible even in December. I feared that might be the case, because I knew that already completion of the census returns was two months beyond the time that had been fixed first in the spring, and if that should be the case we would be in a very unfortunate position indeed. Consequently I felt it my duty not to wait for redistribution. But for hon. gentlemen to try to lead the House to believe that there was any aversion on my part to redistribution, or that the importance of it was not appreciated, is entirely to mislead the House, although not done intentionally.

Now, I do think that we undoubtedly have information enough—I cannot think it can be otherwise having read the addresses and the information given by the Chief Statistician—I say that we undoubtedly have information enough to warrant the introduction of a redistribution bill at the earliest possible date.

Mr. ROBB: This session?

Mr. MEIGHEN: At this session.

Mr. LEWIS: Is it the intention to gradually include all statistical clerks from the various departments of the Government under this one head, because I notice on page 104 under the details of civil government that there are 91 statistical clerks employed at a salary of $85,055? Is that in addition to the amount of half a million dollars under this head?

Mr. ROBB: Page 104 refers to civil employees.

Mr. LEWIS: But are the salaries included in this Dominion Bureau under this item?

Mr. ROBB: No, that money represents the salaries that we have voted under civil government estimates.

Mr. LEWIS: But this item we have now, No. 360?

Mr. ROBB: No, this is for the salaries of enumerators and others who took the census.

Mr. JACOBS: Is it not a fact that these census enumerators were appointed by the Government without the assistance of the Civil Service Commission, and that in these appointments we have had patronage exercised in its most evil form?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not hear any answer. An answer might possibly embarrass the Government, if it ever hopes to be in office for another census. I would suggest to the hon. member that he inquire as to the possibility of appointments under the Civil Service Commission for temporary work of this nature, requiring very often re-appointment to the same office for a very few days in succession. The hon. member knows that as well as anyone else. All I hope for from this Government is that they maintain the Civil Service Act in the form in which it is to-day—indeed, that is somewhat beyond my hopes. If they succeed in doing that, then there will at least be less cause for complaint than there has been in the past. If, however, the hon. member feels like introducing a motion now, as a government supporter, for the appointment under the Civil Service Commission of officials doing enumerating temporarily once in ten years, it will be an evidence of loyalty to that act that I do not expect from hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. JACOBS: What I complain about particularly is that of the thousands who were appointed everyone seems to have been a supporter of the past government.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): The minister has said that the delay was caused through one or two of the eastern constituencies not being yet fully reported. In my own constituency some of the enumerators complain that they are still unpaid. Of course, these men were not appointed by me; I was not even consulted. But they are complaining to this day, and I would like to know how the matter stands.

Mr. ROBB: It is exactly in my hon. friend's consituency that the trouble arises. The Chief Commissioner in Bonaventure has been dilatory in sending in returns, particularly those relating to the accounts of the persons who worked under him. It was necessary to send a man down there.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Before the resolution carries it seems to me that we ought to have something definite from the ministerial benches as to the attitude they take. Does redistrubtion depend, in the opinion of the minister, upon the completion of that part of the work which has not yet been reported? Or does the minister agree with the leader of the Opposition when he says that there is already enough information available on which to base a redistribution bill? If we are to be told that because of a little trouble in this or that constituency there is to be no redistribution, we want to know it now. On the other hand, if the attitude of the Government is that the census enumeration has advanced to such a point that there is no reason why a redistribution bill should not now be brought down—very good; I have no objection to the item passing. But if that information is not forthcoming, then this item should be held up until we find out exactly what position the work is in; and this is the only opportunity of ascertaining that.

Mr. ROBB: May I remind my hon friend, in the first place, of the statement of the leader of the Opposition that it is very hard to determine exactly when this work will be completed? The leader of the Opposition has just told us that in the case of the last census he was disappointed on three different occasions and found its completion delayed. In 1911 we took a census in this country, and we did not have a redistribution bill until the session of 1914.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Did the hon. gentleman say 1914?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: 1913.

Mr. BELAND: No; I have a clear recollection that the redistribution bill was passed in June, 1914.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The act is chapter 51 of the statutes of 1914; it was assented to in June, 1914. I had the honour of being on that committee. The committee was appointed immediately after the House assembled in January, and its labours were not completed until June. To readjust the boundaries of constituencies all over the Dominion where county boundaries do not exist and where the population has increased in urban centres; to provide for the fair adjustment of boundaries in the cities, is no easy task. Hon. gentlemen who have had to do with work of this kind will realize that a redistribution, in order to be successful, would occupy the attention of Parliament for three or four months.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is all the more reason why we should not further delay this matter; we should get at it at the earliest possible moment. Now, there was this difference between the situation in 1911 and that in 1922. In 1911 the Conservative party had a large majority in the House; there was no chance in those days of anything giving way. But that is not the case with this Government; from what we have seen during this session there are all kinds of chances in the present circumstances. But the Minister of Trade and Commerce has made up his mind—I have no doubt that he has his leader's authority for it—that there will be no redistribution bill this session and that, therefore, there is no need for haste; he can jog along with these figures and bring them down at the end of the session or the beginning of next session. He can see, if he opens his eyes, that there is no very serious demand from the Progressive party for a redistribution bill this session—that is, if we may judge from their attitude in the House to-night.

10 p.m.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know what the figures are, and I am not saying they were not delayed in the past. But I do think the committee has a right to know now exactly how this matter stands; we should not be put off with vague statements as to troubles here or troubles there. We want to know whether there is enough information in the hands of the Government to enable the House to consider this question. It is an easy thing for the minister to get that information, and I am afraid he will have to get it.

Mr. ROBB: I will be prepared to give my hon. friend such information as I have, but I will not guarantee the figures are complete. As the leader of the Opposition said a few moments ago, this matter is entirely in the hands of the Chief Statistician. Surely my hon. friend does not ask me to hand out reports the correctness of which he himself cannot be assured.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not asking that at all. But the minister only a moment ago mentioned correspondence he had received from the census commissioner, indicating that the reports might be finished in a few days. All I ask is that we have the information down to date.

Mr. ROBB: As soon as it is finished, I will give it to my hon. friend.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No; I want the hon. gentleman to find out now how it stands and when the final report can be made.

Mr. COOTE: Before the resolution is declared carried I want to refer briefly to the remarks made by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). I think his remarks were entirely out of place. I am a new member in this House and know very little of the mode of procedure, but it seemed to me that the hon. member was a little out of order: I understood we were passing estimates and not discussing the matter of redistribution. For my part, I feel that we should have redistribution and that we should have it at this session. I understand that an opportunity will be afforded later to discuss that matter and if there is, I will place myself on record then. But I cannot allow the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for South Wellington to pass without letting him know where I stand.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): My hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Coote) says that he is a new member, and that explains why he would give any great attention to the remarks of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). Now if we are to take the opinion of the leader of the Opposition seriously we would not be losing all this time on the present item because he told the committee that we had enough information, or at any rate that the minister would have enough, to justify proceeding with the redistribution bill. As my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) said, we are discussing this estimate and not the subject of redistribution. Therefore I would say to you Mr. Chairman, that we had better deal with the present item and not venture upon a discussion of redistribution at the present time. When we come to the matter of redistribution the curiosity of my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), I am sure, will be set at rest, to our satisfaction at any rate. In connection with this matter I am sure the minister has every right to take the stand that he has taken. As has been pointed out my hon. friends to the right appointed these officials. The present minister did not have anything to do with the matter and had no chance to appoint competent officials; consequently he has had to put up with the work of men appointed by the late government. The work, in many districts, has been poorly done—that is evident—and we will have to wait until we get satisfactory information. This the minister has promised in good time.

Mr. MANION: When we listen so often to hon. members to our left calling us down for delaying the business of the House it makes us feel a little bit fatigued to say the least. To-night we had to sit here for one whole hour listening to the tiresome repetition of arguments intended to kill a certain bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): My hon. friend does not want to make a misstatement. The hon. member who occupies the floor in reference to the bill referred to is not connected with the Progressive party.

Mr. MANION: I am quite agreeable that my hon. friend should disown—

Mr. NEILL: And he was not out of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend from Comox-Alberni, (Mr. Neill) knows something about being out of order because he was out of order for a solid hour this evening. I was remarking for my hon. friend (Mr. Johnston) that although he might not claim the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, at the same time hon. members to my left voted solidly in favour of killing the bill in question. Therefore, when we are looking for a little information on a subject like this it is not open to my hon. friend from Last Mountain to address lectures to us in view of such actions on the part of hon. members sitting around him.

Mr. MEIGHEN: None of us who sat in the House with the hon. member for Last Mountain and witnessed his unfailing fidelity to the Liberal party, irrespective wholly of where he sits, are surprised now when, in any difficulty, we see him coming through the fog and the mist with the lifeboat to whatever minister may be in trouble. If the minister will say that the expression of belief that I gave is right—that in so far as the census returns are concerned there is no reason on that score for the delay of redistribution—then the subject of redistribution enters no further into the discussion on this item. This item bears on redistribution only to the extent that it involves the question as to whether we are far enough on now to go ahead or not. Now, I took the responsibility of expressing the opinion—from what I had read, from what I had seen issued from the census office—that we are. If the minister will say that is right then, so far as I am concerned, there is no objection at all to the item passing; but I would not like to have the item pass without any information as to the extent the census has advanced and then, when the resolution of the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Shaw) comes up, have it met by hon. gentlemen opposite with the assertion "Oh we are not far enough on with the census." Let us know before this item passes if we are far enough on so far as the census is concerned. Then, well and good—there ends the relationship of redistribution to this item.

Mr. ROBB: For the information of my hon. friend I repeat the statement I received from the Dominion Statistician on the 20th April. Indeed, I had better read the whole of the letter and then the leader of the Opposition will know as much about the subject as I do:

> As the data for any particular group of census districts, cities, towns, etc., became available they have been given to the press, during the past fall and winter, in the form of mimeographed sheets for simultaneous publication. In each case the figures were given as preliminary only. In this way, the results for the several provinces, by electoral districts, and for the leading cities and towns of Canada, were given out between September 1921 and March 1922. Altogether nineteen statements of this kind were issued.
> As the returns for each province become available in finally revised form they are being issued in printed leaflets. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have already appeared in this form, and similar bulletins for Manitoba, and British Columbia are in the press. Those for Saskatchewan and Ontario will follow next week—

That is the week following. I am not sure that I have received them yet or not.

> —whilst Quebec will appear last.
> In the case of Quebec more than the ordinary amount of revision has been found necessary, and unless there is urgent demand for the results we would like to spend a few days longer on the final totals.
>
> R. H. COATS,
> Dominion Statistician.

I think that is a reasonable request.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not dispute the accuracy of the statement but it does not say whether or not the census is far enough advanced. If that is all the information the minister has, and he does not know whether or not the census is far enough advanced, there is no reason why he should not know by Thursday—no reason at all. He can go to his chief statistician and come to this House and say "yes" or "no" in reply to the question. Now would it not be well to have that information definitely before we go further?

Mr. ROBB: The estimates of the Trade and Commerce Department will not all be passed to-night and when the estimates of the department are up again I may have that information for him. But my right hon. friend was Prime Minister. He himself thought at one time to have a revision. He was disappointed and he fixed another date. Again he was disappointed and another date was fixed on. For the third time he was disappointed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Just twice.

Mr. ROBB: I will give my hon. friend a promise to bring down the information when we go into committee again. In the meantime I suggest we make some progress.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Before leaving this subject I call attention to this one fact: Before the last census was undertaken the then Minister of Trade and Commerce through the chief statistician wrote to every member of the House to ascertain whether he had recommendations to make as to the manner in which the census should be taken in his constituency. I made certain recommendations for my constituency, and inquired whether I would have anything to say as to the appointment of the census officers and enumerators. I was told "No", and the result of it is that not being consulted I did not nominate anybody. To this day a number of these men remain unpaid, and the department has to send men down to the constituency in order to clear up the situation. Now I believe in the popular representatives having something to say with respect to these matters, particularly as regards their own constituencies. If I had been consulted as regards the county of Bonaventure, bearing in mind the experience that I have had on two other occasions, I certainly would have given advice that would have saved all this trouble, and the same remark applies to many other members. Unfortunately, the appointments were made on the basis of party patronage and to please friends of the Government. The result is that these appointments are unsatisfactory and the whole thing has been botched.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member reminds the committee of some trouble in the past in the county of Bonaventure. I was member for the constituency of Portage la Prairie when the census of 1911 was taken but I assure the hon. member that I was not consulted as to who was appointed to take the census, and the woes and troubles of my hon. friend are as nothing to those I enjoyed because of a much less efficient census, much less expedition, much less satisfaction, and far greater delay.

Item agreed to.

Gold and Silver Marking Act, Administration of, $6,000.

Mr. ROBB: That is to enable the inspector to do more travelling and look over the work more completely. It has been a bit neglected this year owing to war activities.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He is not going to Florida.

Mr. ROBB: Oh I do not think so.

Item agreed to.

Honorary Advisory Council of Industrial and Scientific Research (salaries and expenses including printing and stationery and the collection and distribution of information, and for studentships, fellowships, social problems and forestry study), $120,000.

Mr. STEVENS: This is a very important matter. In fact, I wish it were a great deal more extended than provided for in the resolution. Is there any intention of bringing in a bill similar to the one passed last session for the establishment of a standards bureau? I think this work carried on by the Advisory Council has proved beyond all question the desirability of the establishment of such a standards bureau in Ottawa. I have received personally—and I am sure the minister has received—many requests from industrial concerns asking for the extension of this splendid work. Has the minister that matter under contemplation, or is it simply intended to allow the work to go on as at present? I am not criticizing the work, but I do not think it is going far enough, or really accomplishing what it might, if the provision were made which was made in the bill passed last year by this House and thrown out by the Senate.

Mr. ROBB: For the present year it is the intention of the department and the Government to continue the work carried on last year and to give it all the encouragement possible along these lines, but it is not the intention of the Government to bring in any additional vote this session. Between now and next session a careful study will be made of the work, and I am not committing myself to what will be done, but we will be prepared to make a statement next session.

Mr. STEVENS: Has the minister received any important correspondence in regard to the matter, urging the establishment of the bureau?

Mr. ROBB: We have received requests from many boards of trade throughout Canada, from some of the colleges and from many organized bodies. It seems to be approved by the people of Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the Government not consider that the exhaustive study of this question by the parliamentary committee during the session of 1919 or 1920, and the decisions of that committee and of the House last session, would warrant them in introducing the bill without further investigation? Does the hon. minister not think that the House seems to have been fully advised of the need? The Upper House perhaps might be enlightened as well. As far as the ranks of the Government are concerned, there should be sufficient information on hand, without further study on the part of the minister or his colleagues.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. gentleman must not forget that there is a new House of Commons here, and that there is a financial side to this issue. We desire this year, as far as possible, to economize, and, for that reason, we are not going to bring in any further recommendation to the House.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. minister might give me the consolation of saying that he would see that the evidence taken before the committee is supplied to the new members of the House, because I am sure they will peruse it with interest and profit.

Mr. ROBB: If it is available it will be distributed.

Item agreed to.

International Customs Tariffs Bureau, $2,462.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will the minister explain what is involved in this?

Mr. ROBB: A number of nations are interested in this International Customs Tariff Bureau, and last year the Government of Belgium, through their Consul General at Ottawa, reported to the Government at Ottawa the marked increase in the expenses now connected with the bureau, and recommended that Canada, as well as the other countries, be requested to increase its quota three times.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What are the functions of this bureau?

Mr. ROBB: To compile international tariffs, gather information and distribute it to the nations.

Item agreed to.

Trade Commissioners and Commercial Agents—salaries and contingencies thereof and miscellaneous expenditures in the development and extension of Canadian trade, $280,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Really, I think this is perhaps the most important item, although not the largest, in the estimates of the hon. minister. The hour is so late that one hesitates to make any observation at all.

Mr. ROBB: Would the hon. member like it to stand?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not wish to delay the estimates, but, perhaps, if the minister would let it stand, we could go on with something less important.

Mr. ROBB: The item will stand.

Item stands.

Gas and electricity inspection, $176,330.

Mr. STEVENS: Perhaps the minister will explain this increase in view of decreasing costs.

Mr. ROBB: The increase is attributable to statutory salary increases to the staff.

Mr. STEVENS: Does civil government not take care of most of the salaries in the department?

Mr. ROBB: No, we have the men outside.

Mr. STEVENS: This is for the inspectors?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, inspectors throughout the country.

Mr. STEVENS: In other words, this item will cover the salaries of outside inspectors, their travelling expenses, and such like?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: And the increase is made up of increases in salaries to those inspectors?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Government imposes charges for this inspection, does it not?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: A considerable revenue is derived in that way?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, there is a surplus in regard to this work. It more than carries itself.

Item agreed to.

Printing of Parliamentary and departmental publications, including cost of translation, $200,000.

Mr. STEVENS: There is a large increase which I should like the minister to explain. Would he also state to whom this money is paid? That is, is it simply paid to the Printing Bureau; or how much of it, if any, is paid outside of the Printing Bureau? Does this include the publications of the statistical bureau; and if it does, is there a corresponding decrease in other departments owing to the consolidation of the statistical branches?

Mr. ROBB: As to the consolidation feature of the matter, I am not prepared to answer the question offhand, but this amount is all paid to our own Printing Bureau. As my hon. friend will remember, prior to last year this work was done by the different departments, and when it was transferred to this department of printing, a guess was made as to how much it was going to cost and we guessed wrong. Therefore, we have to put in a sufficient amount to cover the expenses this year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much was spent last year?

Mr. ROBB: I regret I have not that information with me.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): The minister has stated that formerly this printing was done in various departments. Will he tell us if he has effected economies by consolidating the printing under one department?

Mr. ROBB: That was the idea of the consolidation. We shall be able to measure that when the returns are all completed.

Mr. STEVENS: In the absence of a little defence for the previous government by the minister, I cannot allow my hon. friend (Mr. Johnson), with his usual subtlety, to get away with the suggestion carefully concealed or partially veiled in his question. This consolidation was commenced long ago by the late government, and it was fairly well accomplished, with the object of effecting these economies. I asked the minister if he could show us that other departments were not duplicating some of these charges which, apparently and undoubtedly, have been charged to this department. He said that he had not the information with him. I do not think it would be fair to leave the committee with the opinion that the late government did not effect this economy. I do not wish to harp on the matter, but my hon. friend was just a little too clever in the way he put his question.

Mr. JOHNSON (Moosejaw): I have another question to ask in connection with this item, and I should like to assure the hon. member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) that he gave me credit for something that was not in my mind. I had rather thought this estimate of more importance than the reputation of any party. The question I would like to ask is: To what extent is there a demand for these government publications? I speak from observation covering a number of years, and it seems to me that, in past years, no matter what party happened to be in power, some sections of the country were flooded at times with publications that were not needed. I believe they have a value; but they have a value only if they go into the hands of those who will read them. Are they asked for, or does the department distribute them more or less indiscriminately?

Mr. ROBB: They are asked for, and the mailing list is revised periodically. Post cards are sent out asking those who have received these reports if they desire them continued. If no reply comes, the names of those who do not reply are eventually taken off the list, and the list is revised from time to time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Johnson), has brought up a question of some importance. I suppose, as a member of Parliament, a man receives a fairly liberal supply of these publications. I think I can speak for the average member of this House when I say that fully one-half of the publications, which are issued by the government and sent to the individual member, are of no practical use at all. We do not look at them; we do not open them; we consign them to the waste-paper basket a minute or two after we receive them. I am sorry to say that my experience has been that many business houses which receive these reports do the same thing. The mailing list could be very greatly curtailed. Five or six years ago the quantity of unnecessary printing that was done in this country was a positive scandal, and we undertook to see what could be done to remedy that difficulty. Not only was the number of publications greatly reduced, but the mailing list was greatly reduced. I believe the minister would perform a very valuable service if he would look into the question of a further reduction of the mailing-list and also a further reduction in the number of publications. In my own case, and I think it is the case with every member of this House and every member of the local legislatures in this Dominion, more than half what is sent might well be dispensed with and that money saved. If the minister will give that matter his consideration I think he will do a valuable service.

Mr. ROBB: I will give my hon. friend that assurance so far as my own department is concerned. I cannot be responsible for other departments.

M. J. HANEY—CONTRACTS

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What contracts, if any, had M. J. Haney, of Toronto, or the Company of which he was President, with the Government of Canada, during the years 1898 and 1899, or about that time, for the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass?
2. Were tenders called for this work?
3. What was he paid for such contracts?
4. What amount, if any, was he paid on account of extras from these contracts?
5. What other contract work, if any, did he do for the Government of Canada during the years from 1896 to 1911, and what was the total sum received during these years by the said Haney?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. None.

2, 3 and 4. Answered by No. 1.

5. Railways and Canals Department—In 1900, Michael J. Haney had a contract for the construction of the Hillsborough bridge at Charlottetown, P.E.I., for which he was paid the sum of $1,231,125.29. A number of other contracts were undertaken during the period in question by the firm with which Mr. Haney was connected. It is, however, impossible to say what was received by Mr. Haney himself in connection with said contracts.

Public Works Department—Port Stanley, Ont., harbour, $207,650; Port Burwell, Ont., harbour, $8,880.55; Depot Harbour, Ont., wharf, $219,303.17.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has the Government received a copy of a resolution adopted by the Legislature of British Columbia on December 1, 1921, (which sets out that at a conference between the federal Government and the Government of British Columbia, the federal Government accepted responsibility for the initiation and administration of legislation relating to Mother's Pensions, Old age Pensions and other problems relating to the Improvement of Social Conditions?
2. If so, what were the terms of such agreement as aforesaid?
3. Will legislation be introduced this session to give effect to it and to establish Old Age Pensions in Canada?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. A copy of a resolution of the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia, passed on December 2 last, was received by the federal government on December 12. This resolution refers to a conference which was alleged to have been held between representatives of the Dominion government and provincial governments at Ottawa in 1919. It is stated that consideration was given on this occasion to the responsibilities of the Dominion and provincial administrations with regard to the initiation and administration of legislation relative to mothers' pensions, old age pensions, and other problems relating to the improvement of social conditions, and that it was the understanding of the representatives of British Columbia at this meeting that the Dominion government accepted full responsibility for the enactment of legislation dealing with old age pensions. The resolution of the Legislative Assembly endorsed the principle of old age pensions and directed the attention of the federal authorities to the desirabiltiy of legislation being enacted.

A resolution was adopted unanimously at the National Industrial Conference, which was held in 1919, of Dominion and provincial representatives with representative employers and labour men in favour of the appointment of a board or boards to inquire into the subjects of state insurance against unemployment, sickness, invalidity and old age. The text of this resolution appears in the published report of the National Industrial Conference. The published report, however, contains no reference to any separate conference between the Dominion and provincial ministers on the subjects referred to in the resolution of the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia, and there is nothing on record in the Privy Council office on the subject. Presumably, therefore, any discussions which may have occurred between the federal and provincial ministers on these matters were of an informal nature.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

ALUMINUM COMPANY OF AMERICA

Mr. DESLAURIERS:

1. Does the Aluminum Company of America, Massena Springs, New York, pay a licence for the electric power which it takes from Cedar Rapids, Quebec?
2. If so, what is the date and amount of said licence?
3. If not, why is said company exempted from Federal Law 6-7 Edward VII, Chapter 16?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Only companies exporting power from Canada come under the provisions of the act.

RATES ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. COOTE:

How much did railways, owned by the Government of Canada, pay in connection with the press advertising campaign on rates, conducted by the Canadian Railway Association, during the last two years?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: $31,328.92.

STENOGRAPHERS AND MESSENGERS

Hon. Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure):

1. Is it true that the stenographers and messengers of the House of Commons are receiving the same rate of pay?
2. Is it the intention of the Government to adjust salaries in proportion to the importance of the duties performed?
3. If so, when?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. Some newly appointed stenographers who are single receive the same salary as old messengers who are married and have long been in the service.
2. and 3. Under consideration.

FIRST CANADIAN CONTINGENT

Mr. CHURCH:

1. How many men composed the first Canadian Contingent that went overseas in the Great War?
2. Approximately, how many had previous training in the Militia of Canada, and how many had not?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. 30,808. (This does not include the Newfoundland regiment, the Lincoln regiment, nor the Royal Canadian regiment, which went to Bermuda.)
2. Approximately ninety-two per cent of the first contingent received previous military training. The exact number is not available until the Hollerith system is completed.

CANADIAN EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

Mr. RINFRET:

1. What was the total amount of Canadian trade for the fiscal year 1876-77, and the total amount of exports and imports during the same period?
2. What was the total amount of Canadian trade for the fiscal year 1921-22, and the total amount of exports and imports during the same year.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU:

1. Fiscal year 1876-77—

Total imports entered for consumption	$94,126,394
Total exports, Canadian produce	68,030,546
Total exports, foreign produce	7,111,108
Total Canadian Trade	$169,268,048

2. Fiscal year 1921-22—

Total imports entered for consumption	$ 747,762,984
Total exports, Canadian produce	740,240,680
Total exports, foreign produce	13,686,329
Total Canadian Trade	$1,501,689,993

[Mr. Graham.]

TRENT CANAL IMPROVEMENT

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

1. What sums of money were expended for the construction and improvement of the Trent canal, by the federal Government, since the beginning of its construction?
2. What sums of money were expended for the same purpose each year, from 1911 to 1922 respectively?

Hon. Mr. KENNEDY:

1. $20,702,514.80, of which $18,849,361.11 was on construction account and $1,853,153.69 for improvements.
2. Year ending March 31st—

1911	$ 1,744,942 25
1912	1,820,590 32
1913	1,204,105 73
1914	1,177,596 67
1915	1,058,566 35
1916	1,027,519 03
1917	624,441 78
1918	613,980 85
1919	412,507 25
1920	1,077,251 36
1921	690,197 13
1922	673,261 15
Total	$12,124,959 87

Of the total, $10,889,863.51 was on construction account and $1,235,096.36 for improvements.

WELLAND CANAL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

1. What has been the total sum expended by the federal Government for the construction and improvements of the Welland canal, since the beginning of said construction?
2. What sums of money were expended for the same purpose during the fiscal years ending March 31, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920 and 1921, respectively?

Hon. Mr. KENNEDY:

1.

Present Welland Canal	$29,399,405 93
Welland Ship Canal (under construction	30,787,977 90
Total	$60,187,383 83

2. Year ending March 31st—

1913	$ 305,571 34
1914	1,071,733 68
1915	4,147,533 84
1916	4,978,030 64
1917	3,532,546 21
1918	1,262,136 94
1919	1,868,239 01
1920	3,631,289 81
1921	5,192,629 41
1922	5,593,580 97
Total	$31,583,291 85

Of this sum $203,005.60 was on construction account present Welland canal, and $719,509.50 on improvement account. The balance, $30,660,776.75 was on construction of Welland ship canal.

POTLATCH INSTITUTION

Mr. LADNER:

1. Has the Indian Department asked for a report from the Anthropological Society on the Indian Institution, commonly known as the Potlatch?
2. Were certain Indians of British Columbia referred by the Indian Department to the Anthropological Society to present their case in favour of the said Potlatch Institution?
3. Has the report from the said society been made.
4. If so, is it favourable to the Potlatch Institution, and does it favour or recommend any amendment to the Indian Act whereby the Indians might still carry on certain of their Potlatch practices?
5. Have there been over fifty convictions of Indians during the past six months, in British Columbia, for taking part in potlatches? If not, how many were there?
6. Are there at the present time twenty-three Indians serving jail terms for having taken part in potlatches?
7. Is there in the Indian Department a petition presented by certain British Columbia Indians, asking for a commission to investigate the Potlatch Institution?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil):

1. The Indian Department asked the Anthropological Division of the Department of Mines for a report on the Potlatch.
2. No.
3. Yes, from the Anthropological Division.
4. The report makes no recommendation in the matter.
5. There have been fifty convictions.
6. No; four are serving sentence, the parole of three of whom is under consideration by the Department of Justice.
7. Yes

RAILWAY COMMISSION—CHIEF TRAFFIC OFFICER

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

1. Who is the Chief Traffic Officer of the Railway Commission at Ottawa?
2. When was he appointed.
3. What is his salary?

Hon. Mr. KENNEDY:

1. On account of the death of the board's chief traffic officer, Mr. James Hardwell, the position is at present vacant.

2 and 3. See answer to No. 1.

VICTORIA BRIDGE—TOLLS

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

What revenue has been derived from the collection of tolls on the Victoria bridge between Montreal and St. Lambert, during the year 1921, excepting the tolls paid by the Grand Trunk Railway?

Hon. Mr. KENNEDY: $117,446.65.

ISLE PERROT BRIDGE

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

1. Is the bridge over the canal at Isle Perrot an interprovincial bridge? If not, why is a vote of $50,000 included in the estimates of 1922-23 for such an enterprise?
2. Is the above amount of $50,000 the only disbursement that the Dominion Government has undertaken to pay for the said bridge construction?

Hon. Mr. KENNEDY:

1. The bridge in question is on the interprovincial highway in course of construction between Ontario and Quebec, and which crosses the canal lock at St. Ann's, which obliges the Department of Railways and Canals to bear a portion of the cost. The Quebec government has agreed to contribute $600,000, and the Department of Railways and Canals, $150,000; the latter on the following conditions:—

1. That the design and construction of the proposed bridge, and more particularly of the bascule span, be subject to the approval of the chief engineer.
2. That upon completion the operation and maintenance of the bascule span be assumed by the department.
3. That not less than one-quarter of the tolls collected shall be remitted to the department.

2. No; it is the first instalment towards the $150,000 agreed upon.

TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT moved:

For a copy of all papers, documents, correspondence and reports exchanged directly between the Health Department of Canada and J. A. Foisy, Dominion Drug and Chemical Company, and the North Eastern Drug Chemical, Limited, of Montreal, regarding narcotics reports in the years 1919-20-21, and principally reports made by the Mounted Police.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Health): I suggest that my hon. friend from Chambly and Vercheres (Mr. Archambault) drop this motion, because it is not considered advisable, in the public interest, that these reports by the mounted police, having reference to the traffic in narcotic drugs, should be made public. In the meantime, if the hon. gentleman wants any information in regard to this matter, he may come to the department and it will be available to him.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Dropped.

PROTECTION TO WORKMEN—OCCUPATIONAL DISEASES

Mr. HERMAS DESLAURIERS (St. Mary, Montreal) (Translation) moved the following proposed resolution:

That, in the opinion of this House, in view of the fact that an act already exists for the protection of workmen against accidents while engaged in their work, it is desirable that same protection be afforded to all workmen contracting sickness while performing, or due to performance of their work or trade, inasmuch as the federal Government is concerned.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there exists in Canada and in almost every civilized country laws which are so framed as to safeguard the workman against accidents resulting while fulfilling his duties in the various occupations, such as: in house building, mills, factories, ship-yards, ship-building, loading and unloading of vessels, public stores, mines, quarries and in all establishments where explosives are manufactured; in all places where machinery driven by any kind of motor is utilized; these laws entitle the victims or their representatives to an indemnity the nature and importance of which are determined, I believe that in the case of a person disabled or where death is caused by diseases said to be occupational, this person should derive some benefit if not from the Insurance Act against accidents at least from similar legislation. This legislation would apply not to all diseases in general, but to special diseases pertaining to certain industries which are responsible sometimes for the death of those who are so employed. They are also the cause of frequent unemployment the character of which is well known and are thus well termed occupational diseases. At the opening of the Congress for Labour legislation on accidents held at Berne, Switzerland, in 1891, Mr. Numa Droz thus expressed himself: "It is evident that the question of accidents is intimately interwoven with other labour questions. The one dealing with accidents to workmen, if we justly include, within its scope, occupational diseases forms as it were the centre and heart of labour legislation."

