SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

LONG-TERM FUNDING FOR RESEARCH COUNCILS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion of urgent importance, as it relates to the keystone of opportunity for our young people. In view of the government's shameful decade of neglect toward scientific and technological research, which has seen a continual erosion of financial support for research laboratories and scientific training programs across Canada, and in light of the recent disgusting flip-flop by cabinet, which effectively scuttles the five-year plan of the National Sciences and Engineering Research Council, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist):

That the government be required to reinstate immediately the NSERC five-year plan, which had been approved by the former Clark government, and to adopt corresponding long-term plans of funding for the medical and social sciences so that our scientific researchers may develop, with some assurance, their research interests here in Canada instead of packing up their bright ideas and heading to the United States or elsewhere.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTION MINISTER ATTEND INDEPENDENT CONFERENCE OF WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Because the minister responsible for the status of women has manipulated the postponement of the conference on women and the Constitution planned by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women so as to avoid embarrassing the government, women from across Canada have organized their own independent conference this coming weekend. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass):

That the House urge the minister responsible for the status of women to attend the weekend conference, humbly realizing that such conferences can be a learning experience even for him, and that if he is discharging his responsibilities properly, their discussions will not embarrass either him or his government colleagues.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MEDICAL CARE ACT

SYSTEM OF PREMIUM PAYMENTS IN ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43. Whereas the Medical Care Act states that each province's health care plan must provide for universal coverage, whereas the Ontario government does not seem to know, or otherwise refuses to admit, that between 15 per cent and 20 per cent of Ontarians are not covered, according to the figures available through research done by certain community health groups in Toronto, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That this House instruct the federal government to investigate how many people in Ontario are actually not covered by OHIP because of the inadequate and unfair premium system employed in Ontario which has led to the present situation in which it can truthfully be said that Ontario is not living up to its technical and moral obligations under the Medical Care Act and the Established Programs Financing Act.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

ALLIANCE OF LIBERAL AND NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr.

Broadbent) was quoted as saying on the weekend that whether or not the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told the whole truth about his dealings with Westminster was irrelevant, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this House commend the Leader of the NDP for his unusually candid admission that in the decision-making process of the NDP, expediency rather than truth is the main criterion, and invite him to revoke the ill-advised decision he has made to ally his party with the Liberals on the Constitution by applying the biblical principle that "The truth shall make you free".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SPORTS

TRIBUTE TO MEMBERS OF CANADIAN DOWNHILL SKIING TEAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

As Canada has in the last few years made quite a name for itself in the field of downhill skiing, as the members of the Canadian ski team have contributed in no small measure to our unity and national pride, and as three of the most illustrious members of that team are present in the Speaker's gallery, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis):

That this House pay tribute to the members of the Canadian downhill ski team and congratulate them warmly for their determination, courage and performance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I see the House is enthusiastic about the skiers; I thank hon. members for their enthusiasm.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DIFFERENTIATION BETWEEN NATO AND NORAD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) revealed last week in Brandon that, after 16 years as a Member of Parliament and 12 years as Prime Minister, he does not yet know the difference between NATO and NORAD, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That the Prime Minister be enrolled in a special course for slow learners on the nature of Canada's treaty obligations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATURAL RESOURCES

CAUTION AGAINST NATIONALIZATION OF COAL INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In the aftermath of the signing of the multibillion dollar coal mining contracts in northeastern B.C., creating some 2,300 jobs and placing Canada in the top five of the world's coal exporting nations, and in view of the fact that these long awaited contracts will benefit not only the residents of British Columbia but will reflect on individual Canadians from sea to sea, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That this House instruct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance to refrain from any attempt to nationalize and plunder the coal industry as they have the oil industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PARLIAMENTARY AFFAIRS

VOTING RECORDS OF OPPOSITION PARTIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the voting record of this Thirty-second Parliament shows that the Tories have voted 19 times with the Liberals, while the NDP have voted only seven times with the Liberals, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Tories admit they are in bed with the Liberals almost three times as often as the NDP and that Joe publicly formalize his secret organic union with Pierre.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED CHANGES IN HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len. Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Due to the very confusing situation which exists under the herd maintenance program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the government take immediate steps to stop this confusion and to cut administrative costs by paying producers on a straightforward plan, on established boundaries, based on a fixed sum, on a per annum basis, to all farmers within the boundaries.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FORESTRY

CALL FOR TABLING OF OMOND SOLANDT REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Having regard to a report entitled Forest Research in Canada, which was commissioned and filed with the government in 1979, and which lists some startling conclusions and wide-ranging recommendations, and having regard to the fact that the report predicts the most serious consequences should the governments of the provinces and Ottawa fail not only to improve forest-related research efforts but as well to assure that the universities are sufficiently funded to produce scientists and engineers for the task, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That the report by Omond Solandt entitled Forest Research in Canada be tabled in the House and referred to the appropriate standing committee for study and that the minister be required to report on the action the government intends to take to implement the recommendations contained in the document.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

GOVERNMENT'S CONTRIBUTION TO RESEARCH FUNDING

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I welcome the Minister of State for Science and Technology back. We can now get to some of the really important questions of the day.

I would like to remind the minister of his highly touted press announcement of January 19 wherein he reaffirmed the government's commitment to increase spending on research and development to 1.5 per cent of gross national product by 1985. In the same breath he announced that the government's share would be reduced from 39 per cent to 33 per cent. Would the minister now explain to the House that he has failed to meet this commitment which he has been expressing for a year and that he has misled the House, the entire science community I might add, and the people of Canada by reversing this policy in the most important economic back-up structure the country could be involved in today?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is in error in thinking that I may have misled the House. The increase in expenditure in relation to science and technology over the past year is well on that track for achieving that 1.5 per cent figure, which we had established. Indeed, I am confident that the estimates for next year will again show the kind of significant increases which are necessary for us to reach the objective we have established for 1985.

• (1415)

The hon. member refers to the decline in the percentage of government effort as a proportion of the over-all efforts within our economy directed toward research and development. It should be clear to all hon. members that what we are projecting is the participation by the federal government of one third in the over-all objective of 1.5 per cent. Although it is a decline in percentage, it is a decline over a much higher over-all figure and, indeed, it represents a very significant increase in effort on the part of the federal government.

Mr. Gilchrist: Madam Speaker, on May 5, 1980, I asked the minister if he would be supporting the five-year plan for funding to NSERC, MRC and other councils. He assured me by saying:

I will do more than that; I will increase the funding considerably above the figures put forward by the Conservatives.

Would the minister now explain the reduction in NRC funding from 24 per cent to the 11 per cent or 12 per cent or 13 per cent rates of which I have just been advised rather peripherally?

Mr. Roberts: Madam Speaker, the hon. member referred to the granting councils in the first part of his question, and in the second part he referred to the NRC, the National Research Council. I take it that the hon. member is referring to the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council. In that case I can say that the five-year plan presented by NSERC is one which I support. The funding which is required for the first year to meet the commitments under that plan has been granted. While definitive decisions have not yet been taken with regard to funding for the second year, I am seeking to obtain as much funding as I possibly can for those programs.

Mr. Gilchrist: Madam Speaker, there has been universal condemnation of the MRC and NSERC funding announced by the government of late. All the newspaper are carrying reports on the matter and all the scientists are deploring the government's broken promises. Would the minister explain why he has failed with his cabinet colleagues to obtain sufficient funding for this most vital sector of Canada's economy where there are problems with creating jobs and upgrading careers? The minister's failure is probably the result of not enough effort in cabinet and because of his two hats, namely, the important matter of the environment which he shares with science and technology, to the serious detriment of science and technology and the condemnation of the science community.

Mr. Roberts: Madam Speaker, generally I try to accommodate the hon. member, but I would be misleading the House if I were to say that I failed. I have not failed.

Mr. Nielsen: Roberts for leader.

Mr. Roberts: The hon. member is forecasting, I hope pessimistically, what the level of funding will be. As I said in my earlier response, those decisions have not yet been definitively taken. I do not believe that I shall fail in meeting the expenditures which are required.

COMPARISON OF RATES OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I would like to determine, perhaps once and for all, the rate of the minister's failure—

Mr. Crosbie: It is total.

Miss MacDonald: —and to point out to him that last year the Conservative government increased funding to the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council by $41 million, to the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council by $5.8 million, and to the Medical Research Council by $12 million. The minister said on May 5 that he would do more than the Conservative government, that he would increase the funding considerably above figures put forward by the Conservatives. I have listed the levels of funding that would have been granted to each of those councils. Will the minister stand by his commitment that he will increase, this year, the amount to those granting councils by more than the Conservative government? Is that what he is now saying?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I am saying that there will be further increases in the budget of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council. I am also saying the government has far exceeded the figures which were established by the Conservative government with regard to science and technology development and research and development.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, the minister, of course, would not give the commitment now which he gave in May; he is backing away. That is the flip-flop which the minister has made with regard to these very important research granting councils and which we would like to point out. That flip-flop has been condemned by the whole scientific community Madam Speaker. They have termed the action of the minister the ultimate doublecross. In face of the charges that have been made, does the minister realize that this program of funding for the research councils cannot be something that is started and stopped, something that is a stop and go policy? What explanation does he have for the approach that is taken, that in one year under the Conservative government it is adequately funded, and the next year it is severely cut back?

● (1420)

Mr. Roberts: Madam Speaker, I am sorry, but I simply have to reiterate what I have already said. The hon. lady is anticipating a cutback which has not taken place and which I do not expect to take place. The basis of her question is erroneous.

CONCERN EXPRESSED BY SCIENTIFIC COMMUNITY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The scientific community is indeed interested in the long-term funding plans and the intentions of the government. There are rumours of zero growth. The increases that have been announced are not increases that will cover the increased operating costs for scientific research. There is chaos, anger and frustration in the scientific community. That is shown in all the press releases that the scientific community has put out in the last few days. Will the minister tell this House and the scientific community what the funding will be for the federal granting agencies, and will he clearly state what they can expect?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, there are expressions of concern on the part of the scientific community. I admit that, and I welcome it. I am glad that the scientific community is making its concerns known as dramatically as possible. The hon. gentleman has asked me to announce what will be in the estimates before the decisions on the estimates have definitively been taken. Clearly, I cannot make an announcement on a decision that has not been taken.

Mr. de Jong: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. Normally the scientific community knows by the previous November what the funding will be but it is now in a state of utter confusion. When will the minister let the scientific community know what is in store in the years to come? The president of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, Dr. Gordon MacNabb has stated that funding of at least $27.8 million above inflation is needed to maintain the five-year plan for R and D which was endorsed by the Liberal government last year. By slashing the budgets of the granting councils—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have to ask the hon. member to come to his question.

Mr. de Jong: My question is this, Madam Speaker. Does the government now mean to repudiate the five-year plan it originally requested and approved, reducing to a charade its commitment to reach 1.5 per cent of GNP for research and development by 1985?

Mr. Roberts: Madam Speaker, certainly not. We are not repudiating the plan. What we are doing, as is normal in the estimates process each year, is determining the amount of money required to keep us on track with the planned objective.

AMOUNT OF FUNDS COMMITTED TO MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the minister tell the House why there is as yet no announcement of a renewed five-year plan for medical research in Canada? In doing so, would she please confirm or deny reports from the research community itself that there is only to be a paltry 7.9 per cent increase in funds for medical research, thus severely hampering the ability of the research community to do needed work in areas which the minister herself has indicated need attention, such as toxicology?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I must point out to the hon. member that the budget of the Canadian Medical Research Council is now under study. Naturally, we will do the best we can.

PETRO-CANADA

ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA—ROLE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT IN FINANCING TAKEOVER

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last week I drew attention to the existence of sloppy management on the part of Petro-Canada in the takeover of Petrofina. Yesterday we were treated to an incredible display of this same sort of management when the chairman of Petro-Canada announced that he had reached agreement to acquire Petrofina but he did not have any understanding with the federal government as to what role the federal government would play in financing the large expenditure of $1.5 billion. This amazing lack of control causes me to ask the minister the following: what instructions did he give to the chairman of Petro-Canada as to the basis on which they will take over Petrofina? Were there any limits set on the total size of the transaction? Was there any direction regarding the size of the company or the role which the government would play in the acquisition, or did the minister just simply say, "Bill, hop out and buy me an oil company and send me the bill later" ?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, cabinet examined the negotiations with Petrofina and it authorized the acquisition, setting a maximum limit on the price to be paid.

Mr. Siddon: What was that?

Mr. Lalonde: The exact way this is to be financed is a matter which will be discussed between cabinet and the president of Petro-Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: When?

Mr. Siddon: Who is going to pay it?

Mr. Lalonde: Some funds may come from equity, some from borrowings and some from taxation. This is a matter we will review with the authorities of Petro-Canada, and a decision will be made in due course.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the chairman of Petro-Canada said yesterday that he could not support any financing on the financial statements of Petro-Canada, that the total amount would be financed by the government through its tax. Mr. Hopper also said that the government "played no role in choosing the target or setting the price." Since the federal government has been called on to finance the entire amount of the transaction, could the minister explain why the federal government did not play a role in setting the price when in fact it is going to be called on to levy the taxes which will finance the entire transaction?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I regret that my hon. friend is distorting the facts even more than his leader does when he talks about Petro-Canada. The statement Mr. Hopper made was quite clear. He said it was considered conceivable that Petro-Canada could get less than 100 per cent equity from the government, and if it got less it would have to borrow the balance. I have not seen a report anywhere where the president of Petro-Canada said that it would all have to come out of equity and that they could not borrow for this particular purpose. I would hope that my friend would have a little more respect for the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: He might pass on the message to his leader when talking about Petro-Canada and this particular deal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the point raised by my hon. friend is concerned, the decision to go after and take over Petrofina was made by the board of directors and management of Petro-Canada. Negotiations were carried out on a business basis by the management of Petro-Canada. The government has approved the takeover. It also fixed a maximum limit that we were ready to consider for that takeover.

An hon. Member: How much was that?

Mr. Lalonde: Within that mandate, the rest of the deal was carried out by Petro-Canada, as it should have been in such a situation.

DATES OF GOVERNMENT ACTION RESPECTING ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a couple of supplementary questions for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. They both relate to dates. Will the minister of energy tell us on what date cabinet began to examine the acquisition by Petro-Canada of Petrofina, and on what date did cabinet approve that acquisition?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the authorization to Petro-Canada was given on the Tuesday, the week before the takeover actually took place. If my hon. friend could give me a calendar, I can tell him the exact date. If he checks, it would be Tuesday about two weeks ago. The takeover took place at the weekend.

Mr. Clark: That was half my question. The other half of the question is: on what date did the examination of that acquisition begin? When did the cabinet first consider that matter? While I am on my feet may I point out that the minister has told us that it was approved on Tuesday. I want to know the date on which the consideration began.

Second, I should like to ask the minister to give us an indication as to whether he has satisfied himself that no knowledge of that intention on the part of the cabinet or of Petro-Canada came into the hands of anyone other than the people authorized by cabinet to know that information. Can he give us the assurance that he has looked into that matter and that there was no insider information?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I apologize. I said Tuesday to the hon. member. It was on Thursday at the end of the day that cabinet considered this particular acquisition proposal, and the final negotiations took place on that weekend. So cabinet was acquainted with this proposal and took the decision on Thursday at the end of the afternoon.

So far as the question raised by my hon. friend is concerned, I notice that he cast some completely unfounded and rather despicable innuendoes in a speech to students in British Columbia in this regard. I have indicated that if there is any evidence and any information to the effect that any improper action has been taken by anyone in this deal, it should either be drawn to the attention of the government or to the attention of the Ontario Securities Commission or the Quebec Securities Commission which have authority in this respect to carry out a full investigation. If the Leader of the Opposition has no evidence of anything, I do not think he should carry on in this manner.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, we would not want the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to be less than candid with the House on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I notice that the minister himself has not answered my question. My question was whether he has satisfied himself, as the minister responsible, that such information was not in the hands of anyone other than people authorized by cabinet.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes or no?

Mr. Lalonde: Quite obviously, Madam Speaker, I have no evidence at all that any such information would have been given to anyone not authorized to receive the information. The cabinet was seized with this issue, as I indicated, the Thursday before the deal was made in Brussels. Frankly, I find it quite offensive that the Leader of the Opposition should cast general aspersions on officials or unnamed persons without having a shred of evidence to substantiate them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Have you looked at how the stocks have performed?

ASTRA TRUST

DEPARTMENTAL DELAY IN LAUNCHING INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Finance in view of the fact that the first failure of a trust company in 50 years in Canada is apparently a subject which is not sufficiently important to merit the attention of the Minister of Finance. I should like to put to the minister the same question I put yesterday to the Minister of Finance with respect to the collapse of Astra Trust and the affairs of Mr. Carlo Montemurro and his associated companies, incorporated in the province of Ontario.

With your permission, Madam Speaker, I should like to repeat the question I asked yesterday for the benefit of the minister. I am sure that it would be of some interest to the House to know that there were already so many problems with this company—I am referring to Astra Trust—and with associated companies, that in 1978 the federal Superintendent of Insurance attached conditions and renewed the trust company's charter for only a three-month period.

My question to the minister is this: why did it take the department two years, between 1978 and 1980, to find out the nature of the scam which was involved, and the scam is the relationship between the four companies in question, and how was it possible for the department to continue to allow investors in southern Ontario to put their money in Astra Trust when the department itself had severe suspicions about the integrity of these four companies?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, in the introductory remarks to his question the hon. member describes the extremely complex situation surrounding this case. As the hon. member is fully aware the situation grows even more complex owing to the fact that two levels of government are involved. One company, Astra, is incorporated under federal legislation while others hold provincial charters. The hon. member is asking me how it can be that although very stringent conditions were imposed on its operations in 1978, the company was not liquidated until 1980. I should like to indicate to the hon. member that some conditions were imposed precisely because the office of the Superintendent of Insurance was keeping a very close watch over the operations of that company. However, the hon. member ought to understand that monitoring operations were all the more difficult as the other companies did not come under the jurisdiction of the Superintendent of Insurance. As evidence of that, it was not before 1980 that the Superintendent of Insurance was made aware of the Re-Mor operations.

[English]

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE INQUIRY

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the minister himself has just said that the situation is very complicated, and I agree with him. When you look at the transcript of the evidence before the Ontario select committee, you find that it is a very complex story, in fact, as scam going back to 1972. In view of the complexity of the situation and the fact that a select committee of the Ontario legislature has said, as it appears in the interim report of that select committee before it was dissolved because of the Ontario election:

> —it has received evidence indicating that political influence was exerted on federal officials to incorporate and licence Astra Trust as a federal trust company. The committee invites the Parliament of Canada to examine the transcript of its proceedings and to take such action as it deems appropriate.

It is precisely because of what the minister calls the complexities in this case that the Ontario committee has asked that this be referred to Parliament. Why does the minister not refer this matter to a parliamentary committee so that we ourselves can examine the complexity and try to come to a solution of this very difficult problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, concerning the fact that a licence was issued to the Astra Company, I have already explained that, contrary to what may have been said, the Superintendent of Insurance has assured me that never was there any political pressure on him with respect to the recommendation. Madam Speaker, he made a serious and thorough investigation just as is done before it is recommended that a trust company be incorporated. I would suggest that what matters is to make sure indeed that there is a thorough investigation before incorporation papers are issued and, second, that proceedings are taken against any person who might have been involved in criminal activities and have benefited from the complexity of the situation. In that respect the Department of the Superintendent of Insurance works closely with the Ontario Provincial Police to bring criminals to justice if they are involved in illegal activities.

PETRO-CANADA

GOVERNMENT FINANCING FOR ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I would recommend that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources consult the Prime Minister on his definition of the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: My question to the Minister of Finance is this. Mr. Hopper said yesterday that he wants federal assistance in purchasing Petrofina because his cash flow will be limited, that his investments in other activities will be limited if the government does not supply the $1.46 billion after collecting it from the Canadian consumers of oil products, regardless of their ability to pay, and that the government should give it to him to buy Petrofina. To collect that amount of money in one year will cost at least 8 cents a gallon on gasoline and 6 cents on heating oil. There have already been eight increases in oil product prices since the end of December of last year under this government, and this will be the ninth.

Will the minister now tell the House what the government intends to do, particularly in view of the fact that there is no equity in this matter, that everybody, rich or poor, will have to pay it, that the poor will pay more in proportion than the rich, that there will be no tax credit for lower income taxpayers as we proposed, and that there will be no exemption for farmers, fishermen or urban transit systems? How is he going to collect this amount of money for Mr. Hopper?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will recall that in the budget speech it was stated that in the event of an acquisition there would be the imposition of a particular tax, and that is how we will propose to finance whatever portion, still undetermined, we would put into this acquisition.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, this government is going down the slopes faster than Miss Sorensen went down the slopes. The minister will remember that on January 23 he had an advertisement in the Scotia Sun which said, "Vote Liberal and the price will stay down". It has gone up eight times since. Now the minister talks about the ninth time the price of gasoline products will go up. I wonder if the minister will resign, or will he continue to be a living example of hypocrisy and stay here in this House as Minister of Finance.

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He was just clearing his throat.

Mr. Crosbie: My supplementary question to the minister is this: will he reject Mr. Hopper's pleas that he take another $1.4 billion from the oil consumers of Canada, and will he follow his own election promise and keep the prices down and reverse the last eight price increases?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the answer to both questions is probably yes.

RAILWAYS

IMPLEMENTATION OF PROMISE TO DOUBLE TRACK CNR LINE FROM WINNIPEG TO WEST COAST

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It is exactly one year since the Prime Minister made his famous election promise to double track the CNR from Winnipeg to the Pacific Ocean. I wonder if the Prime Minister would bring the House up to date on the progress he is making with his favourite project, in addition, of course, to the 30 per cent of the line which had already been double tracked before the Prime Minister made his promise.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, knowing his ardent interest in sports, I am sure the hon. member would permit me to preface my answer by saying that in addition to the lady already recognized in the gallery, there are two excellent male speakers—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Skiers.

Mr. Trudeau: —skiers, and I would be happy to give Your Honour an opportunity to recognize them, unless you want me to do it on your behalf.

Seated in the gallery are Mr. Ken Read, who was the first male skier to win the World Cup—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —and Mr. Steve Podborski, who is the current leader of the World Cup men's downhill division.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: As to the question raised by the hon. member, he was kind enough to give me notice of the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure he is distressed that his colleagues in his own party are always side-tracked because, as a former distinguished minister of transport himself, he is not used to being put on the sidings as, through the fault of his party, he has been.

An hon. Member: You are not laughing, Joe.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You were better with skiing, Pierre.

Mr. Clark: Have you got the answer, Pierre?

Madam Speaker: May we have that answer?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, there is some concern opposite.

Mr. Clark: The concern was the Chair's.

Madam Speaker: I was asking the Right Hon. Prime Minister if we could have his answer.

Mr. Clark: No.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Madam Speaker, in addition to the 30 per cent which was under construction at the time I gave my last answer to the hon. member in the House—that was in April—I want to give more details today. There are three sections to the project. There is the Edmonton to Valemount section.

Mr. Clark: That is Valemount.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is like NORAD.

Mr. Trudeau: I am told by the right hon. member that is pronounced Valemount.

Mr. Beatty: Take the train and visit.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I have a lot of time. All the answers are written, so if hon. members want to continue—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Table it.

Mr. Trudeau: I will gladly do that.

Madam Speaker: I wonder if the Prime Minister would please give the answer in his usual brief manner.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Go ahead, George, ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Hees: Madam Speaker, I did send the Prime Minister notice in the hope that this would help him not to mess it up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: But it is obvious that more than notice is necessary.

As a practical politician, does the Prime Minister not regret very much the fact that he offered so much and received so very little in return for his promise, and could he also bring us up to date on his other favourite project—and tell us how he is making out—which is to twin western ridings with eastern Liberal members of Parliament?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the first section, which is some 310 miles long, is under construction, and it will be double tracked by the mid-1980s. With respect to the Valemount to Vancouver section, some 440 miles, about half of it will be completed by 1988. In so far as the third section, that is the Winnipeg-Edmonton section, 50 miles of it has already been completed. We figure that by 1988—

An hon. Member: Before they get back to power.

Mr. Trudeau: —while this government is renewing the mandate which will come a couple of years down the road, at least 40 per cent of the whole line will be double tracked. That will be some 590 miles out of 1,450. In this way we will permit at least the CN to be moving those rich resources which are so bountiful in the west and which would not have been able to move if we had not double tracked and continued to double track the CNR.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENT OF BAY OF FUNDY TIDAL POWER

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that Japan has a project to harness tidal power and is about to build a number of artificial concrete estuaries in Japan—Bay of Fundy, so to speak—to harness tidal power and transform it into electricity, will the minister indicate if he will consider such a project for the Bay of Fundy to provide electricity for New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island so that these provinces will have less reliance on oil, and will he look into the Japanese project to obtain expertise, if necessary, to develop the electric tidal power potential of the Bay of Fundy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there is already a management committee under the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement on oil conservation and substitution, and that committee has been approached to update the federal-provincial study on tidal power out of the Bay of Fundy. An extensive study has already been carried out. The government is willing and ready to update that study.

The hon. member has referred to the Japanese experience or project in this regard. I am sure that the federal-provincial group which is examining this situation will want to review the project which is being considered by Japan.

LABOUR RELATIONS

B.C. TELEPHONE COMPANY—POSSIBLE ACTION BY MINISTER TO EFFECT SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTE

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question, directed to the Minister of Labour, concerns a very serious labour matter in British Columbia. Despite the acceptance on the part of the telecommunications workers of at least three mediation reports, the foreign-owned B.C. Telephone company continues to ignore our Canadian labour traditions and to behave like some cross between a southern textile corporation and a nineteenth century Texas cattle baron. I should like to ask the minister what he intends to do, from the vantage point of his high office, to get these two parties to settle this matter, especially to lean on the British Columbia Telephone company and to bring an end to this long and bitter labour dispute which has gone on for far too long, and is likely to escalate.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for a very important question because this topic is one of very severe concern to people in British Columbia at this moment. I had the opportunity of being in Victoria and Vancouver last Thursday and Friday and of examining the situation at a meeting with the labour department officials in that area. There is no question this is a particularly difficult work stoppage. I express my regret as the Minister of Labour that the B.C. Telephone Company has not seen fit to accept the Peck conciliation report which was accepted by the union. What I also found in British Columbia was very widespread concern that the management of B.C. Tel owned, as it is, in the United States, was perhaps not as sensitive to the situation in British Columbia as might be desired and, if they were, then perhaps a settlement might come more rapidly.

Mr. Rose: I thank the minister for his reply. I would like to suggest that while he uses the words "sensitive to our labour traditions" on the part of B.C. Tel and its foreign roots, some people would describe it as union busting. I know the minister was in British Columbia last week and I know also he did not meet with both sides personally. I am going to ask him if he will go to Vancouver, call both sides together, have a meeting and get this whole matter settled, and force the B.C. Telephone Company, by his very persuasive powers, to begin to provide decent service for the consumers in British Columbia, and also civilized treatment of the B.C. Tel workers.

Mr. Regan: Madam Speaker, the very distinguished member is well aware I have no powers under the legislation to force the parties to agree. At the moment I judge to be the appropriate one, where a mediator of a very senior nature can be helpful in bringing the parties together—there has to be the right climate, a willingness and perhaps a recognition by B.C. Tel before a mediator can be successful—I will appoint a senior mediator. We have already had a conciliation report. I will review it very thoroughly, and hopefully before the end of the week may find a situation in which a senior mediator would be appointed.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION STRIKE—FAILURE OF NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

The conflict between the French-speaking journalists and the CBC seems to have become shamefully protracted. Francophones outside Quebec have not had access to a single French language national news service for over three months as they cannot have a private network in their own language like the people of Quebec. Of course, it is a well-known fact that settling this conflict is not a priority for the government.

However, since the negotiations through the mediator appointed by the Minister of Labour have failed and the union has asked for a new special mediator from outside the government framework to be appointed, can the minister tell us whether he plans on agreeing to this request and whether he thinks that a similar conflict between English-speaking journalists and the CBC would become as protracted?

[English]

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the hon. member refers to the other work stoppage in the country which is most troublesome to my department at the present time. I would only say to him that we have grave concern about the length of time the deadlock has existed between the CBC and the French-language journalists. I have, at the moment, probably the most able mediator in the country, Mr. Guy de Merlis, participating in mediation efforts with the parties. He was meeting yesterday, and I believe again today, with Radio-Canada. If a settlement is to be achieved, there is no question it will be necessary for Radio-Canada to move from some of the entrenched positions they have taken, and there will probably be the necessity of further movement on the part of the union. I point out to the hon. member there has to be a willingness on the part of the parties to settle, to move, and to conciliate and only in those circumstances can an end of the effort come.

I remind the hon. member that by using mediators of the calibre of Guy de Merlis and others in our department, the federal Department of Labour, both under the present government, the previous government and the government before it, has achieved a higher percentage of settlements without work stoppages than any other jurisdiction in the country.

POSSIBILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDING TO SETTLE STRIKE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): In short, Madam Speaker, on the constitutional package, he wants to play the Prime Minister's game, with the French-speaking people of Canada. My supplementary question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Can the minister confirm that Treasury Board has set aside additional funds in anticipation of a settlement of the CBC conflict and can he tell us whether he intends to notify the CBC officials that their obvious desire in allowing this conflict to go on is now too apparent to the French-speaking people?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the member is well aware that our people have nothing to do with those negotiations. In any event, if a submission is made for additional funds, we shall certainly consider it.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED CHANGES IN HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure the minister is aware, after his travels to the west and from communications he has received, that confusion still reigns with respect to the herd maintenance program. He has probably read the three motions presented by members of the opposition in the last ten days containing recommendations for a solution to his problem. I am wondering if the minister had the opportunity of examining these recommendations, and is he giving consideration to them because they would go a long way toward solving his problem?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the herd maintenance program is administered by another minister, the Minister of State in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, but I do have a lot to do with it. I just want to say we met last week and again this week, and I believe there will be another meeting. We cannot change the criteria that much—

An hon. Member: Change the minister.

Mr. Whelan: —that we would open the whole program up. There have been over 20,000 cheques mailed to farmers out of 29,623 applications, according to the information I have, and more of these are being processed every day. The appeal board is just meeting. It has made representations to us about two major changes it wants. We may have to go back to Treasury Board to make those changes, and that would delay the whole program because it changes the spending of the money which has been appropriated. We are very conscious about doing that. We do not want to open it up that wide again, because we might offend other farmers who have not even submitted applications but would then say, "Well, I am also entitled to submit an application". This is a new program. I think it has worked very well according to the correspondence I have received. Western farmers are some of the greatest letter writers of all, and I have received very few letters—only compliments from them in the form of letters.

• (1500)

Mr. Neil: Madam Speaker, if the minister is not really in charge of the program, perhaps the Prime Minister would consider taking the program away from the minister in charge of the Wheat Board in the other place, and turning it over to the Minister of Agriculture who seems to have more of an understanding with respect to western farmers.

I understand the minister will be going west either today or tomorrow. Would he give consideration to discussing the problems with some of the farmers and some of the members of the appeal board? I understand there are still some 10,000 outstanding applications.

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, there are 10,000 applications. We have been lenient in allowing them to submit late applications. I understand they have even been receiving applications as late as this week, contrary to the rules and regulations. But, we still told them to accept applications at this late date. We are in constant touch with them; every day we are in touch with them in Regina.

I will be in Regina tomorrow afternoon for a couple of hours. Possibly the whole appeal board will be there. The two from Ontario, the three from Manitoba, the three from Saskatchewan and the one from Alberta will be there. While I understand two of them are in Ottawa at the present time attending the Canadian Federation of Agriculture annual meeting, they will be back. They are farm leaders in their own right; they are highly qualified people. If we can make some modifications without going back through the whole rigmarole of Treasury Board, which would delay the payments to farmers, we will do that. But it will delay payments if we have to go through that procedure.

Oral Questions

FISHERIES

SPORTS FISHING IN ONTARIO—PROPOSED CHANGES IN DATES OF SEASON

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, I should like to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. Many people in eastern Ontario are concerned about the proposed changes in the split fishing season in divisions nine and ten. Apparently due to the calendar formula used, there could have been a reduction in the February, 1981, season for lake trout from 16 days to nine days. In light of the fact that the Ontario minister of natural resources apparently amended the Ontario fisheries regulations under the federal Fisheries Act, affecting the closed season variation order on the lake trout and splake season in divisions nine and ten, and apparently forwarded these changes to Ottawa on or about January 6, 1981, for approval, could the parliamentary secretary advise the House if in fact this matter has been approved? If not, would he expedite and clarify this matter so that sports fishermen and businessmen, such as the lodge owners in my constituency, can be assured of a longer fishing season within the law?

Mr. George Henderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I will take that question as notice and get the answer for the hon. member tomorrow. I am not familiar with that aspect of the fishery.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. What action is the minister contemplating with respect to replenishing the Farm Credit Corporation with adequate funding to meet the needs of farmers throughout Canada, particularly young farmers? If he is not anticipating any increase in funding to the Farm Credit Corporation, does he have some other program in mind which might be unveiled by the government?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, last year we lent over $500 million to farmers. The majority of that—over 75 per cent or around 75 per cent—went to young farmers. We would like to be able to lend more. We are drafting new legislation which will allow us, when presented to the House—and the hon. member will have to be patient until it is presented to the House—to raise money from the private sector; that is the intent.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, could the minister indicate to the House how much money will be included in this appropriation, and what rate?

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, if I could give the hon. member the information he wants as to the rate, I would probably be drawing a much higher salary than I am, that is, if I could forecast what the interest rate will be here or anywhere else in the world.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I would just say that we have a preferred interest rate for the Farm Credit Corporation. At the present time it is 12.75 per cent interest, which is a very enviable interest rate for anyone else in business. I am sure the hon. member recognizes that farmers are business people and that whatever interest rate we devise will be one that is fair and equitable.

PRIVILEGE

MR. OBERLE—STATEMENT MADE BY MR. REGAN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan) to remain in the chamber for a minute. I am confident it has not escaped Your Honour that during the course of question period the Minister of Labour took it upon himself to insert his very limited jurisdiction in a labour dispute which is currently causing very serious difficulties in the province of British Columbia. In so doing, he departed very dramatically and radically from a well-accepted practice in the House of Commons, that a minister who has not examined a situation or has not availed himself of sufficient information from both parties involved in a labour dispute like this one, should not take it upon himself during question period on the grounds that we are dealing with a foreign company, to take sides in a labour dispute which in this case has caused serious interruptions in the province of British Columbia.

After I have examined the "blues", I wish to reserve the right to confront the minister further and hopefully to move a motion or, if nothing else, to give the minister an opportunity to correct his very unfortunate statement today. If he does not choose to do so—

Madam Speaker: Indeed the hon. member should wait until he sees the "blues". I fail to see that there is a question of privilege in that to which the hon. member has referred. If he is not satisfied with the answer he received, or if he has some objection to the way the answer was formulated, it is a matter of debate, but not a question of privilege.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,323, 1,709, 1,777, 1,785 and 1,909.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 1,323—Mr. Friesen:

Is it the intention of the CFDC to lower interest rates on interim and development loans and, if so (a) by what percentage (b) will existing loans be renegotiated (c) what amount will be lost in revenue?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): (a) No. The corporaton has decided to maintain the normal interest rate, that is, the preferential bank rate plus 2 per cent.

(b) and (c) Not applicable.

CANEX—CFB ESQUIMALT

Question No. 1,709—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Are CANEX operations subsidized by the Department of National Defence at CFB Esquimalt and, if so, to what extent?

2. (a) What were the profits from CANEX operations at CFB Esquimalt for the fiscal year (i) 1978-79 (ii) 1979-80 (b) what proportion of the profits were remitted to the department for (i) buildings (ii) maintenance (iii) utilities (iv) salaries for managers, supervisors and accounting services (c) to what specific uses are the profits put?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. Public support is provided in the form of accommodation in otherwise vacant buildings, basic management and accounting services in accordance with Treasury Board decision 689194—guiding principles for the provision of services and recreational facilities at Canadian Forces establishments and the provision of support to the Canadian Forces exchange system and associated non-public funds organizations. Staff support to CANEX consists of one officer and two other ranks on a full-time basis and one officer, five other ranks and one civilian employee on a part-time basis.

2. (a) The total net profits after all expenses including the remittances made to the Crown as listed in Paragraph (b) below were:

(i) $102,366
(ii) 96,647

(b) (i), (ii) and (iii)

1978-79—$29,480.71

1979-80—$42,544.46

These figures are based on an annual review of all CANEX operations across Canada.

(iv) No remittance was made to the Crown for salaries of the staff listed in Paragraph 1 above.

(c) In both 1978-79 and 1979-80, 10 per cent of net profits were reinvested as working capital in the CFB Esquimalt CANEX operation. The remaining 90 per cent were contributed to the CFB Esquimalt base fund, for the provision of base recreational, amenity and community programs.

ADVERTISING EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,777—Mr. Stevens:

For the current fiscal year, what are the estimated expenditures of Petro-Canada for (a) advertising (b) free or subsidized publications (c) other information conveyed to the public?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows: (a) $1,214,000 (of which $926,000 is related to the conversion of gasoline marketing operations); (b) $118,191; (c) $1,821.

Question No. 1,785—Mr. Stevens:

For the current fiscal year, what are the estimated expenditures of Canadair Limited for (a) advertising (b) free or subsidized publications (c) other information conveyed to the public?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: Canadair Limited, (a) $159,100; (b) $99,700; (c) $15,000.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS BUDGET OF AECL

Question No. 1,909—Mr. Waddell:

What is the total amount and breakdown of the public affairs budget at AECL, including employee expenses, exhibits and displays, literature and films, programs for schools and specific projects such as the Nuclear Information Centre at the Manulife Centre in Toronto, including the set-up and operating costs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows:

Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories	$226,000
Whiteshell Nuclear Research Establishment	$231,000
Nuclear Waste Management Program (WNRE)	$598,000
Nuclear Information Centre in Toronto	$140,000.

These figures included employee expenses. However, the accounting systems at AECL's sites are not maintained in such a way as to provide a breakdown for exhibitions and displays, literature and films and programs for schools.

In addition to the above-mentioned funds, public affairs of a corporate and international nature are funded from commercial revenues. These include work in support of marketing.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, the parliamentary secretary has stated from time to time that he would look at question No. 811 which has been on the Order Paper since May 8, 1980. I am just wondering whether perhaps there is some reason the parliamentary secretary is not able to answer this question, or what he intends to do about it.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, as usual, I will reply by indicating that I am looking into the situation. I remind the hon. member that many questions were put on the Order Paper before his. Sometimes it requires a lot of work to develop a particular answer, but I will do my best to get his particular answer as soon as possible.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1981-82

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

The House resumed from Monday, February 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-59, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Last night when I concluded my remarks I was speaking about the policy of this present government, which appears to be trying to borrow its way out of debt. I want to now continue what I have to say with respect to this borrowing bill.

The government is asking the House of Commons to approve another borrowing of $14 billion. This sum, added to the $12 billion which received approval earlier, totals $26 billion. I wonder when the government will realize that this constant borrowing is simply shoving this country into bankruptcy, slowly but surely? When will the government realize that if we do not start paying our bills soon, as we expect our people to pay them, havoc will be brought on the people of this country.

The government asks us to look at its record, since it does not tell us what it will spend the money for. The government does not say what the interest rate will be or what the conditions of borrowing will be. It simply asks for carte blanche approval to borrow this $14 billion. That is the way it is framed in the bill. This is a subject which I would like to deal with.

If the government had an excellent record and went to a banker with all the material we have in this bill the banker might be inclined to loan some money, but I am in doubt as to whether it would be $14 billion. The banker would probably lend some money on the security of Canada. An individual who goes to the bank with this same type of arrangement and says to the banker, "I will not tell what the money is to be used for; you do not have to tell me what the interest rate is", would not get to first base in borrowing any sum of money from any banker in this country. This is what the government is doing with the representatives of the people. It is saying it will not tell us what it plans to use the money for but that it will simply borrow $14 billion.

I wish to look at the record of the government to see if there is any reason to believe it might be planning to use this money to increase production, or to create production. As I outlined last night, if the money was to be used to create and increase production then there might be some sound reason to borrow the money. But the money is being used in many ways; the government is not saying what it is being used for. It may be used to finance another trip to Austria for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He asks the people of Canada to spend their holidays and their money in this country while he heads off to Austria to ski. The skiing is just as good in the Banff, Lake Louise, and the Hinton areas; which is good enough for Canadians but not good enough for the Prime Minister. These trips cost a lot of money. Maybe the money is being spent to finance another trip to Arabia. This will not create any productivity, it is simply spending money. You can borrow until you are blue in the face but if you are not creating productivity which can be used to pay back the principle sum, plus interest and some profit, you will bring on ruination. That is what is happening in this case.

I again ask if we can believe what the Prime Minister of this country says. The record tells the story. In 1968 there was a federal expenditure of about $12 billion. Mr. Trudeau led the people of Canada to believe that—the Prime Minister led the people of Canada to believe—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I believe it is the practice to refer to members of the cabinet or the Prime Minister by their office rather than by their names, and to refer to hon. members by using the names of their constituencies.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I changed the words to "Prime Minister". But that does not sound any better to me. As a matter of fact, it sounds a little worse, since we expect the Prime Minister of Canada to be careful with respect to the expenditure of public money. After all, it is money which belongs to other people, not to him.

What happened in the Prime Minister's ten years in office? His expenditures went up to $52 billion and then he went out of office. Do you not think he would have had time then to reconsider and make up his mind that, yes, mistakes had been made? The answer is no. The expenditures are now up to $63 billion, with another deficit of about $13 billion or $14 billion. How can you believe what the Prime Minister says when this record gives us this type of information?

I would like to deal now with the civil service. What did the Prime Minister have to say about the civil service? In 1968 the Prime Minister promised to cut the civil service by 10 per cent. What happened? Instead of cutting it by 10 per cent he has increased it by more than 50 per cent—that is 100,000 employees. This is completely opposite to what he promised the people of Canada. Now the government brings in a bill like this and we are expected to believe it is doing something good, but we are not told what it is.

What about inflation? In 1968 the Prime Minister appeared on national television to talk to the Canadian people about inflation. I believe it was August 13, 1968. I do not know if that was a Friday or not, but it probably was. This is what he said:

> We would be on the way to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control. To spend vast sums on welfare, education and other programs while allowing inflation to continue would merely place hundreds of thousands of Canadians on a treadmill they could not escape.

That is exactly what the Prime Minister has done. He has placed hundreds of thousands of people on that treadmill.

Instead of doing something about spending he has increased it by more than $50 billion.

The record is not very good. The public debt has increased under the Prime Minister by two and a half times. It will rise to over $100 billion this year. The public debt has increased faster under this Prime Minister than under any prime minister in the history of Canada. If he wants records, that is certainly one! The Prime Minister is sliding this country downhill faster than Steve Podborski can move on the slopes. I wonder what the government must see happen in this country before Liberal members and the Prime Minister realize what they are doing to Canada; I wonder what catastrophe will have to happen.

The flight of capital leaving this country is about $6 billion already. This capital provides jobs, builds industries and creates productivity elsewhere. As the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has pointed out a number of times, our drilling rigs are leaving the country, while the Minister of Energy laughingly says there are still a great many of them working. Those that are working, will finish their jobs, that is for sure, then they will head where they will get a fair deal, some return on their money. We have no hope of attaining self-sufficiency in oil at the rate we are going. There is not a proper climate in this country to invite people to invest their money here.

There is practically nothing being done to help agriculture in western Canada. There is nothing but talk, yet more than a million people are unemployed. Inflation, the national debt and the civil service are all increasing. Borrowing is also increasing. We are not paying our debts, instead we are borrowing another $14 billion. What will it take to awaken Liberal members opposite to an awareness of what they are doing to this country? They wonder why some people in the west talk about separation. Westerners are talking about it because this government will not listen or see. I understand that when the Minister of Energy went out west he had to have four RCMP plain-clothes officers to guard him. What was the cost of this protection? It is strange that a minister, while travelling in Canada, would require Mounted Police to guard him. It is probably the first time in the history of our country such a thing has occurred. If the minister would do his job and provide a fair deal, there would not be this situation. The minister has said he cannot obtain a deal because Alberta will not negotiate. Alberta made an offer which was turned down. The government is quite prepared to pay $38 and $40 per barrel for oil from other countries, but not to pay $20 and $25 for Canadian oil which would help to create jobs.

There is also the matter of our shameful foreign debt. To illustrate what I am trying to say, I will go back in history. At the end of World War II in the year 1945, Canada had a foreign debt of $7 billion. At that time Canada had a shipbuilding industry which at the height of its production turned out one 10,000-ton freighter every two days, an aircraft industry which turned out Lancaster bombers, Mosquito fighter bombers and Hurricane fighters, and an automobile industry which was the second largest in the world. We had huge natural resource reserves and energetic people who wanted to work, all of which assured industrial expansion without the fear of creating an unmanageable demand for imported raw materials.

In 1945 Canada had the potential to become a net exporter of capital. By 1978 when Canada should have become a credible nation comparable to Switzerland, West Germany and Japan, it was still following the system of sending out raw materials and buying back the finished product, which has the effect of creating jobs elsewhere while our own people live meagrely, on relief, or on unemployment insurance. By 1977, in a time of peace, Canada had accumulated a debt of $106 billion. How can anyone compare those figures and be proud? Other countries, such as Argentina, had a debt at the end of 1976 of $6 billion; Brazil, $14 billion; South Korea, $7 billion and Spain, $6.7 billion, but Canada had a debt of $106 billion. Why is that?

It is, I suggest, because Canada has had a sustained orgy of successive foreign expenditures, of buying elsewhere and of creating jobs elsewhere while our own people cannot find jobs and are walking the streets. The Canadian government has had a deficit in all but four of the last 28 years. If the government cannot balance its budget, it borrows the money to pay its debts. How can we create a surplus in Canada with the government operating in this fashion?

Increasing deficits retards growth and creates unemployment. A nation's strength is based on the extent of its external holdings, but the Prime Minister and his government measures our strength by the extent of our external debts. The more debts we have the more prosperous are the people according to the Liberal Party. In 1976 we sent more than $4 billion to the United States to cover the interest on our debt. The amount has risen to $6 billion, and we are not even paying on the debt itself. No other business could survive in this way.

Let me go back to the end of World War II. At that time West Germany and Japan were weakened by the war. Large portions of their vital industries had been destroyed by bombs. Much of the Japanese land was held by other countries such as Manchuria, China and Korea. Their foreign assets had been expropriated without compensation. However, none of these setbacks stopped the people of those countries. If these countries had followed Canada's policy of sending out raw materials to be made into finished products, they would have been on the rocks as well. They decided to get to work and create production in their own countries.

Japan and West Germany have rebuilt their industries and today are creditor nations from which other countries borrow money. In 1945 they were almost at the bottom of the barrel when Canada was close to the top with only a debt of $7 billion. Now Canada's debt is approaching $200 billion and these countries are lending money to other poorer countries. The situation will not improve unless the government changes its policies. But the government is asking us to continue with its same old policy of borrow, borrow, borrow.

The government still believes it can borrow its way out of debt. If only the government would realize that there is a lot of potential in Canada. There are tremendous industries. A prime example is the oil industry in western Canada. When this industry should be thriving, rigs are leaving the country and there is no development, nothing but stagnation. Men from Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes want to work in the west, but the government says it would prefer to buy oil from foreign countries at excessive rates. It will not give the people of this country a fair deal.

If I were a member of that government, I would obtain answers from the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) or I would leave the party. I would not permit them to ruin this country. We have a chance of creating productivity, jobs and increasing our gross national product but, instead of entering into an agreement with Alberta and Saskatchewan, the federal government is doing everything possible to ruin the oil industry.

The government has levied a tax on the natural gas which belongs to a provincial government. In the history of democratic representative government, this has never been done. However, this government will do anything to hurt the west. It seems to forget that by hurting the west it is hurting the rest of Canada. As a result it must borrow money to stay in operation. It is a growing crime.

Earlier today the Prime Minister referred to double tracking. He is far better at double crossing than he is at double tracking. I wish he would tell the people of Canada the truth and get this country back on the rails. He should forget about double tracks and put Canada on a single track before it is completely ruined. If the government continues to push matters, the mood of the west will worsen. Even now people are gathering in towns saying that they will not put up with this, and that if the federal government does not want them they will go it alone. If such a thing happens, people will point their finger of blame at the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy. I charge that by their actions they are deliberately trying to break up this country. In most other countries, people would not stand for such a situation, but because the people of the west are such staunch Canadians and because they want to stay in Canada they continue to hope that something will change. I hope the change will come soon.

The government says it needs this money in order to have a cash flow. while they are talking of borrowing money to create a cash flow they are chopping down the cash flow of the oil industry in this country by 20 per cent to 30 per cent, from the present cash flow of $170 billion. That is what the government is doing, chopping down the cash flow, yet it expects the industry to be happy. The most optimistic forecasts show that the industry needs a cash flow of $260 billion in order to reach energy self-sufficiency by 1990. That is being cut back, however, by 20 or 30 per cent. It already appears that 50 per cent of the exploration funds that were to be spent in Canada and would have provided jobs, has gone to the United States. No wonder they say, "Welcome Canadians. Congratulations Canada, you are helping to develop our industry, helping to make us self-sufficient in energy." It is no wonder they thank us, because that is exactly what we are doing.

At present we import enormous amounts of oil at world price. With taxation dollars and borrowed money, we pay for this oil.

The government discourages exploration for new reserves. The people of Canada must finance the so-called security of supply with foreign oil at world prices while the government stubbornly refuses to correct what it knows is a mistake. It refuses to enter into an agreement with Alberta and Saskatchewan, the provinces that own the resources. These resources are not owned by the people of Canada, but by the provincial governments.

Through the constitutional debate the NDP has tried to fool the people into thinking it is doing something for them by entering into an agreement with the Prime Minister. The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) has sold out western Canada; as a matter of fact, he has sold out all Canada by entering into an agreement to do something that is not even equal to what we already have in their BNA Act which gave the provinces the right to control the natural resources—in fact to own them, not control them. The government says, "We will let you control them and maybe we will step in and take them over."

The government talks about Canadianization, Mr. Speaker, but does it think it is fooling the people of Canada? This is nationalization. It is paying out exorbitant sums and that is a rip-off of the taxpayer. We sometimes hear politicians talk about the rip-off of government but this is a rip-off by government of the taxpayer. It is taking huge sums of money out of the taxpayers' pockets to buy Petrofina, another oil company. Will that company create any more wealth? It may if it starts exploring but it should already have been doing something in that area which it could have continued. It has done pretty well to this date, but now the government is taking money out of the pockets of the people in order to pay an exorbitant price for this company, and it thinks that is good business. Even the president of PetroCan says we are so heavily laden with debt that we have to dip into the pockets of the people to pay the price, which is far more than it is worth. One could have expected the government to pay slightly more than the net worth of the company, but not the exorbitant amount it has offered.

In the early days in Rome the government had an excellent fiscal policy which they called fiscus or fisc, which means "money bags" in English. In ancient Rome fiscus was a wicker basket. The emperor used to keep these baskets of money around him and when he wanted to buy a new fiddle or pay the fire insurance or go on a trip, he would take some money out of the nearest basket. Then, when people paid their taxes, he would put that money into the basket. That is a balanced budget; he did not spend all the money he had. He did not take all the money in the basket and go on a wild orgy of spending, sending money to other countries, and taking trips. He lived on a balanced budget.

Baskets are no good to this government, Mr. Speaker. It has been to the bottom of the basket years ago but it continues borrowing on the credit of the country in order to fill the baskets. It still has not learned how to cut down government expenditures, however, or how to start living within its means. It still has a $13 billion deficit. People are getting fed up with this procedure and I do not blame them.

The bill before the House exemplifies the policy of this government. It is a warning to the people of Canada that the government still has not learned to live within its means, to cut down expenditures, to cut down on the civil service if necessary, and to stop spending money it does not have and as a result has to pay exorbitant interest rates in order to borrow.

Under the Prime Minister the Liberal ship is running loose in Canada today, without a rudder, without a compass, without an anchor. It does not know where it is going but it is operating on borrowed money. It expects the people of Canada to pay up and keep on smiling.

The people of Canada are getting fed up, Mr. Speaker. It is time the government woke up to the facts of life and realized that it cannot continue to run the country without a plan, without a compass, without an anchor, without a rudder, simply by borrowing money whenever it wants.

I do not think any member of the House should give the government permission to borrow $14 billion. That would be criminal, particularly if it were granted on the basis of this bill. This government has not even promised to create any new production; it will simply carry on as before.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I certainly admire Steve Podborski. He certainly goes downhill fast but this country is going downhill even faster under the Liberal leadership. It is time we woke up. We cannot continue to live on borrowed money; it is time we paid our debts and began to live within our means. We cannot continue sending raw materials out of the country. We should create a climate that would encourage people to invest their money here in order to get industry moving.

There is no better incentive than to say to the people of Canada "You can make a dollar if you invest your money here." Instead of that we talk about Canadianization or nationalization. We say, "If you do well we will take it away from you. If you do well, as Alberta did, we will hound you until we drive you out of the country." That is what is happening with this government. It is enough to make one ashamed to be a Canadian citizen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to speak in these exalted halls since the emergency debate on the economy as we were adjourning in December. I have been away, Mr. Speaker. The sight of this government and the way it squirms and deals with the country's problems is enough to drive anyone out of the country. I was delighted to go to countries like Kenya and see how they really function. This country is not functioning on the same level as Kenya unless we want to look at the wild game parks and then at the government benches.

Miss Bégin: What about South Africa?

Mr. Crosbie: I will come to South Africa and Brazil also. I will deal with the universe if the House will give me time. To come back to Canada, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would prefer to be known as Mr. Speaker.

• (1540)

Mr. Crosbie: I hate to be called to order by the sexists opposite, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, I am not cognizant of what sex the Speaker is. It matters little to me. The Speaker is in the chair and I pay the Speaker all due deference whether the Speaker is a male, a female or whatever the Speaker might be!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: However, we are dealing with this borrowing authority bill. I have been thrown off stride in the logical progression that I was going to take, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to thank my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), who handled matters so well for me while I was away for the last three or four weeks broadening my knowledge and experience.

Mr. Fox: It didn't take much time.

Mr. Crosbie: I also want to thank the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), the critic for the finance portfolios who also helped out so admirably, who was so hard working, so intelligent and determined. It was a great solace to me knowing that I could leave and the world would not even notice I was gone. As a matter of fact, it was a great disappointment also. In any event, these two gentlemen did a fine job to fill in for me while I was gone, and I would like to thank them for that.

This bill was first introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on January 16 when he attempted to sneak this through the House as part of the income tax amending bill. The Minister of Finance, that shrewd old fox—we are all told how shrewd that old master of House procedure is—was caught by the tail—

Mr. Fox: Watch your language.

Mr. Crosbie: —and the big bushy tail was amputated when the hon. member for Calgary Centre drew this illegal procedure to the attention of the Speaker. You, Mr. Speaker, are now standing in for the Speaker. Therefore, that portion of the bill had to be changed. But in his remarks on this part of the bill, the Minister of Finance at page 6284 of Hansard said this:

—the budget strategy of gradually reducing the size of the budget.

This is but to laugh, Mr. Speaker. This is to say that more is less; that less is more. The minister's deficit which he now admits to be $14.2 billion is $3 billion more than the deficit would have been had the election turned out in an opposite manner last February 18. How can the budget strategy gradually reduce the size of the deficit? I stand here quite confident in saying this: the deficit is not going to be reduced, the deficit is going to increase. There will be no reduction in the deficit. I ask hon. members why? Because the Minister of Finance has no guts or the courage to impose a regime for the next three or four years that will result in the lessening of these deficits. I will come back to that later.

There is a new twist in this bill. I will leave the rest to the Minister of Finance's remarks, because I do not want to stoop to low comedy in the House this afternoon. That is what his remarks were, low comedy. Instead, I will pass on to the real minister of finance, the associate minister of finance. I think that is what he is called. Mr. Bussières is his name. Whoever he is, he is twice the man the Minister of Finance is. He is twice as knowledgeable. He spoke on the first day of the debate, which was January 30. He explained there is a new twist in the bill. He said that this bill is to provide authorization to borrow $14 billion. On July 17, 1980, we authorized the government to borrow $12 billion. But $12 billion over a period of six months is not enough for this government. It has to have that amount reinforced by another $14 billion. There is a new twist. Of that amount, $3 billion is not to expire at the end of the fiscal year 1981-1982, it is to continue. The previous borrowing authority bills have had a provision that the borrowing authority granted expires at the end of the financial year concerned. This concerns the year 1981-1982, from April 1, 1981, to March 31, 1982. However, at page 6741 of Hansard, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) said:

> The $3 billion margin for contingencies being requested is in line with the margin that has been provided and deemed necessary in recent years.

In other words, the government wants the $3 billion to continue on ad infinitum after the end of the next financial year for contingencies. What kind of contingencies could there be that would require a $3 billion line of credit? What is in a billion, this government asks. What is in $3 billion? If this government is so negligent and so careless, or if its economic actions are so harmful that we have a $3 billion contingency which the government does not have borrowing authority to handle with the government's $14 billion authority, then the government should come back to this House and tell this House and the Canadian people: "We have a contingency of $3 billion. We have an emergency of $3 billion." What other reason does the minister give for asking for this extraordinary authority? On the same page, he continues as follows:

> A weakening Canadian dollar, on the other hand, could give rise to the need to borrow foreign currencies to replenish official holdings of foreign exchange which are depleted through foreign exchange operations.

Earlier the minister said the government only has to go to the public markets to borrow $11 billion in 1981-1982. That is all the government had to do, according to the budget which was tabled in this House. The government will get the other $3.2 billion from the pension fund and other sources without having to go to the public markets to borrow money. The minister says the government will have to borrow only $11 billion next year. The minister asks for $14 billion in this bill and he asks that the $3 billion continue on beyond March 31, 1982, so the government will not have to come back to the House if a contingency arises. What is the contingency? The Minister of State for Finance fears a weakening Canadian dollar. He gives the answer away. Instead of a weakening Canadian dollar, with the resources this country has, the Canadian dollar should be a burgeoning dollar. If we had economic sanity and economic sound policies we would have a burgeoning dollar. It would not be worth only 83 cents or 84 cents, it would be back to the level of the old "Diefendollar", the 92.5-cent dollar with which the Liberals attempted to damage Mr. Diefenbaker. Here is a picture of our predecessor, the minister of finance of the day, Donald Fleming. I am holding up a "Diefendollar". This was used to make laughter at the expense of the government back in the 1960s. The "Diefendollar" at 92.5 cents looks pretty good to Canadians today. This crowd is shivering and shaking in their shoes because we have a dollar that is now between 83 and 84 cents and the government wants $3 billion in contingency funds because the government may have to go weaseling its way into the international markets of the world to borrow $3 billion, or in excess of $3 billion, during this year to help the Canadian dollar. Hon. members might ask why. I can tell them it is because the government's new economy policy in the energy field is crushing the Canadian dollar. It is driving money out of Canada. It is discouraging the business sector. It is doing exactly the opposite to what this country needs. That is why the government needs the $3 billion.

We are not voting for this $3 billion. We are voting 100 per cent against this borrowing authority bill and this attempt to get a $3 billion contingency item. We are voting against the $14 billion borrowing authority for this government which is bankrupt. If it had an economic policy, any economic courage, economic wisdom or economic guts—even if we thought the government was wrong-headed we would vote for them, but we are not going to vote for an amorphous, gradualist mass of mush which is all this government presents for economic and financial policies to this House. We will not vote to allow the government to borrow one cent, $1, $1 billion, $14 billion, and certainly not $3 billion for contingencies. The greatest contingency we could have in this country is another election. That is the contingency I pray for during this present year.

> Up to January 23, 1981 in domestic markets the government has borrowed a total of $8.8 billion,—

But the government has lost in Canada Savings Bonds redemptions $1.1 billion. Imagine a government in which the people of this country have lost so much faith it has a net loss item on the sale of Canada Savings Bonds; in other words, a net reduction of $1.1 billion despite the government's great Canada Savings Bond campaign last fall. A government with that kind of result should resign, because those Canadians who have a few dollars to invest have lost faith in it.

The government tells us it borrowed $1.1 billion outside Canada, of which the government has repaid $300 million. The government still owes that amount outside Canada. That is the amount it has borrowed this year to date.

We want them to come back and explain to the House what they did before March 31, 1982, how much they have borrowed outside, and what lines of credit they have. We will not give them unlimited authority. They can smash this legislation through with closure; they have the majority, they are the bully-boys of confederation. They will ram their Constitution down our throats, they will ram their new energy policy down our throats, but, by God, we will attempt to regurgitate it. That is the least we can do. They have the majority, they have that solid phalanx over there. They can push it through, but not without our making our protest, not without our asking questions and making the points we are making now and which we hope to continue making during the rest of this debate.

There will be no borrowing authority until there is evidence of some action in the economy. Look at the results of last year. I will refer briefly to the business review of the Bank of Montreal. In its brief economic review of 1980, the bank concludes that:

There were in 1980 about 160,000 housing units started. This will make the year the slowest housing year since way back in 1966.

Where is the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) now? Where is he now that he has finished cutting the throat of the chairman on the Advisory Council on the Status of Women? He was a mighty man in the fall of 1979 when he was going to do a hell of a lot for housing in Canada, when he was worrying about the lower-income people and when he worried about women. The only woman about whom he is worried now is poor old Doris whom he forced out of office because she is one of the few Liberals in this country who has a backbone. Where was he when we had those miserable 160,000 starts last year, the worst since 1966?

The review goes on to say that the productivity performance in 1980 was dismal. The per worker output declined 3.5 per cent as compared to the 1.2 per cent drop in 1979. It states there is a worrying acceleration in labour costs per unit of output. Increases in this area will range close to 12 per cent. There is a 12 per cent increase in labour costs per unit. It says that on the inflation front, consumer prices are up for the year as a whole to 10.2 per cent, and the prospects for next year are that they will be over 12 per cent. Over all, the GNP in real terms will fall one half of 1 per cent, the first drop since 1954. That is the record of these economic miracle men. They came in in 1963. This is their worst year since 1954. We do not hear them boasting about that. Where is the silent Minister of Finance? He has more to be silent about than any other minister in our history. Where is he slithering and slinking around in the country? He is in the cubbyholes, in the crevices, he is behind the telegraph poles so he will not be recognized. We have not heard a squeak from him, we have not had a major speech from him, we have not heard anything from him, no declaration of policy, except that he is a gradualist. Yes, he certainly is a gradualist.

I should like to come back now to the business review of the Bank of Montreal. It states that:

Spending on housing will drop about 15 per cent, twice the rate of decline in 1979.

They conclude with this:

Unquestionably 1980 was the worst year in Canada's post World War II history.

All that is thanks to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Do you remember him, Mr. Speaker, on election night on February 18, coming on our screens? He said hello to the 1980s. We can see what the Prime Minister will do to the 1980s. He is not only crucifying our economy, he is crucifying the country.

I have only a limited amount of time, Mr. Speaker, unless hon. members will give me unlimited time so that I can develop my views properly. Here is a study by Pitfield Mackay Ross. Our situation is really serious in January of 1981. The study states:

Inflation in North America will continue at very high rates. We anticipate consumer price inflation in 1981 somewhere in the range of 11 to 12.5 per cent—

Wage growth has accelerated markedly over the last six months. A year of both widespread labour strife and very high wage settlements appears unavoidable—

Economic policy does not appear to offer any easy solutions. Monetary policy simply is not working and the central governments appear incapable of balancing their books.

If the inflation performance in North America were to take a decided turn for the worse over the next year or so, the authorities would quite probably opt once again for mandatory controls.

Then they look at the consumer price index and they remove food and energy in Canada and mortgage rates in the United States as the extraneous shock or external factors, and they look at what they call the core or underlying rate of inflation. In Canada the trend from 1968 to 1978 in the core rate was 6.2 per cent, in 1979, 7.7 per cent, in 1980, 9.4 per cent and in 1981 they forecast the core rate will be 10.5 per cent, and the total CPI will go up to 12 per cent. No western country can function in any economic sense if it is going to have an inflation rate of 10 per cent or 12 per cent for the next unknown number of years.

Let us look at the analysis of William Mackness, a well respected economist at Pitfield Mackay Ross. He calls it "Inflation in North America". Let us see what his conclusions are. At page 4 he says:

—the more fundamental problem is that the economic, social and political structure in North America has become highly inflation prone—

As a practical matter, public policy has already abandoned any determined effort to re-establish price stability. Rather than wrestling inflation to the ground, policy is now aimed at the less ambitious goal of containing inflation in the low double-digit area. The basic idea is to achieve minimum output and employment objectives first and worry about inflation second.

Further on in his analysis he states:

—inflation expectations in North America are high, higher than ever before . . . it has taken years to change inflation expectations, and now that a change has been effected it will not be easily reversed—

Borrowing Authority

Lack of fiscal and monetary discipline and associated interventions by governments are generally regarded as the key forces producing higher inflation. For example, credit creation in Canada has been underwritten by an annual 16 per cent rate of expansion of the domestic banking sector over the last decade. More recently, both the federal governments in Canada and the U.S. have been producing repeated, large deficits. The inflationary consequences of runaway public spending and money printing are well understood, but this knowledge has not spurred effective efforts to control public spending or the rate of credit expansion.

This eminent economist concludes that we are in the grip of double-digit inflation and that this government and governments in North America will do nothing about it. In the face of this analysis, anyone who puts a dollar into a long-term bond must be insane. If you are facing a 10 per cent or 12 per cent inflation, not only for the next year but for the rest of the 1980s and perhaps longer, you will not want to invest in a long-term bond. The long-term bond market will be eliminated. The whole financial structure of this country is endangered by this process.

I am only citing these authorities so that I can say these are not my views alone. I am not an eminent economist; I am only a lawyer-politician who has done his best to study the issues and who has come to some conclusions. But I am citing people who are respected and well-known economists to show the kind of situation we are in. We have no indication from this government that it will attempt to overcome it. All we have from the government is bluff and hyprocrisy. The document of October 28 was not a budget but a strangulated energy plan which has given the whole oil and gas industry of this country a gigantic hernia. It has ruptured any future we had in developing our energy sector.

I will refer to one other article in the January issue of the magazine Executive. The article is written by Peter Cook and it is entitled, "Business: What's ahead?" He points out the rewards of shortsightedness and he says:

When Finance Minister Allan MacEachen presented his October budget, it seemed to be largely irrelevant to the needs of the Canadian economy in 1981. Now, at the start of the year, it is beginning to look dangerously irrelevant, both at odds with the economic forces that are at work in the North American economy and with the long-term needs of Canadians for a return to supply-oriented non-inflationary growth.

● (1600)

That was where we were headed in our budget of December, 1979. He says:

The budget took aim at consumers by raising energy prices and unemployment insurance rates.

What is turning out to be far more shortsighted, however, is the pursuit of policies which are incompatible with reducing inflation, and at variance with the Bank of Canada's monetary stance and an erratic energy policy which is playing havoc with the prospects for business investment.

Once the notion of discriminating against certain types of investment is put into practice, business confidence as a whole is undermined.

Then he goes on with his analysis.

The Bank of Canada has to be concerned about a slippage in the dollar set in train by MacEachen's damaging budget measures.

And on and on and on.

The MacEachen budget, by zeroing in on the energy and resource sector and on foreign ownership, was aimed directly at the one area of capital spending still exhibiting strength.

He says this:

But in the energy sector, even a modest tally of the projects being deferred or cancelled wipes $2.5 billion off capital spending proposals for this year. The implications of this are that instead of outlays on major energy projects rising from $5.6 billion last year to $7 billion this year, they will fall to $4.5 billion. By itself, that represents a 1 per cent fall in the economy's predicted rate of growth this year—

This is the doing of the Minister of Finance. This is the man who has done this damage. This is the man whose policies are reducing the growth in the GNP. This is the man who is stopping the only thing that could help Canada and push us ahead economically in the eighties, the energy sector.

I am not giving my own authority. There are dozens of articles like this. Every time you look at the paper, talk to a columnist, or an economist, you get the same analysis, but this government plunges blindly ahead on these suicidal policies and asks us to vote them approval to borrow $14 billion. Like hell, Mr. Speaker, are we going to vote them authority. If they want that authority, they are going to have to clutch it. They are going to have to grab it. They are going to have to take it by strength, by force, by the force of their numbers, but they are not going to get it from us voluntarily—not likely.

I can go on. I do not know how much time I have. I will make just a quick runthrough of some excerpts from the press. The Montreal Gazette: "Canadian workers lose ground on pay":

Canadian manufacturing workers slipped from being the second highest paid group of their kind in the 10 leading industrial nations in 1975 to third lowest last year.

That is Liberal progress. "Bank of Montreal sees inflation close to 12 per cent." "MacEachen favours gradualist approach." He sure does. He is gradual on any improvements. "Economy expected to stutter through partial recovery." Mr. MacEachen has given our economy a stutter, and as long as he stays in office, we are going to stutter and splutter. I am not going to go through all the predictions for 1981. They are dismal. They are deplorable.

"Syncrude members shelve $2 billion expansion." That is the result of the great Lalonde, that great vulture circling in the sky with a great vulture policy. "Syncrude members shelve $2 billion expansion" to add to the tar sands and the heavy oils that that great wheeling vulture has already stopped in their tracks.

"Energy-related investment now deemed a weak spot in economic recovery bid," says T. A. Wilson, director of economics at the University of Toronto.

Energy-related investment, which had been counted on to support an economic recovery, is now a source of weakness, "with a $2.5 billion negative fiscal shot"—

This was from the proposals in the budget. The new energy program, and I quote:

—will collect about $4.5 billion for the federal coffers in the first half but ... only $2 billion will be recycled.

They are taking $2.5 billion out of the Canadian economy and not putting it back. That was from the head of the department of economics at the University of Toronto.

"Slower growth and higher inflation forecast for 1981". January 7, "Forecasts now bleaker than three months ago". And on and on it goes. This Minister of Finance comes into this House to ask us to approve his $14 billion in borrowing authority. What a joke. Not one cent, not a plugged nickel will we agree to give to the government in borrowing authority unless the government can bring in a new economic program and persuade us that they are on the right track, that they are taking some action, which they have not done to date.

Let me get on to the subject of energy for a few minutes and the great new energy policy. We have had in the last few days a fantastic display. The Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, is going to buy Petrofina, a privately-owned oil company. The majority of it is owned by Belgian interests. They are going to pay $1.46 billion for that company.