In the meantime, the views of Mr. Numa Droz have been embodied in the laws of Switzerland and occupational diseases are included in the liabilities to which industries are subject; this gives rise to claims whether mere unemployment or death be the outcome, and compensation is adequately determined in each case. The word accident is very broad in its acceptation; very much so, when it stands as an equivalent for disability; wounds resulting from or in connection with the work of the labourer. An accident may be defined: the act by which the human body or parts thereof are affected or destroyed under the influence of unforeseen events. The human body or any part of it, through the medium of some morbid agent may be the cause of disability or of death, whether instantaneous or otherwise.

However, in all cases the employer should be held responsible towards the victim of the accident. Any morbid cause, whatever may be the name given to this agent, let it be called belt, pulley, dynamo, elevator, phosphorous, copper, lead, quicksilver, etc., the name is nothing—any morbid cause which produces disability or death at any period, by impairing or destroying the human body, in my opinion, should give rise to damages whether it is followed by ordinary unemployment, or death be the consequence. Take for instance a labourer who receives a wound or fractures one of his limbs while working, if as a consequence tetanus or mortification sets in and causes death, certainly the employer is held responsible. Let the end come after five days or months, that does not prevent the claim to be well founded, because one part or a number of parts of the human body have been impaired and then destroyed, within a certain time, creating disability or death through a morbid process which is brought on by the wound at first, and then followed by complications throughout the whole system.

Let us now consider certain cases of occupational diseases, the existence of which is well known. Persons who are employed in the manufacture of chemical matches or in pyrotechnical works—and they are numerous—are subject, owing to the nature of the work, to different accidents. Sometimes the matter which enters into the preparation of matches ignites and explodes and is often the cause of burns; in such cases there can be no doubt that the manufacturer, as proprietor, is to be held responsible. Accompanying the dangers in the nature of accidents, which may result from certain manipulations, to workmen engaged in the manufacture of chemical matches, there exists another more serious danger. It is a disease which has been called by the workmen themselves phosphorous poisoning and which science designates as "necrosis." It consists in the mortification of the facial and jaw bones leading to disability and very often causing death. This disease is not general amongst the workmen; it affects but a few, and that is precisely why we may say that these persons have been victims of an accident which pertains to the special danger of the occupation followed, the work they are called upon to perform. This disease is the result of the phosphorous fumes which escape from ordinary phosphorous—the only one to which these accidents are attributed, as the case is not so with amorphous phosphorous or other substances. The use of the ordinary phosphorous in match factories was prohibited by the French government in 1889, thanks to the efforts of Dr. David and Mr. Truillot, because it was proved that the use of this process developed necrosis. Later, not having been able to enforce this decree, all possible precautions were taken to minimize this danger, the nature of the disease being well defined as occupational, owing to the substance that the workman is obliged to handle and the fumes which he inhales.

Upon the advice of Dr. Brouardel and the public health committee, the legislation had to be amended so as to oblige match manufacturers to have their employees examined every month instead of every six months. It is evident that this precaution of compelling the workmen to undergo a strict monthly inspection, in order to find out whether, during this short interval, they have not contracted a disease which is not generally contracted elsewhere, is proof that this disease is more especially an occupational one. Therefore, it would only be fair as well as necessary, to give the workman who is constantly exposed to this danger which he cannot escape, the benefit of the legislation which is his protection in case of an accident when he is at work. After having examined the workman, the medical attendant of the factory, according to his diagnosis of the case, either prescribes a rest, or giving up of the work, should he deem it necessary. The first prescription is usually the extraction of the teeth, a surgical operation required by the disease. But, that to which I shall particularly call your attention, and that which is of the greatest concern to me, is the fact that the workman is compelled to cease all work, and that this unemployment in which he, himself, has nothing to say, is enforced upon him by the medical attendant. This unemployment system had been in practice in France, until Mr. Fauré and several of his colleagues obtained that the workman who is thus condemned to inactivity should, during the time of unemployment, be treated as if he had been the victim of an accident, while at work, and draw full pay at the match factory.

In 1888, Mr. Felix Faure, admitted the necessity of protecting workmen from these so-called occupational diseases, in reply to Mr. Gabriel Raspail's proposal for such a measure. He told him that his request was quite fair, but that this legislation concerned the health department more than the labour department. Now that we have here, in Ottawa, a health department as well as a labour department, could they not emulate Switzerland and France in this matter of occupational diseases? Although these occupational diseases pertain to health, I think they should be dealt with by the Labour department. As in the case of accidents while on duty, it is a question of indemnifying the workman as much as possible for the injuries caused either by the machinery he uses, or by the material he handles.

The glass industry, where the workman exercises his trade at a temperature frequently of 400 degrees, which suggested the nick name of "fire food," unquestionably breeds an occupational disease. How many times is not the worker, under such an intense fire, overwhelmed by a cerebral congestion that brings on death or apoplexy, leaving paralysis in its wake? What a number of unfortunates come to our offices covered with cutaneous eruptions, as a result of alterations which take place in the blood through inhaling the fumes of illum inating gas which abounds in those work shops? How many of us have met such persons suffering from enormous distension of the cheeks, often more than an inch beyond the lower jaw-bone, caused by the continuous strain of glass-blowing which makes them say that they have "broken cheeks"—and the same may be said of their lungs. Since statistics show that 26 to 100 of such workmen suffer from cataracts, when forty years old, owing to the intense heat they constantly endure, and since it is known that in those industries, designedly to save coal, steam is forced over the fires, thus subjecting the workman to gaseous and sulphuric emanations that poison them; and that being so, is it possible to deny the occupational character of such diseases?

One of the most widely spread industries in all countries, and one which is the most disastrous because of the occupational disease it develops, is the textile industry. A staff of employees is imprisoned in buildings the ventilation of which is absolutely deficient; the atmosphere, in the carding and combing rooms, is filled with cotton or flax dust which the men and women breathe constantly, filling their lungs with this insalubrious dust. This industry requires a humid atmosphere frequently overheated to 35 degrees as in woollen factories. Workers of either sex labour the whole day in an atmosphere laden with steam; they wear damp clothing; their feet are constantly wet: they are obliged to leave the factory in all kinds of weather, be it autumn or winter, at meal time, and when the day's work is over, so that, in a country like ours they are exposed to the most dangerous chills. The class of people who work in these factories is very poor because they receive only famine wages which is not sufficient to provide them with proper shelter, clothing and food; and therefore, the inroads of tuberculosis are far-reaching amongst these people.

If we look into the statistical data concerning textile industries it will be seen that 25 per cent of the people working in those factories fall a prey to tuberculosis.

Among rubber workers, how many cases are there of individuals inhaling carbon sulphide the effects of which upon the brain are such that it may bring on temporary and sometimes permanent insanity, always causing a marked deterioration of the nervous system! In the process of vulcanization, chloride of sulphur injures the respiratory organs, sometimes causing asphyxiation, with the most serious after effects.

It will be sufficient to remember the pitiful experience of our soldiers, the victims of asphyxiating gases on the battlefields, to have a notion of its effects upon the body of a mechanic working in a shop where rubber is vulcanized.

Grinders, 'arm-tool or metal-polishers, using emery, grit or silicate grind-stones, glass-cutters, inhale copper dusts which, combining with the acids in the human body, generate copper sulphate, a very active poison. Emery or silicate dusts emitted by the wheels settle in the lungs of these workingmen and destroy the lung substance to such an extent that a member of the French Assembly, Dr. Armand Després once stated upon the floor of the House that a young man entering those workshops when fifteen years old was carried away by consumption at the age of thirty, and that statistical data revealed that eight out of ten were in that predicament.

I could cite many more instances which go to prove that there are occupational diseases which cause disability and even death; those I have already given are sufficient, I think, to support my contention. The law of nature is there to forbid any attempt against the lives of our fellow-men, be it for gain or other reasons, by imposing such conditions of existence or labour as I have mentioned. Money considerations do not entitle us to render a fellow-creature blind or to poison him, so as to accumulate wealth at the expense of his health.

Why should we not be as solicitous for an employee as the owner is for his horse which is hurt or falls sick while at work. Is it not true that in addition to his personal attendance, he gives his horse medicine and a more copious feeding and calls a veterinary surgeon? How different with man! When a working man who has but his day's wages for a living is a prey to sickness as a result of labour conditions, his employer deserts him; his salary is cut off; he gets neither a physician nor medicine and is very often driven to poverty, even if he does not lose his employment. And when sickness is due to the character of his work, should we not be at liberty to say that this man is entitled to some consideration for himself and his family? In my opinion this is an anomaly and it is the duty of every representative of an industrial constituency to try and suppress such an anomaly, lest later on his parliamentary record be invoked against him and he be charged with selfishness and indifference to the welfare of his constituents.

What a contrast, if we think it over, between this apparent indifference and those national outbursts of sentiment and philanthropy over infant mortality—which I deplore myself. Far-seeing citizens, including women, are sounding the alarm year in and year out; the subject is commented upon from the pulpit and this national calamity is deplored; the medical profession furnishes its quota of apostles; the dispensaries are increasing in number as are literary writings, associations and good advices from lecturers and sacrifices intended to check this scourge. All that, I admit, is worthy of such a cause; but after all, such admirable zeal is displayed only in order to face unfortunate consequences, it has to be acknowledged, arising from numerous causes the chief of which are atavism, heredity, want and poverty. Let us begin by safeguarding the maid who toils in our workshops and may be a mother tomorrow; let us protect the man while at his work, especially the father of a family to enable him to bring home regularly, comfort and the necessaries of life, instead of giving to the community young women who are a prey to anaemia, sickness and exhaustion through working in spinning mills, laundries and rubber factories, and instead of marrying them to men intoxicated, poisoned, who bring to their families insufficient wages on account of frequent unemployment. And then the problem of infant mortality will be solved.

What! the laws would not have a single enactment acknowledging the claims of a working man who would come to you and say: I entered the workshop in perfect health; I was not a prey to any ailment and I had not a trace of the disease which afflicts me to-day and which, out of fifty or sixty patients, according to the testimony of medical men, claims twenty and more victims. When a working man will come to you and say: I entered this factory and after four or five years, I began to feel the effects of the disease which has reduced me to unemployment," or when the children in turn will reproach you: "You are responsible for our father's premature death; medical science recognizes and statistics testify that the nature of his work was the cause of his death"; when they will claim damages, will it not be difficult to ignore that this workman was the victim of a truly occupational disease?

I do not quite see the difference between the risks that a workman may incur in a factory, owing to the material he handles exploding or otherwise by poisoning resulting from the same material either by the fumes emitted and inhaled or through any other process of absorption which in a short while may cause disability or death.

What was the object of bringing down a Compensation Act on accidents? The legislator desired to come to the rescue of the workman, he wished to protect him against his own negligence, and carelessness. He did not take into account if the employer had used poor judgment or was guilty of negligence; he required but one condition for the enforcing of the law. He established the principle, and I think no exception should be made, that where there existed a danger pertaining to the nature of the work itself, thereby occasioning such conditions where accidents take place and which generally are followed by disability to carry on the work, it was the owner of this industry who should compensate him for the damage caused.

Starting from that established principle which is well recognized in Canada, we must consequently place occupational diseases on the same footing as accidents. We are indebted to the workingmen who fall victims of an explosion either in a mine or a factory. The same indebtedness is due, based on the same principle, to the workingmen who have been victims, in a chemical factory or other, of an occupational disease which has rendered them unfit to work and which sometimes may cause death.

I believe that the two casse are absolutely identical and that it is time to cry out with Waldeck Rosseau, the father of labour syndicates in France: "Forward, let us advance, run if necessary, but at least let us make some headway."

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I confess that I have not been able to follow all that my hon. friend has said in support of his motion; but in so far as it is his desire to have the federal government consider the welfare of its employees in matters both of sickness and of accident, I am in entire sympathy with the purpose that he has in view. I think, however, the motion, as it is worded, goes, beyond this, in that it refers to existing legislation, which is provincial, not federal legislation; and while I should not like to raise the question of the propriety of this House discussing provincial legislation, it is well, I think, to point out the possible bearing of this circumstance before my hon. friend presses his motion to a division. The resolution reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, in view of the fact that a law already exists for the protection of workmen against accidents while engaged in their work, it is desirable that same protection be afforded to all workmen contracting sickness.

Workmen's Compensation Acts, as the House well knows, are acts enacted by provincial legislatures, and no doubt provincial legislatures will also consider the question of extending social insurance to include insurance against sickness as well as compensation for accident. But I do not think this House could properly pass upon what the provinces should do in this matter. The resolution, however, is clearly ambiguous. The last clause of all—"inasmuch as the federal government is concerned"— would seem to indicate that what my hon. friend has in mind is solely the employees of the federal government. As I have already said, as regards the employees of the Government, we may very properly consider whether they should not be protected in the performance of their duties against sickness just as well as against accident, and to that extent, I am wholly in sympathy with my hon. friend's motion. But so far as it involves any expression of opinion as to what should be done by provincial legislatures, I do not think this House should consider the question further. I think my hon. friend's purpose has been well served by the able speech he has made upon the resolution, and by having presented arguments which we can all read when we have an opportunity of perusing the report of the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: Do I understand that the hon. member (Mr. Deslauriers) wishes to withdraw his motion?

Mr. DESLAURIERS: Yes.

Motion withdrawn.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—PENSION RIGHTS AND STATUS

Mr. W. A. BOYS (South Simcoe) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, immediate steps should be taken by the Government to restore the pension rights and status of all employees and ex-employees of the Grand Trunk railway who were deprived thereof owing to participation in a strike on the system in the year 1910, to the end that all such may secure their just rights pursuant to the terms and true intent of the settlement made between the parties.

He said: In my absence on April 10, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), referring to this resolution, said:

There is no need for this resolution inasmuch as the Government has already taken steps in the direction proposed. The Government has been negotiating with a view of seeing that a long standing injustice should be remedied without further delay: If it is not possible to effect by negotiation what we hope and believe will be attained by negotiation, then the Government will bring in the necessary legislation to see that the injustice that was done to employees of the Grand Trunk railway involved in the strike of 1910, in virtue of the terms and conditions of its settlement not having been complied with, is duly remedied.

I read with great interest and satisfaction the remarks of the Prime Minister, and in view of what he said on that occasion I certainly have no desire at the present time to press this motion. I should be glad, however, if my hon. friend could see his way clear to give me an opportunity later on in the session, if perchance negotiations fail, or if no legislation is brought forward, to deal with the subject matter of this motion. I am very much in earnest about it, and I realize that the Government are as well. Apparently we are in accord in our views, and if the Prime Minister would be kind enough to promise me this consideration I should appreciate it very much and, on the strength of such an assurance, I would move the adjournment of the debate on the motion.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Not only am I very much pleased to meet my hon friend's wishes, but should negotiations fail and should it be necessary for the Government to consider introducing legislation, I will assist the hon. member in carrying his resolution.

Mr. BOYS: I am entirely satisfied with the Prime Minister's statement and I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

SINKING OF THE CON REIN

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou) moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents relative to the Petition of the Eastern LaHave Transportation Company, Limited, and others, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and of all communications and replies from the United States Government relative to the said petition and to the facts disclosed therein.

He said: The purpose of this motion is to call the attention of the House to a matter which, although primarily of local importance, is nevertheless of national interest as illustrating an anomalous situation that prevails in this country to-day. Last year, on the 29th of August, a vessel belonging to the Port of LaHave, in the province of Nova Scotia, was sunk near Block island in the state of Rhode Island, by an American submarine. The circumstances surrounding the collision were investigated by the United States marine authorities, and in a report which was submitted by that body it was found that Lieutenant John H. Hames, of the United States navy, commanding officer of the United States submarine K-4, was responsible for the collision between that submarine and the three-masted schooner Con Rein. I am instructed that under the conditions that exist in the United States it was not and is not possible for the owners of the vessel to assert in the law courts, directly as against the United States government, a claim for damages which accrued to them as a result of the sinking of the vessel. Consequently they have petitioned the hon. the Prime Minister as Secretary of State for External Affairs to request the United States government to provide compensation for the loss which they sustained. That petition has come in the ordinary course and, I have no doubt, has been presented to the United States government. I am not aware of the result.

Now, the facts of this matter are so clear that there does not seem to be any doubt about the liability for the collision, and I would ask the Government to use every effort to urge upon the United States government the immediate settlement of the claim. But this affair illustrates the anomalous position of Canada with reference to matters in which Canadian citizens in the United States are interested. In order that any action might be taken in this matter, it is the duty of the Government of Canada to approach the United States government through the British Ambassador at Washington. It does seem to me that there ought to be a more direct method by which the Canadian people could have their interests protected in the American republic than through the diplomatic means now at our disposal through the British Embassy. I am aware that in previous sessions of this Parliament, when I had not the honour to be present, the question of representation at Washington was discussed, and I understand that it was announced as the policy of the late government to appoint a representative at Washington. So far no one has been appointed to such a position. I would submit to this House that many important matters that are continually arising as between the United States and Canada, adjacent as they are to one another, in which the interests of Canadian citizens are involved, require special care and attention; and it is in the interests of this country that a Canadian representative should be appointed to be resident at Washington. Looking over the proceedings of the last Imperial Conference, I gathered that the position of the British government in regard to the matter was that they had no objection to the appointment of such an official, working, of course, in conjunction with and under the British Ambassador. When one comes to think of the tremendous effect on this country of the numerous tariff changes which are made from time to time, and the legislation of every character passed by the United States Congress, and of the thousand and one other ways which one on a few moments' reflection can call to mind, in which action on the part of the United States government is of considerable interest to the people of Canada, one is forced to the conclusion that we should have a Canadian representative at Washington.

This case illustrates the peculiarly anomalous position in which a Canadian citizen is placed. A vessel has been sunk through the negligence of a United States naval officer, but the owners cannot proceed directly against the government of the United States in the courts of that country, and when they seek the services of our Secretary of State for External Affairs they find that instead of dealing directly with the United States Government, our Secretary of State must approach that government through the British Embassy. Naturally the British Embassy is occupied with very many problems affecting the two countries, and with the delay which is always characteristic of the interchange of communications between governments, a matter such as this is very likely to be pigeon-holed; whereas if we had a Canadian representative in Washington he could take it up immediately with the appropriate department of State there and secure a speedy settlement. All over Canada there must be cases arising in which our citizens are likely to be injuriously affected in the United States, and I submit—although I have not included this proposal in my resolution—that the House might well consider whether we should not hasten the appointment of a Canadian representative at Washington. The injustice which the owners of this vessel have suffered through the inevitable delay in securing a settlement of their claims, and the peculiar position of the whole matter. illustrate to my mind very clearly the necessity of the appointment which I have indicated.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, some fifteen years ago I had the honour of accompanying a deputation from Ottawa to attend a gathering at Washington of the North American Lumbermans' Association. We had the honour of being received by the then President of the United States, the late Theodore Roosevelt, and I remember he told us that the intercourse between Canada and the United States was becoming so important that the old roundabout system of dealing between the two countries through the Colonial Office was entirely inadequate, and that it demanded that Canada should have nothing less than a representative resident at Washington. The president repeated that statement to several persons in our deputation, and we thanked him for the compliment he was paying to Canada's growing importance. I was of his opinion at that time and I still entertain it. I have had the advantage of hearing the question discussed in this House on many occasions, and it is a wonder to me and to all others who have given it any attention to see, when we go to Washington, insignificant little republics represented there by resident ministers or consul-generals, while this important country, with its many dealings with the United States, is without direct representation. I heartily concur in the view expressed by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), and I hope one of the achievements of the government will be to have a permanent representative appointed to Washington so that our relations with our great neighbours will be further advanced as rapidly as possible.

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to endorse the request of the hon. member for Pictou that action be taken by the Canadian Government in order to get a settlement of the case to which he refers. Although the amount involved is not very large as amounts go to-day, when we are thinking and spending in millions, perhaps the officials of the Government do not realize what the loss means to the people who are directly interested. The company spoken of is doing business in my own county, and is known as the East La Have Transportation Company, Limited. This company owned a vessel named the Con Rein, engaged in the coasting trade between ports in Nova Scotia and New York and other United States ports. At the time the accident happened, last August, the vessel delivered in the port of New York a cargo of lumber and took on board a return cargo of anthracite coal for Charlottetown, P.E.I. On the way down the sound she was rammed by a United States submarine. At the investigation, in which three qualified United States naval officers took part and held court it was conclusively proved that the officers of the submarine were at fault. Not only did the owners lose their ship, which was worth $70,000, but the owner of the cargo was also a loser, and the crew lost all their personal effects.

[Mr. Marcil.]

The owners of the vessel brought the case to the attention of the Canadian Government through their solicitors, and I understand the Department of External Affairs has taken action. But, as large bodies move slowly, not only in Canada but in the United States, I would impress upon the Government the necessity of endeavouring as early as possible to get the United States government to take early action towards a settlement of the owners' claims, and I am sure that after hearing the remarks of the hon. member for Pictou the Government will do their utmost to this end.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The Government will be only too pleased to follow up this matter immediately along the lines suggested by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). There is no reason why the motion should not carry.

With regard to the larger question of the direct representation of Canada at Washington, this is receiving the consideration of the Government at the present time.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL DEEP SEA RACING

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Lunenburg) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, in order to encourage the shipbuilding and fishing industry, it is advisable that every possible assistance be given to the promotion and maintenance of international deep sea racing between Canadian deep sea fishing vessels and deep sea fishing vessels of other nations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are two questions which I wish to discuss on this resolution—the encouragement that should be given to our shipbuilding industry; and the encouragement that should be given to our fishing industry.

It is a well-known fact, Sir, that shipbuilding has been engaged in since the earliest times of which we have any records. The first vessel that sailed the stormy sea was Noah's ark—and that was a great many years ago. But as you know, Sir, Noah was given inside information of a great flood that was to come, and he was told also to prepare for it and be ready, with his wife and his family, to go into the ark for shelter. That boat, though not, perhaps, as modern a vessel as those we have at the present day, fulfilled the purpose for which it was intended, and, after a number of days passed on the stormy sea, came to rest on mount Ararat.

Mr. McMASTER: Were they fishing?

Mr. DUFF: No, they were not fishing. You will also remember, Sir, from a reading of the history of Greece and Carthagena, that vessels were built in those days not only to sail the seas and carry the products of one nation to the other, but to engage in the fishing industry. Coming down to more modern times, in the sea yarns written by Kingsley, Stevenson and others, we read of the events which took place, especially in the Old Country and the United States, in connection with the building of ships in those days. Before steam came into use, when vessels were entirely propelled by sails, each country vied with the other in an effort to produce ships which would make voyages in the least possible time. We remember that ships sailed from England, went around Cape Horn and the Cape of Good Hope ,and proceeded to India, Australia and New Zealand, or ports on the Pacific coast. They carried goods manufactured in Great Britain, and brought back from India the spices of that land; from China, the teas which were raised there, and from Australia, wool and other products. These stories are very interesting, especially to those who take an interest in the sea. Not only did these ships carry valuable cargoes, but there was vigorous competition between them, prizes being sometimes offered by the owners of vessels to the captains as an inducement to make the shortest possible voyage. There was competition between ships owned by English merchants, and ships owned by Americans. I could go on for a long time, but I do not wish to occupy the attention of the House at too great length in emphasizing the interest taken in the ship-building business in those days, in order that the products of the land might be carried on the different oceans to far-away countries.

My object this afternoon is to endeavour to show the connection between the building of ships to carry the products of land and sea to foreign countries and a matter of international interest which I think the House should consider. In 1854 a New York pilot boat known as the America was taken across to England to participate in a race in which everybody in the Old Country was interested. In a contest off the Isle of Wight, at which Queen Victoria was present, the America defeated the English clipper which sailed against her, and what was known as the International Cup was brought from the Old Country to America. Since that time several attempts have been made to wrest that cup from the American people and take it back to the British Isles. A number of ships were built for that purpose; Lord Dunraven, who was a great yachtsman in the Old Country, for several years competed in this race off New York Harbour, but in all cases the American boat was the better or the faster one, and the cup has ever since remained in the possession of the New York Yacht Club. Sir Thomas Lipton also came across, first with his Shamrock I., and competed against the Vigilant, I think it was. In subsequent years, with the Shamrock II. and Shamrock III., he endeavoured without success to wrest that cup from the American yacht club. In my opinion, this competition of sailing vessels is something which should be encouraged by the people of Canada.

Some four years ago, as the result of a suggestion which I made in a speech at the annual gathering of the Nova Scotia fishermen that a fishing race should be held, some gentlemen in the city of Halifax and others who became interested decided to hold what is known as the fishermen's races. Accordingly, in 1920, off the harbour of Halifax, seven or eight fishing schooners, vessels of 100 tons which had been built for fishing purposes and had actually been engaged in that great industry, took part in a race which was the delight of those who witnessed it. The winner was the Delawana, and some Americans who were present from Gloucester and Boston, and who were interested in the fishing industry and in racing, suggested that there be a contest between the Delawana and a fishing schooner named the Esperanto. I do not need to go into the details of this contest; every man and woman in Canada read of the race which took place off Halifax harbour. One of the Halifax papers donated a challenge cup, known as the International cup, to the winner of this race. The American schooner proved the faster of the two, and she took the cup to the city of Gloucester. Last year the fishing captains and business men of Nova Scotia, with the view of getting the cup back, built several vessels to compete in the race which took place last fall. Several new fishing schooners were built—and I may say that one of the conditions of the race is that vessels taking part in it must have been engaged in fishing during the summer preceding the race. An impetus was thus given to shipbuilding in Nova Scotia as a result of the race in 1920. It will be remembered also that last fall the American fishing schooner Elsie competed with the schooner Bluenose, built in my own town, for this international cup; and I am pleased to be able to say that the Bluenose, built by one of our enterprising shipbuilding firms, Messrs. Smith and Ruland, won the race on both days, with the result that the cup came back to Nova Scotia. According to an arrangement arrived at by an international committee composed of men from Nova Scotia, Boston and Gloucester, this year the cup must be defended by a Nova Scotia fishing vessel in Massachusetts Bay. In other words, we have to take our ship over to Massachusetts Bay rather than compete for the cup in home waters. You will have noticed that we have built in Nova Scotia two new schooners to enter the elimination races, with the view of seeing whether they are better than the Bluenose, and that American business men and fishing captains have during the last several months built two vessels to compete in this race. We feel that this is not a local matter; we feel that it is not even a provincial matter, but that it is of interest to the whole people of Canada, because the men who go over to Gloucester will go there as Canadians. Last year when the ship Elsie came down from Gloucester, she did not come alone, but was accompanied by an American naval vessel bringing representatives from many parts of the United States. The President, for instance, sent his own representative; the state of Massachusetts also sent a representative, as did also the city of Boston; the city of Gloucester sent their mayor. When we go this year, I ask the federal government to send their representative, I will also ask the Nova Scotia government to send their representative. So this is not a matter of purely local interest, but one of international interest. It is of interest not only to the province, not only to the whole of this country, but also to the people of the United States as well.

My object in bringing this matter to the attention of the House is this. In view of the fact that this is an international matter, a few people in the province of Nova Scotia, looking at it entirely from a racing and business standpoint, should not be expected to bear the whole cost of this venture. When the race was held in home waters, the cost was not so great and a few gentlemen in Nova Scotia, as I have said, were willing to put up the expenses, but taking part in this race in Massachusetts Bay will mean an extra expense, and while the owners of the Canadian ship are willing to risk losing their vessel in the race or en route, and also incur the depreciation that is bound to take place in the vessel, whilst she is in the race, they feel that as the country as a whole is interested in this matter, it should contribute something towards the cost. With this race being held year after year, more vessels will be built in the province of Nova Scotia, and more ships will sail on the seas carrying the products of Nova Scotia and of Canada to all parts of the world. It will also be of benefit to the fishing industry, which, in my humble opinion, has not had the encouragement in the past which it should have received. If the Government takes an interest in this matter and grants a small sum of money, I believe that not only will the shipbuilding industry be encouraged and more vessels be built to go on the high seas and the Grand Banks of Newfoundland to bring into the ports of Nova Scotia the products of the sea, but that the fishing industry also will be materially improved. I need not tell you, Mr. Speaker, why this encouragement should be given. The deep sea fishing fleet of Nova Scotia, and after all, that really means the deep sea fishing fleet of Canada, is a great asset to this country, and the Government would make no mistake in encouraging these hardy toilers of the sea, who go down to the sea in ships and risk their lives day after day on the ocean. It is a beautiful sight,—and if you saw it, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would agree with me—to see about one hundred and twenty-five schooners, of about one hundred tons, hoisting their flags and making ready for the fishing grounds. They do not hoist the flag every day for the wind to blow it to tatters. The flag to the fishermen of Nova Scotia and their wives and sweethearts is an emblem and a symbol. It is a sacred matter. The fishermen of Nova Scotia do not believe in flapping the flag, they only fly the flag on special occasions. When these vessels are ready for sea their captains go to the custom house and clear for the deep, and the flag is hoisted to the masthead. It is a symbol that the vessel is ready to sail on an adventurous voyage, and that the crew are about to take risks that perhaps no other men in the world have to take in their daily occupation. The men down there do not cheapen the flag by raising it every day. They reserve it for this one special occasion when they clear for the Banks, when it is used as a symbol and an emblem that they are sailing out on the deep waters, to be away perhaps for two or three months. Again, when the vessels return and are seen in the offing, perhaps three or four miles away, we go on the hill-tops with our binoculars and see the flag flying at the masthead, and we go down and raise our own flag to show, first that the men on board have safely returned, and secondly to signal that their families have been well while they were away. That is what we fly the flag for. It is a beautiful sight, I say, to see these ships with their flags flying, going out to sea and returning to port.

These men deserve some consideration from this Government. If we can vote $1,000 for Alpine climbers, as we are doing, and for other services not so deserving, I think this Government, in order to encourage the building of ships and the development of the fishing industry in this country might very well make a small grant for this purpose. It is a matter that is of interest to the whole people of Canada. I remember last year when the race was on, we were having inquiries from all over the country as to how it was going, and the telegraph offices kept open all night so that news of the race could be flashed every three minutes. I therefore think that Parliament should have no hesitation in voting the small sum of $5,000 for this very worthy object.