Petrofina was started some 20 years or so ago by a Canadian who went around Canada looking for money to start this oil company, this concept he had. He could not get any. He could not get it from Canadians. He left Canada. He got it from Belgium, from entrepreneurs in Belgium. It was not his fault. He wanted to get it from Canada, from Canadians, but Canadians would not put their money into it; nor would the Canadian government, the Liberal government of that day, put their money into it. No, they would not do that because they were favoring the policy that was going to give ownership of the oil and gas industry to non-Canadians. They did not give a darn in those days. They do not now. It is just their cynical electoral ploy. So he got the money from Belgium, and now the Canadian taxpayer is asked to pay $1.4 billion to buy the assets of Petrofina. The government gave its Crown corporation authority to go ahead with that purchase without even deciding how it would raise the money. Mr. Hopper, the chairman of that corporation, stated yesterday that this is so and that he wants the government to collect the whole $1.4 billion from the consumers of oil and gasoline products in Canada; from the people who buy heating oil, from the people who buy gasoline for their cars, from the farmer who buys diesel fuel, from the consumers of oil products all over Canada. He wants to collect his $1.46 billion from those consumers, and does he offer them an energy tax credit? This is the crowd that went berserk at the budget of December, 1979. They pretended to go berserk.

Does this minister offer those consumers of Canada today an energy tax credit to help them meet the ownership charge of Petro-Can, the Lalonde vulture charge going down around their necks?

Mr. Evans: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: Never mind order. Lalonde is a vulture circling this country ready to pounce on the consumers of oil and gas products, and I say he is a vulture. If it is unparliamentary, I will not say he is a vulture. I will withdraw it, but I will still mean it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must refer to members of the cabinet by their position in the cabinet.

Mr. Crosbie: Certainly. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is a vulture, certainly in Canada.

Mr. Knowles: An hon. vulture.

Mr. Crosbie: An hon. vulture. He wants to collect this.

There was an 18-cent gasoline tax. That was a tax just on gasoline.

Mr. Fox: Too much.

Mr. Crosbie: It was not on heating oil or any other product that came from a barrel of oil. Hon. gentlemen were shocked and dumbfounded. They were stupified by the inhumanity of that measure, and you know that since December of 1979 they have had eight increases in the price of oil. Eight increases have gone ahead under this government, this "humanitarian" government, this hypocritical government, this government that does not know the truth from falsehood. This government does not know truth if it stares it in the eye. This government is a government of vultures and of revulsion. There have been eight increases. I will not read them all out, but I have them here for anybody who does not believe me; January 1 and April 1. Then there was the 9 per cent change in the sales tax. There was the Syncrude levy up 75 per cent. There was a July 25 18-cent a barrel subsidy on Canadian crude. There was a $2 per barrel increase on crude oil announced July 31, and in the October budget there was the petroleum compensation charge. All of those increases brought total increases in 1980 to between $4.70 and $4.88 a barrel. That is the crew that promised they would not increase the amount to over $4 a barrel.

Mr. McKenzie: That is only the start.

Mr. Crosbie: That is only during 1980, and it is going to be far worse in 1981. Do you know that in Montreal in December of 1979 gasoline was costing $1.18 per gallon? In December, 1980 it cost $1.46 per gallon, if you got it at the cheapest outlets; that is 28 cents to 30 cents more than the cost a year ago under this brilliant Liberal regime. And it is worse than that in other areas of Canada. That is how they keep their promises.

What promises? Did those gentlemen make promises? Just look at the Minister of Finance and see what he did. We are unlucky in the rest of Canada that we do not get the Scotia Sun up here. January 23, 1980, page 2, section 1 was sent to me by a concerned Canadian:

"Here is a copy of an ad which "Allan J." ran in January 1980 for his election campaign. Give it back to him!!!!!

The Scotia Sun is published out of Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia. There is the benign-looking Minister of Finance, and he has this big ad in the paper. He says this: "December 11, '79 Tory gas prices go up—Would you let the Tories raise the gas price again? "

Then he goes on with various deceptions, etc. "Vote for Clark, Crosbie and the Tories and you have their promise that the price of gas will go up again!" "Dec. 13, '79 the price comes down because Allan J. MacEachen and the Liberal Party spoke up for you".

What an encouraging message to give the electorate. He is not here, unfortunately. I hope he listens to the tapes. Is it not wonderful what Allan J. MacEachen and the Liberal Party did for these people. Then he goes on to say "Vote Liberal and the price will stay down". Is that English? Do we all understand? Is that one of Canada's official languages, vote Liberal and the price will stay down? That was the promise, the solemn commitment of Mr. Allan J. MacEachen, now the Minister of Finance, to his voters in Port Hawkesbury and his district Cape Breton Highlands-Canso Liberal Association. Here is a picture of the man himself with dark glasses. No wonder he has dark glasses on. He is ashamed of the lies he was getting on with during that campaign. There it is in black and white. I say it is a lie. He lied during that campaign, his promises were a lie, his promises were a deception, it was deceitful, it was disgraceful, it was hypocritical because the prices have not stayed down. The prices have done nothing but go up. There it is in black and white, the testimony, the hypocrisy of that hon. gentleman and he has presided over eight increases in oil prices; not just the price of gasoline, Mr. Speaker, but the price of every product made from a barrel of oil, including heating oil, with not one cent of relief to the Canadian taxpayers who are being positively ground down by that same gentleman who put that same ad in the paper.

I can cite you another 1,000 from the Liberal ranks across the country in their disgusting, deceitful and hypocritical campaign which got them back into power without one word on changing the Constitution and not one word of what they are trying to do to Canada now, which is to force a complete change in our system of government. Not one word of that was mentioned. Just lies and deception, hypocrisy and bilge is what they got elected on. They have had eight increases in the price of oil and gasoline and now along comes the ownership charge—the Lalonde ownership charge—hip-hop-hippiting along. We do not know how much it is going to be but we know this: to raise $1.46 billion in one year to help PetroCan buy Petrofina you have to charge eight cents additional a gallon on gasoline, six cents a gallon more for heating oil and 24 cents a million cubic feet of natural gas. You can vary that around. The minister will come back and say "we are not going to collect all this in just one year". He will say, "we are going to collect it in three years". I say I do not give a good continental in how many years it is collected. It is $1.46 billion from the Canadian consumer, from the widow as well as the rich man, and while the widow is paying it, and the longshoreman is paying it, and the unemployed Newfoundlander is paying it, and the unemployed Quebecer is paying it, and the pensioner is paying it, the fat cats made hundreds of thousands of dollars on the leaks from your government out buying shares of Petrofina over the last six months.

There is no equity in that. There is nothing but help for the fat cats and screw the lower income people, screw them down—not care about them. There is not one cent of care about them and not one concern about them. That is the government we have opposite us today. You must have goodwill to be able to sit here in the chamber and realize how bad it is. There is no sign of conscience in the whole ranks of them over there. Every Canadian who earned under $21,000 a year, Mr. Speaker, was going to get relief; $80 a year for each adult in the family and $30 for each child, which is $220 for the average family, to help them meet the higher costs of energy and to help them meet our excise tax on gasoline. There was no tax on heating oil and there was no tax on these other products. Now, just to enable PetroCan to buy Petrofina, which will not increase the production of oil or gas in Canada one cubic metre or inch, whether the metric system, the old English system or any system—to purchase Petrofina will not help Canada meet his oil self-sufficiency goal at all—the consumers of oil and gas in Canada are going to be gouged for up to $1.46 billion.

An hon. Member: Plus interest.

Mr. Crosbie: Suppose they do it over three years so that prices do not go up as I have indicated, eight cents a gallon this year and six cents a gallon for heating oil, then there would be another $500 million in interest which will have to be gouged out of the Canadian consumer of oil and gas by the hon. gentleman opposite who got into office under these false pretences and who stopped Canada on its way to an economical comeback, who stopped the government which was concerned about the poor and the unfortunate and the elderly. It has stopped them in their tracks with their hypocrisy and deception. The hon. minister of welfare laughs. I hope the hon. minister will give the people she is supposed to look after more money to pay that charge.

An hon. Member: Eighteen cents a gallon.

Mr. Crosbie: Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but there is not even any mortgage interest or property tax credits to help the home owners of Canada. There is nothing. The price is already up 39 cents a gallon now. It is double the 18 cents. Who are they helping with their cheaper gasoline? Americans are laughing all the way to the bank. They are pouring over the border of the United States and are laughing at the foolish clucks of the Canadian government who are subsidizing oil products so it pays them to come across the border. The number of U.S. residents who crossed the border to fill their tanks with cheap Canadian gasoline rose more than 40 per cent in the first 11 months of 1980, Statistics Canada reported yesterday in the Montreal Gazette. They were lured by the low value Canadian dollar. There were 24.3 million Americans who drove into Canada, stayed less than a day between January and November, filled up their tanks and went back to the U.S. They saved themselves $8 or $9 when they filled up their tanks, courtesy of the Canadian taxpayer and the Canadian consumer of oil and gas who soon are going to be asked to pay for this. Is it any wonder we are the laughing-stock of the world, Mr. Speaker?

I was just in South Africa and I have not the time to address all the issues here today. I will go anywhere where I think I can learn something. I will advise the hon. gentleman to go. I went to Sakunda to see what they are doing in South Africa. They are paying the world price for oil and they have Sasol 1, Sasol 2 and are now producing Sasol 3 to come on the market next year. They are making gasoline from coal because they have huge deposits of coal. Sasol makes a good profit in doing that. They are leading the world in it. Necessity is the mother of invention. Here we are with our tar sands stopped, the heavy oil resources stopped, Syncrude stopped; the whole energy scene has stopped. Here is a small number, 4.4 million whites and 18 or 19 million blacks, 2.5 million coloured people and Indians in South Africa and they can do these kinds of things in spite of all the problems they endure.

Mr. Rae: How many people are there in South Africa?

Mr. Crosbie: Go to South Africa and learn.

Miss Bégin: Why do you speak of colours.

Mr. Rae: Why do you accept the division? Who speaks for the people of South Africa?

Mr. Crosbie: You don't speak for anyone.

Mr. Rae: Neither do you.

Mr. Crosbie: I have gone there and seen, you big loud-mouth. Have you been there? You keep your mouth shut till you go and learn for yourself, you professional bleeding heart.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West has the floor.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had more respect for the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) until I heard such ignorant statements. I had more respect for the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood until he got on with that nonsense. Why does he not stop his sophomoric, left-wing, bleeding heart tactics, go to South Africa and see for himself the problems they have and how they are attempting to deal with them by what they have done. I can tell you they are dealing with their economic problems one hell of a lot better than we are.

Let's try Brazil. The Prime Minister just went to Brazil, so Brazil is all right. He went there in his sneakers so he could make a quick getaway. What are they doing in Brazil? In Brazil they are building automobiles with engines which can use alcohol made from cane sugar. They are going to save 275,000 barrels of imported oil a day because of that. What are we doing here?

• (1620)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Crosbie: We are drinking 275,000 barrels of alcohol a day to forget the policies of this mad government.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I will take over from the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I congratulate him on his excellent address and for exposing our fraudulent government's utter audacity to come forward requesting more borrowing authority to support its blank cheque style of government which we have witnessed since 1969.

I should like to point out how it all started under the Liberals in 1969. The erosion of parliamentary control over government spending has its genesis in certain parliamentary rule changes instituted by the Liberal government in 1969. In the summer of that year the government invoked closure, that is the termination of debate, to ram through Rule 75c which permits a minister to close debate where there is not agreement between all parties. That is the rule under which they did it. This rule has effectively prevented Parliament from properly scrutinizing government expenditures. Departmental estimates are shuttled off to the already overworked committees and are then reported back to the House. Thus debate on them is limited and seldom meaningful.

As well the number of votes on estimates has been reduced. This further restricts parliamentary debate on government spending. If one examines the estimates, one will see various estimates going through with "$1" marked beside them. That is how it all started. That is why we are faced with a bill to borrow $14 billion; that is why we are the largest borrowers of money in the world; that is why there is uncontrolled spending. The report of the Auditor General makes excellent reading for everyone, and certainly the report of the Lambert commission exposed the way the government has been operating since 1969. It was actually started in 1963, but it was accelerated with the rule changes in 1969.

The government will not only wallop it to us with tremendous borrowing; it will hit us with increases in the unemployment insurance premiums paid by employees and employers. They will rise by an incredible 33⅓ per cent. I understand some of the premiums might be increasing as much as 46 per cent to bail out the Liberal government. It will give the government an additional $1.1 billion per year of taxpayers' money.

I should also like to point out that spending will be $6.2 billion higher under the Liberals by 1983-84 than it would have been under the Progressive Conservative government and its responsible finance minister, the hon. member for St. John's

West. The government will spend a total of $16.8 billion more between 1980-81 and 1983-84 than had been planned by the Crosbie budget. That is $1,900 per taxpayer per year.

The Liberals promised a progressive reduction in the size of the deficit, another lie. The deficit in 1983-84 will be $500 million larger than the deficit of last year and $2.7 billion larger than the projected deficit for 1983-84 in the Crosbie budget. Over the next four years, the total cash requirements of the government will be $12.7 billion higher than what was projected in the Crosbie budget. To meet these requirements the government will have to either borrow more money, thus driving up interest rates, or print more money, thus driving up inflation.

I should like to discuss the government's purchase or takeover of Petrofina. I received a copy of a letter today which was addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). It was from one of my constituents, a gentleman with 25 years of experience in the oil industry. I should like to point out what he said in his letter about this ridiculous takeover. He said:

I was under the impression that the Canadian government wanted an involvement in the oil industry to assist private enterprise in the development of resources with the long-range objective being to make Canada self-sufficient.

Many of the objectives outlined were attainable within the present framework of government offices and regulations without becoming actually involved in the industry. As a person who has been involved in the oil industry for over 25 years, you leave me with a large question mark as to why the Government of Canada has to be involved in the service station business. Other than possibly to continue to retain the support of the NDP.

The acquisition of Petrofina does not give Canadians any greater involvement in the research and exploration for oil. You have acquired approximately 1,200 service station outlets of which many cannot be economically operated. They are two and three bay outlets, mainly two bays, are poorly located and to obtain operators who can pay their overhead costs and make a profit, will be in many cases impossible.

You have purchased a refinery that is by oil industry standards obsolete and inefficient in design and in need of considerable maintenance and upgrading.

I hope the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will check out these points to find out just what he bought. It sounds as if he bought a pig in a poke. The letter continues:

The other so-called assets that you purchased with our money have a very debatable asset value, certainly nowhere near the price you have paid for this takeover.

I will go into that in more detail in a minute. The former owners of Petrofina are still laughing. They cannot understand how on earth the government would pay that amount of money. It continues:

It is very sad to see politicians such as yourself develop a twisted image of a good industry and become involved in the actual operation. Already we see signs of considerable overspending by Petro-Canada in the operation of the Pacific 66 Service Stations and other facilities taken over in western Canada.

I understand that one of the reasons for the involvement in the marketing of petroleum products is to have a window to look into the oil industry to determine how we make a profit.

You did not have to spend billions of dollars to do this, many of us could have explained it all to you. It is known as hard work, dedication and the freedom to express good constructive thinking processes. These are characteristics that one seldom finds in government-operated business endeavours.

That is the opinion of an expert on this purchase. Other people have done some homework and have conducted studies into this purchase or takeover. I should like to refer to the article entitled: "Canadians will foot bill" which appeared in today's edition of the Ottawa Citizen by Dian Cohen. In part it reads as follows:

PetroCan offered $1.4 billion for Petrofina. That amounts to $120 a share, so far above the market price and even the asset value of the company that its president, Alfredo Campo, was ecstatic in his disbelief: "It's so far beyond what any company would pay for it, or what the market was indicating, that I wonder how it makes sense," said Campo.

If that is the case, why on earth did the Liberal government pay more than the market price for it? It simply does not make any sense. The article continues:

An objective economic analysis of this deal must conclude that there is nothing economic in it. Petrofina was selling for under $70 six months ago. It rose to just under $90 as the government played footsie.

Petrofina has for months been encouraging its employees to buy shares in the company.

During question period today the Minister of Energy was asked if there were any leaks. He said we should go to the Securities Commission if we have any evidence of leaks. It will be very interesting for the minister to find out why Petrofina was advising its employees to buy shares over the last number of months. There is no question that the government has leaked some information to some people. Dian Cohen goes on to indicate:

Petrofina knew it had a sucker.

Yes, Petrofina certainly had a sucker in the Liberal government, but unfortunately it is not the Liberal party's money that is paying for this lemon. It is the Canadian people who have been suckered again by another Liberal government. The article continues:

I wonder who else took advantage of the situation?

The crucial energy problem in Canada is getting the stuff out of the ground. That will not happen until the federal government realizes that the world price is much closer to the economic value of oil than its contrived price.

Surely there was a better way to spend $1.46 billion.

I think a better way to spend this money would be on building a natural gas pipeline to the maritimes. That would have made more sense than buying a bunch of gas stations. I would like to point out that 85 per cent of the oil which is needed in the maritimes must be imported. I will go into the cost of the importation of oil in just a minute.

Today there was mention made in question period about statements made by Mr. Hopper, the head of Petro-Canada, who wants the taxpayers to buy Petrofina. He points out in a recent newspaper article:

I would like 100 per cent of it to be paid out of that tax, in other words. I would like 100 per cent equity because we are pretty well strapped with debt.

So, Petro-Canada is pretty well strapped with debt. It has no funds with which to purchase Petrofina so the Canadian people must pay for it at the pumps. Figures bandied about have indicated that it will cost up to 3 cents a litre more for gasoline, which amounts to 13 cents a gallon. If that is the case then this year Canadians will be paying something in the range of a 50-cent a gallon increase. Mr. Hopper went on to say:

I am not looking at anyone right now. I do not know anyone who is even remotely interested in selling at fair and reasonable prices... It would not surprise me if we did not do another acquisition for two or three years.

I hope they will not "do another acquisition" again after the way this one was handled. It sounds like Mr. Hopper is very nervous. I do not think he was very much involved in this arrangement, it was more typical of the political manipulation by the Liberal government.

It was pointed out in the House yesterday by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) how much it will cost us for cheap gas and cheap energy. The hon. member said this:

The fact that the Liberal National Energy Program is counterproductive to Canada reaching energy self-sufficiency by 1990, and given the fact that under this program Canada will require 500,000 barrels of oil imports a day by 1990, at a cost of $43 billion annually to Canadian taxpayers—

That is what it will cost for cheap gas annually—$23 billion. Who does the government think it is kidding?

It is not very often one finds too many in the Liberal party with a conscience, but on occasion a couple of them crop up. Recently two members spoke out against the energy policy. They came up with some pretty good points. This subject matter was covered in a local news article, which reads:

Doubts about the federal government's National Energy Program are beginning to surface in the Liberal caucus itself.

At least two Liberal M.Ps say it's time for Ottawa and Alberta to resolve their bitter struggle over energy pricing and revenue sharing.

If domestic energy prices have to move substantially closer to world levels to get a pricing deal, Keith Penner and Dennis Dawson said in recent interviews, then so be it.

In this same article Mr. Dawson, who is the hon. member for Louis-Hebert and Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, said:

—the gap between Canadian and world oil prices "has to diminish."

That is a very honest and straightforward statement. It is time the Liberal party stopped kidding the Canadian people that it will give them cheap gas and energy. There is no such thing in this world today. The article goes on to quote the hon. member as saying:

"There is a question of how long we can keep prices down.

Basically, I think that we made a commitment to keep prices below the Tory level for one year."

That actually did not happen, Mr. Speaker. The article continues:

Finance Minister Allan MacEachen, however, has said energy prices will be lower than what the Tories proposed throughout the government's term.

He is also a little off base with that remark.

The aerospace industry is another area in which the government is spending money. I support this expenditure. Unfortunately, the large amounts of money being spent in the aerospace industry are all being spent in Ontario and Quebec. With regard to the new fighter aircraft contract, the Liberals have announced that 48 per cent of the work will be done in Quebec, 39 per cent in Ontario, which leaves 12 per cent for the rest of Canada. I am very concerned about the five aerospace firms we have in Manitoba. These firms will not get in on any of the contract work, since the government keeps pouring the money into the east. There was an announcement some ten days ago that de Havilland will be receiving some loan guarantees. A report in The Globe and Mail in this respect had this to say:

The federal government also announced it will support the Crown-owned company with a $450 million loan guarantee that will also cover the $275 million design and development costs through the 1981-1985 period. Initial design and development costs will be $170 million... Financing will be done through bank loans and other lending instruments.

This is a subject which I must continue to raise, Mr. Speaker, until we receive some firm commitment with respect to some work for the five aerospace firms in Manitoba. The east has certainly received more than its fair share.

I would also like to point out some of the excellent work The Globe and Mail has done with respect to the government's energy package. The reports are well researched and certainly point out the weaknesses in the National Energy Program. In an editorial dated February 9, 1981, The Globe and Mail had this to say:

When your heating bills rise, and your gasoline bills rise, chances are the provinces and the oil companies have nothing to do with it: you are helping to improve the federal government's cash flow and enable Petro-Canada to fly its colours from gasoline stations from coast to coast. We appear on the brink of a new definition of self-sufficiency: the government helps itself, and its take is never sufficient.

That last remark certainly seems to be the motto of the Liberal party: consumers and taxpayers in Canada must continue to pay and pay.

There are also some encouraging articles being published. A recent statement by the B.C. minister of energy, Mr. McClelland, pointed out that after a three-day fact-finding tour through Ontario, the minister:

—has come to the conclusion that Ottawa eventually will abandon its controversial energy policies and work with the provinces to achieve energy self-sufficiency.

I hope Mr. McClelland knows what he is talking about. That is something which all of us can go home tonight and pray for, that this ridiculous energy program will be withdrawn. Experts and authorities from across the country have pointed out that this program is counterproductive to Canada becoming energy self-sufficient.

It is not just Alberta which has been hit. There are oil companies and plants in Saskatchewan which have also suffered. The latest energy package has priced Lloydminster crude out of U.S. markets. This is a type of heavy oil which we do not have much use for in Canada. With the latest taxes imposed on this heavy oil plant in Lloydminster the product is just not saleable to the United States. A recent article in the Alberta Report of January 23, 1981, pointed out:

Heavy oil producers in Saskatchewan, already reeling under the load of provincial royalties and the new federal taxes imposed in the October budget, were hit with another blow this month. The National Energy Board, in its monthly price-setting ritual, determined that heavy oil exports were "deeply undervalued" and advised energy minister Marc Lalonde that a hefty 30 per cent increase in the federal export charge was warranted. U.S. consumers, however, found the board's so-called "just and reasonable export price" anything but. They promptly cancelled orders from their Canadian producers, who were left scrambling to find either new buyers or storage for their oil. Producers are appealing to the NEB to reconsider its opinion.

The government has not left anybody out and it is hitting from all angles. Just to wrap it up, I would like to quote a gentleman who has helped expose the irresponsible mismanagement of financial matters by Liberal governments, Mr. Don McGillivray of Southam News, who wrote in one of his articles:

> Here's the record: 1970 was the last year when the federal budget was in the black with a surplus of $500 million resulting from $14.1 billion in revenue and $13.6 billion in spending.
> The budget deficit was $400 million in the fiscal year ending in 1971, $700 million in 1972 and nearly $1 billion in 1973. It reached $1.4 billion in 1974 and $1.6 billion in 1975.
> At that point it was still manageable, but in the past five years revenue growth has stalled while spending has surged ahead:
> In fiscal year 1976, the gap between the two was $5.3 billion; in 1977, $6.1 billion—

And on it goes. Mr McGillivray went on to say:

> The upward march of the deficit faltered in the 1979-80 fiscal year when the federal government was $11.5 billion in the red but resumed in the present fiscal year. MacEachen forecast a deficit of $14.2 billion last April, the net result of $45.6 billion in revenue and $59.8 billion in spending.

In layman's terms, the Liberals are spending well over $1 billion per month more than what is taken in in revenue. It is a ridiculous and irresponsible position for this country, but there seems to be no end. We keep hearing the ridiculous statements which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first made in 1968 when he said that we would have endless inflation if we do not control spending. But his word means absolutely nothing. On the campaign trail, the Liberals said that they would control spending, but they have absolutely no intention of doing any such thing and the figures will bear me out. I have here an article which I took from the Citizen. Although it is about the Prime Minister, I believe it applies to all Liberals who, while on the campaign trail, like to give out the odd true statement:

> Pierre Trudeau scraped the bottom of his barrel when he told a Brandon audience: "Whenever I see bankers, oil company presidents and newspaper giants argue we are doing something wrong, then I think we must be doing something right."
> What fatuous nonsense. If the best the Prime Minister can do to try to sway audiences is to use simplistic rhetoric the like of which hasn't been heard since the Winnipeg strike, then he should keep his mouth shut.

At the time bankers were expounding the need for a proper cash flow for small Canadian oil firms. Their comments had nothing to do with multinationals or oil barons, but small oil producing firms which were suffering a reduced cash flow and as a result were leaving for the United States. For example, recently at Coutts, Alberta, there was a mile-long lineup of oil industry trucks waiting to cross into the United States. It has a new energy policy which makes it worth while for these firms to drill marginal wells and go into the tough areas, unlike the National Energy Program.

There is no way Canada will achieve energy self-sufficiency under this program. The Financial Post of recent date carried an article entitled "Don't Hinder Mining's Growth". I hope the government will not introduce the same program in mining as it has in oil. I also hope the minister of energy for British Columbia knows what he is talking about when he says that the Liberals will have a second look at their National Energy Program, because it is having devastating effects on this country. I hope the government will search its conscience and withdraw this ridiculous program as soon as possible.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-59, which enacts the Borrowing Authority Act for 1981-82, allows the government to obtain an additional $14 billion in loans to finance public works and for general purposes. While the statutory provision is short and simple, the effect of the action authorized is extensive and complex in both human and economic terms. There is no magic involved in borrowing. Everyone knows that whatever is borrowed must be returned.

In the case of Bill C-59, what the government proposes is to borrow money—vast sums of money. There will be a clear requirement that those vast sums of money must be repaid in the times specified and, more importantly, that interest will be paid during the term of the loan. Those Canadian home owners who face renegotiation of their mortgages in 1981 and those Canadians who must replace their automobiles or acquire furniture or equipment know all about paying high interest rates. They know the devastating effect of increased monthly payments on the family budget.

Do hon. members know what will happen to a family with a home mortgage which expires this month? Let us suppose that the mortgage was granted in 1976 when interest rates were relatively low and that the interim payments have reduced the principal amount owed to $40,000. If the interest rate was 9 per cent, the monthly payment required to pay off the loan in 25 years would be $331. But with an interest rate of 15.5 per cent, the monthly payment would be $513, a difference of $182. By current standards, an interest rate of 15.5 per cent for a residential mortgage is considered good. A Canadian home owner might well be faced with a 16.5 per cent rate which, on a $40,000 mortgage, would add $27 to the monthly payment. It would bring the increase to over $200 per month.

Let us consider the increase in home mortgage costs at this level in the context of general inflation. Canada has experienced an inflation rate and a consumer price index increase in the 10 per cent range over the past years. If this 10 per cent inflation rate were applied to a $331 mortgage payment for five years, the resulting increase would approximate the same amount. That is, a $331 mortgage payment with a 10 per cent yearly increase over five years would rise to $530 so the total increase is approximately $200.

The point is that what Canadians are experiencing in a variety of ways, including mortgage rates, is the effects of inflation. For most people, the real question is whether their incomes have kept pace with galloping inflation. Keeping pace will allow them to maintain but not improve their standard of living.

Applying the same 10 per cent rate, a wage earner receiving $15,000 in annual income in 1976 should be earning approximately $24,200 annually today, otherwise he or she is falling behind the annual inflation rate. While I have applied a 10 per cent inflation rate to mortgage payments, I can assure Canadians that it can be applied with similar effect to most consumer goods and services.

There are, of course, exceptions, some of which are notable. The electronics industry, for instance, has kept price increases in line and the price of some primary food items has not increased with the inflation rate. By and large, Mr. Speaker, consumers are paying for inflation in the cost of the goods and services required for basic needs.

When a family's income falls below expenditures it has two choices: it can reduce spending by cutting back on the goods and services purchased or it can borrow to meet the deficit of expenditures over revenue. I can understand the reluctance of Canadian families to cut expenditures on goods and services as in most cases it means reduction in the standard of living and in such essentials as food, clothing, home shelter and transportation.

We know that borrowing money in order to meet a deficit will result in more problems. Many Canadian families whose incomes have not kept pace with inflation, face a difficult decision. Those faced with a budget deficit can make a choice whether to cut back on expenditures or to borrow. The Canadian government has made the choice for the national family and that choice is to borrow the funds needed to pay the difference between national revenues and national expenditures.

How times have changed. I remember in the early fifties reading an editorial reprinted from the New York Times that compared the state of the United States economy to that of Canada. At that time the United States was resorting to deficit financing but the Canadian government was budgeting for a respectable surplus. The editorial suggested the United States government should follow Canada's example and reduce expenditures to equal revenues. Now the situation seems to be reversed and the President of the United States has faced the American people with the hard economic facts. Government spending has eroded their economic strength and President Reagan has issued a challenge both to government officials and the people to face the problems and solve them. The president has placed reliance on the private sector and plans to reduce taxation, in the belief that the taxpayers will generate economic activity. At the same time, he plans to cut back on government services and promote the kind of self-reliance that made the United States a strong nation. Like the rest of us President Reagan realizes that some people need assistance and I am sure he will continue with that kind of essential service to those who cannot provide for themselves.

In Canada, things are different. Instead of positive action our government has set up a constitutional smokescreen and has introduced a bill in Parliament to authorize the borrowing of $14 billion. It has taken no steps to reduce the drain on the national economy. The money is being spent to provide services the citizens of Canada do not want.

Let me review the historical facts that brought about this problem in the national economy and which brought us to the current position of requiring borrowing authority in the range of $14 billion. We must bear in mind that this is in addition to a borrowing authority passed in July, 1980, in this House by which the government was authorized to borrow $12 billion for that fiscal year.

There is now an accumulated budget deficit of $69 billion. I do not need to tell anyone what a drain on the national economy a deficit of that magnitude is. What has gone wrong, Mr. Speaker? I think the problem goes back to 1970 when Canada had a buoyant economy and government revenues and expenditures were in line and within reasonable limits. Reacting to that economic situation, the government began looking for ways of spending the public funds being accumulated. It sought to establish programs that had appeal for some segments of the population and which resulted in vast and extensive payments. Under the existing law the provincial governments, and not the federal government, were required to meet those payments. In those days of wine and roses, the late sixties and early seventies, the federal government began to involve itself in areas that were primarily of provincial concern. There is the established programs fund through which the federal government provides funds for what are essentially provincial services. It is now seeking to reduce the amount provided to the provinces.

Just recently the community services program has been cancelled. The federal government became involved in that area in the 1970s when revenues were high and funds easily available. Now it seeks to absolve itself of responsibility for community service and it has cancelled that program.

That is not all the government has done. It is now changing agreements that have been in force and in place for many years. I have particular reference here to the agreement respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Many years ago, when some of the provinces did not have a provincial police force, the federal government offered the services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Because it was in the interests of the federal government at the time, those services were highly subsidized by the federal authority. With the pinch of inflation, with eroding revenues in comparison with expenditures, the federal government now seeks to withdraw that service and it seeks to fine the provinces with all the cost of the service although it is claimed that the formula now being considered contains a substantial amount of federal subsidy. The cost to the provinces of providing the service the Royal Canadian Mounted Police used to provide for them will be a further financial drain.

The change in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police agreement, the cancellation of the community services program and the changes in the established programs fund are all an indication that the federal government is facing the result of its actions over the past ten years. It is facing the fact that it has overspent and that for many years revenues have been less than expenditures. That is what has brought about this deficit of $69 billion. That is why the government has to come before Parliament for the second time in a parliamentary year asking for authority to borrow this vast sum of money.

I hope to continue my speech at eight o'clock when the House resumes, Mr. Speaker. In the meantime, let me say that the provincial governments cannot afford to pick up the slack created by the federal government's withdrawal from these programs which were brought into play at a time when it was not concerned about the financial stability of Canada, when it was spending money like a drunken sailor and was setting up programs which were not needed.

I see that it is five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In accordance with the wishes of the hon. member, I declare it five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Combines—Investigation of relationship between Bell Telephone and Northern Telecom; the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)—Environmental Affairs—Alice Arm, B.C.—Grant of dumping permit to Amax—Request for inquiry into circumstances.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business, as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has before it 16 public bills ranging from order No. 17 to order No. 49. With the agreement of the House, we might proceed by grouping them all together, and perhaps we could put the suggestion before the House that all orders preceding No. 50 stand by unanimous consent.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I will not take up too much of the time of the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). However, I want to bring to the attention of the House, as I have done on a number of previous occasions, the problem we face today, namely, that the hon. member for Capilano who will be speaking in a couple of minutes will be speaking on a bill which is the twenty-fifth item of business on the list of public bills. Preceding his bill are 24 bills, eight of which are printed while 16 are not printed. All of the 16 bills which have not been printed were put on the Order Paper on May 2, 1980. According to our rules, as I understand them, the bill should be ready for printing when it is presented to the House.

I have one point I want to put on the record. Yesterday I presented a bill to this House for first reading. It was ordered for printing at 3 p.m. yesterday afternoon. That bill was printed and on my desk today, which indicates it is not a staff problem. You may not wish to take action today, Mr. Speaker, but I do suggest this should be my last time of asking. I suggest in the very near future, maybe this time next week, that you rule that bills not printed should be dropped from the Order Paper.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has brought this matter to my attention a couple of times. I would say he has a reasonably valid point because Standing Order 69 does state:

No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

I suppose it is up to you, Mr. Speaker, to determine whether or not the continuation of these bills on the order paper, even though they are not printed, contravenes the Standing Order. The situation is dealt with in Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 719. It is the current practice when a large number of bills are introduced at the beginning of a session that we usually waive the normal Standing Order on normal practice. This is covered in Citation 713, which reads:

The first reading of a bill, the order for printing and the appointment of a day for second reading are taken together as one formal stage.

Citation 713 is superseded by Beauchesne's Citation 719 on the occasion of private members' bills. I will read Citation 719 into the record so that we are perfectly clear on this:

At the commencement of a session there are usually a large number of public bills introduced by members thereby making it impractical or impossible for the Speaker to review the provisions of each of the bills. Therefore, the practice that has been unanimously agreed to, in recent sessions, is that the House proceeds to the introduction and first reading of those bills, so that each may be scutinized between its introduction and its being called for second reading, in order to allow the Speaker to consider whether there is any defect in the bills in respect of the practice and usages of the House.

Perhaps it is up to you, Mr. Speaker, and the Table to determine whether or not that last sentence applies in the case of bills which have been officially introduced, are on the Order Paper but are not yet printed. I ask that you look into this matter.

Perhaps the whips of the other parties could draw this to the attention of their own colleagues so that we will not have the situation whereby a large number of bills are listed on the order paper but cannot proceed. As the hon. member for Vaudreuil has stated, this is the reason for such a large differential between the numbers that proceed on any given day. There may be a space of fifty. I believe you will be asking for a number of bills to stand, many of which were introduced, or notice given at the Table last May but are not yet printed. Perhaps this is the fault of the hon. members concerned. I would agree that you might want to take up the suggestion of the hon. member for Vaudreuil in drawing this to the attention of the original proposers of those bills.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to thank both the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) for their comments. I think the Chair does wish to take up the remarks by the hon. member for Vaudreuil for the rather embarrassing reason that approximately one month ago he raised the same question. It comes to me in the chair as a difficulty that the hon. member has not yet been given an appropriate answer.

I have followed the references made by the parliamentary secretary and had a look at some of the Standing Orders which might be applicable. I think the proper thing to do is to take the matter under consideration. However, at the same time I want to assure the hon. member that I think he is prefectly correct. He should not have to stand the fourth time on this subject. In my opinion, the way to go about this is to assure him and all hon. members that on the next day on which this type of matter comes before the House, the Chair will be prepared to rule on the subject.

In the circumstances, shall we proceed by unanimous consent or by consent of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): We shall stand all orders preceding No. 50 on today's Order Paper by the consent of the government. Is that agreed?

Mr. Knowles: We have unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): My apologies to hon. members. I could not hear the hon. member for Vaudreuil. He has said by unanimous consent.

DIVORCE ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ALIMONY AND MAINTENANCE ORDERS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano) moved that Bill C-250, to amend the Divorce Act (alimony and maintenance orders) be read the second time and be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: I notice seven minutes of the private members' hour have now elapsed on a technicality.

Hon. members will be aware that the purpose of Bill C-250 is outlined in the "Explanatory Notes" as follows:

The purpose of this Bill is to propose a scheme, within the constraints of the procedural restrictions that parliamentary tradition imposes on private members' initiatives, whereby maintenance and other money orders made pursuant to the Divorce Act could be enforced by the courts making the orders.

I have been a great fan and I have appreciated the words and the wisdom of Mr. Alexander Solzhenitsyn ever since he came to the western world in exile from his homeland. He has been a very intelligent observer of what we are doing to our freedoms and our land. We have seen in the first seven minutes of the private members' hour an example of one of the observations he has made of our society and one of the ways in which we are dealing and endangering our freedom. I might just read from the address of Mr. Solzhenitsyn on June 8, 1978, at the Harvard Commencement Exercises. In part, his speech covered the direction of freedom, and it reads:

In today's western society, the inequality has been revealed of freedom for good deeds and freedom for evil deeds. A statesman who wants to achieve something important and highly constructive for his country has to move cautiously and even timidly; there are thousands of hasty and irresponsible critics around him, parliament and the press keep rebuffing him. As he moves ahead, he has to prove that each single step of his is well founded and absolutely flawless.

Actually an outstanding and particularly gifted person who has unusual and unexpected initiatives in mind hardly gets a chance to exert himself; from the very beginning, dozens of traps will be set out for him. Thus mediocrity triumphs with the excuse of restrictions imposed by democracy.

We just saw seven minutes of that in this chamber this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

The parliamentary secretary is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of parliamentary harmony, I think there would be agreement on this side to recoup the five minutes we lost on a point of order. We are not unduly restricting the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). If it is the hon. members' wish for private members' hour to be extended to 6.05 p.m., I am sure my colleagues will agree with me.

Mr. Knowles: We would agree to seven minutes after six o'clock.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, if I might proceed without further interruption on this most serious matter which exists in our society—

Mr. Collenette: Do you want five minutes?

Mr. Huntington: I will accept the offer. I will accept any time that can be given. In the negotiations preceding private members' hour I pleaded with the government to allow the subject to go to a committee, but that has been denied me. I have been told that the government, once again, will talk out this important issue. Therefore, the bill will die. Nothing will ever come of it from this government. The government has had opportunities ever since 1972 to address this important matter, this important cancer which is destroying the dignity, freedom and potential life for children being reared in separated and divorced families.

• (1710)

That is the issue with which we are dealing today, and the warning of Solzhenitsyn is in play right here in this House at this hour. So how is it possible for a member to address something constructively on an issue as important as this, Mr. Speaker?

Bill C-250 deals with a problem which has been around for a long time. It affects children being reared by single parents who are experiencing continuous stress in their daily lives and who are struggling because the maintenance orders of family courts are not being enforced. I have personal experience of working wives who, bringing up three children, are almost breaking down trying to maintain some kind of standard of living, some kind of style and self-respect in putting their children through the educational process in this country. I am sure every person in this House knows of cases of such breakdowns and knows of the breakdown in the process of carrying out the maintenance orders from the courts of this land.

What this bill is trying to address is a system whereby the courts will enforce the orders. What we are trying to put in place is legislation which would remove the haven for people who have been given court orders to assist in the maintenance of their children in the case of a family breakdown. What is involved here is the peace of mind and mental health of mothers. Most of the people in these cases are women who are trying to raise their children without support when the court orders are not enforced. The problem is the complete, utter, shameful and disastrous degree of apathy on the part of the staff who back up the family courts because federalism in this Parliament has not worked in co-ordinating the split jurisdiction in the matter of family law. We have even heard the subject of reform of the family law brought up in the constitutional debate. We have seen the draft legislation of the provinces dealing extensively with this issue. We have seen the Law Reform Commission come down with reports in 1975 and 1977, and we have seen other working papers on this issue. We have the Canadian Bar Association's resolution number eight which was published in September of 1980 on this very issue of the garnishee powers of the court and the enforcement of court orders for the support and maintenance of children.

I should like to refer to the study paper of the Law Reform Commission of Canada entitled, "Family Law, Enforcement of Maintenance Orders". I should like to read its conclusion into the record. It reads:

> Something is profoundly wrong with a body of law and practice that fails to attain its objects more often than it succeeds. Failure is the universal characteristic of the traditional system for enforcing maintenance orders in Canada. With a few notable exceptions in recent years, apathy has been the companion of failure.

I just spoke of the apathy which exists in the rooms behind the courts and of the failure of our society to enforce the support orders, the result of which is the destruction of dignity and the removal of equal opportunities for children reared in such circumstances. The Law Reform Commission of Canada continues its conclusion as follows:

> The burden of this social evil is and has always been carried by women, most of whom are found in the least economically influential strata in Canada. It would be consciously avoiding identification of one of the main reasons for the present shameful situation (and we use the word "shameful" advisedly) if it was not mentioned that the voice of women has historically been virtually absent from the councils of those who designated, shaped and administered the present system.
> Reform involves two courses of action. First, there must be an effort by governments in Canada to improve individual laws and practices which deal directly with maintenance enforcement. Second, the whole body of marriage breakdown law must be thoroughly reshaped.

I am not just speaking idly here. This bill has a very long history in the House. May I remind hon. members that it was a member on their side, Mr. Barney Danson who, before he became a minister of the Crown, placed this bill on the Order Paper in the Twenty-ninth Parliament. When he became a member of the government and a Privy Councillor, I went over to him and asked him whether he would mind if I, as an opposition member, picked up his initiative because of the personal experience I have had in this regard. He welcomed my suggestion, and in the first and second sessions of the Thirtieth Parliament, first readings were given and second reading debate took place on Bill C-203. A very interesting and active debate ensued, as reported in Hansard of Friday, November 26, 1976, during which it was pointed out that perhaps the bill was not in order as a private member's bill. Hon. members on the government side spoke very constructively in the debate, with the exception of one hon. member, and the matter received a very good airing.

I went back to that debate and, after studying it, I sent the record out to lawyers in the community who are concerned about the swinging-door syndrome which exists in the family courts. Mr. Donald Moir, a family lawyer in Vancouver, has volunteered hours and hours of his time, as have other lawyers, in the drafting of a bill which would address this very serious swinging-door syndrome and this disgraceful and shameful situation we have allowed to exist in our society. The draft came to me and I had to put it into a form in which it could be presented as a private member's bill in the House. I believe the parliamentary legal counsel worked on it for a period of about three weeks to put the thrust of that draft bill into a form which could be presented to the House. My hope today was that the initiative, which has now been before the House since 1972—this is the second time it has had second reading debate, and the bill has had an immense amount of background study—will be accepted by the government. My hope is that the government will see fit to have the bill withdrawn and send its subject matter to committee where we can bring in the experts of the land and where we could probably start debate on an amendment to Section 15 of the Divorce Act, as is outlined in the bill. This bill is the best effort of the concerned people who have assisted a private member in this initiative.

When the bill was before the Thirty-first Parliament, it remained in the draw because the government was going to take action on it. We all know what happened. Things have changed and the Liberal government is now back in power.

The whole matter of family law is so serious and is such a national disgrace that all of the provincial governments have prepared papers on it. The Law Reform Commission of Canada has prepared its sequence of papers, the Senate has prepared reports on it, but the House continues to frustrate the initiatives of private members and to prevent the movement of this subject matter to a committee where the government itself could pick up the initiative and do something about this shameful and disgraceful situation.

I have personally seen women, trying to raise three children on their own, breaking down and experiencing serious health problems because of the failure of their husbands to maintain payments under a court order. I have seen them going back to the family courts to obtain an order which would provide maintenance. These orders would last only two months, following which there was no more money.

Surely to goodness in this age at this hour in this House when we talk about International Women's Year, we should address one of the most serious problems they have. I can give statistics with respect to the number of women at or below the poverty level who are in the disgraceful and shameful circumstance of not receiving support, and the courts fail to enforce support orders. I can give the House chapter and verse on three different experiences I have had in which there have been serious problems. I have seen companies—those evil businessmen we hear so much about—take on the responsibility of supporting, rearing and educating children in such circumstances.

The Law Reform Commission released a working paper on divorce in 1975. It released a working paper on the family court. In 1977 it released a paper on eligibility to attachment. I have already reminded the House of resolution No. 8 of the Canadian Bar Association. If ever there was an example of federalism not addressing the problems of a country like Canada, I think this is classic, for all the federal government has to do is take an initiative very similar to the one in this private member's bill before us. All it has to do is take such a simple initiative to overcome one of the major failures of our legalistic society. Nothing I have observed causes more loss of dignity and more intolerance for law and order than the disgraceful poverty conditions children of broken homes are reared in as a result of our inability to correct this shameful situation.

I remind hon. members that on October 16, 1979, the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) moved a motion under Standing Order 43 on this same issue. I know hon. members opposite, including the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Irwin), know of this. I know all lawyers in this House who are skilled and versed in the nature of law and in the problems of law are aware of this problem, but where is the initiative and the will to correct this disgusting apathy we and civil servants behind the law courts and the enforcement of these orders have?

This package I have in my hand is the package of papers I have received from lawyers out in the field on this issue. This second package is the package of papers I have received from parliamentary counsel on this issue. I have the best efforts draft of the provinces, and I have papers from each of the provinces on the family issue. Most of this problem could be resolved if we in this House accepted the challenge this bill offers us, and if we moved the subject matter of this bill into a committee and took the initiative on Section 15 this bill offers, which is not an idle wish or statement. It is a considered, studied application with respect to the problem within the limits our process here allows a private member. If we could take this initiative and this subject matter and bring in the experts of the land, we could address this and give some hope and some chance to the children and the progeny of broken homes and broken marriages, a very high percentage of whom are being raised at or below the poverty level.

Quite frankly, I am surprised that the government has decided not to allow the subject matter of this bill to go to committee and that hon. members opposite will talk the bill out.

This matter has been around since April of 1974 in its various phases. It was here on February 14, 1975. It was here on November 26, 1976, when it had second reading debate and was talked out. That debate was studied. There were adjustments, and the outcome of that debate is in the bill before us today. Here again, this is not good enough. Once again the bill will be talked out, I am told. The issue will remain static and this shameful, disgusting, disgraceful condition of lack of uniformity of enforcement of separation orders will continue to exist. Back in 1976 the government said it would bring down a bill that would address this situation. The Thirty-first Parliament said it would address this situation. We are now into the Thirty-second Parliament, and we are still not going to seize on this opportunity to move this subject matter into committee so that we can get this nasty, disgusting, and disgraceful situation within our society fixed.

And we wonder why federation is not working. We wonder why there are critics of this place. This is a prime example of why the Parliament of Canada is not working. We do not accept social challenge. We do not address the needs that are out there and to which we have all been exposed.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) for bringing these points to the attention of the House, as he has done so forcefully now and in the past.

I think perhaps his denunciation is too broad. We are as concerned as he is about the welfare of spouses who have to take care of their children, and about the lack of enforcement. In many cases there is no collection because there are no funds. I believe one of the seven major causes of family breakdown is lack of finances. In many cases—although the figures are high—orders have not been enforced simply because there are no assets. A good friend who was a family court judge once said to me that it is like putting one blanket over two beds. That is the problem in collecting these finances.

However, we in this Parliament are concerned, as are a number of jurisdictions across Canada. Provincial jurisdictions are trying to come up with new and better methods of enforcing these monetary obligations. After all, if we do not collect from delinquent spouses, it is only the taxpayer who has to pay.

The money is taken not only from provincial coffers but also from federal coffers because we contribute substantially to provincial payments.

The current process is found in Sections 14 and 15 of the Divorce Act, and I will read them both. Section 14 says, and I quote:

Effect of decree or order. A decree of divorce granted under this act or an order made under Section 10 or 11 has legal effect throughout Canada.

Section 15 states, and I quote:

Registration and enforcement of orders. An order made under Section 10 or 11 by any court may be registered in any other superior court in Canada and may be enforced in like manner as an order of that superior court or in such other manner as is provided for by any rules of court or regulations made under Section 19.

What is the effect of Sections 10 and 11 of the Divorce Act? By virtue of these sections each maintenance creditor, in whichever province of Canada he or she may be, of a Section 10 maintenance order, which is an interim order, or a Section 11 maintenance order, which is a final order under the Divorce Act, wherever made in Canada automatically has available all superior court remedies of every province for enforcement.

A point can be made that the court itself should enforce the order, police the order, hire accountants, hire collection agencies or hire any number of people within the court system to go out and collect. This suggests that the bureaucracy is better at doing a specific job than the private sector. I respectfully suggest, by itself that is not always the case, as evidenced by many of the things bureaucracies have tried to do.

What is the situation today? How can these orders be enforced? They can be enforced by at least six or seven methods which I can suggest: garnishment proceedings, equitable receivership, examination of judgment debtors, attachment of debt or bank accounts, seizure of personal property, execution against land and proceedings for committal. I suggest that in 50 per cent of the cases there is nothing at the end of those processes because there was nothing there at the beginning.

When the delinquent spouse decides to separate, most of the major assets are split at that time and the minor assets, which are usually few and far between, must be seized. In addition, in most of the provinces, provincial enactments permit the filing of superior court maintenance orders in provincial family courts and make these courts available to spouses. This is exactly what the hon. member is suggesting. In some cases this is a good method. In many cases there is a great deal of dissatisfaction with bureaucratic collection of funds for spouses.

Over and above this we have the traditional show cause hearings whereby the defaulting debtor is forced to come to small claims courts and explain why he has not paid or face imprisonment on summary conviction and continuing attachment of his wages. This way, indirectly, maintenance orders made pursuant to the Divorce Act in the superior court of one province may be enforced by the family court of either the same province or any other province. Family court procedure could be made more productive by innovations, and there have been innovations. In some family courts there are automatic systems of enforcement under which the enforcement is done by the specific court on an automatic basis.

In certain provinces they have even gone further and have computerized the process. The point is, Mr. Speaker, no matter how good the process is, we still must go to the basic needs of the family. It is not the case when two millionaires divorce or split. It is at the lesser level where there is a lack of money that we have the problem. Many times the spouses are brought into small claims courts. Again, if there is nothing there, how can you collect?

What we are talking about today is basically machinery. We are all interested in better machinery. Suggestions have been made by the hon. member for Capilano. He did not, all by himself, discover the process. I assure him that many members on this side of the House have been discussing the same thing for many years. I believe the next speaker tried on at least three occasions with private members' bills to do the same thing. It is not something he discovered or solely cares about. There have been suggestions that the new Federal Court rules could be amended to provide for garnishment orders, which is a good idea. In that way you can go ex parte to the Federal Court and seek your remedy.

There have been suggestions that the Divorce Act be changed to provide for garnishment orders. This is very close to what the hon. member is suggesting. He is also suggesting the federal civil service, including senators, Members of Parliament and so on, should be exempt from any protection because they are now under the royal prerogative. I agree with him and I think the government agrees with him. The government has and is tabling effective legislation. Once it is passed, it will bring into this House exactly what the hon. member has suggested.

One attempt in May, 1978, was Bill C-49. Legislation was introduced but it died on the Order Paper. It was based on the Law Reform Commission recommendation and on the report on attachment of remuneration payable by the Crown in right of Canada.

In March, 1979, during the fourth session of Parliament, Bill C-52 was given first reading. It also failed. In June, 1980, the federal government introduced Bill C-38, the garnishment, attachment and pension diversion act, which is now being considered. The proposed legislation would, subject to certain conditions set out in the legislation, permit provincial law on garnishment or attachment to apply to moneys paid by the Crown in right of Canada for salaries, fees, honoraria and like payments in respect of their performance of services for the Crown. As I indicated, once this becomes law, federal employees, Members of Parliament, senators, judges and others could be garnisheed for maintenance and support debts as well, like any other citizen, as they should have been long ago. In addition, superannuation moneys due to retired public servants would be subject to diversion for satisfying maintenance orders, which are matrimonial orders, and not ordinary debts.

In conclusion, the substance of what the hon. member opposite said is endorsed and is concurred with in the spirit but not the exactitude of what he is suggesting in this proposed legislation. We all want the best for estranged spouses. It is a matter of what mechanism we will use, the best mechanism, to reach that desired goal.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate to the House that the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) has not raised just one problem but in fact two or three. I recall having discussions before the dissolution of the Trudeau government in 1978, when this was one of the last items going down to the wire before the House was dissolved, on the question of the garnisheeing of wages of Crown employees. It is unfortunate we still have this anomaly in the books. If Canadians were aware of this anomaly they would be somewhat surprised, if not outraged, that the average citizen working in the private sector is liable for garnishee orders and that federal civil servants, Members of Parliament and senators are still immune from application of the garnishee order which is enforceable on anyone else. It is clearly an absurd situation. It is so clearly absurd that I am surprised the government has not made an effort to bring in that kind of measure at any time. It seems to be the sort of thing which, in this day and age, would be very quickly passed by the House. I am surprised this government and the previous government did not choose to introduce that particular measure and have it voted on rather than some of the other measures which they decided to have us vote on.

They obviously chose the wrong ones. There is no reason for crying over spilt milk. We have to deal with the measure before us. I hope very much the government will not talk this bill out because it does deserve study. What has obviously happened—and I think the hon. member for Capilano has expressed it very well—is that family law reform has become a subject of constitutional contention. This has taken the question of the Divorce Act away. Some of the limitations in the Divorce Act and the problems in the Divorce Act have been taken away from the floor of the House of Commons and the attention of the government. Clearly, if it is the government's view—and it has been expressed by the government—that family law should be a question of provincial jurisdiction, and I can see very strong arguments in support of that proposition, then clearly the whole motive and impetus for this kind of amendment to the Divorce Act will not receive very much attention from the government. On reflection, the government should recognize there is nothing stopping it from introducing an amendment to the Divorce Act which would facilitate maintenance and alimony payments subsequent to a divorce order. I do not see why we should have to wait for the process of constitutional reform in order to get that amendment. The hon. member for Capilano expressed his frustrations. Let me assure him that I have mine and that we all have frustrations with respect to this problem. I do not see why we should wait for the ultimate resolution to the question of family law jurisdiction. In my view a fundamental principle has been expressed in the piece of legislation put forward by the hon. member for Capilano. The principle is that it should be possible, without the continual necessity of returning to court time and time again, to get an order upon every default which can be immediately enforced and will provide for maintenance and alimony payments to the dependent spouse.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Irwin) made an important point, that there is an assumption behind the whole area of alimony and support payments and their relationship to welfare, and the real problems of dependants which are created by family break-ups. I am sure all of us as members of Parliament are acquainted with these problems. There is an assumption that the so-called supporting spouse actually has something and that it is simply a question of finding a speedy way to get the courts to act, apparently that will produce the solution. I can think of the problems I have dealt with firsthand in my constituency. In many, many cases the real problem is much more profound—"there ain't nothin' there". One can enforce all the orders one wants on the departed spouse, but if the departed spouse cannot be found, if he has managed to tie up his affairs in such a way that there is no way of getting at them or, if one sees that there is really nothing there, then clearly the human problems described so eloquently by the hon. member, which all of us recognize as being very real, will still be there. Perhaps this is where the philosophies of the hon. member for Capilano and myself about dealing with this problem differ; perhaps that is where we part company.

Having said that and having indicated our support, it seems to me there are two solutions to the problems. One solution might be called the best solution, that is, that we make fundamental decisions on the questions of where family law should be and who should be responsible for it. We should attempt to unify the world of divorce, separation orders, court orders, maintenance orders and property orders as best we can. The questions on whether one goes to the supreme court in one's jurisdiction for a divorce, whether one goes to the family court for a separation arrangement or whether the enforcement of separation orders is different than the enforcement of alimony and maintenance payments under divorce judgments must be changed.

Although I understand many groups are unhappy about the idea of any federal jurisdiction over the area of family law being taken away, on the basis of the evidence we have heard, it is perhaps one of the first areas which most Canadians could agree should be handled in a unified manner at the provincial level. I should like to borrow the words of a political philosopher: In many cases the best solution may be the enemy of what is clearly good in the bill before us.

It could be five or ten years before we reach constitutional agreement on what should be done about family law. Until we reach that solution, we must do everything we can to facilitate the enforcement of maintenance and alimony payments subsequent to divorce orders. That is the reason I hope the government will not decide to talk out this bill, but will refer it to committee where it can be studied. I think we will find a fair amount of agreement in committee among all members of the House; we want to reduce the technical objections a spouse can mount for his failure to make alimony and maintenance payments. We want to make it as easy as possible for dependent spouses to have orders enforced. Also, we want to make it possible for dependent spouses to have their orders enforced by way of garnishee orders on all Canadian citizens, whether or not they are employees of the Crown.

In summary, the problem stems from the fact that in a sense we are in the middle of a constitutional question. We should not allow the constitutional question to ignore the very real human problems which exist and have been shown to exist by everyone who has studied or looked at this problem. The proposals of the hon. member for Capilano go some way toward finding a partial solution to the problem. We should consider adopting this partial solution until such time as a final resolution is found for the question of where family law decisions should be made.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before recognizing the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), I should like to indicate that earlier I did not want to interrupt the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) during his contribution to this debate. But there was an exchange between himself and the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) in which it appeared agreeable that private members' hour be extended to 6.05 p.m. in order to allow for some of the time which was taken up earlier by points of order. In accordance with what appeared to be an agreement at that time, I feel obligated to put that matter to the House. Shall the time provided for the consideration of private members' business be extended to 6.05 p.m. by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I consider it a privilege to speak on the bill in the name of the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) which deals with continuing garnishees for alimony payments in divorce actions. Unfortunately, it is necessary to debate this subject, but I compliment the hon. member for Capilano for not only introducing the bill, as he has done in other years, but for his persistence in pursuing the matter. Over the years he has not let the matter drop and has made certain that our attention was refocused on this very important subject.

Briefly I should like to refer to one of the recommendations of the Law Reform Commission. As indicated in the explanatory notes in the bill, the commission recommended:

> The rights of family dependants should no longer be ignored merely on the basis of legal anachronisms—

On the basis of legal anachronisms, we cannot allow the hurt and pain in our society to continue because of our inability to deal legislatively with those problems. This is not a matter of politics. There should be no politics in these subjects which are of immediate human dimensions. I have experienced the reward of seeing the subject matter of a private member's bill go to committee. I applauded then and I do so today when the government looks past the politics of a matter and moves to the heart of it, which involves the people in question, allowing subject matters such as this to be taken to committee, whether it be justice and legal affairs or health and welfare, as it was in the case of my presentation. In the committee these human problems can be dealt with by people who deal with them daily. It is a place where legal testimony can be given.

In Canada something in the order of one out of every three marriages ends in divorce. I understand that in the United States the figures for marriages ending in divorce are approaching one out of two. Behind those statistics, Mr. Speaker, lie the untold thousands of cases of anguish, of people who are left on tenterhooks because they cannot reach the kind of settlement which is their due.

I know of one case, and I am sure the hon. member for Capilano is also aware of it, which involves a marriage break-up. In this case the husband left, moved to another province and then returned. He was well-to-do and had plenty of resources.

He was called upon by the court to pay alimony and child support. He would refuse to pay this money until the former spouse went before the court to collect it. Then, on the last day, he would make that payment to the court. He would wait long enough before paying the money to force her to pay out most of it in legal fees. The next month he would do the same thing. In euphemistic language, this is called a "legal anachronism". It is a polite way of dealing with this matter on the floor of the House of Commons. It is legal jargon, but in the lives of people who are affected by this legal anachronism it is far from adequate.

When we view the statistics with respect to marriage breakdown in our society today, we must admit that our structure is breaking down. As someone said to me some time ago, it is far too easy to get married. He said it ought to be more difficult to get married and easier to obtain a divorce. To obtain a driver's licence we must first have had some driver training. The potential driver must demonstrate his ability to drive. In order to get married all you have to do is go to the court house, get a licence, show that you are of age and physically healthy. There is no preparation for the development of interpersonal relationships, how to handle family finances, how to build organic family units or how to handle stress in a family. We really do not prepare people the way we ought to.

We must admit that in our society we have not taught people to accept accountability for their decisions. Instead, we are teaching people to cop out from the responsibility and the decisions in their lives. Because people have been able to do this for a long time, they feel that after they have been married, then divorced, they can then cop out. Somewhere along the line we must assume responsibility for those who refuse to be accountable and make them learn the lesson of accountability.

We have terms like "no fault insurance". Maybe there is a place for that kind of insurance, but I wonder about the name "no fault insurance". We have been teaching people that no one is at fault. We now have terms like "creative divorce". How can you have creative divorce when at least two people will be hurt? How can that be creative?

This bill puts the emphasis where it ought to be, on the person who has been directed by court order to pay child support or alimony and who is now trying to walk away from that responsibility. The hon. member for Capilano is doing us a service by bringing this matter to the attention of the country. I trust the government will see that this is not a political issue, but a very human one. I hope the government will allow the subject matter of this bill to be brought to the committee, whether it is justice and legal affairs or health and welfare. At this point that is not material. What is material is that we have an opportunity to study in depth the matter the member for Capilano has brought before us. This would allow the government to obtain the kind of evidence which is needed and later on a bill could be presented to the House, based on further evidence which could be built upon the work that the hon. member has already done.

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank my colleagues for giving me this opportunity to speak on a topic which is dear to me. I must say how very happy I am to see that my Progressive Conservative colleagues are also concerned about social issues. They even want more bureaucrats to solve a problem. To my mind, they will certainly not settle it through a measure under which women will continue to be the victims of a system forcing them to appeal to the courts and behave like beggars asking for handouts to which they are fully entitled to begin with.

Mr. Speaker, Quebec's Bill 183, an act to promote the payment of support, with which I am more familiar, received royal assent on June 18, 1980, and is being enforced by a network of administrative offices throughout the province. I also know that Ontario has set up a similar organization and that the provinces are about to enter this field, since they recognize that the problem relates to social affairs and primarily falls under provincial jurisdiction.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that my colleague is interested in the lot of divorced women and children generally. However, the bil! ignores separated women and their children, as well as common-law wives and their children. That is why I suggest that this bill is woefully inadequate and does not meet the current needs of Canadian women. Without insisting on the jurisdictional aspect of the problem, just the same I should like to point out to my colleague that negotiations have been under way since 1979 to reach agreement with a view to transferring to the provinces legislative powers over divorce, and that question was also on the agenda during the intensive negotiations held last summer. The transfer of social affairs or family law to the provinces is still on the agenda.

Therefore, on the eve of an agreement with the provinces, I suggest it would be altogether premature to adopt a measure which in fact would do precious little other than create one more administrative organization at a time when two provinces whose residents constitute over half the people of Canada already have a system to ensure the payment of support.

[English]

I can inform the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) that this system already exists in Quebec, where it is working very well. Many people are satisfied with the new legislation which has been introduced, which is more relevant to the civil code than to the jurisdiction of the federal government. I do not wish to protect women's rights through a new administrative mechanism, but I would like them to have the opportunity to collect money which in most cases is for their children and to be ensured they will receive that money regularly.

In fact, Germany has a minimum amount which is actually paid by the state. The spouse is required to pay the state the difference between the state minimum standard and the actual alimony or maintenance order payments. Denmark has a similar system. A minimum amount is paid for each child and that amount is ensured. Women do not have to beg for this money, nor is the court required to intervene. This system is working very well.

What we are dealing with is the very narrow scope of divorce. I hope the hon. member will take another route, perhaps through legislation that deals more with income security which has the effect of protecting all persons, and will take the advice of his colleague from British Columbia who says that we should not try to attain perfection. I am not trying to attain perfection, but I would like to see decent legislation which deals with the problem with which many women have been living for years.

I believe we are very close to solving this problem by having the provinces deal with the matter. Of course, the federal government can help by establishing the system in other provinces. I do not believe the Department of Justice will withdraw its support, but I presume that most of the provinces can as easily establish the same system which already exists in Ontario and Quebec to ensure the collection of maintenance. This would eliminate the need to establish an administrative body at the federal level, which would only have the effect of complicating the situation.

Because of the reciprocal agreement between Ontario and Quebec, women of either province may have their maintenance orders enforced if the spouse has moved from one province to the other. Bill C-250 is very laudable, but it limits the possibilities and may create certain problems. I do not see why the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs should continue to study the problem when it is very well known. I ask the hon. member for Capilano and the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) to think on the scale of the revenue problems which women in general face in Canada. Certainly, this very partial measure would not provide that the spouse pay money to the person and members of the family who are to receive the support.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is why I think that the claim of a person entitled to support more properly falls under provincial rather than federal legislation. We would only add confusion to the current situation if we were to endorse a measure that in fact would duplicate others which are about to be adopted. I simply wish that my two friends opposite would help us expedite passage of Bill C-38 on the recovery of alimony payments and all debts owed by civil servants. I think that bill is much more urgent and I hope my colleagues will help us adopt it as soon as possible. I suggest we could come to grips with our problem and let the provinces handle the other one which they are about to solve much more efficiently than we could.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1981-82

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-59, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, when I began my remarks on Bill C-59 to enact the Borrowing Authority Act, I said that the government has utilized its borrowing authority over the past few years to accumulate budgetary deficits equal to $69 billion. That is, by the end of the 1979-80 fiscal year the government had $106 billion in liabilities and only $37 billion in assets, leaving a difference of $69 billion.

Many hon. members who have already spoken in this debate provided detailed and statistical data relevant to the government's fiscal position in 1981. I do not intend to repeat the information already provided, but I want to underline the fact that we are discussing the authority of the government to borrow and I want to consider the historical and financial facts that have resulted in the necessity for vast government borrowing. I want to indicate the effect of continued deficit financing and vast borrowing on individual Canadians and the Canadian economy.

In order to relate our national economy to individual Canadians, it is helpful to reduce some of the many statistics to more human terms.

The budget deficit of $69 billion, if shared by 24 millions Canadians, results in a per capita debt of almost $3,000 for each individual. When it is remembered that Canada has about six million families in 1981, it can be seen that the share of the national debt per family is about $12,000. It is important to consider what the financial future holds if the $12,000 is added to the current family debt and the interest burden of that debt is added to the family's monthly and yearly expenses. This is not entirely an academic exercise because Canadians are, in the final analysis, responsible for the financial debts of the national government and through the income and other taxes they pay either directly or through corporations, they have to retire the national debt as well as provide the funds to pay the interest.

In simple terms, for the fiscal year 1980-81 the government forecasted expenditures of $60 billion. Expenditures will exceed revenues by $14.1 billion and $12.1 billion will be required to service the national debt. That means that at least one dollar out of every five spent by government will be for debt servicing. Over 25 per cent of government revenues will be blown away on interest charges. Mr. Speaker, $12.1 billion out of revenues of $45 billion will be used for interest charges. That is a contribution of $500 for each Canadian and $2,000 for six million Canadian families.

In contrast to that, most of the provinces have a much better fiscal record. In most cases expenditures have been kept in closer alignment with revenues despite pressure to provide expanded services in education, health needs and other basic areas. The province of Nova Scotia, for example, has a net average debt of $1600 per person and about nine per cent of revenues are required to service debt charges.

When we speak of government borrowing, when we mention budget deficits, when we calculate debt service charges, we are talking about your money and mine. We are talking about the dollars and cents taken from all Canadians through various forms of taxation. This taxation includes the Canada Pension Plan and the unemployment insurance program which are, in reality, sophisticated forms of taxation.

Canadians must recognize and must realize that our taxation system, in all its direct and indirect forms, is simply the method by which the government funds the services it provides. Continuance or expansion of government services simply results in increased taxation in one form or another.

Included in my previous remarks on Bill C-59 was a reference to the current high interest rates which contribute to the burden imposed by extensive government borrowing. I mentioned the plight of the home owner who faces a new mortgage or a mortgage renewal in 1981. I pointed out the difference on a $40,000 twenty-five year mortgage at 15.5 per cent or 16.5 per cent as opposed to 9 per cent or 10 per cent. This difference amounts to about $200 in monthly payments. A similar problem faces Canadians who must replace an aging motor car, furnish a house or an apartment or buy household equipment. They would welcome a chance to borrow at 15.5 per cent because they face bank rates of 18 per cent, 19 per cent or more. At the same time, income may not have kept pace with inflation. At a 10 per cent inflation rate, a person earning $15,000 in 1976 would have to earn something in the area of $24,000 today. In short, you do not have to tell Canadians about high interest rates, but you may have to remind them that their government is continually entering the money market to borrow funds at similar high interest rates to finance government services and spending deficits. The catch is Canadians are paying for past overspending. In the budget documents which were introduced in this House on October 28, 1980, here is what the government says to the people:

To the extent that Canadian wage-earners demand high wage and salary increases, or businesses attempt to increase prices at more rapid rates than have been projected here, a wage-price spiral of equal or even greater destructiveness than that of the mid-1970s could develop. For the variety of reasons reviewed in this paper, such a spiral would almost inevitably lead to lower real growth, higher unemployment, and lower investment and productivity growth.

What the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) was saying in his budget of October, 1980, was that even though Canadians face high interest rates and a high level of inflation, they must not take steps to increase their incomes because that would result in even further difficulty. One can see that today the Canadian citizen is in a trap.

I have said affluence and continued growth of the gross national product in the late 1960s and early 1970s resulted in expansion of existing government programs, new projects and programs and financial assistance to the provinces for public works and services under provincial jurisdiction. After establishing the standard of services and after committing the provinces to these programs and projects, the federal government seeks to bury many of its commitments because the economy has soured. Real economic growth has stopped, and the gross national product has declined. The money-well has dried up and the federal government must fold its financial tent.

The proposed cut of $1.5 billion in the established programs budget, the cancellation of the $250 million community services program and the change in the contributions required for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police services, which will cost a province like Nova Scotia $10 million, are all examples of government withdrawal from these areas of service.

But what is the government doing after a decade of record spending? It refuses to come clean and raise taxes in a direct way so that Canadians will know what is happening. Instead, the federal government is transferring back to the provinces the cost burden of established programs and services. For example, take the community services program. It involves the provision of sewer and water services and similar municipal services in communities across this land. Clearly that has been a municipal responsibility in the past. It is normally financed with the assistance of various provincial governments. But the federal government has involved itself in that field. It has sparked and generated more activity. Communities, cities and towns became committed to the installation of these community services. Secondly, with very little warning—although the minister said he did warn those involved—the program gets cancelled. This is simply a way in which the federal government transfers that expenditure item back to the provinces.

The established programs fund is another example of the federal government transferring financial responsibility back to the provinces after the federal government has involved the provincial government in the kind of expenditures involved in these established programs. A particular item is university education, which is clearly a provincial matter under the control of the provincial government. Nonetheless, the federal government became involved in it, sparked and generated activity which otherwise might not have occurred. Now the provinces are stuck with the result. Again, the federal government is simply transferring expenditures back to the provinces. For those provinces which employ the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as a provincial police force, they now have to renegotiate their contracts. This will again result in a transfer of millions of dollars in expenditures to the provinces which seek to maintain those police services.

This is a gutless way to cut expenditures. It is unfair to the provinces and it puts the burden back onto the people whom the government does not have the internal intestinal fortitude to tax in the first place.

Yet the government will raise taxes. It has introduced a tax on resources which will yield $4 billion. It is taking over offshore resources on the Atlantic coast and denying the legitimate rights of provinces such as Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. What we are fighting over in Canada in this area is the control of resources and the revenues from those resources. The federal government is simply seeking to increase its resource revenue so that it can avoid applying direct taxes which would normally be necessitated because of the kind of spending the government has been carrying on over the past number of years.

Everybody knows that income taxes, sales taxes and all the normal forms of taxes have reached their limit. In my view, the federal government is seeking to impose taxes in other forms.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, and having issued these warnings against the dangers of continued borrowing, in the light of high inflation and interest rates, let me say this: at this same time we must carefully consider cutbacks in government services for the sake of the future of our provincial governments and all people in Canada. We have dire economic and employment problems which can only be resolved by government action.

I want to review some problems which I believe require government attention and assistance nationally, and in the Atlantic region, particularly Nova Scotia.

First, we have to build on our strengths by developing and processing our natural resources in Canada. Most Canadians will think of our mines, minerals and agriculture, but the Canadian fishery has a potential for gigantic export sales exceeding those of wheat.

Second, we must move to resolve our energy problem and assure energy self-sufficiency for all of Canada by 1990.

Third, we have to recognize the desire for a high standard of accomplishment on the part of Canadians and promote industry based on technology. To do that, we must maintain our educational system and sponsor research and development science and trades training.

Fourth, we have to realize that we are a trading nation in an international community. We want to put Canada first, but some activities are international, such as marine transportation. Canadianization, no matter how good the motives, will do more harm than good. We must excel in marine, ground and air transportation and provide all the related facilities.

Let me direct the rest of my remarks to Nova Scotia and the Atlantic area and consider the state of our regional economy in the context of changing national policies. I said we must build on our strengths, resolve our energy problem, promote individual accomplishment and realize our international trade potential.

In Nova Scotia, without demeaning our agricultural industry or our manufacturing segment, I believe we have three major growth areas, all ocean based, upon which our hopes for the future should be based. These growth areas include the Atlantic fishery, marine transportation and energy.

Let me speak briefly about the fishing industry in Nova Scotia and across Canada. It employs 100,000 persons directly. That is an employment force greater than the armed forces of Canada. It has two principal segments on the Atlantic coast: the offshore industry which involves large vessels and relatively substantial onshore plant facilities, and the inshore fishery which involves in most cases individual fishermen or partnerships of fishermen who operate their own boats and sell to the plants.

Over the years, unfortunately, under the administration of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc), there has been a great deal of conflict between the offshore and the inshore fisheries. Some of it is the product of people's imagination, but some of it is real. I have urged many times in this House that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans move to resolve these difficulties so that those concerned can get on with the business of developing the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast. Unfortunately, I have to say that in many areas and on many occasions the minister has only served to heighten these differences between the segments of the fishing industry. I know he is capable of a better performance and I know that in the future he will use his good graces and his good offices to resolve these difficulties.

There are other areas of the fishing industry which have been left untouched. One of them is aquaculture. In Europe and in other parts of the world this is a developing industry which involves onshore operations. It has proved to be highly profitable. I believe it is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, but it is an industry which could use federal aid and assistance.

Similarly, in the matter of fishing vessel construction, there has been confusion over government policies in the past few years. Programs have been suspended, terminated and reinstituted, and the fishermen are left confused by what kind of assistance is available for vessel construction. I have urged, on several occasions, that instead of direct assistance some form of a tax rebate system be applied similar to the housing program.

In Nova Scotia today there is a controversy over licensing which stems from the policies of the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Even the leader of the opposition in Nova Scotia has risen to challenge the minister on his policies. If he does not want to take it from us on this side of the House, surely he could take the criticism of his colleague in Nova Scotia and do something to resolve the difficulties in licensing.

Let me complete my remarks on fisheries by saying that the hope of the fishing industry on the Atlantic, coast for the future is that the standards of the industry, in providing a product that is acceptable worldwide, will be raised. The federal government can do much to assist in this area, and I hope it will take that action.

I mentioned marine transportation. In my constituency, the port of Halifax employs, directly, and indirectly, some 10,000 people and generates over $1 billion in financial considerations. It has one of the finest container piers on the Atlantic coast, and we are in the process of constructing and hope to open next year in the spring of 1982 a new container pier at Fairview Cove. The future of marine transportation is great, and the facilities in Nova Scotia are of world class. We hope that in the future facilities will be expanded across the province, which will result in the development of the Strait of Canso as a superport. This is in part dependent on the location of a liquid natural gas terminal, and we in Nova Scotia are happy that the Minister of Finance has said that the choice of the location of a liquid natural gas terminal will be decided by the National Energy Board on the merits of the competing ports. He has said repeatedly that the Strait of Canso will get every consideration, along with the port at Gros Cacouna on the St. Lawrence River. I say that because some people in Nova Scotia are very wary about the fact that this kind of consideration will take place. So we take the Minister of Finance at his word, and we hope he will communicate this to his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) who, on occasion, has said some different things with respect to the capability of the port at Gros Cacouna and its chances of being the location for the liquid natural gas terminal.

Third, I want to speak about energy. Let me say very briefly, as I have said many times in the House, that we have a very serious energy problem in Nova Scotia and on the east coast. For many years, we have been dependent, to the extent of 90 per cent of electric generation, on foreign oil supplies and we have been totally dependent on foreign oil supplies for home heating and for transportation fuels. But we have moved, in the last few years, under the guidance of Premier John Buchanan of Nova Scotia, to instituting a coal conversion program, which has substantially reduced our dependence on foreign oil. Now we are dependent, for electrical generation, to the extent of only about 3 per cent. But this involves the development of our coal resources. I am happy to note that the Minister of Finance announced last week a grant of $109 million for the development of a coal mine at Donkin and the Prince mine.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) was with the minister when the minister made the announcement, and apparently he was not in the least embarrassed by the fact that this announcement might have been made two or three years ago. We hope now that they have finally broken the ice and made the decision, they will proceed with the development of these mines so that we can utilize the coal resources, which are estimated to be in the range of 3.5 billion tonnes, with 800 million tonnes which can be mined by conventional means. So by 1990, we expect to use some 8 million tonnes of coal in Nova Scotia, and that will be welcome relief in relation to our energy problem.

We look forward to a natural gas pipeline extension in Nova Scotia which was promised by practically everyone on the other side of the House. It was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by the Minister of Finance, and finally by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who said it will go ahead and the only problem is that the National Energy Board has not approved it yet. That may be a stumbling block, but the minister has assured us it will go ahead, even if he has to pass a bill, as he said for those who did not know that the minister could pass a bill on his own.

One of the big projects in Nova Scotia for the future is the development of the Fundy tidal power. If you look at the National Energy Program, you will find that there is not one word in it about tidal power. Yet the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has the colossal gall to stand in the House today and speak about the development of tidal power. He did that because the Premier of Nova Scotia is in New York City right now negotiating an agreement with the New York state power authority over the development of Fundy tidal power. We hope that that development will go ahead with or without the help of the federal government because, as an article reporting on the meeting states, Nova Scotia and New York are natural partners in this venture.

There are other matters in relation to energy which I should like to mention. There is the location of the liquid natural gas terminal, but, most important, there is the development of offshore oil resources. It has been said that the oil fields already under exploration and development in Hibernia off Newfoundland could supply the east coast area with petroleum sufficient for their needs. But there is the danger that the development will be retarded by the disputes between the federal and provincial government over ownership and the effect of the National Energy Program. So I hope that the government, and more specifically the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, will resolve these difficulties so that we can get on with the development of offshore resources by the private sector.

In concluding my remarks on Bill C-59, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that no one believes the government can go on overspending and borrowing without drastic results being felt in the economy, but at the same time we have problems in Canada which must be resolved by the government, with appropriate assistance in the appropriate places. What we need is sensible judgment on the part of the government in cutting expenditures and in economizing, but not at the expense of the Canadian people and not at the expense of the projects which must go forward to resolve our problems in Canada and in Nova Scotia.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to you that I think 95 per cent of the constituents in Calgary South would vote against Bill C-59. I would go one step further and say that if all Canadians were given the opportunity, they would vote against Bill C-59.

• (2030)

The Liberal government is a great proponent of referendums. I just wonder what would happen if this government were to put Bill C-59 to a referendum in Canada. Do hon. members opposite honestly think that the majority of Canadians want our government to go out and borrow $14 billion?

Mr. Collenette: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: "Hear, hear": the favourite government response is contempt for the Canadian people. Most Canadians recognize the insanity of borrowing ever-increasing amounts of money to finance a government which has no commitment to restraint. I think most Canadians would go along with borrowing some money if they had any trust that this government would practise restraint, but with this government, spending is out of control. This government gives lip service to curtailing its expenditures but proceeds to spend money in the same way it has since 1968.

How does a country continue to spend more than it takes in revenues? This is the answer of one government spokesman: the answer is quite simple; the state will have budgetary deficits and finance itself through loans; in practice that will be done through the intermediary of the Bank of Canada, which will open up a credit account in the name of the government in return for loan certificates; if the bank does not have enough currency in circulation, it can always print some without any inconvenience, when needed.

Those are the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). It can always print some money without any inconvenience, when needed.

Where has that policy led this country in the last 12 years? It has led us to high unemployment, high inflation and low productivity. We can always print more money without any inconvenience. Inconvenience to whom? There is no inconvenience to the government; that is for certain, but there is a lot of inconvenience to the Canadian people.

I have never been able to understand why you, Mr. Speaker, and I have to balance our bank accounts and our incomes against our expenditures and why companies have to balance their expenditures against their revenues but the government does not. I am a chartered accountant, and I still have never been able to understand how the government can continue to borrow and borrow money and never, never practice the principle of balancing its books. Is Canada different from the rest of the world? Can we borrow our way to prosperity? I think what the Liberal government would have the Canadian people think is that we can borrow our way to prosperity. Well, we cannot borrow our way to prosperity. No society has ever received more than it earned, and I do not believe Canada will be any exception to this rule. It has not demonstrated that so far.

If you and I, Mr. Speaker, wanted to borrow money, or any company wanted to borrow money, we would have to explain what the money was to be used for and how it would be repaid. Do we see any evidence of that in this bill? What are we borrowing $14 billion for, and how is the money to be repaid? Do the people of Canada know that? Is the government prepared to tell the people of Canada what the $14 billion will be used for? Does the government tell the people of Canada how it will repay? No, it just makes a blanket statement that it wants a blank cheque for $14 billion, and it will put the responsibility on the backs of our children. That is what the Liberal government has said. It wants a blanket borrowing authority for $14 billion without any indication of what it will be used for.

Deficit spending by the Liberal government has become an accepted way of life. The budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Speech from the Throne attested to the fact that the Liberal government is not prepared to come to grips with our enormous fiscal deficits but, rather, it will simply borrow the funds necessary to finance runaway government expenditures.

That was said by the Minister of Finance in his budget statement last October, and it was said earlier in the throne speech. The government said it would not curtail its spending. It said it would be a deficit-financed government. That is the Liberal commitment to the people of Canada. This government will not attempt to cut its spending; it will deficit finance and continue to deficit finance whether we like it or not.

On a national accounts basis expenditures for the current fiscal year are expected to be approximately 16.8 per cent higher than they were last year, and yet the government and the Minister of Finance have the audacity to say that expected growth in government expenditures will not exceed the rate of growth of the economy. How can a man stand up before the people of Canada and say that the rate of government expenditures will be confined to the growth of the Canadian economy and at the same time present a document which indicates that expenditures will rise 16.8 per cent? Where is the credibility in such statements? How can the people of Canada trust a government which makes such ridiculous statements?

In a speech to the House of Commons on April 21, 1980, the Minister of Finance assured Canadians that the rate of growth of government expenditures would be tightly controlled and that government deficits and financial requirements would diminish as economic growth resumed. How will economic growth resume in Canada if the government takes more and more away from the private sector? What evidence do we have, if there is any, to support the claim that the Canadian economy will grow and thereby our deficits will be reduced? I say that the statement of the Minister of Finance was just so much pious piffle, and the Minister of Finance knows it.

The Liberal government has no commitment whatsoever to restraining government expenditures. I have just a few statistics to put on the record. The average annual rate of increase in government expenditures in Canada was 19.4 per cent in the years 1970 through 1977. This compares with an annual rate of increase in the United States of 10.9 per cent. The rate of increase in government expenditure in Canada was almost twice that of the United States in the years 1970 to 1977. In fiscal 1980, spending by all levels of government in Canada represents 42.5 per cent of our economic output, compared with 30 per cent in 1961.

In 1980, of everything Canadians produce, everything we do and everything which is wealth-producing, all levels of government take 42.5 per cent as compared with 30 per cent in 1961. Is it any surprise to anyone that this government stands before the Canadian people tonight and asks them for authority to borrow $14 billion to finance a deficit in 1980 which will be close to $15 billion? It should not be any surprise.

Let me put this in a little greater perspective. In order to balance the federal budget in 1980, it would be necessary to double the revenue from personal taxes or apply a tax increase of more than $500 to every man, woman and child in Canada. If we wanted to balance the fiscal budget, we would have to double personal taxes in this country, and every man, woman and child would have to pay an additional $500. I suppose that does not really concern hon. members opposite because they know somebody somewhere in future generations will pay for it, so they would rather not face up to our fiscal responsibilities today. They would rather throw them onto the backs of future generations. If Canada is to continue to prosper, there is only one way, and that is for the federal government to move toward a balanced budget.

That is almost heresy today, isn't it, and politicians in Canada talk about moving toward a balanced budget. It certainly is for the Liberal government. I am not here to stand before you and tell you we can move toward a balanced budget quickly. I think it can be done over a period of five or six years. Federal government expenditure is a question of commitment. It is a question of commitment by the government that federal government expenditures must grow at a lesser rate than their revenues. We cannot burden the economy with more taxes and at the same time increase productivity. I think even my friends opposite recognize that. We cannot burden the Canadian economy and the Canadian taxpayer with further taxes and have any hope of increasing productivity in Canada.

As I said, there are those who say a balanced budget is out of the question, and there is no question it is a difficult political exercise. It can be done if the government has the backbone to impose the necessary restraints, restraints on the civil service and by eliminating ridiculous programs such as the oil stabilization program. It is madness for the Canadian government to borrow money to pay for a $3 billion oil subsidy to Canadian consumers. Even the Canadian consumers would consider that madness.

They are increasing federal borrowing by $3 billion in order to subsidize the consumption of gasoline, not only by Canadian consumers but by foreign consumers, foreign air carriers and United States' motorists coming across the border.

An hon. Member: Terrible.

Mr. Thomson: We can move toward a balanced budget if the government has the backbone to sincerely face up to restraint.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: The royal commission of inquiry on financial accountability, referred to as the Lambert commission, recommended significant changes, including establishing a framework of accountability for government. It has been two years since that report was made and I see precious little evidence that the Liberal government has initiated any efforts whatsoever to comply with the recommendations of the Lambert commission.

An hon. Member: It's coming.

Mr. Thomson: The Lambert commission in March 1979—and I would just like to remind those opposite—after two years of careful study and consideration reached the deeply-held conviction that the serious malaise pervading the management of government stems fundamentally from a grave weakening and, in some cases, an almost total breakdown in the chain of accountability, first within government and second in the accountability of government to Parliament and the Canadian people.

I guess the only time we in this House of Commons are accountable is when we have an election. How can a Member of Parliament be accountable to his constituency for borrowing $14 billion? How can a Member of Parliament be accountable to his constituents for massive over-expenditures by government on capital projects? How can we represent to our constituents that we have, in our government, sound management and accountability for expenditures? We cannot. None of us can.

Financing of the federal deficit contributes significantly to the rate of inflation, high interest rates and unemployment. Government spending and fiscal deficits take away from the productive sector of the economy, the sector which creates the jobs. Government cannot create jobs by spending. Actually, government spending takes jobs away from the private sector because it takes that money away, spends it, and does not create investment. The federal deficit, as I said, contributes to inflation. There is no authority in the Bank of Canada or any financial authority that I know of in Canada that would not say today that a substantial part of the inflation we are experiencing in Canada is due to the federal deficit and continuing deficits which this country has experienced since 1974.

Federal deficits have contributed to high interest rates because the government is borrowing $14 billion. If the government were not borrowing that money, there would be that much more money available for private enterprise, and others in the economy, and they would not be driving interest rates up. For the government to go out on the market and borrow $14 billion is to simply drive up interest rates.

We will not have decent interest rate levels in Canada until this government learns to face up to fiscal responsibility. Horror stories of mismanagement by the federal government over the past 12 years are endless. I could stand here from now until tomorrow night reciting them, and I am sure many other members could as well.

I would like to refer to a few examples of overspending on major capital projects. For instance, in my home town of Calgary in 1973 it was decided that the Calgary International Airport should be rebuilt. It was estimated the terminal would cost $57.7 million. In 1977-1978 the final cost when the building was completed was $127.4 million, a cost overrun of $69.7 million. In Montreal, a project referred to as MAPP involved the construction of a postal plant. Approval was finally given in 1974 for an expenditure of $161 million. The final cost came in at $273 million, a cost overrun of $112 million, or 70 per cent.

We turn now to the Prince Rupert grain dryer, something very close to the heart of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), I am sure. Approval was originally given for $705,000 to construct this project. The final cost was $3,812,000, a cost overrun of $3,107,000, or 479 per cent over the budget.

The government told the Canadian people that the Prince Rupert grain dryer and Calgary international airport would cost so much money, and then it gave out a blank cheque, having no regard for and no control over those estimates. The original cost of constructing the Mirabel airport and the acquisition of land was estimated to be $243,495,000. The final cost was $360,667,000, for a small overrun of approximately $170 million, or 48 per cent. That is one of the small percentage cost overruns. It only cost the Canadian people an additional $170 million.

Where would any of us end up if we were to conduct our financial affairs that way? Where would the largest company in North America or, for that matter, in the world end up—

An hon. Member: Ask Massey-Ferguson.

Mr. Thomson: In connection with the overruns and major capital projects—and there is a thick file of them which I could go on reciting—I would say the Conservative government, while we were in power, initiated a task force to investigate the means to control to a greater extent this area of government expenditure.

I have to conclude the Liberal government does not consider it important enough to re-establish this committee. Perhaps they would find it too embarrassing.

An hon. Member: There is nothing embarrassing about it.

Mr. Thomson: That is probably true. Then we have the Canadian Unity Information Office, that wonderful government department of which I am sure all Canadians can be proud. The Canadian Unity Information was established as a three-man operation in 1976 with a budget of $1 million; today that department employs 90 people, and its budget for 1980 was $10.6 million. The government saw fit to increase the budget of the Canadian Unity Information Office to $17 million as soon as it took office, so now the budget of the CUIO is $26.6 million, and its director of finance indicated that its actual spending for this fiscal year will be closer to $31 million. This money is being spent for political purposes, to promote the interests of the Liberal Party at the expense of Canadian taxpayers. We must make no mistake about that.

• (2050)

Why do Canadians need their government to tell them that Canada is strong? Do they really need that? Why do Canadians need to pay for Canada geese flying across television screens to identify with their country? It is a ridiculous waste of money, yet the Liberal government says that it cannot trim government spending. We are tightening the belt, we are telling them how to identify with Canada.

They tell Canadians that we have a strong Canada and that we do not have an energy problem when we do. It is a ridiculous and profligate waste of taxpayers' money.

The Canadian Unity Information Office is nothing less than a propaganda machine designed to convince Canadians that Liberal policies are the best policies. This government department is manipulative and designed to support decisions of the Liberal Party. These programs cause more national divisiveness and promote deep mistrust by Canadians of their federal government.

Another example of needless government spending is the acquisition of Canadian Petrofina. The government acquired the company for $120 a share which just over one year ago was selling its shares at $50. Over 50 per cent of the assets of Canadian Petrofina are represented in service stations, its Montreal refinery and real estate. The question I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance, or anyone in authority in the Liberal government is: how come real estate, service stations and a refinery—hardware—can appreciate in value from $50 to $120 a share or 150 per cent in one year? Again the Canadian taxpayer ends up footing the bill.

I could find some sympathy for the acquisition if it was adding one drop of oil to Canada's energy security. But no energy security is derived from the acquisition of Petrofina, not one barrel of oil or one cubic foot of gas. It will not do Canadians any good, but they will pay for it at the gas pump. It will place Petrofina in the hands of an inefficient, wasteful organization called Petro-Canada.

If they wanted to reduce the fiscal deficit of about $15 billion and to reduce this borrowing bill, they could have taken the money they spent on Petrofina. The philosophy of the Liberal government is that the market system will not work and has not worked for Canadians. This country was built on the free market sytem, but the philosophies of the Liberal party and my friends to the left is that the market system will not work and that private initiative left to itself cannot guarantee prosperity. There is no guarantee of prosperity in this life for anyone. The government cannot guarantee prosperity. If Canadians believe the Liberal government can guarantee prosperity, they are wrong, but the Liberal government can guarantee greater and greater deficits, more and more government spending, and more and more government control over their lives.

Another statement of the Prime Minister was that prosperity must be assured through state planning. The Liberal philosophies are: the market system will not work, private initiative left to itself cannot guarantee prosperity, prosperity must be assured through state planning. This is bureaucratic control and interventionism. The Liberal government believes it knows what is best for everyone, that Canadians are not capable of making decisions for themselves.

I do not think very many members of the Liberal government were exposed to life in business or to working in a business, so they do not understand the work ethic or what makes Sammy run. They have never tried to understand the work ethic. They fail to understand that most Canadians enjoy working and the fruits of their work. It makes them feel good and they have a feeling of accomplishment, but in return they seek a sense of participation and a reward which is commensurate with their input. That is called "incentive". The Liberal government does not understand the meaning of the word "incentive"; it does not understand human motivation, it does not understand what motivates people to build a better mousetrap. Without a system of incentives, people cannot be motivated to be innovative or to develop excellence.

We have all the evidence before us of state-controlled economies, without exception they are dismal failures. We can look at the United Kingdom, Italy, France and Sweden. We can look at the food lines and the people lining up to purchase clothing in Czechoslovakia. Perhaps Czechoslovakia is in a more advanced state of socialism, but not too long ago I saw the people in Czechoslovakia lining up for food and clothing, I saw the weariness and frustration in their eyes. The people in the United Kingdom, Sweden and other socialist countries are taxed to the point that productivity no longer exists.

Sweden, the United Kingdom and Italy are no longer competitive in many areas. Why are they not competitive? It is because of government intervention and the socialist myth that government can do it better. I never saw such a tragedy as the one in Prague, the hopelessness and despondency. That is what socialism has done for that country. Before the Second World War, Czechoslovakia was one of the most productive and innovative countries in Europe. I will not deny that the market system has its faults—yes, it produces an unequal distribution of wealth. I will grant that to my friends in the NDP, but as someone said—and I do not know who it was—that socialism creates an equal distribution of misery. The history of nationalized industry throughout the world is one of gross inefficiency and, consequently, a continuous drain on the resources of the economy. It is no exaggeration to say that the main reason the United Kingdom, Sweden and Italy have fared so badly in the recent past is due to their nationalized industries.

Mr. Rae: What is the unemployment rate in Sweden?

Mr. Thomson: The unemployment rate in Sweden is very close to 1 per cent or 2 per cent; however nobody can afford to buy anything, because they are taxed so heavily. As I said the other night, a person making $25,000 a year pays $13,000 a year in taxes. You can buy a pair of galoshes here in Canada that will cost $10, but there I had to pay $50 Canadian a pair. Their standard of living has gone from the second highest in the world in 1971 to nineteenth today.

An hon. Member: But they have full employment.

Mr. Thomson: Yes, they have full employment. But full employment is not creating any productivity for Sweden. It is forcing them to nationalize most of their industries. I would like to talk for a moment about the National Energy Program.

Underlying the whole thrust of the National Energy Program is the concept of state control. I challenge the Liberal government to deny that. That is why it was created. The man who created it was Dr. Edmund Clark, a committed socialist. That is something everyone knows. He wants state control over the energy industry in Canada. If the National Energy Program's objectives were security of supply and independence from world oil markets and, second, opportunity for Canadians to participate in the energy industry and fairness on pricing and revenue sharing, then I fully endorse those objectives. However, the National Energy Program is a far cry from ever achieving any of those objectives. The main reasons why the National Energy Program will never fulfil the stated objectives are the ill-conceived foundations upon which the plan is structured.

I would like to mention a few of them. The cornerstone of the National Energy Program is that the government's conception of Canada is one in which the central government controls all economic activity in the country—regional interests in Canada are best administered from Ottawa. It is no accident that both the constitutional crisis regarding patriation of the British North America Act and the energy war are occurring at the same time.

The critical issue in both instances is what kind of a nation Canada is today and what kind of a nation it will be tomorrow. Are we to have strong provinces or are we to have an economy dominated by a central government? If the federal government persists in moving Canada toward a unitary state then this country will not survive. My constituents will not stand by and watch the federal government steal their resources. I am making that abundantly clear now, Mr. Speaker.

If we want a government to control all our energy policy in this country, then let us look at some of the things they have done in the past. In the early 1970s the minister of energy promised oil self-sufficiency by 1980. Today we are importing 500,000 barrels of oil per day. That is Liberal government energy policy for you. We have waited ten years for frontier land regulations. There has been no effort whatsoever to maximize the use of heavy shut-in oil in Alberta. There have been no government initiatives to aid in the use of heavy shut-in oil reserves in Alberta and western Saskatchewan. This may surprise you, Mr. Speaker. Petro-Canada refused to participate in Hibernia. That is Liberal policy for you.

Then we have the great deal with the government of Mexico. We pay higher than world price for a low-grade quality crude. We cannot even refine it because we do not have a refinery which can handle it. Then having made the deal with Mexico, the Mexicans turn around and say that they cannot sell it to us and that they can only give us about 50 per cent of their deliveries. That it Liberal energy policy for you.

The federal government says it must have a far greater share of oil and gas revenues. Yet it is not prepared to recognize the legitimate rights of the provinces. When we are talking of sharing, do we not have to talk about price? What are we sharing? How can you talk intelligently about any sharing program or any percentages if you do not talk about what you are sharing? Let us talk about what price we are sharing. It is claimed by the Liberal government, with their manipulative tactics in the National Energy Program; meant to deceive the Canadian people, that the federal government's share is only 10 per cent, the Alberta government's share is 45 per cent and the industry's share is 45 per cent.

That is 45 per cent of what? And 10 per cent of what? Is it 45 per cent of 41 per cent of the world price? That is what we are talking about. Why do we not talk about a revenue-sharing program based on fair energy prices? What would that produce? Let us not even talk about world price for oil, let us talk about something in the range of 75 per cent or 85 per cent of world oil price. If the province of Alberta and the producers were receiving 75 per cent of world price, the federal government's share of the revenue under the existing formula would be in excess of 50 per cent. The federal government and the Minister of Energy know that full well. It is deception—gross deception.

If we are only paying 40 per cent of the world price for crude oil, what is happening to the other 60 per cent? I could make the argument that the federal government is taking that 60 per cent, turning it around and subsidizing the Canadian consumer. A great many people would agree with that. Authority after authority outside the oil industry have stated that the government's pricing strategy is ridiculous and unfair. I have said this before, and I will keep on saying it. Do you know of any industrialized country in the free world which is subsidizing the consumption of a scarce commodity? As I have said, it is a subsidy which will be paid for by our children. It is a subsidy to U.S. motorists, foreign air carriers and Saudi Arabia. It is madness.

While I am talking about the National Energy Program, and in that I have just one minute left, I would like to read to members opposite a letter from the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada dated January 26, 1981, to the Prime Minister. I will not bother reading the entire letter, but I will read this paragraph:

> In view of the far-reaching national and international implications of the NEP, we respectfully request that your government establish a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons to undertake a full examination of the impact and ramifications of the National Energy Program. We believe the program merits the same level of thoughtful scrutiny as the constitutional reform proposals. The consequences are too serious to have the elements of the NEP treated as routine legislation.

I plead with members opposite to give that request their sincere consideration. I think we can all learn something from it. Let us put the National Energy Program out on the table. If it is as good as the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Finance say it is, and if it will create security for Canadians and if it is fair, then why hide behind it?

Let us refer the matter to committee where it will receive the attention of the people in the industry who know something about it. Let us put the facts on the table and provide the truth to the Canadian people.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the government proposes to borrow money in order to meet its expenses at a very serious time. Over one million people are unemployed in the country, and the majority of them are willing and anxious to work. The cost of living increased by over 11 per cent in the past year. The cost of food increased by over 13 per cent and the cost of energy increased by over 19 per cent in the past year. People from my constituency called me last month after they received their heating bills for December. For the first time these people, who live in small modest homes, were billed for expenditures in excess of $100 for the month. It is not surprising when one realizes that the cost of gasoline went up by 30 per cent in the past year.

I could not participate in this debate without spending a few moments discussing some of the comments made by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson). His argument is that government spending is intrinsically bad and private sector spending is obviously good. However, the government has established a hospital insurance plan which protects people from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast from financial disaster brought about because of a major illness.

Unlike the United States where there is no similar hospital insurance plan, Canada has a medical plan which pays the hospital bills of its citizens when they become ill. Canadians no longer worry about going bankrupt or into debt as a result of illness. This hospital plan is in place because of government policy, not because of a private insurance plan. Many people in Canada who have reached the age of 65 can live in some comfort and dignity because we have an old age security plan and a Canada Pension Plan. It is becoming increasingly obvious that private insurance plans operated by the private sector have not met the needs of the Canadian people.

The hon. member for Calgary South, who has now left the chamber, said that government operations usually result in failure and inefficiency, that we should leave such operations to the private sector. Where has the hon. member been? Why are the Government of Canada and the government of Ontario being asked to bail out Massey-Ferguson? It is not because of government that Massey-Ferguson is in its present financial situation. Where was the hon. member when we were discussing bailing out Chrysler? It was not the government which put Chrysler in its difficulty, it was inefficient management in the private sector.

The hon. member for Calgary South railed against public or state ownership. The hon. member comes from a province which has had a publicly owned telephone system for more than 50 years. We have not heard him suggesting that the Alberta government get rid of that telephone system. There is also a publicly-owned airline, Pacific Western Airlines, in Alberta. I wonder how the hon. member squares that fact with the principles he enunciated today. Then there is Ontario Hydro which was implemented originally by a Conservative provincial government and which has been operated all these years under a Conservative government regime.

I have named a number of the more prominent government-owned companies. There are companies in Alberta which are partly owned by the people of Alberta and by the government. The Alberta Gas Trunk Line, which is now called Nova, I understand, is 50 per cent owned by the Alberta government. The hon. member said again and again in the course of his speech that the countries in which the governments become involved in economic decision-making are facing difficulty. He went on to list countries which he implied had socialist governments and as a result were in a great deal of trouble.

The facts prove the hon. member wrong. The hon. member included France in his litany of countries which are in trouble. Any economic indicator at which one would care to look will show that France is doing better than Canada, and it is no accident, although there has not been a socialist government in France for more than 20 years. However, the government of France believes that it should be involved in the planning of the economy. That government sits down with its industry and discusses, for example, the direction in which it should expand its efforts, what fields are likely to be profitable in terms of production and employment, where investments should go, and, ultimately, in what direction the country should go.

The government of Japan, and there has never been a socialist government in that country, is heavily involved in the decision making of Japanese industry. I visited Japan a year and a half ago. While there we were briefed by the Canadian ambassador with regard to a Japanese industrial strategy. There is not a decision made by a major Japanese corporation which is not first cleared with the Japanese government. If the corporation can show the government that its investment, expansion or whatever will serve the interest of the Japanese people, then the government encourages the industry to go ahead. The government often allows the industry to borrow money from the bank at less than the going rate of interest, simply because it is in the interest of the Japanese people.

The Japanese would not allow the kind of situation to develop there which developed in Canada whereby International Nickel used its profits, loans from the government and unpaid deferred corporation taxes to develop its nickel deposits in Guatemala and Indonesia. These foreign mines compete in the world market against Canadian mines and as a result, thousands of Canadian workers have been driven out of the mining industry.

West Germany has had the best economic record in the world in recent years. The hon. member for Calgary South may not know it, but West Germany has had a social-democratic government for a number of years now. That government does not nationalize every industry and probably has less public ownership than Canada.

That government follows a deliberate policy of meeting with the business interests and the trade unions to work out policies which will help it expand its production facilities, increase the number of workers and meet the needs of the people both in the country and in the foreign markets which are so important to every country that has a manufacturing base.

I have one last thing to say about the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary South. He spoke of the Liberal government's policies on energy, saying they were bad, they were destroying industry and were having terrible effects on the country. This is not the time to debate that matter in detail, but I would remind the hon. member that in 1970 the Government of Canada told the people that proven reserves of natural gas would meet the needs of this country for 923 years. It was shortly before 1970 that the then minister of energy, mines and resources, Mr. Greene, told the people of Canada that there were sufficient oil supplies to meet their needs for about 100 years. We all know that both estimates were terribly wrong.

Where did the former minister get his information at that time? He got it from the oil and gas industry which was interested in exporting more oil and natural gas and for that reason gave out information which it must have known to be wrong. It was done for the industry's own purposes and was not in the best interests of the Canadian people.

I say to the hon. member for Calgary South that he ought not to put his trust quite so much in the good will, the common sense and farseeing approach of the private sector; sometimes he should think about what is good for the people of Canada as a whole and not just for the private sector.

I want to say one other thing to the hon. member for Calgary South. When I was looking over my notes in preparation for this speech, I came across another speech, one that I made in October, 1979, when there was a Conservative government. The same kind of bill was before the House at that time. It is true that we were not being asked to give the government authority to borrow $14 billion, we were being asked for permission to borrow $7 billion. If it is a crime to borrow money, then I say to the hon. member for Calgary South that the only difference between the Liberal government and the former Conservative government is the extent of the crime.

We are not opposed to a proposal to borrow money if the reasons given are adequate. If we felt that the money was to be used to improve the wellbeing of the Canadian people, if we felt that the money was to be used to provide more jobs for the Canadian people, if we felt that the money was to be used to provide better living conditions for the Canadian people, we would agree to it but as far as we can tell, there is no indication that the money will be used for any of those purposes. If we are being asked to provide money to meet the deficit which is expected between the amount we spend and the amount we take in as revenue, then we must ask ourselves why this deficit has occurred.

I want to say to hon. members on the government side of the House that one of the main reasons for the deficit is that the economy is not working at full capacity. In the years after World War II it was estimated by economists at the Economic Council of Canada, who certainly were not radical, that full employment was achieved with the employment rate between 3 per cent and 4 per cent.

The present rate of unemployment is more than twice that; it is over 8 per cent. According to official statistics, 945,000 people in this country are unemployed. That figure refers to those people who are actively looking for work, but there are several hundred thousand people in this country, particularly young people and more particularly those in the slow-growth areas, who are no longer looking for work. In large parts of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia there is no use looking for work as none is available. There is no use looking for work in the eastern part of Quebec because there is none. The same is true of parts of northern Ontario and the Interlake region of Manitoba. These are just a few examples.

We must ask ourselves what the consequences are of having one million people unemployed instead of 400,000. One consequence is that we lose about $5 billion per year in production. Mr. Speaker, 500,000 more people at work would bring taxes in the neighbourhood of $1.5 billion into the coffers of the government. These 500,000 people who should be working and paying taxes are not working; they are not paying taxes and they are not buying goods to the extent that they would if they were working. They are not in any position to buy homes, refrigerators, stoves, television sets or any of the basic items, the manufacture of which provides jobs. Not only are they not working and not paying taxes but many are collecting unemployment insurance benefits. The federal treasury is subsidizing the unemployment insurance plan by about $4 billion per year.

These are some of the reasons for the kind of deficits we have today. We must ask if we need to have that many people unemployed. I do not believe that it is necessary. We must also ask if we have met all the needs of the Canadian people. Not only have we not met the needs of the ordinary citizen, we have not met the needs of the country. We should be able to sell the goods we produce but we find that we cannot even move the grain that the western farmers produce. This is not my area of expertise, but the last figure I saw showed that we could have sold another $1 billion worth of grain per year if we had been able to move it.

Mr. Pepin: That is your fault.

Mr. Orlikow: The minister says that is my fault. There is one thing a Liberal minister will never admit and that is that anything wrong with the country is his fault. I would remind the minister that this country has had Liberal government for—

An hon. Member: Too long.

Mr. Orlikow: An hon. member says for too long. We have had Liberal governments for about 54 of the last 60 years, so when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) says it is my fault that we cannot move the grain I am sure he says it with tongue in cheek.

We need to upgrade the whole railway system, the rail lines and rolling stock. We should be planning to electrify the transportation system but according to the Liberal and Conservative philosophy, we cannot afford to do that. We cannot afford anything.

We need to modernize our automobile industry. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) dealt with this question last night. Our automobile industry is in a state of chaos. The auto pact is a complete failure. The multinational automobile companies are making plans to rationalize the industry. Those plans leave very little for this country. Canadian auto workers face a very dim prospect if they have to depend on the decisions made up until now by this Liberal government.

We need an industrial strategy. We need to look at those fields in which we have obvious natural advantages. We have tremendous natural resources. We have coal, oil and gas. Where is the drilling equipment and the mine machinery produced? It is not produced in Canada, it is imported into Canada.

Mr. Pepin: Don't exaggerate that much. That is wrong.

Mr. Orlikow: These are the facts. We say that the large part of the deficit money that we are being asked to approve in this bill is required due to faulty economic strategy and the mistaken philosophy of this Liberal government aided and a betted—although they huff and they puff—by our Conservative friends on the other side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: I suggest that the deficit would be substantially less if we had a tax system which was equitable and fair. Let me illustrate what I mean by that. There was a time not many years ago when federal expenditures were met in a way in which personal income tax and corporation taxes paid about the same percentage of the federal government's expenditures. Those days are long gone. Today personal income tax contributes a very large percentage more to meet the expenditures of the Government of Canada than does corporation tax. That is true because ever since 1945 Liberal and Conservative governments have so changed the tax system that corporations are paying less and less of the cost of providing services required by the people of Canada. How did that happen? It happened in the following ways. Depreciation and write-offs far in excess of actual depreciation have been accorded to Canadian corporations, resulting in several billion dollars of deferred corporation taxes which will never be collected.

We are permitting the corporations in this country to use money, which they would have paid in taxes, to expand their productive facilities, to increase their business and to make larger profits. They are doing that with what are, in effect, interest-free loans. I suggest to members on both sides of the House, Liberals and Conservatives, that there is not one ordinary Canadian citizen wanting to buy a house or to meet any of his or her expenses who would not be delighted to get the kind of break we give to the corporations in this country, namely, an interest-free loan. I have the strange idea that the ordinary citizen who wants to buy a modest home in my constituency is at least entitled to as generous treatment by the Government of Canada as are the large corporations.

Tax benefits to resource and other companies have been such that our largest companies are paying tax at a substantially lower rate than the tens of thousands of small businessmen who employ most Canadians. Let me refer to an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of August 23, 1980. It is entitled "Income tax system is riddled with Liberal holes for oilmen". I shall quote just a few paragraphs from that story. In referring to a study, we read:

> They show that federal tax concessions are so big that the government's share of oil and natural gas income fell in 1979 amid a 54 per cent increase in industry profits and a 17 per cent gain in provincial royalty earnings.

The article goes on as follows:

> —compared to 1978, "current income taxes paid were almost unchanged (in 1979) at $1 billion, reflecting largely a greater use of the investment incentives available".

Another paragraph reads:

The corporate tax deferrals include a wide range of special write-offs for depletion, depreciation, and exploration and development investment and equipment.

The provisions became steadily more numerous and generous in a series of Liberal budgets from 1974 to 1978.

According to a report published by the energy department last November, the tax concessions "reflect a concern with providing incentive to develop new energy supplies".

In a practical way what does that mean? Let us just look at the big five oil companies. Imperial Oil's profits increased in the first nine months of 1980 to $481 million from $309 million in 1979, an increase of 56 per cent. Texaco's profits increased from $169 million in 1979 to $278 million in 1980, an increase of 59 per cent. Shell's profits increased from $174 million in 1979 to $267 million in 1980, an increase of 54 per cent. Gulf Oil's profits increased from $206 million in 1979 to $286 million in 1980, an increase of 39 per cent.

That is what has happened in the oil industry. But to listen to our Conservative friends, particularly to our Conservative friends from Alberta, one would think that government policies are starving the oil companies, that they are putting them out of business. Nothing could be further from the truth.

I want to talk about what our tax policies have meant to the banks of Canada. The continued life of income debentures beyond 1978 means that the banks' effective tax rate is down to about 18 per cent. Large holding companies whose only revenue is dividends are receiving a substantial public benefit. The public treasury is short some $400 million a year in lost revenue. The banks paid $256 million in taxes on $492 million profit in 1970, and paid even less taxes, amounting to $230 million on $1,272 million profits in 1979.

If my colleague from Kamloops says it is unfair, it is not only unfair, it is scandalous that a government concerned about the welfare of the people of this country would permit that kind of situation to go on.

I want to talk for a few moments about what we ought to be doing and on what we ought to be making expenditures. One of the most serious problems in this country is that we have no industrial strategy. Our manufacturing industries are being decimated. The most recent tariff negotiations which took place resulted in the lowering of tariffs. They are finding it increasingly difficult to compete not only in international markets, but in our own Canadian market. We have no industrial strategy. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), when he was on the opposition side of the House, talked continuously of the need for an industrial strategy, the need to redesign or reorganize our manufacturing industries so they would be able to compete not only in the Canadian market but in the international market.

That has not happened. The only thing we have had from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, is desperate, stop-gap measures to prevent companies like Massey-Ferguson and Chrysler from going bankrupt and shutting down completely. We have no industrial strategy. The government has failed, partly because, like the Progressive Conservatives, it does not believe that it should intervene in the economy, that it should sit down with the business community, sit down with the workers in this country and try to assess what our natural advantages are, what our natural resources are, what our human resources are, what our scientific and technical resources are, what our natural advantages are and in what field we should expand. That has been completely lacking, despite all the speeches made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and despite all his protestations since he became minister in the present government.

That lack of an industrial strategy cannot be demonstrated more vividly than in the failure of the Liberal government to deal with the fact that there is hardly an industrialized country in the western world which has as dismal a record in expenditures for scientific research and development as has Canada. For a variety of reasons, which I cannot go into in detail tonight, Canada is at the bottom of the totem pole amongst the OECD countries in expenditure for research and development. That has been true for close to 15 years. We are now spending less than 1 per cent of our gross national product on scientific research and development, at a time when every other country in the western world is spending at least 1.5 per cent, and some of them as much as 2 per cent, and more than 2 per cent, of their gross national product on scientific research and development.

During the term of the former Liberal government, we were told by the then minister of state for science and technology that the government had drafted a plan so that by the year 1983 we would be expending 1.5 per cent of our gross national product on research and development. That was in 1978, and the then minister was projecting that we would spend 1.5 per cent of our gross national product on research and development in 1983, by which time nearly all the other countries in the western industrialized world would probably be spending 2 per cent to 2.5 per cent of their gross national product on research and development.

What do we find? We find that the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce just a few days ago announced a new goal. He said that the 1.5 per cent of our gross national product to be expended on research and development will now not be reached until 1985. That goal, and the way in which the minister proposed to reach it, has been criticized by every agency involved in research and development. In the Montreal Gazette issue of January 20, there is a news story entitled, "Industry cool to research policy". It reads:

Canadian businessmen showed little enthusiasm yesterday for a federal government program whereby it promises to increase spending for research and development but will ask industry to increase its share of total spending.

It goes on to point out that:

—under the five-year program, industry will be asked to increase its contributions by 17 per cent a year to $3.7 billion from $895 million.

Robert Long, president of the Canadian Advanced Technology Association said that the policy "makes one wonder whether the government is serious".

Dick Wertheim, spokesman for Northern Telecom Ltd., said that the rhetoric which the minister used to announce the policy is dangerous because it could lull the public into thinking something is being done. The President of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, Gordon MacNabb, said about the minister's announcement that critical shortages of research talent may prevent Canada from achieving the goal of higher spending on research and development.

Responding to the federal government's recent announcement of a framework for achieving research and development spending of 1.5 per cent of the gross national product by 1985, Mr. MacNabb said:

As if it were not bad enough that the government has retreated from its commitment after its very late conversion to the idea that we must spend 1.5 per cent of our gross national product on research and development, we now have the news, from what I am certain are very reliable sources, that this government, in its desire to hold down government expenditures, is giving very serious consideration at the cabinet level to getting out, in the next few years, of the federal government's commitment to sharing the cost of post-secondary education with the provinces and giving notice very shortly to the provinces that it proposes to cut back and then to eliminate the cash expenditures it makes to post-secondary education.

According to what I consider to be authoritative sources, the government proposes to cut $2 billion to $3 billion from its funding for the established programs financing. Where do they propose to do that? They propose to reduce their contributions to post-secondary education to the provinces by $1.5 billion. This will be a calamity for our post-secondary education. What does it mean to my province? I wish the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) were here because, as a former university professor in Winnipeg, he knows the importance of universities to our province, as they are important to every province. To my province, it means a reduction, in the cash part of the secondary EPF which can be allocated to the universities in my province, to $52 million. Of that $52 million, about three quarters would be cut from the funding which the federal government now provides to the three universities in Manitoba, the University of Manitoba, The University of Winnipeg and Brandon University, and the other quarter would be cut from the funding for our community colleges, which play such an important part in the training and education of the young people in my province.

This decision by the federal government, if followed, would be a disaster for education in all parts of Canada. Enrolment at our universities has levelled off. The increases which we had every year, beginning in 1945, have levelled off as the population of Canada has stabilized.

It may be that we need to change our educational system. It may be that we need to re-orient our universities. It may be that we need to change the direction of our community colleges. But that is a decision which would have tremendous implications for the people of Canada. That is a decision which ought not to be made unilaterally by the federal government. That is a decision which ought not to be made just because the federal government believes it needs to control and reduce its expenditures. That is a decision which needs to be made after the closest and most careful consideration and in co-operation with the provinces and the universities and community colleges.

I want to close by urging the government to adopt the proposal made to it by the Association of Canadian Universities and Colleges and by the Canadian Association of University Teachers. The proposal made to the government was that before it embarks on this very dangerous course and before it makes the kind of unilateral decision which it seems to be moving toward in the field of post-secondary education, it should discuss these matters in detail and with a great deal of care with the provinces and with the universities and community colleges.

I urge the government to adopt the proposal it has made for the establishment of a royal commission to look in a real way at the problems of post-secondary education which are so important to the people of this country.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank all my friends and colleagues who have waited here all night for this moment to listen to me conclude the debate for today. I have but ten minutes left, and I hope in those ten minutes to give a brief outline of what I will be saying about this piece of legislation tomorrow. I am glad I have this opportunity.

Bill C-59 is not a very big bill. I could read it into the record, but I will not. It has four paragraphs. One paragraph identifies Her Majesty, and I hope she has not read this bill because it is an insult to her. The other paragraph identifies the bill, which is known as the "Borrowing Authority Act, 1982", and then there are two more paragraphs which ask us to authorize the government to borrow fourteen thousand million dollars which it no longer has and has to borrow from a foreign source. What offends me about the bill too is that juicy little indication that this money may be borrowed in a currency other than that of Canada. Of course, it would have to be repaid in that other currency as well.

If I were to stand in this House to vote for this bill, I am sure my knees would buckle and give out from under me. I know if I came home and if my wife had watched me on television standing up to vote for this bill, she would probably rewrite her will. If I looked at myself in the mirror, I am sure it would explode.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: It is a wonder it has not already done so.

Mr. Oberle: I am sure my children would walk out and never speak to me again.

We really have to analyse in detail what this piece of paper—all four paragraphs of Bill C-59—means. It gives the government authority to run all over the world and commit the Canadian taxpayer to $14 billion, which will have to be repaid by someone. I think hon. members opposite are actually out to prove that those who said you cannot drink yourself sober were wrong and those who said you cannot spend yourself rich were wrong.

It is just mind-boggling by any standard that anyone would lay a piece of legislation like this before a group of intelligent people and expect them to pass it without debate.

I sat here all day waiting for my great moment tonight, and I have not seen one member of the Liberal Party participating in this debate, despite all the charges which have been made from this side, despite all the arguments we have made and despite all the evidence we have produced with respect to how this money is to be spent and the kind of burden it produces for the taxpayers of Canada. Twenty-five cents of every dollar this government collects from the average Canadian in the form of taxes goes to interest and debt charges. It is paid to foreign banks because that is where we have to borrow money. It is just simply mind-boggling to look behind the scenes of this place and to make any rhyme or reason of what the government is proposing to do.

If the government needed this money to improve social conditions in our country or to create new economy, if it were stimulative borrowing to invest in the economy in order to stimulate the economy and build for the future and even if it were for planting trees which would ripen 80 years from now, that would be an investment in the future, but that is not what we are doing with this money.

My friends on this side of the House spent all day today and yesterday—and will tomorrow—explaining to the government just what kind of deal it made recently with respect to the acquisition of Petrofina. It is hard to imagine that the government would spend $1.46 billion to acquire an oil company which owns 1,000 service stations and an antiquated refinery in Montreal and, in doing so, work toward one of the goals in the energy program.

There are two goals in the energy program. One is Canadian ownership. There is no longer any doubt about what that means in terms of this government's reception. It means government ownership of the oil industry. The other component in the energy package is energy self-sufficiency.

When I begin the debate tomorrow, I want to spend some time analysing this takeover because I have been examining Petrofina for some time. I looked at it particularly before the government spread the rumour that it might be interested in acquiring it. That was at the time the shares of that company were trading for about $70 while the value of the shares of every other oil company, in response to the government's energy package, was reducing. Petrofina shares increased in value quite significantly, from $70 to about $85 per share. There is no doubt about the fact that there were rumours that Petro-Canada, the people's oil company, was interested in making an acquisition, and not just an acquisition of any multinational oil company or any big oil company but Petrofina.

But the $85 was not good enough. The chairman of the people's oil company explained that on television the other day. They were just talking over coffee and saying, "What do you fellows think of selling?" It is like selling one's motorcycle or your wife's old bathtub which is sitting in the back yard to someone who wants to use it for a flower garden. It was like asking, "Do you want to sell that old bathtub out back?" The owner might say, "Sure, we would be interested; what do you think it is worth?"

"You are a little out of line, but we are interested".

A couple of months later there is a phone call. This is the way the man explained it on television. The phone call was to this effect: "Were you fellows serious when you said you were interested in buying this little oil company?"

I see that you are rising, Mr. Speaker. The hour has arrived. I will have some fun tomorrow. I want to save my energy. I am sure all my colleagues will be back so that I can tell them about Petrofina and the people's oil company.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[English]

COMBINES—INVESTIGATION OF RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN BELL TELEPHONE AND NORTHERN TELECOM

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to take some steps with respect to the relationship between Bell Canada and Northern Telecom. I thought it was a particularly good time to do this since Bell has recently been making noises about yet another rate increase. I wish to put a few things on the record tonight which cause me some concern, and I hope the government will examine them.

A couple of weeks ago members of the board of Northern Telecom met in Toronto. Subsequently, a loss of $185 million in their U.S. operations was announced. There were about six Northern Telecom aircraft on the tarmac at that time, such as Lears, Falcons and Gulf Streams, which the company used to fly their directors to the meeting. Northern Telecom is owned by Bell Canada. Mr. de Grandpre is chairman of the board of Northern Telecom and chief executive officer of Bell. He is paid by both companies. One has to ask whether the CRTC knows, condones and approves of the gross waste of funds which affect Bell Canada, for obvious reasons, in the way Bell Canada conducts its affairs.

The Toronto Star summed it up pretty well in a recent article on its business page when it said:

> Bell Canada, dragged down by a large loss and huge write-off from 54 per cent owned Northern Telecom Ltd., reports an almost non-existent net profit for the final quarter of 1980 and a lower profit on the year—
> Bell said yesterday it had a lower fourth-quarter profit on operations of $92.2 million or 49 cents a share compared with net profit of $104.2 million or 62 cents a year earlier. But including a $90 million charge resulting from the Northern Telecom write-off, final net was $2.2 million, with no net earnings applicable to common shares.

I read this excerpt for a specific reason. In the U.S. Northern Telecom lost $185 million. In Canada it made a profit of approximately one-half of that, something in excess of $90 million. The question is, who in our country is subsidizing this profit picture? Obviously it is the telephone subscribers in Ontario and Quebec. Northern Telecom showed huge losses in the U.S., where it has to meet competition. In Canada it has a sweetheart deal whereby there is little or no competition, thanks to the weird relationship the CRTC and the Canadian government are prepared to condone. Again, who subsidizes this situation, and why should it be?

Bob Scribner, a former top executive who resides at Vero Beach, Florida, retired from Northern Telecom about a year ago. As a gesture of appreciation, presumably in lieu of a gold watch, he was given the use of a Northern Telecom aircraft for a year. He happily flies all over the place, including going to places and meetings which have nothing to do with Northern Telecom, and this is done presumably at the expense of the shareholders. Perhaps he flew from Vero Beach and back for the last shareholders' meeting; I do not know. The question is, who pays for the huge U.S. losses and company lavishness for its directors? We do.

Bell Canada's rates are based on returns on assets and, therefore, losses in the company's operations, wherever they take place, are of great concern to consumers. If equipment is being sold at artificially high prices here in Canada—reflecting lack of competition—to subsidize heavy losses in the United States where Northern Telecom cannot meet competition, Canadian consumers are subsidizing this operation with every telephone call in the same way they will be subsidizing the purchase of Petrofina with every gallon of gas which they buy. In the latter case there is supposed to be some Canadianization involved. There is none in the way they are subsidizing telephone calls. Why is the government allowing this conflict of interest to persist whereby the chief executive officer of Bell has a similar capacity—in the sense that he is chairman of the board—and has a substantial part of his salary paid by Northern Telecom? Why do company directors have private jets at their disposal to take them to directors' meetings such as the one in West Palm Beach this February?

I am not against private enterprise, needless to say, or a company rewarding its management in an appropriate way as long as it is not a fraud against the shareholders or as long as it does not affect consumers where there is a monopoly involved, as is the case with Bell.

There are certain questions I should like to ask tonight, but I do not have the time to put them all forward. I should like to know whether the government, the CRTC or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) would see fit to check them out. For example, I am informed that a very plush, lavishly-furnished apartment is in existence in London for the use of Northern Telecom executives. Does it include a Jaguar and a full-time chauffeur? Is there an apartment like that in Florida? Why do Bell and Northern Telecom executives frequently take trips together on the excuse that this is done to entertain customers? Perhaps a closer analysis of this would reveal that the entire process is probably a facade.

Northern Telecom makes lavish use of jets. They are used extensively by Northern Telecom executives. Most of the time they fly practically empty. Usually a number of them end up going to the same place, each carrying only one or two persons. Mr. de Grandpre, Walter Light, Mr. Ebey and Mr. Thackray, Northern Telecom executives, all have residences in New Hampshire. Does Walter Light view the New Hampshire place as his permanent residence? I hear he only rents an apartment in Toronto. Are corporate jets used to fly these people to New Hampshire? It is interesting to note that very often Friday meetings are scheduled at out-of-the-way places, which then paves the way, as an excuse, on the way back to stop in New Hampshire for the weekend.

The head office of Northern Telecom, on paper, is in Montreal. However, practically all the executives are in Toronto. This is another facade. For what purpose? The 1980 board meetings are an example. Less that 50 per cent of such meetings were held in Montreal.

As I mentioned before, when Mr. Scribner retired, instead of being given a gold watch, he was given the use of a Northern Telecom jet for a year. I will continue at some later time; I realize my time has expired.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the results of interrelationships between telecommunications concerns in Canada have recently received an increasing amount of public attention. As the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) indicated, the recent announcement of losses by Northern Telecom raised the question of the extent to which such losses will be subsidized by increased rates charged to the subscribers of Bell Canada, Bell Canada being the majority shareholder of Northern Telecom.

Since 1967 the interrelationship between Bell Canada and Northern Telecom has in one form or another been under investigation by the director of investigation and research, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs' main anti-combines enforcement officer. Early assessment of the relationship convinced the director that formal charges could not be laid against the companies at that time. However, in 1973, the director filed notice before the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission that he would initiate an inquiry under section 47 of the Combines Investigation Act, which allowed him to investigate, without necessarily laying charges, the results of the interrelationship between these two companies.

In December of 1976 a summary of the material which had been gathered was submitted by the director to the RTPC pursuant to section 47. The statement of material, or the "Green Book," as it is called, is entitled: "The Effects of Vertical Integration on the Telecommunications Equipment Industry in Canada". The director concluded in the statement of material that the existing vertical integration between Bell and Northern Telecom, then called Northern Electric, would appear to be contrary to the public interest and indeed ultimately against the interest of both Bell Canada and Northern Telecom.

An initial hearing on this matter was held in Ottawa in June of 1977. Since that time the RTPC has heard submissions from a number of interested parties. As of today's date, the RTPC has held 223 days of hearings. These hearings were held in a number of major cities across Canada. The commission has also heard evidence from various manufacturers, distributors, telephone companies and expert witnesses called by the director of investigation and research. As well, many firms and individuals have appeared on their own behalf to present evidence.

In his appearances before the RTPC, the director has taken the position that Bell Canada should be required to divest its interest in Northern Telecom. The report of the RTPC on this matter is expected at the end of this year.

I hope the foregoing will serve to indicate that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been active in supporting the consumer interest in this matter.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ALICE ARM, B.C.—GRANT OF DUMPING PERMIT TO AMAX—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO CIRCUMSTANCES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question tonight arises from a question I raised on January 16, 1981 with the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). I hope whoever responds for him tonight, since he is not in the chamber, will take care to listen to what I have to say and respond in relation to that rather than simply respond with what is on a piece of paper which happens to be in his or her hands.

The issue of Amax at Alice Arm is viewed seriously by Canadians from coast to coast. It is something which has been raised many times in this House. I would like to quote from answers which have been given to me by a variety of ministers in the past months, which indicate some of the serious reservations I have in terms of how the government is dealing with this serious issue.

Adjournment Debate

On Tuesday, July 8, 1980, I raised this issue. The following is part of the answer I received from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Le Blanc):

We will obviously review this whole issue and come back to the hon. member when we have more information.

I have received nothing in relation to that question from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Also on July 8, 1980, I put a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He said:

If the hon. member would like to have an answer, maybe I could take his question as notice.

I have had absolutely no answer in relation to that since July of 1980.

On October 21, 1980, I asked a question of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I quote from his answer:

I may have a fuller answer for the hon. member early next week.

Since October 21, 1980, I have had no further answer from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Also on October 21, 1980, I asked a question of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). I quote from his answer:

I indicated that if he wanted to give further consideration to the materials before him before asking me to consider seriously a public inquiry, I would be more than happy to give him that opportunity. As I perceive it, further discussions will be going on before I will be required to make any decision of that kind.

To this date there has been absolutely nothing in relation to that minister's response.

I also put a question to the Prime Minister on October 21, 1980. He replied, in part:

—we asked for a review—

To this date there has been no review and no response from the Prime Minister.

On October 27, 1980, I debated this issue at some length, with no response from anyone on the government side.

On October 31, 1980, I raised a question of privilege, in response to which the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said:

In this case, my review of the situation leads me to think that this was a matter of what was on balance, the best judgment. Until I have been given further information I think that would still be my position.

Since that point in time I am unaware of any further information the minister has had. He certainly has not provided me with anything in writing.

On November 13, 1980, I rose under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion was turned down by the Liberals. It was a call by the five main churches of Canada requesting a full public inquiry. As I said, the motion was turned down. Many of those churches have not had a response from the Prime Minister or from the minister responsible.

On January 16, 1981, I put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. That is what causes me to rise tonight. In answer to my question he said:

Madam Speaker, I have no knowledge of that, and I will make inquiries.

Following that response I asked him another question. He said:

Madam Speaker, I will have the representations of the hon. member considered and will give him an answer as soon as possible.

That was a month ago, Mr. Speaker.

Various ministers have been on the record now for one month, six months, or eight months giving bits and pieces of answers, but there has been no action.

On January 22, 1981, I again questioned the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The following is part of his answer:

—might I say that a panel of experts has been set up to look into the matter, notice of which has been communicated to the Nishga tribal chief—

I rose the following day on a question of privilege, making it clear to this House that both those statements by the minister were patently false. They have not been corrected in Hansard yet. I think the people of Canada have a right to know what is going on in relation to Amax. Why is the Prime Minister hiding? Why is the Deputy Prime Minister hiding? Why is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the whole cabinet hiding from this issue?

This is a further statement of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, which he gave on January 22, 1981:

We are trying to find a way to get a scientific review of the project, not a legal one because it is not a legal problem. It is a question of scientific judgment and that is what we are working on.

I have had conversations with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and I know private citizens have had conversations with him. He is aware that this is a legal problem. He says he is concerned about the expensive legal costs that may accrue as a result of the revocation of the permit at Alice Arm to dump, as no other mining company in Canada has ever, or is at present, allowed to dump.

• (2215)

On January 23 in response to my question of privilege the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said:

I will endeavour to make a clarification on Monday.

Subject to checking, it was my information that the scientific panel was constituted. It may be in the process of being constituted, which is apparently at variance with what was said yesterday.

Anything could be in process at any particular point in time. Ministers of the government seem simply to stand up and shoot from the hip on any issue any time they want, and then the next day they get up and say they thought it was in process or maybe it is happening. At this point in time I am almost prepared to rest my case. I have gone to everyone with any potential political involvement in this issue within the cabinet, but they all continue to sit on their hands. I believe the question is a very serious one. I am aware that hundreds of thousands of Canadians are personally cognizant of this issue and would like an answer from this government.

As a responsible government, this government should come forward and listen to the different points of view or, at least, when a minister says he is taking a question as notice in July, 1980, as did the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, an answer should be forthcoming. But I never received a note, a peep or anything. In October the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans again said he would give me a full answer within a week, but he has never given me anything. It is the same with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the entire Liberal Party. It is a litany of incompetence and false statements.

I hope whoever rises tonight will have the decency and honesty on behalf of all Canadians to tell us what is going on in relation to Amax.

Mr. George Henderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to respond to the questions which have been raised on this issue. First, I would like to make it very clear that the suggestion that Mr. John Aird was in some way associated with the decision to approve regulations which authorized tailings disposal in Alice Arm are totally without foundation. There never have been any direct or indirect communications of which I am aware between Mr. Aird and members of the cabinet or their staff with respect to this matter. The decision to allow the deposit of tailings in Alice Arm was taken after a very careful review of data which indicated that this practice could be carried out without jeopardizing the fisheries resource. The regulation was approved with the clear understanding that the mine tailings would be confined to the bottom of Alice Arm at a minimum depth of 100 metres and that salmon and other important fishery resources would not be adversely affected.

Second, I wish to emphasize that we are not insensitive to the concerns which have been raised about this issue by the Nishga and other groups. Officials of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and Environment Canada have met with the Nishga to reassure them about the tailings disposal operation. As part of the regulations, a comprehensive monitoring program has been designed to ensure that the tailings behave as predicted. Furthermore, we have agreed to establish a special monitoring board which will involve the Nishga and provincial authorities in reviewing all monitoring information.

Despite these initiatives, some public apprehension still exists. Detailed consideration is being given to identifying the best approach for ensuring that marine tailings disposal, as proposed under the regulations, will in fact ensure that fisheries resources and the interests of the native people in the area are protected.

It must be emphasized that the Nishga are not opposed to the operation of the mine. Rather, they are seriously concerned about the long-term safety of marine resources in Alice Arm. This issue is essentially a technical matter, and for this reason the minister has previously expressed a preference for carrying out an independent scientific review as opposed to a full public inquiry. All options for dealing with this issue are still under consideration, and a decision is expected in a couple of days.

The minister has stated clearly his resolve to take whatever action is necessary in exercising his responsibility for protecting the fisheries resource.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SPORTS

SUGGESTION POSTAL STAMP COMMEMORATE 1983 WORLD UNIVERSITY GAMES IN EDMONTON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to place a motion before this House for which I seek unanimous concurrence. Whereas Edmonton has been chosen as the site for the 1983 World University Games, and in recognition of the significance of the 1983 World University Games as a symbol of international co-operation and Canada's commitment to the peace and freedom of the world, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That this House confirms its expression of support of the 1983 World University Games by recommending the striking of a special stamp to commemorate the "Universiade Edmonton 83" Games.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

OTTAWA WEST NDP ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, whereas last month the annual meeting of the Ottawa West NDP Association endorsed a resolution calling on the federal NDP to withdraw its support for the government's constitutional proposals, and whereas NDP MPs have been informed by a riding organizer that the resolution will be circulated to all riding associations across the country "if we can get the federal office to, for once, serve the members of this party in performing an essential communications function.", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House recommend to the NDP federal office that a request for such a distribution be granted and, failing that, that the NDP change its name to the "Non-Democratic Party".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

CHINOOK SALMON FISHING SEASON ON FRASER RIVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Gillnet fishermen are alarmed about the prospect of a 1981 closure to protect the Fraser River chinook salmon run. Since river fishermen take only 2 per cent to 5 per cent of the total chinook catch, and since most of their boats are too old and ill-equipped to exploit ocean fishing grounds without the real risk of loss of life, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson):

That the Fraser River, from New Westminster to Mission, remain open this season but that the cost of preserving the chinook be shared with the seiners, trawlers and sports fishery rather than expecting gillnetters alone to sacrifice a year's income in the name of conservation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

SUGGESTED SHELVING OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the government has ignored the public's demand for action to relieve the crippling effects of unemployment, inflation and high interest rates, and since it is the responsibility of the Parliament of Canada to address the very serious concerns of the greatest majority of Canadians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

S.O. 43

That this House instruct the cabinet to shelve the proposed constitutional resolution until rulings have been made on all constitutional issues now before the courts so that this House may concentrate all its efforts on addressing the difficult and, indeed, frightening economic problems faced by Canadians daily.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

PROLONGATION OF COMMUNITY SERVICES CONTRIBUTION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the rapidly rising living costs in the province of British Columbia, particularly as they relate to housing, and whereas these rising prices are putting upward pressure on wages by workers forced to meet these costs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That the federal government do its part in relieving the desperate housing shortage in British Columbia by increasing the community services contribution program and prolonging it beyond 1982 to enable municipalities to develop more land for housing purposes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMBINES

CONCENTRATION OF BUYING POWER BY MONOPOLIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the threat to independent businessmen by the increased tendency toward monopoly mergers within our economy and the inability of existing laws under the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act to deal adequately with the consequences of such mergers, an example being the present controversial takeover of the remaining assets of Zeller's by Hudson's Bay, which already controls 60 per cent of the department store market at the present time, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House instruct the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to undertake forthwith an investigation into the concentration of buying power under the provisions of Section 7(1) of the Combines Investigation Act in order to prevent further monopolistic mergers which threaten the very existence of many independent small business operations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CANADA PENSION PLAN

ATTITUDE OF ONTARIO AND BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENTS TO PROVISIONS RESPECTING WORKING MOTHERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, especially concerning the working mothers of this country. In view of the fact that a new study by the Economic Council of Canada reveals that the Canada Pension Plan drop-out provision is worth a 21 per cent increase in benefits to working mothers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Ontario and British Columbia governments be condemned for standing in the way of pension reform worth $2,700 in life-time benefits to working mothers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of this motion?

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

NEGOTIATION OF LOANS ON A YEARLY BASIS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of extreme urgency. The government has been responsible for literally feeding small businessmen to the lions. Interest rates on Federal Business Development Bank loans have not improved. Depending on the risk of a loan, they are still around 18 per cent, and borrowers continue to be locked in for long stretches of time. In light of this I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the government allow persons taking out Federal Business Development Bank loans to renegotiate the terms of their loans on a yearly basis, so that they will not longer be forced to pay these exorbitant rates of interest for extended periods of time.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

STEPS TO PREVENT BANKRUPTCY OF FUND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. Whereas Canada now has a budgetary deficit of some $14 billion a year and the government is paying 20 per cent of the tax revenues to meet interest costs on our debt, and our Canada Pension Plan has an approaching deficit that is shocking to think of, therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the Canadian government smarten up immediately and gather the courage to take the necessary steps to prevent this country and our Canada Pension Plan fund from going into bankruptcy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTED METHOD OF AMENDING RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the Government of Canada has put forward a proposed resolution for a joint address to Her Majesty the Queen which would substantially alter the federal structure of Canada, and whereas that resolution sets out a detailed procedure for making future amendments to the Constitution of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the Prime Minister of Canada be required to explain to the people of Canada why he is unwilling to put his substantial constitutional amendments, which are widely opposed in Canada, to the test of his own amending formula, imperfect though it is, before the joint address is submitted to Westminster for ratification.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of this motion?

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. My leader and I have questioned the minister in recent days about the fact that there has clearly been a degree of speculative activity in the shares of Petrofina prior to the announcement of the acquisition of that company by Petro-Canada. At this stage the issue is not whether there is any wrongdoing, but whether sloppy management practices were followed by those involved in the acquisition negotiations. The purpose of posing my question is that it has led to an increase in the price of shares which has resulted in a higher price than what might have been paid, and that price is indirectly paid by the taxpayers and consumers.

My question to the minister is this: what has he done to ensure that those practices will not be repeated the next time Petro-Canada makes an acquisition? Has he received a full report on this from the present chairman of Petro-Canada? Has he given any consideration to calling on some independent body to embark on an investigation of this matter?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the fact that my hon. friend has indicated that he and his leader are withdrawing any accusations or innuendoes that they foolishly put forward in the last few weeks. He referred to some speculation in the shares of Petrofina. The hon. member knows that over the last year there were rumours to the effect that negotiations were going on between Petro-Canada and Petrofina for an acquisition. Those negotiations were interrupted because there was no agreement between the parties on what would be an appropriate price. I can tell the hon. member that, to the best of my memory, at that time Petrofina was asking for a higher price than the one it got this year in negotiations with Petro-Canada.

As far as the so-called activities are concerned that the hon. member has referred to, I have no indication that anything improper or sloppy was done. Everything done by Petro-Canada in this matter appears to have been done on the basis of the best of business practices. I have to indicate to the hon. member that the premium paid by Petro-Canada is well below the average premium paid for take-overs in the private sector in Canada and in the United States in the last year. I see no reason to call for any kind of inquiry in this case.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, clearly the minister is not dealing with his own money. If he were, he would take considerably more care with what is going on. He has not answered my question about whether he discussed this matter with the present chairman of Petro-Canada in order to assure himself that there was no wrongdoing.