Shipbuilding and the fishing industry is no new thing in Nova Scotia. In Nova Scotia all revere the memory of Hon. Joseph Howe, one of the greatest statesmen Canada has ever produced. We remember that when he was in this Parliament he gave expression to the opinion that in forty years from that date we would have at least 500,000 men engaged in the fishing industry in Nova Scotia. These hopes, however, have not been realized, and it seems to me this Liberal Government should endeavour as far as possible to realize the hopes of the great people of Nova Scotia. What did Joseph Howe say about these men? I think perhaps it is worthy of being put on the pages of Hansard:

Though my craft may be small, she is snug and she's trim,
And her crew are accustomed to battle the wave,
They are cheerful of heart, and athletic of limb,
And follow the business their bold fathers gave.
Through the storm and the sleet of the winter we sail,
While the rich and the feeble on couches repose;
There is health in our toil, and a charm in the gale,
And our courage still rises the harder it blows.
Every harbor from Sable to Canso's a home,
Every depth from the Banks to St. Lawrence we've tried,
And we care not though round Labrador we may roam,
Or sweep on the strength of old Fundy's fierce tide.
Now wealth from the waves we draw forth with our lines.
And now with a cargo of produce we're stow'd,
Or having a full freight of coal from the mines,
We slowly sail on with our cumbersome load.
Then who would exchange the rough life that we lead,
Joint owners at sea, and free sons of the soil,
At the bidding of others to labour and bleed
With but little of pleasure to sweeten our toil.
We build our own shallops—

That is what we do in Nova Scotia. It is a joint venture. Nearly every fisherman on board one of these fishing vessels, which cost perhaps $35,000, is an owner in the venture.

We build our own shallops, we rear our own crew,
And life has for us sweet endearment in store,
For though luxury's fetters our souls never knew,
Bright eyes bid us welcome when peril is o'er.

I think that is a most beautiful sentiment. I think it covers the whole ground, and that there is no necessity for me to argue further. I might, however, say that the shipbuilding industry in Nova Scotia needs some encouragement. All during the war we built every vessel it was possible for us to build, at the call of our country, but conditions have changed. Freights are now low, and if some encouragement is not given the shipbuilding industry in Nova Scotia, I am afraid there will not be many vessels built in the next few years. Therefore, not only to encourage the shipbuilding industry, but the fishing industry as well, so that we shall have more fishing vessels going down to the sea and bringing back its products for the whole people of this country, I think this Government would be very well advised to accept my motion and include in the supplementary estimates a small grant of $5,000 for this purpose.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I am sure every member of this House feels grateful to my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) for the information he has given us. His remarks certainly appealed to my sporting and national spirit, when I realized that the Nova Scotia fishermen were holding their own against the Americans and other foreign competitors in the race. I must admit his eloquent words appealed to my poetic feeling. If, as my hon. friend says, the encouragement of the Government would help the fishing and shipbuilding industry in that province, certainly some assistance should be given. I do not know whether the enthusiastic expression of my hon. friend "every possible assistance" can be accepted. It is rather wide. I have not given the matter sufficient consideration to commit the Government to any expenditure at the present time, but I promise my hon. friend that I shall give this matter full consideration, and I ask the House to allow me to move the adjournment of the debate so that I may later on convey to my hon. friend the decision of the Government on the question.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

House again in Committee on Bill No. 16—Mr. Woodsworth— to amend the Immigration Act, Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): At the time of the second reading of this bill, the Government expressed the view that, perhaps, it had better be considered by a special committee. I understand, having made inquiries from different groups in the House, that some exception has been taken by one of the groups to having the bill go to a special committee, and it was thought more desirable to have it discussed in Committee of the Whole. The Government has no objection to proceeding with the bill in Committee of the Whole, in order to see what progress we will make, and I am inclined to think, from the intricate nature of the bill, that it would be an advantage all round to carry out the original suggestion and send it to a special committee.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The suggestion of the Prime Minister that the bill should be considered by a smaller committee is quite satisfactory to me, if it meets with the approval of the House. I recognize the difficulty of dealing in a general committee with the complicated question involved. I do not know just what the order of procedure is at this point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The order is to proceed in Committee of the Whole and see how we get along.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In order that we may intelligently discuss the first subsection, it will be necessary to give very briefly an outline as to what is proposed by this bill. The matter was not discussed on the second reading because it was thought that the bill would go to a smaller committee. The effect of the existing amendment to the Immigration Act is really to deprive a very large section of our people of the right to trial by jury—a very serious consideration. It is unnecessary for me to review the history of the claims put forth by the British people, from the time of the Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights, to the right of trial by jury. That great document—the Magna Charta—was effective in restricting the arbitrary power of kings and ministers, but we have to-day, in this legislation which has been placed on the statute book, a reversion, if I may call it so, to the condition of affairs which prevailed before the time of the Magna Charta. There are three acts which are very intimately connected. The first, is the amendment to the Immigration Act, with an amendment to the amendment, the second is the Naturalization Act, and the third is the amendment to the Criminal Code which was introduced at the same time. Those three acts dovetail into one another and have the effect of taking away the right of trial by jury from a very considerable section of the people of Canada. This act is designed primarily, not, as one might imagine from its being an Immigration Act, to keep out undesirable immigrants, but rather to deal with people who are already in Canada. I submit that, if we are going to deal with undesirable people in Canada, or people who have committed crimes in Canada, the provision with regard to that ought not to be brought in, in connection with an immigration law. Let me repeat. This act is not designed to keep people out of this country, but rather to deal with people who are already here. It may be said; roughly, that there are four classes of people in Canada: First, the native-born, either of English or French or other origin; second, immigrants from the United States, who are technically foreigners, but whom we very largely regard as belonging to the same class of people as we are; third, those whom we commonly class as foreigners, who speak some other language than English as their mother tongue, people who come, very largely, from various countries of Europe; and fourth, British-born people, people who belong to the same stock as we do, but who have been born in England, Scotland, Ireland or other British countries. To-day, as a Canadian-born Britisher, I should like to appeal to my fellow Canadian-born Britishers, whether English or French, to relieve the British-born of the disabilities under which they are placed in Canada because of their birth in Great Britain. That is the situation as it exists to-day.

Let me deal now with the various sections of the bill. The first one has to do with domicile, and this can be understood only as we remember that the idea is to get rid of certain undesirable classes. These classes are enumerated in later sections of the act; the first provision makes it impossible for anyone, later classed as an undesirable, to obtain domicile in Canada. These people can come into this country and they may live here for a certain period of time; but if they are declared to be undesirable, it is as if they were not living here; their residence here gives them no claim whatever, no right to trial in the courts of this country. They may have been living quite a harmless life; they may have no criminal record against them, either in the Old Country or in this country; but if they are declared to be undesirable, the fact that they have been living here actually ceases to have any value.

Mr. JACOBS: They are declared to be undesirable by the immigration authorities, I understand, not by a court of justice.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so. That is the point. This is entirely under the Immigration Act, and my plea is that, before anybody, who has been living in this country for any length of time, is declared undesirable, his case should be presented to a regular court and decided by that court, and not by the Immigration Department or any other department. That is why I seek to have this particular section altered. Section 2 of the act provides:

> Provided further that no person who belongs to the prohibited or undesirable classes within the meaning of section 41 of this act shall be capable of acquiring Canadian domicile.

Then again, subsection (ii) in part reads:

> Canadian domicile is lost, for the purposes of this act,. . . . by any person belonging to the prohibited or undesirable classes within the meaning of section 41 of this act.

Then again subsection (iii) in part reads:

> When any citizen of Canada who is a British subject by naturalisation, or any British subject not born in Canada having Canadian domicile, shall have resided for one year outside of Canada, he shall be presumed to have lost Canadian domicile.

That is, if a man, who has been living in this country for a considerable number of years, should, for instance, return to Great Britain for a year to visit his people and then come back to Canada, he would cease to have Canadian domicile and cease to have any right to trial in this country.

Mr. JACOBS: Although a British subject?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Let us be clear on that point. Although a British subject, he would cease to have any rights whatever before the courts of this country. That is the point with regard to the first clause of the Bill. If I may, I would like to run briefly over the other clauses, as they are closely inter-related. I pass on to the second clause repealing paragraphs (n), (o) and (p) of subsection 6 of section—there is a typographical error there; that should be section 3 instead of section 2. The amendment to the act adds a number of classes to those who had previously been regarded as undesirable. The objectionable feature is contained in these words:

> Persons . . . . (n) who disbelieve in or are opposed to organised Government. . . . (o) persons who are members of or affiliated with any organisation entertaining or teaching disbelief in or opposition to organised Government.

And:

> (p) Enemy aliens or persons who have been alien enemies and who were or may be interned on or after the eleventh day of November, one thousand nine hundred and eighteen, in any part of His Majesty's Dominions or by any of His Majesty's allies.

I think it is quite obvious to any one that I am not here to advocate, in any way whatever, disbelief in organized government. But I do say that this question of belief or disbelief in organized government and the decision whether people do or do not believe in this, should not be left to an Immigration Department. That is the point. The question should be left to the courts. This matter ought to be kept very clearly before us as we proceed. I can quite understand how many people may misunderstand the position which I am trying to put forward, because, on the face of the matter, one would say: "Is that not reasonable? Should we not try to exclude people who disbelieve in organized government?" I would be quite willing to say: "Yes." But if people come into this country and are resident in this country, it ought not to be within the power of any individual in the Immigration Department or any other department to say: "You are here and since you disbelieve in organized government, you must be sent out of the country without any trial on the matter whatever." Worse than that, this paragraph (p) works a gross injustice to a large number of our fellow citizens who are technically classed as alien enemies. A good many people whom I know in the West, who came from those provinces in Austria, which lie along the border line between Austria and Russia and which were overridden first by one army and then by the other, when the war broke out, were within the bounds of Austria, and hence came to be classed as alien enemies. I protest, incidentally, this was a great injustice to them. As one of those men said to me one day: "We were enemies of Austria long before Great Britain was an enemy of Austria; we came out to this country to get away from Austria." Yet the fact that they had been born in Austria classed them as alien enemies. We find this section dealing with these people who are in this country, many of whom have been living exemplary lives, the very class of people whom perhaps we most need as immigrants to go on the land. The clause reads:

> Enemy aliens or persons who have been alien enemies and who were or may be interned on or after November 11, 1918.

So that this is directed against a particular group and works a hardship in their case. I shall now consider section 41, and I would impress upon the committee that if this bill of mine is passed it does not mean that the old section 41 will be done away with; but the objectionable clauses which were introduced two years ago will be abandoned and section 41 will remain as it was before that time. Section 41, dealing with the undesirable classes, says, in part, that any person who:

> —shall, by word or act, create or attempt to create riot or public disorder in Canada, or shall by common repute belong to or be suspected of belonging to any secret society or organization which extorts money from or in any way attempts to control any resident of Canada. . . . or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining or teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government; such person, for the purposes of this act, shall be considered as belonging to the prohibited or undesirable classes and shall be liable to deportation.

There you have the same trouble entering in. The whole question as to whether or not a man is undesirable, or whether or not he belongs to organizations that are supposed to teach doctrines that are not in harmony with the welfare of the country, is left to the Department of Immigration to decide. I would suggest that we should be in keeping with the very best British practice if we condemned men only when they committed some overt act and not for merely thinking this or the other thing. In Japan, I believe, there is now a law against dangerous thoughts, and we seem to be approaching very near to the autocratic imperialism of Japan when we undertake to decide whether or not a man harbours dangerous ideas. It has been taken for granted in British countries that a man may believe whatever he likes so long as he does not in any way interfere with his fellow-citizens or imperil the country. And that is sound ground to take. In section 16, I take exception particularly to the following:

> Any person suspected of an offence under this section may forthwith be arrested and detained without a warrant by any officer for examination and deportation.

That, it seems to me, is going further than we can imagine possible in any British statute. It is bad enough to arrest, without warrant, any man who is really guilty, but in this case even if a man is only suspected of doing something he may be summarily arrested without warrant, and without trial deported, though he might happen to be a British subject. That is an intolerable situation. Section 17, which is amended in harmony with the other, provides:

> Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen or a person having Canadian domicile—has done so and so. That is where it touches the British-born. If a man is foreign-born I presume he may have some sort of protection at the hands of a foreign consul; but if a man is British-born he has no domicile, and has not even a chance for naturalization. That comes in in another act. Provision is made in the Naturalization Act that a man, even if naturalized, may be de-naturalized at will. I have not introduced any bill with regard to that act, but, as amended in 1919, it fits into this nicely. Most of us had not realized that in order for a Britisher to obtain rights before the courts in this country, he had to be naturalized. But that is the case. It will be seen, therefore, that this catches a man in any case if he is considered undesirable. The British-born man has no domicile, and if he is naturalized he may be de-naturalized. Then we come further to the amendment to the amendment. It was considered, a few days after this amendment to the Immigration Act had been passed, that it was not strong enough and did not quite meet the needs of the time, and so still more stringent regulations were introduced. Section 41, as again amended, contains an extra clause with regard to undesirables:

> Any one who without lawful authority assumes any powers of government in Canada or in any part thereof—

—may be declared an undesirable. That is to say, any man belonging to an organization that undertakes a certain kind of work which may be considered by somebody as work that ought to be done by the Government, may be declared an undesirable and without any impartial authority to try the case he may be summarily deported. Further on there is this clause:

> Provided that this section shall not apply to any person who is a British subject either by reason of birth in Canada or by reason of naturalization in Canada.

There is where the difficulty comes in again with regard to naturalization. Most of our English immigrants coming to this country took it for granted that they had certain rights in the country and would receive full protection from the law. They did not consider it necessary to become naturalized, and this clause therefore places them in a far more difficult and helpless position than in the case with persons born in Germany, Austria, or Russia.

Mr. McMASTER: Do I understand from my hon. friend that a man born in Scotland and coming out here has to become naturalized?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, before he can obtain protection from this act; otherwise he is liable to deportation.

Mr. JACOBS: I think the hon. member is quite wrong. If a man was born in Scotland he is a British subject and does not require to be naturalized at all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, otherwise he may be deported.

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, back to Scotland.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is my point; he has no chance. This proviso relates to any person who is a British subject either by reason of birth in Canada or by reason of naturalization in this country. But since a Scotsman is a subject of Canada neither by birth in Canada nor by reason of naturalization here, he may be deported under the provisions of this act.

Mr. JACOBS: That is to say, his British citizenship by reason of birth in Scotland will not avail him in Canada under this act.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is it. Subsection 2 says:

> Proof that any person who belongs to or was within the description of any of the prohibited or undesirable classes within the meaning of this section at any time since the fourth day of May, 1910, shall for all purposes of this act be deemed to establish prima facie that he still belongs to such prohibited or undesirable class or classes.

We have here introduced a retroactive clause—if it can be shown that prior to the 4th May, 1910, a person belonged to any of these undesirable classes, it should be at least prima facie evidence that he still belongs to them. I am no lawyer, but I have always thought that one of the fundamental principles of British law was that a man is to be considered innocent until he is proven guilty. Here it is provided that if he belongs to a certain class prima facie he is guilty. He is required to establish his own innocence of the "crime"—in this case of whether or not he belongs to any of these undesirable classes to which he belonged some years previously.

I do not think it is necessary at this time for me to say anything further with regard to the unfair and anti-British character of this legislation. I have perhaps emphasized the fact that it applies to Britishers. I should like to go a little bit further than that, because I think I have enough of the spirit of the Britisher in my own being to believe that everyone ought to have a fair chance in this country. I do not think the British-born want any greater privileges than any other body; I do not think that any of us who happen to be Canadian-born want any special privileges; and the idea in introducing this legislation is that we should give a fair chance to every man, Canadian-born and non-Canadian born, and that if he is doing anything in any sense detrimental to the best interests of the community he shall be regularly tried in open court, and if found guilty, deported, if you will—but given a fair trial first.

That, Mr. Chairman, as briefly as I can put it, is the contention embodied in this bill. I do not see how we could get at these subsections without having gone into that general question. I would read the first clause again:

1. Subsection one of section two of chapter twenty-five of the statutes of 1919, being "An Act to amend The Immigration Act," is amended by repealing all such subsection from the proviso in subparagraph (i) to the end of the said subsection.

Section agreed to.

Mr. JACOBS: I am heartily in sympathy with this measure and for the information of the hon. member (Mr. Woodsworth) who has just resumed his seat I might say that, with the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) and several other hon. members, I opposed the law which it is now sought to repeal when it was first placed upon the statute books two years ago, at a time when this House seemed to be suffering from "jumpiness" and "nerves" induced by the long war. We had the idea that we could handle this question of undesirable immigrants very much better by permitting the immigration authorities, rather than our courts of justice, to pass upon their cases. I saw nothing at that time, nor have I seen anything since, which would cause me to alter my opinion that the proper forum for dealing with these cases is the court of justice in the district where the suspected party may be found.

I have some hesitation, Mr. Chairman, in speaking of immigration measures, for the reason that I happen to be the only member of a certain race in this House, and when I support a measure of this kind a portion of the press declare the following day that the measure is wanted only by a certain class of undesirable Jews whose views are put forward in the House by the member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs.) So I fear I am rendering a disservice to the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr Woodsworth) by backing up his measure; my support may do him more harm than good. I have been suffering for some time from attacks of this kind from certain elements in the community, particularly in the city of Montreal.

Now, I should like to cite to the committee something which appeared in the Star of Montreal yesterday, which I think will convey to them some idea of how foreign immigrants are looked upon in certain quarters. The article is entitled:

Civic Body to discuss influx of foreigners with resultant crime

Sixty per cent of serious crimes here committed by Foreigners, Official Declares—Would restrict flow into country.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Then the article proceeds:

The flow of foreigners into Canada, with a consequent increase in the number of serious crimes, will be discussed by a special committee of the City Council this afternoon. Ald. Trepanier will preside.

The name "Trepanier" is rather significant; it suggests the necessity of the operation of trepanning.

Correspondence will be read from the Union of Canadian Municipalities and from the Merchants' Association of Montreal, dealing with the subject, and pointing out the danger of an unrestricted flow of foreigners into the bigger cities.

A letter from J. Fitzgerald, manager of the Merchants' Association, states it is entirely too easy for criminal characters to come into Canada, and entirely too difficult to have them removed after they get into the country.

"I believe that eighty per cent—

This is what Mr. Fitzgerald believes:

I believe that eighty per cent of the serious crimes in Montreal are committed by people who have come into the city only a few months previous to the commission of the crime," says Mr. Fitzgerald.

I suppose he wishes to imply that as they remain longer in the country their desire to commit crimes becomes less,—that they are filled with a desire to commit crimes only for the first few months after they arrive. The article continues:

"The police, when they discover that bad characters are here, seem to have every difficulty in having them sent out of the country."

Then there is this significant paragraph:

The secretary-treasurer of the Union of Canadian Municipalities, A. D. Shibley, of Montreal,—

Whoever he is; I never heard of him.

—writing to Ald. Trepanier—

You will notice, correspondence is going on between Trepanier and Shibley which is designed to affect public opinion in the district.

A. D. Shibley, of Montreal, writing to Ald. Trepanier to offer co-operation in the movement to restrict foreign immigration, declared that from police head-quarters he had found that last year sixty per cent of the serious crimes, such as murder and robbery with violence, were committed by foreigners, whereas, in proportion to their numbers, fifteen per cent should be their percentage.

He allows them the right to commit crime, but only to the extent of fifteen per cent.

There was also a financial loss by burning of buildings and stocks of merchandise which it was known was attributable to foreigners, but in most cases it was impossible to prove it, and this cost the city millions every year.

That is the kind of propaganda which is being indulged in by certain elements in the community.

A bill similar to this was introduced on two occasions by hon. members in this House in the last Parliament. The first bill, I believe, was sponsored by Hon. Mr. Calder, at that time Minister of Immigration and Colonization. After the war was over the government of which he was a member felt that there was no further necessity for any such drastic legislation. Mr. Calder's bill took away from the Department of Immigration the right to decide questions as to the desirability or undesirability of certain immigrants. The bill passed this House without opposition, but when it went to the Senate it met an untimely end. Later a bill of the same nature was introduced by the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe), but it also met the same fate when it reached the Senate. So I want to warn my good friend from Winnipeg that the passage of this bill may be met by some opposition when it reaches—I was going to say, that irresponsible Chamber, but I do not know that I will——that Chamber which is not responsible to the people. I assure him that if his bill passes this House and is defeated in the other Chamber I will support him from year to year until it becomes law, because I think it is a step in the right direction. It is something which is in consonance with British tradition and British practice, and it should pass this Chamber, unanimously.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, I think the suggestion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was the correct one in regard to the measure now before the committee, and I was glad to note that the promoter of the bill (Mr. Woodsworth) was willing to adopt that suggestion. This bill is a short one, but it involves a study of thirty or forty intricate sections and subsections of three or four distinct Acts of Parliament, and it would be idle for a committee of this size, with the time at our disposal, to give proper consideration to the important questions raised by the bill. I did not know the matter was coming on this afternoon, but I have hastily glanced over the various enactments—

Mr. IRVINE: I would like to ask the hon. member how long it took his government to pass this act in the first place? He suggests that the matter involves a good deal of investigation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In the first place, the matter received long consideration before it reached the House, and it was considered at great length in the House during the session in which it was passed. In my opinion there are not more than four or five members of the committee who understand this proposal, and I think I would be in the majority, of those who do not. I doubt if any one but the promoter himself does understand it. If such a measure as this is to be placed on our statute book, by all means let us understand it; let us have proper consideration of the various clauses. The suggestion of the Prime Minister was that the matter should go to a small committee to be fully considered in all its aspects and reported to this House. The Committee of the Whole can never fully examine the various clauses that are affected. My hon. friend who last spoke (Mr. Jacobs), in his own jocular way, endeavoured, I think, rather to minimize the importance of the question of the class of immigration that should be permitted to come into Canada. But it is a very large and very important question for this Dominion and one which should not be lightly dealt with. It is just possible that the present law is in some respects too drastic. I, for one, realize that it was placed on the statute book at a critical time in the history of the country. That critical period has more or less passed away, and it is quite possible that the law should be modified. But I have not in the time at my disposal been able to grasp fully the meaning or import of the proposal, nor have I been able to come to any conclusion as to what other legislation will be affected if the bill is passed and put into operation. For that reason, I think the promoter of the bill would do well to suggest that the committee rise and report progress, on the understanding that the bill be referred to a special committee with power to inquire into the matter and report fully to the House at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): I look upon this question as a judicial one. I am familiar with the conditions existing in Montreal, and I know that no part of the country has received more foreigners during the last ten years or so than that city. We are all interested in protecting the standing of Canada and seeing that justice is meted out to members of all classes and all creeds coming into this country. But, like the member for South Wellington (Mr.

Guthrie), I am unable to give an intelligent decision on the action taken by the member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth), and I would strongly support the idea of having the matter referred to a small committee of competent men so that the matter can be examined and inquired into. During the last few years the charge has been repeatedly made in the press of Montreal —I do not know whether or not it is well founded—that a large number of the crimes committed in the city have been committed by recent arrivals in this country. It is a case of protection of the people, not only of Montreal, but of the whole of Canada, and the Government would be well advised to give this matter mature consideration through a small committee of competent men. I support that idea and hope the Government will give effect to it.

Mr. JACOBS: All that has been asked, as I understand it, by this bill is that the law be made the same as it was previous to 1919.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Nobody here knows what that was.

Mr. CRERAR: I find myself in much the same position as the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). In attempting hastily to get the full import of this bill that is before the committee I found it necessary to examine many sections of the amended Immigration Act, and it is quite impossible, in the short time at one's disposal, to get an intelligent view of the whole matter. When the bill was before the House on a former occasion—I think on its second reading—the suggestion was made that it would be referred to a special committee. I was certainly under the impression that that procedure was to be followed, and I cannnot understand at the moment, having come into the chamber after the consideration of the bill was commenced, how it has reached its present stage. To my mind, the measure should be referred to a committee, and it should be done at once. I am free to say that I am in general accord with the principle of the bill. The amendments to the act, particularly those drastic amendments which were passed in 1919 giving power to the officials of the Department of Immigration, to deport people without any fair trial, are not in accord with British practice and should not remain on our statute book. The question, however, is a large one. The bill seeks to repeal a good many sections of the act, and I think it could well be referred to a special committee for report. I would offer the further observation that the committee should be appointed at the earliest possible day and should make its report to the House as soon as it can, so that we may consider the matter and deal with it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad that apparently we have reached unanimity on this matter. It is quite true, as my hon. friend (Mr. Crerar) has said, that when the bill was before the House on a former occasion I indicated that from the point of view of the Government it should be referred to a special committee, and that the Government would take steps to ascertain the names of the members who should compose that committee. When the Whips undertook to get the names of the committee, I was informed that the leader of the Opposition objected to having the matter discussed by a special committee at all. I was unable to understand what objection there could be to that course because it seemed to me it would be impossible to have the bill satisfactorily dealt with in any other way, and I spoke to the leader of the Opposition personally about it, so as to make quite sure that that was his view. He expressed to me the opinion, quite emphatically, that he thought the bill ought to be threshed out here in Committee of the Whole instead of being referred to a special committee. As I said this afternoon, I did not like to proceed by way of special committee if there was any real objection to that course on the part of any group in the House. I think we have had sufficient discussion this afternoon to convince everyone that it would be impossible to have this bill properly dealt with in Committee on the Whole, and I therefore now move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

Progress reported.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I move that Bill No. 16, to amend the Immigration Act, be referred to a special committee the members of which are to be appointed at a later date, with power to report from time to time.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

On the Order for the House to again go into committee on Bill No. 17, to amend the Criminal Code, Mr. Woodsworth:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As this bill is related, I think, in some particulars to the one we have just referred to a special committee, I think it would be better to have it referred to the same committee. I therefore move that Bill No. 17 be referred to the committee to which Bill No. 16 was referred, and that this Order be discharged.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That procedure is quite satisfactory to me. I think it is much preferable that the matter should be threshed out in a special committee.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is just this distinction between the present bill to amend the Criminal Code, and the one with which the House has just dealt. The present proposal is a very simple one, dealing practically with a single subject of the Criminal Code and involving the amendment of only one act of Parliament and one or two sections of that act. It relates to the crime known to our law under the name of sedition also to criminal conspiracies, I think. That is a matter, I think, that might fairly be dealt with by the Committee of the Whole House. However, I am not opposed to sending the bill to a special committee. I was unaware that my leader had taken a position in regard to this matter. I had never consulted him about it, but I am satisfied that if he had been here this afternoon and had heard the discussion so far as it has proceeded, he would have come to the conclusion that a special committee was proper in that instance. In the present case, speaking for myself, I am not opposed to this bill going to a special committee, although it contains a much simpler proposal than that involved in the amendment to the Immigration Act.

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Mr. S. W. JACOBS (George Etienne Cartier) Bill No. 45, to amend the Bankruptcy Act, was read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

On section 1—1919, c. 36, s. 3 amended:

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Explain.

Mr. JACOBS: I may say that a bill similar to this was introduced last year by me, but it failed to receive the support of the Government, which makes it necessary for me to trouble this Parliament with a like measure. This bill provides that it shall be an added ground for the making of a petition in bankruptcy if the debtor gives notice to any of his creditors that he has suspended or is about to suspend payment of any of his debts, and secondly, if he ceases to meet his liabilities generally as they become due.

Inasmuch as this bill deals with a somewhat technical matter known practically to the legal profession only, I would suggest that it be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee for further study, so that we might have an opportunity of hearing from various delegations and others who are interested in the measure.

Mr MACKENZIE KING: I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I move that Bill 45 be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Just for the purpose of making myself clear on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, is it in order after a bill has been committed to the Committee of the Whole House to take it from that committee and send it to a select standing committee? If it is desired to refer a bill to a select standing committee, should not the motion be made immediately after the second reading, and before the bill has been referred to the Committee of the Whole House? I am raising the point of order simply that I may be enlightened.

Mr. SPEAKER: A case of this kind does not often happen, but Bourinot provides a precedent for it. At page 527, fifth edition of Bourinot I find the following:

> In case the committee of the whole has reported progress—

As in this case.

> —a motion may be made immediately before fixing the committee for a future date that the bill be referred to a select standing or other committee.

This is a case in point.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Mr. Jacobs, Bill No. 46, to amend the Railway Act was read the second time and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

On motion of Mr. Kennedy (West Edmonton) Bill 54 to amend the Criminal Code was read the second time.

Mr. KENNEDY (West Edmonton) moved, that the House go into committee on the bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I ask that the bill be allowed to stand until the next sitting of the House. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) mentioned this matter to me, and, I think he wanted to be present when the discussion took place. If the promoter has no objection, I ask that the bill stand until the next sitting of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

FINANCIAL CREDIT

On the order for resuming the adjourned debate on the proposed resolution of Mr. Irvine:

That, in the opinion of this House a representative Parliamentary Committee should be appointed to investigate the basis, the function and the control of financial credit, and the relation of credit to the industrial problems.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): This order will stand until the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is present.

Order stands.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER WATERWAY

The House resumed from May 1, consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Church.

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government of Canada should give early and favourable consideration to the report of the International Joint Commission on the St. Lawrence River Waterway, and request the Government of the United States to join with Canada in making an international agreement for carrying out the work so recommended.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (Westmount-St. Henri): When the debate on this matter was adjourned a few days ago, I was thinking that we would have to be careful in dealing with this project in Canada. When the people on the other side of the line come forward with a project of this nature they generally have a motive of interest. In fact everybody in this life acts from a motive of interest, and when I see the people living in the districts of the Great Lakes advocating this enterprise and many members endorsing it I am but little surprised.

Within the last few weeks we have seen in the newspapers that representatives of the United States' Senate favour this measure. Senator King, from Utah, and Mr. Ten Eyck, Member of Congress, for Buffalo have said: We may have a piece of land down the St. Lawrence valley, and we may buy another piece of land along the Great Lakes, to carry on our international project in Canada, but when the scheme is supported by these people who are interested so much it seems to me perhaps it is not a beneficial thing for our country.

The United States is surely the country which will derive the most benefit from this enterprise. Of course on our side certain districts of this country will benefit if the project is carried on, from the construction, but they will especially benefit from the development of that waterway. It will certainly be a great benefit to all the harbours and wharves situated along the Great Lakes, and will be a benefit to the ports of Detroit, Port Huron and Chicago, and even of Fort William. Steamers will carry in their holds gold and merchandise.

The people on the other side of the line who propose this project are entitled to do so. They have a right to advocate the policy best calculated to satisfy their ambitions, but I am convinced that the measure will be against the interests of Canada as a whole. For the past two months an educational campaign has been carried on in favour of the project. The United States, in order to obtain an advantage in the matter of transportation, have had the International Joint Commission report printed and distributed. The United States Senate passed a measure adopting that report and they sent it to Canada to try to obtain the approval of the representatives of this country in the House of Commons.

Is it advisable for a country like ours, which can develop itself within its own boundaries, to endeavour to associate with the people of the United States, to give them the advantage of knowing everything about our system of navigation, of importation, about all the secrets of the St. Lawrence river, its weak points, if there are any, and many other matters which affect the safety of our country and which should be kept secret. If we open our country to their steamships, within twenty-five years Canada will be their own because if a joint board is appointed that will have control of this new channel, we may be quite sure that influences of all kinds will be brought to bear upon that board to our disadvantage.

In my opinion—and my hon. friends opposite are not obliged to make the confession—this project will be very advantageous to them and perhaps to them only in the present situation and for perhaps twenty-five years to come. But when they consider their prosperity, they should not be too ambitious. The province of Ontario at the present time is a rich province; it is getting along well and making all the progress it may desire. It is one of the oldest provinces of Confederation and it has surely attained the aims which it has had since Confederation.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): Will the hon. gentleman deny us seaports?