ROLE PLAYED BY GOVERNMENT IN TAKEOVER

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I should like to put a supplementary question to the minister further to questions that I asked yesterday regarding this transaction. I said that it was reported in The Globe and Mail that Mr. Hopper said that the government played no role in choosing the target or setting the price. He went on to say that Petro-Canada was stretched with debt and wanted to have the Government of Canada finance the entire purchase. Since the government left the negotiations for the purchase of Petrofina to the management of Petro-Canada, and clearly Petro-Canada is not playing with its own money but with the money of the taxpayers of this country, it seems logical to me that the one who is footing the bill should take a greater interest in the negotiations, and that is the minister himself.

Did the minister request a full evaluation report prior to any decision taken by cabinet, if a decision was taken by cabinet? What was the range of values within that report, and was the final price within that range of values that was considered acceptable by that report?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, that is a rather long question but I shall try to give a short answer. As far as the relationship between myself and the heads of Crown agencies is concerned, I have enough confidence in them, they having been appointed to serve Canada, that I do not go on the presumption that they do things in the wrong way or involve themselves in any wrongdoing.

An hon. Member: No one said that.

Mr. Lalonde: I think it would be improper to ask the head of an agency every day if he did something wrong in the last week.

An hon. Member: No one said that.

Mr. Lalonde: With reference to the other question raised by the hon. member, indeed the government did not select the target for takeover. However, as I indicated, on the Thursday night before the takeover, that was about 24 hours before the takeover took place, the government approved the takeover attempt and set up a maximum level for that particular purchase. The head of Petro-Canada and his officials negotiated within that target. They respected the decision of cabinet. The decision to take over Petrofina, to pay the price that was paid, was made on the basis of very extensive analysis by outside consultants retained by Petro-Canada. Incidentally, I might mention to the hon. member that the lawyer who was helping Petro-Canada in those negotiations was the former head of the Ontario Securities Commission.

● (1420)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, we have seen an illustration of vintage Lalonde. He was talking earlier about me casting aspersions on people through innuendo. He is casting aspersions on me, or innuendo on what I have been saying.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Thin skinned.

Mr. Paproski: Even Johnston is laughing.

Mr. Wilson: There is not one thing suggested in that question of any wrongdoing on the part of the head of Petro-Canada. I am just searching for where responsibility lies in this transaction. Was it with Petro-Canada, or with the minister who is footing the bill? Let me ask a simple question. Did Petro-Canada advise the government prior to proceeding with the acquisition that Petro-Canada would not be able to finance the acquisition from their own funds and that they wanted the government to finance the entire amount of the transaction through a tax on gasoline and heating oil?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, we know the attitude of the Tory party about Petro-Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: It might help my hon. friend to know that a senior member of the firm to which he belonged, Dominion Securities Ltd., stated on television last weekend that the price paid by Petro-Canada was a fair price for both parties.

Mr. Clark: Why are you afraid of the question?

Mr. Lalonde: I suggest my hon. friend consult with his former partners and they will advise him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the discussions which took place with the government are concerned, the government announced in the budget that acquisitions would be financed out of a Canadian ownership tax.

An hon. Member: Who wrote the provision?

Mr. Lalonde: When the discussions took place on that particular Thursday with the head of Petro-Caanda it was indicated that we might have to finance this purchase out of the Canadian ownership tax. The exact amount and in what form this sum would be raised were left for further discussion and decision by the cabinet, as it should be.

Mr. Nielsen: That is pretty weak.

GOVERNMENT FINANCING OF TAKEOVER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is important in view of the statements being made by Mr. Hopper with respect to the acquisition of Petrofina. He made it quite clear in interviews that he was going to rely exclusively on the government to pay for this acquisition, out of taxation moneys.

Having regard to the fact that the Canadian ownership charge can earn a maximum of 3.7 billion per year—Petrofina having cost $1.46 billion—and if we assume the purchase will be paid off in one year, he would need 39 per cent of the Canadian ownership charge—39 per cent of $4 per barrel is $1.56 per barrel which equals 8 cents per gallon at the pump. Supplementary to the question posed by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre, was there an undertaking on the part of the government to finance this fully through taxes, and over what period of time is it the intention of the government to finance it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, on the first point I wish that my hon. friend would show a little more honesty when he refers to what Mr. Hopper actually said. Yesterday I quoted the verbatim transcript of what Mr. Hopper had said.

Mr. Clark: Which one?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Hopper said that the whole of the amount would be financed out of taxes but that obviously this was a matter for the government to decide. If the government was going to insist that some part of it be financed out of debt, obviously it would create problems in terms of cash flow for Petro-Canada, but it was a matter to be left to the government.

As far as the actual financing of the operation is concerned, I would urge my hon. friend at least to read the press communiqué which was issued. It indicates that the purchase would take place over a period of three years—25 months to be exact—and that the payments will not be required except over that extended period of 25 months. Therefore, it would be ridiculous for the government to raise all the money necessary to make the total payment in one year when we have three years in which to pay it. That seems obvious.

Mr. Clark: That is three metric years.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, it is easy to see why the minister is regarded as the J. R. Ewing of Canadian politics.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PARLIAMENTARY APPROVAL FOR FINANCING BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Maybe we can get some answers out of him.

An hon. Member: Who?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yesterday, J. R. Ewing—

• (1425)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In response to a question from my colleague from St. John's West yesterday, the minister indicated a tax would be imposed. Will the minister be bringing legislation forward in the near future seeking authority from Parliament in this regard? He indicated he would not be looking toward taxation as the sole source for the required amount. Can the minister tell the House where the money will come from? Will it be exclusively on a tax base and Canadian ownership charge, or did he authorize this transaction with no idea where the money would come from?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, whatever funds will be made available by the Government of Canada to Petro-Canada will be raised through the charge that was mentioned in the budget. That will obviously require the normal parliamentary approval. When the moment comes to seek parliamentary approval, after the amounts are determined, we will proceed in the normal way and probably table a ways and means motion prior to the necessary legislation.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

PRICE OF AUTOMOBILES MADE AND SOLD IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Figures released today show that the sale of imported cars on the Canadian market increased during the past year by 24 per cent while sales of North American or Canadian produced cars dropped by 10 per cent. One of the obvious reasons for this is that for years General Motors, Chrysler and Ford have been overcharging Canadians. Considering that a car produced on the Canadian side of the border in 1981 will sell in the United States at $500 less than in Canada, even taking into account the differences in taxation and the Canadian dollar value, will the minister take immediate steps to have the price of Canadian produced cars sold in Canada the same as in the United States in order to benefit both Canadian consumers and workers?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, there are many reasons why Canadian consumers purchase one model of car rather than another, and I do not agree with the leader of the New Democratic Party that it is because of the cost of some big cars. I believe that the hon. member is simplifying the reasons why some small foreign cars are now more popular with Canadian consumers than the traditional big cars.

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—DISCUSSIONS WITH AMERICAN ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister may not think that being overcharged for a product is a reason for consumer preference for something else. I am sure the average Canadian is well aware of the price differential and would like to pay the same price as someone in the United States pays for a car produced in Canada.

I wish to direct a supplementary question on the same subject matter to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A recent study produced by the government of Ontario shows that within four years one third of all auto workers in Canada will be out of work. The significant point in the study is that there will be a disproportionate drop in the number of auto workers in Canada compared to the United States. Considering that the auto pact is supposed to share "on a fair and equitable basis" the benefits on both sides of the border, did the minister in his recent meeting with the United States Secretary of State obtain assurance that this deplorable situation whereby more Canadians proportionately will be out of work than Americans will be turned around by the American government?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I agree with my friend's interpretation of the auto pact, but that has not been the American position over the years. I have to say that was the one subject which I discussed with Secretary of State Haig to which I did not receive a satisfactory response. His view was the typical, traditional American one where the rules of free trade of the market should prevail. I did not regard that as a satisfactory answer. In fact, discussions are under way between our governments with another member of the administration and we will be continuing that discussion with, I believe, the U.S. Secretary of Commerce.

PLEDGE TO RENEGOTIATE AUTO PACT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a further supplementary for the Prime Minister concerning the same subject. During the last election the Prime Minister, while speaking in the riding of the Secretary of State, promised the auto workers of Windsor, who make up 45 per cent of the unemployed in that sector of the economy, that a Liberal government would renegotiate the auto pact. I wish to ask the Prime Minister, in light of the rejection by the American Secretary of State of such a proposal by our own external affairs ministers, will the Prime Minister commit himself today in the House to live up to that pledge to Canadian auto workers so that we can get our share of jobs on this side of the border?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in that speech referred to by the hon. member I made two pledges. The first was to assist in the Chrysler situation, and we have kept that pledge. In so far as the second pledge is concerned, we have first to ascertain, as the Secretary of State has done, what the American position was going to be under its new administration. That being done now, I have little to add to what the Secretary of State has said. We know their position. We do not know whether it is a negotiating position, but we will have to take it from there. I can assure the hon. member that the party which formed the government which brought in the auto pact in the first place is still dedicated to making sure it works fairly for Canadian workers.

THE CONSTITUTION

ACTIONS OF BRITISH HIGH COMMISSIONER IN CANADA—OUTCOME OF INVESTIGATION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week, prompted by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, he gave us a very pious lecture on how diplomats should behave. He went on to say he would order an investigation into what he called "the totally unacceptable conduct of the British High Commissioner." Can the minister tell us the outcome of that investigation?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will be prepared in several days, probably before the end of the week, to make some comments with regard to the matter. I should correct the hon. member because I did not say that any conduct which had taken place was unacceptable. I said the alleged conduct was unacceptable.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, my supplementary to the minister, who seems to be forever backing away from what he says, is that it is now recorded he has shared this information with the British government. Since he has shared the information with the British government, I find it very surprising he could wax indignant publicly a week ago and now he wants to be quiet or reticent with regard to the public record here in the House of Commons. In view of his reticence today about a matter which has alrealdy been looked into and on which information has been given, I should like to ask him if this reticence of his is because he now considers the statements he made previously belong to those comments which he considers to be rhetorical, or is it becoming more and more the practice of all members of the cabinet to be less than candid with this House?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, if I had to judge from what is said in this House, I would say the rhetoric is from the other side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: I will be prepared to make some comments in several days on this matter. I said yesterday to the press that I had shared the information which I had at that point with the British government without making any recommendations.

When the investigation is finished and I am prepared to speak in this House, I will do so.

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In his book, "Federalism and the French Canadians", on page 24 it is stated, and I quote:

It would certainly be an advantage if the federal government consulted the provinces about matters that affect them, even if these matters are entirely within federal jurisdiction. I do not see why we could not establish permanent consulting bodies to ensure that our trade, tariff, customs or monetary policies really reflect the opinions of people throughout the country, and that no province feels undermined by the exercise of central power.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he should not make such lengthy quotations and should go directly to his question.

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, I was only trying to give the Prime Minister a chance to answer. My question to the Prime Minister is, in view of the statement which he made on page 36 of that book, and I quote:

I should be very surprised if real statesmen, given the facts of the problem, arrived at the conclusion that our Constitution needs drastic revision.

—would the Prime Minister explain his drastic change of mind on the Constitution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to something I wrote some 15 or 20 years ago, I am not sure if his question meets the rule of urgent and pressing necessity. I do not think it does.

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, at the rear of this book it says a question was asked if the Prime Minister would like to revise his statements in 1977, and he said no. The last time I asked the right hon. leader of the Grits a question he accused me of being a backbencher who spreads falsehoods. I would just like to say that I think the Canadian people now know who spreads falsehoods. On page 37—

Madam Speaker: Order. It looks as though the hon. member wishes to read the entire book to us. Would he ask the question?

Mr. Stewart: May I ask the Prime Minister, in his monumental flip-flop of "and so I cannot help condemning—

Madam Speaker: Order. Even if I smile sometimes it does not mean I want to be facetious. I am serious. I would like the hon. member to ask his question right away.

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, I am trying to ask the question but it pertains to the quote. May I just read a short quote? The quote is from the Prime Minister's book, Madam Speaker, and is as follows:

And so I cannot help condemning as irresponsible those people who wish our nation to invest undetermined amounts of money, time, and energy in a constitutional adventure that they have been unable to define precisely but which would consist in more or less completely destroying confederation to replace it with some vague form of sovereignty.

What kind of sovereignty?

An hon. Member: He was smarter in those days.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I only hope those who could not quite understand the quote will buy the book and read it. The part I heard had to do with consulting the provinces and making sure that the central government was involving the provinces in discussions of policies which affected them. It seems to me that is what this government has been doing, and what the government which preceded it was doing. If we consider the matter of the Constitution, I do not think anybody would deny that between June of last year and September there were endless hours of consultation done on behalf of the federal government by the Minister of Justice.

With regard to the matter of monetary policy, I just have to remind the hon. member that early in the seventies we began the practice of having quarterly meetings of finance ministers so that we could discuss with them budgetary framework and hear their views on how monetary and other policies should be developed. On the question of trade, of course, the provinces were very directly involved in consultation while we were discussing at the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade negotiations in Geneva. In every example I have been able to hear from the hon. member there have been very extensive consultations. I think if we read the book we will find other examples.

TRADE

GOVERNMENT'S COMMITMENT TO EXPORTATION OF COAL FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA TO JAPAN

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday Senator Olson committed the Government of Canada to spending some $450 million on a development for the export of coal from northeastern British Columbia. It was also revealed by Stuart Leggatt, a member of the British Columbia legislature, that a B.C. cabinet internal economic planning group had recommended a six-month delay in the project and cautioned that going ahead at this point would be hazardous. Is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources aware of these documents and is he, to use the words of Senator Olson in Vancouver yesterday, still happy with this deal?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, obviously we on this side of the House do not have access to the cabinet documents of the government of Alberta, but I certainly would be very happy to see a copy.

Mr. Andre: This is British Columbia.

Mr. Lalonde: British Columbia. I would also welcome those from Alberta, so if my hon. friend has extra copies of all these things we will certainly be very happy to look at them.

As far as the actual commitment of the Canadian government is concerned, the cabinet has taken a decision to co-operate in the implementation of this project. We have insisted on very strict rules in terms of avoiding the national government's subsidizing the export of natural resources. We have held to that very firmly, and we are happy to see that the deal seems to have been made without the federal government's having to subsidize the export of natural resources, which we said we would not do.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I wish the minister would do some reading on this deal and do some work on it, because he is facing another possible sellout like the Columbia River treaty. There is $450 million of federal money involved, and perhaps up to $1 billion including B.C. taxpayers' money.

Is it the policy of the government to subsidize the export of non-renewable resources, and will the minister table in this House the documents the federal government has on this deal? Will the government table environmental studies and financial studies with respect to this potentially quite disastrous deal?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I might try to answer this question. Yesterday a paper was issued in Vancouver by Senator Olson, who is in charge of this matter, in which he revealed exactly the terms of the agreement as far as the federal government is concerned.

The first part has to do with some $207 million which CN will invest in this project. That is on a cost-recoverable basis. It is on a commercial basis.

The second item has to do with a federal guarantee of a $3 per tonne throughput at the port of Prince Rupert until the year 1989, and that is indexed to the consumer price index from May, 1980, to 1989. Then after 1989 the matter becomes totally commercial, and if there was any financial support needed to make the $3 per tonne throughput possible in the period 1983-84 to 1989, then that help would be fully cost-recoverable after that time.

The third element is about $10 million of on-site and off-site services and access roads, and that is the package which was put together in the grain agreement. The hon. member will remember that at that time it was anticipated that the coal project would become a reality at Prince Rupert. This was wrapped up at that time, and this is not on a cost-recoverable basis. Those are the facts.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ALLEGED REJECTION OF GROS CACOUNA AS SITE FOR FUTURE NATURAL GAS LIQUEFACTION TERMINAL

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Madam Speaker, my question is for the hon. Minister of the Environment, and as you seldom allow supplementary questions, I would greatly appreciate it if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources could also make a few comments. In a Canadian Press item released last evening, the Minister of the Environment is reported as having said:

> The federal Minister of the Environment, John Roberts, announced yesterday that the Canso Strait area had been rejected as a possible site for a natural gas liquefaction terminal.

Mr. Roberts explained that the decision to reject this site had been made by the private sector and not by the federal government.

The terminal will probably be built in Gros Cacouna, Quebec.

Can the minister confirm or deny this report of the Canadian Press and would he tell us whether he was speaking on behalf of the Canadian government when he made this announcement?

[English]

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. There is a clear explanation for the statement I made. It was a simple error on my part. I managed to confuse the province of New Brunswick with the province of Nova Scotia. It would be inexplicable to the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia that I confused one for the other. Indeed, it is almost inexplicable to myself.

The fact is that the statement was absolutely correct except that I should have said New Brunswick when I said Nova Scotia and Nova Scotia when I said New Brunswick. There has been no change in the situation. The site at Gros Cacouna and the site in Nova Scotia are both under the process of environmental review undertaken in each case by the province with the participation and co-operation of the federal government.

ENERGY

DECISION ON LOCATION OF LNG TERMINAL

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the same matter, that is, the decision with respect to the location of the liquid natural gas terminal at Gros Cacouna or in the Strait of Canso in Nova Scotia. Let me say first that I am surprised that the press gallery orchestra did not strike up that famous song "How can I believe you when you say you're sorry when I know you've been a liar all your life".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosby: Nova Scotians and people in Quebec were concerned that the decision with respect to the location of the LNG terminal would be based on political considerations, but the Minister of Finance assured Nova Scotians that the decision would be based on the merits and would be reviewed by the National Energy Board.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosby: I want to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he will confirm that the decision will be based on the merits and will be decided by the National Energy Board. I would also like him to comment on how the Minister of the Environment could even enter into the field when the matter is supposedly before the National Energy Board.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, my first inclination would be to tell the hon. member, "Play it again, Sam".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Without any hesitation I want to state and repeat what I have already stated in Rivière-du-Loup, Gros Cacouna, and this House. This subject is before the National Energy Board for consideration, and the National Energy Board will hold the hearings it is accustomed to holding on such matters. It will hold public hearings and make a public report which will then be submitted to the cabinet. This is the process which has been followed in the past, and it is the same process which will be followed in this case.

As far as the statement attributed to my colleague, the Minister of the Environment is concerned, he has just answered with respect to that statement.

EXTENSION OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO MARITIME PROVINCES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources knows that the National Energy Board is also concerned about the extension of the natural gas pipeline east, but the minister has said that if the board does not approve the application, he will introduce a bill in this House. I want to ask the minister whether he does not think he has undermined the judicial exercise of judgment by the National Energy Board in this matter of the liquid natural gas terminal and in the matter of the extension of the pipeline by this interference and by the remarks made inside and outside this House.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as far as the gas pipeline is concerned, the National Energy Board produced a report last year in which it recommended the extension of the pipeline in Quebec but not in the maritimes. That was the conclusion of the National Energy Board. In developing the National Energy Program the Canadian government came to the conclusion that it was essential and in the national interest to have the pipeline built as far as Halifax to serve both New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. This is a national policy decision which has been made by the government in the national interest. We have invited the participants to return to the National Energy Board to pursue their applications. We have indicated quite clearly the decision of the government. We are waiting for the report of the National Energy Board, but the government has indicated that its role is to speak for the people of Canada and the people of the maritimes in particular. We have indicated that we want those people to have access to natural gas on the same basis as people in the rest of Canada, and that is what we intend to provide.

DISASTERS

COLDBROOK, N.S.—ASSISTANCE IN AFTERMATH OF FIRE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have a question for either the Acting Minister of Regional Economic Expansion or the Acting Minister of Agriculture with respect to the very serious fire which destroyed the facilities of Scotian Gold at Coldbrook, Nova Scotia, and the resulting serious blow to the apple and agricultural industry of our province. I am wondering whether either one of these acting ministers can tell us what particular preliminary steps are being taken to come to the aid of that province in this respect?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. member, to my knowledge, from asking in the department, no request has been made yet of the department for assistance.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, would the parliamentary secretary take into account the desirability of using the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, if their budget is a bit strained at this time, to focus the resources of other appropriate government departments, such as the Department of Agriculture or the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to see what can be done? This is a very serious problem for the agricultural economy; it is of great concern to all members from Nova Scotia, particularly the hon. member for Annapolis Valley in whose constituency it is.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, I should like to assure the hon. member that if such a proposal is made to the department, certainly the department would review it on its own and in conjunction with other departments.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION STRIKE—INQUIRY WHETHER AUTHORITIES WILL MAKE NEW OFFERS

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Chambly): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications. In view of the harsh criticisms made by the Quebec Premier, Mr. René Lévesque, about the conflict between the French network of the CBC and its journalists, which has been going on for nearly four months, and in view of the reply made yesterday in the House by the Minister of Labour to the effect that the CBC should relax some of its firm positions, can the minister tell the House whether the management of the CBC is planning to make new offers to the union to reopen negotiations and achieve a negotiated settlement as soon as possbile?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the great interest of Mr. Lévesque in the good operation of federal institutions is well known, of course. I also believe that Mr. Lévesque is in a good position to comment on the length of this strike since the strike at Radio-Québec under his government lasted nearly seven months, if not more.

As for the question asked by the hon. member, I was informed last evening by the management of Radio-Canada that new salary offers have been relayed to the mediator of the Department of Labour. Of course, we hope that the parties involved will reach an agreement quickly.

PARLIAMENT

FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION AND COLLECTIVE BARGAINING RIGHTS FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Over 3,000 employees of Parliament, working in the offices of Members of Parliament and Senators and elsewhere on Parliament Hill, are denied the fundamental freedom of association and denied the right to collective bargaining, if they so choose, rights which all Canadians take for granted. Over two years ago the Liberal government House leader promised the House that these rights would be extended to employees on the Hill. My question is: when will the government put an end to this intolerable situation, with employees being hired and fired at will, and harassed, sometimes sexually, without any appeal mechanism whatsoever?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member knows that questions of this nature, although the employees to whom the hon. member is now referring are not directly under the jurisdiction of the Speaker, are not to be discussed under the rules of the House of Commons. I believe this should be discussed in another forum.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, on a supplementary question—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, the reason this question was addressed to the Prime Minister was that you, Madam Speaker, said that you were powerless to do anything for the employees on the Hill. So, I ask the Prime Minister again what action is the government prepared—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, what action is the government—

Madam Speaker: Order. I just want to say that the hon. member is misquoting me in this particular instance, but I should like the hon. member to come to see me in my office so that we can discuss this matter. He should know that matters relating to the employees of Members of Parliament, as distinct from those who are in the House of Commons, are not under my jurisdiction.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): A supplementary, Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Madam Speaker: If it is a supplementary to a question that I cannot allow, I do not know how I can allow it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): A supplementary, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Simcoe.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DELAY IN BOARD HEARINGS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs. It concerns a veteran, a constituent of mine, who applied for a re-board for a possible increase in his disability pension. He received a reply that his re-board would be 12 to 14 months hence. What steps is the minister taking to correct this injustice? I am sure, as he is a veteran, he agrees there is nothing more horrendous than the Department of Veterans Affairs even suggesting that a veteran should wait that long before any action is taken, because he could be dead and buried before any action is taken.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that we are doing everything possible to accelerate the question of allocation or whatever the pension is. I do not know the particular case about which he is talking, but I can take care of it if he wants to give me the information. But he must understand that sometimes it is not always the fault of the pension board or the fault of veterans. Sometimes some of the veterans do not know exactly how to get to the proper pension board. We can help them if they want to come to us.

BACKLOG OF CASES BEFORE PENSION REVIEW BOARD—CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs. There is a backlog of serious proportions before the Pension Review Board, and many veterans are dying before their claims are processed. As the two previous ministers of veterans affairs were making progress in clearing up this problem, and as things have gone from bad to worse under the minister's direction, is he now prepared to resign and let another minister take his place so that this serious, shocking matter will be cleared up in the department?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Don't answer it.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

HOUSING

IMPACT OF MARKET ON HIGH INTEREST RATES AND REAL ESTATE PRICES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Recently the minister told a convention of the HUDAC group that there was no need for government intervention because normal market forces would bring forth a balance of housing supply and demand. Will the minister explain what magic market myth will reduce 16 per cent mortgage interest rates and control the exploding price of real estate in cities such as Vancouver?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question I need go no further than the city in which she resides and has given as an example. Although prices have been very high and have escalated dramatically in the last year in the city of Vancouver, the market has responded and the starts for housing in that city in the last quarter of last year were an all-time record. This is an example of the action of the market responding to internal pressures.

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, obviously the minister has not checked out the prices of those houses; no person can afford a first house in Vancouver. Will the minister delay his ongoing love-in with the real estate industry long enough to meet with people in northern Newfoundland who have desperate housing conditions and need a decentralized home repair program like the one he just cancelled?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, again I think the hon. member is mistaken; no program was cancelled. I assume the reference concerns the change in the delivery agent of the rehabilitation program in the province to which she referred. I really think she does no service to the corporation, to the people served, or even to the people we felt were not doing a good job, to put the case in that kind of language.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

MULTINATIONAL OIL COMPANIES MOVING TO MEET CANADIAN OWNERSHIP REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the importance the government placed on the Canadianization of the petroleum industry in the National Energy Program, could the minister confirm press reports of last evening that at least seven multinational oil companies, including Getty, Murphy, Suncor, Ultramar, Gulf, Shell and Mobil, are all moving rapidly to meet the government's Canadian ownership requirements?

• (1500)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the government has welcomed, as I think most Canadians have, with the exception of a few Conservatives, the moves taken over the last few weeks whereby Dome Petroleum has agreed to become a Canadian company and whereby Petrofina now belongs to all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I know there are several foreign-held companies which are now having discussions with private parties in Canada in order substantially to increase Canadian ownership in the oil and gas industry, thereby helping Canadians to own and control the industry well before 1990. We welcome those developments. I hope that a large number of companies will, indeed, abide by the objectives set out in the program and that very soon we will have a much larger base of Canadian ownership than we have had in the past.

FINANCE

QUEBEC SHIRT INDUSTRY—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL ESTABLISH MORE PROTECTIVE POLICY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who is responsible for Canada's policy as it relates to international agreements on tariffs and trade, or to his minister of state.

For one year now the Canadian Institute of Clothing Manufacturers has been making repeated representations to the government, through the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to emphasize the disastrous situation in which the shirt industry in Quebec finds itself, a situation made even worse by the government import policy on shirts from abroad. Is the minister or the minister of state prepared to explain to the House what representations have been made to the countries involved, either directly or through the general agreement on tariffs and trade, with a view to cushioning the harmful effect of that policy on that industry, or what efforts has he made within the government to change that policy?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the matter to which the hon. member refers in his question has been a subject of concern for this government for a number of years and the effectiveness of the measures taken by our government dates back to the days when the current Minister of Transport held the industry, trade and commerce portfolio. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is now examining the government's new policy in light of our obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and the hon. member knows full well that our policy must be in keeping with the provisions of GATT Article XIX.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, the efforts of the government have led to negative results.

My second question is for the Minister of State for Small Businesses. Bearing in mind that the Yamaska Shirt Company of Saint-Hyacinthe will close its doors on February 15 and lay off 115 or 125 workers, can the minister explain why he is so inefficient within cabinet, or so insensitive to the lot of his fellow countrymen, to the jobs of hundreds of workers in the Saint-Hyacinthe area, to the impending closure of other businesses, and to lay-offs at Trois-Rivières, Saint-Romuald, Saint-Denis-de-Richelieu, Cap-de-la-Madeleine, Montréal, Saint-Georges-de-Beauce, Lachine—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I suppose there was a question in that long statement by the hon. member, so I will allow the minister to answer.

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Madam Speaker, despite the hon. member's inefficiency in asking questions, I would like to tell him that we are now actively studying the recommendations of the report on textiles and clothing. We are very concerned about the current situation in the shirt industry and we hope that before the end of March we will be in a position to introduce legislation or to make an announcement on government policy based on the conclusions of the report on textiles and clothing.

PRIVILEGE

MR. YURKO—BIRTHDAY

Madam Speaker: I received a notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko). I must tell him that I received it just before the question period and since it does not flow from the deliberations of this House, and since he made no statement with respect to his question of privilege, I would ask him to supply me with a more complete statement. I will hear his question of privilege at another time.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I wanted to indicate that I was wearing a red rose today because my wife, in collaboration with my staff, decreed that on this day, my fifty-fifth birthday, I was to wear a red rose. I wished to wear blue, but when I look at it it is red.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—ACTING MINISTERS' RESPONSIBILITIES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the government House leader in his capacity as President of the Privy Council. Yesterday he tabled PC 1980-2824, which is a list of acting ministers and second acting ministers. The list does not indicate who will continue in the House to answer for the Wheat Board. The list does not indicate who will continue in the House to answer for the pipeline. May we assume that those responsibilities have not changed?

My second question is, can we place reliance upon this list, in view of the example today in which the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) directed a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) with respect to the economic development portfolio and it was answered by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin)? If that practice is to continue, perhaps the Minister of Transport should be designated to answer for economic development. May we have that clarified please?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is the Minister of Transport who answers in the House for the Canadian Wheat Board and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who answers questions on the pipeline.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, there was also my last question, with respect to the question raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). The proper minister to answer was the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but his question was answered by the Minister of Transport. Can we rely on this list and expect answers from the designated ministers rather than from some other minister?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, it can happen, in view of our desire to provide complete answers, that we allow a minister whose department may be more concerned by a particular question to answer. So I think we have to be sufficiently flexible on both sides to understand that sometimes another minister than the one to whom the question was addressed is better qualified to answer a particular question, namely on the Canadian Wheat Board or the pipeline. It was because he could provide a more complete answer, and because there was a link with transport with regard to this particular question that the Minister of Transport answered. Now, if the hon. member would rather have his questions answered by the minister to whom they are addressed he may on occasion get answers that are not as exhaustive, and I do not think that is what the hon. member wants.

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—BARGAINING RIGHTS FOR PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have given the Chair notice of a point of order arising from the question which I attempted to ask today during question period. I am concerned that perhaps my intent in asking this question was not clearly stated. My question concerned the matter of legislative policy. It concerned possible changes to federal government legislation in the area of collective bargaining rights for employees of the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament.

I recognize your jurisdiction over the administration of the employees of the House of Commons, Madam Speaker but, with respect, this is a separate question. As long ago as 1967 there was a recommendation that collective bargaining rights be extended to employees of the House of Commons. With great respect, only the government and not yourself, can introduce legislation granting collective bargaining rights to employees of the House of Commons, which would give them some form of grievance procedure.

Madam Speaker: If I may interrupt the hon. member, I agree totally with what he is saying, if he is asking a question about the legislative policy of the government. But as his question was formulated, it seems to me that it spills over into the responsibilities of the Speaker and confuses the responsibilities of the staff of Members of Parliament with the staff on the Hill. That is why I ruled the question could not be brought up in that form. If the hon. member wishes to bring the question up again in the form in which he has indicated it would be acceptable, although I cannot say so in advance.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I would ask again, with respect, that you examine carefully the question which I asked. In fact, I specifically referred to the government legislation. I pointed out the undertaking of the then government House leader, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), that he would introduce legislation to this effect. I pointed out that there were serious concerns over the fact that there is no protection for employees on the Hill, including employees of Members of Parliament. That was the question, and I have it here. I regret that perhaps there was a misunderstanding as to the intent of the question. However, certainly this kind of legislation is long overdue. That was my purpose in addressing the question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as representing the Liberal government, which has not kept its promise to bring in this legislation.

Madam Speaker: I would not want to be unfair to the hon. member, but I jumped to my feet because I heard something to the effect that this question was spilling over into the Speaker's jurisdiction and, therefore, the matter should be discussed directly with me, not in the House. If I have been unfair to the hon. member, I apologize. I will recognize him another time in this respect.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my point arises out of the matter raised by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). In the preamble to his question he referred to members of staff having to suffer sexual harassment. If the hon. member has any evidence to back up his allegations, then I believe he should name names and not smear every member of this House with that kind of accusation.

B.C. TELEPHONE COMPANY—APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan) has a statement. I will accept a question from the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman).

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, what proposals does the minister have to alleviate the conditions that caused such tremendous demands. What responsibility does the govern-

Union sent the following telegram to Mr. Gordon MacFarlane, chairman and chief executive officer of B.C. Telephone Company, and to Mr. William Clark, president of the Telecommunications Workers Union:

This has reference to the collective bargaining dispute between B.C. Telephone Company; Canadian Telephones and Supplies Limited, and Telecommunications Workers Union. As you are aware, there is a growing public intolerance to the effects of this lengthy dispute which has been made clear in the many representations and expressions of concern conveyed to me by telephone users in the province of British Columbia. I am equally concerned over the length of time this dispute has dragged on and am of the view that a settlement can and must be reached at the earliest opportunity in the interests of all concerned B.C. citizens who depend upon the use of this important utility in their every-day lives.

Accordingly, this will advise that I am appointing Mr. William Kelly, senior assistant deputy minister of the department's federal mediation and conciliation service, as a mediator. Mr. Kelly is well known to the B.C. industrial relations community given his involvement over the years in settling major disputes on the west coast. With your co-operation I am confident he can assist in bringing an early resolution of this dispute. Would you and Mr. Wm. Clark, president, Telecommunications Workers Union, please arrange to meet with Mr. Kelly at 2 p.m. on Friday, February 13 in Labour Canada's Vancouver office located at 750 Cambie Street, Seventh Floor.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I was not aware that the minister would be making a statement on this very serious labour dispute in the province of British Columbia which is putting the citizens of that province to great expense and inconvenience. It is a serious issue. The last word I had on the matter when I was in Vancouver not too many hours ago was that there was little to mediate. The last offers were on the table and no move had been made on either side.

With the minister appointing a very well known and very able mediator, Mr. Kelly, who I am sure has the blessings of this House and of God on high, I hope the deadlock can be broken and some kind of sanity brought to bear on this issue. We are dealing with a public utility in the form of a communications system which is under attack. We are dealing with the seizure or the interruption of private property.

We in this House have an obligation to begin discussing the causes of alienation and antagonism which develop between management and organized labour. I am troubled by the fact that people in these highly organized, high leverage positions dealing with large corporations seem to forget all about the 55 per cent to 65 per cent of the workers in Canada who are unorganized and who are being left further and further behind.

Above and beyond the mediation which is necessary between labour and management in this monopoly situation, I believe this House of Commons and particularly the government should begin giving serious concern to the lack of leverage of those in uneconomic positions of leverage in the private, small and medium enterprise sector. A serious social issue is developing; it is the issue of maintaining some kind of standard of living in what is developing into a double digit inflationary economy. I ask the Minister of Labour to seek the counsel of his colleagues to determine whether the wider sector of the Canadian work force can be considered as these high leverage positions are mediated by his department.

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, I congratulate the Minister of Labour for not only intervening at this time to settle a long-standing and very serious social and technological squabble, but also for appointing to the position of mediator a very respected negotiator, Mr. Kelly. We in British Columbia realize the severity of this series of lockouts, sit-ins and strikes. It is a disreputable example of what can be described as less than adequate or less than acceptable labour-management practice in our province, and it is certainly nothing to be emulated.

I agree with the previous speaker that we should do everything in our power to settle this and prevent such things from happening again.

This is not just a matter of B.C. Tel versus its workers; it is a revolution in the telecommunications industry brought about by chip technology and the other things that have the potential of displacing thousands of people in that industry and in the clerical industry in the years ahead.

I would say this dispute has poisoned the atmosphere in a dozen or more communities in British Columbia and it is time it was stopped. There has been delay in installation, poor service, bitterness, hostility, all of which cannot be allowed to go unchallenged or unresolved.

I think everyone knows that in previous mediation efforts the union has shown itself to be flexible in that it has reduced demands in an effort to reach a settlement. The same flexibility has not been forthcoming from B.C. Tel, which is a subsidiary of an American giant. An American management is dictating Canadian labour practices and the service that will be given to Canadians. That is an intolerable situation in an independent country.

May I close by saying that even in the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba which have Conservative governments, and in Saskatchewan which has an NDP government, telecommunications and telephone companies are under provincial control, ownership and jurisdiction. That should also be the case in British Columbia.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, the minister has taken a very direct course of action in this case but once again we are experiencing crisis management. When a situation becomes intolerable to all parties and action is taken, that only treats the symptom. I wish the minister had gone slightly beyond that symptom in his statement.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member is going to ask a question. As he knows, only one speaker from each party is allowed to respond to the minister's statement to make on the B.C. Telephone Company dispute, which I raised yesterday.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I have this day in relation to the dispute between the B.C. Telephone Company and the Telecommunications Workers ment accept and what is it going to do about the causes rather than just treating the symptoms?

Mr. Regan: Madam Speaker, I thank the three hon. members who participated in the response to this announcement. In particular I thank the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) for their studied and thoughtful comments on a very serious work dispute. I believe the problem has been a very serious one in British Columbia and that is confirmed by my observations when I was in Victoria and Vancouver in the past few days.

One of the problems is that from the beginning, several months ago until the past week or two, little pressure was put on the union or on the company to come to an agreement. Most employees were still working and the normal operations of the company were continuing. Until then, the people who suffered were those requiring commercial installations in new buildings or those who were moving to new quarters. I am sure all hon. members will have received representations from these people about the inconvenience they experienced. The dispute has escalated, of course.

I think that a utility has a particular responsibility to people who are counting on new installations, to bring a dispute of this type to an end even if in its day to day operations the utility does not feel particular pressure.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) was rather critical in the question he put, and perhaps was also rather political. That is not helpful in this situation. The hon. member must be aware that the federal Department of Labour has a better record than other departments of labour in such matters. This is not just since I have been in the department but was the case under his own government and under former Liberal governments, because of the abilities of such professionals as Bill Kelly. It must be appreciated that not all problems can be settled. There has to be a willingness to settle before a dispute can be resolved.

I believe we have taken a constructive step today and the two hon. members who spoke earlier agreed. That step could not be taken, however, until, on the basis of the advice of professionals, I judged it to be useful. Sometimes if a special mediator is appointed too early in a dispute, nothing is achieved and proceedings are prolonged. Bill Kelly is a top man in his field.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: I am confident that if anyone can, he will make progress in this dispute.

The other aspects of the question from the hon. member for Fraser Valley West related to inflation, governmental policy and international conditions. I am sure, Madam Speaker, you would be upset if I were to take the time I need to deal with those questions, so perhaps I can discuss them with the hon. members on another occasion.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I have one question to put to the minister but first I should like to join with my colleague the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) in extending our good wishes to Mr. Kelly whose reputation in this particular area is well known. In our view, if anyone can play an effective mediation role in this matter it is Mr. Kelly. There could be no better choice.

The minister mentioned the political comments or criticisms contained in the question of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). In that connection I would recommend that the minister read his own comments as reported at page 7071 of Hansard which, in my reading, bear a taint of anti-Americanism. I wonder whether that will make the situation in British Columbia any easier. The minister said that B.C. Tel is owned in the United States and was perhaps not as sensitive to the situation in British Columbia as might be desired. There is a taint in that particular comment. I hope the minister will rectify that to some extent, as it is not going to help in the mediation.

Mr. Regan: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) for his question. I do not believe I can accommodate his desire in the matter. I certainly want to confirm that I do not mean to imply any anti-Americanism. I believe we are very fortunate indeed to have such a great neighbour as the United States.

In the remarks I made yesterday I was reflecting what was being said by businessmen in the constituency of the hon. member which I had the privilege of visiting just before last weekend.

Mr. Nielsen: You had better learn to say it.

Mr. Regan: Yes, I had better. The hon. member may have heard people in British Columbia who are not members of unions say that the problem is not just that this is a foreign-owned company, because lots of foreign-owned companies make great contributions to the country, but that a monopolistic utility which services all the people is owned outside the country and this may be a problem in the long history of difficult relations. That does not mean it is the only problem, or that there may not be some problems involving the union.

What I said in my remarks, or intended to say, and I hope I can make it clear to the hon. member, is that in British Columbia there is considerable concern. I would best serve the interests of the people of the country as Minister of Labour if I call it like I see it in each and every dispute. If sometimes that means I feel there are certain things a union should do to improve its position, then I should say so; and if there are certain aspects of management that I feel are of concern to me, then I should also express them.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I cannot allow this debate to go on too long. As hon. members know, there is a rule of thumb that we take into consideration the length of the initial statement and then allow for questions in that time.

I will allow the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway to ask a question. I am afraid the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) has had a chance to make a statement. I think I will have to draw a line there and recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Of course, under Standing Order 15(3) the Chair has absolute discretion in determining how much time can be spent on these proceedings. However, would the Chair take into account the fact that there are no British Columbia members on the other side? They are all on this side of the House; five of them in this party, and some to my left. Could that not be taken into consideration? I know my colleague, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) has a question to ask and I know that my friend, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) has one. Perhaps the Chair could extend the determination of the time to include at least those two members.

Madam Speaker: No member had risen except for the hon. member for Capilano and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway at the time I said I had to end debate. The hon. member is now saying that several others have questions, but they had not so indicated. I do feel the length of this debate has to be reasonable. It seems to me several questions have been asked on this side. I will now recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I am afraid I must stick to the rule that debate should not be extended too far. Taking into account that the statements were all brief, I think that suggests something to me about the briefness of the following question period.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, of course, I am not going to question your ruling at all. However, I would draw to your attention also the fact that there was no notice given of the minister's intention to make a statement, which is customary. Obviously that gives rise to more questions, than if such notice had been given.

All I am pleading is that the hon. member for Capilano and the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River be recognized for a short question.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I do not want to prolong this discussion, but the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) knows that while notice may be given very often, it is not required by the rules.

Mr. Nielsen: It is courtesy.

Mr. Collenette: In some cases it may not be possible, and the minister has not had the opportunity to explain why he did not give the customary notice.

Although, as the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has said, you have absolute discretion under Standing Order 15(3) about the length of the question period, I for one would object if any member spoke twice in this brief question period. I would support your original intention, which was to allow no other member to speak more than once.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, I just want to refer to what the acting House leader has said. There was an arrangement yesterday between the minister and the member of the NDP party to bring the question to the House. As you will recall, I rose on a question of privilege following the question period to remind the minister of the responsibility that he has outlined this afternoon. You did not allow me to continue with my question of privilege, Madam Speaker. I did not think yesterday that the minister was serving the cause at all in asserting himself in the manner he did, clearly taking the side of the union, and having made a prior arrangement with a member from the NDP party, which, incidentally, carried over to this day.

The minister had no intention of making a statement on motions. He had an intention to answer a question from a member of the NDP party. Madam Speaker, you will recall that you did not have notice from the minister that he had intended to make a statement on motions. Therefore, it would not be fair at this point to stop the debate. There was merely an arrangement between two members of the House, totally ignoring that there are some valid comments that need to be made on this subject by members on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Chair is not aware of any kind of an arrangement. It is not the concern of the Chair.

An hon. Member: It should be.

Madam Speaker: It cannot be the concern of the Chair.

I will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I will not recognize anyone who has already spoken once. I will recognize a few others who might rise following that hon. member. I had a feeling that everyone who had any intention of asking questions had asked them. That is why I arrived at the decision to end the debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a short question. First, I wonder whether my friend, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), would note that it is the New Democratic Party, not the NDP party. That is a double: NDParty, party.

Madam Speaker: The question should be addressed to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan).

Mr. Waddell: Has the minister received representations over a period of the last year from union members and others from British Columbia which generally have three points to them: first, they regret that the ultimate control of the company is in the United States and is basically a foreign company; second, they regret that labour control is really through the Canadian Labour Relations Board which, while not foreign, is some 3,000 miles away from British Columbia—British Columbia has very progressive labour legislation—and third, some people who have made submissions want the labour board in British Columbia to have control? In other words, they want the province of British Columbia to have regulatory control and that the company be taken under public ownership in British Columbia.

Would the minister confirm that those have been, the three points of many of the submissions, especially from union members in British Columbia? Would the minister briefly give us his view on the last two matters?

Mr. Regan: Madam Speaker, I think the able young member from Vancouver-Kingsway wants to lead me a little astray or on certain tangents in this matter. Let me say to him that it is true that I have, from time to time, received representations from some people in British Columbia who feel it is unfortunate that jurisdiction over labour matters in B.C. Tel is under federal jurisdiction—under the CLRB—rather than the British Columbia board. It is true that British Columbia does have some very progressive labour legislation passed by the former premier.

Mr. Kilgour: Go and shake hands.

Mr. Regan: Whatever turns you on.

Mr. Kilgour: You might as well go and give him a big kiss.

Mr. Regan: But these matters do fall under federal jurisdiction, and we also have very good labour legislation. We have an excellent labour relations board. We have a regional office in Vancouver which is very ably staffed. I think problems in the area involving a number of unions which are under that jurisdiction are well looked after by that staff.

It is also true that there have been some representations about foreign ownership of the utility, but I have already commented on that. I do not believe I have had particular representation on the subject of public ownership. In this country we have a history of utilities which are publicly owned and those which are privately owned, and as long as there is good regulation—I do not think that in essence presents a problem.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Once again the minister is clearly siding with those people from the left. He is saying it is a matter of opinion whether there is excellent, leading and progressive labour legislation in British Columbia. The fact is that British Columbia has disproportionately more labour problems than any province in this country. We wonder whether the labour legislation in the province of British Columbia could be somewhat responsible for that.

My colleague, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), warned the minister that before taking sides in this dispute, he should make sure he does not dig himself in any further than he did yesterday and again today. Certainly I have faith, as does everyone else, that Mr. Kelly will come up with a report and recommendations which both sides will seriously look at.

We hope Mr. Kelly will look at other issues in this dispute having to do with technological changes which will create serious problems for the work force of this country. We on this side want to encourage these improvements while at the same time accepting some responsibility for those directly affected. We hope Mr. Kelly will look at it in that sense.

Who did the minister meet with when in British Columbia? Did he meet with anyone from the telephone company? Did he look at the regulatory structure? Did he look at the obligations placed on that company? Being a representative of a large northern constituency, I speak with some authority when I say the company has done an exemplary job of bringing telephone service to the most remote areas of the province. This creates an incredible burden on the resources of such a company. Did the minister speak with company officials? I can evaluate both sides, and I agree there has been stubbornness on both sides. Why would the minister come into this House after a two-day visit to British Columbia, knowing all about this dispute and having appointed a mediator, clearly having his mind already made up?

Mr. Regan: Madam Speaker, I know the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) would not want to say anything that would be interpreted as criticism of the way in which I have discharged the responsibilities of my office and used my judgment as to when a mediator should be brought in. That is a heavy responsibility I must discharge.

I think upon reflection, if the hon. member will consider what I have said, and if he goes back home and talks to some businessmen in Prince George—

Mr. Oberle: I do that all the time.

Mr. Regan: —he will find they are expressing the same sort of concern I mirrored in this House. I do not think we should hide things under the table. If there is such a feeling, and that is a factor in the problem, it should be mentioned. However, I recognize the hon. member's genuine concern and the fact that he is as anxious as anyone that a fair settlement be achieved.

I believe the course I am following in outlining what the problems may or may not be on both sides, and in appointing a mediator of this calibre, will bring the most likely prospect of progress toward a settlement. The hon. member knows, for example, that by using judgment as to when and how quickly to intervene, we in my department were able at the last instant to avoid a threatened strike of flight attendants which would have interfered to a very substantial degree with Christmas travel plans of Canadians. Our record over the past year has been a rather outstanding one. I hope the hon. member will continue to have confidence in the path we are following in attempting to settle this very serious dispute.

I have not talked directly with officials of the telephone company. A message has just been placed on my desk indicating a telephone call from the chairman of the board of B.C. Tel, Mr. Gordon MacFarlane. At this moment in time, I have not talked directly with him. I did not think it was my role to do that, but rather to follow the course of action that I have followed. I hope upon reflection the hon. member will find that this is a fruitful course for us all.

Mr. Huntington: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: Because the hon. member was not given notice of the statement, which is not required of course, but which is a courtesy usually given to the House, I will recognize him.

Mr. Huntington: Thank you, Madam Speaker, I appreciate that very much. I seek this opportunity to clarify an impression left by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan) in his remarks when replying to my colleague for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). He mentioned that ownership of B.C. Tel is American.

Mr. Regan: Not totally.

Mr. Huntington: That is correct. That is the point I wanted to make. It is probably American controlled. There is a great deal of American investment in it. Many people in British Columbia feel it is the tail end of the whole communications system, that all the discarded equipment ends up in the west. They believe we are dealing in obsolete equipment while other parts of North America have modern communications equipment.

In his answer to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, was the minister implying that the American interests, which perhaps have control of B.C. Tel, are interfering with the management-labour relationship? Is he implying that instruction is coming from a foreign board of directors to the management of B.C. Tel that it not get on with the business of settling this dispute, because in the past that has been one of the problems in British Columbia? We have been the laboratory for labour-management disputes where the unions are controlled from the U.S. as well as the management. If a settlement comes about, it has a spillover effect on the industry and unions, not only in Canada but in the United States.

In his answer, is the minister telling us that the American board of directors is giving instruction to the management of B.C. Tel, which has very capable management, Canadian trained and educated? In most cases, they are all Canadians. Are instructions being issued to obstruct progress and a settlement in this? If so, that is a very serious issue which must be addressed here.

Mr. Regan: Madam Speaker, I am not telling the hon. member any such thing. If he reviews my words, he will find that is not the case. I have said there is some area of concern in the province; that since the ultimate control of the company rests in the United States, the people who have the ultimate responsibility for the company may be in the position of not having the same level of sensitivity to labour relations as they are practised in this country as have people here. As to what the relationship may be between the parent company and the Canadian management, what level of responsibility is exercised in Canada, how much latitude management here have, whether there is any communication and what the nature of that communication is, I have no knowledge whatsoever. If the hon. member reviews my words, he will find that is essentially what I have said on the matter. I believe he will also find on his return to the province that the views I have outlined are the views and concerns of businessmen in British Columbia.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4, 1,651, 1,747, 1,759 and 1,766.

[Text]

RAILWAY EXPRESS SERVICES OPERATED OUT OF BROCKVILLE, ONT.

Question No. 4—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the amount of business, in each of the past three years, received by the Canadian National Railways and/or Canadian Pacific Railways for express services operated out of Brockville, Ontario?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows:

Canadian National Railways

	1977	1978	1979
Shipments forwarded	80,184	98,283	87,034
Revenue-related to forwarded shipments	$1,206,400	$1,270,000	$1,206,400
Shipments received	67,149	65,414	72,380

Transportation companies generally do not record revenue(s) related to shipments received. These figures, therefore, are not available.

Information concerning express services for the Canadian Pacific Railways is not available.

DREE—REFORESTATION OR RESEARCH

Question No. 1,651—Mr. Herbert:

In the past five years, have reforestation or forestry research programs been funded by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and, if so, where applicable by province, which ones?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

Newfoundland

Reforestation: establishment of a nursery; site preparation, stand reclamation; planting and cone collection.

Research: harvesting and utilization studies; experiments in sawmill design, wide tree chipping, wood fuel, integrated logging and new harvesting techniques.

The above programs were carried out under the forestry subsidiary agreement at a total cost to DREE of $4.2 million.

Prince Edward Island

Reforestation: seed gathering and preparation; seedling production; planting on private and Crown lands; greenhouses and ancillary equipment.

Research: adaptation of research studies to island conditions; growth studies associated with development of superior seedlings; diseases and pests; stump culture; shelter belts and windbreaks.

The above programs were carried out under the comprehensive development plan at a total cost to DREE of $2,562,278.

Nova Scotia

Reforestation: site preparation, planting, tree acquisition and seedling; tree nursery, tree breeding centre.

Research: new uses for hardwood.

The above programs were carried out under the forestry subsidiary agreement at a total cost of $3,577,715.

Various small reforestation projects were carried out under the third agriculture and rural development agreement at a total cost to DREE of $122,557.

New Brunswick

Reforestation: construction and operation of three tree nurseries; site preparation; tree planting; plantation tending.

Research: applied research into the control of the spruce budworm; study of the ecology of the Nashwaak watershed; plantation growth studies; various investigations into the control of fish and wildlife species as an element of forest management.

The above programs were carried out under the forestry subsidiary agreement at a total cost to DREE of $14.2 million.

Quebec

Reforestation: silviculture projects on public forests; aid to provide forest production; reforestation; seed production; seedling production; purchase of potted plants; planting on public forests; planting on private forests; sowing by air and on the ground; upkeep of reclaimed land; mechanization development; arboretum; vehicle management; internal management.

Research: studies of the development of efficient timber allocation.

The above programs were carried out under the forest development subsidiary agreement at a total cost to DREE of $32,533,972.

Various small silviculture and reforestation projects were carried out under the third agricultural and rural development agreement at a total cost to DREE of $335,718.

Ontario

Reforestation: resource assessments and inventories; hardwood forest renewal; forest access; silvicultural camps; nursery expansion; soil survey; development and marketing; private land forestry assistance; forest improvement of Crown lands and lands under control of the Crown; expansion of county and conservation authority forests; management program in Treaty No. 3 area; forest survey of Indian reserves in northwestern Ontario; management and reforestation on Grassy Narrows Indian Reserve No. 21 and Eagle Lake Indian Reserve No. 17.

Research: hybrid poplar technical development, nursery and research.

The above programs were carried out under the community and rural resource development, forest management, eastern Ontario and rural development subsidiary agreements at a total cost to DREE of $4,803,545.

Manitoba

Reforestation: resource development.

The above program was carried out under the northlands subsidiary agreement at a total cost to DREE of $1,316,600.

Saskatchewan

Reforestation: opportunity identification; management, silviculture; small scale forest development; reforestation; forestry operations; harvesting study.

The above programs were carried out under the forest development, interim northlands, northlands and interim planning subsidiary agreements at a total cost to DREE of $2,330,446.

British Columbia

Reforestation: reforestation.

The above program was carried out under the intensive forest management subsidiary agreement at a total cost to DREE of $1,751,257.

ADVERTISING EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,747—Mr. Stevens:

For the current fiscal year, what are the estimated expenditures of the Department of the Environment for (a) advertising (b) free or subsidized publications (c) other information conveyed to the public?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): For the current fiscal year (1980/81), Environment Canada's projected expenditures are: (a) $328,400; (b) $3,893,550; (c) $591,400.

Question No. 1,759—Mr. Stevens:

For the current fiscal year, what are the estimated expenditures of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for (a) advertising (b) free or subsidized publications (c) other information conveyed to the public?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: (a) $1,626,204; (b) $587,633; (c) $389,000.

Question No. 1,766—Mr. Stevens:

For the current fiscal year, what are the estimated expenditures of the Department of the Solicitor General for (a) advertising (b) free or subsidized publications (c) other information conveyed to the public?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General):

	(a) Advertising	(b) Free or Subsidized Publications	(c) Other Information
Ministry Secretariat	Nil	281,000	36,150
Correctional Service of Canada	31,000	3,000	Nil
Royal Canadian Mounted Police	275,900	282,000	Nil
National Parole Board	Nil	85,000	15,000

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1981-82

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-59, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, when I began my speech last night I was reviewing briefly the contents of the bill, which consists of four paragraphs intending to achieve something which is not new. This is not the first time it has been done in this House of Commons. We go through this exercise every year, or at least we have been doing it under the Liberal administration since 1970.

In 1970 we had a surplus of $493 million. Sine then it has progressively worsened until the last election when we had a very serious commitment from the Grits that there would be no additional deficits, that the government would make every effort to hold the line and that we would not have to go through this exercise much longer of the House being presented with a bill for borrowing authority without really having it supported by estimates or a budget or any kind of statement on how this money is to be spent. The truth of the matter is that since the election promise the deficit has increased by $2 billion.

This bill now asks permission from Parliament to go and borrow, a sum of $14 billion, not just from conventional sources or from domestic sources but from foreign sources as well. The reason it is somewhat different this year is, first of all, because of this lie which stares one in the face, this lie which was uttered in the election campaign, this broken promise that there would be no further increases. More importantly, this year's borrowing bill is different in the sense that it is money which is being spent in much different ways than it has been spent before.

We have been very critical of the government in previous years about the manner in which it has brought in these make-work programs, these schemes which would keep young people employed just long enough to qualify for unemployment insurance. There is an incredible cost associated with these schemes and there has been no major effort to create permanent employment for young people, to encourage them to begin their careers and help them in doing so. That is one kind of criticism. This time it is different as it is associated with another type of spending. This time it is associated with the kind of government takeover spending.

One cannot separate this particular discussion from the takeover. An example of what I am saying is the takeover by the people's oil company, Petro-Canada, of a company called Petrofina. Before I concluded last night I related to my friends in the House a short dialogue which I saw on television during which the head of the people's oil company, Petro-Canada was asked how the idea to take over this particular company came about. He was musing, and said it was a matter of meeting over a cup of coffee and a drink and somebody saying, "Would you be interested in selling your oil company?" The response was, "Sure, for $150 a share we might be looking at it." The discussion concluded there. After a few weeks there was a telephone call and whoever it was said to the head of Petro-Can, were you serious when you talked about the takeover of our company? The answer was, well, yes, we are always looking around. We have a mandate under the government's program to assert ourselves and to assume a higher degree of Canadian ownership, and that of course is government ownership. He said, we are interested but it would not be for $150 a share. That was something which was kicked around over a cup of coffee. Why don't you make us an offer? I have been paraphrasing what went on in those discussions. I suppose the directors met and they came up with their offer of $120.

As I said last night, it would be the same way you would sell your son's motorcycle which had not been used since he left for university. A person would ask if you were interested in selling the motorcycle and you would agree. This went on, and there was not really any valuation of the assets of this particular company and there was really not any valuation particularly of the assets this company has in the area of production, in the area of development of new sources of energy. If there had been an assessement of that, surely the conclusion would have been reached that this is not one of the companies which should be the first or the next to be taken over by the government.

I have taken a critical look at the company's portfolio and its financial statements. It is true it has a small interest in the tar sands activities. Its main activity in our country is in the retail field. It has a refinery in Montreal which will add to the refining capacity of the people's oil company. Reports tell us that the refinery is rather antiquated and is out of date in relation to new and modern facilities.

What we are buying is a number of service station outlets in Quebec and other parts of eastern Canada so we will have the opportunity to put the Petro-Canada sign on a number of properties to show Canadians we are in the oil business.

There should be a response by both the minister of energy and the chairman of the board of Petro-Canada as to why this acquisition is being made and how it will advance the government's strategy.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there is this myth that we are opposed to government's energy policy. We all agree that energy self-sufficiency is a laudable goal. In fact, it was a main component in the Speech from the Throne and the budget speech of the former government, energy self-sufficiency by 1990. That is where the phrase came from. We are also interested in achieving a higher degree of Canadian ownership. Where we drift apart is in the area of how we define Canadian ownership. In the minds of the people over there it is not Canadian ownership unless it is government ownership, unless the cabinet can say directly how things are managed in a particular Crown corporation. Our scheme was something much different than that, because of our firm belief that freedom of choice is an important component in a democratic society such as ours.

Canadian ownership would have been the ownership by Canadian citizens and not directly by the government. That is a very important distinction.

Apart from that, how will this particular acquisition help achieve these two serious objectives with which we all agree? Mr. Hopper said that Petro-Canada would take over this company, that it has made significant profits and that all these profits will be plowed right into Petro-Canada's exploration efforts in the north and particularly in frontier areas. Let us take a look at what are these profits which will be plowed back into these efforts. As I said, I have looked at the financial statements of Petrofina. We have interim unaudited figures for 1980, but after taxes in 1979 the company made $61.587 million in profit. That was from its Canadian operations. That is a significant amount of money which could be plowed into exploration and development. The company paid $39.441 million in income taxes. Of course, if we just took over the company and operated it as it is, that amount could be added to that $61 million. Or it really should be deducted because the government already had $31 million, and it is now after that other $61 million which the company kept for itself at the time.

Before we get all excited about re-investing these profits, let us look at what actually has to happen as a result of the acquisition. We know that the government does not have the $1.47 billion it takes to acquire the company. It has to borrow that money. If it had the money, we would not have a borrowing bill before us asking us to give the government permission to borrow $14 billion from foreign and domestic sources. The money has to be borrowed. Even at preferred interest rates, to which the government would certainly be entitled, we have to figure on at least 15 per cent interest, and for a loan of $1.47 billion that would require an annual interest and debt charge—hold on to your seat, sir—of $220 million. That is what it would cost us to acquire this company in the first year. We are getting $61 million in profits. That leaves $159 million which we will not have next year to plow into research and development. We would have had that $159 million—or at least that much borrowing power—to put into research and development.

The minister says we will not give these people a cheque, that we will not pay for this in one year, that we will not pay for it right away.

When we talk about foreign companies and multinationals, we usually refer to companies which have their base in the United States, such as Exxon, Standard of California and all those big multinationals which have asserted themselves in such an aggressive way throughout the world. This little company, Petrofina, was actually started by Canadians right here. They had to go to Belgium to get the money to finance their schemes because Canadian banks, the Canadian government and Canadian institutions were not interested. They did not have any faith in our energy future, so the money had to come from Belgium. The company eventually ended up being a Belgian company. The Belgians have no great design with respect to managing our energy future. Belgium is a country just like ours. The Belgians have problems with bilingualism. They have had them much longer than we have, and they have not found any better solutions than we have. Belgium is just a small country.

Not all the shareholders who will receive that $61 million are Belgians, many of them are Canadians. Somehow the whole thing does not make sense. If I were a shareholder of Petrofina, I would say, "If you want my company, pay me cash because I do not trust you to pay me over a period of time." However, I assume that if the government takes control now—and this is what the minister says is happening—then he has to pay the owners of Petrofina interest if he does not pay it to foreign banks or if the money is not being borrowed to give to the shareholders. The investors are the only people who will profit from this scheme. It will do nothing whatever to find any new oil or bring any new oil onstream. It will do nothing to enhance our Canadian control position, particularly in the crucial area where we must assume control, that is, the area of development and exploration.

We do not need more service stations, surely, and we certainly do not need a refinery at which the pipes are rusty and in danger of blowing out at any time. It has already been said that the refinery is in need of some very major repairs or modifications to bring it into line with what is, in today's concept, considered to be a modern refinery.

We have talked about this takeover in the question period for the last couple of days. All of us who have been critical of the government since the energy statement was tabled in the House have been very diligent in watching the newspapers to see what was happening to oil stocks and oil shares. I personally do not have any, but I have been interested because I travelled to my constituency and was told that all of the major companies drilling in the area I represent in northeastern British Columbia have been making plans to leave and move to the United States or spend their money in other areas in the world where there is not the type of government intervention which is now being experienced in our country. The minister denies this is happening. He says there are actually more rigs drilling this year than last year. That may well be true in a small corner of Alberta or Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lalonde: It is true all over.

Mr. Oberle: It is certainly not true in northeastern British Columbia.

Mr. Lalonde: It is true all over.

Mr. Oberle: If the minister says it is true, I of course cannot call him a liar, but he is a stranger to the truth. It is not true in northeastern British Columbia. Rigs are moving out.

We were watching what was happening to the oil economy, and in almost every instance the value of oil shares was dropping, with the exception, curiously, of the shares of Petrofina. They were increasing from $70. They were listed at that price on the market at the time the first telephone calls about the possibility of a takeover were exchanged. When that happened, Petrofina's shares increased in value from $70 to about $85 per share. In the opinion of most experts $85 would have been a good price to pay.

If one wants to make sure that a takeover does not run aground or afoul about half way through, one usually offers a premium. My analysis of the situation would have been that the premium was already paid in that the value of the shares had increased disproportionately with other companies, from $70 to $85. However, I will give the minister the benefit of the doubt and say that $100 would certainly have been a windfall profit to the people who owned Petrofina shares. But the price was not $100; it was $120. The government paid that amount for the shares without—and I am getting back to that—making a serious assessment or commissioning a serious analysis of the real assets of this company.

The minister sits over there and shakes his head. He has been asked about this, and he has admitted to us that the cabinet discussed it. Yes, the members of the cabinet had a thumb sketch assessment of what was happening, but they really did not know what they were buying or how this particular acquisition would help them achieve some of the objectives laid out in the national energy package. There is a lot of anxiety in the industry, and there is good reason for it.

We are saying that the government energy package is just barely catching up with what is happening throughout the world. We are comparing ourselves with Great Britain, the United Kingdom, Norway, and with companies which operate, under government rules and regulations, in the North Sea and in other parts of the world. Also there have been some interesting discussions in committee as to these comparisons.

Since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is present, I should like him to reflect on what I am about to say. If he is really out to smooth the troubled water and to relieve some of the anxiety of industry with respect to the government's future intentions, he should reflect upon this. I am referring to an exchange between a member of the New Democratic Party and the minister. The member referred to the Norwegians insisting on participation in all areas. That is not true at all. I would say they are insisting upon that in some areas. They are not necessarily, as a government or through their national oil company, participating in all ventures. We are insisting upon participation in all ventures on federal land. The member said that in some areas the Norwegians go in with at least 85 per cent public or government ownership. He asked the minister of energy why it would be only 25 per cent here, and the minister said, "We are only just beginning; give us a chance". Certainly these comments are not very prudent or well-designed to ease some of the anxiety and fear of the oil industry with respect to the government's intentions concerning the future of private industry.

Then we criticized the minister and his policy in committee over the business of confiscating the assets of private companies. As far as we can determine, there has never been a precedent in the western world where a government has moved in and confiscated assets retroactively. There cannot be any other interpretation. As a result of the government's energy package—and the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) agreed on the night the budget was presented—from now on Petro-Canada or the government, through its agent Petro-Canada or some other agent, will own 25 per cent of any lease on federal land. There is nothing wrong with that. It is quite true that most countries in the world, except the United States, insist upon some government or public participation in the oil patch. It would be strange if the government, with its particular political orientation, would not follow that precedent.

We would not be as upset with the minister saying that they wanted 25 per cent of the oil patch from here on in; but the minister said, "We are not just insisting upon 25 per cent of what happens from here on in, we are now taking ownership and control of 25 per cent of everything in federal lands." That is not just money paid out for leases or money already spent in terms of exploration, exploratory drilling and those kinds of things. This is money spent and assets put in place to improve these leases. Now the government is in there and is confiscating 25 per cent of these assets, and there is no precedent for that in the western world. So, it does not come as any great surprise that the oil rigs would be lined up at the border. If the minister and his government insist upon following the disastrous course of the energy package, by 1990 there will be not only 50 per cent or 75 per cent government ownership of the oil patch, it will probably be 100 per cent. But it will be 100 per cent of nothing, because the government oil company and Canadian taxpayers do not have the required resources to make us energy self-sufficient by 1990. The conservative estimates range from something like $300 billion to $350 or $400 billion to recapture energy self-sufficiency in the country.

Is the minister saying that the government will bring in a borrowing bill next year for $60, $70 or $80 billion? If that is what he is saying, where will the money come from? What difference does it make who owns our energy if, in order to buy it, we have to sell our souls to foreign owners and bankers? The bankers, to which the government go to mortgage our children's future, profit from this incredibly dangerous scheme.

One thing which really offends me about this bill is that the government is asking for permission to borrow in a currency other than that of Canada and to repay in the currency in which it was borrowed. This means that again government members will be in their executive jets flying to New York, to Zurich or perhaps to the Middle East to see if some of the petrodollars could be recycled.

As I have said many times in the House, these bankers will be asking the same questions a banker asks an individual applying for a loan; what is your ability to repay, what are your assets? The answers are obvious: our assets are our resources, and our ability to pay is our ability to tax and to pass these monstrous costs on to Canadian consumers. I wonder whether government members ever go shopping? Do they show up at supermarkets other than when they are campaigning? Have they ever seen senior citizens walking along the aisles, turning over certain items on the shelves and looking at the prices?

Mr. Lalonde: I do that every weekend.

Mr. Oberle: Have they ever seen what is going on? Are they too heartless to realize that there are people in the country who cannot afford decent shelter or nutritious food for themselves and their children? Those people are now partners in Petrofina. In the very near future when they go to gasoline stations they will pay another 13 cents a gallon because of the purchase of a number of service stations in eastern Canada and a refinery in Montreal.

Mr. Lalonde: Nonsense.

Mr. Oberle: It has been said that the promises of yesterday are the taxes of today. When we talked about the borrowing bill last year, we said that it could not go on like this any longer. Of course we were right then—it did not go on any longer, it got worse.

What will be the end result? What is the limit to which the government will go to mortgage the future of our children and to mortgage our resources? It will cost us $220 million in debt charges to acquire this oil company. Can one imagine what $1.4 billion is, what amount of money that is? It would be literally mind-boggling to calculate how many Canadians would have to spend a lifetime of work to amass that amount of money.

We talk about constitutional reform and we look at other countries in the world for our models. These countries limit their governments through their constitution in the way in which the taxpayers money should be spent.

Since we are writing a new Constitution I think it would be interesting to look at a provision whereby a government may do some deficit financing but only with the consent of Parliament and the people. In a sense, I suppose the government is asking us for our consent here in this bill. They will not receive it from me because, as I said last night, I would be afraid to go home and face my children if I were to stand up in this House and vote for this measure. But since they have the majority they will be getting consent from Parliament to go out and borrow this additional money.

I think what we should be seriously looking at in the future, as we talk about constitutional reform, is the limitation of government borrowing to domestic sectors. There are only so many places from which a government can borrow money and, of course, it only borrows money when the tax collector has worn out his welcome and the population rebels, not wanting to pay more taxes. This government wore out its welcome long ago. Canadians would not stand for another increase in income tax.

I would like to make this point, Mr. Speaker. We are faced with so many hidden taxes today the government really does not have a choice at all but to borrow from banks. It has exhausted the pension funds, the domestic and conventional sources and the domestic banks. The government must now go to foreign banks to beg for more money. That, Sir, should be outlawed in the constitution. It takes money out of the country. It takes resources out of our country. These are resources which are sorely needed in the energy field and which are needed to train our young people to prepare them for the twentieth century and the excitement associated with it. These are resources which are needed to maintain and manage an enlightened domestic program.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about Bill C-59, which, if enacted, would authorize the government to borrow $14 billion for 1981-82.

I begin my remarks by noting, Mr. Speaker, that there is not a single member of the New Democratic Party present in the chamber.

Mr. Knowles: You know better than that!

Mr. Kilgour: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has come into the chamber, but he has had a chance to speak on this bill. I believe no member of the NDP is participating, at least this afternoon, as far as I can see.

Mr. Knowles: Were you here last night?

Mr. Kilgour: We have a new baby at home.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kilgour: I am grateful for the applause, which I am sure is not meant for me. I am also glad that members opposite heckle me now because, believe me, by the time I have finished they will probably have left. They will not like what I am about to say.