Mr. MERCIER: I do not wish to deny Ontario seaports, but the ports which it has now are developing well and in the near future it may have the advantage of all the other ports that may exist in Canada. But if the people of that province want for themselves a channel that will bring to them the fullest measure of prosperity at the expense of the maritime provinces and the western provinces, I think they want a little too much under the circumstances, especially when such a project would mean burdening the whole people of Canada with an expenditure of nearly $300,000,000. This project cannot be seriously considered under present conditions because our finances are not in such a state as to warrant the investment of such a large amount of money in bringing such an enormous scheme to a successful conclusion. On account of the need for economy in public expenditure, many public works throughout the country have been stopped. Many provinces require some money for drydocks and public services. The Esquimalt drydock is still unfinished and a large amount of money is needed to complete it. In different parts of Canada, there are wharves that are in need of repair, and there are channels to be dug so that they may be deep enough for the steamers that have to pass through them.

If we want to develop our country by providing further water transportation facilities, there is the Georgian Bay canal, which has been mooted for many years back. It would be a useful development for Canada, and it would shorten the route by 300 miles, if it is given preference to the St. Lawrence waterway. By the construction of the Georgian Bay canal, the people not only of Ontario, but of the whole of Canada, will benefit; and in northern Ontario better progress will be made, because the settlers of to-day and of to-morrow will have better transportation facilities in that district than exist at present.

On looking at the report, which has been laid on the Table of this House, and copies of which have been sent to every member by direction of the Prime Minister, I see that many questions were asked, but the answers that have been given to those questions should have been given more plainly, because, upon those answers, depends the question whether the project of the St. Lawrence waterway is a good thing or not as regards Canada. The question is not so much whether it is right to spend a great deal of money on a project, as whether, when you invest money, under our present financial conditions, good results will be obtained. At pages 183 and 184 of the report, it may be seen that the answers, which were given to the questions put before the commission so as to inform the two governments of the United States and Canada, are not very clear. Question 6, which, to my mind, is a vital question as regards Canada's interests, reads:

> What method of control is recommended for the operation of the improved waterway to secure its most beneficial use?

The answer reads:

> The commission recommends (a) that such navigation works as do not lie wholly within one country or are not capable of economic and efficient operation withni one country as complete and independent units, be operated under the direction of the International Board as set forth in recommendation No. 7; (b) that all navigation works other than those particularly mentioned in (a) be operated by the country in which they are located with the right of inspection by the International Board as set forth in recommendation No. 8; (c) that power works' be operated by the country in which they are located as set forth in recommendation No. 9.

The "power works" are indeed, Mr. Speaker, the corner stone of the whole St. Lawrence waterways scheme. No specific method of control is mentioned. That answer is an example of the answers given in the report. We have no definite answers to any of the most important questions concerning this project. There are no facts available, and what little information we have been given is as vague as the passing clouds. Let me read question No. 9 and the answer thereto:

> What traffic, both incoming and outgoing, in kind and quantity, is likely to be carried upon the proposed route both at its inception and in the future, consideration to be given not only to present conditions, but to probable changes therein resulting from the development of industrial activities due to availability of large quantities of hydraulic power?
> Answer. To this question also it is impossible to give a specific answer, in the absence of definite information as to all the factors that will enter into the problem.

I agree with that statement, because the commissioners cannot possibly foretell what is likely to happen in the future. The answer continued:

> The commission has brought together authoritative information as to the existing traffic between the tributary area and overseas points as well as between the same area and coastwise points on this continent, and has reached the general conclusion that sufficient traffic will seek the new water route, etc.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a "general conclusion" is hardly a substantial enough basis to act upon in an undertaking of such tremendous importance as this, and I am not surprised that the commission cannot say definitely what amount of traffic there would be. Before embarking upon an enterprise involving, as this work certainly would, an enormous expenditure of money and is, in my humble opinion, a national risk, there should be submitted to the governments, both of the United States and of Canada, something more definite and concrete than the generalities that have been put forward. There should be absolutely reliable information on which dependable calculations can be made. Indisputable authority based on the carefully considered findings of civil engineering experts should be available. In 1918 the St. Lawrence Power Company, an American corporation, constructed a dam at Massena in the state of New York and the undertaking was opposed by the government of our country. The work was carried out, nevertheless, because the International Joint Commission considered that it was necessary as a war measure; and this House may rest assured that the St. Lawrence will stand to lose a considerable degree of power by the construction of that dam, to the advantage of our neighbours.

As I said the other night, let us be content to develop what resources Providence has given to each province, and let us work together for the welfare of the country as a whole, each province being satisfied with its own and not interfering with others. We have the resources in Canada and it only remains for us to develop them for us to become a prosperous nation. But, I repeat, do not let us try to grab from one another what is not ours. In 1911 Sir Wilfrid Laurier was questioned regarding the construction of the Georgian Bay canal. He said that the work was one of national character and would be carried through for the benefit and welfare of the whole Dominion. He said, "If I could do it to-morrow, I would carry out that work." And Mr. Pugsley, who was then Minister of Public Works, brought down an estimate of $3,000,000 to start survey work in connection with the Georgian Bay canal. This project was generally supported at that time, and members representing Ontario and the city of Toronto urged the government to carry it through. To-day, however, they have evidently abandoned that scheme and want another one which would involve the country in untold debt, without any definite assurance of success. I think that the Government would do well to consider this matter very seriously indeed before taking any action at all.

Mr. BALDWIN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McCONICA: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CASGRAIN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: I caught the eye of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) first.

Mr. CASGRAIN: As it is near six o'clock, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. McCONICA: I had hoped to say a word regarding this resolution, and for that reason—

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is not debatable.

Motion agreed to and the debate adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King for the adjournment of the House:

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will take up the resolution respecting freight rates, and if we conclude the discussion thereon we shall resume with estimates, taking up those of the Secretary of State and Public Works.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 5.55 p.m.

Thursday, May 4, 1922

The House met at three o'clock.

STANDING COMMITTEES

CHANGES IN MEMBERSHIP

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I move:

> That the name of Mr. Marler be substituted for that of Mr. Martell on the Select Standing Committee on Mines and Minerals, and the name of Mr. Martell be substituted for that of Mr. Marler on the Select Standing Committee on Marine and Fisheries.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES ACT, 1914, AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 70, to amend the Fisheries Act, 1914.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The object of this bill is to afford proper protection of our salmon and lobster fisheries. Both these fisheries are conducted beyond, as well as within, territorial waters. Heretofore our regulations, which have applied to both, have never been challenged. But we have been informed that they may be challenged in some part of the country, especially in British Columbia; and the Department of Justice is of opinion that the regulations should be implemented by legislation.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILL—FIRST READING

Bill No. 69 (from the Senate), for the relief of Abraham Leibovitz.—Mr. McQuarrie.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by asterisks).

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Under what conditions and regulations are Japanese immigrants admitted into Canada?
2. In what way are the rights of Canadians in Japan limited as to ownership of land, franchise, mercantile pursuits, fishing, shipping (coastwise and foreign), mining, agriculture, and other pursuits such as are engaged in by Japanese in Canada?
3. What is the number of Japanese immigrants that have entered Canada yearly in each of the ten years ending March 31, 1922?
4. How many Japanese have left Canada for Japan, each year, during the same period?
5. How many Japanese have returned to Canada from Japan each year during the same period?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall be able to give an answer to this question to-morrow.

Question stands.

GATINEAU POINT—ROCKLIFFE FERRY PRIVILEGES

Mr. FONTAINE:

1. Has the Government called for tenders this year in connection with ferry privileges between Gatineau Point and Rockliffe?
2. If so, what are the names of those who submitted tenders and what was the amount in each case?
3. Who was the privilege accorded to and what was the reason governing the award of same?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay): In explanation of the delay in answering this question, I may say that tenders have been called for and received for this service, but a license has not yet been issued.

INCOME TAX STATISTICS

Mr. WOODSWORTH:

1. How much revenue did the income tax produce in the last fiscal year?
2. What amount was paid by persons having incomes of $2,000 per year, last year?
3. What amount was paid by persons having incomes of over $2,000 and less than $3,000?
4. What amount was paid by persons having incomes of over $3,000 and less than $4,000?
5. What amount was paid by persons having incomes of over $4,000 and less than $5,000?
6. What amount was paid by persons having incomes of over $5,000 and less than $10,000?
7. What amount was paid by persons having incomes of over $10,000 and less than $20,000?
8. What amount was paid by persons having incomes of over $20,000.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. $78,684,354.80.

2, 3, 4, 5, 6.—No information.

7 and 8. Compilation of statistics for the last fiscal year (31st March, 1922) has not been completed.

Note:—For statistical purposes the classification of taxpayers according to income classes is as follows:

(1)	$ 1,000	to	$ 6,000*
(2)	2,000	"	6,000†
(3)	6,000	"	10,000

7. What amount was paid by persons having incomes of over $10,000 and less than $20,000?
8. What amount was paid by persons having incomes of over $20,000.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No information available, as statistics have not been compiled according to municipalities.

ROUMANIAN AND GREEK CREDITS

Mr. JACOBS:

1. Have the Governments of Roumania and Greece paid any interest to the Canadian Government on the loans made in 1919?
2. If not, has the Government taken any steps looking to the payment of such interest, and (b) how much is now owing for interest?
3. How much is now owing by the Governments of Roumania and Greece on account of principal of the indebtedness incurred through the credits advanced these countries?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. As to Roumania, no; as to Greece, yes.

2. Yes; (b) by Roumania to March 31, 1922, $2,606,652.20; by Greece, to December 31, 1921, $196, 424.19.

3. By Roumania, $20,449,104.49; by Greece, $7,520,473.17.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

INCOME WAR TAX ACT—CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton):

What is the total amount paid by the Chartered Banks in Canada under the corporation clause of the Income War Tax Act?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

Income Tax, $786,653.17; Special War Revenue Act (on note circulation), $4,278,-420.87; total, $5,065,074.04.

The amount paid under the provisions of Part I of The Special War Revenue Act, 1915, shall be considered as a deduction of tax payable under Income War Tax Act, 1917.

C. G. S. CHAMPLAIN

Mr. DESLAURIERS:

1. Have notes given by the Gulf of St. Lawrence Shipping and Trading Company, Limited, and endorsed by Messrs. Thomas Harling and Clark Brothers, in payment for the Canadian Government Steamship Champlain, been redeemed?
2. If not, what amounts are still outstanding?
3. What action does the Government contemplate taking against the Company or the endorsers of the notes to recover payment?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1 and 2. The steamer Champlain was sold to the Gulf of St. Lawrence Shipping and Trading Company for $61,050. A cash payment of $13,102.50 was made and notes for 3, 6, 9 and 12 months dated May 1, 1920, accepted for the balance. One of these notes for $12,000 was paid on maturity. The notes for 6, 9 and 12 months for $12,-000, $12,000 and $11,997.50 respectively have not been redeemed.

3. The Department of Justice has taken action to recover amount of notes from the endorsers.

RETAIL DRUGGISTS—ALCOHOL PURCHASES

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Has the Government or the Finance Ministers received a request from the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association for an amendment of the existing law with respect to the purchase of alcohol by retail druggists, for the manufacture of medicinal, pharmaceutical and other preparations?
2. If so, is it the intention of the Government to comply with such request, either in whole or in part, and amend the regulations, and to provide, subject to proper safeguards, restrictions and regulations, for the purchase by retail druggists of alcohol for such purposes, at approximately the same rate of excise duty as that payable by the large manufacturer?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. Yes.

2. An Act of Parliament would be required to make such a change. Announcements respecting legislation dealing with taxation are made in the Budget Speech.

ST. JOHN HARBOUR

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

1. What amount was expended by the Dominion Government on the harbour of St. John, New Brunswick, during the years 1911 to 1921, inclusive?

2. What were the respective amounts expended on the said harbour during each of the said years?

3. What was the nature of the work performed during above years on the said harbour?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. and 2.

Fiscal year	Capital		Income
	Voted	Expended	Voted	Expended
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.

Total	14,400,000 00	12,438,720 55	824,900 00	74,268 81

Total amount voted—$15,224,900.00. Expended $12,512,989.36.

3. Work consisted in the construction of new wharves and the improvement of wharves on the west side of St. John harbour, and repairs to old breakwaters, also the construction of a new breakwater and the dredging of a channel from the main channel up to the basin in front of the dry dock now under construction in Courtenay bay under the Dry Dock Subsidies Act, also the dredging of the main harbour and slips and berths therein.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—GRAIN LEAKAGES

Hon. Mr. MANION:

1. What was the cost to the Canadian National railways of leakages of grain, from cars, between points of shipment and the head of the lakes, during the past railway year?

2. What was the cost to the said railways of new grain doors, and repairs to grain doors upon grain cars, during the same season?

Hon. Mr. KENNEDY: The information in answer to this question will have to come from Winnipeg, and it will probably be about ten days before I can give the information to the House.

Question stands.

IMPROVED FISHING METHODS

Hon. Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure):

1. Does the Government intend to take any action on the application of W. A. Wick and others, asking for the introduction of improved methods in the fisheries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Gaspesian coasts?

2. If so, what action?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

While preparations were in progress for such action, in view of the arrangement that was made with the provincial authorities, for the administration of the fisheries on that portion of the coast, it was decided to discontinue them, and the provincial authorities were so informed.

EXCESS OVERAGES

Mr. SALES:

1. What terminal elevator companies have paid moneys to the Government by reason of excess overages?

2. What terminal elevator companies owing money on excess overages have not yet paid?

3. What are the names of these companies and the amounts owing by them for the year 1919-20 and the year 1920-21?

4. Why have the companies referred to in question 2 not paid?

5. Has the right of the Government been definitely challenged in regard to enforcement of payments?

6. If so, what is the policy of the Government in respect to the challenge, and also in respect to companies who have not challenged the authority of the government but who have paid the moneys?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1. For the 1920 weigh-up, the following terminal elevator companies paid moneys to the Government by reason of excess overages:—Empire Elevator Co., United Grain Growers, Fort William Elevator Co., Grand Trunk Pacific Terminal Elevator Co., Port Arthur Elevator Co., Thunder Bay Elevator Co., Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Co.

2. For the 1920 weigh-up the Eastern Terminal Elevator Co. has not yet paid.

For the 1921 weigh-up the following companies have not yet paid: Canadian Pacific Railway Co., Consolidated Elevator Co., Western Terminal Elevator Co., United Grain Growers, Grand Trunk Pacific Terminal Elevator Co., Northwestern Elevator Co.

3. 1919-20—

Eastern Terminal Elevator Co.	$49,027.07
1920-21—
Canadian Pacific Railway Co...	29,184.17
Consolidated Elevator Co... ..	3,432.73
Western Terminal Elevator Co.	47,907.42
United Grain Growers	41,971.05
G. T. P. Terminal Elevator Co.	5,697.45
Northwestern Elevator Co.	2,331.24

4. Because the right of the Government to these overages has been contested.

5. Yes.

6. The matter is at present under the consideration of the Department of Justice.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. LANCTOT:

1. What has been the cost of the trips to Europe of the ministers of the Canadian Government during the war period and since?

2. What has been the cost for each minister who attended any of the after war conferences held at Paris, Geneva or elsewhere in Europe?

3. How much, if any, has each one of such ministers returned to the Treasury of the amounts allowed for such trips over and above their actual expenses?

4. What are the names of such Ministers and the respective amounts allowed to each, as well as the amounts returned by each?

CROWSNEST PASS AGREEMENT

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO EFFECT UPON RAILWAY RATES

Hon. W. C. KENNEDY (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved:

That notwithstanding that the regulation of railway rates is a matter within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, it is advisable that a Select Special Committee be appointed to make inquiry into the question of railway transportation costs, it having been disclosed by recent conferences held between the Government and the chief executives of the various railways with respect to the reduction of freight rates that the representatives of the railways deem it inadvisable immediately to reduce rates on basic commodities because of the expiration, on July 6th, 1922, of the suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement;

That, in the circumstances, it is advisable to afford opportunity to all interested parties to submit their views upon the subject matter of the inquiry to the said committee with particular regard to the effect of the rates established by the Crowsnest pass agreement upon Canadian National railways and other lines, as well as upon agricultural development and Canadian industry generally;

And that the said committee shall have power to send for persons, papers and records, including the minutes and evidence taken before the Committees of this House in previous Sessions, to examine witnesses under oath, and to report from time to time.

He said: The resolution just read states the reasons why it is considered at the present time in the public interest to appoint the committee proposed. When this Government assumed office there was, as there is to-day, a general feeling throughout the country that freight rates were unduly high and that they not only interfered with, but were oppressive to, the trade and commerce of the country. The Government were anxious there should be an immediate and substantial reduction in the rates, and while this could be effected in part by allowing the Crownest pass agreement to become once more operative in July next, it was felt that the matter was of such far-reaching importance that the Government would not be justified in permitting this to take place without having a committee of the House appointed to inquire into the effect which such a revival of the agreement might have, and to make such recommendations as, in the public interest, that committee might deem advisable. As intimated in the speech I delivered to the House on the railway situation a short time ago, the Government, soon after its assumption of office, had a conference with the heads of the Canadian National Railways, the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, with a view to securing, if possible, a voluntary reduction in rates on those products known as basic commodities. The matter was thoroughly investigated and as a result of the conference, the executive of the railways felt that, in view of the fact that the Crowsnest pass agreement would expire on July 6, it was not advisable at the present time, however desirable it might be, that any immediate reduction should be made. As hon. members know, the Crowsnest pass agreement is an undertaking entered into in 1897 by the Government of that day with the Canadian Pacific Railway whereby, in consideration of a subsidy, freight rates on certain commodities were limited. That agreement stood until 1918, when the United States Government, through its Labour Board, increased the wages of the railway employees in that country. The employees on the Canadian lines thereupon made application for a similar increase in their wages. The Order in Council which made the McAdoo award effective on government owned lines and recommended its adoption on privately owned railways authorized the Board of Railway Commissioners to prepare a schedule of rates which would grant increases in freight rates in Canada similar to the increases that had already been granted in American territory. The Board of Railway Commissioners prepared such a schedule of rates which was given effect by Order in Council of July 27, 1918, under the War Measures Act, authorizing the board to set aside the Crowsnest pass agreement or any other rate-limiting agreement. This Order in Council remained effective until the revision of the Railway Act was under consideration in 1919, when, by subsection 5 of section 325, authority was granted the Railway Commissioners to set aside the Crowsnest pass agreement for a period of three years from the passing of the act. That period of suspension expires on July 6, 1922. The Consolidated Railway Act came before Parliament for revision, having first been dealt with by the Senate, and was referred to a select committee of the House, and it was that committee that finally incorporated in the bill subsection 5 of section 325 to which I have just referred. The bill was passed and returned as amended to the Senate. The Senate objected to this section in its original form, and a conference was held between the managers of the two Houses. Sir Robert Borden afterwards intimated that it would be satisfactory to the Senate if acceptable to the House that a limitation be made in subsection 5; and the limit was then fixed in that subsection at a period of three years from the passing of the act in 1919.

To-day the railway companies have come to us and represented that they are in exactly the same position in which they were in 1918. They are faced with the still increased costs of labour and materials and they declare that if the Crowsnest pass agreement goes into effect on July 6 it will mean a loss of millions of dollars, adding to the already very heavy deficit of the Canadian National Railways, and materially affecting the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway. On the other hand, there are those who contend that the reduction in freight rates would stimulate business and bring about increased activity, which would result in greater earnings for the railways. Furthermore, they add, there is the possibility that in a very short time there will be a further decrease in wages in the United States, which would in all probability apply in Canada as well, and that the railways would not suffer the loss they claim would ensue. But there is another reason why the matter should be considered by a special committee. The Board of Railway Commissioners, in the last adjustment made in September, 1920, through its chairman, Mr. Carvell, gave this judgment:

> As our jurisdiction for granting increases on certain lines of railway in Western Canada depends entirely upon the amendment to section 325 of the Railway Act, 1919, which expires on the 6th day of July 1922, the rates hereby established cannot continue beyond that date unless Parliament in its wisdom sees fit to extend the provisions of that section. Therefore, the rates herein provided for shall not extend beyond the first day of July, 1922.

The Railway Board have themselves put the matter up to Parliament. So far as the Crowsnest pass agreement is concerned, they have no jurisdiction because it is a matter of statute; and I may say that it is not the intention of the Government, nor is it the desire, to interfere in any way with the functions or the duties of the Board of Railway Commissioners. The Board of Railway Commissioners are the proper authorities to fix rates. In so far as the Government is concerned, this committee is to deal specifically with the Crowsnest pass agreement, not with the general question of rates. It may be necessary, in order to deal intelligently with this matter, to get information with reference to rates, in their application to this agreement and the committee will determine this under the powers conferred upon it.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I have only to say that this is a matter of great importance to this country from every standpoint, agricultural, business and railway, and the suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement or its continuation should have the very careful consideration of every hon. member. The Government is anxious to have this committee obtain the fullest possible information that can be gathered in connection with this matter so that it may recommend to Parliament what will be in the interests of all the people of this country.

At a later stage of the proceedings I shall move the nomination of the members of the committee.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the subject involved in the resolution has not only commanded the attention of the Parliaments of Canada for years, but since Confederation has been one of the main problems confronting the country. The construction, control and general supervision of our railway systems has, in the very nature of things, been one of the great difficulties that our people have had to overcome.

Canada is a vast country, and when she essayed the task of confederating all of British North America, she did so at a time when her population was sparse, and when consequently the burden of transportation was heavy relative to the number of taxpayers to sustain it. Therefore, in the very fact of our geography, in the very fact of our sparse population, lie the roots of the great transportation problem with which we have wrestled through these fifty years; and that we should now be faced with that problem virtually only in the form of a question of rate reduction is a matter of some congratulation.

I think the people have wanted neither in courage, nor intelligence, nor practical business capacity in the manner in which they have addressed themselves to this question, faced all its difficulties, and surmounted them one by one; and in my humble judgment, though we have made mistakes, and one major mistake, we have surmounted those difficulties so successfully that we find ourselves to-day with the greater number of them behind us.

That there should be at this time a demand for a reduction of railway rates is natural. We have had that demand before us with growing insistence for months past. In the period of the war, for reasons very indirectly referred to by the minister (Mr. Kennedy), increases of rates were not only necessary, they were so manifestly inevitable that there was no difference of opinion as to bringing them about. After the war ended, the problem instead of being an easier one, really assumed dimensions greater still. Later on we met with the first movement towards reduction of rates, a slight reduction taking effect on the first of January, 1921, to the extent of five per cent, under an order of the Board of Railway Commissioners. On first December, 1921, a ten per cent reduction was made. These reductions were ordered conformably with the suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement to which the hon. gentleman refers. Since that time the Railway Commission has made no further reductions.

I refer to these matters now—I shall refer to them at greater length perhaps before I close—only to put in proper perspective the situation as we meet it to-day.

I say it is only natural that the people at this time should urgently seek for a further reduction in railway rates. One of the vital, indeed, one of the indispensable conditions of confederation is low railway rates. We undertook at Confederation to construct a nation on this portion of the North American continent. We then had but three or four millions of people, if we had that number; our territory was four thousand miles in width, and our fathers foresaw that if we were to make a nation we must not only bind that territory with transportation routes, but we must make the conditions of transportation over those routes such that trade would actually flow over them and the bonds of commerce unite the provinces, thereby making progress as a unit possible, and the prosperity of the people a living truth.

We met the same difficulty in relation to our trade question. Historically we have solved that problem along certain lines, and whether rightly or wrongly—in my judgment, of course, I think rightly—the people have solved it every time it came before them in a consistent form with a desire to so direct our trade as also to bind our provinces in trade relations that would be healthful and secure.

Virtually the same question that confronted us in trade matters confronts us in transportation matters. It has always been deemed essential that our rates of transportation, even at considerable cost to the national treasury, should be such that our trade to the utmost extent should flow east and west—that we really should have a commercial entity which is a fundamental requisite of our continuing as a national entity. Consequently this Dominion has by no means been parsimonious in its treatment of railway companies. On the contrary, we have sought by generous treatment of railway transportation companies to make railway construction possible. We have sought as well by like treatment, even at the expense of the whole nation, to make possible low transportation rates. Canada has borne those burdens as a nation since its inception, in order that the rates of transportation might be such that what might be described geographically as the natural routes of trade would not fatally interfere with, at least would not predominate in competition with, what was essential to the primary continuance of Confederation—our east-and-west routes of trade.

Therefore we have at all times sought this goal, and never did our people seek it more ardently, never did they seek it more devotedly and insistently, than they do at the present time. At all costs our railway rates must be cut down. I do not say on whom the burden shall wholly fall—it may have to rest on certain classes, probably in part on the whole Dominion; I am not discussing that at all—but the rates of transportation in this country must come down because the present rates are inconsistent with that flow of trade which is an indispensable necessity to the continuance of our country as a real commercial entity.

I do not think there is any great difference of opinion on that score. There is a difference of opinion as to the order and the method in which it shall be done. The railways take one view, and the majority of the people, I think, take another. There must be a disposition to be fair on both sides, but one thing is imperative, and the sooner all come to the conclusion the better: we must have not only lower, but very substantially lower, freight rates in this country generally, and that in a very short time.

Now, what is the history of the treatment of this question? For years it was dealt with in this Parliament. Railways are not a commercial proposition in that independent sense that most others of our industries are. Railways, in the evolution of trade, have become more or less—first less, then more, and now almost wholly—natural monopolies. They must have monopolistic rights of a character; they must have rights of eminent domain. Consequently there grew up in time the doctrine that there must be a review of rates and charges made by companies engaged in railway transportation on the part of the public—that is, on the part of Parliament—differing entirely from that which Parliament would think wise to exercise in relation to ordinary business. That responsibility Parliament itself sought for a long time to discharge, but subsequently it became the function of a committee of the Privy Council. Subsequently, in the year 1903, it was vested by this House in what became known as the Railway Commission of Canada. That Railway Commission was appointed; it was established for the purpose of exercising with respect to all transportation companies that very supervision and review in relation to railway rates, in relation to the distribution of facilities, in relation to the charges to be made for one facility and the other,—in relation, indeed, to all matters that affected the public. It was established, I say, for the purpose of exercising that review in a manner fair to the public on the one hand and fair to the railways on the other. That legislation was concurred in by all parties in this House. From that time there has been vested in the commission this function, and the major part of it has been that control of the rates for which primarily it was created.

Now, I am not here to discuss at this moment at all the discharge of its duties by the Railway Commission. On the whole, it has undoubtedly been a splendid institution and has rendered great service to Canada. What, however, is the history of the immediate question dealt with or presumed to be dealt with by this resolution?

In 1897, before the creation of the Railway Commission, an agreement was entered into between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the government of Canada whereby, in lieu of certain cash subventions connected with the constitution of the Crowsnest Pass Railway, amounting, I understand, to approximately $4,000,000, the railway company on its part undertook indefinitely to grant certain commodity rates, chiefly on grain passing from western Canada through Fort William eastward, but also on live stock passing from provinces east through Fort William westward. In addition, a somewhat arbitrary selection was made of commodities moving westward from the eastern provinces into the prairies, and certain fixed rates were agreed to be adopted by the company as respects those commodities. The railway company lived up to its obligations as respects that agreement continuously until the year 1918. The living up to its obligations on the part of the Canadian Pacific entailed not only the extension of the application of the agreement to its own largely enhanced mileage both west and east, but entailed as well, in order to get business, the application of the same rates on the same or approximately the same commodities, by other competing companies. As a consequence, those rates became virtually universal.

In 1918, the year at which the incidence of the war and all its dangers were at their worst, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States made an order in respect of railway wages known as the McAdoo award. There were many subsequent orders on the part of the Chicago board, and all of these had the result of very materially—indeed, drastically—elevating the whole level of railway wages in that country. Our railways are, to an extent, international—that is, to the extent that many of them cross the boundary. They are international also in this respect: the organizations of employees that man our roads are of an international character. The situation that confronted the governmen, then, was this: These increased wages having taken effect in the United States, there naturally arose a demand—indeed, the demand was inevitable—that they similarly take effect on the Canadian portions of the roads and throughout our country. And beyond question—though we need not go back and put ourselves in the same position just now—beyond question, we would have been confronted at that crucial time with a very serious tie-up—yes, paralysis, if not the destruction of our entire transportation work—had not the demand been met. The railways found themselves in the position that they could not meet the demand, largely because of the general level of the rates, but as well because of the rates in force under the Crowsnest pass agreement. The general level could not equitably be raised unless the impediment of that agreement were removed. Consequently, the government of that time—and hon. members will remember the constitution of the government then—in deference to the imperious demand that the war situation imposed upon us in this country, determined that its duty was courageously to face the situation, to remove the impediment and at all costs bring about conditions under which transportation would move in Canada as it had to move if the war on our part was to be conducted. So that under the powers vested in us by Parliament, certain railway rates recommended to the government unanimously by the Railway Commission of that time were established by Order in Council, P.C. 1863 of the 27th of July, 1918. These rates, let me repeat, were the rates that in the judgment of the Railway Commission were essential if the objects sought were to be gained, namely, the moving of our commerce. They were established, and that they might be, the Crowsnest pass agreement was for the time being suspended. In 1919, as hon. gentlemen well know, though the war was over in the sense that the armistice had for some months been signed, the conditions that the war brought about were more marked, more accentuated, more acute, than they had been even the year before. That, indeed, was in part due to further increases of wages made by the Chicago Railway Board, which had precisely the same effect as respects Canadian wages as the McAdoo award of the previous year. The situation was met that year by the introduction to Parliament—indeed, the same had been done in I think, the two preceding years; one, anyway—of a general revision of the Railway Act of this country. The Government came to Parliament with a revision of that act. In the year 1919 the government of the day came first to the Senate—in an effort to distribute more equally the labours of Parliament—and laid before it the Government's proposals as to the revision of that act. Initially there was not included in it any reference whatever to the Crowsnest pass agreement. That bill came to and passed the House of Commons, but during its progress in this assembly the Government, after conferences with the Railway Commission, introduced subsection 5 of section 325 which in effect gave the Railway Commission free and untrammelled control of rates irrespective wholly of any special agreements that might have been entered into, and irrespective among other things, of the Crowsnest pass agreement itself. That was one of the amendments made in the Commons to the bill that came from the Senate, made at the instance of the Government. It was one among forty-three or forty-four amendments made, all of which amendments afterwards passed the Senate save four. Included in these four was this subsection 5 of section 325. In that form with the four clauses rejected the bill came back to the House of Commons. Managers were appointed for the two Houses, in accordance with our constitution. Those managers considered these four rejected amendments, and they adopted, after debate, subsection 5 of section 325. They suggested certain amendments to the other three, and in that form the managers reported to their respective bodies. Notwithstanding that subsection 5 of section 325 was accepted by the managers for the Senate, in the House of Commons certain objection was then taken to it, chiefly on the part of the present hon. member for New Westminster (Mr.

McQuarrie), who then sat for that constituency. After debate the Prime Minister of the day suggested that it might be well, because he expected, as all of us did, that conditions would change in a short time, to limit the operation of the suspension to a fixed time, and finally he himself introduced in the Commons an amendment to the clause by which the operation of the suspension was limited to three years and was made to expire on the 7th day of July, 1922.

The bill passed the Commons, was accepted by the Senate, and became the law of the country.