I would like to discuss what $14 billion really means. For most of us it is a number with nine zeros, which is completely beyond our comprehension. Let us use a three-bedroom detached home which costs $80,000 as an example. This is obviously more than the average price of homes in some communities and possibly less in others. Unfortunately, it is not an unrealistic price for most people to pay for a home in many parts of Canada today. By my arithmetic, $14 billion would buy 175,000 such homes. Incidentally, 175,000 single family homes, and I stress that, is enough to house eight out of ten people in a city with a population the size of metropolitan Calgary. It would house three out of four people in a city with a population the size of metropolitan Edmonton. It would house eight out of ten people in a city with a population the size of metropolitan Winnipeg, Quebec City or Hamilton. It would house almost 40 per cent of the population of Vancouver. Mr. Speaker, just think how much money that represents.

What we are really talking about in this bill is inflation. An increasing number of Canadians realize that is what we are talking about when we talk in terms of $14 billion. That is why I believe more than 20 state legislatures in the American union have passed proposed constitutional amendments outlawing budgets for their federal government. The people in the United States and in Canada are beginning to realize that deficits resulting from bills such as the one before us are the reason for inflation.

I suggest that a large portion of this $14 billion being asked for by the economic lunatics on the other side of the House will be ultimately printed, or, as they prefer to call it, "monetized", by the Bank of Canada. This will simply push the "on" button for the printing presses of the Bank of Canada. This is how the government covers its deficit. Euphemists call it the monetization of debt. This is what members opposite will do, if they follow their practice of the last eight years. I believe that had the majority of Canadians known what had gone on for the last year, in terms of printing money, they would not have elected a single Liberal MP in any riding in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kilgour: Of course, members opposite know that up to this point in time most Canadians do not know what printing money means. The government continues to rely on the fact that most Canadians do not know what it has been doing to the purchasing power of hard-earned money over the past eight years. What the government prefers to do is say that inflation is the fault of California, Japan, labour unions, business, opposition, and the fault of the member for Winnipeg North Centre. It prefers to blame anyone who is at hand.

I would like to show you what inflation can do to a country. I wish to refer to what happened to the German mark during the Weimar Republic in the 1920s. Many of my constituents are Canadians of German descent and I believe they know I am a strong admirer of what West Germany has done since the Second World War and the lessons it has learned from the kind of economic management members opposite have been giving us for many years.

In my hand, Mr. Speaker, I have a 100 mark note issued in 1908. The next one in this book is a 1,000 mark note issued in 1922. The next is a 5,000 mark note issued in November, 1922. The next is a—

Mr. Lalonde: A five million mark note?

Mr. Oberle: Do you want me to read it for you?

Mr. Kilgour: I wish you would.

• (1630)

The next note is dated November, 1922, and is for 50,000. It is getting more interesting. Here is one for February, 1923, which is for 100,000 marks. On October, 1923, a note for 100 million marks was introduced. The next one, dated December, 1922 is—what is "milliard"?

Mr. Oberle: Billion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It may be useful for the hon. member to refer to certain documents, but there are certain limits in terms of how much others can participate to assist in an hon. member's speech.

Mr. Kilgour: Very well, Mr. Speaker. My friend tells me that the word means billion. My friends opposite will be happy to know that this is the last bill. It came out in October, 1923, and is for 20 billion marks. I hope it is clear that there is not much humour to be found in what I have just said. If the government continues with what it is doing, this same situation could result in Canada. Hyper-inflation destroyed Germany's economy, its middle class, and we all know to what it led.

A West German economist who had studied the period between 1963 and 1973 said that of 40 countries which had inflation rates exceeding 15 per cent, 38 had abolished their democratic institutions in one way or another. This is a recent study. The big winners in a period of economic inflation are the speculators, those who are lucky, and rarely is it those who work hard. Home owners win and renters lose. People who own gold win while those who own dollars lose.

On January 5, or January 6, it was announced that the Bank of Canada had no choice but to borrow $900 million in the previous year to prop up our dollar. The interest on $900 million runs to about $400,000 per day. I maintain that the bank could have taken a different route by allowing the dollar to slide. Perhaps Canada would have imported fewer vegetables from Florida or California, but by doing this it might have cost Canada less than $400,000 per day, which is only the interest on the loan.

I believe it can be safely said that the government will simply print a good portion of that $400,000. This will have the ultimate effect of adding to the deficit. In other words, when the anti-energy policy of the government—and I see that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has left, although I had not expected him to stay long—runs up bills, buying oil on the world market the government will simply pay them by printing additional money.

Having regard to what I call the anti-energy policy introduced by the government on October 28 it will mean the loss of 40,000 jobs by spring, according to the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors. This association believes that 11,360 jobs have been lost since the introduction of this infamous anti-energy policy, and that by March it will mean the loss of 28,000 jobs in steel mills and auto plants found mainly in central Canada. Let us look at the cost of carrying 40,000 people on unemployment for one year. I am told by my deskmate, the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), that the maximum UIC benefit is $180 per week. If we multiply $720 per month by 40,000 jobs, we arrive at the figure of $336 million.

This expense is the direct result of the policies of the government. Canadian oil producers estimate that the budget will cause a reduction in oil drilling of 35 per cent in 1981. In other words, instead of 9,000 wells being drilled, as was the case last year, the figure will drop to 5,800 wells, a drop of 35 per cent, and will result in the loss of 30,000 jobs.

I was informed by a person in the oil industry that as of January 15, 38 rigs had left Canada for the United States. It requires 30 trucks to move one rig. One rig generates about $1.4 million per year in spin-off revenue. I was also informed that 134 rigs are not working. This means that only 400 of a total of 600 rigs are now active in western Canada. The minister of energy tries to tell us day after day what his figures show. I do not know what his figures show, but the word for describing what the minister tries to tell this House day after day is the word "show" in the context the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) used it the other day.

Canada takes up half a continent and is compromised of 24 million people. This country buys approximately 430,000 barrels of oil per day on the world market. It is obscene that Canada must outbid Third World countries for oil at a time when the Prime Minister is so devoted to his North-South dialogue he is travelling about discussing the problems of the underdeveloped world. I recently had the good fortune to attend a United Nations Congress on Crime. A speaker from the Third World made the comment that he felt it was a crime the so-called developed world would outbid Third World countries for oil on the world market.

I do not believe there is a person in this country who does not realize the government's policy will increase Canada's dependency on world oil. This can only have a detrimental effect on Third World countries. So when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) said, I believe, on January 12—and the crocodile tears were flowing from his eyes—that Third World countries would be required to spend all their hard currency on oil instead of development, it made me, with respect, Mr. Speaker, want to vomit.

Hon. members opposite clearly worship John Maynard Keynes as an idol. They have followed his demand-stimulus policies for many years, policies which I submit have been shown to be no longer workable. It is time hon. members opposite revised their thinking.

In the recent budget statement the Minister of Finance spoke of fighting inflation. The budget statement was clearly based on the premise that most Canadians would not notice on the one hand the causal connection of rising prices and interest rates, the increased budgetary deficit, more unemployment, loss of investment—obviously in the energy industry—the worsened over-all trade deficit, the falling dollar and on the other hand the new oceans of fresh currency the government will continue to force the Bank of Canada to print in order to cope with its ever-increasing debt.

The free world's most successful economies have made the transition from the realities of the post-Keynesian energy conserver age. Ironically, the three that have no oil whatsoever, West Germany, Japan and Switzerland, are experiencing, on a relative basis today, the least inflation, the least unemployment, the lowest interest rates and the greatest success in coping with the balance of payments problems and the other economic problems that hurt many Canadians so acutely.

In January, 4,500 Swiss residents were unemployed, or .2 per cent of the working population. That country has taken a strong stand on inflation for many years and, as a result of its monetary and fiscal policy, inflation stands at 3.6 per cent compared to approximately 11 per cent in Canada.

The government proposes to spend $1.4 billion or $120 per share to buy Petrofina. As I understand it, Petrofina owns 1,000 service stations; a 5 per cent interest in Syncrude; a slightly larger interest in the Alsands plant which, of course, has been suspended because of the unacceptable energy policy, and it also has some unexplored frontier land. Incidentally, Mr. Pierre Nadeau, chief executive officer of the company, has resigned because he will not work for a Crown corporation. That is one example of unemployment as a result of the energy policy. The founder of the company, Mr. Alfredo Campo said that the price is so far beyond what any other company would pay for it or what the market is indicating, that he wondered how it made sense. It only makes sense if you are using other people's money, or money printed for the purchase, over and above what can be taken from the Canadian consumer.

The budget mentioned inflation but had absolutely nothing to say about solving the problem of the steadily rising deficit. It is predicted that the deficit for next year will increase by $3.5 billion to a total of $15 or $16 billion. In the west we call that sucking and blowing simultaneously. It is a hard thing to do and it will be even harder for the Minister of Finance to do it. In the east it may be called walking both sides of the street, but in the west we call it sucking and blowing simultaneously.

A request to this House for authority to borrow $14 billion is just another indication of the government's bankrupt economic policy. It is, I believe, the reason there are more than one million unemployed Canadians; it is the reason that inflation is in the order of 11 per cent; it is the reason our dollar recently stood at a 50-year lowpoint; it is the reason that investment capital is leaving the country and has been leaving for the last two or three years at a substantial rate; it is the reason for many people leaving Canada; it is certainly the reason for the oil industry being invited to leave, and I maintain it is the reason hon. members opposite constantly talk about things such as the Constitution. They know perfectly well that nothing can be done about the economy while they try to tear the country apart.

Just yesterday I received a phone call from someone in Quebec telling me that two stores had closed down in the community, presumably because of insolvency or bankruptcy. This is another reason the country has so many economic and social difficulties. Diluting or inflating the currency is not a good place to start and we should recognize that.

I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the November 4, 1980, issue of The Canadian Journal of Economics by Thomas J. Courchene, a professor at the University of Western Ontario. At page 559 he writes:

> Moreover, with the decline of the market system as a co-ordinating institution, the regulation of social and economic activity becomes progressively more personalized and paternalistic. The logical culmination of the protected society scenario is aptly captured by Edward Gibbon's comment, albeit in a different context, in the fall of Athenian democracy; "in the end they valued security more than they valued freedom, and they lost both".

He gives an example of what inflation does to people on page 569. Referring to 1974, he writes:

> Yet the bank rate remained at 7.25 per cent. Individuals began to scramble in order to hedge themselves against the ravages of inflation, and not surprisingly, the most obvious and convenient hedge was the housing market. As a result, housing prices jumped precipitately in the first quarter of 1974. Dreams were shattered, substantial wealth transfers occurred, and the market as an allocative mechanism was called into question.

Further down on the same page he writes:

> There is no question in my mind that experience with inflation has convinced a goodly number of Canadians that political rather than market allocative mechanisms are preferable across an increasingly broad range of goods and services.

● (1650)

It is my belief and it is, I believe, the view of an increasing number of Canadians that there is not enough difference between the economic policies of the federal Liberal Party and the federal New Democratic Party to stick in a very small thimble. I maintain that the present government is more irresponsible in terms of economic policy than is the New Democratic Party, for instance, in the province of Saskatchewan. Hon. members may ask why. The New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan does not run a deficit—I believe there was a minor one last year—at least not in the magnitude of $15 billion or $16 billion, which we are talking about next year. The New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan has some sense. I do not think they are financially responsive, to the kind of policy we are getting from this government and have had from this government for many years, or what it is doing to the least protected members of society. I am, of course, including the pensioners. They are the readily identifiable group.

A constituent came to see me about a month ago. He was a pensioner from the CNR. He and his wife receive a small pension from the CNR, the old age security and the guaranteed income supplement. Between the two of them, after paying rent in a city-owned house, light, gas and so on, at the end of every month they have $108 left to pay for their transportation, food and clothing. There is not a member in this House who does not know what government created inflation does to people on low incomes and unprotected members of society. It is an outrageous situation and more and more Canadians are becoming quite desperate about it. I submit it has to stop.

We hear people asking why Canada is becoming so deindustrialized. Professor Innis pointed out sadly that Canada is one of the few countries in the world to go from being a colony to a nation to a colony. That is a tragedy for this country. I believe it is a tragedy created by the economic, fiscal and monetary policies of the present government. May I ask how much time remains, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has 12 minutes.

Mr. Kilgour: I submit that unless we do something about inflation some of our basic democratic institutions will be in considerable danger. People lose confidence in those institutions during a period of inflation. In 38 out of 40 countries it was demonstrated that democracy is endangered when the purchasing power of the dollar is eroded.

My plea to the government is, start listening to people who have a sense of contact with ordinary Canadians who suffer because of inflation. If the government speaks to those people, virtually without exception, they will hear that unless something is done about fiscal and monetary policy, Canada and its very future as a country will be endangered. As a small act of protest against what has gone on in Canada for so many years, when this bill comes up for a vote, I intend to vote against it and I urge others to do likewise.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on the one hand, I am pleased to have an opportunity to debate Bill C-59, but on the other, its contents raise a number of concerns in my mind.

I have spent the last few days in my home riding touring a variety of municipalities and travelling throughout some of the rural areas. I have spoken to people from various chambers of commerce, to people in the trade union movement and to individuals at various community functions. A number of questions kept coming up. Some people referred to the state of the constitutional debate and some referred to the general state of affairs in Ottawa. Inevitably, people would ask what we were debating in the House of Commons these days. They asked what the topic was before us and what the government was asking us to support. When I told them that we would be debating Bill C-59, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, an act asking for authority to borrow $14 billion at this point in time for a variety of public works and general purposes, the response was predictable. It was the same, no matter the source whether it was a chamber of commerce meeting, a trade union meeting or whether it was from folks on the streets in the various small towns.

People always asked what on earth the government was going to use the $14 billion for. There was some embarrassment on my part because I had to tell them that it was not clear what the government was going to be using it for or how the money would benefit men, women and young people in the constituency. Worse than that, I had to say that out of this request to borrow $14 billion, $3 billion of it was to be set aside as a contingency. In other words, the government would have to wait and see what will happen. Probably the $3 billion would be required, but at this time the government could not account for it. As for the remaining $11 billion, there was some rather vague plan provided on behalf of the government. I want to emphasize it is a "vague plan" at best.

Then a thought occurred to me. What would happen if an individual from any part of Canada were to walk into his bank and ask to borrow $14,000 for a new luxury car or perhaps to start a business of some kind? The banker would probably ask how the money would be used. What if the individual said he had some vague notions about $11,000 of it, which are not very sophisticated or profound? He might think that a lot of people would not support the request. As for the $3,000 he would tell the banker that he was not certain what he was going to do with it, but he wanted it standing by in case of some contingency. It would be some banker who would say, "That is the kind of thing we like to support. That is the kind of request that we would like to honour." I suspect the individual would be going to a variety of bank branch offices and ending up at the FBDB, and he would probably be rejected by them as well.

Last July I believe we were asked to give the government authority to borrow $12 billion. Again, it was without any clear indication of how that $12 billion would be used. Needless to say there was reluctance on this side of the House to endorse and support that request. It is perfectly clear that Canada is facing some serious economic, social and political problems.

The social fabric of this country is being torn apart; west against east, new Canadian against the traditional Canadian, provincial parties against federal parties and French-speaking against English-speaking. There are social problems in the fields of housing, pensions and health care let alone the economic problems which are becoming increasingly more serious every day. This is what alarms many of us who have spoken during this debate. There is the tragedy of a changing economic world and what appears to be the inability of this government to come to grips with it.

With all due respect to my colleagues on my right, I am not encouraged by much of what I have heard and read in their speeches up to this point. They seem to be living up to the last half of their name, conservative, living with principles which perhaps were applicable a number of years ago, but are difficult to apply to the rapid changes occurring in the world economy today and with what ought to be happening here in Canada. Similar serious concerns can be levied against the Liberal government. What indication do we see that the government is coming to grips with inflation and the serious unemployment situation in this country? I will stay with the unemployment situation for a moment or two.

One of the tragedies of Canadian society of late is that the Liberal government has been able to convince a large number of Canadians that an unemployment rate of 6 per cent, 7 per cent and 8 per cent is acceptable. The government believes that is something we must live with. Many times members across the way and others in the Liberal party have said that we must bite the bullet. That is an unfortunate attitude for a government, and especially for a country. A country as rich as Canada should not have to accept such a high rate of unemployment.

The situation is very grave in many parts of Canada. In some constituencies, many represented by Liberals, the unemployment rate is in the 35 per cent to 40 per cent range. In some communities in my constituency, the rate is reaching 12 per cent and 12½ per cent.

We hear talk about one million Canadians being unemployed. Most of these people would love to have a job. They would love to work and be part of the productivity of Canada. However, they do not have the opportunity to do so, largely because this government is not keeping step with the economy as it moves along. As a result, our competitive edge in world markets is declining. Our productivity is declining and jobs are evaporating on a daily basis, and with those jobs go the hopes of many Canadians.

I have been attached to the school system in a variety of ways over the years. I am not pleased with the attitude of our youngsters who are graduating from vocational and technical schools of one kind or another. There simply are not jobs for them. It is a very serious situation.

When discussing unemployment in this House, we often do so in terms of percentage points, 8 per cent, 10 per cent or 25 per cent, or in terms of absolute numbers such as 987,000 or 1.4 million people out of work. It is very easy to speak of unemployment in those terms. What about the social side of the unemployment equation?

An hon. Member: The human cost.

Mr. Riis: Yes, what about the human costs of unemployment in this country? Studies in Ontario indicate that in 80 per cent of families experiencing wife beating, it can be related directly to unemployment. The increasing phenomena of child beating is related to unemployment, as is a percentage of suicides and the number of those entering our mental institutions. A certain percentage of alcoholism problems and family breakdowns can be attributed directly to the increasing unemployment in this and other countries.

No one will say it is a causal relationship, but when measuring the costs of unemployment we must measure more than the unemployment insurance cost and the cost of welfare. We should start measuring the costs of alcoholism, family breakdown and hospitalization of those with a variety of ailments, including those in mental institutions. We simply cannot afford to ignore these costs any longer.

What is the cost of unemployment in terms of young people being caught up in the lack of opportunities for Canada's future? Cynicism is growing among our young people today. That will not do any good for this country. It is not news that there are serious problems in Canada. We are well aware of the serious ailments in various sectors of our society. Members have offered a variety of solutions.

One approach suggested by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) a number of months ago bears repeating. As financial spokesman for the NDP, he said it is time that we in Canada clearly differentiate between two kinds of government spending. With all due respect to my colleagues on the right, they seem to have a blind obsession with the deficit, that the ideal is to balance the books and have no deficit at all. While that may be a fine ideal, it is not an acceptable approach. It is too simplistic. It is not in tune with the financial world of the eighties and nineties. Perhaps to give them credit, steps must be taken to reduce the deficit in Canada.

We must begin to reduce government spending in a variety of areas. I suspect we could lop off hundreds of millions of dollars in a variety of areas and no one in Canada would notice. Some time ago members received notice that a game was available which they could send to their constituents. The motivation was good. The game was to introduce young Canadians to the fact that this is not the only country in the world with two official languages. Others have many more than we do. However, spending millions of dollars on that project at this time makes one wonder whether that is wise government spending.

One could identify some of the big errors such as Mirabel airport. It is an obvious white elephant that must be an embarrassment to the government. The motivation may have been correct, but it was an error. The guaranteeing of massive loans to firms like Chrysler, is an error, again recognizing positive motivation, but surely when we have seen the mismanagement associated with Chrysler, the irrational structure of that industry, to simply shore that up as a simplistic way of achieving any resolution to our serious economic problems in Canada is rather irresponsible government spending, I would suggest. One looks at many of the dollars spent in parts of Canada on DREE projects, and I do not wish to criticize DREE per se because the motivation is a positive one and people are obviously trying to improve the situation. What is often created are vast sums of money going into provinces, mainly in central and eastern Canada, resulting in economic enterprises which are not viable, rational and economic enterprises, but they do create jobs in their artificial way. They give the illusion of a sound economy. They give to the people of the communities in which they are located the sense that indeed the economy is emerging and is growing.

After looking at these jobs we find they are created in an extremely artificial and forced way. There is also the question of how long they last? They keep people's interest, they keep their hopes up often only to have them dashed later because a project cannot maintain itself in any realistic way at all.

Then there is the government spending on the constitutional proposal, and hopefully the government will not foolishly spend taxpayers' money in an effort to propagandize one party's position on this very crucial matter. If they do, again we will have to say that is not the responsible way to be spending the budget of Canada.

If one goes back, we recognize that the government spends money in two ways. One is government spending, often irrational but sometimes, however, necessary. We are committed to medicare, we are committed to paying pensions, we are committed to a variety of areas to maintain the basic services and quality of Canadian life. Perhaps there are a number of other health areas, more assistance to seniors and so on, which would be appropriate in the 1980s. Let us also recognize that there is government investment.

I think it is important that, during these times when we are under a great deal of pressure, we reduce the deficit and cutback on government spending. Let us not blindly cut back on government spending for the sake of cutting back. Rather, let us look and see where we can invest in the future of this country.

When a businessman invests his money, it is not called spending, it is called investing. When hon. members purchase a home they are not spending money, they are investing their money. They are investing in the future for themselves and their families. I ask the government to consider what we would advocate on this side of the House, namely, serious strategies, serious plans which would result in a productive Canada and in real jobs rather than artificial job-creation programs which we too often see—the "blips" and "flips" and so on, which again create an illusion of jobs and prosperity but nothing in reality.

What are some of these investments which we on this side of the House would like to see the government consider seriously? One, of course, which is required in a country like ours, with a society like ours living in the competitive world as we do, is research and development. University presidents across the country, principals of trade, vocational and technical schools and the school system per se are saying the same thing; we should invest in the future of this country. One of the ways to invest in the future is to provide more money, more support and more encouragement for research and development for both the private and public sector.

What frightens us is when we hear from reliable sources that the cabinet is not considering spending for the development of Canada but is actually considering cutting back. There is a cutback of $1.5 billion in the field of post-secondary education. If that would not be a backward step, I am sure none of us would be able to identify one. I guess we are confident that sane heads will prevail in Canada, that no cutbacks will occur and perhaps more money can be spent in the field of research and development to assist our institutions and businesses across the country to expand and explore new ways and means of making Canada better.

It is a sorry sight when we look at our track record up to this point. The goal is an admirable goal, to shoot for a 1.5 per cent of the GNP for research and development. That is honourable and respectable and I hope we can see that very soon. Now we are hearing cautionary remarks that this might not be attainable before 1985. That is a long way off in many respects. We are also considering cutbacks in the field, and this is not the kind of encouragement the scientific and technical communities of Canada want to hear. The problem regarding this entire matter is that if the government was to make a commitment today to spend an additional half a billion dollars on research and development we would not begin to receive the results of that for a number of years. If that decision is made today it will take five or six years before we begin to see the benefits of that investment. This makes it clear that haste is in order and that an early decision and an early commitment is in order. I suppose it is the difference between planting small seedlings for an orchard and collecting the fruit seven years later or seeding a crop of potatoes and collecting the crop a few months later. When we speak of research and development we are talking about sometime in the future. Therefore, the earlier the decision the better.

We could speak of and identify a whole variety of ways for investing in Canada's future. The kind of components we would like to see built into an industrial strategy as a blueprint for Canada's economic future and some guidelines and some parameters, electrification for Canadian railroads. Surely if there is a country in the world which should be utilizing its hydroelectric potential to the utmost, it has to be ours. A similar country in geography and in size is the Soviet Union. The U.S.S.R. surely has taken advantage of its edge in this energy field and has now begun and is well into a vast program of electrifying its railroad system. The cheapest kind of power and the most efficient way to move goods is surely the kind of thing Canada needs at this point as well.

Then there is the whole matter of small business. I know the hon. minister opposite is serious about Canadian small business, but he does not seem to act very quickly or to take the necessary steps to show the Canadian small business community that he is serious.

An hon. Member: What about the bond?

Mr. Riis: Yes, indeed that is one small step for small business. Indeed, there is a study being undertaken now to examine financial possibilities for the Canadian business community. The motivation, as always, is positive and good. The study has been underway for a number of months and presumably will continue for some months. It will then come back for analysis and study, and then presentation to the House. Therefore, we are looking at many, many months down the road before anything can possibly come from that. However, I recognize and admit that it is a step in the right direction. That is why I listened with some horror. Perhaps "horror" is too strong a term for colleagues to my right. They refer to the need for government to extract itself from the business and financial world and to let the private sector do it on its own.

They are quick to point out where problems exist. Problems do exist; one would be silly not to admit that, but let us look at some of the most progressive countries in the world and at their economic systems. One of the most successful countries is Japan. Are my friends to my right, the Tories, prepared to say that the government of Japan has a hands-off approach regarding business in that country? Of course not; there is a relationship and a liaison between those two sectors which is extremely sophisticated. Business in Japan does not move without the recognition, concurrence, support and co-operation of government. Japan is not a socialist country by any stretch of the imagination, but it is an example of a sound economy. The private and public sectors work co-operatively in the best interests of the Japanese and Japan.

When we think of the business sector of Japan, we ought to think of large firms such as Honda, but when we look into the fabric of business in Japan, we find that eight out of ten businesses in Japan are classified small and medium-sized businesses. Eight out of ten businesses in Japan are run by small entrepreneurs. These businesses include small shops and small plants, not the large and grandiose operations most of us probably think about when we think about Japan. Yes, in Japan it is in the small business sector where jobs are created. That sector responds to the needs of society quickly and in an innovative and creative way with the support of government. This is a very important phenomenon which my friends to the right must accept. They simply must not abandon that whole concept in their discussions.

We should look at other prosperous countries such as West Germany which, again, is a country with a long tradition of government participation. We would be hard pressed to identify operations in that country which are not going very well, indeed. It is a successful land with a successful and stable economy. That is the type of country we should be looking to as a model for the type of industrial strategy and productivity building we should have in our country.

My hon. colleagues to my right hold up as an example that bastion of free enterprise to the south, the United States, and point out that the economy of the United States operates without government participation and government involvement. I suggest if they look closely at the United States economy, large business and small business alike, they will find that government and business are extremely closely interwoven.

There is a military industrial complex in the United States. The military plays a very crucial role in what is happening in various parts of the United States. I listened with interest when Ronald Reagan spoke about the wonderful world the military will create. He is a leader who is obviously catering to more growth in armaments, and the result will be a "better" society in the United States! That is a sorry comment, perhaps, but nevertheless I think it demonstrates very clearly the very close relationship government, industry and business have even in that bastion of free enterprise called the U.S.A.

Some serious problems exist. The thought of going out and in a sense blindly borrowing $14 billion poses many questions. It certainly must cause some concern.

This is a small item, perhaps, but one notices in various publications across the country these days reference to a Government of Canada bond issue valued at $1 billion or $1.2 billion. The Bank of Canada has agreed to acquire a minimum of $315 million of this particular issue. Government bonds are being sold to the Bank of Canada. When we start looking at some of the implications of that kind of financial transaction, it becomes very clear that if we are buying our own bonds, we are in serious difficulties financially.

Many previous speakers have outlined the problems associated with foreign borrowing, the extent to which we are becoming indebted to foreign banks and foreign lending institutions and the obvious problems that will create in a country like Canada.

We in the New Democratic Party appreciate the need for government to work co-operatively with the public and private sectors. There is a need for government to work with the private sector to ensure that investment is made in the best interests of Canadians. In Canada we are essentially encouraged—and perhaps even required—to do that more than in other countries.

Let me give a couple of reasons for saying that. One of the growing industries in Canada today is the tourist industry. Tourism is a growth industry. Many provinces are now saying it will become their number two industry very quickly in terms of generating dollars for their populations. The Government of Canada too has recognized the role of tourism and what it can mean to the Canadian economy. The federal government is taking a number of steps to move positively in that direction.

One of the problems the tourist industry faces is climate. There is a number of ski hill operators in my constituency and, if it does not snow in the wintertime for one or two seasons, they have serious problems. Large capital investments are made on lift gear, chalets and so forth, and if there is no snow for just a few weeks of the year serious problems arise.

Mr. Lapointe: Is the Liberal Party responsible for that too?

Mr. Riis: I would not say the Liberal Party is responsible for the weather. I certainly would not blame the Liberal Party for that.

Let me go on to other tourist-related industries such as holiday resorts, beaches and so forth which depend very much on the weather. Various fishing camps and recreation areas in the north depend on weather to a crucial extent. In other words, risk is extremely high. I suspect that often the traditional lending institutions of Canada are not enthusiastic about supporting high risk tourist-oriented projects. Therein lies the need for government programs at both provincial and federal levels. There is a need for risk and venture capital for entrepreneurs who are prepared to try new ideas for attracting tourists into Canada and for creating new jobs in the tourist sector. The traditional conservative lending institutions are reluctant to participate in such ventures. If we are to see growth in this very sensitive and risky area, there will have to be co-operation between government and the private sector to see that this evolves in a positive way.

Difficulties are also created by the vast Canadian geography. It is often necessary to move goods and services over vast distances in order to develop difficult resource deposits and to move finished and unfinished products over vast distances. My friends in the Tory party would say that the private sector can easily take care of all that. Quite frankly, I doubt that. I doubt if we could find many countries in the world which are making serious breakthroughs in resource development today in which there is not serious government participation with the private sector.

I listened with interest the other night to an hon. member saying that Brazil is making a tremendous breakthrough in resource development. Indeed it is, but I know enough about Brazil to know that the private sector in Brazil is not doing that on its own; it is certainly depending on the participation of the Brazilian government.

In Canada we have an economic system which has always been colonial in structure. It was designed to provide raw materials for manufacturing and finishing elsewhere. By and large that same phenomenon exists in Canada today.

Earlier today during question period I listened with interest when the government, in a sense, was proud of its arrangements with the province of British Columbia to extract coal from northeastern British Columbia to be sent away for processing into coke and used as a power source in the generation of finished products. It is the perpetuation of the old tradition—get it out of the ground, get rid of it as quickly as possible, hopefully get some half-decent return, and we are happy. It is the hewers of wood and drawers of water syndrome.

This begs the question: could we not as Canadians, with our iron ore and coal, the ability for coal liquefaction and a variety of other options, develop those coal beds in a more sophisticated and economic way, rather than simply digging it out and shipping it out as quickly as possible, and perhaps even paying more for it than we are asking the Japanese to pay?

There is a need for an industrial strategy. Some people will like it a bit more than others, but some people will abhor the idea of government participation in the economic system. Yet, it is a reality today in Canada and in virtually every other country. The best thing the Government of Canada could do today is bring into the House as quickly as possible a serious and sophisticated economic strategy which, once and for all, would be a dynamic document. Of course it would have to be a dynamic document because of changing times. It would point out to business, to industry and to individuals across the country a blue print of how we would like to see Canada develop within the next number of years; it would take advantage of our strengths.

We have immense and considerable strengths and advantages in the country. We have accessible and relatively inexpensive energy. This must be a crucial factor as we attempt to become competitive in a number of ways with the rest of the world. We have a well-educated and skilled populace and the ability to improve easily upon that.

We talk about some of the major resource projects being planned for western Canada. These projects ought to be occurring right now in western Canada, but they are not, for political reasons. We lack the appropriate skilled work force, but we have the system in place. We have the schools—the trade schools, vocational schools, technical schools and universities. If we had the will and commitment, we could provide skilled workers, scientists and artisans. This goes back to the research and development commitment, the commitment to move in that direction.

We have available capital. Capital does not flow easily into other countries of the world, but it does in Canada. People in all corners of the world know that Canada is a safe, stable and good place in which to invest money. We need a strategy to focus that capital into the most positive areas. We have the expertise, the wealth, the size and the resources.

We do not have something which many of the countries have, but it works to our advantage. Many other countries are hindered by old cultural, language, work, family and political traditions. They really hinder creative and innovative economic development. Canada is a youthful country. Most of us can trace back our families only 100, 200 or 300 years, compared to the people in many countries who can trace back their families thousands and thousands of years. We are fortunate that we are not hindered by these old traditions.

In closing, let me say, we have to oppose this particular bill because we do not have faith that the government knows what it is doing at this point. It does not have a blue print for the future, nor can it tell us with any assurance how it will spend that money in the best interests of Canadians. The opportunity is there. All we need is the will to do it. At this point in time we have difficulty supporting Bill C-59.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to participate in this debate.

Mr. Knowles: Oh, what is this?

Mr. Pinard: I should like to say a few words on Bill C-59, to provide a supplementary borrowing authority. A tradition has developed over past years, and it seems that to succeed in approving such a bill at second reading stage the government has been required to give notice of limitation of debate under Standing Order 75C. This was also true with the former government in which my good friend, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), was the government House leader. Even if I am a reformist by nature, sometimes I follow traditions.

We have already spent five days on second reading of this bill, and we will have to spend at least one more day. As I said previously—and I want to be consistent—with the heavy workload we are facing, it is impossible to allot more than five, six or seven days for this bill if we want to assume our responsibilities to the people of this country.

Therefore, I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among the representatives of the parties and it has not been possible to reach an agreement under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or Standing Order 75B in respect of the proceedings at second reading stage of Bill C-59, to provide a supplementary borrowing authority. I wish to give notice that at the next sitting of the House I shall propose a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 75C, to allocate one additional sitting day for second reading stage of the said bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: Shame.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Shame.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my first notation for use in this speech was to discuss the House going downhill. It is rather ironic that my contribution should be preceded by another movement of closure by the group opposite. One could not have dreamed that the House of Commons could be demeaned in the way the government has managed to do it in the last few months. It has seized every opportunity to deny the privileges of members of the House with its consistent refusal to co-operate or to afford the usual respect members generally have for each other. It is symptomatic of what is wrong with the House and the country.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) inferred that we are not respecting the right of hon. members to speak and that we are refusing to negotiate the length of time for this debate, I must intervene to invite him to read carefully Standing Order 75A and Standing Order 75B.

I had an obligation to negotiate a reasonable length of time with his House leader. It was impossible to agree on any reasonable length of time, therefore I had to give notice of limiting the debate. I wanted to reach an agreement on a length of time which could have been more than one day, but it was impossible to reach such an agreement. I am not blaming his House leader for that; he may have his reasons. But I want the hon. member to be fair. He must understand that this is not closure, as he said. It is a limitation of time which came after a serious effort to reach an agreement on what would have been a reasonable additional length of time. I invite the hon. member to read carefully sections 75A and 75B. If he wishes to be honest, as he has always been in the past, he will recognize that our intention is not to limit his own right of speech—in fact, he is speaking now—but it is to try to have this place work in an orderly fashion.

Mr. McKinnon: I will be glad enough to read 75A, B and C. Perhaps the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) will read the meaning of the word "negotiate". We have run into that word quite frequently recently. This government was going to "negotiate" with the provinces. Unfortunately for the provinces, they were given a document which showed what the government's idea of negotiation was; it was to set them up so that a sham conference could be held which would end in failure. That is this government's idea of negotiating. The negotiating always seems to end in closure. Whether it is called time allocation or by any other name, it still means closure.

I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on his speech. I thought he spent a great deal of time preparing it. I am sorry he fell prey to the NDP paranoia about the United States. Coming from B.C. I have become quite accustomed to that. I think his speech, and the bad case he had to present, was very well presented.

Before I go back to my original remarks, Mr. Speaker, I intend to talk for a little while about the situation in the House. Some of the things which have happened lately have caused me a certain amount of distress. I wish to say something about the way this government spends money, about Bill C-59, of course, and the purchase of Petrofina. Then I wish to talk about the expenditure of money in the Department of National Defence.

Yesterday I had lunch with a very distinguished journalist of some 30 years standing. I believe he told me he had been through some 11 election campaigns. His name is Vic Mackie and I believe he has a great many friends on all sides of the House. He is a competent, reliable and well-regarded journalist. He said that in his 30 years he had watched the gradual decline of the House of Commons to its present level, which is lower than it has ever been. I am sorry to say that I have only been here eight years but certainly it has been downhill all the way in so far as parliamentary procedures, debate and the importance of this chamber is concerned.

The mistrust between the sides of the House is of concern to me. There are many new synonyms for not telling the truth. Other people call this lying but we are not allowed to do so. We now have "tongue in cheek", which is a synonym for lying. "Less than candid" is another synonym for lying. "Putting on a brave front" is another synonym for lying. "Being on show" is another synonym for lying. These are all phrases which have been used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when it has been found that he is saying things which are quite the opposite at different times.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) came up with a new one yesterday. I believe it had to do with whether or not he had asked the Prime Minister of Great Britain to lay on a three-line whip, or maybe it had to do with whether she had decided she would. But it turned out that she had not said any such thing. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that he was being "rhetorical". This kind of sleazy deception goes on until the whole place loses in reputation.

I often think that we are very careful about deceiving the House. I think it was the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate of several years ago who argued with then Speaker Lamoureux about whether he should be banished from the House or punished in some other way for saying that a person had deliberately deceived the House, or lied to the House. It appeared all right to say that an hon. member had deceived the House, provided he did not do it deliberately. Of course, sometimes you can forgive a guy for deceiving the House because no one believes him any more. We are probably reaching that stage with this government.

I would like to point out something that happened here last week in this regard. The hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) asked the Prime Minister a question about nuclear weapons. The Prime Minister in his response said:

—the hon. member knows the government's position on atomic weapons of any kind and we have stated that we would not use them and they would not be deployed on our soil.

That is a fairly simple statement, Mr. Speaker:

—we would not use them and they would not be deployed on our soil.

The only problem is that it is untrue. That remark would clearly leave the impression that we do not have any atomic weapons of any kind on our soil.

I managed to get in a supplementary question a little later that same day. I asked the Prime Minister:

Does this mean that nuclear weapons have been removed from Comox, where they have been on our soil for over a decade?

Listen carefully to the Prime Minister's answer, which follows:

Madam Speaker, I thought the policy was made clear when we were discussing F-18. The F-18 will be the new fighter aircraft in Canada, and it is not designed to carry nuclear weapons.

This does not answer the question, Mr. Speaker. It leaves the House still in its deceived state that there are no atomic weapons on our soil. As a result of that, I had to ask another question, which was:

Is he now informing the House, or did he, a few minutes ago, that the nuclear weapons which are on site in Comox at the present time have been removed?

The answer finally came from the Prime Minister:

We have stated repeatedly that our policy is to remove the nuclear weapons, but until the F-18 is in place they will not be removed.

This is the kind of cheap, sleazy little trick that gives this place a bad name.

A great many people who did not see the House on television before, are seeing it now. They did not know what was going on. They are puzzled by this lack of ability to give a straight answer. Why not give a straight answer? Eventually it comes out. I think there is an advantage to the government in not giving a straight answer, in that it usually requires another question and one uses up the allotted time. It is rather like a football team trying to maintain possession when they are one point ahead, by using up time. Sometimes I think that is why this government loves to give so many deceptive answers.

I would like to mention another item with respect to this issue which rather concerns me because it happened with what had been up until now a fairly good minister, in terms of replying to questions. I asked the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) on February 5, 1981, just six days ago, about the F-18 fighter contract, which is a matter of great concern in this country for a variety of reasons. One of the reasons is that there is a strong suspicion that McDonnell Douglas are not fulfilling the terms of the contract. The contract said they would provide $83 million worth of new work in 1980 and also in 1981. These were calendar years. When I asked the Minister of Supply and Services if they had fulfilled it he said:

—I am not in a position to advise the hon. gentleman if the specific commitment relating to the KC-10 and the DC-10 in terms of the time frame envisaged by Milestone 6 would entitle the full payment at that particular time. I will review the question of whether the payment has been made, and advise the hon. gentleman.

This matter is really of concern to me since here is a minister who is in charge of that contract. It is his responsibility to oversee it. It is a contract that runs into billions of dollars. McDonnell Douglas were supposed to supply $83 million of new work. Everybody in the area of the plant in Toronto is unhappy about the lay-offs which have occurred there. We have had paraders on the hill, yet the minister says he does not know whether they have fulfilled their obligation, whether they have paid the money or what they have done. In that same response the minister goes on to say:

I will advise him as well about the conditions that were met. I can tell the hon. gentleman that, to the best of my knowledge, the payments that have been made are in accordance with the terms of the contract—

That reply was given six days ago. The last time I asked this question was three months ago. These milestones seem to come up about every three months. When I asked the question three months ago the minister was back within the hour. Six days have now elapsed and he is not back with an answer this time. Of course, that makes me suspicious that there is something even worse going on with that contract than we had thought up until now.

I rather enjoyed the talk from the member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) and with respect to Bill C-59 and the German marks. I have one of those bills from 1923 which illustrated inflation. I picked it up in Germany in 1946. I believe it was a note for 10 billion marks. Of course it was worthless. Before us we have one of the smallest bills imaginable. It is reputed to have four clauses, but there are really only two main paragraphs in it—actually only one, given the short title which reads:

This act may be cited as the borrowing authority act, 1981-82.

Then there is the clause with respect to borrowing authority. Then tucked away at about line 15 are the words "such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole, fourteen billion dollars, as may be required for public works and general purposes." This bill does not get very particular about anything else. It just says that whenever the cabinet needs it they can borrow $14 billion. That is a terrible amount of money.

• (1750)

It would be interesting to compare the amount of money the government is asking to borrow with the number of words in the bill. This very short bill enables the cabinet to borrow $14 billion, although it takes only one column of a page and five lines on another page. The last bill with which we dealt from the Department of Finance was Bill C-54, "An act to amend the statute law relating to income tax". The bill consisted of 225 pages and has the purpose of closing loopholes which taxpayers might use to avoid paying their taxes. It takes 225 pages for the government to close these loopholes, but it only takes two paragraphs on one page to borrow $14 billion. It is no wonder it has taken the borrowing route.

What is the government doing with this money? I do not suppose any of it will go directly to the purchase of Petrofina by Petro-Canada because I understand the financing for that project will come from an increase in the price of gasoline, fuel oil and other energy sources of a liquid nature. I have listened over the past few days to the questions with regard to the purchase of Petrofina. It reminds me of an Abbott and Costello show. These gentlemen would flummox each other and neither ever understood the other. They had a famous routine of who was on first. It would be appropriate to change the names to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and Mr. Hopper because they did not know for sure who would buy the company or who would pay for it, but they went out and bought it anyway at a somewhat higher price. Given this higher price and the confusion between those two gentlemen, it is not beyond the realm of possibility that the minister was bidding up shares in Montreal while Mr. Hopper was bidding them up in Toronto. In any case, they paid far too much for the company.

Petrofina is merely a row of service stations. Dian Cohen described the situation as well as anybody. She said:

> The purchase of Petrofina will do nothing to further the goal of security of supply, since supply is not what Petrofina is concentrating on.

She went on to say:

> It makes sense if your priority (as the government's seems to be) is to be visible—what better way than to buy a string of service stations that will fly the Canadian flag?

The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap kept saying that the government would work with industry. I believe industry would have a different word to describe the actions of the government as, for example, when the minister of energy tries to dictate the terms of working with the oil industry. The purchase of these service stations will do absolutely nothing except shorten our cash availability in trying to obtain what we desperately need, a secure source.

However, when the government gets the desire to become bigger and bigger, the cost is borne by the taxpayer. While I suppose Petro-Canada is a success story to its top echelon of management, it is not to many other people. It does not mean that the people of Canada have gained anything. I heard the minister say that Petro-Canada belongs to the Canadian people. If it belongs to me, then I would ask the government to sell my share so I can invest the money myself. I would certainly not buy shares in Petrofina at the price which the government is willing to pay.

I would like to turn my attention to the way in which the government spends money on national defence. I am concerned that the defence expenditures which were projected to be made will not be made for the main reason that the government will not have sufficient funds for the capital expenditures it described. Perhaps I should go into the background. In 1971, the government published a white paper on defence. It was the last such paper published. That document identified the major roles of the Canadian armed forces as; first, the protection of Canadian sovereignty; second, the defence of North America in co-operation with the U.S. forces; third, the fulfilment of such NATO commitments as may be agreed upon, and fourth, performance of such international peace-keeping roles as we may assume from time to time.

Since 1971 many changes have occurred nationally and internationally which have affected the structure and role of Canada's armed forces. External pressures to increase our defence effort in a variety of ways and internal pressures to assign more and more tasks to our forces have all worked to spread what little we have even more thinly. There has been no attempt to review those changes and to produce a new white paper. Without a policy statement, the military's long-range planning is thwarted and the public is left in the dark regarding the defence plans and policies.

The importance of this latter fact should not be overlooked. I have an example of what happens when the government leaves the public uninformed about the defence policy. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) has stated on various occasions that the Canadian forces' priorities remain the same, but the emphasis has changed. He has not enlightened us as to what is the new emphasis. A poll completed on behalf of the Department of National Defence showed that 37 per cent of the respondents thought that the main role of the Canadian forces was peace-keeping, which happens to be the last priority according to that 1971 white paper.

The Minister of National Defence has stated that he does not want to produce a new white paper, that he would prefer to issue an annual statement on his department's activities and policies. This idea in itself reflects the Trudeau government's attitude toward defence. Instead of the government putting time and effort into producing a clearly defined and coherent departmental statement of direction, we are to be treated to an annual report, much like a company might distribute to its shareholders.

Listening to the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence, one might get the impression that much is being done to upgrade the state of our armed forces after years of neglect. They speak at length on the subject of a 3 per cent real increase in the defence budget and new equipment programs. I would like to discuss these and other aspects and then hon. members can decide if the government is fulfilling its obligations to our military.

In 1968-69, 16.4 per cent of total federal expenditures were on defence. In 1978-79, ten years later, the expenditures had decreased to 8.8 per cent or approximately half of what they had been ten years before. In 1978 the Canadian government agreed with the NATO decision to increase defence spending by 3 per cent in real terms each year for five years. Whether or not the government has met and will continue to meet that objective depends on with whom one talks. According to the Minister of National Defence, the DND budget has increased by 3 per cent in real terms for the past six years, if the increases are averaged over that time. I disagree with that. The average is 2.85 per cent.

I also disagree with the premise of the minister's argument. The 3 per cent rate was agreed to in 1978. Therefore, we should be looking at the defence budget since that time to see if Canada has lived up to its commitment. From that perspective, we see that in 1978-79 the DND budget increased by 2.79 per cent and that in 1979-80 it decreased by .23 per cent. In 1980-81, it is expected to increase by 3.5 per cent. These figures were provided by DND and do not include statutory costs.

May I call it six o'clock.

THE CONSTITUTION

APPEAL TO SASKATCHEWAN NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, and I turn toward the New Democratic Party. In light of the CBC news report last night that the members of the federal NDP Saskatchewan caucus were asked at a meeting with the provincial NDP caucus yesterday what in the world they were doing supporting the constitutional proposals which the Saskatchewan attorney general Roy Romanow described as a "Grab bag of nonsense", and were told by Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney that his government would probably support simple patriation with an amending formula, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That to preserve harmony in the Saskatchewan NDP, the Saskatchewan federal NDP members act on their own beliefs and ignore the dictates of their federal leader and vote against the government's constitutional package so there will be no necessity for cries of "Anguish" when they next meet with their provincial NDP colleagues.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL "SPLIT" DAY

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that looking for splits, promoting splits, and creating splits if none can be found, has become a national pastime, and in view of the fact that Joe has taken to appointing his friends to ensure he is not split from his position and Pierre to holding his nose while speaking with a split-tongue, and that our ten premiers are maintaining split ranks, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That today be declared National Split Day and that bananas be supplied to the press gallery to symbolize Canada's gratitude for the care and competence they provide in searching out, promoting and heralding splits.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SUGGESTED LAUNCHING OF INQUIRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Considering the severe personal injustices experienced by Donald Kelso, an air traffic controller at Dorval airport, and taking into account the fact that the Supreme Court has just reinstated Mr. Kelso after noting that no one can be removed from a position solely on the basis of language, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates):

That this House instruct the Commissioner of Official Languages, who is responsible to the Prime Minister, to launch an immediate inquiry into this case so that in the future public servants who are unable to learn a second language will not be harassed and reduced to second-class citizen status.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR DISASTER

DEATH OF CHARLES F. FOGARTY, CHAIRMAN OF TEXASGULF—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Louis R. Desmarais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion relating to an urgent matter.

[English]

Members will be aware of the crash last night of a Texasgulf jet and the tragic death of Dr. Charles F. Fogarty, Texasgulf's chairman and chief executive officer. Texasgulf is a natural resources development company controlled by the Canada Development Corporation. With Dr. Fogarty on that plane were top executives of Texasgulf and two company pilots. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That this House express its sympathy to the relatives and families of those killed in the crash of the Texasgulf jet last night.

Madam Speaker: I am sure that the House shares the hon. member's sentiments, but I do not believe that I can put the motion to the House.

PETRO-CANADA

FUNDS FOR PURCHASE OF PETROFINA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, has sent a credit card to a Vancouver individual already dead and in the grave for five years. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That Mr. Hopper be directed to finance the purchase of Petrofina by soliciting funds from the same group of clientele which are already its valued customers, and, failing that, to consider the purchase a dead issue.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for presentation of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

POSITIONS TAKEN BY LIBERAL AND NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the warning given to the federal NDP Saskatchewan caucus by Premier Blakeney that support of the government's constitutional package would hurt their election chances in the west—that is, the Liberal party's western branch—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House recognize the coalition and the bedroom relationship between the Grits and federal NDP and direct that the hon. member for Oshawa no longer be paid the allowance for recognized party leaders in the House.

OFFICIAL POSITION OF CONSERVATIVE PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That time be allotted to the current Leader of the Official Opposition in order that he may clearly outline whether the Yurko position, the Clark position, the Hatfield position, the Lougheed position or the Davis position is in fact the official position of the Conservative party on the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MARINE TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED RELIEF AGAINST INCREASED FUEL COSTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, in view of the disastrous effects upon Canadian shippers in British Columbia of the budget proposal to charge world fuel prices to Canadian international marine carriers, even while engaged in domestic trade, and since Canadian flag carriers with Canadian crews will pay 30 cents a gallon more than foreign carriers engaged in the same trade, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman):

That this House directs the Minister of Transport to consult with his colleague, the Minister of Finance, in order to remove from the proposed amendments to the Petroleum Administration Act which take effect on April 1 all unfair treatment of Canadian marine carriers, in particular the tax on domestic carriers on international routes which will result in a 56 per cent increase in fuel costs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR COMMITTEE STUDY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said that he proposed no relief in interest rates for farmers and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said that no assistance will be afforded to agriculture in energy, and since the increase in costs to farmers in equipment, energy, seed, manpower, etc. far exceeds the increase in returns to them for their product, thus forcing them to leave the industry in great numbers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House refer the whole issue of agriculture in Canada to a special committee of this House in order to study the problems related to this vitally important industry and arrive at solutions to ensure the livelihood of those that dedicate themselves to it.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

EFFECT OF GASOLINE TAX ON FIXED INCOME TAXPAYERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the government's headlong rush to nationalize the oil industry, as evidenced by its purchase of Petrofina at a cost of $1.46 billion, has the potential to cost the Canadian taxpayer 13 cents a gallon, or $2.60 per tank every time that taxpayer drives up to the pumps, and recognizing that this tax is inflationary, regressive, and impacts most upon those least able to pay, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff):

That this House directs the government to shelter senior citizens, pensioners, those on fixed incomes, and farmers from the burden of this socialistic tax.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PENSIONS

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE PENSIONS TO ALL HOMEMAKER SPOUSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) I move:

That this House urges the government to bring in legislation to provide pensions for all homemaker spouses—

The emphasis, Madam Speaker, is on the words "all homemaker spouses".

—in their own right, equivalent to those earned by contributors to the Canada Pension Plan, thus recognizing, for pension purposes, the contribution to our society made by those who work in the home, and that this House urges that such legislation be introduced at an early date.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

APPLICATION OF PROGRAM TO DEAL WITH REGIONAL INEQUALITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The budget presented to the House by the member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) on October 28 proposed a "bold and experimental new program to help deal with regional inequalities in this country". It ends up that the "bold" part is that the program has been implemented in the maritimes only in Grit constituencies. In view of his blatant patronage, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That this House condemn the callous attitude of the Minister of Finance toward his fellow maritimers and his complete lack of control of the fiscal calamity which has developed in the country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PIPELINES

DELAY IN REPORT ON NORMAN WELLS-ZAMA LAKE PIPELINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to introduce the following motion: whereas it would appear that the National Energy Board has again delayed its report on the Norman Wells-Zama Lake pipeline, this time until April, 1981, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That the government put its affairs in order so that it will be able to confirm the expected advice to proceed with this highly desirable project immediately upon receipt of the NEB recommendations, thereby allowing construction proper to commence in January, 1982, as recommended by the Environmental Assessment Review Panel.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

EFFECTS ON MANUFACTURING SECTOR OF ECONOMY

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I wish to direct my questions to the Minister of Finance.

This morning the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and six other industrial associations representing manufacturers of chemicals, electronics, steel and plastics, issued a joint press release expressing their opinion that under Canada's current energy program our chances of becoming self-sufficient are nil. The association predicted dire consequences to Canada, and to their industries, as a result of this policy. It seems the government is unconcerned about the effects of the energy program on the oil and gas industry. Is the minister concerned about the effects of the program on the manufacturing sector—a program he authored on October 28—which, according to these industrial representatives, will be very severe indeed unless changes are made soon?

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member opposite will be aware that in the National Energy Program there are incentives to encourage the development of the petroleum industry in Canada, both in conventional lands and in frontier areas. In addition, certain changes have been made as a result of discussions with industry which will further encourage the development of this dynamic sector of our economy.

VIEWS OF MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the acting minister, the Minister of Finance, or someone who knows what is going on in the energy sector in this country.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Judy Erola.

Mr. Andre: Perhaps the Minister of State for Mines is the acting minister of energy and can cast some light on the government's thinking.

These six associations representing manufacturing interests—not the oil and gas industry—stated in their press release that now is the time to get going to obtain maximum employment and economic benefits from what should be a progressive and ongoing energy policy. As a result of the current policy, they have pointed out that their industries face very uncertain and very difficult times ahead. My question to the minister is this: if she does not accept this view of these manufacturing industries which have released this report today, could she please explain where their thinking is in error and how six very respected, non-partisan associations, could arrive at such an erroneous view?

An hon. Member: Sit down, Roy.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, obviously the member is aware, as are most members in the House, that those projects have been cut back by the province of Alberta, not by the federal government. The companies involved have been offered a $38 price which would give them the base to go ahead with the projects. It has been the province's choice to cut back on these particular projects.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, we now know that the parliamentary secretary is not aware of what is going on and, the acting minister is not aware of what is going on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I am going to try again and ask my question of the Minister of Finance since he authored the budget which brought forward these disastrous policies. Given that virtually the entire Canadian business community, small business, the bankers' association, the manufacturers' association and, of course, the oil and gas industry, recognize that a failure to change the National Energy Program will result in tremendous economic costs to Canada, if the Minister of Finance is not concerned about the effects on the oil and gas industry is he concerned about the effects on all of these other industries? Does he dismiss the view of the entire business community in Canada? If he thinks these people have some reasoning behind their concerns, will he tell the House when he will be bringing in a new budget to correct the damage being done by the energy policy which he brought forward on October 28?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it would not be correct to suggest that the government or the Minister of Finance is not interested in the views of the business community with respect to the impact of the National Energy Program or, indeed, the views of the oil and gas industry. As the hon. member knows, since the budget, on two separate occasions, I have tabled modifications to the tax regime as a result of suggestions made by the oil and gas industry. On each occasion they have said yes, they think these changes are worth while but they would like more changes. I want to give the hon. member that information as evidence of our willingness to listen and to respond. I want to add further that I disagree with the analysis that he has taken as his own, namely, the analysis presented by a group of members of the business community.

During the budget I made certain projections as to the rate of growth of the economy in 1981 based upon the National Energy Program. I have no reason to alter that projection with regard to rates of growth in the economy for 1981.

QUERY RESPECTING PLANS TO ASSIST MANUFACTURING SECTOR

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In the January 15, 1981, Commons Debates, page 6221, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is quoted as saying "the Toronto Star has not been able to find a single spokesman for any company in Ontario that says it has lost any jobs". So much for the reliability of both the Star and the minister, since the statement of six industrial associations said in part that the energy policy as it stands is damaging not just the oil industry, but the manufacturing industry as well. Can the minister indicate whether he has any plans prepared to mitigate the damage to the already hurting manufacturing sector?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are building on the very important and positive National Energy Program to strengthen our manufacturing base. Elements of this are found in the oil and gas legislation to enable the development of Canadian jobs and Canadian suppliers, in carrying out major energy projects on the Canada lands. I hope my hon. friends will recognize the importance of this and give it their active support.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, the minister is supposed to represent his client group, not fight them. He is not prepared to acknowledge what is acknowledged by all the trade associations representing the manufacturing sector and, hopefully, they have a voice in the minister. Is he at least monitoring the situation, or does he intend to let them flounder until they need a Chrysler or Massey bailout?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, we are following the situation very closely. My purpose, and I hope it is that of all members of this House, is not only to speak for individual groups but to work and speak for all Canadians. This is the way we are approaching it, and I think the hon. member should do so as well.

FISHERIES

CHINOOK SALMON FISHING RESTRICTIONS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Yesterday in Vancouver announcements were made severely limiting the fishing of chinook salmon in British Columbia, resulting from many years of federal government mismanagement of that stock, particularly on the Fraser River. Many of these restrictions are putting an unnecessarily hard financial burden on the gill-net fleet, including the closure of the upper Fraser River to gill-netters and restricting combination vessels in their decision as to whether to gill-net inside or outside. Is there any agreement with the United States to have them restrict their chinook and sockeye fishery at Point Roberts so that gill-net fishermen on the Fraser River may share in some of their own salmon going back to their spawning grounds rather than their being given to the American fishermen?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the last part of the hon. member's question is interesting. I hope he will support the position of this government if and when a treaty is finally negotiated, because one of our aims in the new treaty affecting the Fraser River will be to return the management of that river system to the Canadian authorities. As for the means of conservation which we announced, we have tried to take a balanced view. We have restricted the gillnetters. In fact we said to those who would be very heavily restricted that we are looking at other opportunities that could be afforded to them. We have also restricted the sports fishermen and I have had a number of telegrams of protest on that score. I think they all recognize that the Fraser system chinooks must be given a chance to spawn, and it is to this effect that we have taken these measures.

● (1425)

Mr. Miller: I assure the minister this party will indeed support a fair fisheries treaty between the U.S. and Canada on the west coast, but we do not consider a fair treaty as being an imbalance of 5.8 million sockeye as is the present situation on the west coast.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is not a proposal either.

Mr. Miller: In the recommendations from the Department of Fisheries there is very seldom any mention of a specific portion of the fleet in British Columbia which has grown from 370 vessels in 1969 to over 600 now. What proposals does the minister's department plan to restrict the kill of juvenile chinook as a result of the very efficient seine fleet? That is one of the major causes of chinook reduction in British Columbia. Over hundreds of thousands of juvenile chinook salmon are killed each year by the seine fleet and there is nothing in the press release yesterday which specifically indicates the problem will be looked into and adjusted accordingly.

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, that is an ongoing problem with which all representatives of the industry agree, and it is being addressed. In this case we were looking at the Fraser River chinook salmon and conservation measures and the seine fleet was not an overriding concern. It has had limitations in other fisheries in other areas.

Mr. Miller: Madam Speaker, the minister will recognize that we have advocated some regulations on the sports fishing fleet in British Columbia and we are not saying the regulations presented yesterday are all bad. However, one of the difficulties in the industry is the lack of enforcement officers both for the fishing fleet, both sports and commercial, and also habitat protection. I would like the minister to give this House some guarantee that, in the omnibus bills which were passed by Treasury Board, there will not be a reduction in the allocation of fishery protection officers on the west coast, to go to other segments of the Fisheries and Oceans Department. Would the minister indicate there is a priority to put enforcement officers on the west coast to protect the chinook stocks which section of the fleet is prepared to regulate to protect its members?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, there will be and there is already a recognition of the problem. In fact when my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, introduces the estimates, members interested in fisheries matters will see, thanks to the support of my colleagues and also the support of members on all sides of this House, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has done rather well, and I thank all those who have supported me in this matter.

POSITION OF PREMIER BLAKENEY WITH RESPECT TO PATRIATION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Premier Blakeney has been described by Liberal Senator Jack Austin as the pivotal premier on whose support or lack of support the fate of the government's constitutional amendments will be determined. In view of Premier Blakeney's statement last night that he could accept simple patriation and an amending formula, I would like to ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister if he has considered that offer and is he willing to give a response today along the lines suggested by Premier Blakeney.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not a party to what Premier Blakeney said last night. I do remember what he said two years ago at the federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You complained when we read your book.

Mr. Trudeau: —where he went on record as opposing Premier Davis and the position of several other premiers, which was precisely that, to patriate with an amending formula and nothing else. Premier Blakeney was highly instrumental in preventing that from happening then. If he has changed his mind I am happy to hear it. I just wish he had changed his mind a little earlier.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I would like to address my supplementary question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. If it is possible for Premier Blakeney to change his mind, I wonder if it is possible for the Prime Minister to change his mind as well.

An hon. Member: Never.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. Epp: Is there just one way, and does everyone have to march to his drum?

In the so-called deal between the Prime Minister and Premier Blakeney, the terms of which were finally taken on to Hawaii, the so-called Honolulu formula, did the Prime Minister propose to Premier Blakeney an amending formula which would be based on the principle that all provinces should be regarded as equal?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, as to my changing my mind, the hon. member has just realized that the premier has come to recognize the positive character of what this House recognized last May when we all agreed that patriation with an amending formula was the right thing to do. That was then moved by the hon. member for Edmonton East. We accepted that last May, but last summer the premiers—and I have said this time and again—said clearly, on television, that they would not accept that. Even Premier Blakeney has said he would not accept that unless he got international trade and so forth. If they have changed their minds and are coming to a position which this House thought was the right one last May, why did they not say so in Montreal? Six of them met in Montreal. They have not even been able to agree to an amending formula. So what is this business of saying that I should get them together to find a consensus? Even when they meet together they cannot find a consensus.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture in the absence of the Minister of Transport. It arises out of at least three positions the government has espoused through different ministers of the Crown with respect to the Crowsnest Pass freight rates. The Minister of Agriculture has suggested the debate has gone on too long and wants the issue resolved quickly, by August 1 at the latest. The Minister of Transport wants to order a task force to study the matter further. The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board says a study is impractical and bluntly says nothing will be done other than perhaps a CPR inquiry.

Can the Minister of Agriculture tell the House and the farmers of Canada who we are to believe, or are all the ministers speaking with a hell of a tongue in cheek, to quote a well-known phrase?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, when the hon. member held the position of Minister of Transport, I am sure he also discussed the Crowsnest Pass rates, I do not remember him saying what he would do about it. If he did, he kept it pretty secret. I would like to know his opinion of what should be done also.

An hon. Member: Answer the question. You are the minister now.

Mr. Whelan: This week the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has been holding meetings in the capital of Canada. The federation has been meeting different groups, talking to politicians on both sides of the House, and making suggestions. We have asked this group to come forward with what it really thinks should be done. The federation wants to consult with us further. It wants to negociate with us, etc. We would like to know what firm stand will be taken by different groups in western Canada on what they want, because I am sure the hon. member knows that there is a great difference of opinion on what should be done.

The opinions of western producers differ widely. Some say nothing should be done; some say this should be done; some say that should be done. Those proposals are being studied at the present time, but—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Whelan: —this being such an important matter—it has been established for a great number of years—that when any change is being made it has to be the right one and provide equity for producers of livestock, feed grains and grain, and equity for the railroads, etc. So those are—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, there is a great difference of opinion flowing from the government, and I simply ask for some clarification. Is this troika plan which outlines three different policies designed to confuse or manipulate, or is the minister serious when he says that the debate has gone on long enough and that a resolution should be brought forward and put in place by August 1? Because there is a consensus emerging in western Canada through the western agriculture conference, which represents some 50 farm organizations, is the minister prepared to come forward and outline to the farmers what his government is prepared to do in terms of putting up funding to meet the Crow gap so that the debate can go on, and is the minister prepared to recommend to his cabinet a set of guidelines within which the debate can be advanced? The farmers have stated their position. Now it is up to the government to respond.

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, the hon. member makes it sound quite simple, but he is forgetting the commodity sector from western Canada, which has made a different suggestion. He is forgetting the National Farmers' Union, which has made a different suggestion on what should be done—that we should not touch the Crowsnest Pass rates in any way whatsoever. The hon. member says there is a consensus. The western agriculture committee has made recommendations to us, but that alone is not good enough.

An hon. Member: Where do you stand?

Mr. Whelan: We have had meetings this week, and some of the things said by some of the people differed slightly, and perhaps in a greater fashion than I am describing. They differ in a major fashion from what has been said in written presentations to us, so they have not formed that consensus the hon. member is saying they have, and when they do that, this government will act.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR EXPANSION OF COMMUNITY SERVICES PROGRAM

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. The minister's response yesterday to the housing crisis in British Columbia, to the effect that housing starts were up, was small comfort indeed in view of the problems of 3,000 people on waiting lists to get into co-op housing. There are no available building lots. Average home prices are well over $100,000.

In view of these shortages and in view of the heavy financial commitments which are brought upon home owners when they remortgage their homes at higher interest rates, will the minister reconsider his withdrawal of the community services program, recognize the special need of this rapid growth area of Canada, and implement another extended and accelerated community services program particularly for this rapid growth area of Canada?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the community services program was not designed to respond to the immediate needs defined by the hon. member. Rather, the response of the government last year, for example, in increasing the number of social units designated for immediate take-up, we believe, is a more useful response at the present time, and it is my hope as well that the lead of the federal government with the MURB program, which was followed by the province of Ontario with a program to build on top of that, will produce results much sooner and more directly in response to the problems which are experienced in the province now.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, representing the fastest growing communities in North America and representing also an area which has the potential for additional housing units in the Fraser Valley, I can tell the minister that there are no lots available, programs are not working, and demand is too high. The minister said he was removing this program to allow for new initiatives. The new initiatives have not worked. What are the initiatives the minister is planning specifically for this specific western problem which comes at this particular time in the development of our country? What new initiatives is the minister talking about, and what will he do to get the program going, not six months from now, but this month and next month?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, if the hon. gentleman is proposing that in response to this immediate need the community services program is an answer, then I have to remind him that that program will continue with funding from the federal government until the month of March, 1982. Funding is continuing under that program until March, 1982, so to talk about that program in response to what we perceive to be a significant demand change in the province is not the answer. I will only repeat my previous answers. We think other programs are the answer.

Mr. Wenman: Like what?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR NEW BRUNSWICK WOMEN'S CONFERENCE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or, in his absence, his parliamentary secretary. The parliamentary secretary knows that since October status and non-status Indian women in New Brunswick have been planning a conference in Fredericton for February 21.

In addition to funds from the Department of the Secretary of State, the status Indian women requested money from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the specific purpose of helping status women to take part in the planning process. In a letter dated January 20 the parliamentary secretary wrote that these funds would be made available. Yesterday, the Indian women were told that this extra money would not be forthcoming. Could the parliamentary secretary or the minister tell the House why this money will not be made available after a commitment has been made?

[Translation]

Mr. Ray Chénier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, contrary to what the hon. member stated in his question, the money has been turned over to the Native Women's Committee of New Brunswick. They are now having a few additional financial problems which we are also trying to solve, so that they will have the money they need for next week's conference.

[English]

Mr. Manly: The minister and the parliamentary secretary know that the most positive way to end discrimination against Indian women is to help these women form their own strong political organizations. I ask the minister, therefore, to confirm that the extra money which was promised for the planning process for status women will be made available.

Mr. Chénier: Madam Speaker, the money will be forthcoming. We agree with the hon. member opposite that we must help these women acquire a strong status in this country, and that is why we are working at present to obtain this extra money. Their conference will be taking place and we will be there with them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CONSTITUTION

POSSIBILITY OF LIMITING INDIVIDUAL SPEECHES AND OF ADDITIONAL DEBATING TIME

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council. The constitutional debate is a landmark in our parliamentary life, and I believe that as many Members of Parliament as possible should be able to contribute to this debate if they wish to do so. Consequently, has the government leader considered as a possible solution shortening the length of speeches and lengthening our sitting hours, and would he be willing to suggest such a solution to the opposition?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I believe that this is an excellent suggestion. We have now come to the final stage of the constitutional debate, and many members have been able to take part in the discussions during the last four months. I believe that if the length of speeches were limited to 20 minutes and if we were to add about ten hours of sitting each week, this would serve the double purpose of improving the quality of the debate and of allowing in all fairness a greater number of members to take part in the discussions. This suggestion is so attractive, Madam Speaker, that I shall put it officially to the opposition. This would be a good opportunity for hon. members opposite to show their good will.

SMALL BUSINESS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Business. Yesterday in the House the Grits refused to support my motion calling for tougher legislation respecting mergers which are harmful to independent small businesses. I was pleased to hear, however, that the Quebec Superior Court saw fit to acknowledge this urgent situation by granting an injunction which will at least block the Hudson's Bay-Zeller's merger. I should like to ask the minister the following question. Because of the increased tendency toward monopoly mergers and the inability of existing laws to deal adequately with the consequences of such mergers, can the minister tell us whether or not he has made representations on behalf of the small business community to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and what specific action is the government taking to protect certain small business sectors from extinction?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Madam Speaker, as I recall, when the hon. member introduced his motion under Standing Order 43 yesterday, the "noes" were coming from the other side of the House. Moreover, I would like to tell him that I have had many meetings with my colleague, the hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We have jointly met with the authorities of the Canadian Association of Independent Small Businesses. I have myself met with the Clothing Manufacturers' Association as well as with the textile and shoe manufacturers to discuss this rather important problem of mergers between major distribution chains. Of course, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and myself are considering certain measures such as amendments to the Combines Investigation Act.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): These consultations within the Liberal government have been going on for 13 years, and, in fact, last October the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs himself stated on no less than three occasions that immediate action will be taken, but still we have not heard any word. Therefore I should like to put my supplementary question to someone who perhaps will act a little faster.

My supplementary question on a related subject, Madam Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Liberal government is unwilling or unable to deal with high interest rates in general, and because the major concern confronting the small business community is the availability of working capital at realistic rates, as the minister himself knows, I should like to ask the minister to consider expanding the Small Business Development Bond program to include working or venture capital, and to do it forthwith.