While this suspension was in operation the Railway Commission found themselves able on the 1st of January, 1921, to make some reduction, very small, and to make a subsequent reduction on the first of December of the same year. In the summer of 1921, also, a large reduction was made on live stock rates. Previous to that, there had in the year 1920 been a very substantial increase made by the Railway Commission, an increase of forty per cent in eastern Canada, and an increase of thirty-five per cent in western Canada—these, however, accompanied by most important exceptions applicable to coal, applicable to milk, applicable to stone, gravel and other materials, which had the effect of modifying very considerably the forty per cent and the thirty-five per cent increases respectively.

There was an appeal taken from this decision on the part of many bodies, provincial governments and others, to the Governor in Council against the judgment of the Railway Commission. It may be interpolated here that in the original statute, continued ever since, though control was vested in this judicial tribunal, the Railway Commission, of rates and other matters of railway supervision, there was reserved to the government of the day a review in appeal over what the Railway Commission might do, that review being virtually untrammelled so far as the words of the act were concerned. Historically, such review has not been exercised save to the extent of referring the judgment back where it might appear there had been certain considerations of fact not brought to the attention of the Railway Commission in its consideration of the case, or wrong principles affecting public policy adopted. I think that as a matter of record there has been only one change, that all the other interferences consisted merely of references back.

In the fall of 1920, upon appeal, the government of the day, after hearing counsel for all parties and after fully considering the entire question, referred back the order of the Railway Board because in its belief there had been certain principles followed by the board which were not sound principles in point of public policy. One principle to which exception was taken was this: The Railway Board in its judgment had affirmed that in determining what railway rates should be, how far they should go in the way of fixing rates, regard should under the circumstances be had to the financial requirements of the Canadian National system. The government of the day felt that having regard to the basic purposes for which the various units of that system were constructed, the factors in determining the construction being in part colonization, in part political, at all events not wholly commercial, it was not a sound principle to follow for the Railway Commission to say they must be governed in their decision as to what were fair and equitable rates by the financial requirements of the Canadian National Railway system. Therefore, there was a reference back, in order that that principle might be reviewed and that a decision might be arrived at without regard at all to the needs of the Canadian National. There was a reference back on other matters bearing on the alleged discrimination between the rates prevailing in western Canada and in eastern Canada. On the reference back the Railway Commission following the instructions, if you call them that, of the government, following the government's definition of what it believed to be true public policy on these matters, affirmed its decision previously arrived at, affirmed the rates therein set out.

It should, of course, be noted that in the original decision the board provided for monthly returns from all the companies, the three principal companies as it named them, and stated that upon those returns, if it appeared possible any month to effect reductions greater than those provided for in the decision itself, those reductions would be made. Anyway, the board affirmed its previous judgment, and since that time there have been made the two reductions of last year, but no more.

I should have said in the reference back made by the government of the decision of the commission in the fall of 1920, the government requested the Railway Board to make a general review of the whole railway rate position, with a view to seeing what reductions could be made from time to time of a general character, but with a view especially to the elimination of all complaints, if possible, as to discrimination. The board addressed itself to the task imposed upon it by the government, and has been since the fall of 1920 mainly employed in investigations throughout the length and breadth of our country in order to put itself in a position to decide definitely this most complicated, and difficult problem. But the board has stated, as read by the Minister of Railways, that it finds itself now confronted with the very same obstacles that, on the reverse journey, it confronted in the year 1918. In determining now upon reductions, just as then in determining upon increases, it finds its hands tied by the revival on the 6th of July of this year of the old Crowsnest pass agreement, and it virtually says to this Parliament: We cannot decide what we ought to do in the way of reductions of the multiplied tariffs that are before us; we cannot decide the question until we know what is going to become of the Crowsnest pass agreement on the 6th day of July next. And they rightly affirm: We have not the power to say "yes" or "no" as to that revival—that is a matter for Parliament, and for Parliament alone. Consequently the Railway Commission are on sound ground in saying: The burden, in so far as it is on us, is suspended until Parliament acts with respect to the Crowsnest pass agreement. Hence it cannot be argued, I think, with any show of success that there is default at the present time on the part of the Railway Commission. That appears to be the judgment of the Government itself, as evidenced in the address to the Minister of Railways. I could not help but reflect as he was speaking on the probable difficulty that he had in bringing his Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) to that opinion. I could not help but reflect indeed on some of his own speeches delivered in less responsible days; yes on some of the speeches of his leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), but particularly on those defiant and rebellious utterances of the Minister of Agriculture when he laid the whole indictment of our high railway rates at the door of the Railway Commission, and particularly at the door of its chairman, and when he pronounced himself bound on a crusade to Ottawa to dethrone that iniquitous chief.

That brings us to the position as it meets Parliament now. The Government of the day faced with the responsibility—just as we were faced with it in 1918 and in 1919—comes down with this resolution. I remarked in opening that we had historically in this country, though the obstacles were great, though the mountains were high, met them courageously and surmounted them in the main successfully—met them with intelligence, met them with practical business grasp. May I ask what is the spirit and the method with which the Government meets this situation now? It comes to Parliament and asks for a special committee of hon. members. To analyze this resolution, it asks for a special committee to inquire into transportation costs. That is the purpose of the resolution if it means what it says. There is nothing else that the committee is asked to do, save to inquire into the question of transportation costs. In the second paragraph, the resolution instructs the committee to listen to evidence on transportation rates, bearing particularly on the effect of the revival of the old Crowsnest pass agreement. Now the minister says this is a resolution asking Parliament to select a committee to consider the wisdom of the revival of the old Crowsnest pass agreement. It is not. If it was, my attitude to it would be just the same as it is now, but it is not that at all. It is for a committee to go into the whole question of transportation rates and to listen to evidence on the question of the revival of the old Crowsnest pass agreement. Very well let us take it to mean what the Minister of Railways says. Undoubtedly, in order to decide on the Crowsnest pass agreement revival, regard must be had to the general question of transportation rates. Intelligence—yes indeed, complete intelligence — must be exercised in relation to the question of general transportation rates. Of that there is no doubt at all. This committee is going to be a commission, if the Government has its way, to review the whole question of transportation rates and to listen to evidence with a view, I presume, to reporting on the question as to whether it ought to revive the old Crowsnest pass agreement. The resolution recites that this is to be done notwithstanding the fact that the regulation of railway rates is a matter within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commission. Well, I can see that that is a very good reason why there should not be a committee appointed to duplicate the functions of the Railway Commission. That is a very good reason recited by the Government for not doing what it proposes; but the reason, the only reason, recited by the Government for doing what it proposes has very little more relationship to the conclusion than if it had recited that we have had a late and unsatisfactory spring. Why appoint a committee to go into the whole question of transportation rates? The reason, the minister says, is that the railway companies tell him that they are not favourable to a voluntary reduction because they do not know whether it is intended to revive the Crowsnest pass agreement. Well that would be some reason for the Government telling Parliament what it ought to do, and if the Government did not feel that it was in a position to tell Parliament what it thought it ought to do, it would be reason for the Government getting the necessary information by the best means in its power. Now what date is this? This is the 4th day of May, 1922. This suspension expires on the 6th day of July, 1922—almost two months from to-day. We are half-way through the time between the opening of this session and the expiration of this suspension. What is this committee to accomplish in the meantime? This committee is to accomplish what the best experts this country could secure found themselves unable to accomplish, not in weeks or months, but in years. In 1895 the question of railway rates was reviewed by a body under instructions of this Parliament. Many months were so occupied and really no result was obtained. The effort was renewed. In this connection I commend hon. members to an address delivered by Professor MacGibbon, of the University of Alberta, on or about the 19th day of January of this year on this subject—a most illuminating and carefully thought out address. I quote as follows:

> The first investigation into railway rate levels in the Canadian northwest occurred about 1895. Since that date rate grievances have been a fairly constant subject of discussion. A second investigation was begun in 1899, continued until 1902 and eventuated in the creation of the board of railway commissioners in 1903. In turn the board of railway commissioners has found a large part of its occupation in adjudicating upon rate disputes in western Canada.

The Commissioners, previous to 1903, deliberated for three years on this question. Finally they came to Parliament and said: It is so complicated, it is so big, that we commend to Parliament the creation of a judicial body that will take it under its permanent and constant charge and review. That was the conclusion after the last investigation. Since the Railway Commission was created, the great body of its time—as hon. members know, who read the reports of its activities—has been employed through its experts, travelling as it does through the length and breadth of Canada, in studying this question of transportation costs, in determining the application of its principles to the multiplied problems that come before it—because if there is one question that is complicated, if there is one question that is almost endless, if there is one question as to which experts, and only experts, can apply their minds in even a reasonable time to the solution of with any success, it is this question of the rate structure of our railways. What are equitable transportation costs are affected by fifty, yes a hundred, different considerations. The considerations that affect them at one point have no effect at all at another. Different considerations apply. The considerations that affect them as respects one road do not affect them as respects another road. The considerations that affect them as respects one commodity do not affect them as respects another. The considerations that affect them at one time do not affect them at another time at all. All sorts of outside influences and pressures, factors that cannot be eliminated, come from time to time. Why, after the Board, a board that, right from its inception, had devoted its time to this problem, was asked, in the fall of 1920, to make again a systematic, concentrated study of the question in order to determine, just as soon as possible, when reductions might be effected, that board has taken until now and is only now able to act, and then only, after we decide what we want done about the Crowsnest pass agreement. In an address delivered by the vice-chairman of that board just a few weeks ago in the city of Montreal, he elaborated at some length on the many-sidedness of this great question; and amongst his assertions was this, that there had been submitted to the board last year alone no fewer than 75,000 different tariffs of rates by the various railway companies of this country. I am informed that there are to-day no fewer than 250,000 different tariffs of rates in actual effect. Such is something of the nature of the question; and the Government comes to Parliament and says: "We have to decide whether we will continue the suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement or whether we will not, and we are going to ask a committee of Parliament to delve into the whole railway rate question, especially in its bearing on this question, and to give us its recommendation in time to take effect before the 6th day of July." nay, more, in time to take effect much sooner. After the Government comes to Parliament with its judgment and submits it to Parliament, then some time must intervene. The Government's judgment may be: Yes; the Government's judgment may be: No; the Government's judgment, may be: Yes, conditionally; the Government's judgment may be: No, conditionally, and the multiplicity of conditions it might be hard, at this time, to conjecture, conditions that might be possible and right. Whatever the Government's decision may be, one of those two, one of those dozen, the rates that must be formulated, in accordance with the decision of the Government, will be of a different character in the case of one from that of another. All those tariffs of rates must be formulated after the Government decides, after Parliament decides. They must be submitted to the Railway Commission; and the Railway Commission may feel it should hear evidence, indeed, it may feel bound to hear evidence pro and con as to those rates in the light of the decision that the Government arrives at. Consequently, a reasonable time undoubtedly must intervene between the determination of this problem on the part of Parliament and the 6th day of July when the suspension expires. Wher is that reasonable time? I submit that all this subsequent deliberation will take at least some days or weeks, and we have only about eight weeks left. Yet the appointment of this committee is asked on the 4th day of May, and it is asked to come to such intelligent decision, after review of the whole question of transportation costs, as to be able adequately in the course of three, four or five weeks to advise the Government in this regard.

You ask me what should be done? It seems to me that the course of the Government was quite clear. The late government went into this matter with the body that should have the information in its hands. The late government consulted that commission which Parliament created in order that it might have this information in its hands. We consulted that commission in 1918 and, again, in 1920. We acted on the recommendations of that commission. We got the facts from them in order to enable us to say to Parliament, what, in our judgment, ought to be done, and we came to Parliament and, by the voice of a member of the government, we submitted to Parliament the judgment of the government and asked that Parliament review that judgment in the regular constitutional way. I submit that that course is the course that ought to be pursued to-day; yes, it is the course that should have been pursued earlier in the session if the Government we have now had been able to decide anything at all. We should have known what the judgment of the Government was long before this period of the session, in order that a well deliberated decision might be reached in regard to this question and all concerned adjust themselves accordingly.

On what ground does the Government seek to evade its responsibility? What is there about the matter that justifies the Government in seeking to evade its responsibility? It is true that on occasion special committees are the proper course. If a new question presents itself as respects which new facts may be divulged, new angles of approach may be disclosed, and as respects which there is no constitutional tribunal competent to advise the Government, then there may be a case for a special committee. Special committees have frequently been appointed under those circumstances. But this is an old subject, not a new question in any sense, a question that has been before us for years and, moreover, a question, in respect of which, as to the facts that we ought to have at hand, to enable the Government to decide, there is a body sitting, prepared to advise, having gathered information thereon during seventeen years of its existence. Why, then, not go to that body? Why seek to evade responsibility for action by asking a new body, wholly unequipped, wholly inexperienced, in a course of time even ludicrously inadequate, to come to a decision to advise the Government? Let the Government go to the Railway Commission and ask them what will be the effect, on the general question of a reduction of rates, of the expiration of the suspension. Let the Government ask the commission what will be the effect on trade throughout the country if the expiration of the suspension is allowed and the old agreement revives. Let them ask the commission what, in their judgment, will be the effect on organized and every other industry if the old agreement does not revive and if the suspension is made permanent. Let them ask the commission what will be the effect on the earning power of roads, on surpluses, on railway credits. Let them inquire what, if either of these courses is followed, will be these effects in the judgment of the commission that has studied this subject for years. That can easily be done; the commission is in a position to advise the Government. It is the duty of the commission, and it is, doubtless, ready to advise the Government. Let the Government take that course which it should have taken long ago, and come to this House and say: "This is our proposal, our best judgment; to this House we submit that judgment, and we ask for approval of the policy of the Government." Is that not the manly, the courageous course? Is that not the course consistent with responsible government—responsible government about which we heard so wearisomely, so inconsistently all through these later years? That is the course I recommend to the administration. Let the administration take that course and it will give earnest of something that the people of this country are waiting very wearily for the administration to show; it will show courage, resolve and capacity to deal with the practical task of governing this country. Does the administration expect, by the passing of this resolution, that a committee of this House can accomplish in two months, nay, in far less than two months, anything comparable with what the Railway Commission has already accomplished and can advise the Government upon at the present time? Does it expect that? It expects nothing of the sort.

Now, I do not like to indulge in expectations, but I should like to give what seems to me the real purpose of the Government. Whether it is a deliberate purpose or not, I submit that the passing of this resolution is going to have the effect of stalling the whole question. It is going in a few short weeks, to land the Government in a cul-de-sac, and the Government may find itself obliged to come to Parliament and say: "Oh, the committee is still at work; we find that is an enormous question. We find that this is a question the most intricate and complicated that a body of men ever addressed itself to, and the committee is not yet through. We dare not in these circumstances take the responsibility of letting the suspension lapse, and so we come to Parliament and, aside from the merits of the question, as to which we have no opinion at all, we ask that under these special and stringent conditions Parliament agree with us to a continuation of the suspension." That is what I expect. I hope that my words of warning now will have the effect of deflecting the Government from that course. But if they have not that in mind, for the life of me I do not know any proper public object they have in view.

Mr. CRERAR: May I ask a question on that point? Does my right hon. friend himself support the further suspension of the operation of the agreement?

Mr. MEIGHEN: "My right hon. friend" will come to his decision when it is his constitutional obligation to do so. When I was in office, yes, and when the hon. member (Mr. Crerar) was a colleague of mine in the year 1918, he and I in conjunction with our other colleagues took our courage in our hands and came to Parliament with our decision. We made our decision in 1918; we had to make it in the vital interests of the country; and we came to Parliament in 1919 and took responsibility for that decision. We treated Parliament in 1919 precisely as, I submit, it is the duty of the Government to treat this House. We could with more reason than now applies have adopted these evasive tactics, but we did not do so. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when any facts are adduced to show the conscienceless character of the methods they pursued to obtain power, have adopted a uniform reply. Of all things that they have done, there is one respect in which they have been consistent. When they are charged with dereliction of duty and with misleading the public, when they are charged in a wholesale way with swallowing the convictions and professions of a lifetime, they always answer: "Oh, we won the election. We are here and you are there."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the constant and solitary answer of the Government, and hon. gentlemen opposite, unable to agree with me in serious argument, at all events are at one with me in my statement of their defence. In their desperation it is really the only answer they can give; so to my friends opposite a generous pardon is extended now. But I answer them in their own words on this question. Yes; you are there and we are here; and I submit to you the suggestion that you come before Parliament with a policy and thus demean yourselves in a manner becoming men who have courted and are entrusted with power.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Militia and Defence): If my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) could conclude his arguments on any of these questions without making a political attack, it strikes me that his contributions to the debates would have a greater impression on the House. Now, this is a matter which should have no political significance at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAHAM: I see that hon. members cannot imagine anything being discussed in Parliament except from a party standpoint. Well, Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that while the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) who has had an experience of many years, and who admittedly has read the information gathered by the Board of Railway Commissioners for over twenty years, has not yet been able to make up his own mind,—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say I had read it all.

Mr. GRAHAM: Then, I stand corrected. My right hon. friend says he has not read it. I understood from his argument that the information on which the old government had acted carried down to the year 1920-21. I had the impression that it was information received from the Board of Railway Commissioners, as gathered during the past twenty years, upon which the late government had acted. Well, it is rather worse to make a decision without having adequate information than it is to arrive at a conclusion after being seized of that information. However, that is just by the way. I want to point out to my right hon. friend that there is a difference between this Government and the late government, and I am glad of the fact. Under the War Measures Act the late government took advantage of its powers, to do everything itself. This Government proposes to let Parliament have something to say in regard to matters in which the whole people are interested.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is the whole thing.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was in 1919 that the question was dealt with.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Order in Council was passed in 1918, and my hon. friends submitted the matter to Parliament in 1919. But I will not waste the time of the House dealing with these questions; I desire to discuss the matter seriously.

The railway situation in Canada is one that requires not the political but the most serious business attention of every member of the House. We have had differences of opinion, and I could take up the time of this House for hours discussing these differences; but I take the ground that the people of this country are not so much interested now in what either party has done in the past, as in what Parliament at the present time is going to do. We cannot live in the past if we are to make progress. Conditions in this country have changed; the war has altered the viewpoint of many people on many things. We find ourselves to-day confronted with a condition, and not a theory; and it needs practical suggestions and not a rehash of old political arguments if we are to solve the problems before us. If hon. gentlemen, who perhaps have not carefully read the agreement of 1897, will permit me, I shall place on Hansard the gist of that agreement so far as freight rates are concerned. I will not read the whole of it. The Crowsnest pass agreement makes this concession with regard to freight rates:

(d) That a reduction shall be made in the general rates and tolls of the Company as now charged, or as contained in its present freight tariff, whichever rates are now the lowest, for carloads or otherwise, upon the classes of merchandise hereinafter mentioned, westbound, from and including Fort William and all points east of Fort William on the Company's railway to all points west of Fort William on the Company's main line, or on any line of railway throughout Canada owned or leased by or operated on account of the company, whether the shipment is by all rail line or by lake and rail, such reduction to be to the extent of the following percentages respectively, namely:—

Upon all green and fresh fruits, 33⅓ per cent;
Coal oil, 20 per cent;
Cordage and binder twine, 10 per cent;
Agricultural implements of all kinds, set up or in parts, 10 per cent;
Iron, including bar, band, Canada plates, galvanized, sheet, pipe, pipe-fittings, nails, spikes and horse shoes, 10 per cent;
All kinds of wire, 10 per cent;
Window glass, 10 per cent;
Paper for building and roofing purposes, 10 per cent;
Roofing felt, box and packing, 10 per cent;
Paints of all kinds and oils, 10 per cent;
Live stock, 10 per cent;
Wooden ware, 10 per cent;
Household furniture, 10 per cent;

And that no higher rates than such reduced rates or tolls shall be hereafter charged by the company upon any such merchandise carried by the company between the points aforesaid; such reductions to take effect on or before the first of January, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight;

(e) That there shall be a reduction in the company's present rates and tolls on grain and flour from all points on its main line, branches, or connections, west of Fort William to Fort William and Port Arthur and all points east, of three cents per one hundred pounds, to take effect in the following manner:—One and one-half cent per one hundred pounds on or before the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, and an additional one and one-half cent per one hundred pounds on or before the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine; and that no higher rates than such reduced rates or tolls shall be charged after the dates mentioned on such merchandise from the points aforesaid.

It is no wonder that it was a serious step for any government to relieve the railway from those rates, but as a matter of fact conditions were such at that time that I would not criticize the then government for doing almost anything in reason in order to carry out our part in that great war effort. But now the time has come when, according to the order in council, Parliament is called upon to decide a policy.

Let me point out to my right hon. friend that his remarks about the powers of the Board of Railway Commissioners have no bearing whatever on the reference of this question to a committee. The Board of Railway Commissioners as a matter of fact—and I had a good deal to do with the powers given to that board—are in just the position my right hon. friend stated. But he was rather endeavouring to mystify hon. members in dilating on its duties and powers. No one suggests for a moment that this Parliament should deprive the Board of Railway Commissioners of any of its statutory powers. But this question to be decided now is not a question of rates per se as my legal friends would say, it is a question of policy on the part of this Parliament.

Notwithstanding the powers of the Board of Railway Commissioners, my right hon. friend says that that Board cannot exercise these powers until it knows fully under what conditions they are to be exercised. If the Crowsnest pass agreement is to be reverted to, then the Board of Railway Commissioners will have no power to go behind that agreement; they will be confined to the rates named therein so far as that agreement is concerned. But if Parliament in its wisdom decides to defer for a further period the restoration of this agreement, then the Board of Railway Commissioners could give their decision as to what these rates ought to be.

This is not a new question; it was up many times during the period I had the honour to be at the head of the Railway Department. At its inception the Board of Railway Commissioners was clothed with certain powers, which were enlarged from time to time, until to-day the jurisdiction of the Board is far wider than that of any similar commission in the world; but, of course, as I said before, the statute embodying the Crowsnest pass agreement is outside the scope of the board's jurisdiction.

At one period after this agreement was made the question of rates came up. It was argued on many sides that at that time, conditions having changed, and the Board of Railway Commissioners having been appointed to deal with rates, some arrangement ought to be made by which the agreement would be abrogated. The government of that day, believing that a contract made under the circumstances was binding, could not see how the agreement could be displaced.

We are not discussing the powers of the Board of Railway Commissioners, we are discussing what should be the policy of Parliament with reference to the Crowsnest pass agreement, and to my mind a decision cannot be properly arrived at until we are seized of all the facts. I leave it to the fairness of both sides of the House to say whether I am not right in stating that at the present moment we are not in the position we were in when that agreement was made; we are not even in the position we occupied five years ago. We are here representing people who have a dual capacity, they being both taxpayers and part owners of a great national system of railways, and therefore interested in what is to become of those railways. In years gone by they had no such interest except to a very limited extent, that is, in the Intercolonial railway and the Prince Edward Island railway, comprising less than two thousand miles altogether; whereas our National Railway system to day is twenty-two thousand miles in extent. These same people also have interests as consumers and producers. The management of our National Railway system—the railway system of the people—tell us that if we revert to the Crowsnest pass agreement it will very materially injure their property. We are here representing them as directors of the people's property on the one hand; on the other hand, the producers and consumers say: We are being very materially hurt now by the existing transportation conditions. The railway companies come to us and make representations privately that they believe that they can convince a committee of the House that conditons are such as to warrant some amelioration of the position the railways would be in—their railways and our railways—if this agreement was allowed to come into force again.

Now, this House, as a House, Mr. Speaker, has no power or method of hearing every side of this story except through a committee. We cannot sit here and listen to arguments by the railway companies and by our own railways; but a committee of the House could hear those arguments and then report to Parliament what the situation is, when the Government would be able to give a decision. My right hon. friend is altogether mistaken in thinking there is any idea on the part of the Government of evading responsibility. But a government that believes in fairness is of the opinion that this matter should not be decided until all parties are heard. That is British fair play, and that is what the committee is suggested for.

To recapitulate, Mr. Speaker, here is the situation so far as the Government is concerned. Unless some legislation takes place the statute embodying the Crowsnest pass agreement will come into force again on July 6; such legislation will not be passed unless good cause is shown; and the opportunity for presenting that cause can only be had through a committee. That is the only fair way, in fact it is the only way by which we can arrive at a just decision. The Government, I repeat, has no desire to escape its responsibilities, but it does believe in fairness to our own railways as well as to others, and it believes also that the only way in which the various views of the parties interested can be presented to this House is through a committee. Then, upon receiving the report of that committee, Parliament and the Government will decide what course ought to be taken.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the motion under discussion is not expressed nearly so clearly in the motion itself as in the words that have fallen from my hon. friend, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Kennedy) this afternoon, and later from my hon. friend, the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Graham).

Reduced to its essential meaning, the motion resolves itself into nothing more and nothing less than this, that a committee of this House shall be selected to consider whether or not the Crowsnest pass agreement, respecting railway freight rates in this country and which has been under suspension for almost four years, shall be allowed once more to come into effect, be suspended for a further period, or be indefinitely set aside. That is the purpose of the resolution, and it is from that angle that I propose to discuss it.

I listened with a great deal of interest, as I always do, to the speech made by my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) who leads the hon. members to my right. He gave a very interesting historical review of railway conditions in this country during the past twenty-five years. He chided the Government—possibly with some little reason—upon not having a policy on this question, but he sat down without giving any intimation whatever to this House or to the country where he himself stands with regard to this important matter. My right hon. friend is an adept at side-stepping in political debates, and he certainly outshone himself this afternoon, because no one by any stretch of the imagination, could tell from his remarks what his position is on this question.

[Mr. Graham.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the Government will say, and if my hon. friend will say, that my stating what ought to be done is necessary to enable them to decide, I do not think I would object to saying so.

Mr. CRERAR: Well, that throws a little more illumination on the position of my right hon. friend, but certainly not a great deal. So far as I am concerned, I have no hesitation in stating to the House my position on this motion. It resolves itself, as I said a moment ago, into the question whether or not we shall give consideration to a further suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement and its effect on railway rates in this country. I have, after careful consideration, come to the conclusion that that agreement should not further be suspended, and taking that position, Mr. Speaker, I cannot consistently support a motion to refer to a committee of this House the question whether or not it shall be further suspended. I think it is quite a proper thing for this or any government to seek the views of the House, through a special committee, on questions of public importance. We have followed that procedure in respect to the Pensions Committee. It might be argued with as much force, I think, by my right hon. friend or by any other hon. member that it is the duty and the function of the Government to bring down a fixed policy in respect to the question of pensions, and not send it to a pensions committee. I cite that merely as an illustration. I do not occupy common ground with my right hon. friend when he chides the Government for its refusal to reach a decision upon this matter. I base my opposition to the motion on a different ground altogether—on the ground that this agreement should not further be suspended, but that it should again come into operation so far as its effect upon railway rates in this country is concerned. I propose—and I shall be as brief as possible—to give the House the reasons why I have reached that conclusion.

There is no doubt, I am sure, in the minds of any hon. member of this House—or, indeed, in the mind of any person in this country—as to the great need of cheap transportation costs, in relation to both freight and passengers. The vast distances of the country; the sparseness of the population; the necessity of binding the different sections of this country together—and that can be done only by a full and complete understanding of each other's needs—these constitute the strongest reasons why we should have the lowest possible transportation rates consistent with sound business necessities. Indeed, the Intercolonial railway was built at the expense of the people of Canada for the specific purpose of linking the Maritime provinces down by the sea with the other provinces further west, in order that better and cheaper facilities for travel should be afforded to people visiting the one section of the country or the other, and in order as well that there might be lower transportation costs in freights. These were the chief considerations that led to the construction of the Intercolonial railway. When the Canadian Pacific railway project was launched, it was for precisely the same reason: that the great West and the great province of British Columbia might be linked up with the eastern part of Canada. Later we had the Canadian Northern; we had the National Transcontinental; we had the Grand Trunk Pacific—and for what reason? The whole argument in support of these projects was to furnish competition in the matter of railway freight rates and to bring down transportation costs as respects both freight and passengers.

If we look over the railway history of this country we find—and my authority for this is the Drayton-Acworth report, prepared in part by my hon. friend the late Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton)—that the total assistance given by public bodies in this country to railways in Canada up to the end of 1916, in cash, in values of lands, and in bond guarantees, reached the tremendous figure of $968,000,000. Now, why was that done? Mainly, if not altogether, for the purpose of ensuring cheap transportation costs, of reducing rates on freight and passenger traffic. And I say that that whole purpose was bound up with the laudable object of linking up the different sections of this country, as indeed they must be linked up if Canada is ever to attain national eminence.

We come now to a consideration of this Crowsnest pass agreement, which, after all, is the real bone of contention in the motion at present before the House. The leader of the Opposition has sketched the history of this agreement—indeed, the Minister of Railways did the same—and I want in passing to make a brief reference to it. This agreement was made by the Parliament of Canada in 1897 or 1898—I forget which, at the moment—with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I draw the attention of the House to the fact that it was a specific agreement made between the people of Canada, acting through their Parliament, and a great transportation system. Under its terms the government of Canada subsidized the Crowsnest Pass railway, a subsidiary line of the Canadian Pacific, to the extent of $11,000 a mile, totalling, as my right hon. friend stated, something over $4,000,000. In return, the Canadian Pacific agreed to certain maximum rates on a considerable list of commodities passing from eastern Canada to western Canada and also affecting a few commodities, chiefly grain, passing from western Canada to points in the East. That agreement continued in effect, as has been pointed out, until 1918.

I was in complete accord with the position that was taken by the government of the day at that time in respect to this matter. I was then a member of the Government, and I know that there was no other course open to the government and to Parliament at that time than to abrogate temporarily the effect of this agreement in respect to rates. The reason for that has been stated here this afternoon. We were living under war conditions; the cost of living had mounted; railway wages had to be advanced; the cost of coal and of materials had advanced at a very rapid rate. Consequently, under those conditions, it was necessary that our Canadian railways should be placed in a position where they could efficiently carry on during the war. As far as I know, while there was some criticism raised to the action by Parliament, on the whole it commended itself to the judgment of the people of Canada.

The agreement was first set aside by Order in Council. Later, in 1919, an amendment was made to the Consolidated Railway Act, then passing through Parliament, suspending the operation of that agreement for a further period of three years. I say of that amendment also, although I had left the government before it was introduced, it was necessary at that time. But the heavy burden of freight rates did not oppress the people of Canada at that time in the way they do to-day. Why? It is true that freight rates had gone up, but the prices that the farmers were receiving for their products had also gone up. Take the prices they were receiving for their grain, for their live-stock, for their dairy products; take the prices the lumbermen were getting for their lumber, and the prices the flour millers were getting for their flour; these had all advanced greatly, and when you take into consideration the prices that were then received for these commodities, the freights as they were fixed at that date were not unduly oppressive. But if they were not onerous then, the rates are certainly onerous now. In my humble judgment there is no one thing to-day that more directly affects the business prosperity of Canada than the excessive freight rates which obtain at the present time. I have stated that before, and I think my statement is supported by the sound business sense of the people of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I have seen resolutions passed by boards of trade, I have seen representations made by provincial governments, I have seen representations made by other bodies, all looking towards a reduction of freight rates and urging in the strongest possible language the need there is for a substantial reduction in transportation costs in this country.

If this motion carries, we admit at once that the question of the Crowsnest pass agreement is open to debate, and as far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to place myself in that position. The agreement was made in 1897 for what purpose? The railway company secured a valuable cash subsidy from the Parliament of Canada, and these rates were fixed, and for what purpose? They were fixed not only to benefit western Canada; they were fixed as much to benefit eastern Canada. The railways wanted financial assistance and the government gave it. To assist the factories of eastern Canada, to assist the development of business in this Dominion, these rates were fixed in return, so that commodities might more easily pass from eastern Canada to the great prairies of the West, which were then opening up in all their vast extent. The arrangement, I submit, was beneficial to western Canada, and it was necessary also for the prosperity of eastern Canada. We have had in Canada for the last forty years a system of protection so far as our fiscal policy is concerned. The net result of that policy of protection has been to drive business east and west to a greater extent than would otherwise have been the case, and if you are going to compel the farmers of western Canada, the labouring people, the business men, the merchants, the professional men and every one else in western Canada, to buy their goods from eastern Canada, the matter of transportation costs from the East to the West must be taken into consideration. Consequently, if it were essential that we should have as low freight rates as possible at that time, I say it is just as essential that we should have them now.

As far as the commodities of western Canada are concerned, it is equally essential that these reductions take place. I speak from personal knowledge, Mr. Speaker, when I make this statement: as a result of the increase in freights on lumber, for instance, that took place in 1918, lumber mills, not one or two, but many along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway in northern British Columbia closed their doors and they have not operated since, and the one reason for that is that the increase in freight costs on lumber made it impossible for the lumber manufacturers to sell their products in the markets they had hitherto served. The same is true in respect to the shipment of fish from the Pacific coast to the prairie. In the prairie regions we are dependent for our deep sea fish mainly on the Pacific ocean. Consequently, the very fact of the increase in freight rates affects also the shipment of that commodity.

I will give the House an even more pressing case than those I have mentioned, and that is the effect that these increased freight charges have had on the shipment of grain from the prairies. The provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan, speaking on this question in the Saskatchewan legislature a few months ago, when that legislature unanimously passed a resolution asking that the Crowsnest pass agreement come back into effect, made the statement that he knew of cases, not isolated ones, but hundreds of cases, where farmers had not threshed their grain because the price they would get for it when it reached the market at Fort William or Port Arthur would not be sufficient to pay the freight charges after threshing costs had been paid. I have heard, I believe reliably of cases, not isolated ones by any means, where railway agents are insisting on farmers prepaying their freight on grain going to Fort William because they are not going to take any chances of the grain not realizing sufficient when it reaches Fort William to pay the transportation costs. I draw the attention of the House to that fact and I say that this country cannot prosper under those conditions.

What effect has that on eastern Canada?—you ask me. The best market that the factories of eastern Canada have today are the prairie provinces of this Dominion, as every member of this House knows. The great industry of western Canada is the industry of agriculture. That is a truism which needs no argument. If on the one hand these main producers of wealth in western Canada are to be handicapped by the excessive costs of getting their products to market, and if, on the other hand, the merchants, the manufacturers, and business generally is to be handicapped by the high cost of freight going to western Canada, how can we expect the country to prosper? How under those conditions can you expect your factories to open, how can you expect to relieve unemployment in eastern Canada, how can you expect to bring about a general revival of business in this country? It cannot be done. I say that on that ground also, it is of the first importance that the rates on freight particularly should come down in this country.

There is another argument; my hon. friend the Minister of Railways made allusion to it to-day. It is to my mind an argument that carries a very great deal of force. You can raise freight rates in this country to a point where you will absolutely destroy business. It is true, also, that you can bring them down to a point where you will destroy the profit of the transportation companies, thereby bringing about inefficiency in transportation. Somewhere between these two points must be found the medium, the basis upon which rates will be fixed. It is absolutely essential, if business is to be revived in this country that freight rates come down. I submit, sir, that when we maintain freight rates at the existing levels of today we are killing the goose that lays the golden egg as far as furnishing business to the railways is concerned, and it is a short-sighted policy that should not receive the approval of this House.

It has been argued—I have not heard the argument here but I have seen it presented outside, and I wish to make an allusion to it—that if a reduction in freight rates takes place it will have a serious effect on the earnings of our Canadian railways —that it will have a serious effect on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that it will have a very serious effect on the National Railways. I wish to examine that argument very briefly. When the question of freight rates was before the Railway Commission a few years ago—and indeed, I believe throughout the whole history of the last few years in the consideration given to this matter by the Railway Commission —the needs of the National Railways were never taken as the basis upon which the rates would be fixed. The basis upon which the Railway Commission fixed rates was the needs of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was recognized that it would be impossible for the Railway Commission to fix rates such as would be required to enable the National Railways to pay. Consequently the National Railways, as a factor in the fixing of rates, were left out of the equation, and I think I am quite right in stating that the rates were fixed primarily upon the needs of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Now, it is argued in some quarters that it is necessary to keep the Canadian Pacific Railway prosperous in order that the credit of Canada may be maintained; that it is necessary that the Canadian Pacific Railway be furnished with rate fixtures to enable it to earn sufficient surplus to pay the dividends on its stock. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that argument is not a sound argument. The credit of Canada, the national financial position of Canada, is not fixed by the balance sheet of the Canadian Pacific Railway; nor is it fixed by the balance sheet of any other corporation. Upon what does national credit rest? It rests on the general prosperity of the country, and it rests equally on the security the country gives in the way of law and order — the security it gives to foreign capital when it invests here, the security that is absolutely essential if prosperity is to be maintained. These are the factors which establish the national credit and not the balance sheets of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the balance sheets of any other business concern in this country. We have sometimes made a very great mistake in our attitude of mind toward that question. I have nothing against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; I want to see it prosper. It has prospered splendidly in Canada, and there is no Canadian but is proud of the record the Canadian Pacific Railway has made; but if we are to argue that the Canadian Pacific Railway must be maintained in the position where it can earn the dividends on its investment irrespective of everything else, then I say we are not on a sound basis in the consideration of the matter.

Let me point out another consideration: If we assume for the moment that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would be unable to pay its dividends for the year, would that be a very serious matter from the point of view of the national interest? There is scarcely a single railway in the United States that has not, at some period or other in its career, gone through the hands of a receiver. Has that affected the national credit of the United States? Why, until within comparatively recent years the United States was a great borrower of foreign capital—borrowing in Great Britain, borrowing in France, in Holland, in the countries of Europe that were prepared to lend capital for development purposes in North America; and the experience of the United States railways in this respect had no effect whatever in fixing the national credit of the republic. Another fact too that should not be overlooked is that Canada has done very well by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not think it is improper, or unfair, in any sense to bring that argument up at the present time.

5 p.m.

Quoting again from the Drayton-Acworth report we find, according to that report, that the total assistance given by the public of Canada to the Canadian Pacific Railway reached the handsome total of $228,000,000 since that road was brought into existence. But the Canadian Pacific Railway also enjoyed other advantages in the carrying on of its work in Canada. Under the agreement by which it was chartered by the Canadian Parliament it was given exemption from taxation not only on its works, that is on its railway works, but also on the immense land grants it received from the federal government by way of assistance at the time the project was undertaken. At that time I think it was generally understood by Parliament, at any rate it was the general opinion of the country, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was given exemptions from taxation on its lands for a period of twenty years. But it was later held by the courts that that period did not begin from the date the land grants were given but from the time the lands were selected. What is the result? The Canadian Pacific Railway Company hold their millions of acres of land in western Canada and have not even yet in many cases, paid any taxes on those lands.

That was the result of the agreement entered into by the Parliament of Canada with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but that agreement imposed serious hardships. In many districts in western Canada it was almost impossible to form school districts because the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway were exempt from taxation, and the burden was so great on the other ratepayers of the district that they were almost unable to carry on their educational work.

Now that agreement, Mr. Speaker, was made with the company when the railway was undertaken, and the people and the Parliament of Canada have scrupulously lived up to every letter of it from that day to this. I submit that now we are getting back again to normal conditions, when the prices of natural products in Canada have gone down in many cases to below the pre-war figures, it is not too much to ask the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to live up to the agreement it made with the Canadian people when this Crowsnest pass railway was built and when, in return for $4,000,000 cash subsidy, it agreed that the rates on commodities,—on a large list of commodities,—would never go beyond a certain point. I submit, Sir, it is not too much to ask the Canadian Pacific Railway Company now to respect the letter of the agreement that was made at that time just as scrupulously, as fully and as faithfully as the Canadian Parliament and the Canadian people have observed the agreement they made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company when that great enterprise was undertaken.

There is another fact to be remembered. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is not in a difficult position financially. I read, with a great deal of pride as a good Canadian, the balance sheet of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a few days ago —pride in this sense, that we had a great transportation company that was in such a sound position financially. But I have studied the balance sheet of the company and I find that it has reserves not in the tens of thousands, not in the hundreds of thousands, not in the millions, but in the hundreds of millions of dollars. I have no fault to find particularly with that but why, Mr. Speaker, are reserves created by any business concern, why are reserves created by a transportation company just the same as an industrial concern? The reserves are created as a provision against a rainy day when the earning power may go down a little. Then these reserves can be drawn upon to make good the deficiency. I submit that should the Crowsnest pass agreement go back into effect, even should it have the effect temporarily—it would not be for more than a year or so at the very outside—of preventing the company from making the earnings that it has made in the past, that its dividends to its shareholders could very well be cared for out of the handsome reserves which have been created during the course of a long period of time.

We now come to a consideration of National Railway matters. I said a moment ago that the needs of the National Railways were never taken into consideration by the commission when rates were being fixed; and it is of course absurd for any person, either here or outside, to consider the proposition to having railway rates fixed on a basis that will enable the National Railways to pay. That cannot be done. I shall have something to say upon that, I hope, when the estimates of the Minister of Railways come up again. This is not the time, nor the place, nor the occasion to discuss that question. I merely submit that rates cannot be fixed on the basis of enabling the Canadian National lines to pay, and, consequently that factor may be omitted from our consideration of the case. The Canadian National lines are largely colonization lines, they pass through new territory, and I should like to say, just in passing, that I have an abundant faith in the future of our Canadian National railways. As I have said before, as I say now and, as I shall take occasion to say again whenever an opportunity arises, they are a good potential asset for this country and they will eventually prove a great asset. I have a good deal of sympathy with the Minister of Railways in the position in which he finds himself in connection with the National railways. I think, judging from the statement that was submitted to the House the other day, he is tackling the proposition energetically, and I hope we shall soon get on common ground as regards all political parties, when we shall treat this national undertaking as a business proposition and free it absolutely, continuously and forever from any consideration of party politics in its administration.

Allusion has been made to the difficulties that will face this committee if it undertakes this work. I can see no prospect that such a committee, undertaking the programme that was laid down by the Minister of Railways this afternoon, and that was supported by the Minister of Militia, can reach any intelligent conclusion in this matter in the time at its disposal. We know all the factors that enter into freight rates, all the circumstances surrounding the question; and simply to say: "We can appoint a committee of this House that will hear evidence on this matter and bring in a decision that will enable us to reach an intelligent conclusion upon it," is altogether beyond the possibilities of the case. When we survey conditions in Canada to-day, we know they are difficult, if, indeed, not desperate. Every one, I am sure, is glad to note that there are signs of revival. To bring about a revival of prosperity in this country, a revival of business, to start the wheels of industry going again, to give encouragement to the people on the farms to produce their stuff, to give employment to labour, one of the first and necessary steps is to bring down transportation costs in this country, and for that reason I am opposed to any further suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement in this case. It is stated that dire results will follow if this scale of rates again comes into effect. I cannot see that such will be the case; but even if it should prove, by actual experience, an undue handicap upon our railways, why could this Parliament not, a year or two years hence, again consider the matter? Let us get back to the old scale of rates; let us see what effect that will have on business conditions in this country; and then, if it proves unduly burdensome to our railways, it is always open to this Parliament to give further consideration to it. But, in the meantime, this agreement should not be further suspended. This Parliament should allow that legislation to lapse; we should come back under the scale of that agreement; and if we do that, we shall be taking perhaps the longest step we can in the immediate future towards restoring sound business conditions in this country.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, I should like, in a word, to endorse the position taken by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar). I feel that the industrial sections of the West will agree with the position taken by the agriculturists. The right hon. the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) says that it is necessary that freight rates should be reduced in order to ensure the continuance of Confederation. May I suggest that it is necessary that freight rates should be reduced in order that the economic life of the West may be maintained at all? The West occupies somewhat a different position economically from that of the East. The West has been built up entirely on a basis of the railways. Had we not the great transportation systems to the western plains, those plains would still be uninhabited and uninhabitable. The extent to which people can carry on in the West is absolutely dependent upon their transportation facilities, and only those who have lived in the West can quite appreciate the position in which the West has been placed during the last few years because of high freight rates. We are there as producers, we are there as consumers; and we have to pay both as producers and as consumers. That is true not merely of our agriculture, but of our fishing, our lumbering, our mining and other primary interests, we cannot begin to get these things started so long as freight rates remain as they are to-day. I take it that the railroads were built primarily to serve the people. Immense sums were granted in order that the Canadian Pacific railway should be built to serve the people; but to-day we find that the people cannot afford to use the railways. There are cases where goods are perishing in the fields because the producers cannot afford to ship them to the towns.

I think the hon. member for Marquette has already called attention to the fact that, in the middle West, we cannot get lumber from the west coast simply because of prohibitively high freight rates. It, therefore, becomes absolutely essential that these freight rates should be reduced. I do not know that a great deal of consideration need be given to the exact position of the Canadian Pacific in this regard. We all recognise that that railway has enjoyed a period of great success in the past. We recognise that subsidiary companies have been built up. Why should that railway not take its share, with other industries or with other concerns, at a time when there is more or less depression?

The suggestion to appoint a committee evidently looks to a discussion of the whole question. Supposing that this committee brings in a recommendation that the Crowsnest pass agreement should be still further suspended, where would we be then? I would just like to say that, in my best judgment, the West, at least, simply would not tolerate such a recommendation as that. We could not do so with the tens of thousands of unemployed throughout the West to-day, and with conditions stagnant as they are to-day. We simply must have some relief, and it seems to me that this question ought not to be referred to some committee to talk over for weeks; but rather that since the question is one of principle, the discussion should go on in this House and the principle should be decided here.

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of repeating a good deal of what has been said this afternoon, I desire to say a few words upon the resolution now before the House for consideration. I agree with the hon. member who leads the Progressive party (Mr. Crerar) that the essential and vital question involved in this resolution relates to the Crowsnest pass agreement, which came into effect in 1897. I admit that that is a very important question. It is an important question to hon. gentlemen who sit directly opposite me and who represent constituencies in the prairie provinces. I wish to remind them, however, that it is not entirely a western question; it is as much an eastern question. And, more than that, I say that by a concurrence of events of recent years, and by reason of the economic and financial conditions of the country, it is a national problem and must be viewed in that light; if it is not so considered, we cannot reach a fair and sound conclusion. I admit that potentially a very great principle is involved in this matter, and a very difficult question is before hon. gentlemen of this House to determine. And we must settle it. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Kennedy) deemed it prudent on his part to submit these matters to a committee, and the issue before us this afternoon is whether or not that request, in all the circumstances, is a fair one, a reasonable one, a practical one, and one which should be conceded by the House. The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) did not, I think, give a very fair rendition of the resolution now before us. It may be quite true that the introductory section of the resolution is expressed in too general terms. The important part of the resolution, however, is the enacting clause, which contains the submission which the minister asks us to put before the committee. Let me read it:

> That, in the circumstances, it is advisable to afford opportunity to all interested parties to submit their views upon the subject matter of the inquiry to the said committee with particular regard to the effect of the rates established by the Crowsnest pass agreement upon Canadian National railways and other lines, as well as upon agricultural development and Canadian industry generally;

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend referred to the previous part of the resolution as being merely introductory. May I call his attention to the fact that it is not? The previous part of the resolution is an enacting clause. It says that, notwithstanding, and so forth, it is advisable that a Select Special Committee should be appointed to make inquiry into the question of railway transportation costs.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): And still I adhere to my statement that the language used in the first section is very general. It refers to conferences between the Government and the heads of the railways; it refers to the Crowsnest pass agreement; but it is in the second part of the resolution that we find the enacting clause. Now, having read that clause, I would point out that this resolution does not call for an investigation into railway rates generally. That would be an impossible task to impose on a committee or, indeed, upon Parliament; for few hon. gentlemen in this House, if any, are competent to express an opinion upon the structure of railway rates. We have not had the experience or the training to enable us to do so, and with the exception perhaps of the last Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), hardly any hon. gentleman in this House would venture to give an opinion upon railway rates in detail.

In essence this resolution asks that a committee inquire into the effect of the Crowsnest agreement upon the Canadian National Railways. Thus the matter becomes a national problem. It is not sectional; it affects the whole of the country; it affects every citizen of Canada. And if it increases taxation the question is one upon which all interests must be heard. The leader of the Opposition objects to the creation of a parliamentary committee. He states that the Government should itself initiate a policy and present it to Parliament for consideration. Let me point out that this is a political question. It is not altogether a railway rate question though, that, of course, is involved. The Crowsnest pass agreement is one that was validated by Parliament; it was made effective by an act of Parliament. It was considered by the Parliament of Canada, and if the suspension is to be continued, or if we are to go back to the agreement, surely Parliament has a right to express an opinion upon the subject. In that case, it has a right to secure such evidence and facts as it deems necessary, from any source, and for that purpose a select committee is considered essential.

I would refer to the remarks made by the member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar). He was disposed, I thought, to consider this question largely from the standpoint of the conditions that prevailed in Canada when the agreement was entered into. He disregarded new factors that have come into the situation. He disregarded the fact that a few years ago we passed through a great war which has seriously affected many things we considered long ago settled, and affected, particularly, the economic interests not only of Canada but, as well, of the whole world. That fact must not be disregarded. Another factor has entered the situation. Since 1897, the people of Canada, through their Government, have become the owners of a vast railway system, and this ownership was not among the conditions that existed when the agreement was made. Let me say here that I am not taking a stand one way or the other in respect of the rate agreement referred to as the Crowsnest pass agreement. I confess frankly that I have never had an opportunity of studying it carefully. Living as I do in eastern Canada, there was no very great reason why I should take as much interest in the matter as would hon. gentlemen who live in the West. I am merely indicating the importance of the issue that is before us in the resolution now under consideration. The average member of Parliament is not, and cannot be, informed as to the facts; and I go further and say that it is quite probable that the country as a whole is not well informed of those facts. Before we undertake to make a decision in this matter, surely it is not an unfair request to ask, at least, that a committee be appointed to secure such facts as are relevant to the issue and as will assist the House in coming to a determination thereon.

Before I refer to some other matters I might consider one or two further remarks made by the leader of the Progressive party.

There was a time, possibly, when the Crowsnest pass rate agreement, as I have already stated, was purely a western question—when it affected largely the Canadian Pacific Railway and the people living in the territories served by that railway. It is a bigger question to-day. It does not affect the Canadian Pacific Railway and western interests solely; other railways and other interests are involved. My hon. friend (Mr. Crerar) said that if the revival of this rate agreement caused the Canadian Pacific Railway to pass its dividend, that perhaps would not be against the national interest. Well, of course if that occurred it would be bad for the shareholders. But I fear wider interests are involved. What would it indicate if that railway were unable to earn the dividend upon its stock held by the investing public? Would it not mean that there had been a recession in railway business, which in turn would indicate that there was a decline of activity in the commerce of the country? And if that condition affected the Canadian Pacific Railway disastrously, would it not of necessity affect adversely all other interests in the country? Therefore, I say it is a bigger question than the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway alone.

But I admit for the moment that I am not interested as to whether or not the Crowsnest pass agreement, if again put into effect, would cause such a diminution in the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway that the company would have to pass its dividends. We need not be concerned at the moment about that phase of the question. A railway never of itself originates or creates traffic. All commodities that are exchanged are produced by some section of our people, and a business transaction represents a sale and purchase on the part of two people; the sale and purchase must be an accomplished fact and must occur before transportation service is requisitioned at all. In other words, a railway only functions after individuals have consummated business and commercial transactions.

I am sure no Canadian is pleased with the fact that the Canadian National Railways during the past year operated at a deficit of considerably over fifty million dollars—a deficit which must be made up by taxation. And to what is it due? It is due, of course, to the fact that the country is not normal in its commercial and industrial processes. Therefore we have this tremendous deficit, which is a severe burden upon the people. I am confident that everyone is interested in having these deficits ended and the railways brought to such a condition that they can at least pay their operating expenses. And the cases are similar. If our railways are prosperous to the extent even of paying only their operating expenses, it means that the country is prosperous to that degree at least; and I wish to protest against the view which I understood my hon. friend from Marquette to impress upon this House, that it was not an important question, viewed from the national standpoint, whether or not our railways earned operating expenses or paid dividends.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is involved in this resolution? The history of the Crowsnest pass agreement has already been given to the House by the Minister of Militia (Mr. Graham). That agreement was first entered into in 1897, and under it the Canadian Pacific Railway Company undertook the construction of certain railway mileage in British Columbia, primarily for the purpose of developing mining in a certain region of that province; that was the reason given to Parliament at the time. The Canadian Pacific Railway, or other interests, asked the government of the day to pay a subsidy of $11,000 per mile, and they received something like $3,000,000 for the construction of that road and the carrying out of the contract. As a consideration for that assistance, the railway company on their part undertook to fix maximum rates on fifteen commodities, these commodities moving from east of Port Arthur to western points; they also agreed upon maximum rates for wheat and other grain moving from the West to the East as far as Port Arthur. This agreement, I have no doubt, was designed to meet particularly the conditions then prevailing in the West. The agreement continued in force, without variation, until August, 1918, when under the War Measures Act the 25 per cent rate increase was granted and superseded those fixed maximum rates. In 1919, as has already been stated by several hon. members, clause 325 of the Railway Act was passed with a view of legislatively suspending the operation of the agreement. That suspension comes to an end next July, unless this Parliament further continues it.

Now, in order that the Government might be in a position to determine whether the suspension should be continued, or whether the agreement should be allowed to go into effect again with some variations, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Kennedy) has asked the House for leave to submit to a committee the whole question, with the purpose I assume—I can imagine no other purpose—of obtaining all the facts relating to this particular matter. I think the issue is important enough to warrant the establishment of this committee for that purpose, and I intend to support the resolution on that ground.

What facts do we need to be seized of? It is stated that if this agreement is allowed to go into effect again next July the Canadian Pacific Railway will operate at a deficit. I do not know whether that is true or not. That has been stated to me by some persons who are not railway experts and know very little of the actual situation, and I would not like to be guided to my conclusions by such statements. Are there many hon. members who really feel they are sufficiently conversant with all the facts involved, to be in a position to pass judgment upon the issue at once? I can hardly understand any hon. gentleman taking that position, unless he has been intimately associated in his life work with the structure of railway rates and operation. If, however, there is such an hon. member he might well be willing to pass judgment upon the whole issue without hearing any further evidence. I say we should be informed, so far as information can be obtained with any degree of exactness, what will be the effect upon, say, the Canadian Pacific Railway if the Crowsnest pass agreement is revived? That is a big factor in the issue, and speaking for myself at least, I should like to have it authoritatively from some person. I do not know how we can get that except through the avenue of a committee. If it comes directly from the railway, its reliability will be at once challenged; if it comes from the Railway Board, the allegation may be made that some members of the board are prejudiced in the matter and that the information given cannot be relied upon. As I have said, this issue has changed very considerably in the last two years. It has changed since section 325 of the act was put into legislative form. It did not require very much courage to pass that section at that time. Nobody objected to it. The condition of western interests then was very different from what it is to-day. The great wheat production of that section of Canada was being officially bought and sold and the question of railway rates was not a very important one, because they were not then, I think, borne by the producer of wheat. At any rate, the sentiment of the country was such that at that time it did not require much courage on the part of the government or of Parliament to suspend the Crowsnest pass agreement, or to enact section 325 of the Railway Act.

We have become recently the owners of a great system of railways, and it is proposed that the country continue that ownership—a tremendous experiment, indeed, which we all hope will result in success. A few years ago in the West the Canadian Northern, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Pacific were competing for western traffic. With a situation like that prevailing to-day, competition might very well regulate the rates. But that is not the situation to-day. These railways, so far as they have come under Government ownership, have been consolidated—or practically consolidated—I may say for the purposes of my argument, even though I be not literally correct. The Canadian National Railways are operating at a very large annual deficit, to say nothing of failure to pay the interest on the moneys which they owe to the public. Any deficit incurred by reason of the operations of the Canadian National railways must be paid by the people of this country; the people of the west and the people of the east must pay their proportion as well as the people of Central Canada. If we have annual large railway deficits made up by taxation from the pockets of the people, we cannot hope for a revival in business or industry.

Mr. SPENCER: My hon. friend says that the deficits come out of the pockets of the people. Where do the railway rates come from?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The railway rates ultimately come from the consumer, the man who buys the thing that is produced and transported. The more money that is taken from the people to make up railway deficits, the less money they will have to buy the commodities which the country produces. Whatever way you look at this question, you find it is one which affects all the people of Canada, all sections and all interests. If the Crowsnest pass agreement be again put into operation and the result is an addition of from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 to the deficits of the Canadian National Railway system then that is a very serious national problem to consider. It is bigger than a western question; it is national, not sectional. We must sit down and review the whole situation as Canadians, regardless of sectional interests.

I have heard it said—not perhaps by very competent people, I admit,—that if the Crowsnest pass agreement comes again into effect the deficits of the Canadian National Railway system will be increased by the amounts I have mentioned. Personally I should like to know whether or not that statement is well founded. My view of the whole issue would be changed if I were satisfied upon that point, and the people whom I represent would, I am sure, be inclined to view it in a different light. But who is going to inform me; who is going to inform hon. gentlemen around me and Parliament as a whole whether or not that statement is well founded? It would be better to have the facts reach Parliament through the avenue of a committee than through the Minister of Railways, for the Canadian National Railway system is still operated by directors who are supposed to be absolutely independent. What objection can there be to having such matters as these made clear to Parliament and to the country? How else can we obtain the facts? What objection can there be to the constitution of a committee to make these things clear prior to our venturing upon the determination of such an important issue?

The leader of the Opposition states that the Government should declare its policy in this respect, announce it to Parliament, and, whatever it be, seek to make it effective by legislation. Well, that is one way of dealing with the question. Sometimes that can be done; sometimes it is not wise or prudent to do that. It was either the leader of the Opposition or the leader of the Progressive party who admitted this afternoon that the facts relating to this issue were intricate and involved. After all, Parliament has responsibilities in respect to this matter: Parliament made this agreement in 1897. Parliament alone can vary it or substitute another for it, and Parliament should not shrink from its obligations in the matter. Indeed, it cannot escape them; it must deliberate upon this issue and in due course exercise its judgment. But, as I have already said more than once, I am not quite clear how Parliament can place itself in that position without having more knowledge of the facts than I think most hon. members have regarding it. Ultimately, I admit, the Government must state its policy upon this question. It cannot escape it. But the Government says it should state its policy after this committee has reported. There is nothing unreasonable about that position. It is in harmony with past practice. It is not out of harmony with sound constitutional parliamentary practice. I fail to see any objection whatever to the request of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Kennedy) for the creation of this committee.

This committee is not asked in specific terms to report or to make a finding as to whether or not clause 325 should be further suspended. It is not in specific terms asked to make that finding. I do not know whether the Minister of Railways intended that it should. It is simply asked to make inquiry as to what effect the Crowsnest pass agreement shall have upon the Canadian National railways and other lines, as well as upon agricultural development and Canadian industry generally. It would appear from a careful reading of the resolution that the minister deliberately had in mind the acquisition of facts relevant to this issue through the avenue of a committee and by it to be placed before this House. I do not think it would take the committee a great number of days to have placed before it the facts and the evidence contemplated by this resolution.

Mr. FORKE: Have you ever taken into consideration the fact that the people who are opposing the abrogation of the Crowsnest pass agreement realize that they cannot go on producing and paying the present freight rates? They know their side of the question absolutely. They do not need any investigation or to hear anything that may be said from the other side; it would make no difference to them. They cannot carry on business under these conditions.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am not disposed to argue with my hon. friend the effect of the present railway rates upon producers in any section of Canada. I think we are all agreed there should be a reduction of freight rates on the primary commodities. The people in my section of the country feel the effect of the present high freight rates upon primary commodities just as other people do. Many of them tell me they have been unable to carry on their business during the past year or two by reason of these rates. That problem exists in every section of the country. I hope that there is coming soon a reduction in rates upon heavy primary commodities in this country, upon the product of wheat, for instance, which is of so much interest to my hon. friends directly opposite me. The continuance of clause 325 would not, I hope, mean that we are not going to have a reduction in railway rates. As I said a moment ago, the people of all Canada are all very much interested in a reduction in railway rates. The only reason why railway rates have not been reduced on the Canadian National Railway system, I presume, is because the roads have been operating under a very heavy deficit. If this deficit is going to be increased, how can we look forward to the future with very much hope of a reduction in railway rates? Does not my hon. friend see that this is an important question? We cannot have heavy railway deficits and low freight rates, or something will suffer in this country.

It has been suggested that it would not necessarily affect the nation if the Canadian Pacific railway's operations this present year turned out disastrously and they had a deficit instead of the usual surplus. I am not a shareholder in the Canadian Pacific, and I am not personally much interested in it any more than is any other hon. member of this House, except in wishing that all the big institutions in our country should be fairly prosperous; for if they are not, it reacts upon us all. A deficit in the operations of the Canadian Pacific in Canada would, I think, be an unfortunate thing for all of us. One cannot foresee just what its effect might be. It perhaps might not be so bad as some people think, but I do venture the opinion that if such a thing occurred we would face a condition of affairs full of possible danger to our economic welfare.

Mr. MORRISON: If the railways had been unable to pay any dividends during the last two years, do you think it would have had the disastrous effect on Canadians generally that the present situation has had, where the masses, no matter in what industry they were engaged, have lost money?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Let me say to my hon. friend that whenever any organized commercial activity fails, it immediately affects everybody. My hon. friend would not say that the recent failure of many commercial institutions in this country has not had a bad effect, in the first place, on the community in which the business was carried on, and secondly, on all other sections of the country.

Mr. MORRISON: You are evading the question. I asked you a straight question, and you have not answered it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Will my hon. friend put the question again?

Mr. MORRISON: I asked you if you thought it was more disastrous for the railways to fail to pay dividends during the past two years than the present situation, where the masses have failed to earn dividends no matter in what industry they were interested. You apparently consider the railways as of first importance, as compared with the masses of the people.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I doubt, in the first place, if any good would be accomplished by answering my hon. friend's question, because I do not think it is important at all. Of course, it is an unfortunate thing for the country if people produce commodities at a loss, and it is an unfortunate thing if the railways sell their services at a loss. I would not undertake to say which is the worst. They are both bad enough, dear knows. It is not the kind of question one is interested at the moment in discussing. We should rather be concerned in avoiding the causes which bring about these conditions.

I am not speaking on behalf of the railways. All I was attempting to say was this. It is not a desirable thing to take from the pockets of the people of this country by taxation, moneys to pay the operating deficits of the Canadian National Railway System, or to pay the dividends of private enterprises either, but the situation would be surely aggravated if last year's deficits on the Canadian National Railway System were increased. It surely would be aggravated if the same misfortune befell other great railway interests in this country. It would all mean that the people would not only have to pay for necessary transportation but also to bear the burden of increased taxation as well.