Before he replies that he has just extended that program until the end of the year, let me remind him that this extension was undertaken at the insistence of this House. I ask him to expand that program to include working capital. If he is unable to do that, can he tell the House and the small business sector across this country which is suffering high interest rates why he cannot do it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the extension of the Small Business Development Bond was made on the recommendation of the Minister of State for Small Businesses—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —and was supported unanimously by all members in the House. There were no amendments proposed at that time nor were suggestions made to have the bond extended or its ambit widened. It is not the intention of the government to widen the ambit of the Small Business Development Bond. We have taken a major step in extending the application of the bond until the end of this fiscal year. The hon. member asked why it is not possible to widen the scope of the bond. The reason is that extending it to the end of this year was very expensive, and to widen its scope would be even more expensive, and that is an expense which we cannot bear at the present time in the light of our interest to restrain expenditures.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INQUIRY RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF PAPER MILL AT MATANE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. In view of the decision to set up a paper mill at Matane in the Matapédia Valley, as promised by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion during the last election campaign and as reiterated last spring, and the fact that the local people blocked the VIA Rail track and the TransCanada highway at Amqui in the province of Quebec, I should like to ask the minister whether or not he can tell the House why the government has decided not to have that paper mill built in the Matapédia Valley where there is a 40-per cent unemployment rate?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Madam Speaker, I wonder where the hon. member gets his information. No decision has yet been made with regard to the establishment of a paper mill in the Matapédia Valley. My colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, is in constant touch with his Quebec counterpart in an effort to find the best possible solution to the problem of the economic development of the Matapédia Valley.

Mr. Clarke: Madam Speaker, when will the government keep the promises it made to those people instead of trying to make a national park of their valley and thus forcing them to leave their homes.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Once again, Madam Speaker, the information of the hon. member is rather sketchy. The government has no intention of having a national park in the Matapédia Valley. Studies have been made, however, by the departments responsible for the environment, with regard to the possibility of having a major salmon river in that valley.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

STATUS OF GOVERNMENT'S NEGOTIATIONS WITH CHRYSLER CANADA

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. How did the cabinet like the new Chrysler deal the minister put to them? Will the minister make a statement in the House with respect to this matter, or will he sneak out and hold a press conference?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I have not yet put a proposal before cabinet with respect to the Chrysler matter. If and when there is a decision taken on this matter I will be happy to make a statement, with the concurrence of the House leaders.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Gray: I think the hon. member will have to look forward to whatever decision we are in a position to announce when and if it is taken with respect to this matter.

Mr. Deans: Will the minister indicate the number of dollars, in his scaled-down commitment, which will be invested in Canada in 1981, 1982 and 1983? How many of the current jobs will be protected, and exactly which components of the new K-car will be manufactured here?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, we have entered into no new agreement with Chrysler. If that should happen to be the case, then I will be very happy to disclose the details.

TRADE MARKS

INTRODUCTION OF NEW LEGISLATION

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that trade mark rules have not been revised in any substantial way since 1954, and in view of the fact that it is necessary to have a complete revision of the rules with the advent of a trade marks act, will the minister advise the House when we can expect to receive the new act?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is right, it is an issue with which the House will have to come to grips very soon. Unfortunately, the legislative schedule is so heavy that the study of several excellent pieces of legislation will have to be delayed. It is my hope that the opposition will co-operate with the government House leader to find a way for the House to expedite passage of many such bills in the coming weeks.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

APPLICATION OF PROGRAM TO DEAL WITH REGIONAL INEQUALITIES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It deals with the manufacturers' tax credit program. In the minister's words the program was designed for new manufacturing investment in specifically designated areas in the country characterized by high unemployment and low income. How does the minister justify the fact that in New Brunswick there are at least four regions which would more than qualify under the program with respect to high unemployment and low per capita income, in comparison with those which were designated in Nova Scotia? There are at least two other areas which qualify for the program under those terms in comparison with those which were actually designated. How can the minister justify that, other than the fact that those regions not designated are represented by Conservative members?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, that would not be a justified conclusion. We operate rather differently from the government of which the hon. member was a supporter when it cancelled decentralization programs in constituencies which were held by non-government members. We have abandoned that kind of politics. We have the tax credit program for areas in the country that can be tested on the basis of economic criteria, not political criteria. If these areas are outside, it is because they are not deserving economically, not politically.

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, in the maritime region that is "fish scales", and the minister knows it. Will he not reconsider the decision he has taken to designate those areas and include all areas which meet those criteria, as he has now said that the decisions will be taken on a fair and equitable basis? Will the minister not reconsider, and include those areas which do meet the criteria of high unemployment and low per capita income? Will he assure the House and the maritime region that all future programs will be shared equally amongst all areas which qualify?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I should explain to the hon. member that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was responsible for the selection of the areas. As I stated in the budget speech, I introduced that particular tax credit upon the urging of the minister who wished to have a powerful incentive for the poorest areas of the country. It was the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and his department which established the criteria and selected the areas, not myself or the Department of Finance. I believe that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion would be eager, as I am, that the application of the credit be strictly on these criteria. I believe it would be quite unjustified to apply a program of this kind on any other criteria.

PIPELINES

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES RESPECTING ALASKA HIGHWAY ROUTE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It is in preparation for the forthcoming discussions with the new administration in the United States, during which the question of pipelines will obviously be of top priority.

In light of information which is now available that the northern tier proposal is not a viable proposition and that the Canadian option would have to be exercised, namely, an Alaska highway route for northern oil, or the Kitimat pipeline, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has arrived at a decision at this point as to its preference for a Canadian route, particularly in light of information which has just come out of British Columbia where there are all kinds of renewed interest in the Kitimat proposal, including oil from Prudhoe Bay and the Beaufort Sea using this route.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the factors which the hon. member has mentioned will be taken into account in consideration of this issue and in the preparations for forthcoming discussions with the United States administration.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, it seems the Prime Minister does not want to answer my question. I am very anxious to know whether there have been any discussions at this point between the government of British Columbia and agencies of the federal government with respect to the preference which should be exercised with respect to an oil pipeline on the west coast and a deep sea oilport.

Mr. MacLaren: Madam Speaker, I am unaware of any recent discussions but I shall inquire and inform the hon. member.

LABOUR RELATIONS

B.C. TELEPHONE COMPANY—PROFITS MADE DURING STRIKE

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It concerns the long drawn-out 13-month dispute at B.C. Tel in British Columbia. The very good news yesterday was that Mr. Bill Kelly had been appointed by the minister as special mediator.

I would like to ask the minister if he has considered a recommendation to cabinet that B.C. Tel rates be rolled back along the lines of the 1977 anti-inflation board decision, when the company locked out its employees and made such exorbitant profits that the board ordered that subscribers' fees be returned to the consumers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I think he will agree with me that my responsibilities as Minister of Labour are to attempt to bring about settlement of the strike. I think the appointment of Bill Kelly is the most constructive thing that I could do in that direction. Mr. Kelly will be flying to British Columbia tonight to meet with the parties immediately.

I am not in a position to know whether the company has benefited financially or lost financially as a consequence of the problems of the last few months. I do not think it is appropriately within my jurisdiction to become involved in any assertion respecting the rates which B.C. Tel should be allowed to charge.

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, on a supplementary question, certainly all of us in this House, and in British Columbia too, hope that Mr. Kelly's mission is a success, but I would like to ask, since the subscriber has to have some protection as well, whether the minister is aware that under the National Transportation Act the cabinet has the power, should Mr. Kelly not achieve a satisfactory settlement, to vary a CRTC decision relating to rates.

● (1500)

Mr. Regan: Madam Speaker, any question on that subject should be directed to the minister responsible for the CRTC in the House. As I have already indicated, I believe that such considerations are outside the authority and the responsibility of the Minister of Labour.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, after consultations with my counterparts opposite, we have come to an agreement and I now seek unanimous consent for the following House order:

That the first item to be taken up under government orders on Friday, February 13, 1981, shall be Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas;

That all questions necessary for the disposal of the second reading stage of the said bill shall be put no later than 3.45 p.m. on February 13, 1981;

That any recorded division on the said bill shall be deferred until the conclusion of consideration of government orders on Monday, February 16, 1981;

That after second reading the bill shall not be referred to a Committee of the Whole, but shall be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and

That the said committee shall report the bill no later than April 16, 1981.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, there were those discussions, there is that understanding, and we are prepared to agree.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Madam Speaker, there were such discussions among us and we also agree.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the proposed motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, at this stage I was expecting the usual question on House business. Since we are on a point of order, I might as well outline the upcoming matters. There are some important items coming up next week, and I believe it is important for hon. members to know exactly what will be the business of the House during the next days.

Today we will continue with the debate on the borrowing authority bill. I shall move a motion later. After it is voted on tonight, we will go on with the debate and the appointed day for terminating the second reading stage of the borrowing authority bill will be next Monday. Tomorrow we will deal with the bill to which I just referred, the excise tax bill. If any recorded division is required as described in the House order of a few seconds ago, then this vote will be taken Monday night as well.

[Translation]

As for the conclusion of the constitutional debate, it is obvious that if the report is tabled tomorrow, as can be expected, the concluding stage will begin Tuesday afternoon. Most probably the form of that debate will consist in a direct resolution introduced by the government. This way I think I am answering an insistent request made last fall by my colleague, the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party.

So I want to confirm that, unless something unexpected comes up and subject to a last glance at the committee report, most probably we will allow debate on a direct resolution rather than on concurrence of the committee report, so that if there are any amendments, since several were debated in committee, but if there were one or two more, or any number for that matter, I hope hon. members will be reasonable, those amendments might be moved more directly than otherwise possible had we introduced or were we to introduce a motion for concurrence in the committee report.

Obviously, in both instances, it would be possible to move amendments but we would rather proceed in a way which meets the requests made by the opposition parties and which is also in keeping with our more direct approach to enable us to have a more direct debate in the House as well. Essentially, Madam Speaker, that will be the business of the House until the end of the week and early next week. The concluding debate on the Constitution will begin on Tuesday.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I thank the President of the Privy Council with respect to that matter. However, I notice in his recitation on how the government intended to handle this matter he stated that "quite probably" it will be in a resolution.

Mr. Pinard: Most probably.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He has now amended that to "most probably".

Mr. Pinard: That is what I said the first time.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Very well, quite probably is the way it stands.

Mr. Pinard: Most probably.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I beg your pardon. So that there will be no misunderstanding, and I was listening to the translator, not listening to the hon. member in my impeccable French with my impeccable French ear, I would like to ask the government whether the resolution will be available in the normal course with the appropriate 48-hour notice? In that case, it would appear on the Order Paper on Saturday morning in the normal course of its distribution in the House and elsewhere. Is there any possibility that we might see that resolution earlier, given the fact that the resolution which will be produced does not necessarily have to follow word for word or arise completely out of the report of the joint committee? Will it be possible to see that resolution in advance?

While the minister is on his feet with respect to that matter, could he tell us whether it would be appropriate to designate an allotted day today. I have sent him a series of allotted days, and I understand that there is no disagreement with the respective dates which are Tuesday, February 24; Wednesday, March 4; Wednesday, March 18; and Thursday, March 26. I would ask the minister to designate Tuesday, February 24 now. Would the minister tell us whether that list is reasonably acceptable and could he designate that particular day now?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, with regard to the first question on the resolution, I said in French "plus que probable".

What I meant is "most likely". When I say "most likely", the chances are 99 per cent. I would merely like to keep open the possibility, after considering the committee report, of taking some other course if for procedural reasons it is necessary. However, since it is most likely we will deal with the direct resolution, we will give 48 hours notice in accordance with the Standing Order, but first we must await the tabling of the report. That means that the notice will be given around noon tomorrow. I will do my best to make that resolution available to my colleagues in both opposition parties as soon as possible, and perhaps it will be possible tomorrow afternoon, to allow them ample time to review it. In addition, the fact that the debate will begin on Tuesday, rather than Monday, will give hon. members more time to review the resolution, if we proceed in that manner.

In so far as the word-for-word formulation of the resolution is concerned, obviously, since it is a straight resolution, we will try to respect as much as possible the recommendations of the Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada, which worked very hard and which deserves our congratulations.

Finally, the Tory House leader wishes me to designate Tuesday, February 24 as an allotted day now, but I am not in a position to do so. I will look into the hon. member's request and perhaps I could give formal notice next Thursday. I will try to inform the hon. member verbally in advance at the beginning of next week. First, I would like to review the list since I have not seen it.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, the President of the Privy Council has answered most of the questions that I had in mind. Perhaps he answered this one and I missed it. When the debate on the Constitution starts on Tuesday, is it the intention of the government to stay with it until that debate is over, or are there matters for which that debate might have to be interrupted?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, taking into consideration our large workload, I should like to keep the flexibility perhaps to deal, once in a while, with legislation on which we could get agreement to send it to committee or to approve it through all stages, with a very short delay.

At this stage I should not like to commit myself to dealing with this debate five days a week. I cannot confirm it today, but it is our intention to ensure that the next days and weeks are devoted mainly—and I would say almost 100 per cent—to the debate on the Constitution. But I want to keep the flexibility to once in a while allot a day, because we must allot days for the opposition during that period of time, or perhaps to deal with other business of the House on which we could reach agreement.

Finally, I think it would be very useful, following the question of the hon. member for Jonquière, if I make the offer formally now of reducing the length of speeches to 20 minutes, as compared to 40 minutes, and of extending the sitting hours by ten hours a week. The purpose of this proposal is simply to allow additional members to participate. After the four months we have spent on the subject in committee and in the House—

Mr. Crosbie: Nonsense.

Mr. Pinard: —I am sure it will be easier—and everyone will understand that it will be fair—if we sit longer hours and reduce the very long, unacceptable 40 minutes in 1981 when there are 282 members in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I find it really quite strange. First, I thought the question of the hon. member for Jonquière was most unusual for my friend. It was kind of negotiating or forcing negotiations by a planted question from his own party.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Crosbie: A planted question.

An hon. Member: That is exactly what happened.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I thought that was rather strange. Aside from that, in the exchange he and I had before he reached that point, I thought I indicated that we have not yet seen the resolution. The government indicated that it will follow, as closely as possible, what the committee has said. I have no guarantee of that, nor does any other person in the House or elsewhere. I cannot see any reason why one should give the government a blank cheque with respect to a matter we have not seen.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is my first point.

Mr. Crosbie: We are not going to do it, anyway.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If I may say so, at least at this point it is almost like saying that I should agree, as a matter of advantage to my colleagues and I, to give my friend $100 for nothing. I do not negotiate that way, so we will see as the debate goes on; but certainly it will not be in advance of seeing the resolution.

Quite frankly, I think it was improper conduct—and I say that with the greatest respect—to have placed that planted question by the hon. member for Jonquière.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, certainly it was not my intention to ask for a blank cheque for the government. The offer I was making, resulting from the legitimate question put by an hon. member of this House, was only to accommodate members on both sides of the House. After all, it was not Liberal members who did their gymnastics in front of the Speaker last fall; it was the hon. member's colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pinard: Perhaps this proposal would allow those members to participate in the debate. If we sit ten additional hours a week and if speeches last 20 minutes, it will mean a lot more Members of Parliament will have an opportunity to speak on this important subject, even if it is the conclusion of the debate.

On the other hand, I understand the hon. member's request. I think it is a fair request, that my colleague see the resolution before committing himself. I was not asking for an answer today. I was only putting this proposal on the floor of the House in the hope that perhaps tomorow, when we give notice of our resolution, my colleagues on the other side would be in a position to confirm quicker that such a proposal gives nothing more to the government, but in fact is just a measure to please members on both sides of the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, we are discussing this in an atmosphere of the House which is now soured by the fact that the next matter with which we will be dealing is a motion to cut off debate on a borrowing bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Shame.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Also, we are dealing with a matter wherein the Prime Minister promised the fullest debate and participation of all members. Then, after he made that promise, he lowered the boom of closure on the debate. Now we are discussing it again when an obviously mischievous question—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The government House leader, I, and everyone who thinks about it, know that extension of time is another form of closure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): This is a closure-crazy government; this is a closure-crazy government.

We are dealing now with something which is rather important to every member of the House of Commons. The rules of practice of the House of Commons were designed to give all members ample right to participate. It is in the light of the intention of those rules that we will judge our conduct, not by some artificial time limit set by an arrogant Prime Minister with respect to the Constitution of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I do not understand why my hon. colleague, whom I respect very much, loses his temper or cool. After all, I am only making a proposal to him; he does not have to accept it. It is just a matter of wanting members to participate. If he prefers to adopt another attitude, let the public judge. I think there was nothing wrong in what I said. There was nothing that intended to limit debate at this stage. I was only trying to be helpful so that the opposition could participate more in the conclusion of the debate. Obviously, I cannot agree with the reaction of my hon. colleague to our proposal.

Mr. Nielsen: It was devious.

Mr. Pinard: I think the NDP would welcome a suggestion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: —that would give more members an opportunity to participate in the debate at this stage after four months and that would allow the House to proceed with other urgent business with which we are faced in this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a very uncivilized way of proceeding.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, first may I say I was pleased to hear the government House leader say that the debate on the Constitution could be interrupted for a day, now and then, if there was something important for the House to deal with, particularly if there was something with which we could deal quickly. He knows what that suggests to me, namely, if there is a piece of legislation from the Minister of Veterans affairs which the House could pass quickly, as I know it will, I hope he will bring it in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I should like to say a word or two on the other subject, and I am quite cool, calm and collected in saying it. In our party we feel that the upcoming debate on the Constitution is an extremely important one, and that every member of the House who wishes to speak should have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Crosbie: Right on.

Mr. Knowles: Toward that end we think consideration should be given—

Mr. Crosbie: Oh!

Mr. Knowles: —to shorter speeches and to extra hours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I do not happen to agree with the suggestion of ten extra hours per week, but I think extra hours should be made available. The debate would be sharper and the public would understand it better if we had 20-minute speeches instead of 40-minute speeches.

• (1520)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Cuddle up a little closer.

Mr. Knowles: That gets applause from the government side of the House but now may I say that I agree with the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton that this is something we should negotiate as House leaders rather than here on the floor of the House. But I say that, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, that in those negotiations we will be prepared to consider changes for this debate in our rules to enable the largest possible number of members to speak and to facilitate a good, sharp, clear debate.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the exchange between the government House leader and the hon.

member for Winnipeg North Centre concerning the possibility of interrupting the debate on the constitution for important pieces of legislation.

I would ask the government House leader to consider Bill C-46, concerning the importation of meat, which is important legislation. I would point out also that the Standing Committee on Agriculture so far has not met this year. It is waiting patiently for legislation to be referred to it. I can assure the government House leader that if we can get on to second reading of Bill C-46 it would pass fairly quickly. The beef industry is important to all of Canada and it is going through a rather tumultuous time. It has seen a drop in live cattle prices. I hope the government House leader would consider Bill C-46 as the type of legislation in respect of which the debate on the constitution could be stopped in order to allow that bill go on to committee. As I said, the committee on agriculture has not met this year. That tells you something of the priorities which this government has put on agriculture so far.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will try to meet that request.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FULTON—ALLEGED MISLEADING MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises from both false and misleading statements made to me by ministers of the Crown. I do not think there is any question now but that my privileges as a member of Parliament have been infringed upon and in that way the rights of every Member of Parliament in this House have been infringed upon.

My question of privilege arises first from a statement made to me yesterday by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) that before any panel review hearing went ahead in relation to Amax at Alice Arm, British Columbia, I would have an opportunity today to meet with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). That statement is confirmed in Hansard for January 22, 1981, at page 6452. In response to my question, the minister said:

If he finds that unsatisfactory as to a communicated vote to my colleague and myself, we will be prepared to consider some alterations for that type of panel—

I have also been misled on at least seven other occasions in this House of Commons, not only by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and by the parliamentary secretary responding for the Deputy Prime Minister, as recently as February 10.

Mr. Paproski: Put your seat on the line and challenge him.

Mr. Fulton: I will briefly go through some of the blatant instances where I have been misled in this House, the most recent being January 22, again in response to me by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. At page 6452 of Hansard we find the following:

—might I say that a panel of experts has been set up to look into the matter, notice of which has been communicated to the Nishga Tribal Chief, Mr. Gosnell.

There are two totally false statements contained in the minister's answer, which directly affected my ability to carry on my duties as a Member of Parliament.

I raised the matter in a question of privilege which Your Honour has ruled on. During the response on the question of privilege, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said at page 6507 of Hansard for January 23, 1981, the following:

I will endeavour to make a clarification on Monday.

The minister has made no attempt whatever. He has been present here in the House. I sent him notification that I would ask a question. The day before yesterday he asked that it be deferred. I met with the minister. He told me that I would meet with him and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans today. Instead, they announced a review process. They directly misled me as a Member of Parliament. I have been misled by the Prime Minister. There have been false statements and I challenge the minister to get up and to clarify the situation.

Mr. Paproski: If he is a liar, call him a liar.

Mr. Fulton: He is a liar, if you want me to put that on the record. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—

An hon. Member: Withdraw!

Madam Speaker: I will have to ask the hon. member to withdraw that word because it is unparliamentary.

Mr. Fulton: In this situation, I will not withdraw that statement.

An hon. Member: Order!

Madam Speaker: I think the hon. member has been carried away by a suggestion made that he might use that expression. Because of the enthusiasm of the debate, he did use the expression. I am sure he did not mean to offend the minister but I am afraid I cannot accept that kind of language in the House. I would ask the hon. member to co-operate with the Chair and to withdraw the word he used.

Mr. Paproski: Let us hear the evidence.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, at this point I will withdraw it. However, I put on this caveat that at the end of my remarks I may want to reintroduce it.

Some hon. Members: Order!

An hon. Member: You better not.

Mr. Fulton: I have been raising questions since July 8, 1980, in relation to a special dumping permit. As I have pointed out, I have been misled by many members of the Crown, including the Prime Minister. I would like to put on the record precisely what those statements have been. The most recent being in relation to statements made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in response to questions I have raised in the House.

After giving out this permit behind closed doors, the ministers have gone ahead with a private study which is to be completed by March 31. This study is looking into the probability of resuspension of tailings as a result of bottom currents. This is really at the centre of this controversy. The study is being done by Woodward-Clyde Consultants Ltd. The funds were put forward. This came to my attention only yesterday.

I have been requesting a full public inquiry, as have five major church groups in this country, the Nishga people from my riding who I have the honour to represent, many other groups including the B.C. Federation of Labour, the Building and Construction Trades Council and, not only tens of thousands but now hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are interested in a full public inquiry.

I will not give the give complete quotations, Madam Speaker, but the dates on which I have been misled are as follows: by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans July 8, 1980; October 21, 1980; January 16, 1981, and by his parliamentary secretary on February 10, 1981; by the Prime Minister July 8, 1980; by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, January 22, 1981, twice on January 23, 1981, and February 11, 1981.

An hon. Member: He should be fired.

An hon. Member: Give us the quotations.

Mr. Fulton: I will be pleased to put the quotations on the record, if Madam Speaker, has the time. It is a most serious question—

Madam Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member. First, his question of privilege as indicated in the notice which was given is not exactly the kind of thing he is debating now. He is far off the statement he made to me as to what constituted his question of privilege. I would ask the hon. member to speak about the privilege and about the facts as he has put them in his notice to me.

Secondly, the hon. member is debating the question, he is not telling me what constitutes his question of privilege. The ministers are not in the House at the present time. Sometimes some element of debate is acceptable in the course of trying to expose a question of privilege but since the ministers are not here to refute or to answer any of the arguments brought forward by the hon. member I have to ask him to keep very strictly to the question of privilege.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I will try to sum it up briefly and to keep to one particular point. There are many places where I know I have been misled. However, what arose yesterday has been to deliberately mislead me as a Member of Parliament. I have the proof in terms of the actions taken by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development today. Yesterday he told me—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member really want to say "deliberately mislead"?

Mr. Fulton: I do, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I have to tell the hon. member that he cannot use this kind of language in the House. This is not an acceptable expression to qualify anything that another member of this House has done. I must ask the hon. member to be extremely careful in the way that he refers to other hon. members. I am here to protect them from this kind of interpolation.

● (1530)

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I can only say that within a period of 24 hours a minister of the Crown told me one thing here in this chamber, 24 hours before that, and it is recorded in Hansard, he made a precise statement that is exactly of the same nature, and today he goes completely contrary to what he has told me both here in the House on the record and to me directly in this House only yesterday. I can only say that, having raised this issue the number of times I have, I have evidence that the statements made to me by the minister are false. He knows they are false. I can prove they are false. I therefore will move:

That Madam Speaker directs that those undertakings made by the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and that this entire issue be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for examination.

Mr. Nielsen: That's quite a grab bag.

Madam Speaker: I will have to wait until the ministers are in the House in order that they can reply to the intervention of the hon. member. I will rule on it later.

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—POSSIBLE DESTRUCTION OF PARLIAMENTARY RECORDS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I regret that I was unable to serve notice of this question of privilege. It arose as the last item of business in the committee this morning. The matter is urgent because it involves the imminent probability of the destruction of parliamentary records. I am fearful—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot bring into the House of Commons any reference to deliberations which take place in committee. The reason is very simple. The House is not aware of such actions as the hon. member is attempting to describe. If he has a question of privilege to raise about something which took place in committee, he should raise his question of privilege in the committee.

Until such time as the committee reports to the House, it is not possible to discuss it here.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): With due respect, Madam Speaker, a question of privilege cannot be ruled upon in the committee. As I said, it was the last item of business in committee and involved the imminent destruction of parliamentary records which, to my way of thinking, are historical records that must be preserved.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If a question of privilege is raised in committee, the committee can report it back to the House. If the committee determines there is a question of privilege, it can be properly recorded and brought into the House where it can be dealt with. Therefore, I cannot hear the hon. member on this kind of question of privilege.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): With all due respect, Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The report had been submitted, voted upon and approved. I cannot see how else I can preserve documents for the archives and the history of Canada other than by raising this for Your Honour to rule on or have it referred to a committee. Failing that, I would implore Your Honour to put a stay on the destruction of those documents until I can formulate a proper presentation for the appropriate place, wherever that may be. They are parliamentary documents and I do not want to see them disappear.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, may I just speak briefly in the abstract of that question. The question involves the preservation of parliamentary records. Ordinarily the records of any committee proceeding eventually find their way into the report of the proceedings of that committee and then into the Library and other repositories, the same as the record of our debates. There are occasions, however, where a record is kept of the deliberations of any one of a number of the standing committees, but that record is never published.

When a record is kept of the proceedings in camera, I believe it is normally preserved. That may bear some scrutiny in respect of the policies of the officers of this House about the treatment of parliamentary documents. I might suggest that the point raised by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) in this specific instance might be inquired into in light of whether or not it is desirable, where a record of in camera proceedings is kept, that record should be preserved as a general principle or as a policy of the House, in camera, of course in secret, and subject to the usual rules of release, which I understand now is some 30 years.

I am not aware whether the House policy now is to preserve records of in camera proceedings when they are kept, but there have been occasions when records have been kept of those proceedings. I dare say there are instances where those records can still be found. I suggest the point raised by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich is certainly important enough to be taken under consideration by the Chair and perhaps in the process of determining global policy, the specific instance might be inquired into.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, while this point was being raised, I tried to look up the precedents. I believe this is amply covered in Citation 615 of Beauchesne's where it is unequivocally stated:

> The clerk of the committee is responsible for the safekeeping of all the papers and records of the committee.

I would take that to mean records of anything done in camera as well as on the public record.

Madam Speaker: That is a matter which can probably be checked, but it seems to me that none of those documents are ever destroyed. This proves the point that matters dealing with deliberations of a committee should not be raised in this House. The House is totally unaware of what went on and is unable to judge the matter in question. I am at a loss as to what to do with this question of privilege. Perhaps the hon. member will give me proper notice and some idea of what the facts are so that I can see whether it is proper to raise it in the House. If it is, the hon. member can raise his question of privilege and I will rule on it at that time.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It was my intention, Madam Speaker, in view of your ruling today that you could not accept it, to ask that I be allowed to raise this matter on another occasion. I hope to be able to do so. Meanwhile, I want to make it clear that in raising this matter, I am not casting any aspersions, none whatever, on the co-chairmen. It was a decision of the committee, not the co-chairmen. I want that on the record.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, possibly with unanimous consent you could call questions on the Order Paper before I move my motion.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree that I proceed with the usual proceedings before the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) moves his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

Question No. 250—Mr. Herbert:

1. What percentage of the shareholding of (a) Imperial Oil (b) Shell Canada (c) Gulf Canada (d) Texaco Canada, is believed to be owned by Canadians?

2. In each of the past five years, what was the combined (a) profit after taxes (b) dividends distributed (c) taxes and royalties paid to the (i) government (ii) provincial governments?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and Statistics Canada as follows: 1. Statistics Canada reports that in 1979, the latest year for which information is available under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, the degree of Canadian ownership was as follows:

(a) Imperial Oil	22.33 per cent.
(b) Shell Canada	25.92 per cent.
(c) Gulf Canada	26.13 per cent.
(d) Texaco Canada	9.10 per cent.

2. EM&R has obtained the following data on the petroleum industry under the auspices of the Petroleum Corporations Monitoring Act relating to their upstream operations except for dividends which relate to total operations:

(i) and (ii)	1977	1978 ($ Millions)	1979
(a) Net Income After Income Taxes	2,079	2,285	3,525
(b) Dividends	452	510	737
(c) Current Income Taxes	1,100	980	1,022
of which federal government (estimated)	825	735	766
of which provincial governments (estimated)	275	245	256
Royalties to provincial governments	2,710	3,112	3,820

NOTE: This type of data was not collected prior to 1977. Data for 1980 is not yet available.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE CONSULTANTS

Question No. 747—Mr. Shields:

Since August 1, 1978, how many (a) administrative (b) policy consultants were under contract to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and/or any boards, commissions or corporations reporting to the minister and, in each case, what amount was paid to them?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: (a) 25—$418,436—See list below. (b) Nil.

In so far as Metric Commission Canada is concerned: (a) and (b)—Not applicable.

In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned: (a) and (b)—Not applicable.

In so far as Canadian Patents & Development Limited is concerned: (a) Nil. (b) 1—$1,575—See list below.

In so far as the Federal Business Development Bank is concerned: (a) and (b) 27—$601,884.73—See list below.

In so far as the Canadian Commercial Corporation is concerned: (a) 6—$136,328.96. (b) 4—$128,964—See list below.

In so far as Export Development Corporation is concerned: (a) 16—$138,070.50. (b) Nil.—See list below.

EDUCATION STATISTICS

Question No. 1,833—Mr. Herbert:

In the last year, what percentage of (a) grade school (b) high school children studied their second official language?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports: in the 1979-80 school year, 44.8 per cent of elementary school children and 40.8 per cent of secondary school children in the nine provinces outside Quebec studied French as a second language. In Quebec, 37.0 per cent of elementary school children and 98.0 per cent of secondary school children studied English as a second language. It is important to note that the figures above are based on eligible students only. In Quebec, English and French students enrolled in English immersion education are excluded, as are students enrolled in French immersion education in the other provinces.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR SECOND READING OF BILL C-59

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of Privy Council) moved:

That in relation to Bill C-59, an act to provide for supplementary borrowing authority, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration of second reading stage of the bill; and that at 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of second reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: Madam Speaker, this is a motion under Standing Order 75c which we were forced to introduce because we could not reach agreement with the opposition parties to allocate a definite period of time to conclude the debate on second reading of the bill to authorize the government to borrow some $14 billion. Now to justify our action and our attitude, may I remind the House that in recent years, when debating bills to authorize the government to borrow certain sums of money, more often than not the government has had to resort to that procedure so as to be able to make progress.

[English]

Yesterday I inadvertently mentioned that under the former government a motion under Standing Order 75c had been introduced dealing with the borrowing authority bill. I was wrong and I apologize for that. What I had in mind was the income tax bill when they used 75c. It was a slight error and I just want to correct the record. Let me state clearly that at that time the opposition, of which I was a member, collaborated very much with the government of the day. My hon. colleague, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton will recall that during the debate on Bill C-10, the borrowing authority bill, only three and a half days were spent on the second reading stage, while this year already five days have been devoted to the second reading stage of the bill. That is why, failing to find that kind of collaboration on this bill, we are forced to send it to committee as soon as possible in order to clear the stage for the House to deal with other urgent and pressing business.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that on the basis of the most recent precedents it has been current practice to limit debate on the type of legislation which is controversial and which generally prompts the opposition parties to object strenuously, rightly or wrongly. In any event, notice was given and this motion was introduced for Bill C-7 in 1978. As I have just said it was not the case in 1979, but the same thing happened for a bill to amend the Income Tax Act and the Progressive Conservative Party, then in office, had to resort to Standing Order 75c, something which we did not do in the case of our bill to amend the income tax legislation. And in 1980, this was Bill C-30, after five days on second reading, we were also forced to serve notice and introduce this motion.

So why have recourse to that procedure as we are doing now? First of all, there is the practice I have just mentioned which seems to become a tradition whereby the opposition parties, excluding the Liberals when they were in opposition, feel the need to block passage, until S.O. 75c is used, of a bill authorizing the government to borrow money. It would appear that a practice has developed whereby an opposition party is reluctant to agree to a given period of time, even a long one, before referring a bill of this kind to committee.

Again I say that is done rightly or wrongly, but I am fully at ease to act as I am doing now because we feel that practice is unjustifiable. It seems to me that after five days of debate on second reading of a bill such as this one, knowing that the bill will be studied in Committee of the Whole and then come back on the floor of the House for the report and third reading stages, it seems unacceptable to me that a government which wants to discharge its full responsibilities should tolerate an even longer debate on second reading of a bill.

Mr. Speaker, here we are in 1981 and once again we are facing, and I repeat—

Mr. Kilgour: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Hear, hear. This is the year of the birth of my colleague's baby. I congratulate him. He was telling me yesterday how proud he was to be the father of a new baby born in 1981. The earth continues to turn, hon. members continue to have children, but we also continue to have too much work. We inherited a situation due to two elections within one year. Hon. members will recall May, 1979, and February, 1980, not even twelve months between those two elections, and during that time Parliament was practically paralysed and unable to meet its legislative obligations. Despite the fact that Parliament could not prevent work from piling up, the opposition still continues to enjoy all the benefits to which it is entitled under the rules of the House, and all I need do is point out to the 25 days allotted under the Standing Order governing the business of supply. The opposition is still entitled, and that is normal, to its six days of debate on the budget, to eight days on the throne speech, and also, as we saw before the holidays, to six days for two proclamations concerning certain sections of the Petroleum Administration Act.

I am saying all this because if on one hand Parliament is faced with an exceptionally heavy work load as a result of two elections within one year and of our ever greater contemporary obligations to intervene in various sectors of our society, be it energy, the economy or the Constitution, in spite of that additional load, fully explained and quite justified, the opposition still continues to enjoy the same privileges which take up so much of the time of the House. So we are all the more justified to act this way, Mr. Speaker, as we have on the Order Paper 40-odd bills which deserve to be studied during this session, as we have indicated in the Speech from the Throne.

For all these reasons, this action on the part of the government, in its wish to make this institution more effective seems logical to me and not an abuse especially when the opposition acts in this way for political or other reasons. I believe that a responsible government should put some order in the proceedings of the House, and that after a reasonable delay—I respectfully submit that is the case here as I have looked at second reading debates on similar bills, and I have noted that they have lasted an average of five days while, as we all know, after this motion, there will be an additional day of debate, which will mean six to seven days of debate at the second reading stage—we should keep to the average length of time spent on debates on similar bills in the past, and I think that no one could say that we are being arrogant or that we do not respect the right of members to express themselves on such bills. Once again, and I have spoken of this often, I know that my colleague from Nepean-Carleton agrees with me in this regard. As a matter of fact, he himself has tabled a working paper on the reform of our rules. I have read this paper with interest. It contains excellent suggestions. I do not agree with all of them, but as I have already stated, I intend to reintroduce several of them at the appropriate time.

However, until this desirable reform has occurred, it seems to me that we should all try to be reasonable and to limit the length of our speeches by using personal discipline. This would shorten the length of debate and while not preventing Parliament from sitting since it will sit as long as it does now in any case, it would allow Parliament to better reflect modern realities and assume its responsibilities in many areas instead of spending an undue amount of time in debating specific bills or issues.

I believe that the opposition could meet these objectives if it showed more discipline—and the same applies to the government—and it could debate and raise issues it considers of particular interest if the length of its speeches was limited to allow a greater number of legislative measures to be debated. I suggest that this would not penalize the opposition because the House would be sitting at least as long as it does now, and this institution would be able to play its true role, to show its respect for the Canadian people and to prove that it can be effective and worthy of their confidence.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the government House leader is so reasonable in his approach and in his words that he reminds me of a female black widow spider who, after she has attracted the male and gets him to mate, devours him. If we were to listen to the siren talk of the government House leader, that is what would happen to us. We would be devoured.

It is very significant that the government House leader said during his remarks that the government could no longer tolerate going on with further speeches on this borrowing bill. The government does not want to tolerate an opposition. It is intolerable to the government that there is an opposition in this House and that the opposition wants to discuss this bill.

This bill involves authority for the government to borrow $14 billion. It is objectionable not ony for that reason but because it also wants authority for $3 billion of that amount to continue on beyond the end of the next financial year, to continue indefinitely in case the government suffers from contingencies. The government foresees some kind of a $3 billion contingency for which it wants to retain authority. This has not been done before, at least not in my experience in this House. This is why we object to the bill, and we want to discuss it thoroughly.

The government has invoked closure on four occasions since it got re-elected on February 18. On June 9, 1980, it invoked closure on a borrowing authority bill. It borrowed $12 billion just six months ago. The government got final approval in July, and it used closure. On October 23, 1980, the government used closure on the constitutional resolution. On January 13, 1981, the government used closure on Bill C-48, a part of the government's new energy policy which is ruining Canada and which is foreclosing our economic prospects. Today the government is using closure, for the fourth time, to get approval to borrow $14 billion. That is a disgraceful and shameful record. Disgraceful and shameful is putting it mildly.

The minister says he wants this through the House so he can get on to other pressing and urgent business. Is it not pressing or urgent to the government that the people of Canada should have full information on what the government's financial policies are or what its economic policies are?

We are opposing this because the government has given no program to the Canadian people to overcome our present economic morass. We have not yet had any true budget. We had the budget that brought in the new energy policy of October 28, which is a complete disaster. The Economic Council of Canada has pointed out that it stops our chances for economic growth in the 1980s.

We are opposing this because of the government's absolute lack of concern for the consumer or for lower-income Canadians. We are opposing this because the government is allowing gasoline and oil product prices to burgeon, despite their promises during the campaign a year or so ago that they would not allow prices to group at all.

We are opposing it because of the lack of candor of the government. Neither in constitutional matters nor in financial matters is there any candour.

Just look at this. Here are the solemn commitments the Prime Minister made in the economic and financial field just last year. On January 19 in Vancouver the Prime Minister said, and I quote:

> Liberals believe that we should use all the instruments at our disposal to try and stem the tide of the coming recession.

That commitment was made during the campaign, but the government has not used one instrument at its disposal to try to stem the tide of the recession. We have been in a recession ever since they reassumed office. There are 945,000 people out of work today. The government has not used one instrument, much less all. The Prime Minister has forgotten that promise.

He said in Sudbury on February 2:

> We the Liberals would not try to set one province off against another. We would have responsible negotiations with the provinces and we'd work out a price.

That was an absolutely false statement. They have spent their time since February 18 setting off Ontario against Alberta, setting off east against west, setting off the centre of this country against the rest of this nation. There have been no responsible negotiations to work out a price for energy.

Other commitments made by the Prime Minister have been broken. Do you think we are going to approve borrowing authority of $14 billion for a Prime Minister who is so lacking in decent standards of conduct that he has forgotten the solemn commitments he made to the electorate a year ago?

He said at the great Liberal campaign college in Toronto back in January, and I quote:

We will hold the line on government expenditure growth to under the rate of GNP. He has not done that. The GNP went down last year, and spending is up something like 12 per cent.

He was going to review the tax system to ensure that everybody made a fair contribution to future needs. Instead of that we have had a series of tax increases for consumers of heating oil and gasoline and energy and no energy tax credit, nothing to help the lower income Canadians that we offered them in our budget. And on and on in this tissue of deception that the Prime Minister campaigned on.

This party will not simply stand by and let the recession come. We will fight it and overcome it.

That is completely forgotten. Another promise was that the Liberal party endorses the right of every Canadian to have a job.

I can go on and on with those commitments of the Prime Minister that he has forgotten. We do not propose just to go along blindly giving $14 billion in spending authority to a Prime Minister who has forgotten what the meaning of truth is or who has forgotten any concern at all about the ordinary Canadian. He has forgotten all his economic and financial pledges. He has a Minister of Finance who is the invisible man, who is hiding from the Canadian people because he has nothing to offer them. The Minister of Finance says he has a gradualist policy. He is going to reduce gradually the size of the deficit. He is taking a gradual approach. He has taken a very gradual approach to the truth, and so has his Prime Minister. He has taken a gradual approach to the loss of jobs, to the loss of real earning power by Canadian working people over the last three years, the loss of productivity, the reduction in the size of the deficit, and the increase in prices. An increase in prices this year of over 12 per cent is forecast. Is that a gradualist approach to improving the economic lot of Canadians? We have a gradualist Minister of Finance.

I say he is a gomphious Minister of Finance, which means toothless. We have a "gomphious", toothless Minister of Finance. He is "cacophrenic". That pertains to an inferior intellect, or if he has a superior one, he has not shown it to us. He is a Minister of Finance who has forgotten his beginnings. He has turned his back on the people of his own district. I referred to this, and I will refer to it again. It is the January 23, 1980, Scotia Sun published in Port Hawkesbury. This Minister of Finance, who is now in a position to carry out his promise, said that on December 11, 1979, the Tories attempted to put up oil and gas prices, but, he said, the Liberals had defeated them with the NDP.

Vote for Clark, Crosbie and the Tories and you have their promise that the price of gas will go up again!

He said: "December 13, 1979, the price comes down". Here is his picture up here. Then it says "because Allan J. MacEachen and the Liberal party spoke up for you". That is his allegation. Then he says, "Vote Liberal, and the price will stay down!" That is the living evidence of a lie because the Minister of Finance has done nothing to ensure the price will stay down. There have been eight price increases in oil products since that advertisement was published on January 23 and the government took over, and now the Minister of Finance is promising the people of this country that he will impose another price increase—for what? Not for western producers, not for the industry, not to encourage conservation but to finance Petro-Canada buying out Petrofina; $1.46 billion is to be collected from the consumers of this country regardless of whether they are rich or poor, medium income or what they are.

That is his promise, eight cents a gallon likely in gasoline; six cents a gallon on heating oils. That is what is going to happen or, if it is not all done in a year, if it is done over three years, we have to add $500 million in interest that the consumers of oil and gas products are going to have to pay in this country. That is why we cannot trust this government to spend this $14 billion. We cannot give them an extra $3 billion authority beyond the end of next year. It is not a truthful government. It is a deceitful government. It is a deceptive government which is given its example by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, that to tell the truth is silly. To tell the truth is foolish. It is "fool the people", that is the policy.

It is the half truths, the amused shrug of the shoulders when you are caught in saying an untruth, a tongue in cheek attitude. Now, after only 12 hours of debate, never mind five days, that is, over $1,150 million of borrowing authority an hour, the government is going to impose closure to stop us from considering this bill further or asking the government questions. Read the two speeches made by government members, one by the Minister of State for Finance, and another short one by the parliamentary secretary. There was no information in them at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Crosbie: I urge all hon. members to vote against this attempt to stop the debate.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are opposed to the motion to which the President of the Privy Council has placed before us today, and we shall make that clear when the vote comes some time this evening.

Fundamentally, we are opposed to the motion because we believe that the use of Rule 75c is no way to run this House of Commons. I quite agree with the emphasis which has been put by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) on the fact that Bill C-59 is a bill of considerable importance since it asks for authority to borrow $14 billion, and the thought of closing off debate on such an important matter is really preposterous.

Let me get back to my basic contention that the use of Standing Order 75c is no way to run the business of Parliament. I know that every time this two hour debate takes place under rule 75c, there are those on the government side who will say the rule is in the book, it is there to be used, and it is perfectly proper and legal to do so. Like a few other members in the House, I was here when Standing Order 75c was put into our rule book. I have here two volumes of Hansard, which I think should be recommended reading to those who are not aware of how we came to have Rule 75c. Shortly after the election of 1968 when the present Prime Minister came back to the first full term of his government, a very large package of rule changes was proposed by the president of the Privy Council of that day, the Hon. Donald Macdonald. It was proposed early in the session which began in 1968, and we dealt with it off and on right up until Chritsmas. There were some good things in that package. There were changes in respect of the handling of bills, which included the report stage, there were changes with regard to the supply practice, and so on. But included in that package was a rule called 16a which practically put in the hands of the government House leader the right to close off debate at any time. The House found it most offensive, and most of the debating and fighting over that package centred around Rule 16a. Finally, because Christmas was approaching and members wanted to get home as did the government, the government agreed to drop Rule 16a from the package if we would put the rest of the rules through. The House agreed to that suggestion, and we got rid of Rule 16a, or at least we thought we did.

At the same time, the government proposed a motion that later on there be a further study of the question of the use of time. So, come June of 1969, we had back before us a substitute of the old Rule 16a, which was Rule 75a, 75b and 75c. We found it no better than the old Rule 16a and we continued our opposition to it. If one were to read Volume X of Hansard of the session of 1968-69, one would find that it was debated at length in the House, it was dealt with in the standing committee for a long time, and finally it came back to the House for further debate. How did it end? It ended because the government decided it wanted to have that rule, on the books despite the opposition of all opposition parties, and it invoked the old 1913 closure rule to put another closure rule in the rule book.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Knowles: The vote of the opposition parties against it was unanimous. It was only because of the government's majority that it was put through. While I have to admit that, legally, that puts the rule in the rule book, it is really only a rule of the Liberal majority; it is not the rule adopted in the way which most rules of parliament are adopted; that is by Parliament, by consensus. I think it is a travesty of parliamentary practice to keep on using that rule, and it makes it even worse when members stand up, as they probably will today, and say that they have the right to use the rule because it is there. They put it there under conditions that are a disgrace to Parliament itself, and I believe this should not be done.

I have demonstrated several times in debating these motions under Rule 75c that I am not opposed to efforts being made to make good use of our time, and I think we have to pursue that effort. The difficulty with Rule 75c is that every time it is used, the government thinks it does not have to do anything more about the use of time. I proposed, the last time we debated this, that we should have the government's business for the session given to us at the start, and that we should have a set of rules under which we could send a few unimportant bills to committee without debate, have a fixed time limit of a day or two of debate on the bulk of the bills, and have debate without restriction on the crucial bills, the controversial ones picked out by the opposition. I still think that is a good idea.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that even in my lifetime in this Parliament there have been many changes in the use of time. Some members would be surprised if I told them that when I first came here there was no limit on the time to be taken up by the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, there was no limit on the debate on the budget, there was no limit on supply, there was not even a fixed limit on the number of supply motions. In fact, all we had was a 40-minute limitation on speeches and the rule that the House rise at eleven o'clock at night. Let me say that in those days we sat until eleven p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays. It is pretty soft around here these days.

The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that the business with which we have to deal has grown and multiplied tremendously, so we have put in some time rules. We have cut the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne down to eight days, we have cut the budget debate down to six days, and we have cut the supply days down to 25. We have made all sorts of arrangements which arise from the fact that there are only so many days in the year and that the business has to be dealt with, business which, as I said, has increased tremendously. I believe what we have to deal with, what we have to come to, is a planning of the whole session. That is totally different from going along, as we do, allowing the government, on an ad hoc basis and whenever it feels frustrated, whenever it feels it cannot tolerate any more debate, to come in and use an unfair rule to cut off debate on the part of the opposition.

As I said already, I fully agree with the position taken by the hon. member for St. John's West that this is a bill of great magnitude and of great concern.

While you have been in the Chair, Mr. Speaker, you yourself have found it difficult to apply the rule of relevance to the debate on this bill because it touches the whole gambit of economic affairs in this country, including taxation, spending, and government policy in every area. In other words, it is probably the most important subject that has been before Parliament in this session. Some might say that the constitution is more important, but we have that with us day and night, we have lived with it for 114 years. However, in terms of the problems facing the country in the economic area, an economic bill becomes terribly important. In that respect, I submit that Bill C-59 is a very important bill and that the government is doing no service to Parliament and no service to the people of this country by imposing closure under Rule 75c. I know the government does not like to call it closure; it likes to call it allocation of time. The President of the Privy Council slipped once yesterday when he called it "limitation of time". In other words, it is closure, Mr. Speaker.

I end with the words I used when I began: this is no way to run the House of Commons of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we are now dealing with a motion introduced by the President of the Privy Council, intended to limit the debate on second reading of Bill C-59, an extremely important measure providing for the government a borrowing authority of $14 billion. The proposal for a time limit does not indicate that the government does not believe in that important measure. On the contrary, it is a significant bill but is is the responsibility of the Leader of the Government in the House and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to organize and plan the legislative program and the business of the House to manage to get some bills passed during a session. The President of the Privy Council has indicated that he was not very thrilled to introduce this motion in his capacity as government House leader. It is generally agreed that it would be far better to reach a consensus or to resort to provisions under S.O. 75a or even to come to an agreement of the kind which took place, for example, last week when in the space of a few days we disposed of several bills of some significance since one of them amended the Income Tax Act, while another had to do with equalization payments to the provinces. However, when the government House leader and President of the Privy Council reviews the bills which should be considered and passed by this House, there comes a time when he must decide whether he will allow the debate to go on indefinitely, as it seems to be the case with Bill C-59, or will he try to get the other House leaders to agree on a time schedule as he did in this case. However, if there is no agreement, if he cannot get a consensus, he must decide whether he will let the debate go on or limit the speeches. He took that decision to let us have an orderly calendar and to speed up our proceedings in the House and not, as I said earlier, because he thought that the bill was not important or because he enjoyed taking that kind of decision. On the contrary, I think that it is with regret that he took it but it is his duty as government House leader to organize and plan the legislative business of the government.

As I said, Bill C-59 is seeking a supplementary borrowing authority of $14 billion. Already, on second reading, 24 hon. members have had the opportunity to indicate what their respective party's position is on this issue; more specifically, 19 members of the Progressive Conservative Party have already indicated what they think of this bill seeking a $14 billion supplementary borrowing authority, and four members of the New Democratic Party have done the same. I feel that when 19 members of the same party comment on a bill, it should be adequate to put forward their party's position on that bill, whether it is for or against it, as well as its reasons for being for or against it.

And I think that because all these 19 members who have received the proper training, who had adequately prepared their remarks, have each spoken for more than the 20 minutes allotted to them, without making any rhetorical comments and abusing the time of the House, we now know all the reasons why anybody could be against this bill. And I think that the same applies to the speeches made by the four NDP members who had carefully prepared their remarks of over 20 minutes duration, who researched their subject to tell us why their party should oppose this $14 billion borrowing authority, so that they had all the time they needed to indicate why their respective parties oppose this $14 billion borrowing authority. In any event, as indicated by the President of the Privy Council, this evening, after the vote on the time allocation motion, the debate on the borrowing authority will resume and continue as well on Monday.

In addition, the bill will be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance where, once again, committee members who represent the three parties sitting in the House will have the opportunity to put questions not only to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and myself but also to departmental officials on the bill requesting a $14 billion borrowing authority. Might I also point out that when departmental estimates come up for study each year, hon. members have a chance to put many questions on all aspects of government spending, whether it be those of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, Department of the Solicitor General of Canada, or the important and wise expenditures of the Department of the Environment with its fine scientific program, Parks Canada. All those topics and departments can be adequately examined in depth through whatever questions are put, so that not only are the $14 billion expenditures looked into but also the expenditures involved in the estimates prepared by the government that are subjected to close examination in the standing committee.

All that to say, Mr. Speaker, that during those five days when 19 members of the Progressive Conservative Party and four of the NDP intervened in the debate, it became clear why those two parties oppose the bill granting a $14 billion borrowing authority. Their reasons were either philosophical or practical. For instance, it was claimed that the amount was too high, that it would burden the country for far too long a time, and so on. Be that as it may, there was time to point out the reasons why passage of this bill is being opposed, to express them without repeating them, because repetition of arguments does not lend them greater strength and their substance rests on principles, on their logic and not on a mere repetition or summing up. Because something is repeated 20 times over does not add to its logic. It may sink in one's mind better, but that is a matter of memory and not intelligence, and passing judgment depends on intelligence and not memory. Remembering things depends on memory, but judging them depends on reason. So, it is pointless to repeat the same thing for 20, 25 or 26 hours. The matter at hand is one of argument and demonstration that one is right; that has already been done over a certain length of time, or a number of hours; arguments have been made and proved and, for our part, we feel the point has been made adequately. Why are they opposing it? As for us, we took a few minutes to make our point on second reading, and we are ready to keep discussing this particular bill in committee. As I said, Mr. Speaker, all members have the opportunity to ask questions on every aspect of government spending during consideration of the estimates in committee.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the government House leader is always reluctant to set a time limit on debate. He would rather reach a common agreement, but he has to assume his responsibilities and expedite the business of the House and the government's legislative program in an orderly fashion. That is why we have to discuss this motion.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the remarks of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières), who implied that the government was continually faced with delays which they for some reason or other could no longer tolerate. It should be apparent to all hon. members and particularly to the deputy government whip who just waved to me that that is not the case.

The history of this session of Parliament has been that when the Government of Canada has seen fit to bring forward legislation which advances the interests of the country, the opposition parties have in fact co-operated with the government House leader to ensure that the legislation goes through. Although there are many such instances, two come to mind. One is the freedom of information bill on which we spent only one day of debate, because it was a worth-while piece of legislation and there was general agreement in principle. There were some differences with regard to some measures in the bill, but a general agreement in principle.

As the result of agreement between all parties, a House order was introduced today with respect to an important bill to amend the Excise Tax Act. I say to the Minister of State for Finance that he ought not to imply, as I believe he was coming very close to implying, that the government is beside itself because it has a great legislative program which it must get through.

If the minister was classifying the borrowing authority bill, to borrow $14 billion which will be laid on the backs of Canadians, as one of the pieces of legislation which just must get through, then I take issue with him and the implication in his speech, and with the statement by the government House leader that the government just cannot tolerate the delay. The government has said that the precedent for their actions is that I did the same thing when I was government House leader.

I imposed closure after five days of debate on a bill which was quite different. This borrowing authority bill does not confer any benefits on Canadians. It confers a $14 billion debt on the taxpayers. It loads onto a tax system which is already loaded. It is so loaded that out of the total outlay of government expenditures of some $67 billion, approximately $12 billion constitute the debt charges as the result of the government's borrowing. One fifth of the total government expenditures constitutes debt charges. That money does not come out of the air; it comes out of the taxpayers' pockets. The government must repay that money with interest. This bill is of no particular benefit to Canadians, because the government has not outlined an economic program. I contrast closure, limitation of time, shortening the debate, or what have you on this occasion, with the benefit which we as the government sought to incur in the bill in respect of which we were forced, by reason of repetition, to introduce closure. That bill, the property tax credit bill, stood in the name of the then minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

The property tax credit bill would have allowed home owners the benefit of such a tax credit. It was introduced in a period of time when interest rates were not as high as they are today and the difficulty of owning a home was not as apparent. It was at a time when AHOP was at least still working, even though we were warned it would not work and that people would walk away. It was not a time when people were walking away from their homes because they cannot carry the mortgages because interest rates are being doubled upon renewal. This is the situation in my constituency, in Toronto, in the constituency of Brampton-Georgetown, in southwestern Ontario or Saskatoon, it is the result of high interest costs which are caused direct by the economic policies of this government. At the time, we were in government and, because we wanted to confer a benefit on Canadians, we felt we had to use Standing Order 75c. There is no benefit being conferred on anybody by this bill, none whatsoever.

Mr. Evans: What about the principle?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I understand the necessity even though the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) does not understand.

Mr. Evans: I understand the principle.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The hon. member does not seem to understand the difference between a piece of borrowing legislation which would impose $14 billion in debt upon the system and the property tax credit bill which would benefit a property owner.

Mr. Evans: It is irrelevant to the principle.

S.O. 75c

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The hon. member is mouthing from his seat the same speech he made on the last occasion. He is beyond the pale, I feel nothing but kindly pity for him, and I express it to him.

Mr. Evans: How does that relate to the principle of cessation of debate in Parliament?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It relates in this way. A government must have the power from time to time to shorten debate. However, that power is such a strong weapon that it must be used judiciously. It ought not to be used, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said, in a bill of this nature, a bill which can impose tremendous burdens. However, when a government has a specific program which it would like to bring forward and which is of some benefit to the country then, I believe, in the face of mindless opposition—and that is precisely what we faced with regard to the property tax bill—it is justified. There is as much difference between this borrowing bill and the property tax credit legislation as there is between night and day in terms of benefits.

Mr. Evans: I am glad you are not the House leader any more.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If the government would use closure or allocation of time, then, in the absence of any other remedy, the government has the power to cut off the right of parliamentarians to speak. While I was government House leader, I put forward some proposals which I believe would have given additional rights for Parliament to hold government accountable. However, the history of rule changes has not been to make Parliament less the handmaiden of the government; it has been exactly the reverse. Parliament's powers have been eroded.

Parliament's power to carry out the duty of making the government accountable has been less with each change. I would like to believe and accept wholeheartedly that it is the intention of the government House leader to give greater opportunity to the opposition parties or private members of this House to hold a government accountable. I hope his legislation will preserve, on the one hand, the right of the government to govern and, on the other hand, provide the opportunity to the opposition and others within this Parliament who are not members of the government the right to hold the government accountable. That is why we are here. Part of that accounting process now is the right to debate and to expose to public view the failure of government policy. The failure of the government's economic policy shows in this bill in two ways. First, we are looking at $14 billion; second, it is for a period beyond that which is required by the government. No self-respecting member of Parliament could possibly support the motion put forward by the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be here.

An hon. Member: Is the applause for you?

Mr. Peterson: I appreciate the distinguished taste of my colleague, but I think the applause was because the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) had finished his remarks. It is obvious that I have not been here very long; I have been here for approximately a year. Perhaps I have a lot to learn, but, after listening to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, I should like to recount the lessons I took from what he said.

I think he was telling the House that if we had an important bill before us it would not require debate, we could agree to it, it would go through, and the opposition would not consider it worthy of debate. He is saying this is not an important bill, therefore they will debate it. He said that we do not have a program before us, therefore they will debate it.

Mr. Kilgour: Horse feathers.

Mr. Peterson: That is what the member said. I can assure the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) that he will find those comments in the blues.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Read the blues.

Mr. Peterson: Even though I am a new person around here, to me it is an unacceptable approach.

Another thing concerned me about his speech and it relates to the substance of what we are doing right now. He said that the bill on which he introduced Standing Order 75c, the tax credit for home owners, was fundamentally different from this borrowing bill; therefore, he was justified in doing what he did but we are not justified in what we are doing at the present time. When is it justified to use Standing Order 75c?

As a new Member of Parliament, I feel it would be appropriate to look at the words of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton when he compared the use of closure in the flag debate to his use of closure in December, 1979. He said:

> It was the initiative behind the debate to ram changes in the rules of the House down the throats of members. I do not intend to do that today. What we are using here, and I think we had better make it clear to the people of Canada, is time allocation under the provisions of Standing Order 75c. This is a far gentler measure.

I suggest it is. It was put in the rules for a very important reason, the reason expressed by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton at that time. He said:

> If I had any qualms or any worries as a parliamentarian about bringing forward a motion of this nature to close off debate, these qualms and worries disappeared a few months ago when I watched a long litany of motions and other matters being brought forward that bore no relevance to the business of the House.

Mr. Kilgour: You have only ten minutes.

Mr. Peterson: Let me turn to what has been brought forward thus far during the debate on this matter. Everyone in the House agrees that Canada's economic future is of major importance to every Canadian.

Mr. Kilgour: Do the Liberals?

Mr. Peterson: There is absolutely no question that every one of us feels it must be given due time and attention. When we discussed the budget we had opportunity to debate economic matters; as well as on various opposition days. Having introduced the budget, having it fully debated and having had the House agree to it, we are just taking one logical step to implement its provisions—the authorization of the necessary borrowing power.

Mr. Kilgour: Plus $3 billion.

Mr. Peterson: What constructive alternatives have been put forward by members opposite?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Many.

Mr. Peterson: The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) criticized our economic policies. I should like to point to two of his criticisms. He said we have broken promises.

Miss MacDonald: That is true.

Mr. Peterson: We have never broken our promises on energy. Our promise on the pricing of energy was that it would always be lower than the price charged by Tories. We have held by that commitment, and we shall honour it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Your commitment was that the price would always stay down.

Mr. Peterson: The hon. member will remember his comments to the House a few minutes ago when he criticized Petro-Canada and the fact that Petro-Canada would acquire Petrofina, so that Canadians from coast to coast could have their own retail outlets and could drive their cars into Petrofina stations. Does he want that for his home riding? Is he concerned that his riding will have Petrofina service stations? Does he not want Petrofina stations in his riding?

Mr. Crosbie: Petrofina is not there. We do not need them, and we do not need Petro-Canada.

Mr. Peterson: Canadians in every city which has had Petrofina stations have responded by giving them the greatest patronage of any retail outlet in the country. We are proud of that move. We invite hon. members opposite to join with us in supporting the move of Petro-Canada to bring the energy situation back to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raised a matter of serious concern; that is, the allocation of time in the House. In raising that question, I think he recognized that we have a very complex and difficult situation before us. There are many problems of importance with which we must be concerned. I refer particularly to the constitutional bill and to the National Energy Program. None of us have pretended that these measures are simple; they are important.

An hon. Member: Oh, hell.

Mr. Peterson: If the hon. member is indicating that the National Energy Program and the constitutional resolution are not worth anything more than a profane comment, I wish he would accord the House the respect it is due and read about those two matters. He would find them most enlightening. It astonishes me that hon. members opposite have raised again this question of the Constitution. Are they afraid they will miss this historic moment in Canada's development? They will have an opportunity to join with the premier of Ontario and the premier of New Brunswick. They will have a chance to join with the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peterson: They will have a chance to join with them.

Miss MacDonald: Crawl into bed with whom you will.

Mr. Peterson: They will have a chance to join with the people of Canada and to give the people of Canada what you and they admitted they want. They want a constitution made in Canada, with an amending formula and a charter of rights. That is what the people of Canada want, and we have the courage to give it to them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: I feel sorry for members opposite. What will they say to their children 20 years from now when they ask, "Where were you; where did you stand when they brought the Constitution home?" We are talking about serious measures.

We have before us a motion to limit debate on a matter which has been discussed by the opposition. This is a supplementary aspect relating to the budget. We want an opportunity to discuss other important measures such as the National Energy Program and the constitutional bill. We will welcome the comments of members opposite. We will await patiently their concrete alternatives.

The hon. member for St. John's West criticized the budget on which this is based. He said it did not contain all the measures that were in his bill.

An hon. Member: Thank goodness.

Mr. Peterson: What constructive alternatives did the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton call for before one can introduce Standing Order 75c? What constructive alternatives did he present? I have not heard them. I have listened to a cacophony of gushing and meowing. They have asked for at least 30 new spending programs, in the face of a very responsible budget. The budget did not depress the economy by decreasing the deficit too much and it did not increase inflation by increasing spending the way the NDP wanted.

Members of the official opposition cannot have it both ways. They cannot call for at least 30 new spending programs and ask us to reduce the deficit even more. That is why you have to be consistent. I ask for their reasonable consideration of our efforts to get on with the major business rather than steamroll and buttress these arguments which have no bearing on what is the substance of our economic program, the National Energy Program being at the heart of it.

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I speak, Mr. Speaker, and I ask for the support of this House for limitation on debate at this particular time.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) who I presume time has passed by as he slept away there in the backbenches of the Liberal Party. He is certainly unaware of the facts and seeks to prove a totally false case, that the energy promises made in the last election campaign by his party have not been absolutely and totally broken. Just look at the way in which the price of gasoline and the price of oil per barrel have increased since last February. In case the hon. member does not know it, the price of a barrel of oil has gone up $4.88 in that year. That is far more than the $4 which was talked about by the Conservative government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: In case he does not know it, I can tell the hon. member the price of gasoline per gallon has gone up eight different times since last February. Let me repeat, it has gone up eight different times, totalling more than 20 cents. It has gone up 30 cents a gallon in the city of Montreal, and there is more to come. The poor member from Willowdale has been unaware of all of that.

An hon. Member: He has been asleep.

Miss MacDonald: I pity him, Mr. Speaker. But far more do I pity the people of Canada who were taken in by the false promises of the Liberal Party when they made them a year ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Here we have the Liberal Party, the Grit government, once again trying to muzzle Parliament. Here they are invoking closure, refusing to let Members of Parliament express their point of view and doing their utmost to destroy the morale and spirit of this chamber. I shuddered earlier this afternoon when I heard the government House leader alluding to opposition days. He implied that we did not have anything to worry about because we have so many opposition days. It seems to me the moment he brings something like that to our attention he says it with a self-fulfilling prophecy. I think he really wants those opposition days to disappear, and would take those away from the opposition as well, just as he has been trying to take away the right to speak in this chamber, and trying to limit debate on any number of bills that we have before us.

Mr. Evans: Name one.

Miss MacDonald: I suppose we should not be surprised by that. When he spoke in the chamber on January 13, this year, we find at page 6147 of Hansard the following:

> If in the future we do not obtain agreement to reasonable time limits on the discussion of a particular bill, then it will be impossible for this House to function and we will be forced to use Standing Order 75C more frequently than has been the case in the past.

That is what he said when he threatened the House in January. It is certainly coming true. It has become commonplace for this government to introduce closure. We have seen it on three different occasions in the last four months. We saw closure introduced during the constitutional debate. Then we saw closure introduced in the energy debate. The member from Willowdale said that he wanted to be able to debate energy matters in this House. It was his government House leader who introduced closure relating to regulation of oil and gas in Canada lands. Now we have closure on a bill which goes to the very heart of Parliament itself, namely, parliamentary approval for the government on the way it supposedly handles the finances of the country judiciously.

The parliamentary system is based on the principle that the way in which the government raises or spends public moneys must be thoroughly and exhaustively examined by Members of Parliament. That is the single most important reason why this institution exists.

Back in the days when the barons forced the monarch to relinquish some of his power over the purse, they felt they should know how and from whom money was going to be raised, and that they should know how and on what it was going to be used. I sometimes think as I sit here in this chamber that the barons in those days of burgeoning Parliamentary process were more successful in getting answers from the monarch to the critical questions of how money is raised and spent than are opposition members who put questions to government ministers in the House of Commons today. I have no doubt that King John was far more forthcoming than King Pierre.

Mr. Crosbie: Queen Pierre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Here we are facing closure on a money bill which asks us for government authority to borrow $14 billion: For what? We don't know.

Mr. Evans: Read the budget.

Miss MacDonald: For how long? We don't know that either. At what rate? That is another unknown factor. What we do know is that $14 billion is one heck of a lot of money. It is a lot of money and it is not a figure to which most Canadians can easily relate. Quite frankly, I admit it is very difficult to relate to $14 billion. I have to try to relate it to something more tangible than just say it is a lot of money. I suppose if I were to relate it to a commodity, such as cars, I could figure out that for $14 billion we could buy 1,400,000 cars at $10,000 each. In other words, you could buy a car for every man, woman and child in greater Vancouver. That gives you some idea of the magnitude of the amount of money the government is seeking. As soon as you begin relating that figure to something tangible you are struck by the enormity of the amount the government is asking for in this borrowing bill. Is it any wonder that members feel obligated to ask about the bill, to debate the matter, and to raise it over and over again? Is it any wonder that members are perturbed that this amount will drive up our already unmanageable national debt? It will drive up the amount of money which flows continually out of this country for interest rates on loans already outstanding. I have to ask myself what is it about this bill which makes the Liberals so reluctant to allow members to debate it in full. The answer is probably because it is an embarrassing bill—

An hon. Member: It's a cover-up!

Miss MacDonald: —and because it is a bill which points to the sorry state of the government's debt. It is a bill which points to the Liberal government's inability to hold on to the purse strings. It points as well to the lack of respect which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) have for the taxpayer's dollar. No wonder they do not want to debate it. No wonder they are invoking closure. They cannot stand the heat of having their economic policies and their economic record brought up time and time again. They are running out of arguments to support what really is in essence insupportable.

No doubt one of the reasons they are invoking closure is that they cannot get anybody on that side to stand up and say anything positive about the government's economic record. Closure is a pretty harsh measure to invoke when members are genuinely trying to figure out what are the government's economic priorities. That is a difficult job at any time, Mr. Speaker, but in a period of recession, such as we have today, surely the government should be willing to listen to suggestions of how it should better order its priorities to get the best possible value it can from its dollars.

We know the government does not like to refer to what is going on here today as closure. It would rather refer to it as time allocation under Standing Order 75C. We know only too well and they know only too well that closure does not smell very sweet. However, closure under any name you want to give it, no matter how you attempt to pour perfume on it, will not make it any sweeter. Every time this government introduces closure as it has done, it chews away at the very foundations of our parliamentary system.

In closing, I would like to say that the group opposite is like a bunch of termites or death watch beetles eating away at the basic underpinnings of this structure. What they do not seem to realize or appreciate is that this kind of sustained abuse to which they are subjecting Parliament not only demeans and degrades Parliament, but in the end, if they continue in this way, will destroy it.

[Translation]

Mr. René Gingras (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the motion introduced by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) pursuant to Standing Order 75C is to limit debate on Bill C-59. The House has been discussing this bill since January 30. Furthermore, it will be considered in committee and must be approved by March 31 for the government to proceed with its 1981-82 borrowing program.

Mr. Speaker, the House has 40-odd bills and resolutions to consider. In the last year, the President of the Privy Council has done a very efficient job as government House leader in an attempt to make up for the time lost during Parliament's sabbatical leave which lasted from May, 1979, to February 1980. Mr. Speaker, these are historical times. I am happy to be living at this point in our history, when we are dealing with an energy policy and a Canadian Constitution with a charter of rights and an amending formula.

At present, the House has 32 standing, special or joint committees whose purpose is to relieve the House of its workload. I have here the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, and I want to draw the attention of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) to the fact that there is a vast difference between Standing Orders 33 and 75, the latter being divided into three parts. Under Standing Order 75A, there can be an agreement to allot time for a debate. Standing Order 75B deals with the situation where the majority of members come to an agreement in respect to a debate. The present motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 75C which applies when no agreement has been reached on time allotment. The President of the Privy Council gave notice yesterday that we would be debating this motion today.

Here we are, Mr. Speaker, participating in a debate which could have been avoided if the opposition did not want to appear on television at all costs. I think the proceedings of all 32 committees should be broadcast to enable the Progressive Conservatives to say "Hello, mom." on television. We saw this morning when the Constitution committee proceedings were no longer televised that the Progressive Conservatives completely changed positions. Those same hon. members refuse to shorten the speeches. If at least their speeches were entirely relevant, but they are always harping on the same string, but I shall not name anybody.

Mr. Speaker, we were elected to the Canadian Parliament to make it work. We were also elected to represent our constituents in our respective ridings.

Mr. Kilgour: Do it!