The issue involved in this resolution is important to the Canadian National Railway System and to the other railway systems of the country. It is of interest to all classes; it is not a provincial or a sectional issue, it is national in its character and we must look at it in that light. Undoubtedly the taxpayer is interested in the question. If this agreement involves increased taxation, then we as representatives of the people must consider the issue before us in that light; if we do not we are not performing our duty. There are many intricate and involved facts in connection with the whole question. We should familiarise ourselves with these facts and master them as thoroughly as we can. It would not take very long, in my judgment, to have all the facts placed before a committee, and by the committee sent to Parliament for action. There would be justification for the adoption of this resolution even if the committee confines itself to simply procuring the relevant facts and present no finding—and it is just possible that that would be quite a proper course for the committee to pursue. What objection could there be to that suggestion? Will any hon. member, outside of perhaps one or two gentlemen, state that he is so fully acquainted with the history of this question that he is willing to pass judgment upon the matter at once? If there are a few members who entertain that opinion, surely they will be fair and generous enough to concede to others, who feel that they wish to know more about the subject, the privilege of securing additional information through the avenue of a committee. It is for that reason I propose to support the resolution of the minister.

I say the question is eminently one for a committee. But while I have spoken strongly for the appointment of a committee I do not wish it to be understood that I am committing myself to the principle of suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement. I do not feel myself in a position to pass judgment on the matter at the present time and for that reason I support the Minister of Railways in urging that the resolution be accepted by the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would ask the hon. member if he has taken into consideration the sacredness of a written contract?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I had intended referring to that matter and in answer to my hon. friend's question I would say this: Many written contracts regarded as sacred—as between men, and between companies—have been violated or varied during the past two or three years. That is one of the incidents of the post-war period. Agreements between nations, governments, corporations, and individuals, have been suspended, varied, or abrogated, these last few years. Post-war conditions have changed the course of events, and have forced governments and men to adopt unexpected courses in relation to many affairs and transactions.

At Six o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. A. K. Maclean.]

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. JOHN MORRISON (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, I wish to state my views but briefly on this question to-night, as the ground has been pretty well covered. I desire to say, at the outset, that I am not antagonistic to our railroads, either privately-owned or publicly-owned. I realize fully how dependent we are upon the prosperity of our railways, and that if Canada is to prosper, our railways must necesarily be prosperous. I feel it is the duty of this House so to adjust conditions in this country that all classes, railway companies, manufacturers, farmers, all employers of labour, and labour, shall have an equitable deal, and my purpose is to present the views of the people whom I represent in this House.

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) stated that the consumer pays the freight. I do not think that is correct in every instance. The freight rate on grain per 100 pounds from Brandon to Fort William is 21 cents. I am quoting central points in the three provinces. From Regina, the rate is 29 cents cents, and from Calgary, 36 cents. If the consumer pays the freight, how is it that the farmers do not receive the same net price? The Brandon farmer receives the Fort William price minus 21 cents; the Regina farmer the Fort William price minus 29 cents, and the Calgary farmer, the Fort William price minus 36 cents. The farmers have to sell their products on the world's market; the world's market fixes the price. Could we set the price, then the consumer would pay the freight rate. Farmers in Manitoba get their farm machinery from the East more cheaply than do farmers in Saskatchewan, while we Saskatchewan farmers get ours a little more cheaply than Alberta farmers do. That shows that we, as consumers, pay the freight rate on machinery. We pay the freight rate both ways, and, therefore, we are very much interested in seeing that there is a more equitable adjustment of the railway rates.

Rates on lumber and, indeed, on all building materials are to day prohibitive. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) drew a gloomy picture of what the state of affairs in Canada would be if railways were not earning dividends, but he assumes that railways can earn dividends only by excessively high rates. I contend that rates have been so high of recent years that they have actually killed much of the business. We believe that a larger business at a lower rate would be more profitable to the railways and vastly more profitable to Canada as a whole. I know farmers and business men who want to put up buildings, but who are saying: "No, I will not build just now; I think materials will get cheaper as time goes on and railway rates come down." It is very necessary that they should have better buildings; but they are deferring building, because they know their money will go much further when railway rates come down. I am quoting these instances just to show that exceedingly high railway rates are not the most desirable thing for all classes.

I meet quite a few railwaymen, and this phase of the question has been put up to me by them. One man said to me: "I worked only four months last year. I get high pay while I am working, but I can barely live on the high wages I get for working four months a year." If there was more business, these men would be willing to accept a lower wage if they had continuous work; but if a man works only four or six months in a year, he has to get exceedingly high pay for the days he does work. We contend that it would be much better for employees of the railways as well as for the mass of the Canadian people generally if rates were lowered. Last summer I met a gentleman who put up this phase of the question to me. He was travelling from Edmonton east, and he was on the train but one night. He went to get a state-room, and they wanted $33 for one night. He said to the conductor: "Are those rooms all taken?" The conductor replied: "No, not one of them." He said: "Is that usual?" "For the last two weeks," said the conductor, "not one state-room or compartment on this train has been occupied." The man said: "How was it before the increase in rates" The conductor said: "It was a rare thing for one of them to be empty." The man was telling me this as evidence of the fact that railways had raised prices so high as to be prohibitive, and the railways were thus killing their own business.

Now, Sir, the West was partly settled as a result of the protection afforded by the Crowsnest pass agreement, and we contend that there should not be any further delay in bringing the Crowsnest agreement into operation. Nothing else will satisfy the people of the country, who are exceedingly anxious that the agreement shall come into force again on the 6th day of July.

Hon. JOHN A. STEWART (Lanark): This afternoon the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Graham) and the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) stressed the point that the war had worked tremendous changes in Canada. The senior member for Halifax stressed particularly the effect upon economic conditions. If the Minister of Militia had stated to the House that one of the most remarkable changes brought about in Canada since the war was in the policy of government, I think possibly the House would have agreed with him. It has been the past parliamentary practice in Canada, for as long as we have any record, that a government in power takes the responsibility for its action upon important questions; and I think that upon a matter of the importance of that involved in the resolution now before the House, it will be the opinion of hon. members and the view of the people of Canada that the Government should give to Parliament a lead. I followed the remarks of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Kennedy), and I listened closely to those of the Minister of Militia, and I believe it is a fair criticism of what they both had to say that there was no indication, in their speeches, as to what the policy of the Government was on the really important matter that is involved in the resolution. I think I might even go further and say that in the remarks that have come from the government benches so far in this discussion, not only has there been no indication as to what the policy of the Government is, but there has been no attempt on the part of those who have spoken even to chart out the probable course of the Government and indicate in what direction they are attempting to move. The onus in this matter is clearly upon the Government. Under Order 308 of the Board of Railway Commissioners, passed on the 15th day of September 1920, the following view is expressed:

> As our jurisdiction for granting increases on certain lines of railway in western Canada depends entirely upon the amendment to section 325 of the Railway Act, 1919, which expires on the 6th day of July, 1922, the rates hereby established cannot continue beyond that date unless Parliament, in its wisdom, sees fit to extend the provisions of that section. Therefore, the rates herein provided for shall not extend beyond the first day of July 1922.

In view of what Order 308 states the onus is clearly on the Government to determine its policy; the final consideration and decision of the matter by the Railway Commission is blocked. If the Government decides its course the Railway Commission will be able to act on the result of its investigations carried on since 1920 for the purpose of recommending and deciding as to what would be an equitable adjustment of rates, having regard to the general conditions throughout Canada. And if the Government defines its policy and Parliament declares its decision, there would be nothing left that would obstruct the final decision of the matter by the Railway Commission.

Now, what is proposed in the resolution before the House? What is the scope of the inquiry which the Government proposes should be made by the special committee? I read from the resolution:

> That notwithstanding that the regulation of railway rates is a matter within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, it is advisable that a Select Special Committee be appointed to make inquiry—

Inquiry into what?

> —into the question of railway transportation costs.

These are the only words in the whole resolution that define and limit the scope of the inquiry that will be held. When this committee meets, supposing this resolution goes through, it will be limited by the four corners of the resolution as to what it shall inquire into and within the four corners of the resolution there is no provision for any investigation by the committee further than to inquire into the question of railway transportation costs. There is not a word in the resolution as to the general question of rates. The committee is to inquire into the question of railway transportation costs,—in what connection? Let us see what the second paragraph says:

> That, in the circumstances, it is advisable to afford opportunity to all interested parties to submit their views—

Upon what are they to submit their views?

> —to submit their views upon the subject matter of the inquiry.

Well, what is the subject matter of the inquiry? The subject matter of the inquiry is limited absolutely to what is stated in the previous paragraph, and that is an inquiry into the question of railway transportation costs. Once the investigation into the matter of railway transportation costs has been disposed of, the committee will have exhausted the whole authority granted to it under the resolution. There is not a single question in the resolution as to the necessity for the revival of the Crowsnest pass agreement, and if the special committee sought to deal with that matter it would be exceeding its jurisdiction and the authority given by the resolution under which it would act. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) dealt at very great length and in a most interesting way with the effect that the continued suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement would have upon the people who live in the West, particularly in the Prairie provinces; and the Crowsnest pass agreement was pictured as a panacea for all the ills to which the West is heir. I wonder if the member for Marquette has considered the effect a revision of the Crowsnest pass agreement might have for the benefit of the very people for whom it was originally enacted. The first classification in the agreement provides that there shall be a reduction, upon all green and all fresh fruits, of 33⅓ per cent moving from points east of Fort William to certain defined points in the West. I doubt very much whether that would be of any benefit to the people in the middle West to-day.

If I am correctly informed, the movement of fruit to-day is from British Columbia east to the prairie provinces; in 1897 the movement was from the eastern provinces to the west. Under the Crowsnest pass agreement there is absolutely no provision made for fruit that moves from the west to the east, so that this commodity when shipped from British Columbia east would be penalized in favour of fruit grown in the East. Let me also refer my hon. friend for Marquette to the second classification,—coal oil. I wonder how much coal oil moves to-day from Fort William and the east into the West? I would refer him also to the provision that there shall be a reduction of 10 per cent upon the movement of live stock from the east of Fort William to the West; that being the direction of the movement in 1897. I think hon. members who know western conditions will agree with me that the movement of live stock to-day is from the west to the east. Under the Crowsnest pass agreement there is absolutely no provision affecting transportation charges upon live stock moving from the West to the east.

I refer to these classifications for the reason that my hon. friend from Marquette, it seemed to me, left the impression upon the House that the revival of the Crowsnest pass agreement in its present form would effect the relief which this country needs. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that while the Crowsnest pass agreement should not be scrapped, in the general interests of Canada it should not be revived. The classifications under that agreement were adopted having regard to the requirements of western Canada in 1897. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that in the particulars to which I have referred the West would be better served by a revision of this agreement rather than by its revival in its original form.

Mr. CRERAR: If my hon. friend will permit me, the subjects to which he has alluded are, with the exception of live stock, of comparatively little importance. Grain, lumber and fruit from British Columbia are also of importance.

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): My hon. friend (Mr. Crerar) stated this afternoon that as a result of the present conditions the lumber mills in British Columbia were closed, and that the transportation of lumber from that province to eastern Canada was adversely affected by the present rates. Let me refer him to the fact that under the Crowsnest pass agreement there is provision for a comparatively low rate upon lumber moving from points east of Fort William to points west of Fort William; but there is absolutely no rate provided for the transportation of lumber from western Canada to eastern Canada.

Mr. WARNER: Does my hon. friend know that the Railway Commission already has power to fix rates which are not included in the Crowsnest pass agreement?

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): Yes; and I have absolute faith in the good judgment of the Railway Commission, but I am discussing the provisions of the Crowsnest pass agreement. The only provision governing rates of transportation from points west of Port Arthur to eastern Canada is that contained in subsection (e):

> That there shall be a reduction in the company's present rates and tolls on grain and flour from all points on its main line, branches or connections west of Fort William to Fort William and Port Arthur and all points east of three cents per one hundred pounds.

That is the very limited provision governing the transportation of any commodity from western Canada to the east, and that is why it does seem to me the revival of the Crowsnest pass agreement, by the failure of this Parliament to take action between now and July 6, will not provide for my hon. friend for Marquette and those associated with him that relief which they feel they ought to have.

Mr. SHAW: Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he has considered the significance of clause nine of the agreement itself, when he states that no provision is made for the transfer of goods from the west easterly except on the two articles, grain and flour?

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): I am speaking now of the provision for specific rates. The whole question as to rates upon other commodities goes to the Railway Commission.

Mr. SHAW: Quite right.

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): But under the classifications expressly set out I say there is a definite limitation as to the commodities covered by the agreement, and the point I desire to make is that having regard to general conditions not only in western Canada but over the whole Dominion, surely an agreement based upon conditions existing in 1922 would be much more likely to provide the relief and the remedy which the people require in the form of a reduction of freight rates, rather than an agreement based upon conditions as they existed twenty-five years ago.

This Parliament is asked to-day to appoint a special committee, with certain powers as defined in the resolution, and I again submit that the four corners of the resolution limit the subjects that this committee will be empowered to inquire into to the single subject of transportation costs.

We know that the Government have studied this question for some considerable time. We know that the Government has conferred with the chief executives of all the railway companies; we know this because the Government itself says so. The resolution contains this statement:

> That notwithstanding that the regulation of railway rates is a matter within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, it is advisable that a Select Special Committee be appointed to make inquiry into the question of railway transportation costs,—

Now what?

> —it having been disclosed by recent conferences held between the Government and the chief executives of the various railways with respect to the reduction of freight rates that the representatives of the railways deem it inadvisable immediately to reduce rates on basic commodities because of the expiration, on July 6th, 1922, of the suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement;

In view of that should not the Government state in detail to the House what the result of those conferences was, rather than content itself with that general statement? Has the Government no faith in the ability of the chief railway executives in Canada to advise it on the question of transportation costs? Does the Government believe that a special committee of this House would in four or five weeks be better qualified to advise it on the question of transportation costs than the chief executives of the railway companies? The Government has under its jurisdiction, managing 22,000 miles of railway lines, two boards, the Canadian National board and the Grand Trunk board. The Government knew four months ago, when they came into power, that the Crowsnest pass agreement would expire on the 6th of July if some action was not taken by Parliament; so it is a fair assumption that since the 29th of December last they have studied this question and obtained the advice of the two boards which control the government railways. There are available also the records of the Department of Railways and Canals and the statistics filed in the Bureau of Statistics, which is connected with the Department of Trade and Commerce. And in addition to all that, the Government has access to the records and the findings of the Railway Commission itself.

As far back as 1920 the Railway Commission was asked to carry on an investigation for the purpose of determining this very question of rates. Since then that investigation has been carried on by the commission with all the organization and facilities at its command, and I am advised that in that connection 250 exhibits have been filed. Since it started to function in 1904, the Railway Commission has been building up records which are invaluable in the consideration of the difficulties in which the Government finds itself. If, therefore, the Government, having called into conference the chief executives of the railway lines in Canada and the operating officers of the lines under government control, were still unable to determine upon a policy, they might very well have called into consultation the Railway Commission itself. The Railway Commission is a very valuable organization composed of experts in the very matters which it is necessary to consider in order to determine what are fair and equitable rates, what are rates that will serve all the people, having regard to present conditions, not to conditions that existed in 1897. I do not think any hon. member will question the necessity for reduced freight rates or the benefit that they would confer upon trade in Canada. These reduced rates ought to become effective, having regard to present conditions in the West and all over Canada. So that I urge, Mr. Speaker, that this is a question upon which the Government should make its decision. I urge, as it has already been urged in this discussion, that the time between now and the 6th of December—the 6th of July—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): Possibly, Mr. Speaker, I had in mind that this matter was to go to a committee, and if it does I fancy my first statement might be good. But my point is that the time between now and the 6th of July is wholly inadequate for a proper consideration of these matters. Last year the special committee on transportation sat for over six weeks inquiring into matters not by any means as involved as difficult and as intricate as the questions which it is now sought to refer to a special committee.

If this matter is to go to a special committee, why has there been delay from the 8th of March to the 4th of May? Hon. members opposite have known how difficult and intricate this investigation would be; will they suggest that the business that has been before the House for the last eight weeks has been sufficiently important to interfere in any way with the sittings of a special committee? If it was the deliberate policy of the Government to have a fair investigation of this matter by a special committee of the House, it should have been referred to us in the first week of the session. Had that been done, we could have given to the matter during the past eight weeks that consideration which will be impossible if it goes to a special committee now.

It may be argued that this is a matter arising out of the report to the House of the Minister of Railways. While the matter did come to us in that report, the introduction of it weeks before would in no way have interfered with the report itself. The Government could quite consistently have said in the first week of the session: "Here is a matter that we have considered since the 29th of December. Here is a matter with respect to which we have conferred with the chief executives of the different railway lines. Here is a matter upon which it is impossible for us to arrive at a conclusion, and we desire that it be investigated by a committee of the House." But, Mr. Speaker, that is not what has occurred. After the session has been in progress for nine weeks, the Government tells the House that it cannot come to any conclusion on this matter. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) said this afternoon that he did not think a statement to the House on the part of the Government following a conference with the chief executives of the railways and the Railway Commission would be wholly believed by hon. members; that the members of the House would prefer to hear the statement direct from the lips of the officials themselves. But, after all, that is not what the resolution provides for and the senior member for Halifax should have directed the attention of the House to that fact. The resolution does not provide that there shall come before that committee the chief executives of the railways and of the Railway Commission and tell us the results of their investigations and give us the statistics they have gathered, but the resolution itself expressly provides for what is going to happen, and what is going to happen is this:

> That, in the circumstances, it is advisable to afford opportunity to all interested parties to submit their views upon the subject matter of the inquiry to the said committee with particular regard to the effect of the rates established by the Crowsnest pass agreement upon Canadian National railways and other lines, as well as upon agricultural development and Canadian industry generally;

That second clause of the resolution provides that these four interests shall be represented before the committee. The four interests that are to be represented before the committee, under the resolution itself, mind you, are the Canadian railways, and other lines, interests concerned with agricultural development, and Canadian industry generally. If these interests are to be represented before the committee I wonder what the extent of that representation will be? Take, for instance, the investigation that has been carried on by the Railway Commission. The argument alone before the commission on behalf of those who were represented there, and had the right to be represented there, occupied three weeks. It took three weeks of the time of the Railway Commission to hear the argument, and they sat morning and afternoon. Their sittings were not limited to certain hours, as would be the case with a special committee of this House; they sat every morning and every afternoon, and it took them three weeks to hear the argument, after all the evidence was in. I ask hon. gentlemen what chance there would be between now and the 6th of July to carry on an investigation by a parliamentary committee covering the interests referred to in this resolution.

It would be an easy matter to determine upon the representation of the National Railways. It would be a comparatively easy matter to consider and dispose of the representation of other lines of railways, but I wonder how long—hon. gentlemen to my left will know—it would take to get before the special committee all those who would be interested in the agricultural development of Canada, and all those people would be entitled to be heard because this is an investigation of transportation costs having regard to the agricultural development of Canada. Who is going to determine that, and how is it going to be determined in time to allow this special committee to get down to work within a reasonable time?

Take the last interest that is to be heard before this committee, Canadian industry generally, extending from Halifax to Vancouver. I wonder how that representation will be determined? I wonder how long it would take to have a proper representation of those who would have a right to be heard with regard to Canadian industry generally. Yet these are the matters which in the short space of five or six weeks a special committee of this House is to investigate in the hope that it will get results which it would be impossible for the Government to secure from the Board of Railway Commissioners who have had these matters in hand. If the Government want information in any other direction, it is surely a comparatively easy matter to get it from their own railway executives, from the men who are associated with them in the management and control of 22,000 miles of government roads. Has the Government no faith in its own executives? Has it no faith in the records that are in its own offices as to transportation costs? Will it have more faith more confidence in the findings of a special committee of this House? At best, Mr. Speaker, I urge that such a finding would be a half-baked affair simply because there is no time, no opportunity, to go into these matters, even if such a committee had the ability to do so.

Under the law as it stands to-day the whole question of railway rates is in the hands of the railway commissioners. If it is the intention of the Government that the Crowsnest pass agreement shall not be revived, surely we have a right to know whether it is the intention of the Government to transfer wholly or in part the power of fixing rates from the Railway Commission to Parliament itself. That such is the intention is a natural deduction from the resolution. The whole question seems to be whether there shall be a further suspension of the provisions of that agreement, or whether, by failure to act in any direction, it shall automatically revive on the 6th of July. What I submit is this, that the House has a right to expect a lead from the Government. The House has a right to know what the Government policy is. The House has a right to expect that if the Government is going to function, it should come into this House upon a matter of such far-reaching importance as that involved in the resolution we are now considering with a clean cut, definite policy and tell the House what it recommends. This agreement was framed, confirmed by act of Parliament, and became law in 1897. It sets out a special list of the commodities which shall receive special treatment under the agreement. I do not fancy that any hon. gentleman has any idea that that list of commodities was based upon transportation costs. The rates fixed by that agreement had no relation to transportation costs as they existed at that time. The list of commodities, according to the debates of the House of that time, was based upon political considerations, based upon the necessities of western Canada at that time as the Government deemed them to be. Surely the original drafting of that agreement was as much a matter for consideration by a committee as the question whether the agreement should now be revived or further suspended.

Let me draw to the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite that in 1897 when that agreement was framed and these commodities listed for special treatment, the Government of the day did not find it necessary to appoint a special committee for the purpose of inquiring into transportation costs or for any other purpose. The Minister of Railways of that day brought into the House a resolution providing for the terms of the agreement. It was introduced as a government measure and the government stood by it. They stood by it and passed it, and that is precisely what this Government should do now.

[Mr. J. A. Stewart.]

I simply repeat that the Opposition claim now that this Government is acting contrary to the whole parliamentary practice of the past. The Government comes before us with a matter which the members of the ministry themselves state to be far-reaching in its effect upon the Canadian National Railway system. It has been stated by other hon. gentlemen that the question is far-reaching with regard to business generally. The senior member for Halifax referred to it with particular regard to its effect upon the dividends of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) dealt with it in the same connection but possibly in an opposite direction. I am not urging any objection to the Crowsnest pass agreement having regard to its effect upon the earning powers either of the National Railways or of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But I do urge that having regard to general conditions in Canada, and to the altered conditions since 1897, there is a real question as to whether the express terms of the Crowsnest pass agreement operate fairly and equitably to all Canadian interests.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the real purpose of the resolution before the House can hardly have been fully appreciated or this debate would not have run on to the length it has; and certainly some of the arguments we have heard would have been rendered wholly unnecessary. The question is not one of whether the Crowsnest pass agreement suspension shall be continued after July 6, as I think my hon. friend from Marquette assumed; nor is it as to whether the Government should have gone to the Railway Commission for information before coming to Parliament as the right hon. leader of the opposition has asserted. The question is the fundamentally important one of whether, on a great national question, the Government should endeavour to become as fully informed, and have Parliament as fully informed, of all essential facts, circumstances and consequences as possible before reaching a final decision. That is the question involved in the resolution—nothing more and nothing less. It is a matter of giving the members of this House the fullest information on one phase of a question which every hon. member who has spoken on the subject of railways in this Parliament has described as the most important problem before the people of Canada at the present time. Far from the Government not having a policy on this matter, the Government is following what in this House and in the country has all along been the policy of the Liberal party with respect to railway matters—namely, that on this all important question there should be given to Parliament the fullest information possible.

I am not surprised that my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition or indeed my hon. friend for Marquette, should at first blush have expressed themselves as opposed to this resolution, because if I recollect aright at the last session of Parliament when we of the Liberal party, who were then in Opposition, took the position that Parliament should be given the fullest information on matters relating to our Canadian National railways, both these hon. members voted against that resolution. On the 22nd March, 1921, I moved the following amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply:

> Subject to the reservation that in exceptional cases there may be documents of a confidential character which, in the public interest, may properly be withheld from publication, the House declares that it is the undoubted right of Parliament to demand and receive copies of all reports, accounts, correspondence and papers in relation to the management of every department of the public service, including the affairs of the Canadian National Railways, whether operating directly under the control of the department or under corporate form.

That was a declaration of the policy of the Liberal party with respect to matter pertaining to railway problems, namely, that Parliament should have the right to the fullest information on these all-important questions. But I find the names of both the leader of the Opposition and my hon. friend for Marquette recorded in the division list as opposed to that resolution. They are therefore consistent in the attitude they are taking to-day in criticizing the Government for seeking to gain the fullest information possible on this all-important railway matter before coming to a final decision.

Mr. CRERAR: I am sure the Prime Minister will permit me to say that my objection to the motion is not at all based upon the considerations which he has just stated, and I think I made that very plain this afternoon.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not catch the force of my hon. friend's remark.

Mr. CRERAR: Then I shall repeat it. I wish to say to the Prime Minister that my objection to the motion 9 p.m. now before the House was not based upon the considerations which he has just stated, but upon other considerations altogether.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will deal with that in a moment. I think my hon. friend objected this afternoon on the ground that this resolution was deciding the question as to whether the Crowsnest pass agreement suspension should be continued after the 6th July or not. That, I think, was the ground upon which he objected to the resolution this afternoon.

Mr. CRERAR: I am very sorry that I failed to make my meaning clear to my hon. friend. I found no objection to the principle of the Government consulting Parliament on matters of this kind; but the ground upon which I rest my objection at this moment is that this agreement should not be permitted to lapse further, that it should come back into effect; and taking that position I could not very well consistently support a motion to refer it to a committee that would give consideration to the fact as to whether or not it should be restored.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then all I have to say to my hon. friend is this—that we have yet to see whether that agreement will come before Parliament for further consideration by way of amending legistion. That question is not involved in the resolution before the House at the present time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps my hon. friend would not object to my making a similar statement. My objection to the resolution to which the hon member refers was not based on any desire, or expression of desire that Parliament should be refused any information but—similar to that of the hon. member for Marquette —only because we desired that the management of the road should not become a subject of political discussion such as to interfere with its proper business operation, but that in due time Parliament should have all information.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not recall that statement by my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will show it to my hon. friend in Hansard.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We can all read Hansard for ourselves. Perhaps both my hon. friends will permit me to refer to one other resolution which was passed last year, in regard to which they took a like position.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend says "hear, hear." I hope he will say "hear, hear," after I have read the resolution which he himself moved in this House on the 8th April; and, by the way, may I interpose that the wording is all-important as immediately bearing on the very matter we are discussing, namely, the propriety of having certain questions referred to a select committee of this House before the Government reaches a final decision. On April 8th, 1921, the present leader of the Opposition, then the Prime Minister, moved, seconded by my hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton):

> That a Select Standing Committee on National Railways and Shipping be appointed for the present session, and be instructed to inquire into the following questions:—
>
> (1) What information as to operation of Canadian National railways and shipping as conducted by the Board of Directors and Management should, in the public interest, be brought down in Parliament on question, motion for production of Papers, or otherwise.
> 2. When, by what method, and under what conditions, if any, should such information be given, regard being had for the necessity of securing to Parliament and the public all facts requisite for the determination of policy (including finance), and to the Board of Directors the best possible conditions and efficiency of management.

Mark those words, that this committee, which my right hon. friend wished to have appointed, was to give Parliament information when certain investigations should be made having regard for what?

> For the necessity of securing to Parliament and the public all facts requisite for the determination of policy.

That is exactly the reason why the Government is proposing to have this question referred to a special committee now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is such a body now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is because of the necessity of bringing to the attention of Parliament, in regard to this all-important question, all the essential facts in order that the Government itself may have possession of these facts and that hon. members of the House may be in full possession of these facts before a final decision on this question and all that it involves is given.

I have, I think, directed the attention of the House to the fact that that resolution of my right hon. friend was supported both by the present leader of the Opposition and by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar).

Mr. MEIGHEN: How did my hon. friend vote?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not draft the resolution.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How did he vote?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I voted against the resolution, not because of the phrasing of it, which was that of my right hon. friend, not because of this particular clause—

> For the necessity of securing to Parliament and the public all facts requisite for the determination of policy.

—which might have been omitted altogether if it had not been regarded as so important by my right hon. friend, but because the intent and purport of his resolution was to side-track altogether the obtaining of information by Parliament on matters concerning the Canadian National railways. If there is any doubt about the wisdom of the vote, I would ask my right hon. friend what report this committee has made.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The report is unanimous and is in the records of the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What does it say?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It speaks for itself. If the hon. member so desires, I will get it and read it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It speaks for itself and also for my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And for my hon. friend, because members of his party were on it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I have said before, one can always tell when my right hon. friend is hit by an argument—he jumps immediately to his feet every time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was stating the fact.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Take another jump.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I moved the resolution; I spoke in favour of it; I supported it, asking for a committee on that subject for the reasons that I gave. There was no body constituted to furnish Parliament or the Government with that information. The question was a new one because of the acquirement of the National Railways. I supported and voted for the resolution for those reasons. In this case, there is a body constituted for this purpose with the information at hand. Why does not the hon. member not go to it? I stand by my position on that resolution. May I ask the Prime Minister—How long does he expect to abide by his decision on that resolution?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That was not worth the jump.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend is unduly sensitive. If he can keep his seat until I get through, then he may speak again.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member told me to jump.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What did my right hon. friend suggest as the course which the Government should have taken? He said that we should have gone to the Railway Commission for information. I think I am right in that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yet, what was the burden of his whole say with respect to the Railway Commission? It was that a few years ago the Railway Commission was, in the public mind, regarded as a body which was protecting the interest of the public, but that to-day and of recent years, it had come to be looked upon by the public,—he did not say whether rightly or wrongly—as a body that was supporting, not the public, but the railways. That is the body which my right hon. friend says that we should have gone to for information, and, then brought down to the House our decision on the basis of the information so supplied. What would have been the first charge my right hon. friend would have made if we had come to Parliament and said: "We have certain information from the Railway Commission; we have taken our stand on that ground". He would have said that the Railway Commission was looked upon, throughout this country, as caring more for the interests of the railways rather than those of the public.

May I ask my hon. friends from the West this question? Would their confidence in the Government's position have been greater if the Government had come before the House and stated that a certain policy which it had adopted was based upon information given by the Railway Commission? It was out of deference to western opinion on this very matter of securing reliable information that the Government felt it a special obligation that western members should have the right and power to discover for themselves, by representation on a committee of this House, what was the truth and what was not the truth in regard to the essential facts on a question in which they are so vitally interested. That is the reason why the Government has taken the position it has. I am surprised at the hon. member for Marquette taking the position he did to-day. It is not a position he would usually take; I mean it does not display the measure of caution he generally exercises before he takes a definite stand. He says, in effect, that he does not care what the consequences are of the Crowsnest pass agreement; that it must go into effect, willy-nilly, regardless altogether of how it may affect any other parts of the country. That does not express, I am sure, the real feeling of my hon. friend. I have heard him repeatedly in this House, whilst referring to matters of special interest to one part of the country, advocating that we should take into account the interest of all other parts of Canada. He will agree with me, I am sure, when I say that, if it is going to help to make for national unity to divest discussion in this Parliament of sectional prejudice, if it is going to help to give people in all parts of this Dominion a greater sense of security as regards the desire of Parliament to act in the interest, not of any one part, but of the whole, then that that particular course should be taken. If he has time to reflect further on the matter, he will, I am sure, agree that there is a great deal of force to be attached to that particular consideration.

The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) is fond of saying that the Government has not a policy on this or that. Of course we expect him to say that; but let me make it very clear that, not only is the Government in this matter acting in accordance with the broad policy which it has always taken with respect to matters of great national interest, namely, that there should be the fullest information available before final decisions are reached; but, with respect to the Crowsnest pass agreement and the time of the expiration of its suspension the Government has a decided, clear and very definite policy. In order that there may be no mistake as to the Government's position on this matter, I have reduced to writing the exact statement of the Government's position towards the expiration of the Crowsnest pass agreement, and I hope my hon. friends opposite, after hearing it, will feel, as I think they ought to feel, that, as regards this particular resolution, there is no reason why it should not have their whole-hearted support. In a word, the Government's policy is this:

> Unless it can be shown that in the public interest there are good and sufficient reasons why, what is termed the Crowsnest pass agreement of 1897, should not again become operative in July next, the existing Statute will not be interfered with.
> In other words, the suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement will then have expired.

Now, is there any hon. member of this House who will rise to his feet and say that he is not in favour of such a policy as that? If it is shown that it is not in the public interest that a certain step shall be taken, is there any member who will rise in his place and defend such a course? All that the Government is asking is that there shall be an opportunity, not alone to the Government itself, but to the members of Parliament and to the country, to understand all that is involved in the coming into effect of that agreement on July 6th of this year, or in the continued suspension of it after that date? As has been pointed out in the debate this afternoon, the Government, far from seeking to evade responsibility, is fully conscious of the magnitude of its responsibility as representing the public in its three capacities, as consumers, as investors, as taxpayers. The Government cannot afford to decide any question on the ground simply of the way in which, and the degree to which, with respect to one particular aspect it will affect one particular part of the country. The Government has to take into account the Dominion as a whole, and all classes therein, and take the course that seems most in the public interest. If it is shown that it is in the public interest that this agreement shall be permitted to be revived on the 6th day of July, certainly the Government will see that it is revived. But if it is shown that such a course is not in the public interest —and remember that this aspect of the matter before it can be finally determined has to be decided on the floor of Parliament, not to-night but at a later date,— and that the suspension of the agreement should be continued longer, legislation will be necessary. When such legislation comes into the House, then will be the time for hon. gentlemen opposite to cast their votes in making a final decision. Let hon. gentlemen clearly understand that sooner or later the whole matter will come back to them again for consideration, and in the meantime that all they are deciding is whether or not they will allow a committee of Parliament to get all the information it can on a matter of great national importance. To-day, in the minds of my hon. friends opposite, it is a question of railroad rates affecting one part of Canada. I have been through the Canadian West on two or three occasions of late, and I may say frankly that I have been impressed with the absolute necessity for a reduction in freight rates if that part of our Dominion is to develop as it should. Hon. members on this side of the House are in entire sympathy with hon. gentlemen opposite in their desire for a reduction of rates. But that is not the question involved. The Government is anxious to see that, in seeking to do justice by hon. gentlemen opposite, they do not do injustice in another part of the Dominion in a manner which might lose to those hon. gentlemen the support that they may look to on future occasions in other matters in which they are also vitally interested. To-day it is a question of railway rates; to-morrow it may be a question of some trust or combine which hon. gentlemen opposite may think should be investigated. Are they, then, now going to take the stand that they will not permit a committee of Parliament to get all the information it can on any question? My Labour friend (Mr. Woodsworth) who spoke this afternoon argued eloquently the other evening on the desirability for the fullest information in regard to social conditions in the coal mining fields of Nova Scotia. Is he going to ask Parliament to allow an investigation into the matter of the coal miners and their rights, and deny to this Parliament the right of having an investigation into this question of railway rates which affects all classes of the community? That is the point from which I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will view the matter. Realize that all the Government is asking is that there shall be the fullest inquiry into this all-important matter; because, as my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Stewart) rightly said to-night, the Government has been negotiating with the railway executives to see if they cannot effect an immediate reduction on the basic commodities of the country, and the Government has learned that the railway executives are prepared to make an immediate reduction on those commodities, although to what extent they are prepared to go depends upon the view that is to be taken of this Crowsnest pass agreement. The right hon. the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) says that when the Government was raising railway rates in 1918 the Crowsnest pass agreement was the impediment that stood in the way. To-day the position is just reversed. The executives of the railways are prepared to make an immediate reduction on basic commodities, but this agreement stands as an impediment in the way; and until they know definitely what attitude is going to be taken towards the agreement they are not prepared to make the reductions which otherwise they would be inclined to concede.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Do I understand from the Prime Minister's remarks that the reason why the reduction has not taken place is because the Government have not decided as to what they will do in regard to the Crowsnest pass agreement?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not quite see the force of my hon. friend's remarks, unless they are intended to imply something which cannot be inferred from what I have stated. The Government, as I have said, has been conferring with the railway executives on this matter. I need not point out to the House that such conferences as the Government has had, through the Minister of Railways (Mr. Kennedy), have of necessity been in the nature of informal interviews. The Government have had to accept at their face value the statements which have been made; there has been no opportunity to investigate these statements. That was impossible in informal conference; but that step can be taken before a Select Committee of the House; and if there is right, and justice, and truth, and wisdom in the course which my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Crerar) suggests, namely, that the agreement shall come into force, why be afraid of publicity? Why be afraid of an investigation? That is the whole point at issue. It is not a matter of responsible government, as my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) said this afternoon. He declares that the Government should have a policy, should come to Parliament with it, declare it, and drive it through the House. Well, he has his views on responsible government and I have mine. If I am to judge him by his acts of the past, his theory of responsible government is that a Prime Minister and his colleagues should regard themselves as a body of supermen who can come to a decision in secret conclave, bring that decision into Parliament, and by sheer force of their following, regardless of how it may have been obtained, drive that decision through the House, irrespective of the will of the people at large. Now, I desire to say, and to say more particularly to my western friends,—who have been saying a good deal in their public speeches—that in my view of responsible government, the House of Commons, the rights of members of Parliament and the rights of the people should be regarded as all-important, and that the Cabinet should consider itself as a committee of Parliament and not as a body of supermen—I have taken the position that this Government would so regard itself, and that on these controversial questions, so far as it was possible to do so, the Government would seek to ascertain the will and wish of Parliament in a reasonable way and give expression to it in legislation. That is what we are seeking to do at the present time; that is the whole purpose of the present legislation. The whole purpose is to form, out of the different groups that compose Parliament, a committee which shall have full powers of investigation under oath, permit them to summons the different classes and interests concerned, and give to them the right to get all the information they can before this matter is finally decided.

In the last analysis—and with this let me conclude—if it decides to ask for a futher suspension of this Crowsnest pass agreement, the Government will have to come before this House, and persuade the House that that course is in the public interest. There can be no change in the statute as it stands, and the agreement will automatically go into effect on the 6th July, unless prior to that date this Government comes before Parliament and secures from Parliament further legislation.

Now, all we ask at present is, having regard to what is involved, having regard to the fact that we have railway deficits to consider; having regard to the fact that we have British Columbia's interests, the interests of the maritime provinces, of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, as well as the interests of the prairie provinces to consider; having regard to the fact that we wish in all things to maintain a spirit of unity and goodwill between all classes and all parts of this Dominion—that hon. members let us have this matter fully investigated by a committee, leaving to us full responsibility as to the course to be ultimately pursued, which we are not shirking for one moment, but which we wish to exercise in the light of full information, and in the light of what we believe to be just and right for the people of this Dominion.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I do not propose to add anything to the merits of the debate on this question, it having been so thoroughly threshed out. I merely wish to allude to some matters of local or provincial importance in connection with it.

In the first instance, I am sorry that I find myself in disagreement with my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Crerar), and with his followers, of course, more especially when I have in mind their gallant support of me when I had some little railway troubles of my own. I was heartily in accord, strange to say, with everything that the hon. member for Marquette said this afternoon, and I endorse every word of his remarks, but unfortunately there are matters of provincial or British Columbian character in connection with this subject which compel me to take a different point of view. The interest of my own riding and province must prove superior to the bonds of friendship or of esteem for the honourable gentlemen.

If the Crowsnest pass agreement is abrogated without further amendment, a very gross injustice will be done to British Columbia. It was partly alluded to by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Stewart), and I should like to add something to his remarks. This agreement was embodied in legislation passed in 1898 and, as the Minister of Railways (Mr. Kennedy) read out this afternoon, its two vital sections are sections (d) and (e). Section (d) imposed upon the company a reduction of rates from 33⅓ to 10 per cent according to the various articles, some twelve in number, on all traffic westbound from Fort William to points west of Fort William. Fruit is one of the articles covered. But that is only on the rate westbound, so that our British Columbia fruit would suffer a tremendous setback by this additional 33⅓ per cent reduction given to the presumed fruit grower in the East, and a very gross injustice would be perpetrated in that regard. I can give you an example, Mr. Speaker.

Apples originating at Okanagan Landing, which is about the centre of the fruit-growing industry in British Columbia, would pay a freight rate of $1.43 per hundred pounds to Barstow in Alberta, a distance of 405 miles. From Fort William to Hazelton, the same distance, going west the rate would be 84 cents, a difference of 59 cents, or a percentage difference of 71.4 per cent. The reduction on the Fort William rate would be about 55 per cent. Can any hon. member say that it would be a reasonable thing under the present conditions of fruit growing in British Columbia, where we already have a high railway tariff to contend with, that another additional 33⅓ per cent should be added, or that that was ever contemplated in 1898, when fruit growing in British Columbia, for export at least, was entirely unknown.

Take the other side of the question, shipping east. The reduction promised in subsection (d) is on grain and flour from all points west of Fort William to Fort William and all points east. But there is no reduction proposed on wheat and flour coming from the prairie provinces to British Columbia. When the Crowsnest pass agreement act was passed there was no export of wheat or flour from British Columbia, there was no elevator in that province, there was no orient trade, there was no Panama canal; all those things have grown up since. We have a large elevator, we are agitating for another, and one will be put up this summer by private enterprise. All these things are intended to promote the interprovincial export of flour and wheat from the prairies, more particularly from Alberta, to the Pacific coast, and in that way build up an interprovincial trade.

I will quote an instance of the rate in that regard also. The rate from Morley, Alberta, to Vancouver, 601 miles, is 30 cents; while the rate from Virden, Manitoba, to Fort William, 600 miles, is 23½ cents, a difference of 27 per cent. A reduction on the grain rate from Virden to Fort William will reduce that rate by seven cents, which will bring it down to 16½ cents, or a difference as compared with the charge on wheat for the same distance from Morley to Vancouver, of almost 100 per cent. That is a practical illustration of what would happen if this change is made without some consideration of the conditions which have grown up in British Columbia since this agreement was entered into.

It may be claimed that we have what is called the Mountain rate in British Columbia, and that that affects us adversely. It does affect us adversely already, and naturally we do not need to make it any worse. Moreover, there has been a very strong agitation in British Columbia against the Mountain rate, and the province had a most searching investigation, retaining an expert to appear before the Board of Railway Commissioners, and there is every prospect that that Mountain rate will be somewhat reduced at any rate. But it does not materially enter into the subject of this agreement just now.

I wish, however, to put myself on record squarely and unequivocally as being in favour of a reduction of freight rates to the greatest possible limit. I have no hesitation in making my position plain on that point. I will stand for any reduction almost, however great, in freight rates.

When the hon. member for Marquette was talking of the lumber camps of British Columbia being closed and the fish caught on the Pacific coast not coming east, he was only echoing the remarks I made in the House a few months ago. I gave instances of those camps shutting down on account of the existing high freight rates, and there is no need to make them worse under the Crowsnest pass agreement.

The remedy I suggest is more traffic. Reduce the rates and let the farmers on the prairies have something left over after they have paid for the transportation of their wheat. Let them ship their wheat to British Columbia and bring back the much needed lumber that we are just as anxious to sell as they are to buy, and the increased traffic will make up the deficiency caused by a reduction of freight rates.

I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Marquette stand in his place and apparently unabashed and unashamed make the statement that he was quite indifferent, in fact, he practically said that he did not care whether the Canadian Pacific Railway paid a dividend next year or not. I gazed at him awestruck, expecting the floor to open up underneath him for such sacrilege, and hoping that the hole would not be big enough to swallow up also us wretched members who sit in the back seats. But he made his remarks with a nonchalance and recklessness that I certainly admire but cannot imitate. It reminded me of the small boy who was told by his brother that he had not said his prayers that night. "No, Bill," he replied, "I didn't say them last night either, and I am not going to say them to-morrow, and if nothing happens to me I am never going to say them any more." I shall watch with an anxious eye during the next few days to see if something bad does not happen to my hon. friend. When I heard him make that statement, hope almost awoke in my breast; I thought perhaps I might yet get my amendment through on the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway bill. He spoke of the reserve of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and I think he mentioned something about trillions. Now, I am not familar with trillions; I count my money only in millions, and beyond that basis of calculation I cannot go. But the hon. gentleman must be mistaken, for it is not forty-eight hours since we in this House heard an ex-member of the late government, the member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) solemnly assure the House that if the Canadian Pacific were required to build that line of railway in British Columbia thirty-six miles long he would deplore their having to do it, because, he said, along that route the stumps were such that it would require a whole box of powder to blow them up. Now, a railway that will be turned aside by a stump or daunted by the necessity for using a box of powder cannot possibly have a reserve amounting to trillions, or anything like it.

There is just one other thing I want to mention, and I hope the Government and the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. King) who represents British Columbia in the Government, will take particular notice of it. As the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) has said the Crowsnest pass agreement does not mention rates on lumber, so that if we in British Columbia are to get any redress at all in respect to the lumber situation, it will have to be through compromise or negotiation in connection with the advocacy or otherwise of the Crowsnest pass agreement. I also wish to express the hope that on that committee there will be found a representative from British Columbia and that arrangements will be made to hear expert testimony with regard to rates as affecting the industries of that province.

Mr. E. J. McMURRAY (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, I am a representative of the city of Winnipeg, a city which, probably more than any other in Canada, depends for its existence and its prosperity upon the railroad rates. I am a western man, as my hon. friends opposite are, and I am at one with them in the demand for a reduction of freight rates. I believe, Sir, that our economic regeneration in this country depends primarily upon the bringing about of a considerable reduction in freight rates. I am confident that prosperity will not come to us until such a reduction has been effected.

It struck me this afternoon that the question was purely one of education. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said, the matter must be finally settled by debate upon the floor of this House, and I have never known of a case where the gathering of full information and full data before a decision on any question was reached, worked an injury. With the full determination that, come what may, I will at the proper time, stand for a marked reduction of freight rates, I for one shall be glad to have an opportunity of voting intelligently on this question, on the basis of information received through or from a special committee. On that ground, therefore, I will support the resolution now before the House.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, those of us who come from the eastern part of Canada feel just as keenly as hon. members from any other part of the country the necessity for the revision of freight rates if there is to be a revival of business throughout the land. The rates on the Intercolonial railway are fixed by the directors of the Canadian National Railways without any reference whatever to the Railway Commission presided over by Mr. Carvell, and the resolution which has been proposed by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Kennedy) gives us the first opportunity we have had of ascertaining at first hand exactly what the transportation costs of the railway systems of this country are.

We heard this afternoon of the great amount of labour that was being expended on this matter by experts connected with the Railway Commission. But do you not think, Mr. Speaker, that in accordance with the practice that has always been followed in the past, we can summon these gentlemen before the special committee and there obtain the benefit of their knowledge and experience in connection with these matters? Having done that, we can proceed to discuss these and other questions, and, if necessary, legislate with regard to them.

My hon. friends opposite speak about the onerous freight charges made against the products of the West. But their complaints, well founded as they are, are no more justifiable than those which we make in the maritime provinces. There we have had no Crowsnest pass agreement, but under the solemn pact on the basis of which the maritime provinces entered Confederation, we were to have the benefit of such rates as would promote interprovincial trade. But these have been taken from us, and our trade is consequently disappearing. The conditions of which we complain are quite as serious as those prevailing in any other part of Canada. Are we, then, to be denied an opportunity, through the medium of this special committee, of ascertaining what is the basis of transportation costs?

My right hon. friend who leads the Opposition tells us how boldly he proceeded under the War Measures Act to announce a policy in 1918. But not much boldness was necessary, in view of the powers that were given to him under that act. He proceeded to create in this country a system of wages following the McAdoo award, and then he abrogated the Crowsnest pass agreement and imposed these higher rates. That is what was done in 1918, and that is what was confirmed by the amendment of the Railway Act known as section 325. On every other subject of importance that is presented to us for consideration we proceed through committees in order to ascertain the facts; is it to be said that in respect to this vital subject, upon which we must have information before a decision is reached, we should not have a committee? We are all glad to see the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) in the House after his illness. I may say to him in all kindness, however, that I do not think he has given due consideration to the provisions of this Crowsnest pass agreement. The Minister of Railways earlier in the evening emphasized the condition that prevailed with regard to fruit, and that point was accentuated a few moments ago by the remarks of my hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. Neill). So also in regard to live stock; so also in regard to coal oil. Apparently it was not clear to some hon. members that the rates on lumber would not be affected in any way by the restoration of the Crowsnest pass agreement, because in it there is no reference whatever to that commodity.

The interpretation which I place upon this statute is that the rates fixed under the Crowsnest pass agreement would affect only the lines belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which were in existence in 1897. It has no reference or application to a single mile of railway built by the Canadian Pacific since that time. I venture to offer that opinion, Mr. Speaker, based on my reading of the statute and on whatever legal experience I may have. If I am correct in my assumption, and assuming we have no committee to investigate the matter and the agreement, being continued, has no application whatever to railways lines built by the Canadian Pacific since 1897, would not that be a peculiar condition of things?

Mr. CRERAR: I think my hon. friend is wrong in the statement that he has made. I cannot at the moment quote my authority, but I am under the impression that the Railway Commission have held in the past that the Crowsnest pass agreement covered all lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway west of the Great Lakes.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The Railway Commission is not a judicial body in legal matters, and its decisions in matters of that kind do not absolutely control, but would be affected by the decisions of the courts of this country.

Mr. CRERAR: If my hon. friend's statement now is correct the Canadian Pacific have the option of challenging the decisions in the courts, but that option they have never exercised.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have made some inquiry and I understand the situation to be this: The Canadian Pacific never raised the point. They permitted these rates to go into effect on the lines which have been constructed since 1897, and they never raised the question legally. I am simply offering my opinion upon this subject as a lawyer of some experience, and I say I cannot find in this statute any provision that these rates were to apply to the lines of railway thereafter to be built, and according to my understanding of the law, for the rates to apply, the statute must contain words to this effect: "these provisions shall apply to lines hereafter to be built". Such words are not to be found in this statute.

Not only that, but the reduction of rates was made in regard to rates then existing. How could these rates apply to lines which were not in existence, so far as traffic was concerned, in 1897? I venture to say that the position of the Government in this matter is exactly the same as they took when the question of the Wheat Board came up at the beginning of the session. I ventured at that time to point out that a favourable decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in regard to the creation of a compulsory Wheat Board was a matter of very grave doubt, and that suggestion, which was not a very new one so far as I was concerned, was confirmed by the law officers of the Crown. Do not hon. gentlemen think it was a very wise policy for this Government to adopt instead of proceeding to formulate a hard-and-fast line of action in regard to handling the wheat crop of the West? Was it not a wise course to submit that question to a special committee of the House where hon. members had the greatest possible opportunity of discussing this very important question? In regard to this vital question of freight rates, ought not an equally wise course to be pursued? If the suggestion I have made to the House to-night that this agreement would not apply to railways built since 1897 should be correct, I submit that hon. gentlemen from the West would not be true to the interests of the people they were sent here to represent if they refused to permit a special committee of this House to investigate just what is the meaning of this Crowsnest pass agreement, and what its effect is to-day. Suppose section 325 of the Railway Act is amended by the Senate—there is no reason why the Senate could not pass a bill cutting out the limiting clause at the end—and that bill comes here to be dealt with. We would want to be in position to deal with it. I want to say, having had a very slight acquaintance with the subject of railway rates, because I once represented a client in a freight rate case, that I know of no other subject so abstruse and complicated and difficult to deal with. I am quite sure, as my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) said this afternoon, that outside of the wide experience which my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) has had as chairman of the Railway Board, there are very few men in this House competent to deal with so abstruse a subject as the proper adjustment of freight rates in this country. There never was a subject with regard to which there was more necessity for this House to insist upon a special committee being appointed to get the proper information under oath from experts who have given their lives to unravelling freight rate problems, as well as hearing from the responsible executives administering the railways of this country. Animated as we all are by the desire to reduce transportation charges in this country, so that we may have a business revival in Canada, if this special committee is appointed we shall then be able to approach intelligently a settlement of this question, but if we do not have that committee and this whole subject is left up in the air, the settlement that will be made will be one lacking that clearness of vision and that proper exercise of judgment which this House ought to have in considering a question of such vital importance as this.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): I confess I was at a little difficulty in my effort to follow the reasoning of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). He did me an honour that I do not think I am at all entitled to when he said that I probably was the only man in the House who could understand the freight tariffs or understand this question at all. Then he pointed out that he had been engaged in a rate case and had found it the most horribly complicated thing he had ever run up against. Then he said that this horribly complicated subject instead of being decided by people whose business it has been to decide such questions should be decided by a body that he had previously said could not decide it. I really could not follow my hon. friend.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I cannot follow my hon. friend now.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I regret it but I really think I am right this time. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, the House feels under a deep debt of gratitude to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) for writing out a declaration of the policy of his party. Here is another great document to be preserved for all time, and it is one he need never tear to pieces like the others have been torn, because I am sure it will never be able to hurt one way or the other. It commits him of course so definitely to just what he is going to do in connection with the matter under discussion. One of his formulae under which policies are to be interpreted and treated will not apply. It is his formula to the effect that "the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life." He will not be able to say that in this case because there is no letter. There is nothing in this particular thing at any rate that he need get away from. Then we have another new doctrine and that is that before anything is done by the Government which amounts to anything, it must first be sent to a special committee of this House. I wonder how it would be possible to carry on business in this country if my hon. friend seriously intended to carry out that idea? I am sure he will find a great deal of difficulty in getting the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to subscribe to this new doctrine and to sending on the budget to a special committee of this House before we consider it here. The budget of course gets to a committee finally but it gets there with the imprimatur of the Minister of Finance. He takes his stand upon it just as the Government ought to take its stand upon this question here to-day.

There is one thing that puzzles me about the whole of this debate and that is why this question is raised at all by the Government unless it be of course for the purposes that have already been suggested. How can there be any room for debate upon the question that more information can be got? We have had months and months of evidence being taken. It is all available to the Government. Then we have had three weeks of argument. That too is all available to the Government. What is more, the people of this country paid an awful lot to get that evidence and have that argument made before the commission. I remember that one of the chief complaints made against the Railway Commission in connection with the judgment of 1920 was that the board had not gone west but had stayed in Ottawa, had received the evidence and had come to a conclusion here. The West was very cross about it and so were other districts of the country. Well, since then we have had this investigation and a complete investigation. We have had the board sitting, I think, in eight of the provinces. The people of Canada have incurred an expense in getting experts and lawyers for the purpose of submitting their cases that may run into hundreds of thousands of dollars, and yet notwithstanding this all these people are invited to come back to Ottawa again—to do what? Simply to repeat what they have already said, simply to repeat everything that is now down in black and white, and, which the Minister of Railways must be thoroughly familiar with. And why? In order that this matter may be stalled just so much the longer.

Now we are interested, and very much interested, in the railway rates question; I entirely agree with everything that has been said on that point. But we are interested in the reduction of rates on basic commodities in the whole rather than in any particular part of Canada; and we are interested in a fair treatment of commodities as a whole, and not of commodities within a small class. I may be wrong but I think there are approximately fifteen different commodities which eastern Canada is interested in having regard to the movement west—I do not think there are more covered by the Crowsnest pass agreement. I do not know exactly why they were selected. Of course the gentlemen that are interested in those few items would be deeply interested in the maintenance of that low rate. Now just to give the House some idea of what it means I hold in my hand a freight classification with hundreds of pages. That affords some idea of the manifold activities of commerce. Why should fifteen articles—or fifteen classes of articles—out of the whole of that mass get a preferential treatment? We have had a lot of trouble—every country has had the same experience—in trying to get something like fairness in connection with railway administration. It is a very difficult thing to accomplish. In the old days you had special agreements here, there and everywhere. The bigger manufacturer, the man who was in the position owing to the volume of his business and the traffic he could offer, was always getting advantages over his less favoured competitors. Not only that but you had the same thing in connection with certain municipalities, districts, and the like; and as far back as 1873—the year that England appointed her railway commission—this Parliament set to work to try and remedy those grievances. Nothing was done; nothing could be done until you had a special rate regulating commission which was not created until 1904.

Now what was the underlying principle of all that legislation? It was that there should not be under discrimination; that is unfair discrimination, not only as between traders, shippers, but also as between different localities and different places; they were all to be treated the same way. When this agreement was put into effect there was no enforcement of that law; but I cannot imagine anything which is much more discriminatory than that very agreement. What is wanted in Canada is a reduction,—just as drastic a reduction as can be made—in freight rates on basic commodities which have to move in mass and to the extent that special privileges and discriminatory rates are given here, in so far as all basic materials not covered by that contract are concerned, you may say goodbye to any reduction of rates.

I do not exactly know what is involved in this particular issue having regard to money. From my recollection I would take it that since I left the railway board there have been increases in western territory amounting to something like thirty-five per cent. I would imagine that the decreases made since would probably leave in the West a net increase over the 1913 standard of twenty per cent.

Mr. CRERAR: A little more than that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If that be the case I would be within the mark in saying that this agreement would involve a difference in railway rates of approximately something like $18,000,000; and it is quite clear that if that amount of railway revenues was taken away to-day, with the deficits which we already have, there would not be very much left for us to work on for the purpose of getting overdue reductions on other basic commodities.

Mr. CRERAR: The sum my hon. friend has mentioned would cover all railways and not merely the National lines alone.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is quite right. I think it would cover all railways. As I say, the amount would be approximately correct.

Then, in connection with the point raised by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) as to the manner in which the agreement operates, it is quite true, and I think I was responsible for it, that when that agreement was before me for consideration the attitude I always took was that the board could not think that Parliament intended absolutely widespread discrimination in connection with that contract and we always invited the companies to put in tariffs which applied Crowsnest pass rates to new lines, but I am perfectly free to admit, in view of more recent authority, that there is very grave doubt as to the legality of that position. The contract, after all, was a contract having to do with the company's lines as then owned, leased or operated and projected through the Kootenay district, and the basis of rates was also fixed having regard to the then scale of rates applying on the different lines of railway which were under operation. I would say that the chances are that the agreement would probably be confined by the courts to the situation which was covered by the agreement when the agreement was made. At the time the agreement was made there were some

10 p.m.

7,400 miles of railway in operation by the Canadian Pacific, and I think to-day there are some 14,000 miles.

But the main trouble has nothing to do with that; the main trouble is that we have high freight rates in all parts of Canada, and we think, in connection with basic commodities, any reductions made ought to be so made as to give the whole country some benefit of them. For example, we have tremendously high rates on coal in Ontario, and I am afraid it would never do to allow everything which could be made available for a reduction in rates to go in one particular direction on a comparatively small mileage, unless we are to say that, for all time, we agree on the principle of creating and continuing discrimination. But this all serves merely to emphasize the fact of the necessity of something being done one way or the other, of some action being taken by the Government to-day, of their saying: "yes" or "no". The question was put to the Prime Minister by the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), whether the fact was that high rates were being maintained in this country because the Government was not able to make up its mind as to what it was going to do with the Crowsnest pass agreement. I do not think that question was answered, and it certainly was a question rightly put if we have regard to what was said by the Prime Minister. The House has most assuredly been told that the Government has gone into conference with the railway executives and that they have said: "We cannot make, in these basic rates, those reductions which are so much required until we know what you are going to do with the Crowsnest pass agreement." We need to do more than talk about reducing rates and reducing expenses; we need to do something towards bringing about that reduction at the earliest possible moment. Therefore, in view of what the Minister of Railways has said, in view of what the Prime Minister has said, I now beg to move, seconded by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen):

That all the words after the first word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor.

A general reduction in railway rates so essential to the welfare of Canadian production and trade cannot, as declared by the Government, be made until Parliament decides whether or not the suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement which expires on July 6th be renewed; that it is the immediate duty of the Government—already too long deferred—to acquire the necessary information gathered and in their disposal at the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners and to submit its policy, to this house.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. A. B. HUDSON (South Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, the question before the House, it seems to me, is not altered or advanced by the amendment which my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) has just moved, and I think the whole question has been so fully discussed that it is not necessary for me to enter into any of the various phases of the matter to any great extent. The question, however, of a reduction of freight rates is of such vital importance that I feel I should state my position briefly before this resolution or the amendment is put to a vote. The position which is taken by hon. gentlemen opposite, so far as I can make out, is that hon. members of the official Opposition do not want the Crowsnest pass agreement to come into effect, and hon. members of the Progressive party do want the Crowsnest pass agreement to come into effect.

With much that my hon. friends of the Progressive party have said in regard to this agreement, I agree. If the question before the House at the present moment was whether or not the Crowsnest pass agreement should be restored to its full effect, I would be bound to vote in favour of that position. But the question is not that; the question is whether or not an opportunity should be given to members of this House to make a further inquiry, to inform themselves as to all the facts which have a bearing on the situation, and then, after that, somebody will have to make some substantive move before the question of the Crowsnest pass agreement can come up for discussion. For that reason, for the reason that I believe all members of the House, including myself, should supply themselves with the fullest information that is available before the time for action comes, I propose to support the resolution and to oppose the amendment.

Mr. J. T. SHAW (West Calgary): Mr. Speaker, I trust that, perhaps, I may be pardoned for intervening in this debate, in view of the importance of the matters involved, not only to the West, but to all parts of Canada. There is one gratifying fact, and that is that, apparently, all parts of the House are agreed as to the necessity for an immediate and drastic reduction in freight rates. That is not common only to members of this House; it represents to an almost unanimous degree, the attitude of the people of this country, and to some extent, perhaps, the attitude of even the railway companies themselves. Now, in order to place on Hansard the views of the provincial government of Saskatchewan, to which reference has already been made in this debate, I would direct the attention of the House to a resolution passed unanimously on the motion of the former provincial treasurer, now premier of that province, on this particular question. The resolution reads:

> Whereas the burden of existing freight rates, especially on the products of agriculture, is so great as to be more than the traffic can bear, and
> Whereas in many parts of the province the result of this condition is that grain is standing in the fields unthreshed because, at the present prices, threshing costs and freight charges would absorb the whole of the price realised;
> Therefore be it Resolved that in the opinion of this Assembly the Government of Saskatchewan should continue to press its application for the réduction of freight rates now before the Railway Commission of Canada and further—

And I direct the attention of hon. members on all sides to this part of the resolution—

> That in the opinion of this Assembly the Parliament of Canada should under no circumstances re-enact subsection five of section 325 of The Railway Act of Canada which expires in July 1922 and which, if allowed to lapse, will again bring into force the Crowsnest agreement.

Now, in support of that resolution the then provincial treasurer made this statement:

> It may seen an extreme statement to make that at the present time existing freight rates are killing the traffic, but anyone who travels through the province, and particularly the northern part of the province, cannot fail to be impressed by the large number of fields in which stooks of oats are still standing unthreshed for the reason stated in the resolution, namely, that the present price will not bear the threshing costs and the freight charges.