Mr. Gingras: We need time to do that. We have to update our Standing Orders. An efficient way to begin updating our

S.O. 75C

Standing Orders is to limit our own speeches. Having said this, Mr. Speaker, we shall have the opportunity perhaps in the next debate to apply S.O. 75A and to agree on time allocation in the House. Mr. Speaker, I hope I shall not have to make another speech on S.O. 75C in the forthcoming debate next week.

[English]

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to those on the government side speak about Standing Order 75C. Without the advice of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I went back to see how 75C came about. I can only say that I agree with my colleagues 100 per cent.

Members opposite say it is a parliamentary law, one of the rules of Parliament, so they should use it. It is a law that was brought in by closure. The laws of Parliament must be built by consensus. We, the elected Members of Parliament representing our constituents want to have this House work effectively and we strive to that end. We cannot have the tyranny of a majority. This law was put on the books by a Grit majority. It was brought in by closure. The government member who just spoke said they want an efficient government, an efficient operation of this House. By continuing to use 75C, they indicate that they want to be efficient but do not want opposition. They do not want any member of this party or the party to my left to oppose them. They want to run roughshod over the people of Canada, continuing in their wild and woolly spending ways.

Government tells us not to debate in this House, not to bring up those things they have done. We are told not to get involved. The government says it wants to run Canada and that it should be allowed to dominate it. If we oppose, they bring in 75C. That is what this government has done, is continuing to do and will do in the future when people in Canada try to express a legitimate concern on behalf of their constituents.

We are here to express concerns on behalf of those we represent. We are expressing concern on behalf of those who contribute the money about the spending by this government. We are debating Bill C-59 because we have a debt. It is not the government that has the debt, but the people of Canada. It is not Liberal members opposite who owe this money, but all Canadians. As far as the use of 75C is concerned, which stifles and stops debate and the democratic process, I find it repugnant both as a Canadian and a parliamentarian.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)—Federal lands—Yukon—Disposition of certain lots without tender; the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)—Petro-Canada—Inquiry whether offer made to purchase Petrofina; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Fisheries—Regulation of herring fishing on west coast.

● (1700)

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills. There being no items on the Order Paper under the heading of private bills, the House will proceed to the notices of motions (papers).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

REDUCTION OF SHAREHOLDINGS BY TATE & LYLE HOLDINGS LTD. IN REDPATH SUGAR LIMITED

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all agreements, correspondence, notes and other communications relating to the requirement by the Foreign Investment Review Agency that Tate & Lyle Holdings Limited reduce its shareholdings in Redpath Sugar Limited.

He said: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not the first time I have stood in the House to discuss this particular subject. May I say at the outset and repeat what I have said before, though I will be mentioning Redpath Sugar, I am not criticizing any of their actions. Though I will be mentioning the Export Development Corporation, I will not be attacking them. Even though I will be talking about the Foreign Investment Review Agency, it is only because of some concerns about the operation of the agency which I hope to explain in my remarks.

The interest in the subject of sugar goes back several years to my concern about developing countries in the Caribbean. It seemed to me it did not make sense that we in Canada were importing our sugar from Africa, crossing the Atlantic in one direction, while the Caribbean countries were sending their sugar across the Atlantic in the other direction to England.

I asked a question back in the fall of 1974 about the import of sugar from the Caribbean countries and the effects of transportation costs. The answer I received was that the transportation costs of sugar from any country of origin are not taken directly into account. The price of sugar in Canada is linked directly to the London daily price. In response to some further questions on tonnage, I was told again in the fall of 1974 that, whereas Canada was importing some 4,000 metric tons of sugar from Barbados, that country was sending 102,000 tons to the United Kingdom, and Jamaica was sending about 10,000 metric tons to Canada and 158,000 metric tons to the United Kingdom. Also in the same response, when I asked about the estimated percentage of Canadian sugar imports being received by Canada Sugar and Dominion Sugar, which was at that time and presumably still is a subsidiary company of Tate & Lyle Holdings Ltd., I was told that 37 per cent of our raw sugar imports were being brought into the country by that company. I did note that some 105,000 or 106,000 metric tons of sugar was coming in from Cuba, which would indicate there was no reason why there should not have been some agreement with the other Caribbean countries.

I have mentioned Tate & Lyle Holdings Ltd. and that is going to be part of the reason for discussion this afternoon. Tate & Lyle Holdings Ltd., which has an operation in some 24 countries including Canada, is obviously a giant multinational and effectively controls the sugar market of the world.

In February, 1975, we read the report that Redpath Industries Limited, a subsidiary of Tate & Lyle Holdings Ltd., was criticizing politicians and it suggested that politicians were becoming instant experts on sugar matters. I suggest we have not taken enough interest in this subject.

In April, 1976, Redpath Industries Limited issued a news release and I quote from this release:

> Redpath Industries Limited has been awarded a contract to construct a major agro-industrial sugar complex by the government of the Ivory Coast in Africa. Total cost is estimated at $155 million—

The Export Development Corporation gave a boost to Redpath Sugars Limited, and this is probably why the contract was signed, by helping finance the Canadian sugar complex on the Ivory Coast. The Export Development Corporation kicked in, according to the report, $88.3 million in the form of a ten-year loan. I also read that some $10 million was expected to come from the Canadian International Development Agency in the form of a concessionary financing loan. I am not particularly opposed to the co-operation between CIDA and EDC. In fact, I have suggested we probably do not do enough of this type of thing. If we follow the example of West Germany as a case in point, we might find it somewhat easier to increase our export business.

However, the repayment of this Export Development Corporation loan was to be in 20 semi-annual instalments beginning six months after completion. The Export Development Corporation also provided a guarantee for loans by banks of up to $5 million. The terms under which the agreement was made were not disclosed, and I do not take great issue with the reasoning given.

I discussed the matter in the House in December, 1977, and the following month received a letter from the chairman of the board and president of the Export Development Corporation, Mr. John A. MacDonald. I am digressing somewhat, but I mentioned Mr. John MacDonald last week in this House when I was speaking of the reorganization of the Department of Public Works. Back in the late 1960s he was the deputy minister of that department. If I can read from his letter, and I have read this into the record before, he says and I quote:

> Only by guaranteeing commercial confidentiality will clients of the corporation be prepared to disclose the kind of information necessary to ensure viable transactions and serve the Canadian interest.

Further on in the letter we read and I quote:

> —you and other interested Canadians . . . cannot become party to information which, if released, might put Canadian firms at a competitive disadvantage.

The difficulty I am running into will become apparent. In a letter dated May, 1979, from the then minister of industry, trade and commerce there was some discussion of the commitment by Tate & Lyle Holdings Ltd., the parent of Redpath Sugar to which I have previously referred. He said in his letter that the commitment, that is to divest itself of its interest in Redpath, will be implemented as soon as the financial position of Tate & Lyle Holdings Ltd. recovers sufficiently.

What bothers me somewhat is that if we are waiting for the share price to improve so that Tate & Lyle Holdings Ltd. can put its shares on the market for Canadians, it means in effect we are waiting for a time when Canadians can be expected to pay more for those shares.

I understand why the Foreign Investment Review Agency may have some reason for extending the original agreement, but once again this question of disclosure is looming large. What we do not know makes us ask questions.

In November, 1977, talking about this undertaking by Redpath Industries and its U.K. parent, Tate & Lyle Holdings Ltd., we note there were two investment proposals which were allowed under the Foreign Investment Review Act. The date of allowance was October 7, 1976, and the undertaking was that Redpath and its parent, Tate & Lyle Holdings Ltd., would increase the participation by Canadians in the capital stock of Redpath to 52 per cent, and the fulfilment of this undertaking was not required until September 30, 1980. At that time it was some three years after the date of the letter I received from the then minister of industry, trade and commerce.

The legally binding undertakings made by a firm in the course of winning approval from the agency are in most cases not published. There is no public accounting of how well companies have fared in meeting the undertakings to provide significant benefit, and the agency at one time estimated that approximately 20 per cent of the cases failed to meet the original undertakings.

Thus in the minds of members of the public there is some doubt as to whether there is any strength to the original agreements, and we are therefore somewhat concerned about enforcement. "We need more data to maintain public confidence in the integrity of the process". That statement was made by the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray).

It is interesting that in the 1979-1980 annual report on the Foreign Investment Review Act we find that following the election on February 18, 1980, the minister to whom I have referred, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, became the minister responsible for the administration of the Foreign Investment Review Act. This gentleman was the head of a group which was established in 1970 to analyse foreign investment in Canada and to recommend appropriate policy measures to the government of the day.

The group's 1972 report, "Foreign Direct Investment in Canada," led to the enactment of the Foreign Investment Review Act and to the creation of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Most acquisitions are by non-Canadians, and this also applies to new businesses.

I want to talk now about the number of cases which are going through. In 1976 the number of reviewable new business cases was 196. This number increased in 1977 to 328; in 1978 to 331; and in 1979 to 379. The total number of cases resolved in those years increased from 144 in 1976 to 373 in 1979. It is interesting to note in those same years that the amount of investment in millions of dollars decreased from $803 million in 1977 to $202 million in 1979. I have not received an explanation for that drop in the dollar total of investment.

To complete the package, reviewable acquisition cases amounted to a total of 171 in 1976 and increased in number to 261 in 1977, 360 in 1978 and 380 in 1979. The total number resolved increased from 160 in 1976 to a total of 372 in 1979.

The work which was being done by the Foreign Investment Review Agency appeared to be improving in terms of productivity. Why, then, am I concerned today? I should say that just by coincidence, when I was in Montreal last night, the president of a foreign-owned company made a point of complimenting the Foreign Investment Review Agency on the manner in which it had efficiently handled applications by his firm for acquisitions in Canada. That said, however, the reason I am concerned is that within the past short period of time I have received complaints from three different companies about delays in getting their applications through FIRA. I feel that we are facing a rather difficult and possibly a political situation here, something about which, frankly, I am not necessarily happy.

I will explain. For fiscal year 1979-1980 the agency received a budgetary allotment of $3.779 million, and that was to be for 116 person-years. As a result of the government's restraint program actual expenditure was $3,507,710, and 108 person-years were utilized. It is abundantly clear from the figures I have put on the record that the number of applications is increasing each year.

It is apparent that the agency is doing its best to cope with the increased workload being brought to it. However, if it is not given the tools with which to work, essentially its budgets, so that it can hire personnel, then obviously there will be a slowing down in its operation. I suggested this is probably the problem some companies are facing today, particularly those companies which have been complaining to me personally about the length of time it takes for their applications to be processed.

The obvious benefits flowing from the work of the agency are mentioned in its report, which says that in the five years to the end of March, 1979, the agency's proposals provided for the direct creation of almost 52,000 jobs. Many thousands of additional jobs have been or will be created indirectly through the multiplier effect of these investments.

In the last two minutes remaining to me I should explain one other point which is bothering me. I say this without trying to be at all unkind to the minister. I feel the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was trying to put us on the right track in the work he did back in 1972. I was personally the chairman of the standing committee which was responsible for putting this act through the committee stage and bringing it back into the House.

I expressed concern then, and I have expressed concern since, not about the act as it was written, but about the possibility that administrative difficulties could result in delays which would have an effect on foreign investment, not intended by the act itself. I have inquired as to whether it is possible that our minister, using his ministerial prerogative, is asking additional questions or in any way acting as a brake to try to hold up the rate at which these applications are being processed. I reiterate that in a general sense the operation of the agency is considered satisfactory.

I suggest first, that if by an increased number of applications their workload has been increased, if the actions of a minister justify this and the amount of work which they have to do to satisfy his requirement has been increased, then the proper way to ensure that these applications can still be processed on time is to give them the tools they need, which would be an increased budget and an increased number of trained persons to handle the increased workload. If the parliamentary secretary who will reply will assure me that that is the intention of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I would be very happy to receive that news this afternoon.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the motion refers to an undertaking given to the Crown in 1976 by Redpath Industries Limited of Montreal and its parent company, Tate & Lyle Holdings Ltd. of England. This undertaking was given in consideration of the allowance by the governor in council of the acquisition by Redpath of two Canadian companies: Merry Packaging Limited of Don Mills, Ontario, a custom supplier of flexible packaging material, and Holway Paper Box Manufacturing Limited of Agincourt, Ontario, a manufacturer of folding paper boxes.

When these decisions by the governor in council were announced on October 7, 1976, the government of the day also announced the undertaking given by Redpath and its parent, Tate & Lyle;

To increase the participation by Canadians in the capital stock of Redpath from 45 per cent to 52 per cent.

That is still their commitment. The undertaking given in 1976 was framed in the light of circumstances at that time. Some time later, as a result of changed circumstances, it became apparent to Redpath and Tate & Lyle that they would not be able to fulfil their commitment as quickly as they had originally expected without considerable handicap. Therefore, they approached the agency with a view to renegotiating the terms of their undertaking. The government of the day was satisfied with the representations made by the companies.

Following negotiations between the agency and Redpath, the government agreed to revised terms under which participation by Canadians in the capital stock of Redpath would be increased in stages. The new agreement contains specific measurable benchmarks relating to the financial affairs of the companies which would reflect their ability to increase Canadian participation, and thus would serve as an unambiguous trigger for fulfilment of the commitment. I want to emphasize that the commitment itself is unchanged, that is, to increase Canadian participation in Redpath from 45 per cent to 52 per cent.

In the matter of enforcement of undertakings given under the Foreign Investment Review Act, the government has reassured investors that common sense and understanding will prevail. That is as it should be. This issue was addressed when the foreign investment review bill was being considered by Parliament in 1973 prior to its enactment. When the bill was before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the minister, speaking on behalf of the government of the day, said the following:

In principle, all undertakings are binding. In those cases where a person fails to comply with undertakings, the minister may apply to the courts for an order directing that the undertakings be fulfilled. This, however, is likely to be a procedure of last resort.

You will recall that I suggested some undertakings at least would be based on the medium-term plans of the acquiring company. These plans would, to some extent, be based on the conjecture about the future and therefore would simply reflect the company's anticipation concerning its future development. They would not be guaranteed in their entirety. Thus, flexibility and good sense must be exercised by the minister.

In normal circumstances the inability to fulfil understakings will lead to discussions with the minister and perhaps to the negotiation of new undertakings. Like any contract, an undertaking can be modified with the consent of both parties. If, however, the failure to comply with an undertaking is clearly the result of changed market conditions—for example, the undertaking to export frisbees is followed by the collapse of the frisbee market—the person would not be held accountable. It should be remembered, however, that some undertakings may be tailored to a range of market expectations.

The purpose of the Foreign Investment Review Act is to ensure that certain forms of foreign investment will be of significant benefit to Canada. I do not believe it would be of benefit to Canada for the government to administer the act in a draconian or unreasonable manner by insisting that in all circumstances commitments given in good faith by investors on the basis of their expectations for the future must be fulfilled to the letter, even when circumstances have changed and implementation of those undertakings would impose an unexpected hardship on the investor concerned.

But that does not mean the government is abdicating its responsibility to ensure that investments allowed under the act are of benefit to Canada. Procedures have been established to monitor the implementation of plans and undertakings presented by investors whose applications were allowed. The monitoring is usually carried out at annual intervals. Most undertakings cover an investor's performance over a number of years and require monitoring for a commensurate period of time. The great majority of investors have been able to fulfil their commitments. But in those cases where changed economic circumstances have made it necessary to renegotiate undertakings, the agency seeks new commitments offering at least equal benefits to Canada. The minister has the authority to initiate legal proceedings in any case where an investor fails to comply with the terms and conditions of his investment. To date it has not been necessary for the minister to exercise that authority because both the government and investors have approached this matter in a reasonable and businesslike fashion.

I would now like to address the concerns expressed by the member about the amount of time taken to resolve investment proposals under FIRA and the amount of information required to be filed by foreign investors in the review process.

It should be kept in mind, first of all, that FIRA places an onus on the foreign investor who wishes to acquire control of a Canadian company or establish a new business, to demonstrate that his or her proposal is, or is likely to be, of significant benefit to Canada. The specific factors to be taken into account in the determination of significant benefit, the assessment criteria, are outlined clearly in the act.

The two major points to be kept in mind at this juncture are that the initiative is with the foreign investor to make his case to the government; the other major point is that the test of significant benefit means exactly what it says, a proposal by a foreign investor who is able to demonstrate only that his or her proposal would not be detrimental to Canada, which would, by the terms of the statute, be found to fail.

The assessment criteria, upon which the government bases its decisions, are composed of a number of commercial, industrial, economic and public policy considerations. They include, first, the effect of the acquisition or establishment on the level and nature of economic activity in Canada, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the effect on employment, on resource processing, on the utilization of parts, components and services produced in Canada, and on exports from Canada. Second, they include the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms, or would form, a part. The third consideration is the effect of the acquisition or establishment on productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada. The fourth point is effect of the acquisition or establishment on competition within any industry or industries in Canada. The final consideration is the compatibility of the acquisition of the new business establishment with national industrial and economic policies, taking into account industrial and economic policy objectives enunciated by the government or legislature of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition or establishment.

The minister responsible for the act has the responsibility of recommending to the government which of the foreign investment proposals that come before him can properly be allowed and which should not be allowed. It cannot be a rubber stamp operation. I think it is obvious from what is required of the minister that he has to be fully briefed about each and every foreign investment proposal that comes before him. To accomplish this task effectively, he needs adequate information and analysis on which to base his recommendations; unfortunately, that can take time.

The review process in itself can be complex and often time-consuming. As soon as an application outlining an investment proposal is received by the Foreign Investment Review Agency, it is scrutinized by FIRA's compliance branch to determine whether or not the proposal is reviewable and whether the notice contains the information prescribed by the Foreign Investment Review Agency's regulations. That is to say, it ensures that the investor has met the basic legal information requirements. If the proposal is found to be reviewable, it is passed on to the assessment bureau for an evaluation based on the significant benefit criteria to which I referred earlier. Frequently, at this stage, relevant information additional to that contained in the notice is sought through contacts with the applicant and consultations with appropriate federal departments. The notice is also circulated to the province, or provinces, significantly affected by the proposal with a request for their views and comments so that the agency knows how the proposal is received regionally and locally.

When all the necessary information has been assembled, the case is then referred to the minister, together with an assessment by the agency of the perceived effects of the investment. If the minister concludes that the investment is likely to result in significant benefit to Canada, he must make a recommendation to the governor in council or cabinet, that the investment be allowed. If not, he must so inform the agency, which in turn informs the applicant accordingly. The applicant then has the opportunity to make further representations. When those representations are completed, the case is referred to the minister a second time for a decision on what his final recommendation would be.

In reaching his decision the minister must frequently take into account the representations he receives from other members of Parliament which reflect the concerns of their constituents about particular investments and the impact thereof. The agency, too, receives numerous representations from third parties including competitors, labour unions, and employee or management groups which have a direct interest in the outcome of a takeover bid and the terms on which it takes place. In addition, with increasing frequency, Canadian companies are coming forward to make known their interest in competing against foreign takeover bids. These interests of Canadians cannot be ignored by the government. They must be taken into account in any assessment of the benefit to Canada of a foreign investor's proposal.

I mention all of this not to justify the delay in dealing with investment proposals under the act but to make the point that the process is one that very often requires a number of months to complete. There is obviously no advantage to the government in unnecessary delay. If the government is not satisfied that an investment is of significant benefit it can—and has—disallow it.

The government has taken a number of steps to expedite the review process. In 1977 the regulations under the act were amended to provide for a much abbreviated form of notice for small business investments, that is, investments involving assets of less than $2 million and involving fewer than one hundred employees. The procedures for dealing with those investments were streamlined to permit the minister to judge, within a matter of days, whether on the basis of the information available in the notice, he was able to recommend allowance. Roughly 60 per cent of all the investment proposals reviewed by the agency are dealt with under these streamlined procedures which enable government to reach a decision. The investor is advised of this decision usually within 20 days of the date his application was filed. I cannot think of many administrative processes with that sort of record, whether at the federal, provincial or municipal level. But, of course, the longer more complex cases take a longer period of time to deal with, for the reasons I have mentioned.

The time taken in reviewing investment proposals must be measured against the results of the review process, that is, the benefits to Canada of investments that are allowed to proceed. Indeed, most of the work of the agency centres on the effort to improve original proposals and to negotiate additional firm commitments which will bring economic benefits to Canada. It is not in the interest of the department to be adverse to these proposals but rather to bring the best proposal forward.

An analysis carried out by the research staff of FIRA has revealed that since the agency was created, investment proposals reviewed and allowed have involved 70,000 new jobs and $5 billion of investment. These statistics obviously have only a limited meaning as indicators of FIRA's performance. For one thing, the figures do not show what FIRA has achieved through negotiating with applicants to upgrade the quality of investment proposals as a condition of allowance.

Using jobs as an example, I should like to speak about how the agency's work has improved the quality of employment in Canada. FIRA's negotiations have helped to increase Canadian participation in the direction, management and ownership of the firms involved and to create opportunities for Canadians in research, engineering, new supplier industries and in a variety of consultant services. As a result, doors previously closed to Canadians have been opened.

The agency has negotiated commitments from investors to carry out research and development in Canada and to exploit the results of such research in Canada. To date such commitments amount to over $130 million in expenditures in research and development. The concrete benefits of FIRA extend to other important areas, such as exports and the greater use of Canadian suppliers of goods and services. Thus, one of the most long-standing complaints about foreign ownership or control has been the constraints frequently placed on Canadian subsidiaries in their export efforts. FIRA's work has led to applicants establishing export targets. It has led to Canadian subsidiaries being assigned exclusive rights to export either all their products to certain countries or certain products worldwide. Some applicants outside North America have given exclusive rights to Canadian subsidiaries to service the entire North American market. In cases where prospects for exports are too uncertain for investors to make specific commitments, the agency seeks undertakings to protect the Canadian business from restrictions on seeking out and exploiting any export opportunities.

With respect to domestic sourcing, FIRA often negotiates commitments that a minimum percentage of total requirements on specified materials, components, merchandise and services will be sourced in Canada. In situations where the investment calls for purchases of machinery and equipment, the agency will seek assurances that Canadian manufacturers be given the opportunity to tender. The negotiations have produced clear benefits, including new jobs, the expansion of existing businesses and, in some cases, the fostering of supplier industries in Canada.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak for very long, but I was interested in the points made by the two previous speakers, particularly the points in defence of FIRA. On balance, everyone appreciates that the job which FIRA has is difficult. The questions which we most often ask are asked because the information we need in order to make reasonable judgments about the decision-making process of FIRA in a given situation frequently is not forthcoming. This is the primary purpose of this motion today. It is very difficult to make any kind of learned judgment on the appropriateness of the decisions of FIRA, given the nature of the act within which it must operate and the secrecy which must surround its deliberations.

The matter of Redpath which was raised in the motion is only one of such instances that bring very serious questions to mind. I would like to put more examples on the record which, in my mind raise the question of whether the act ought to be broadened in order to permit disclosure. Very few people disagree that disclosure is required. Those who argue against disclosure are not aware that in many other parts of the world disclosure is required as a matter of course, unless it directly involves processing and therefore may hurt the company's operation. But in terms of the undertakings made by a company seeking approval for a takeover, disclosure would make for a much tidier, much more acceptable operation.

The following are some examples about which I have been wondering. In 1978, the application of Skyline Steel Corporation to acquire control of Skyline Steel Industries Ltd. received approval. Of many and varied requirements which range all the way from increased employment, new investment, increased processing additional exports, Canadian participation, improved productivity and industrial efficiency, enhanced technological development, improved product variety and innovation, beneficial impact on competition, to compatibility with industrial and economic policies, the company met three. They met the criteria for increased resource processing, beneficial impact on competition and compatibility with industrial and economic policy.

Let me give hon. members a description of the significant benefits the Foreign Investment Review Agency identified in a press release dated July 13, 1978:

> A proposal by Skyline Steel Corporation of Port Kearny, New Jersey, U.S.A., which is wholly-owned by Trade ARBED, Inc. of the U.S.A., which in turn is controlled by ARBED, S.A. of Luxembourg, to acquire control of Skyline Steel Industries Ltd., of Burlington, Ontario, which is a subsidiary of Engelhard Minerals and Chemicals Corporation of the U.S.A., which in turn is utlimately controlled by South African interests, and is a business engaged in the distribution principally of steel sheet piling which is not now manufactured in Canada.

Given that this company only met three requirements and that the information above does not lead one to the conclusion that it will manufacture anything of significance, one must ask why it won approval. If I were to ask that question, I would not receive an answer because the law does not permit it. Yet, I believe I have every reason to wonder why that company was given approval under the Foreign Investment Review Agency's mandate. There is reason from time to time to wonder about whether or not there is sufficient disclosure.

Here is another example. In 1978 a firm called Tomorrow's Heritage, Inc. of Beverly Hills—that is a sexy name—out of all those categories met four requirements. This company would increase employment, create new investment, increase resource processing and use of Canadian parts and, of course, like all of them, it is comparable with industrial and economic policy. Here is the description taken from the same press release:

> A proposal by Tomorrow's Heritage Inc. of Beverly Hills, California, U.S.A., to establish a new business in Burnaby, British Columbia, to be engaged in the marketing of family photographic portraits.

Pray tell, what is the significant benefit to Canada in that? I would like to be told in the House why FIRA approved that company so that I would know. Of course the minister cannot tell me, because the law does not permit that. Therefore, I must wander around, disgruntled, for the rest of my life because I cannot find out if either of these companies would provide a significant benefit to Canada, what their commitments are and whether they lived up to them.

I have another example for hon. members. I have picked these examples at random and they are spread over a number of years. This one is dated 1976 and was approved by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) who was then responsible for the administration of FIRA. Incidentally, the other two companies were approved by little Jack Horner. In any event, Harlock Williams Lemon Ltd. scored six out of ten on the criteria scale.

Mr. Rose: That's good.

Mr. Deans: Yes, he did very well.

Mr. Rose: He was not a lemon.

Mr. Deans: Let me tell hon. members about Harlock Williams Lemon Ltd. An agency news release dated October 7, 1976 states as follows:

A proposal by Harlock Williams Lemon Ltd. to establish a marine insurance underwriting agency in Vancouver, British Columbia. The proposal was deemed to have been allowed.

What was the significant benefit to Canada? Do we not have enough marine insurance underwriters on the west coast? FIRA not only gave approval, it deemed his application approved, which concerns me somewhat. However, I have no way of finding out whether the company lived up to its commitments, how much money was involved, and whether there was any benefit to anyone other than the company.

Mr. Darling: They will take insurance from Canadian agencies.

Mr. Deans: Yes, and presumably ship it out of the country since the company was to be involved in exports. I expect the export was money—money which we can hardly afford. My last example, can be found in an agency news release dated January 28, 1981. It reads:

The allowance of one foreign investment proposal was announced today by the Hon. Herb Gray, minister responsible for the administration of the Foreign Investment Review Act.

A summary, in tabular form, of the benefits identified is attached.

The proposal is by Sandvik Canada Corp., of Mississauga, Ontario, which is owned by Sandvik AB of Sandviken, Sweden, which is controlled by two Swedish companies, Kornaes-Marmo AB and Investment AB Kinnevik, both of Sweden; and Noranda Mines Limited, of Toronto, Ontario, to acquire control of the business carried on by Noranda Metal Industries Limited, consisting of its Special Metals Division at Arnprior, Ontario, which manufactures nickel alloy and stainless steel seamless tubing for use primarily in Candu nuclear reactors.

Given that it scored seven out of ten, I wonder if the House thinks it is a good idea to transfer the ownership of a company manufacturing something as important as the tubing for Candu nuclear reactors to a foreign-owned and foreign-controlled company? What would be the significant technological benefit to us? What would they be able to do that we were unable to do previously? If we were not able to do it previously, does it mean we were making an inferior product prior to this company taking over? Does it mean that the product which was being made previous to this approval was not of the highest quality? Does it mean that we were producing tubes for Candu reactors in a less efficient, less controllable and less beneficial way than it will be the case in future?

I should like to refer to some of the reasons for this takeover. The first of the serious matters dealt with was improved productivity and industrial efficiency. The second was enhanced technological development. Then there was improved product variety and innovation, as well as beneficial impact on competition. Of course the takeover fitted in, as everything supposedly does, with industrial and economic policies.

There are some questions I should like to ask. What was this company doing that did not measure up to what will now be done? What about the products it made which are in place in nuclear reactors?

Perhaps the other cases to which I referred were somewhat humorous, although important, but they made my point. But in a case such as this, surely to God there is a reason for having a clear picture of why it is deemed important to Canada's future to allow this takeover. What improvement can we expect as a result of the takeover? Perhaps the most important question would be: Were we getting less efficient or somehow less acceptable products prior to the takeover? If not, what are the benefits?

I do not think my questions are unreasonable and I should like to know why this proposal was accepted. Is it in our best interests to have a foreign-controlled and foreign-operated company making such a crucial part for nuclear reactors in this country? What conditions were placed on the company? To what extent do they have access to the technology involved in the Candu reactor development? To what extent will that technology be available to people outside the country as a result of selling this company to a foreign-held subsidiary?

It is part of the job of a Member of Parliament to try to get to the bottom of something that is as strategic as this. I share the concern of the hon. member who moved the motion about the Redpath matter. As he pointed out, he has no axe to grind with Redpath, with FIRA or with the Canada Development Corporation. I have no axe to grind with Sandvik; I do not even know the people.

In terms of policy, FIRA cannot hide behind the act. The act was not written well. It does not permit the disclosure the public of Canada requires. The act must be changed and not just when the minister gets around to it. If this type of approval is to be given in an area as important and as crucial as this, then the act must be changed forthwith so that we can adequately monitor the effect of takeovers of this type. Quite frankly, I suspect many of these things are happening. Because of their workloads, vast majority of members, are unable to keep up with all the changes that are taking place.

I want to stress that I am delighted the hon. member raised this matter today. It is a crucial matter and it is important for us to address it now. I think we should have a response from the minister as quickly as possible about the changes he will undertake in order to guarantee that a significant benefit is always involved. This must be fully disclosed, together with all the terms and conditions of any transaction, so that we can adequately monitor the work being done by FIRA and determine the degree of benefit in each transaction.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I know that under our Standing Orders, no member can speak on an issue other than the one before the House, but I hope you will allow me to extend, on behalf of all members, our wishes for a speedy recovery to the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier), the Deputy Chairman of Committee of the Whole who, as we know, has been hospitalized because of a fairly serious illness. We all hope to see him back in the House very soon.

[English]

It would be difficult for me to reply to all the remarks concerning the motion put by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) who admitted that the operation of the agency was satisfactory. I suppose his main purpose in moving the motion was to show his concern about the enforcement of, or the qualifying requirements of, the decision by FIRA.

I listened attentively to most of his remarks, especially those in which he referred to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) who answers for FIRA in the House. I hesitate to get into a debate on remarks which seem to imply that the mere fact that we have a responsible, interested, hard-working, competent, concerned and efficient Minister of Industry and Commerce—and I see the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) laughing—

Mr. Knowles: So are you.

Mr. Laniel: —who tackles problems on a daily basis, might have the effect of delaying the decision-making process of FIRA. The member opposite should find out whether the agency has fulfilled its mandate, then he will understand the advantages of having such a good minister. He should have congratulated the minister for his efficiency. I understand the preoccupation of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, but this is practically a square circle. It would not be easy for the agency to make a judgment on a takeover or an investment in Canada without, in the first place, supplying some guarantee to the enterprise concerned regarding confidential information.

We are members of Parliament. I do not think we have a responsibility that requires us to know all the details. If we are generally satisfied, as the hon. member for Vaudreuil indicated when he spoke, with the good work of FIRA, that satisfaction is endorsed by the statistics, the results of investments, the job creation, the access to the technology and the progression of these new industries in coming to Canada. The pattern is a good one. That is why I appreciate the good work of this agency.

May I call it six o'clock so that I may have an opportunity when this debate comes back again before the House, to go further into the workings of FIRA and answer the requests of hon. members.

S.O. 75c

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That is agreed. The Chair will take special pleasure in conveying the hon. parliamentary secretary's compliments and good wishes to the deputy chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6.03 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pinard:

That, in relation to Bill C-59, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration of the second reading stage of the bill; and that at 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the debate on this motion was interrupted at five o'clock this afternoon, the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) had the floor, and had some time remaining. He would be entitled upon his return to seek the floor. In the interim, I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a sense of mixed pleasure to have the opportunity tonight to speak in opposition to the government's move on the legislation having to do with the borrowing authority. I say mixed pleasure because, of course, it is not pleasant for us to have this experience in the first place, to witness the government trying to close off debate on a matter as important as the borrowing authority. However, I take some pleasure in being able to stand in my place and be part of the tradition which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) so aptly represents. I refer to the tradition of this party and its opposition to closure, its opposition to 75c going back to its very formation at the time when the Liberal government used closure to bring in this new form of closure. Therefore, it is with some pleasure that I stand here today along with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to register opposition to the government's most recent attempt to stifle debate in Parliament.

I have only been a member of Parliament for a short while. It will be two years in May. I experienced the invocation of 75C in the Thirty-first Parliament and I have experienced it three times in this Parliament. Before I came here, I was of the false impression, it now appears, that closure was something that was only brought in on very historic occasions, and even then was regarded as a negative move on the part of the government.

When I was just five years old, the Liberals of the day, in 1956, brought in closure on the pipeline debate. I was one of those young Canadians who grew up with the perception that closure was something that was used only in those kinds of political events that were perceived to be crises by the government of the day. Since becoming a Member of Parliament, I have seen closure used time and time again.

I want to take this opportunity to make a few brief remarks about what the debate on closure ought to bring to mind for us. First, we have to remember, particularly as closure is being brought in on the borrowing authority, that the original purpose of Parliament was to put control of the public purse in the hands of the people for the first time.

We have here a particularly poignant example of the government returning to itself the divine right of kings. It seeks to limit the possibility of debate in Parliament on something so fundamental as the borrowing authority for some $14 billion when we in our party, for example, have only had the opportunity of putting forward three, perhaps four, speakers. There is something wrong when there is so little opportunity to sort out the kinds of priorities the expenditure of that kind of money represents.

We ought to look at the larger picture of what has happened to parliamentary debate. I am not sure how long it has been the case, but I want to say to other members who may feel the way I do that one of the problems with debate, period, is not just that it is closed off, but that at times it seems so meaningless. What we have here is not real debate. We have a sort of pro forma exercise in which everyone gets up and does a little part of the charade. A charade is going on now with members chatting and doing their own thing. I am going through the exercise expected of me; after me, others will go through the exercises expected of them. We will then have the vote and everything will be fine.

The problem is, this is no longer a debate. And this is not a chamber for the exchange of ideas. No one is open to persuasion. Members know what they believe when they stand up and they know what they believe when they sit down. No one is listening to anyone else.

The opposition does not have the power of persuasion because there is no real debate going on here. The only power the opposition has is to delay government action. I suggest this is why so much bad feeling is aroused when the government moves against the power of the opposition to delay legislation. In fact, Parliament has so little power—and the opposition in turn has even less—that this power to delay is cherished by the opposition and ought to be cherished by the opposition until such time as we can restore some integrity to debate in this House.

One of the problems with debate in this House is that it reflects the sense in which all of us are prisoners of the big lie; nobody really expects anybody to tell the truth any more. From the time we turn on our television sets or radios in the morning until we turn them off after the news at night, we expect to be bombarded with all kinds of falsehoods and half-truths, and we carry that attitude toward communication into this House. I wish to use this opportunity to call, in so far as it is possible to call for something like this, for the restoration of the integrity of communication so that we can have some kind of real debate here. This will have to happen on a much wider scale than just this Parliament, but we can begin by restoring some integrity to debate here and not sliding down the slippery slope toward a lack of genuine communication. We do not want the kind of politics that relies on advertising, on slogans, on the indifference and apathy of the Canadian people. We must get out there and let them know what is really going on. We are all guilty, in this respect, of cheapening the worth of political debate.

The government's move to close off debate is part of that syndrome; it is a sort of "Catch 22" situation. I am sure that one of the reasons closure does not seem to be such a tragedy to some members is that the debate is so worthless in the first place. And it is worthless because the government and others have had the attitude that it is simply something we must get through. It is a vicious circle. I ask the government to break out of the role it has been playing. It has more power than the opposition, obviously. I ask the government, in its leadership role, not just in its technical role, to give more power to the opposition and to committees. In turn, this would bring more power to debate. Perhaps we could actually turn this House into the institution I thought it was, perhaps naively, when I decided to run for office. If that were so, we could have some genuine debate about the future of the country and many of the matters which are troubling us at this time.

This move on the part of the government to close off debate is the kind of cynical manoeuvre which destroys rather than promotes the possibility of what I am talking about.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks made by my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). The hon. member has touched one of the very real problems we face in this House, the fact that business has to be done, debate has to be held and such debate must be relevant. That is one of the problems to which my hon. friend referred and of which I am aware from listening to debates on a number of issues.

My friends on both sides of the House will agree that debate has strayed far from the topic which was under discussion in the House. One of my hon. friend's points with which I disagree is the fact that—

Mr. Blaikie: Thank God.

Mr. Evans: He says, thank God. I am glad we would both thank the same person.

After six days—and that is how much time will have been spent on the debate on the borrowing authority—one would expect we would have heard the major arguments pro and con the borrowing authority, and that the bill could then go to committee where one or both ministers would appear and important aspects could be studied in depth.

After listening to the majority of the speeches and having read the rest, I am sorry to say that I think the direction given to the government by the members of the opposition has been marginal at best. I think any objective observer would have to say that. As parliamentary secretary I organized this debate on behalf of the minister. I had to ensure that the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) could agree that the opposition had the maximum amount of time to present their views with regard to this particular bill on borrowing authority.

Until today, we had placed two speakers before the House on this debate, the Progressive Conservative Party 18 and the New Democratic Party five. By the time the debate terminates on Monday, as called for in the motion under Standing Order 75C imposed today, it will have lasted six days and then, as I said, the bill will be transmitted to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. When it returns to the House for third reading there will be additional debate. In my opinion, given that kind of flexibility and latitude, and the ability of members of the opposition to make their views known in speeches of some duration, there has been no throttling of debate.

We have listened to the speeches of hon. members opposite, we have monitored the debate closely, we have listened to the objections raised by hon. members, and we have tried to get the sense, in certain cases, of how their remarks were relevant to the question before the House.

We should get something else on the record as well. My hon. friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, put his finger on another issue; that is, that the tactic of delay is used, and used effectively, by the opposition. When faced with that kind of tactic, and when certain hon. members opposite say with a smiling face, "We are going to delay until you are forced to use 75C", then I think the kind of rhetoric we have heard today about debate being throttled, and the abuse of Parliament is just that—pure rhetoric.

An hon. Member: Who said it?

Mr. Evans: It is pure rhetoric and I think we all admit it.

An hon. Member: Name the hon. member. No guts.

Mr. Evans: Today the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) indicated dismay that to her mind the government was asking for $14 billion worth of borrowing authority without a plan. All I have to say to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is that if she were to read the budget she would find that it includes the most comprehensive fiscal structure ever presented to Parliament.

In that fiscal plan are the envelopes which indicate to all hon. members the areas in which government expenditures will take place. In addition to that, the hon. member knows very well that it is from the fiscal plan set out in the budget that the estimates of each department are derived. These give a much more detailed explanation of expenditure plans for the departments. The revenue-raising side of the budget is in the form of the borrowing authority. The size of borrowing authority is clearly indicated in the budget. The fiscal plan is there, and the estimates are there. When the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands says there is no plan, I am sure it is simply because she does not understand the fiscal arrangements of government.

Borrowing authority has traditionally been used as a vehicle for the discussion of a wide range of matters because anything which involves taxation or expenditure can, presumably, be discussed under the heading of borrowing authority. But it seems to me that in future all hon. members should sit down together and ask, in all honesty, if we can focus debate on borrowing authority bills any more tightly than we have with regard to this legislation, previous legislation from this government and, indeed, legislation from the government of hon. gentlemen opposite. The public must be totally confused when it watches television and sees what is going on. It must wonder what in the world this debate is all about. Is it about borrowing authority but we are talking about everything under the sun except the subject of borrowing authority?

Hon. members opposite say we have throttled debate on economic issues. Not only have we not throttled debate on economic issues—in particular, debate on borrowing authority—but we probably have had more debate on economic issues in the last three to four months than in any other Parliament in the history of this country. The budget was brought down in October, and a debate followed that. There were energy bills, and the debate followed them. There was an emergency debate before Christmas which set a record for length of continuous debate. All these were on economic issues. We have just passed an income tax bill. Again there was an economic debate of some length. Finally, we have before us a borrowing authority bill.

I think we have to be realistic. We know for sure that the opposition can and has used the rules to stall and delay. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill admitted that tonight by saying that this is a valuable tool of the opposition. When the government faces that kind of situation, when we face a series of legislative initiatives which should be brought forward and when hon. members opposite want very badly to get into debate on the Constitution, then the government has to take some initiative.

It has to show some leadership. That has required the imposition of Standing Order 75c in this case, and I certainly do not apologize for that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Evans: With regard to the principle behind the use of Standing Order 75c, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) waxed long and, he believed, eloquent earlier this evening about when Standing Order 75c should and should not be used. To his mind it is all right to use Standing Order 75c, limitation of time for debate, as long as the bill under consideration confers benefits on someone, but if it does not confer benefits, then it is not appropriate to use Standing Order 75c. That flies right in the face of what my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), said with respect to the principle of debate—irrespective of the bill under consideration, it is the principle of debate—and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would stand on that principle. He spoke earlier about it. In fact, he spoke just before the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and laid out quite clearly what the principle behind the use of Standing Order 75c is, and it has absolutely nothing to do with the content of the bill under discussion.

I would like to quote some of the words of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton when he spoke with respect to Bill C-20 in the Thirty-first Parliament. At that time the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton indicated that he was a patient man. He went on:

> I do not want the Liberal Party to try such a feeble argument that they can appear to be co-operative on the one hand and obstructive on the other. I want them to be known for what they are—obstructors. They have proven this today.

The hon. member was talking about our objections at that time to the use of Standing Order 75c by the Conservative government with regard to Bill C-20, which was with respect to mortgage interest and property tax credits.

Finally, I would like to read one more quotation from the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton as follows:

> I think the opposition will strain the credulity of the public in other ways. They will be claiming that they have been cut off at the knees; that their pearls of wisdom on this bill have not been given sufficient time to be heard; that the Canadian government is so Draconian that it is cutting short the debate on Bill C-20. I think this government has been extremely generous with the opposition.

That was said after five days of debate, and we are imposing Standing Order 75c after six days of debate. I appeal to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton to read his own words and then withdraw some of the remarks he made during his speech today.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this motion, which has nothing to do with borrowing. This motion deals with closure.

I want to say at the outset that I do not agree with the previous speaker in any way, shape or form. I am becoming increasingly alarmed about the routine application of the device of closure under the fancy name of Standing Order 79c.

Mr. Evans: Seventy-five.

Mr. Stewart: The point is that it throttles free speech. The legality of Standing Order 75c, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) mentioned this afternoon, is not the issue. I wonder if members of the government, which so readily applies closure in this House, really believe in the charter of rights for Canadians that they are espousing.

Closure was a seldom-used parliamentary strategy until this present administration assumed office. Now, three times in five months it has been invoked. When the constitutional committee reports, I think on Tuesday, what will happen then? Will it go as the old song goes, "Mr. Five by Five"? Will there be five closures in five months? The hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) said there should be relevancy. I think five out of five is very relevant, and I do not think it is rhetoric. If it is rhetoric, then I am all for it. I was denied the right to speak on behalf of my constituents during the budget debate. Why? Because of closure. I was denied the right to express my views and the views of my electors during the Constitution resolution debate. Why? Again, because of closure.

This afternoon the House leader said it was not members of the government side who did gymnastics in front of the Speaker's chair when closure was invoked in the debate on the Constitution. He missed the whole point of that occasion. Why were there gymnastics? There were gymnastics because those who participated in them were denied their rights, as members of this House, to speak on what is probably the most important issue for Canadians since confederation.

Now, again, I am being limited. I have many things to say. Instead of the customary 40 minutes, I have 10. I wonder—and I ask hon. members opposite to wonder—whether we are about to see the day when free speech is eliminated entirely from this House. Will we see the day when members just mail in their speeches or deliver them to the Hansard office to have them printed? It is a sad reflection on parliamentary democracy when a government hides—and I say "hides"—behind closure to avoid the spotlight of opposition examination and criticism. And this government has a majority.

I came to Ottawa to act as an extension of my constituents, which I believe is the democratic way. I did not come here to be a trained seal, as mentioned by the author of the book, "The Backbencher". I did not come to sit idly by and watch an autocratic leader of the Grit party turn this nation into a presidential-type republic because of an idea of a constitution made in his name. The seat I occupy is the most prized possession I could ever have. I sit in what I believe to be the highest court of this land, and unless that is changed by what I call the three Ts, that is the way it should remain. Those three Ts are the "trauma of the Trudeau treatise", or more specifically, the changing of our Constitution.

This chamber should be the embodiment of free speech. It should be the epitome of all those basic rights we have come to hold so sacred in this great country of ours. I personally will not stand idly by and be gagged by a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who has nothing but contempt for Parliament and who has said so. He calls parliamentarians "nobodies" and sees Parliament as a necessary evil while going on his merry way. He treats Parliament as a puppetmaster treats marionettes, and he has his own Pinocchio.

There are no marionettes on this side of the House. Where are the voices of protest in the government ranks? There has to be one person who will speak the truth. Have government backbenchers become the trained seals about which I spoke? Are they so browbeaten that they are afraid to speak out in defence of the freedom of this House?

If we lose freedom of speech, as we have started to lose freedom in our economy and as did Petrofina, we will lose individual freedom, because that is what happens when economic freedom in lost. If we lose freedom of speech by closure, the right to oppose, the right to criticize, the right to scrutinize public business and public accounts, what reason is there to sit in this House of Commons? What would Caesar have us become, eunuchs in his court? What would the emperor have us be? Spear carriers I suppose, strewing olive branches at his feet as he enters this chamber. Is the emperor afraid to be told he has no clothes? Is he afraid to meet Parliament face to face? Is he afraid to look us in the eye? Is he afraid to involve us in the process of developing progressive legislation which will advance the ideals and goals of this nation? Is the government reverting to the arrogance which dates back to the jackboot days of C. D. Howe and his "who's to stop us" statement?

I tell you Mr. Speaker, we cannot be stopped with closure. That statement was made when closure was invoked during the infamous pipeline debate. But today hon. members opposite are sitting with a comfortable majority. I for one refuse to stand silent and see the rights of Parliament abused, frustrated and strangled. I believe in open covenants, and I believe they should be arrived at openly. We, as elected Members of Parliament, hold a public trust. That trust is being abused when a parliamentary majority seeks to withhold the rights of the opposition minority. I refuse to worship at the throne of the emperor from Mount Royal who, in turn, worships at the throne of Castro, Galbraith, Mao and Lasky. Let me say this, Mr. Speaker, we are all commoners in this chamber, and let the right hon. member opposite not forget that.

I intended to rise in the debate and speak with pride on Bill C-59; not pride for that abominable piece of legislation but pride at being a member of the only truly national party of Canada, the only party which wants to preserve our federal Commonwealth status. In that bill, the government wants to borrow $14 billion. Not only does the Grit government want to borrow that amount, but it wants to put an extra $3 billion in the deficit kitty, which would not be repayable until March, 1982. The bill does not state what the interest rate will be, it does not state what the vehicle of borrowing will be, and it does not state from what country the government wishes to borrow. Why is that? Because it is ashamed; that is why it had to invoke closure.

Is the reasoning behind closure that we have an 83-cent dollar and our dollar being the measure of the trust and confidence which the world places in us, it would not be flattering to the government to admit that if the United States is the source of those funds, it would cost us 17 per cent more?

The harsh reality, the grim prospect, the very thought of borrowing $14 billion is frightening. The figure of $14 billion boggles the mind of most people, but not that of the fellows opposite. It should bring fear into the souls of the backbenchers opposite. It is a legacy of debt. I have a ten-year-old son, as do other hon. members here and as do other Canadians, and that is what we will leave them. What is the government's answer to that? Its answer is, "Don't talk about it, sweep it under the rug, hide it with closure".

An hon. Member: Why don't you listen over there?

Mr. Stewart: The government treats this bill as if it were a routine piece of legislation. Unrepentent, the government brings the bill forward unrevised, and it does so with closure; in other words, with fear, with trepidation. I just wonder how much people can take, especially hon. members on this side of the House who are barred from their democratic right to speak on this bill. Surely hon. members opposite feel some shame. The government is displaying colossal gall and unmitigated effrontery in asking Parliament to condone its profligate and reckless spending. I have to ask the government if it has lost touch with reality. The answer is yes. Does the government fully comprehend the magnitude of what it is asking Parliament to do? Yes it does, because it invoked closure. It understands what it is doing full well.

Has the government become so isolated and insular that it does not understand the ramifications of its massive borrowing? The United States understands it, and is starting to do something drastic about it. The deficit spending mentality is so ingrained in this government and has impressed itself so much on it that it no longer possesses the will or the desire to put the nation's finances in order and to forget about a constitution which has served us well for 130 years. That is why it rules by closure.

I shudder when I see a government rule by fiat and spend by fiat. All that fiscal and monetary policies mean to this government is another shift at the printing plant to roll off more dollars to cover deficit stacked upon deficit and bill upon bill. The term "balanced budget" is not in the government's glossary. The government would not know a balanced budget if it tripped over one and broke Pinocchio's nose.

A few years ago the Auditor General warned Parliament that financial controls did not exist and that the government was in trouble. I was not in Parliament when that happened, but I can conjure up the phantasm of the right hon. gentleman sitting opposite and shrugging, although he probably did not even read the Auditor General's report. He cannot shrug away the fact that he is bankrupting this nation, and people are starting to discover it quickly, as demonstrated by the 64 per cent response to the poll on the Constitution. Our $100 billion-plus budgetary deficit is an anchor against progress. You have to sell and you have to spend, but you have to take in more than you spend, and that is axiomatic. We need a chance to discuss this matter fully and openly, as we should discuss the Constitution. All I can say to the government is: show intestinal fortitude over there and vote against it.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, for quite a while now, five days to be exact, we have been discussing Bill C-59 to provide authority for the government to borrow the required sums of money for its most basic operations. I fully realize that this exercise is necessary and in accordance with the spirit and the realities of our parliamentary system, and that in effect it guarantees the protection of our democratic rights and thus the proper management of the affairs of the state.

That being said and agreed upon, Members of Parliament and the public in general will no doubt recognize that although this is a necessary and useful exercise, members opposite have abused the time made available to them by introducing arguments of doubtful relevancy into the discussion which only serve to foster all kinds of statements which do not promote in any way the advancement of political science, Mr. Speaker, nor for that matter the consideration of Bill C-59.

An hon. Member: They do not realize it!

Mr. Tousignant: I am absolutely astonished that members opposite should act so innocently when the government proposes to limit debate with the agreement of all parties. I almost fell off my seat when I heard the comments of the former government House leader under the Conservative government of 1979; I was flabbergasted, because that is certainly not what he said at that time. Here, for instance, are some of the things the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said when he was government House leader, and I quote from Hansard of December 7, 1979:

> Also we are hearing from the other side of the House great appeals to parliamentary democracy and that we are destroying it, I should like to indicate to the hon. member that I know it is the kind of thing I used to say when I sat on the other side of the House of Commons.
> What a hypocritical statement!
> Having watched a former government claiming abuse of the rules, let me say that if I ever had any doubts about the importance of Standing Order 75C, those doubts were blasted away by the actions of that party . . . We do not intend to allow the opposition to put the government into that position, or to so ruin the proceedings of the House of Commons that the people of Canada cannot get the piece of legislation which the government promised during the last election.

• (2040)

I would like to read what the House leader of the former government, in 1979, had to say.

An hon. Member: Who was that?

Mr. Tousignant: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). This is what he had to say:

> As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) said, I am a patient man. I do not want the Liberal party to try such a feeble argument that they can appear to be co-operative on the one hand and obstructive on the other. I want them to be known for what they are—obstructors. They have proven this today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, what more can we say? Where is the sincerity of those so-called defenders of our parliamentary traditions? Of course it helps a bit to understand their generalized frustrations. Remember all the time they waited to form the government. All of a sudden, through sheer accident, they are swept into office but they cannot hang on and power slips through their fingers. Canadians did not waste any time to decide that important issues could not be left in the hands of children. As we have all seen in the past, the people, of course, cancelled their right to govern. We have all seen dogs running after cars and we are tempted to ask ourselves what they would do if they caught up with them. When we look at the people across the floor that is the impression we get. Frustrations, Mr. Speaker. We have to sympathize with them. They were given the chance to form the government but were so careless that their fellow countrymen had to tell them to their face, no we cannot let you go any further, you no longer have our confidence. And so today they want to appease this passion brought on by their defeat. The official opposition simply and deliberately goes out of its way to criticize every move made by this government.

You have to see how far they are prepared to go to throw the country into confusion and chaos. For instance, how did they attack our energy policy? Can you imagine, they accused us of being socialists. Mr. Speaker, 72 per cent of the capital of oil companies operating in Canada is foreign capital, and it leaves the country with 22 per cent of net profits. So we in the government—

Mr. Lalonde: You mean 82 per cent.

Mr. Tousignant: The hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) says 82 per cent. That is correct.

This government assumes its responsibilities, knowing as it does that those resources belong to all Canadians, yet hon. members opposite rake us over the coals throughout the country. It is the same thing with the Constitution, Mr. Speaker. If they wanted to be just a wee bit sincere—they know that very well—and tell the truth, Canadians from one end of the country to the other would be grateful for what we are doing for them now. Mr. Speaker, I realize that time flies by but, in my opinion, if those people across the floor were to stop shedding crocodile tears and support us we could get down to the job of governing the country.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being 8.45 o'clock the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 75C have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the standing order it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Pinard) which was carried on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1981-82

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

The House resumed, from Wednesday, February 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-59, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, this gives me the opportunity to participate in this debate, curtailed and shortened as it was by the Draconian imposition of closure on the part of the government. I am very pleased to see that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is staying to hear my speech because I have many remarks to direct to him personally as leader of this government.

It is very interesting to note that since the Prime Minister has occupied that position he has never participated in any debate aside from the required and mandatory Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The Prime Minister regards the House of Commons as a nuisance and a bother. He never, never participates in the debates about our country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He thinks so little of the House of Commons that he is well known for this reference to members of Parliament as being nobodies. Now, at his direction, the House leader has imposed—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I have to make a reference to a member in the House across the way, because the only time he speaks is when he is seated. He never speaks when he is standing up. I am, of course, referring to the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau).

If the Prime Minister participated in these debates and if he understood that the people of Canada are concerned in the context of today's conditions, he would know that the people want to have a debate on the economic circumstances of Canada. This is a very important and worth-while debate in terms of what is happening in our country.

Many constituents speak to me and ask why we have not addressed ourselves to some of the serious problems in our country at the present time. They ask why we have a preoccupation about matters such as the constitution. They ask why we do not get on to the realities of the economic circumstances in Canada today. I can only reply that this debate offers members of the House of Commons the opportunity to make suggestions to the government and to discuss the economic circumstances of our country.

An hon. Member: You are driving him out of the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Prime Minister has moved to a place where he should be in this House, and that is to the backbenches.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The people of Canada do want to hear about the economic circumstances of our country. They want to hear why it is that our government is coming to Parliament to ask for authority to borrow $14 billion. After 12 years, the legacy of this Prime Minister is that the government goes to the foreign markets and to the banks in this country—

Mr. Trudeau: He is reading the newspaper.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not mind the Prime Minister not speaking in this House but this is the first time he has ever sat in the House during the course of a debate.

Mr. Trudeau: At least I am listening, but your hon. members are not.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My hon. members are listening with rapt attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I speak not only to the Prime Minister but to the people of Canada. I can tell them that this is an important bill. Many people do not understand the enormity of this particular legislation.

Mr. Trudeau: I don't have to. Look at Crosbie.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Prime Minister says, "lend me $14 billion".

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Trudeau: He is reading the funny papers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: People do not understand what a billion is.

Mr. Regan: Try $140 a second.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Do people really understand? One billion seconds ago the first atomic bomb had not yet been exploded. One billion hours ago Christ was still on this earth.

An hon. Member: Where did you get that from?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: One billion years ago man was still living in caves. One billion dollars ago, in terms of federal government spending, was yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is the reality of our circumstances in Canada today.

I would ask members on the other side to restrain themselves, Mr. Speaker. I know they will want to listen with enthusiasm to what I have to say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Today we have been faced with closure once again as part of the arsenal of tactics of this government. Because of its majority, closure has been imposed on a most important bill which we must consider in this Parliament. The argument has been made that this bill has received some 12 hours of attention and therefore we must move it from the House of Commons and into committee where it will not embarrass the government. The government's main preoccupation is to move the bill off the floor of the House of Commons into the obscurity of a committee where it will not have the full attention of the public and the mismanagement which has taken place under this government, will pass unmarked.

I suggest that second reading of this bill gives members of the House of Commons an opportunity, as parliamentarians, to discuss in principle the questions related to the borrowing of this money. These are related to the larger question of why we are in these circumstances today. We can make constructive suggestions to the government. It can take advantage of the advice it receives from members representing constituencies across this country.

Canadians are anxious that Members of Parliament discuss the economic circumstances of this country. The role of parliamentarians is to represent their constituents, to discuss the issues that are relevant and important and to have some control over the executive which would otherwise go unfettered. The imposition of closure should be of serious concern not only to members of the opposition, but to the government, the backbenchers in particular. This is one opportunity for them to bring to the attention of the executive, the cabinet, their concerns, apprehensions and hopes for the country. Any move on the part of this government to impose closure is a retrograde step that we and the people of Canada do not deserve.

I want to deal with the question of why this borrowing bill is so important. A number of myths have developed and have been, if I may use the term, perpetrated by this government. There are suggestions that somehow this borrowing is not all that bad, that we in Canada should not be too concerned about the government borrowing such an enormous amount of money.

One of my colleagues pointed out that this borrowing bill is like giving the government a carte blanche to spend, because it does not have the ability to control spending. Certain myths have been perpetrated by supporters of the government. I am not sure if the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) supports this proposition, but one myth is that deficit spending is good for Canada's economic health. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The myth has been spread across the country that somehow deficit spending is in fact helpful in terms of the government's activities and responsibilities. Deficits do not necessarily occur as a consequence of measures designed to promote economic growth. A considerable portion of the existing deficit is purely and simply the result of the failure to achieve economic growth.

If a deficit has been incurred as a consequence of measures taken to promote economic growth, there may be some economic benefit from it. As the same time, however, regardless of how the deficit occurred, there are serious economic consequences. There are really only two ways to finance a deficit. The first is by the printing of money. This leads to an expansion of the money supply and increased inflation. The second is the method used under the provisions of this bill, namely, borrowing money.

Borrowing money, as contemplated by this bill, has a number of consequences. It crowds out private sector borrowing and increases interest rates. At a time when we are faced with unprecedented interest rates in this country, it should not be lost on the supporters of this government that one of the consequences of this bill will be that the borrowing of this money will have a very deleterious effect on interest rates and very serious consequences on the average consumer.

In recent years, net new federal borrowings accounted for more than one-third of non-consumer borrowing. I ask hon. members to consider the consequences of what I am saying. This is a frightening prospect in terms of the direction in which we see this government moving in these economic programs, or lack of programs and planning.

When a government borrows money, its total interest costs go up and, as a result, the deficit goes up. In the normal course of events, more money must be borrowed to pay the interest on past debts.

Another myth perpetrated by this government is that somehow this deficit that they have incurred is increasing year by year, as certain as the sun comes up in the east and sets in the west, because it is taking positive initiatives which are somehow directed toward assisting Canadians. It is fair to point out at this time, with respect to this bill, that a number of factors are responsible for Canada's recent deficit. One of the most important is the fact that we have economic mismanagement and we have had this mismanagement from successive Liberal finance ministers. Poor economic performance results in slow revenue growth and increased expenditures in social programs such as welfare and unemployment insurance.

In addition, the inflation generated by the Liberals in the seventies has driven government spending up at a faster rate than revenues. Unnecessary spending by this and preceding Liberal governments has caused a drain on the treasury. I will not waste the time of the House listing examples of unnecessary spending, but there is one of recent interest that comes to mind.

An hon. Member: List them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is an awful urge to list them, but I only have 40 minutes and it would take far more time than that to list the unnecessary expenditures of this government.

There is one example that the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), having served as minister of transport, will remember well. I refer to Mirabel airport, a $500 million white elephant. The Liberals have consistently failed to exercise adequate cost control over projects and programs. In October, 1979, for example, it was discovered that cost overruns on ongoing projects initiated by Liberal governments totalled $1.1 billion. In 1978, the Unemployment Insurance Commission paid $290 million to persons not legally entitled to receive benefits.

These are the kinds of expenditures that come from mismanagement and a lack of control. These amounts could have been saved for the Canadian public if the government had any interest, desire or motivation with respect to looking after and properly managing the taxpayers' money in this country.

In some cases the Liberals have driven up the cost of government by rewarding their friends and attempting to buy votes in order to remain popular. That is the tradition of the Liberal party. Their political strategy has been spend, spend, spend, particularly at election time. At that time nothing is sacred. They spend money to buy their way back into power. Unfortunately, they are using the taxpayers' money, increasing the deficit and causing serious problems not only for us, but for our children and children's children.

I want to remind hon. members of a period of time which was particularly devastating to the Canadian economy. It was during the minority government of 1972-74. At that time, in order to sustain power and deal with their bedmates and friends in the Democratic Party—

An hon. Member: They paid for it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Canadian people are still paying for it. Spending rose during that period of time at a rate of 20 per cent per year. This is the price Canadians paid and will continue to pay because of the federal Liberal Party's desire to keep the New Democratic Party onside, to keep them in a coalition. The two of them have cost our country dearly both in terms of spending practices and the deficit we now face.

● (2130)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is another myth put forward by the government; that there is nothing wrong with having a large national debt. We hear that from government spokesmen from time to time. The government says we owe the money only to ourselves and that there are assets to offset the debt. The major problem with that particular argument is that the debt must be serviced in the current fiscal year, and the cost of servicing it will exceed $11 billion. That is just under one tax dollar in every four.

Let us consider the consequences of one dollar of every four collected from the taxpayers of our country, going purely and simply to service the deficit and the debt incurred by this government, and preceding Liberal governments over the years. Of course, the Liberal Party thinks that is funny. It thinks that somehow attaining power, spending taxpayers' money and retaining power is all that counts in political life; that honesty plays no part in politics. One dollar out of every four dollars collected by taxpayers is used to service the debt! If you convert that to the liability of each taxpayer in Canada, it comes to $1,200 each every taxpayer in Canada. The gross debt is three times larger than the estimated value of the government's assets. So much for the argument of the government that somehow we have assets to counteract the deficit and the debt we have incurred.

Another argument or myth put forward by the government is that there is nothing wrong with short-term deficits. The federal government has not balanced its books since 1970 and is unlikely to do so over the course of the next five years. The Liberals maintain that since 1970 the deficit has been a short-term problem. There is nothing short-term about 15 years of deficit financing in this country.

Another argument that the Prime Minister in particular likes to put forward whenever there is a question about the deficit in our country and the spending activities of the government, is that compared to other nations, our deficits are not all that bad. I think statistics will prove that out of 17 OECD countries for which 1979 data is available, only five nations had a deficit which was proportionately larger than Canada's and 11 had a deficit which was proportionately less.

Since 1979 our fiscal situation has deteriorated. The United States, our largest trading partner, is expected to balance its books in the next year under its new administration. Considering the potential this country has, the ability of our citizens and our productivity, why are we in a declining deficit position?

I also want to deal with the argument put forth by this government that this deficit is not too bad in relative terms. I have heard the argument that relative to our GNP, our debt is smaller than it was at the time of the Diefenbaker government. During the Diefenbaker years, the government had a relatively large debt, due to the obligations created during the Second World War.

In 1960 the net debt was equal to 33 per cent of GNP; it declined to 13.1 per cent of GNP in 1975. However, since 1975 the net debt relative to our GNP has more than doubled, to a projected 28 per cent in the current fiscal year. If current trends continue, this government will be unable to use that particular comparison much longer. It does not have the consequences of the Second World War to rely upon. This situation has come about because of its own spending habits, its mismanagement and its inability to deal seriously with the fundamental economic problems of our country.

I want to deal briefly with the fact that during the time this party was in power, it took steps to control spending. In the time that my colleague for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was minister of finance, a real attempt was made to control spending and reduce the deficit. It took a lot of courageous action on the part of all ministers and members of this party to bring things under control and reverse the tendency to increase the deficit.

When we took office, internal projections showed that the deficit would rise to $18 billion by 1984-85. Action was taken to reduce the figure to $9 billion by 1983-84, one-half of the deficit position in the previous government's estimates. Our budget projected that cash requirements be cut in half, from $9.9 billion in 1979-80 to $4.8 billion in 1983-84, and that spending increases be held to the rate of inflation in the country.

We took measures to improve expenditure controls and accountability, such as the envelope system. We took steps to reduce overclassification problems in the civil service and to impose tough financial penalties for government departments which incurred cost overruns on capital projects. We arranged to implement several of the recommendations of the Lambert commission. There were real cuts in spending. The government of which I was privileged to be a member was very serious about its responsibility to manage the taxpayers' money and to look after the affairs of this country in a responsible manner. As a result of the return of this government, we are back on the old trail. With single-minded determination it seems to be determined to take us down the road of increased deficits, increased spending and it seems to have no concern at all about efficiency of operation and efficiency of management.

I know this causes some anguish and grief to the member for Ottawa Centre and he is right to be concerned. I am sure that in his heart of hearts he understands the difficulties this government is creating. Representing as he does a constituency in the capital city, he fully understands. Having had the opportunity to serve in the public service, he will fully understand the implication of this policy and where it is taking us in terms of the future of our country.

What we are dealing with in this bill is the request for authority to borrow $14 billion. Included, is a $3 billion contingency fund, a sort of a slush fund if you will, in case the government finds that some of its actions are off target. I suggest that this is one of the fundamental problems with this particular bill. On the basis of its record we know that building in a $3 billion slush fund will do nothing to make this government concerned about the efficiency of its operation or the consequences of its spending programs. This record causes great concern to anyone who takes responsible government in this country seriously. We are facing a situation where the taxpayer pays, and pays and continues to pay. The obligations imposed upon the taxpayer of this country are becoming enormous.

All members of Parliament receive letters from constituents with respect to the increased burden of taxation now imposed on private citizens, wage earners and middle and low-income Canadians who try to work, try to participate and try to involve themselves in the productivity of our nation. They find that the taxation imposed by the federal government is oppressive. They see no relief, and this naturally leads to a sense of despondency and real concern about where our country is going. They wonder about the advantages of being involved in any occupation, employment or small business. They wonder why they should be working. With the present rate of taxation they sometimes feel they would be better off on unemployment insurance. We all hear that from our constituencies. Hon. members opposite know that is the kind of correspondence they get; it is the kind of correspondence I get. I receive correspondence expressing concern about the weight of taxation.

The budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) projects spending of $66.6 billion next year. A deficit of $13.7 billion was projected. The gross national debt last year was $107 billion, and I suspect it will exceed $120 billion by April of this year.

As I have mentioned, interest is a very, very serious drain on our economy, and it will cost the Canadian taxpayer $12.3 billion next year.

I am sure people who are watching this debate are just befuddled by these huge and enormous figures. It must be very difficult for the avearage citizen to comprehend them. My colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald), in an excellent involvement with respect to the closure motion, brought to our attention the fact that it is hard for the average person to relate to the amounts of money we are talking about. I would like to deal just for a moment with some examples of what is involved in terms of the government's spending programs and in terms of cost to the taxpayer. I think when these figures are presented in very simple terms, they become meaningful, and people can understand what the government is about. This matter is almost akin to "How many ways do I love you" but this time it is, "How many ways am I fixing you" on the part of the federal government. I want simply to put the matter in that context because I have some examples which might be of interest to members of the government who are sitting across the way.

Government spending will be equal to $7,600 per taxpayer in the coming fiscal year. The Prime Minister sat, smiling and smirking during this debate. That $7,600 compares to government spending of $1,692 per taxpayer when he assumed office. That is the kind of increase per taxpayer we are facing on the basis of the government's spending program.

On a per capita basis, government spending next year will amount to $2,730 per man, woman and child in Canada. That compares to $549 per capita when the Prime Minister assumed office.

Government spending is now more than five times greater than it was when the Prime Minister first took office and ten times greater than it was during the Second World War.

The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) made some references to buying cars in relation to total government spending. I want to relate it to the buying of houses. Total government spending is enough to buy a new $75,000 home for every householder in British Columbia.

Mr. Paproski: If they could find one.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My colleagues will be interested in knowing that interest on the public debt is enough to buy a new $75,000 home for every householder in the city of Calgary. I think I will move to Calgary. That is a place where a house costs much more than $75,000, but at least it would be a down payment.

The annual cost of interest on the public debt next year will equal $500 per capita and $1,390 per taxpayer. These are facts with respect to the spending habits of this government as they relate to the individual citizen. It is impossible to talk in terms of billions of dollars because, as I pointed out, it is impossible to comprehend. The fact that a billion seconds ago the first atomic bomb had not yet been exploded, shows how enormous a billion is. We are talking now about 14 times that.

As I mentioned before, one in four tax dollars is used to service the debt. Seven years ago, the burden of paying that interest rate was only one dollar in nine. That is now reduced to one dollar in four. With that progression we will be faced with a very serious proposition two or three years down the road.

I want to give some other examples because I have many of them, and I want hon. members opposite to listen very carefully to these statistics. The government's total debt is the equivalent of $5,000 per capita and $13,700 per taxpayer. That is the total debt obligation on every citizen of this country. The cost of interest on the debt exceeds the value of federal income taxes collected from persons earning less than $30,000 a year.

I have a number of other examples which relate to the average citizen of this country. These relate to the enormity of the spending programs and the deficit which has been occasioned by this government. I would be only too happy to table this information for the benefit of hon. members.

If any member is interested in exactly what the consequences are and wants more examples of what this means to every taxpayer, I would be glad to give this information or to speak to any member personally.

I have just a couple more minutes, and I want to finish by calling attention to what I thought was an excellent address referred to in a recent article by Ronald Anderson of The Globe and Mail. The address was given by Professor J. C. Gilson of the department of agricultural economics of the University of Manitoba. Professor Gilson pointed out that we in Canada are headed on a very serious course for the future of our country. In his remarks he demonstrated a serious concern for the future of our country. He pointed out that, unfortunately, under this government we now have a country which is torn by dissension and is apparently unable to deal intelligently with economic problems, while other less well-endowed nations seem capable of doing so. He said that an important part of the problem is that in Canada the revolution of rising expectations has turned into a revolution of rising entitlements.

People in Canada, according to Professor Gilson, have somehow come to expect, as a result of this government's spending habits, more and more government spending and more and more government intervention in terms of the day to day activities of life and business. But, Professor Gilson points out, we are now facing leaner times and leaner circumstances and must come to grips with the very serious problem.

Professor Gilson said the following:

> Seldom in the history of our nation have Canadians faced as much contention, conflict and confrontation, with so little resolution of their basic economic problems, as they did during 1980.

He said:

> The urgent economic issues which . . . are developing into a national crisis, are inflation, the large and increasing federal budgetary deficit, the chronic deficit in the current account balance of payments, and the weak performance in productivity improvement.

I think Professor Gilson really puts his finger on the problem in our country when he points out, and I quote:

> It is clear that our society needs to take stock of itself; to make an honest assessment of its goals, values and institutions, and to decide how it is to be reshaped and matched with current realities.
> Unless and until the federal government gets its revenue and expenditure policies under control, to the point where effective fiscal policy can be used along with monetary policy to combat inflation our nation will continue to alternate between periods of monetary squeeze and excessively high interest rates, and serious upsurges in the rate of inflation.

Put into very simple terms, the proposition is that with the deficit position this government has inflicted on the people of Canada, there is absolutely no room for flexibility in dealing with the serious problems of the average citizen. Where is the resilience and the strength in our economy that would enable us to deal with oppressive interest rates? Where is the ability to help, as we attempted in our budget to help, the low and middle-income earner? Facing that kind of drain on the economy, what can be done to deal with interest rates? What can be done to help the small businessman or the average citizen in terms of mortgage interest rates on his home or in terms of real property taxation, which is now growing because of the requirements of the municipalities of our country? An ever-increasing cycle is developing as a result of this government's actions?

I want to give a message to the government tonight, a message which is serious and which we must all consider: unless we get together in a constructive way—and that is the basis of all my remarks on second reading of this bill, on the principle of this bill,—unless every member of the House comes forward and tries to give advice to the government and tries to suggest a course of action for the government and does so in a co-operative way, in a non-partisan way; unless we create an economic future and plan our economy so that we can reduce the deficit, then the requirement for borrowing money, which expanded from $12 billion in June of last year to $14 billion six months later, will be a rollercoaster proposition which will worsen.

I plead with the government to take advantage of this opportunity when it is a majority government. There are advantages in having a majority. It gives the government the ability to take the kind of action that will give stability and flexibility to our economy. By doing so, the government will be rendering a service to the Canadian people. If it continues on the present course, we in Canada will face a poor and unfortunate future. A country such as Canada with the potential it has, deserves far better.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for making his comments brief. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I will not be the cause of members leaving the chamber.

For the past number of hours we have been debating the $14 billion which this government wishes to borrow to subsidize its deficit. If this government were an individual or a company, it would declare bankruptcy. The problem is that the federal government has no place where it can file bankruptcy papers. I am sure that if it could, it would file them. You cannot have deficits continuously, as this government does, and go on and on, unless you happen to be the government.

We understand that much of the money that is allocated by this government goes toward western development. Hon. members in the government party have often referred to the figure of $4 billion. We cannot find the $4 billion in the budget. When we take a close look at the budget, we find $2 billion to be spent over three years, but when we take another look to try to find out where this new $2 billion will be spent, we find it is to be spent on existing programs. There is nothing new, nothing to benefit or assist the people.

I see the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) shake his head, but the fact is that the $2 billion will not be spent on new programs. Let us see where this $2 billion comes from. It comes from the $37.5 billion which will be removed from the resources of western Canada in the next three years. The proposal is to return $2 billion and to take away $37.5 billion. This will not make people in any part of Canada respect a government which tries to promote such flim-flam and chicanery as taking $37.5 billion and returning only $2 billion.

I heard the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) referring earlier this evening to prices which this government is charging for gasoline. I should like to read into the record figures representing the difference between what was proposed in the PC budget of December, 1979, and what is projected in the present budget for the year 1983. Under the December PC budget, the average annual tax on heating oil was equivalent to 19 cents a gallon. Under the Liberal budget, by December, 1983, the average tax on heating oil will be 55 cents a gallon, and that is before the purchase of Petrofina, as my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) says. Under the PC budget, the average annual tax on gasoline was 39 cents a gallon. The average annual tax in 1983 under the Liberal government's budget will be 59 cents a gallon. In spite of this, hon. members opposite cried about the 18-cent increase we proposed! Under our budget the total tax, before the energy tax credit, for the average Canadian family would have been $483. Under this budget, the average tax will be $790. In our budget we proposed an energy tax credit because we had compassion and sympathy for middle and lower-income Canadians. It would have meant another $220. Under our tax system, the average Canadian family would pay $263, but under the system proposed by this bellicose government, they will have to pay $790, and hon. members opposite are wondering why the people of Canada are saying that their budget is not that great.

Let us see why we have a deficit of $14 billion. We have heard the reason given by members on the other side. The reason, they say, is that the government has a program and it needs $14 billion. What do they need it for? They need it for JetStar trips. I would like hon. members opposite to listen. In 1978, under the old Liberal government, 431 trips were made, for a total of $274,107,000. In 1979, under the Progressive Conservative government, 162 trips were made. Hon. members opposite are saying that is why we lost the election. They cannot really think that we lost the election because we were careful with the taxpayers' money. That cannot be the way they think of the taxpayers of Canada. I am sure that hon. members opposite have more sense than to think that our taxpayers can be purchased with their own money.

Let us look at the period of time when Otto Lang was minister of transport. I see there is a mistake in my notes here. The name of the minister is spelled "Auto", and I apologize for that because he took up more time flying. He made 30 JetStar trips in the same time period as the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) took three. Recently the JetStar has been used for 56 trips a month, or two trips every day including Saturdays and Sundays. The big user of the JetStar seems to be the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who travels across Canada promoting himself. He is not of great assistance to my part of the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Speaker, I see that the clock is moving ahead, so may I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FEDERAL LANDS—YUKON—DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN LOTS WITHOUT TENDER

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, since the rules changed in 1972, I believe it was, when this late show was first invented, this is the first time I have risen to take advantage of it. I do so because of a matter which is very important to Yukoners.

I telephoned the office of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) and informed him that I would be raising this matter tonight. But I suppose he had other pressing matters to deal with and he did not consider the land question in the Yukon of sufficient importance in relation to his other responsibilities. I see the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier) in his seat, though. He is probably here tonight to read the written response to what is anticipated will be my presentation.

The constitution is of importance to Yukoners, Mr. Speaker, in terms of government reform. Fuel prices are very important in the north. High taxes and high interest rates are extremely important in that high cost area, as are high food prices. High unemployment and native land claims, too, are important. Environmental concerns and the aspect of the Alaska highway natural gas pipeline are also very high on the priority list of important items in the Yukon, as are the functions of the Northern Canada Power Commission. Transportation and mining development are also of great importance. But I cannot think of a more important issue in all of my years in the Yukon than the availability of land. Of the 207,036 square miles of Yukon, the territorial government has jurisdiction over some 367 of those. All of the rest are federal.

I would like to break down this problem into two compartments, and it is important to do so. If it were not for the land freeze which the federal government imposed until the settlement of native claims in Yukon, an individual—and I am emphasizing that word, individual—would be entitled to apply for permission to purchase a plot of land, whether it be a small plot in the municipality or a larger plot in the countryside. That application would be initiated by the individual and dealt with by the government.

If the member for Timmins-Chapleau is to answer my question, will he at least pay attention to my submission, which he is to respond to?

Mr. Chénier: I always do.

Mr. Nielsen: I will compartmentalize the one problem of an individual. Again, in all of my time in Yukon, which is going on 30 years now, I know of no instance where there has been a federal disposition of multiple lots of land which has not been—I know of no such disposition. If there had been one, I would be extremely surprised if it were not publicly advertised and all Yukoners given an opportunity to apply.

The recent case which gives rise to these questions concern six lots of federal land available in the Cowley Lake area and seven other lots along the Carcross Road which became available for disposition. That is 13 lots in all. They were snapped up by individuals who seemed to have some kind of inside information. One of those individuals was the chief administrator of lands in Yukon whose application was right there on top, among others from prominent individuals in the community. There was no public advertising and no request for public tenders.

At that stage I raised the matter in the House. Since that time there have been meetings between the territorial government officials and the federal government officials in Yukon to determine how to resolve the matter. Territorial government policy is to advertise such dispositions publicly and to give every Yukoner an equal opportunity to apply for those multiple land dispositions. The outcome of that meeting has not yet been decided but I was informed today that the federal position now is that everything is in a holding pattern and that there will be no disposition of those 13 lots. The whole matter is under review and until such time as a policy is developed, there will be no disposition. That is some progress, and with that position I agree.

There are two possible solutions to this particular problem. First, the federal government could advertise those lots as being available for sale, which would give every Yukoner an equal opportunity to apply for them. The other and more preferable solution is that the federal government could transfer those lots to the Yukon government which, in turn, would dispose of them. I know that it is the standing, invariable policy of the Yukon government to publicly advertise multiple lot dispositions for sale so that everyone is given an equal opportunity.

I suggest that in the future the disposition of federal lands of multiple disposition be publicly advertised so that every resident of the Yukon may be given an equal opportunity to acquire those lands. I make the final distinction; we are not speaking about an individual application, as difficult as that is to get through, but about several lots belonging to the federal government and put up for sale by the federal government. In such instances it is the obligation of the government to follow its own guidelines for the disposition of public lands set out by the Treasury Board and to call for public tenders, which means advertising and giving an equal opportunity to all to obtain those lands.

Mr. Ray Chénier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, for the past two or three years there has been controversy in the Yukon concerning the policies and operations of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in regard to making land available to Yukon citizens for lease or for purchase. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) highlighted this controversy by alleging improprieties in the department—

Mr. Nielsen: That is not true. I alleged no improprieties.

Mr. Chénier: —in regard to some 13 rural lots south of Whitehorse. Of course, there was no such impropriety, as was recently stated publicly by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro).

There are, however, some lingering misunderstandings of the department's land disposition policies in the Yukon which I would like to dispel. For many years the department held to what can be described as a laissez-faire policy in the granting of surface interests to Yukon lands.

Individuals or firms which applied to the federal lands office rarely had their applications rejected. The primary criteria was that an applicant should receive as much land area as he needed for his purpose. There was only a cursory review and evaluation of the application, with little or no territorial government input, and the cost of land was set at the minimum allowable in the territorial lands regulations. It became obvious that uncontrolled disposition could lead to costly unplanned-for demands for public services and to environmental damage. It soon became necessary for the department to apply policies that would gain control of the situation. As an example, the department felt it necessary to apply a policy under which cottage recreational lots would be made available in future only in planned subdivisions. Some 500 lots have been prepared and released by the department since then.

However, the predominant measure taken to impose order on a situation that was getting out of hand by the mid-1970s was to enter into co-operative land-use planning projects with the Yukon government. Since 1977, both levels of government have pursued land-use planning in what is called the Whitehorse north study area, encompassing 750 square miles, and the Whitehorse south study area, encompassing some 1,400 square miles.

In effect, these projects have addressed the rural land development requirements and aspirations of 60 per cent of the Yukon's population. The projects were carried out with extensive public participation. The Yukon government and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have approved the findings of the studies which will provide for rural residential acreage lots being made available in the near future. The government of the Yukon will announce very soon a policy for rural lot development in the Whitehorse area.

The method by which the department makes land available in a fair and equitable manner also needs to be addressed. The regional lands office employs three systems. I will not be able to explain all of them, but I should like to continue this with the hon. member when I get the chance.

Mr. Nielsen: I wish you would answer the question.

Adjournment Debate

PETRO-CANADA—INQUIRY WHETHER OFFER MADE TO PURCHASE PETROFINA

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, January 16, I put a question in the House to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). I asked him whether he could deny or confirm that Petro-Canada had made a purchase offer to Petrofina. He replied that he was not aware of any approach made by Petro-Canada to Petrofina in recent months.

I should explain that the background to that question was a conversation I had with the minister the previous Wednesday, in which I made known to him that there were allegations that the president of Petrofina had made known to other persons what he considered to be offers by Petro-Canada for the purchase of his company.

Two weeks later came the confirmation that our suspicions were well-founded—Petro-Canada was buying Petrofina. The acquisition by Petro-Canada of Petrofina represents a significant step in achieving the goals of the government's energy program.

From now on Petro-Canada will not be only a national company by name, but in reality, from Cape Breton to Vancouver. Petro-Canada already owns gas stations in western Canada, but not in the east. This will change with the acquisition of Petrofina's 1,086 stations across Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces.

When the federal Liberal government announced the National Energy Program on October 28, the keystone of the program was, and still is, the intention to increase Canadian participation in our domestic oil and gas industries. This acquisition is one of which all Canadians can be proud.

Easterners should be able to buy gas from their national oil company rather than from foreign-owned gas stations, as westerners have been able to do since Petro-Canada bought Pacific Petroleums in 1978.

The energy policy received an additional boost a couple of weeks ago when Dome Petroleum announced a multibillion dollar energy exploration program. The price paid for Petrofina has been estimated by various people, but I have noticed that Wood Gundy, a brokerage house, calculated Petrofina's net asset value before the federal budget as $99.31 a share and its post-budget value as $81.54. Of course the point is that as a nationally-owned company it can return to its $99.31 per share value. A premium under those circumstances of $21 a share or 21 per cent is certainly not out of line with similar purchases.

The purchase of Petrofina propels Petro-Canada into fifth place from eighth place in the oil and gas business. The other four major petroleum companies—Imperial Oil, Gulf Canada, Texaco Canada and Shell Canada—are all foreign-owned. Petrofina's oil and gas production, its tar sands interests, its Montreal refinery and its more than 1,000 gasoline outlets will now be owned by Petro-Canada.

I should like to make some reference to the four foreign-owned companies which I mentioned. For example, Imperial Oil has only 22 per cent Canadian ownership; Shell Canada, 26 per cent; Gulf Canada, 26 per cent and Texaco Canada, 9 per cent. I ask, therefore, where did the profits go? I want to make reference to this matter, and I shall be very precise. The net income of these four companies, after income taxes, in 1977 totalled just over $2 billion. In 1978 it went to $2,285 million, and in 1979 it went to $3,525 million. Of that amount, in the three years about which I am talking, 1977, 1978 and 1979, the federal government took in $825 million; $735 million and $766 million respectively. The amounts that went to the provinces were as follows: in 1977, $2,985 million; in 1978, $3,357 million and in 1979, $4,076 million. I think it is time we called a halt to this. There was an increase of 27.6 per cent in the profit of Imperial Oil for the year ended December 31, 1980, over the previous year. This did not include a one-time increase in cash profits amounting to some $81 million.

It is interesting that the foreign-owned multinationals are starting to make a move. Canadianization is no longer in doubt. Gulf Canada submitted a report proposing three alternative Canadianization schemes. Shell Oil is negotiating with two medium-sized Canadian companies to form a new consortium. Mobil, similarly, is negotiating with two Canadian companies to bring off the same deal as Shell.

The decision to go after and take over Petrofina was made by the board of directors and management of Petro-Canada. The negotiations were carried out on a business basis by the management of Petro-Canada, and the government has approved the takeover. I sincerely applaud the government's initiatives. I look forward to receiving my Petro-Canada gas credit card at an early date so that I can leave the profit on Canada's immense natural resources in Canada.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has so well comprehended the government's policy of Canadianization in the petroleum sector that there is little that I need add.

I should, however, take this brief opportunity to draw attention to the Canadianization goals in the national energy policy, goals which were set forth against the background of foreign ownership in our petroleum industry which has been much greater than in other industrialized countries.

The National Energy Program identifies a greater Canadian ownership and control in the petroleum industry as a principal goal. It holds out the expectation that from Canadianization a yet more dynamic energy sector will emerge, one more responsive to Canada's broad national goals. More specifically, the program looks toward 50 per cent Canadian ownership of oil and gas production by 1990; Canadian control of a significant number of larger oil petroleum companies and an early increase in the share of the petroleum sector owned by the Government of Canada.

As the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has suggested, the popularity of the Canadianization program cannot be in any doubt. The evidence is ample, whether it be in the form of opinion surveys or simply in the form of the increased customer demand at existing Petro-Canada stations in western Canada. I want also to draw attention, as the hon. member has just done, to the fact that in the purchase of Petrofina, Petro-Canada has acquired a company with assets that fit in particularly well with its present activities and which, when integrated, will help to ensure that we have a truly national, viable state oil company.

FISHERIES—REGULATION OF HERRING FISHING ON WEST COAST

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I rose in my place to ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) questions about the herring roe fishing policy that he was implementing this year on the west coast.

Until now I have had a great deal of respect for the answers the minister has given when he has been asked about fishing policy in Canada. I always felt that he was trying to be candid, not like another cabinet minister in the government; I felt that he was as open and forthcoming as possible—until last Monday.

I was surprised and alarmed that he skirted around the questions and never answered them. What alarms me most is I do not think he knew the answers. I do not believe he was trying to be untruthful; he just did not know.

When I was elected in 1974, three Liberal members were elected in British Columbia, representing coastal fishing communities. Today there are none. It appears that at least the fishermen are trying to send this Liberal government a message that they are unhappy with the fishing policy as it is being administered. The government is not catching on to that message.

The minister is not going to British Columbia any more now than in the days when Liberal members represented those coastal fishing communities. If he cared for his entire portfolio, not only the eastern maritime portion but also the Pacific portion, he would go there a few times each year and hear first hand what the fishermen have to tell him.

I had several simple questions to put to the minister. First, will those fishermen who have herring fishing licences automatically be able to fish for herring roe? Second, in the event there is the exception of those people who already hold that licence, will there be other categories, such as natives and other groups, who will be subjected to the lottery system? Third, why did the minister shelve the program which the department had in place for the 1980 season? Since there had been a strike during that year and the program had never been used, why did they shelve that program for 1981 and surprise the fishing community with an entirely new, untried policy? The fishermen had already invested money in preparing themselves and their equipment for the policy announced in 1980.

After that investment, the program was shelved for an almost entirely new one for 1981. Fourth, are there plans for expanding that kind of policy to other species such as salmon? That is the only question the minister attempted to answer. All he could say was he did not know of any plans, he would have to check.

I received no answers. My concern is that the minister does not know what is going on in the west coast fishing industry, nor does he understand the problems those fishermen are facing.

This raises new concerns. The fishermen are being continuously faced with what appear to be impetuous, in-house decisions made by people who seldom go into the field. They are made on the eleventh or fourteenth floor, if there is one, of an office building on Pender Street in Vancouver. It is a policy untouched by human hands; sterile, as clinically pure as possible. Those policymakers do not ask how their decisions affect the fishermen who have made their investment and their plans.

The minister should have known that eight out of the 11 groups were opposed to the lottery system. Only three wanted it. Although roughly 60 per cent to 70 per cent of the fishermen were opposed to it, he was set to go ahead. I understand that since I asked the question, there has been a modification of the program. Part of the lottery system has been cast aside and most or maybe all of the fishermen will be allowed to go out.

I want to quote from page 2 of a news release issued by the department entitled "1981 Herring Roe Season". I quote:

—it has been necessary to set a maximum number of vessels of each gear type for each of the three areas. Consequently, all fishermen may not receive an area licence certificate for that most preferred area.

I showed this to the minister after I had asked the question. He did not understand what it was all about. I must say I am worried. In his answer to me the minister said, as reported at page 7016 of Hansard:

● (2225)

—but in 1981, according to the reports of the biologists, we had to question very seriously if the type of management breakdown which had occurred in 1979 was tolerable—

In talking to fishermen I find it was not the biologists, but the herring co-ordinator who was out there. The minister is simply not doing his job for Pacific coast fisheries; he is not going out there and he is not consulting the industry thoroughly. He seems to have a few officials he consorts with and he bases his final decision on the basis of that short and shallow consultation. It is time he went out there and listened to the fishermen.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. George Henderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, an area licensing system is being implemented for the 1981 roe herring season. All herring roe fishermen are eligible for the program, with no special entry status for any particular group of fishermen.

Three areas of the coast were identified as separate fishing areas and I will mention them: north of Cape Caution, the Gulf of Georgia and the west coast Vancouver Island. Each roe herring licence holder is eligible to fish in only one of these three areas. A choice form was sent to roe herring licence holders on which they were asked to rank the three areas according to their order of choice. Licence holders were advised that, in order to achieve relatively equal opportunity for catches in each area, a draw might be necessary in order to award licence certificates in some areas.

According to choice forms submitted as of yesterday February 11, 1981, 1,416 indicate that although an optimal management situation may not be possible in all areas, the fleet is adequately distributed by first choice to allow a fishery to proceed in an orderly manner and to provide equitable catch opportunity. All roe herring licence holders are being assigned to their area of first choice for the 1981 season. This will accommodate voluntary pooling and fishing in traditional areas for native and other fishermen.

A number of management options were discussed for the 1981 roe herring season. The options discussed with industry were: no roe fishery; vessel pooling for seiners; individual vessel quotas; and no change from current management practices. The consensus among the industry organizations canvassed was that a new management plan was essential. The establishment of zones will improve gear distribution on the grounds and is expected to lead to larger catches being available in each area without endangering the stocks through high risk fishing situations.

It is quite an undertaking to manage the west coast fishery, and I think the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) and the department are doing their best in a very, very severe situation.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the latest figures released by Statistics Canada indicate an annual inflation rate of 12 per cent, with food for home consumption up 15 per cent since a year ago, led by the price of fresh vegetables which is now 42½ per cent higher than under the Conservatives 12 months previously, and whereas the Liberals have deliberately caused an increase in the price of heating oil of 9 per cent in one single month, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King):

That this House condemns the Grit government for squeezing the Canadian consumer between unprecedented high prices on the one hand and declines in real wages on the other.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

POSITION OF SASKATCHEWAN NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan has fallen off the fence and, by chance, landed on the side of the people of Canada, much to the disappointment of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House urge that the federal New Democratic Members of Parliament from the Province of Saskatchewan vote against the constitutional package, as their constituents are requesting, and that the House direct the NDP House leader not to physically abuse his colleagues who stand to oppose this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATUS OF WOMEN

CALL FOR MINISTER TO ATTEND INDEPENDENT CONFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move the following motion. Given that the minister responsible for the status of women tried to mothball the Conference on Women and the Constitution scheduled for February 14 and 15, and given that hundreds of women from all across Canada have emerged to stage this important conference in defiance of the minister's dictates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the minister responsible for the status of women emerge from the cocoon in which he is trying to shield himself from the views of women and make it a priority to attend the conference on February 14 and 15 so that he can be informed on the issues of importance to women, who have flown here from all parts of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BELL CANADA

PROPOSED INCREASE IN RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. As you know, Bell Canada has asked for a 30 per cent increase with respect to some of its rates. This year that increase will yield it $183 million in addition to what it currently makes, and next year it will yield $550 million in additional revenue. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House inform Bell Canada that its line to the public purse may be disconnected unless it spends more energy improving services and less lobbying for outrageous and unwarranted 30 per cent increases.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST THAT HOUSEHOLDER MAILINGS BE USED FOR ACCEPTABLE PURPOSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on an urgent matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that members' services allow all members to send householder mailings to their constituents four times a year; considering that the contents of such mailings should reflect the facts rather than convey false and heinous information; whereas the member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) suggests in his last mailing that the government's patriation plan would make the people in Montreal, Chicoutimi, Toronto and Windsor more equal than those in Grand Forks, Merritt, Osoyoos, Penticton and Westbank; and since the member suggests as well to his constituents that they must be ready to become second-class citizens if the government's patriation plan is passed, I move, seconded by the member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais):

That, since this household mailing is only deceitful and heinous literature, the printing costs be incurred by the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen or by his own political party.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF BAY OF FUNDY TIDAL POWER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion. Whereas the production of electric power from the tides in the Bay of Fundy has, for many years, been the subject of repeated studies which have shown this renewable energy project to be feasible and capable of producing over 4,000 megawatts of electric energy, and whereas the Premier of Nova Scotia has journeyed to New York to explore plans for the further development of this tremendous electric power potential, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That this House commend the Premier of Nova Scotia for his leadership and direct the minister of energy to make a solid financial commitment to substantial assistance for the development of Fundy tidal power in Canada by Canadians and for the benefit of all Canadians, particularly those who live in the maritime provinces.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that those Canadians who have donated their hard-earned dollars to the Conservative party have been getting questionable political benefits in return, and since Joey has been spending party funds to have Numero Uno fly around to cut and wash his hair, making Joe's haircuts of more value than a pensioner's monthly income, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That Joe come clean and return the hundreds of dollars he has ripped off from donors to the Conservative Party used in the interests of keeping him pretty, and that at all future times he trim his own fat wages—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. This is really an abuse of Standing Order 43.

AIRPORTS

RETURN SALE OF EXPROPRIATED LANDS AT MIRABEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion related to an urgent matter.

Considering that the federal government has at last made up its mind about Mirabel and decided to resell the land expropriated in 1969; and considering that the federal government has acknowledged that many of those parcels of land are in a pitiful condition, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin):

That the House commend the government for its decision and particularly for confessing thereby that massive expropriations were a monumental mistake, provided, however, it makes public amends for having devastated what were then the most beautiful arable lands in Quebec.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

AIR SAFETY

LANDING OF AIRPLANES DURING HEAVY RAINFALLS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion. A recent study done by the University of Dayton Research Institute in Ohio shows that 18 of 25 serious aircraft crashes studied could be mainly attributed to landing in a heavy rainfall. Taking into account the fatal crash of a Texasgulf jet last Wednesday as it was trying to land in heavy rain at Westchester County airport I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the Minister of Transport obtain assurances from his air administrator and from Canadian and all foreign airlines that they are not allowing planes to land in Canada in a heavy rainfall and that he report back to the House as soon as possible.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry has not been convened since November 6 of last year for the purpose of discussing fishery management policy, and given the number of urgent seasonal problems developing in the fishing industry on both the east and west coasts, which must be addressed immediately by members of this House, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

• (1115)

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be given an immediate reference from this House, which would permit the hearing of witnesses from both the fishing industry and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, in relation to the new east coast licensing plan, the groundfish management plan for 1981, the 1981 herring roe management plan and the crisis in chinook salmon stocks, all of which have imminent and urgent importance to fishermen.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF ENERGY TAX CREDIT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance who will know that the annual inflation rate is now at 12 per cent, the highest in the last six years. He will also know that while the Government of Canada preoccupies itself with constitutional and other questions, this increase in inflation is hitting hardest at lower and middle-income Canadians. Earlier in this session the Minister of Finance refused to bring in any action of relief, an energy tax credit or anything of that kind. In light of the fact that fuel oil costs for homes have gone up 37 per cent over last year, will the minister now consider bringing in an energy tax credit or some other means of relief for Canadians who are suffering from the government's failure to deal with economic policy and to deal with inflation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition referred to a concern about the Constitution. I remind him that for the last weeks the House has dealt almost exclusively with economic matters through a number of tax bills that were before the House. Therefore I am surprised at the Leader of the Opposition suggesting there has not been ample opportunity to deal with or that we have not been concerned with economic questions. I have no intention of introducing the energy tax credit proposal which had been part of my predecessor's budget because it would do little good for the Canadian people in the present circumstances. For example, the first benefit would only have been available in March, 1982.

Oral Questions

MEASURES TO STOP DECLINE IN REAL WAGE INCOME

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I take it the Minister of Finance intends to do nothing at all to help low and middle-income earners across the country who are facing 12 per cent inflation this year and who receive from the Government of Canada no solace or help at all. May I deal with another problem of economic policy which the government is ignoring. The minister will know that real wages have been steadily declining. He will know that the Economic Council of Canada estimates that there will be a further decline this year. He must know that will lead to serious labour difficulties. Will the minister tell the House of Commons what the government intends to do to stop that decline in real wages and to head off the labour difficulties which are surely going to follow if the government continues to do nothing about the decline in real wages of Canadians across the country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would first like to comment on the allegation of the Leader of the Opposition that the government has done nothing at all to assist consumers in Canada. The first thing we did was to bring in a price regime for energy that was less expensive than the one he supported when he was Prime Minister of Canada. The second thing we did was to provide immediately an increase in pensions for our senior citizens which came into effect in 1980, not like the proposal advocated by the right hon. gentleman which would have come into effect for the first time in the pockets of the people in March, 1982. That is what we did. I think it compares very favourably with the non-action of his government. The right hon. member talked about the decline in real wages which has existed in this country. It is obviously related to another phenomenon in the economy, namely, declining productivity, and the decline in the output per worker in the country which is very persistent.

An hon. Member: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. MacEachen: The right hon. member and hon. members in the Tory party are asking what are we going to do about it. I ask him what is the economy going to do about it because we are not advocates of running the economy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: We still believe in the market system which prevails in Canada.

GOVERNMENT STANCE AGAINST INFLATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the only thing the Minister of Finance believes in is abandoning his responsibility to give economic direction to the country. He talked about there being an energy pricing regime brought in and, yes, there has been. That has stopped the development of jobs and heavy oil development and has caused an increase of 37 cents a gallon in the price of gas, and has caused an increase of 37 per cent in the price of fuel oil for homes. That is what the pricing regime of the Liberal government is doing, and the people cannot stand very much more of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Not very long ago when speaking to the IMF—the minister laughs at the burden he imposes upon the people of the country. Not long ago when speaking to the IMF, the Minister of Finance said, and I quote, "a firm stance against inflation must remain a key element in any economic strategy". Will the Minister of Finance tell us where is his firm stance against inflation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will be glad to give one illustration to the right hon. gentleman illustrating my firm stance against inflation, a firm stance against increasing expenditures which are advocated daily by his supporters in the House. If he believes in taking a stand against inflation he ought to discourage his supporters from getting up in the House every day asking the government to spend more and more, and thereby add to the deficit. That is the firm stance I am talking about.

FORECASTS RESPECTING INFLATION RATES—REQUEST FOR NEW BUDGET

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance whose stance is as firm against inflation as his promises were during the election when he said, "Vote Liberal and the price will stay down." Now we know heating costs are up 36.8 per cent since last year despite the minister's promise. That is how firm his stance is. In the minister's budget of October 28 he forecast the inflation rate for 1980 at 9.7 per cent, and it was actually 11.2 per cent. For 1981, only three months ago, he forecast inflation to be 10.2 per cent, and it is now 12 per cent.

An hon. Member: Boy, what a record.

Mr. Crosbie: Will the minister tell this House whether he is going to revise and table new projections, or is he going to resign because of this monumental failure? Just what is the explanation for this extraordinary falseness of his projections of just three months ago?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman should go back and compare the projections which he made in the December, 1979, budget for the annual rate in 1980, and his projection for 1981. I ask him to compare those, and then ask another question.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, this minister cannot answer questions; he can only ask them. Well, I have the answer. I forecast an 11 per cent increase for 1980 and an 11.4 per cent increase for 1981. The minister's projections are nowhere near that. The minister is incapable of being honest with the public of Canada.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Crosbie: Just so the minister cannot escape, I will read from his budget on the inflation side, page 18, "the outlook for the remainder—"

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is getting argumentative and I have a feeling he is preparing for quite a lengthy quotation. I would like him to ask his question.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the minister has promised a firm stance against inflation. Is he now going to bring in a budget which will introduce policies for that firm stance, and will he now roll back the increase in the price of heating fuel and gasoline, increases of over 37 per cent which have come about in the last 12 months? Will he follow up on his firm promise of January 23 to the people of Port Hawkesbury whom he fooled for the last time last February?

• (1125)

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I want to advise the hon. member that I have no intention of responding to his daily request for an additional budget. When the budget was presented last October, I clearly stated that the foremost problem facing the Canadian economy was inflation, and that budget established a medium-term assault on the problem of inflation in the form of supporting monetary restraint, in the form of reducing the deficit over time, and in the form of restraining government expenditures. That is the medium-term policy, and it will take some time to succeed.

Mr. Clark: Tell us about Petrofina.

Mr. MacEachen: If the hon. gentleman opposite, the Leader of the Opposition, or any of the various economic spokesmen have a different proposal or if they want to establish, for example, mandatory wage and price controls, then let them get up and say so, and not provide a different answer every day to the economic problems of the nation.

POWER OF GOVERNMENT TO DEAL WITH ECONOMIC EMERGENCIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Just before Christmas he acknowledged outside the House that the government did have the power, if it declared there was an economic emergency, to take special action. Since today, if we exclude food prices, we have the highest level of inflation in the past 33 years, the lowest level of industrial capacity in 18 years, and more than one million unemployed, the highest level of unemployment since the depression, will the Prime Minister finally acknowledge that we have an economic crisis and instruct the Minister of Finance to bring in a new budget to deal with it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am happy to see that the Leader of the New Democratic Party has now revised his constitutional positions on the matters of energy and inflation. He was advocating all the time that at any moment the federal government could bring in control of prices and wages, but particularly prices. He now understands that it can only be done under the emergency power, under the BNA Act. It cannot be done without that power.

He will recall that after the 1975 imposition of wage and price controls the matter went to the Supreme Court of Canada, and it was judged there that the only reason controls were intra vires was that there was in effect an emergency recognized as such by all the governments of Canada. This is not the situation now. We do not see the premiers asking for stronger federal intervention in order to curtail what the hon. member describes as a crisis.

REQUEST FOR INVOLVEMENT OF PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, it is the Prime Minister who has revised his position, not me. It was my question before Christmas which pointed out that we had an economic crisis and that the Prime Minister had authority to act.

At the time he brought in a wage control program we had a level of inflation lower than that which we have now. We had a level of unemployment lower than what we have now. Will the Prime Minister not take some initiative, contact the premiers, point out to them that the problems right now have nothing to do with increasing wages but everything to do with escalating prices, and ask for their support to bring in special powers to deal with the inflation which is affecting every family in the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is right. At this time the greatest inflationary pressure is coming from higher energy costs. If the Leader of the New Democratic Party looks at the recent report on inflation, he will see that that is one of the principal factors and that, of course, is because of the world price of energy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: In Canada we are keeping energy prices below the world price. We are not, as had been advocated by the Tory party, going to 85 per cent of world prices. That is the difference between us.

In so far as wages are concerned, the hon. member is right. They are not at the level they were at when we brought in controls in 1975, at which time the average settlements were in the area of 20 per cent. That is why the country was particularly concerned. We believe now that there is a more voluntary concern about the state of the economy and more co-operation, except from the Tories, in the fight against inflation.

• (1130)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, that is precisely the point. The Prime Minister waited last time until wages went way up until he did anything to control the economy. What we are asking from this side is why, in order to avoid the level of industrial disputes now taking place in Canada because workers have experienced a net loss of income in each of the past three years and will have a net loss of income in 1981, the Prime Minister is waiting for wages to catch up? Why does the government not act now on the price side whether it is in housing, in food, or in any other sector, so that the ordinary worker does not have to push up his wages?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member suggests some area of concern. He knows that the two main areas of concern now are food prices and energy prices. It would be interesting to hear from the hon. member how he would expect us to control food prices and, perhaps, to control energy prices any more than we are doing now in so far as Canadian production of energy is concerned.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask a very straightforward question of the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Has the cabinet made a decision on the Crowsnest Pass freight rates?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, we have made a decision not to deal with the Crowsnest Pass freight rates until there is a very strong demand from representatives of western farm groups and other groups to touch the Crowsnest rates.

Mr. Epp: If that is the position of the government at present, can the Prime Minister explain to us why the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board would be phoning his past political friends telling them to start the campaign, that he has lost the fight in cabinet on Crow rates and that the campaign to oppose the government's position should start?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot comment on those phone calls about which I know nothing, but I can tell the hon. member that some farm leaders have met with the Minister of Transport, with other ministers, and with myself, in recent weeks, and some of them have advocated reopening the Crow rate and examining a new approach to transportation in the west, which would mean changing the Crow rate. I told them—and yesterday I said it publicly—that we do not want to fiddle with the Crow rate unless there is some very strong feeling throughout the west that this rate should be reopened and the question re-examined. I imagine that any phone call along the lines referred to by the hon. member would have been to tell these community leaders exactly what I told them, that is "if you want the Crow rate to be reopened and re-examined, you had better say it loud and clear because we will not do it on our own initiative."

PENSIONS

NATIONAL PENSIONS CONFERENCE—REQUEST MADE BY PROFESSIONAL INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare as she is responsible for the National Pensions Conference to be held in Ottawa from March 31 to April 2. I want to ask the minister why it is that the conference co-ordinator, Mr. Guy Fortier, has written the following to the president of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada:

> I am very sorry that we cannot accede to your request to have the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada attend the National Pensions Conference . . . there are literally hundreds of separate organizations such as yours—

I want to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare why she is denying those public servants who represent the largest pension funds in Canada the opportunity to attend and to participate in this conference.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of that particular letter. The conference will accommodate the maximum participation. Right now we think that more than 300 participants plus media representatives will be active at the Conference Centre. The participation will be divided equally among the main players, and surely, as the hon. member says, the superannuation officials, both employers and employees, are the key players in the pension system in Canada. Therefore, I will look into the particular letter referred to by the hon. member, which, of course, was given to us out of context. By the way, Madam Speaker, I welcome the interest of the Tory party in this matter. It is now a month before the conference and this is the first question we have had from them on this subject. This is remarkable progress.

EXCLUSION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, although the minister pleads ignorance of this question, it is a fact that her officials have directed that some 16,900 members of PIPS will not be allowed to attend this conference, and I presume that neither will the 500,000 Canadians who are employed by the Government of Canada who have entrusted over $20 billion in the form of an unfunded liability into the hands of the Government of Canada.

My supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Does the minister, who is responsible for the pensions of public service employees, and in fact is benefiting from the third party benefit which the government receives by way of a $2 billion annual subsidy to the government's budget, condone the exclusion of his own employees from this very important pensions conference?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member gets his numbers. I intend to sit down with him one of these days and explain how the pension accounts actually work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: I understood him to say in his preamble to the question that we were excluding 16,000 people of the PIPS group from attending this conference. The point is that my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has responded to that question. The conference is being sponsored by her department. I thought her answer made perfect sense, that the key players in this are the employer and employee groups who are the direct participants in this fund. I would be more than happy to receive any representations that PIPS has to make with respect to the government pension plan, as I have in the past from other groups. As the hon. member has pointed out, we are the employer and obviously we are concerned with their pension plans, and if they have specific representations I would be delighted to receive them myself.

SUBMISSION OF PIPS REPRESENTATIONS TO CONFERENCE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the minister having said that he would be delighted to receive the representations, would he be prepared to give an undertaking to the House that he would take the representations to that conference as one of the employers?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the Treasury Board will be represented at that conference. The Treasury Board representatives at that conference—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, additional questions are being asked at the same time—

Mr. Clark: Monique Bégin is answering for you.

Madam Speaker: If I may help the minister, he may simply answer the question that has been asked and not concern himself about those that are shouted across the floor.

Mr. Clark: Ask Monique Bégin, Don.

Mr. Johnston: We intend, as the largest employer in Canada, to put forward the point of view of Treasury Board.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—CABINET POLICY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It concerns the question put by the hon. member for Provencher, and it is really supplementary to it. With regard to the speech given on Wednesday by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board in which he unequivocally supported the continuation of the Crowsnest freight rate, it is clear that the minister was speaking for cabinet when he made that policy statement that there will be no changes in the Crow rate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe that that is the answer I gave a moment ago. At present there is no decision and no intention in cabinet to change the Crow rate. I understand that even the western premiers cannot agree on whether or not it should be changed. Apparently the province of Saskatchewan is opposed to any change. The other two prairie provinces want change.

● (1140)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am being urged by the Tory party—and now by the NDP—to tell the west what is good for it in the area of grain transportation.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: God help us.

Mr. Trudeau: I think they would be the first to tell us that that is not the right approach.

Mr. Nielsen: Double-tracking.

Mr. Trudeau: At the present time our policy is not to touch the Crow rate, but if there is a general feeling in the west that the question must be reopened, then we would be happy to do so.

Mr. Epp: Will you do the same with the Constitution?

HALL REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I like that statement except for "the present time" part of it. Regardless of the statements being made by the various ministers who are indulging in an attempt to establish public opinion across the west, there is a great deal of consensus among farmers that the Crowsnest freight rate should stay as is.

My supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport, but perhaps his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for St. Boniface, could answer it. In its deliberations on the Crowsnest freight rate is the Department of Transport taking a good look at the recommendations in the report of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall on grain handling and transportation, and considering extending the Crow benefits to other products to alleviate some of the concerns of the people who are bothered by the level of Crow rates?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Ministry of Transport has been receiving delegations from various commodity representatives and groups interested in freight rates in the west. Their representations are being taken into consideration. At some future date the minister will be making recommendations to cabinet.

Mr. Clark: Which minister?

Mr. Bockstael: The Minister of Transport will be bringing recommendations to cabinet for its authorization or approval.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Could he enlighten the House on whose behalf the Minister of Agriculture was speaking when he stated the following in a recent speech:

> The debate on the Crowsnest pass freight rate has gone on for too long and I hope it can be resolved quickly.

—preferably by August 1? For whom was the Minister of Agriculture speaking, if the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board was stating government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): He was speaking for all of us, Madam Speaker.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH CHRYSLER CANADA

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, perhaps I could direct my initial question to the Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Could that minister indicate when we will hear a statement with respect to the current negotiations involving Chrysler Canada Ltd.? Will that statement be made first in the House? May we be assured that the press or a press conference will not be arranged first, rather than coming to the House and making a statement in the House?

Mr. Nielsen: The question is for you, Lapointe.

Mr. Epp: Just say "yes".

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Madam Speaker, I apologize to the House and to the hon. member. I did not hear the thrust of his question.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I should like to repeat the main thrust of my question to the minister. It involves the current negotiations with respect to Chrysler Canada. When may we have a statement in the House concerning the minister's determination to date with respect to those negotiations? May we be assured that statement in fact will be made in the House and will not be made first to the press, or even in a press conference?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is now engaged in ongoing consultations with spokesmen for the industry and the United Auto Workers, and the government will soon be in a position to make a decision in that respect.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, in view of the minister's non-answer, I feel I have no alternative but to go to the Prime Minister. Would he indicate whether in fact there has been an agreement in principle between the Government of Canada and Chrysler Canada with respect to the current guarantee and other loan arrangements upon which agreement may be reached?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I apologize. I have not been following the exchange. There have been discussions between the government of Ontario and the Government of Canada, but as far as I know no final decision has been taken.

Mr. Crosbie: Wake up. This is question period.

ENERGY

IMPACT OF PRICE ON CONSERVATION MEASURES AND DEVELOPMENT OF ALTERNATIVE SUPPLIES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It relates to the conservation programs of the federal government. The minister will know that the usage of CHIP has increased by a factor of about four in the last year or so and that there has been a great deal of interest in oil furnace conversions and other federal government conservation programs. Could the minister tell the House what impact he feels energy pricing has had on conservation, or whether people are now responding to conservation because they have a fear about energy supplies?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it is extremely difficult to give an answer to the question raised by the hon. member. It is of a nature which concerns consumer habits. It is interesting to see that petroleum consumption in Canada last year went down by about 3 per cent. It is the view of the government that it would be completely irresponsible to rely essentially or mainly on increases in price alone to reduce consumption. Our position and our view is that people are interested in new and alternate forms of energy and that the government programs to increase conservation, to substitute oil for gas, and to insulate their homes better, are still the best means of ensuring oil self-sufficiency in the country, rather than socking it to the consumers by much higher prices.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I think most Canadians now know that we have a problem, or certainly an arising problem, in terms of energy supply. That is precisely the point. The effect or impact of energy pricing on supply is one factor and on conservation it is another factor. In addressing the supply problem, could the minister tell the House what impact he feels pricing has on the development of the alternative supplies we must have to replace oil which is not there because of the government's energy pricing program? Are we backing ourselves into a position where not only do we have subsidization of every energy system in the country, but also a rationing system?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I once again thank the hon. member for his question. Of course when we prepared the National Energy Program we kept in mind the view expressed by the hon. member, namely that we must promote the development of alternative energy sources to eliminate eventually the need to subsidize available forms of energy through public funds. The advantage of the National Energy Program is that it clearly shows the prices that we shall have to pay for oil and gas in the next ten years. For instance, the price of oil will double within four years and will nearly quadruple by the end of this decade. This is a clear indication to the industry and those interested in alternative forms of energy that they may make specific plans and market new products or alternative energy sources which will certainly be competitive in oil, as they already know the level of prices they will be facing in 1985, 1987 and 1990. I believe this is the wisest policy for us to follow.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DUMPING OF RADIOACTIVE TAILINGS BY RIO ALGOM MINES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Would he explain to the House why AECD has allowed Rio Algom Mines of Elliot Lake to dump on a continuous basis—24 hours a day—low-grade radioactive tailings into lakes which were once pure and natural, an environmental tragedy that over the last quarter century has destroyed the entire Serpent River system in northern Ontario?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, generally I have confidence in the AECD supervision of that process, but I shall investigate the information which the hon. member has brought to my attention today and report back to him.

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. Does the government intend to allow Rio Algom to build several proposed dams, some out of radioactive tailings, in order to reverse the flow of water in several streams which could easily result in the destruction of Elliot Lake's most popular recreational lake, Lake Dunlop?

Mr. Roberts: Madam Speaker, from the point of view of my responsibilities I would be concerned that, if any such development is to take place, it be done in a way which is consonant with the safe protection of the environment, and I would essay every course of action to ensure that this took place.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

TERMINATION OF NATIVE SPORT AND RECREATION PROGRAM

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport. The minister is not giving the National Indian Brotherhood the $1.2 million for recreational activities which was allocated in this year's estimates. Many of the programs are already under way. Why is the minister discriminating against these people?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question and particularly for his concern in relation to the Indian people. Some years ago the Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport was authorized to carry out an experimental program which involved expenditures, and for the past year expenditures reached approximately $1.2 million, to cover status and non-status people in the country in the recreational and athletic field.

After being in existence for some years, a decision has been taken with respect to the program. The department, as the hon. member is well aware since he was the former minister, is very small and compact and does not have representatives in all the different parts of the country. This department is poorly structured to carry out supervision or monitoring of the effectiveness of these programs and how they are carried out. As a consequence a decision has been taken that a similar amount of money will be utilized for other purposes related to the health and welfare of the Indian people.

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, the minister's statement is neither candour, nor rhetorical, nor tongue in cheek; he speaks with a forked tongue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: You have to be nicer than that to me.

Oral Questions

FISHERIES

CHINOOK SALMON FISHING RESTRICTIONS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S. AUTHORITIES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In his policy of shutting down the Fraser River to gill-netters and in his answers in the House yesterday, the minister displayed an appalling lack of the understanding of the geography of the lower mainland of British Columbia. The salmon destined for the Fraser must swim through American waters where, during the season, the American fishermen fish seven days a week. Why does the minister not strike up discussions with the United States to shut down the American fishermen, rather than the Canadian fishermen?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the very purpose of the agreement which we are trying to reach with the United States on the whole issue of salmon interception is to deal with this type of problem. As the hon. member knows very well, the treaty which governs the management of the Fraser River is not the creation of this administration. That treaty goes back some years and we are attempting to have it changed. In fact I hope everybody, including the United States, will accept the reality that the chinook stocks have been over-exploited, that they are endangered and that we have to take difficult and painful measures to deal with the problem. I believe I would be irresponsible if I did not ask all elements of the industry to share equally in this effort of conservation.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, that is my point; all elements are not sharing equally. I would like some assurances, rather than merely statements of hope, that the Americans will not continue to fish for those salmon destined for the Fraser River while the Canadian fishermen are not allowed to fish. Would the minister give the House the data on which he based his policy of curtailment of the sports fishery? Would he publish the studies on which he based that policy?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, the hon. member likes to have it both ways. On the one hand he supports the policy that all elements of the fishery should share in the constraints of conservation measures and, on the other hand, he seems to be arguing that we should not have asked that the sports fishermen also have some restrictions.

Mr. Friesen: I did not say that.

Mr. LeBlanc: The reality is that the chinook salmon, especially the Fraser River chinook, have been decreasing in numbers quite dramatically. This is a trend which must be arrested, especially if we are ever to enhance the Fraser River and bring it up to its potential. We hope to take over direct management of the system. This situation is known by all the advisers. The difficulty in this situation can best be described in a phrase which I will borrow from the Minister of Justice—"Everybody wants to go to heaven, and nobody wants to die."

PUBLIC SERVICE

INTRODUCTION OF NEW MANAGEMENT CATEGORY

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board, who was the former chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and a hard-working member of the House while he worked on the whole matter of accountability which was launched when the Auditor General of Canada said that government spending is out of control.

In the proposed management structure which Treasury Board is bringing down to correct the situation and bring spending under control by putting in place value for money concepts, is the minister's plan, both phase one and phase two, an actual means whereby Treasury Board is raising the membership of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, and is he using this management structure to amend the Public Service Relations Act through Treasury Board regulations rather than through legislative introduced in this chamber?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I have noted accusations in the press made by some of the unions with respect to this new management category. I pointed out when this policy was initially introduced last July, I believe, that there would be no raid in this phase on any union groups whatsoever. To do so would require amendments to the act in question. Effectively, what we are doing is creating a management category consisting of the executive group now in place, and other members, particularly the PM Seven Group, who at the moment are effectively excluded from bargaining units. So there is no raid on the Professional Institute ranks as suggested by some observers in the press.

Mr. Huntington: Madam Speaker, would the President of the Treasury Board then assure us that phase two will not be a mushroom in the growth of another level of bureaucracy whereby the management group tries to compete with the science, professional and trade groups in terms of pay and numbers? I hope that the minister will not create another level of bureaucracy in his attempt to bring financial management under control and put systems management into place. I hope that the fear the Professional Institute has of phase two, that some 11.3 per cent of their membership could be removed from the union category, is unfounded. Surely the government will not create a bureaucratic category whereby management will compete with our top professional scientists in terms of pay. For instance, hospital administrators do not expect to compete with doctors.

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, as I indicated, the establishment of this management group is something, as the hon. member knows, which has been recommended by all independent observers—the Auditor General, the D'Avignon Commission and the Lambert Commission. We are in the initial stages of it, if you like, almost at an experimental stage. I think we all recognize the importance of having a definable, responsible and accountable management category. I am just as interested, as the hon. member is, and all members on this side of the House, in ensuring that the size of the bureaucracy does not mushroom through this very important exercise in management accountability.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MR. FULTON—ALLEGED MISLEADING MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

Madam Speaker: Would the hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) like to revive the question of privilege which was raised yesterday by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): With your permission, Madam Speaker, I would like to say, first, that I just became acquainted with the point raised by the hon. member for Skeena. I would also like to check the record very carefully and, of course, give my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) a chance to do so. He is absent at this time. With your permission, Madam Speaker, perhaps we can put this off until Monday or Tuesday next. I believe both of us will be here on Monday.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—INCREASE IN PRICE OF GASOLINE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to simply correct a figure which I gave earlier in the course of the question period. In fact, the price of gasoline at the pump has gone up, on average, 32 cents a gallon in 1980. That price, of course, is still rising.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEVENS—STATEMENT BY MR. GRAY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, as you know, I indicated last Friday that I would like to raise a question of privilege at the earliest possible opportunity. Subsequently, on Monday, my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) tabled a formal motion which I would like to move with respect to my question of privilege.

I first intended to proceed with my question of privilege today but I see that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is not in his seat. Unless there is some indication that he will be here later, perhaps I could defer my argument. But before deferring it I would like to indicate, at least, that if there is any confusion concerning the motion, the thrust that I will be making—and I give this to you, if you like, in the form of a new notice—is that the minister misled the House a week ago Friday by indicating in his answer that the negotiations with Massey-Ferguson were still under active review and that he had no statement to make at that time.

Subsequently, I will be showing in the course of my argument—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is sufficient notice to the Chair of the kind of question of privilege the hon. member intends to rise on. If he wishes to defer until such time as the minister is here, that is quite acceptable.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, in fairness to the minister and the other three ministers involved, I want to indicate the thrust of my argument in order that it will be recorded in Hansard in a formal way they will not be able to say I have caught them off guard.

Various cabinet meetings have been held and I want to disclose what was decided at those meetings. The four ministers involved are the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Minister of State for Economic Development, Mr. Olson, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). I think it is important that they come prepared, if you like. A press release was prepared between the hours of 1 and 1.30 Friday morning concerning this matter. This is what I hope they will be willing to respond to when we get into the substantive argument which I will be making, hopefully, on Monday.

POINT OF ORDER

MISS MACDONALD—ACTIVITIES OF BRITISH HIGH COMMISSIONER

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier this week, on February 11, in answer to questions in the House, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) indicated that he would be prepared to make a report to the House by the end of the week with respect to his investigation of the alleged activities—as he said, the "totally unacceptable" activities—of the British High Commissioner. I would like to ask, in light of the minister having made that commitment to the House earlier, if he is now prepared to do so, particularly in light of the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at his press conference yesterday.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I did not make a commitment to the House. What I said was that I hoped to be able to do so by the end of the week. In fact, I am ready for a question on that subject today, and if Madam Speaker—

Mr. Clark: You said a statement.

Mr. MacGuigan: —wants me to reply to a question at this point I would be very happy to do so.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Madam Speaker: I am afraid Oral Question Period is over and I cannot allow any further questions.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, what is of concern to us—and this issue has been raised before—is that this government has developed the practice of moving away from statements on motions which allow the House of Commons to be the place in which policy is first announced. This denies members of the House of Commons the opportunity to reply to policy announcements. We were given a clear indication by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) that he intended to make a statement. We naturally interpreted this to be a statement in the normal course, a statement on motions. He is now backing away from that commitment. In backing away from it he is repeating a pattern of this government by refusing to allow the House of Commons to deal in the first instance with matters which should be raised here, particularly when a promise was given. I hope that promise was not rhetorical, tongue-in-cheek or less than candid.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, since reference was made to a statement I made in a press conference yesterday, I want to inform the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) that I did not make a statement at that press conference. I merely answered questions. A question was asked of me and I gave the answer. I think every day of the week the Leader of the Opposition and his cohorts have the opportunity to do the same, if they can think as fast as members of the press.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, I really want to say it is not my understanding that I made any kind of commitment to the House, certainly not as to a statement of motions. But I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that I will be prepared to answer a question with respect to this matter on Monday. I will not make any statement outside the House until then.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SMITH—RADIO ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. David Smith (Don Valley East): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege is one which I believe relates to all members of the House. I am referring to a radio advertisement which is currently being broadcast on Canadian stations. I myself heard it on a Toronto station. I believe it constitutes a slur on the integrity of all Members of Parliament, in that it sets out a fact situation which, if it were the case, would constitute an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada. The advertisement is a 60-second clip.

I have a transcript of it here and with your indulgence, Madam Speaker, I would like to read it into the record. It is a conversation between a person called "Jiffy", who is allegedly the owner of a supermarket, and a person called "Miles Pleasant", who describes himself as "your local MP" It goes as follows:

> Jiffy here!
> Jiffy, this is your local MP, Miles Pleasant.
> Oh?
> I have received a complaint from a customer of yours, a Mrs. Meanswell.
> Oh, yeah?
> Says they've misplaced the Highliner fillets in sauce!
> Misplaced them! But they're here in the Highliner case file under "Fish".
> She says they should be with the other frozen entrees like frozen lasagna . . .
> But . . . but . . .
> Now see here, Jiffy, they're tender white fillets covered in yummy sauce. You just eat 'em and eat 'em. I ate 'em, so I know.
> Yes, but . . .
> Mrs. Meanswell suggests the very least you can do is to put up a sign saying, "If you're looking for Highliner fillets in sauce, they're not here!"
> What?!
> Oh, about your application to build a parking lot adjacent to your supermarket, it's on my desk right now . . .
> Oh, I see . . .
> The Meanswells are great, uh, friends of mine.
> I'll look into it sir.

Then there is music and the advertisement ends up by asking: "Will Mr. Jiffy get his parking lot? Will he put up the sign at the frozen entree case saying, If you're looking for Highliner fillets in sauce, they're not here"?

I would submit that constitutes a prima facie case of contempt of the integrity of Parliament.

I have looked at a number of precedents. I do not intend to cite all of them, but I would like to refer to one made by the Hon. T. C. Douglas in a debate on Thursday, June 4, 1964, at page 3917 of Hansard. He is referring to a press report and this is what he says:

> I do not raise this on any basis of personal resentment, Mr. Speaker. I say this is a reflection on the integrity of all members of the House. What is to my mind even worse, it helps to feed the cheap cynicism that is all too prevalent with reference to Parliament and its membership.

That is the same way I felt with respect to this ad when I heard it on the radio. I would submit that it is, in fact, an affront to Parliament and all its members and that we have a prima facie case of contempt of the House.

● (1210)

Madam Speaker: I will look into the advertisement, and examine it to see whether it really reflects on the ethics of parliamentarians. I will rule on the matter later.

MR. NIELSEN—STATEMENT BY MR. CHÉNIER

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a brief question of privilege which arose out of the proceedings during the adjournment debate last night when I spoke to the question of federal land dispositions in the Yukon. The hon.

member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier) read what was obviously a departmentally prepared reply. At page 7203 of Hansard for February 12, 1981, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said this:

The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) highlighted this controversy by alleging improprieties in the department—

In other words there was a direct accusation against me that I had alleged improprieties. At that time, I intervened and said "That is not true."

Madam Speaker: I have to interrupt the hon. member. He could raise this question of privilege at this time if the content of his question of privilege flowed from the deliberations of today. But if it flows from yesterday's proceedings, he knows the usual notice is required. I will accept that notice and hear him later on.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I was simply trying to save the time of the House. All I wanted to add to the question raised today, so that I will not take up the time of the House tomorrow, was that if the departmental official who prepared that written reply had referred to page 6544 in Hansard for January 26, 1981, he would have found that no such words and no such allegations were made by me.

I would urge parliamentary secretaries and others who have the responsibility for delivering written replies prepared in the department to look at them a little more carefully before they accuse members on this side of making improper allegations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I very much like the representation, and I suppose the House has accepted it as such.

PETITION

MR. SIDDON—1981 HERRING ROE MANAGEMENT PLAN—LICENSING RESTRICTIONS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of large numbers of British Columbia herring fishermen who oppose the 1981 management plan for the season which is to open in the next few weeks. The 1981 herring management plan was developed without regard for the advice of the minister's own officials and experts. The last minute changes in the area licensing and lottery draw selection procedure were totally contrary to the 1980 plan which has never been tested. Therefore, these petitioners have asked as follows:

Wherefore, the undersigned do hereby protest any attempt by the Government of Canada to impose an eleventh hour decision of area licensing upon the British Columbia Herring Fishery without an opportunity to provide adequate input on this very serious measure, and do pray that the House of Commons will correspondingly reject any such proposal and instead will instruct the minister to implement the 1980 Herring Roe Plan, which had been the product of extensive consultation with the fishermen.

Therefore, on behalf of these petitioners, I ask for serious consideration of their strong appeal to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) and to the Government of Canada through this House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 259, 699, 988, 1,497, 1,732, 1,847 and 1,848.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

CMHC—SENIOR CITIZENS' HOUSING

Question No. 259—Mr. Herbert:

1. Were official requests received from the Quebec Housing Corporation for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation funding of senior citizen housing projects in the constituency of Vaudreuil and, if so, for which projects?

2. Will the projects be eligible under the National Housing Act for loan insurance and interest rate write-down subsidy assistance?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. CMHC funded the following senior citizens' housing projects in the constituency of Vaudreuil:

Name of Project	Municipality
Foyer de Rigaud	Rigaud
Manoir Roger Bernard	Pierrefonds
C. A. Dorion	Dorion
C. A. Laurent Bergevin	Île Perrot
C. A. Denis Benjamin Viger	St-Raphaël de l'Île Bizard
St-Polycarpe	St-Polycarpe
St-Zotique	St-Zotique

2. The first six projects were approved under the old social housing programs and are therefore not eligible for interest rate write-down subsidy assistance. In the case of the St-Zotique project, CMHC insured a loan under the National Housing Act to Quebec Housing Corporation and will contribute subsidy assistance in the form of an interest rate write-down.

MSUA—PROFESSIONAL SERVICES CONTRACTS

Question No. 699—Mr. Clarke:

1. For the fiscal year 1978-79, how many contracts were let by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs for professional services, to persons who at any time within the past five years, had been employed in indeterminate positions under the Public Service Commission?

2. How many contracts were (a) for less than one year (b) for one to two years (c) over two years?

3. How many contracts were let outside the National Capital Region?

4. What was the total cost of all such contracts?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): The information is not readily available as the ministry was disbanded in March, 1979. To provide an accurate reply would entail a thorough and lengthy examination of all relevant files currently in the Public Archives. The costs and the time required to obtain all this information would be prohibitive.

PRICE INCREASE OF ONTARIO WINES

Question No. 988—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Minister of Finance's statement in the House on April 21, 1980, indicate a price increase in Ontario wines and, if so, is he aware that the Ontario Grape Growers Marketing Board is concerned about such increases and the effect it will have on the grape growers and wine producers in Ontario?

2. Is the minister prepared to alleviate any problems such an increase has created and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. The April 21, 1980, statement increased the excise taxes on wines by 13 cents for a bottle of table wine and 44 cents for a bottle of fortified wine. The tax on sparkling wine was reduced by 17 cents per bottle.

2. Any change to the tax rate changes noted in 1. above would be announced to Parliament by the Minister of Finance.

TAX EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,497—Mr. MacKay:

1. What was the government's estimate of tax expenditures available to the manufacturing sector in 1979, by province and territory, created by the (a) lower corporate income tax rates on manufacturing and processing profits (b) investment tax credit on manufacturing investments (c) two-year write-off on manufacturing estimates?

2. What was the government's estimate of tax expenditures available to small business in 1979, by province and territory, created by the (a) lower or small business income tax rate (b) sales tax exemption on up to $50,000 on manufacturing sales?

3. What was the government's estimate of tax expenditures available for research and development in 1979, by province and territory, created by the (a) immediate write-off on R and D expenditures (b) additional allowance of 50 per cent of incremental R and D expenditures (c) investment tax credit on R and D expenditures?

4. What was the government's estimate of tax expenditures available to the resource sector in 1979, by province and territory, created by the (a) fast write-off for Canadian exploration expenses (b) fast write-off for Canadian development expenses (c) 33⅓ per cent earned depletion allowance (d) excess of tax depreciation over book depreciation (general) (e) investment tax credit on resource investments?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): The aggregate values of these tax expenditures in 1980, as given in the most recent tax expenditure account are as follows:

1. Manufacturing:

(a) lower corporate tax rate on manufacturing and processing profits, $600 million;

(b) investment tax credit in the manufacturing sector, $170 million;

(c) two-year write-off, $500 million.

2. Small business:

(a) reduced small business income tax rate, $1,200 million;

(b) sales tax exemption, $20 million.

3. Research and Development:

(a) immediate write-off on R and D expenditures, $63 million;

(b) allowance on incremental R and D, $34 million;

(c) investment tax credit on R and D, $45 million.

4. Resource Sector:

(a) preferential treatment of exploration and development expenses, $1,250 million;

(b) accelerated capital cost allowances, $370 million;

(c) the investment tax credit on capital expenditures by resource industries, $125 million.

It is not possible to provide a breakdown of these amounts by provinces and territory. Tax data on the claims of these items are not available by province. Moreover, the concept of residency is not applicable to corporations in the same manner as it is to individuals. The taxation of corporations is determined by their place of business. However, over one-half of taxable income is earned by corporations which operate in more than one province. The financial accounts of corporations are not broken down by province. Nor do separate tax accounts exist by province. Taxable income for provincial corporate income tax purposes is allocated according to a formula which generally distributes income in proportion to the shares of wages and salaries paid by each corporation in a province and the corporation's sales in the province. While this formula clearly does not necessarily reflect the provincial incidence of the tax expenditure itemized, the following distributions of taxable income for the manufacturing sector and the resource sector provide some indication of the provincial pattern of corporate activity in these sectors.

SIMCOE SOUTH—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Question No. 1,732—Mr. Stewart:

For each year 1975 to 1979 in the constituency of Simcoe South, what organizations or community groups were in receipt of financial assistance from the Secretary of State under the (a) Multiculturalism Directorate (b) Official Language Minority Groups Directorate (c) Community Groups Program (d) Citizen's Participation Directorate and, in each case, what was the amount?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Department of the Secretary of State: the Grants and Contributions Secretariat and the Secretary of State's records both indicate that since 1977-78 no financial assistance has been given to organizations or community groups in the Simcoe South constituency from the programs specified in Mr. Stewart's question. Prior to 1977-78 no records indicating Secretary of State funding by riding were maintained by the Grants and Contributions Secretariat or the Secretary of State's office.

CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION

Question No. 1,847—Mr. Herbert:

1. What is the present (a) authorized (b) actual personnel strength of the Canadian Pension Commission?

2. How many positions are designated (a) unilingual English (b) unilingual French (c) bilingual and, in each case, how many persons occupying the positions have indicated their willingness to relocate in Prince Edward Island?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence):

1. (a) 232 Head office staff;
128 District office staff.
(b) 214 Head office staff;
129 District office staff.

2. At Head office:
(a) 136;
(b) 1;
(c) 69;
2 French or English.

There are twenty-four commissioners appointed to the Canadian Pension Commission by order in council. These positions do not have a language designation. Because the Canadian Pension Commission is not scheduled to relocate to Prince Edward Island until 1983, staff have not yet been required to officially indicate their willingness to relocate. See also reply to question No. 82, part 4, answered July 2, 1980.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE BOARD

Question No. 1,848—Mr. Herbert:

1. What is the present (a) authorized (b) actual personnel strength of the War Veterans Allowance Board?

2. How many positions are designated (a) unilingual English (b) unilingual French (c) bilingual and, in each case, how many persons occupying the positions have indicated their willingness to relocate in Prince Edward Island?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence):

1. (a) 33;
(b) 31.

2. (a) 9;
(b) None;
(c) 14.

There are eight employees who are order in council appointees and their positions do not have a language designation. The War Veterans Allowance Board officially relocated to Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, in June, 1980.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-57, to amend the Excise Tax Act and Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill which we are considering this afternoon is an important one which seeks to implement two major parts of the energy program of the government and a number of changes in federal sales and excise tax measures.

The bill consists of five parts. Part I introduces amendments in the federal sales tax system, such as the application of tax to marginal manufacturing activities and to advertising inserts in newspapers.

Part II contains provisions for the new tax on natural gas and gas liquids. Part III deals with changes in the taxation of alcoholic beverages and technical provisions of the Excise Tax Act. Part IV establishes an 8 per cent tax on petroleum and gas revenues under a separate act; and Part V prescribes the commencement date for the various provisions in the first four parts of the bill.

Without going into the details of the different provisions at this time, I would like to take some minutes to elaborate on some of the more significant provisions of Bill C-57. Perhaps the most important amendment in Part I is the reduction in the federal sales tax from 12 per cent to 9 per cent as originally proposed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) in his budget of November, 1978.

This measure, which has had a substantial stimulative effect on the Canadian economy, has been continued in force since November, 1978, by way of a remission order under the Financial Administration Act. Other tax changes, including a few increases in federal sales and excise taxes, have also been administered since that time on the basis of the ways and means motions in accordance with our traditional practice. This bill covers these outstanding proposals, extending back to 1978.

Bill C-57 also contains a number of important amendments relating to the structure of the federal sales tax, which I announced in my October budget speech. As many tax practitioners and taxpayers are aware, the current federal sales tax system contains serious inequities and anomalies. These include the taxing of goods at different trade levels, and thus different prices, the lack of a comprehensive appeal system, the avoidance of tax by shifting some manufacturing operations beyond the taxing point and the bias favouring imported goods over domestic products.

These inequities are well documented. Numerous reports, including the Carter Royal Commission Report, the 1975 discussion paper and a report of the commodity tax review group, have all highlighted them and proposed potential solutions. Unfortunately, there appears to be little public appreciation of the seriousness of these inequities. However, I do not believe that the existing inequities can continue. For this reason, I announced in my October budget an amendment to correct one of the most serious deficiencies of the existing act—the shifting of otherwise taxable activities, sometimes referred to as marginal manufacturing activities, beyond the tax point.

I have received certain representations from the business community on this proposal. While they are generally sympathetic to the need for this change, they would have preferred a comprehensive reform of the sales tax system. I find the emphasis placed on the need for comprehensive reform encouraging. The inclusion of marginal manufacturing in the tax base is an important step in this regard. But I wish to emphasize that this is only a first step and that other inequities and structural deficiencies in the act will have to be dealt with in the near future.

Let me briefly explain what the problem of marginal manufacturing is. Put very simply the value of any operations performed by a manufacturer prior to the sale of the goods, are included in the manufacturer's sale price and hence form part of the base for the federal sales tax purposes. This includes such operations as assembling and packaging. When these operations are performed beyond the tax point, however, by a person who is not the licensed manufacturer of the goods, the value added through these functions escapes the tax. This is clearly inequitable, as one person is required to pay tax on a series of specific operations as part of a manufacturing process while no tax liability is imposed on another person who performs essentially the same operations.

A second less obvious but perhaps more important fact is that the incidence of tax avoidance through marginal manufacturing is most prevalent in the case of imported goods. In fact, from the information and submissions which I have received, it would appear to be confined almost exclusively to imported goods. Importers frequently import goods in unassembled and unpackaged form, pay tax on them at the point of importation on relatively low values, and escape tax on packaging and assembling operations subsequently performed in Canada.

A study prepared by my officials suggests that the resulting biases in the application of tax are of a serious order of magnitude. For most imports, the effective rate of tax is two or three points lower than on comparable goods produced domestically. This is a disparity of 20 per cent to 35 per cent in the burden of tax, a substantial proportion. For example, in the case of toys, the federal sales tax as a per cent of the sale price to retailers is 7.4 per cent for domestic goods as compared to 3.3 per cent for imported toys. Other examples include golf balls at 8.3 per cent for domestic products and 3.5 per cent for imports, and coffee makers at 8 per cent and 4.6 per cent respectively.

It has been suggested that although my budget proposals will resolve the inequities in respect of the application of tax to marginal manufacturing activities, some importers may choose to move their packaging offshore to minimize their added tax burden. Of course, Mr. Speaker, this would not necessarily be successful. First, the packaging value added abroad would be rolled into the value for duty, and thus would attract both duty and tax. Secondly, as the product would be more bulky, shipping costs could be expected to increase significantly. Nevertheless, I do recognize that in some instances, this will occur. It is for this reason that I emphasized in my budget the need for other major changes in the application of the tax.

This bill also proposes a number of important changes in sales tax exemptions, administrative provisions and taxes on alcohol and tobacco products. These will be dealt with in greater detail obviously as we come to them in our study of the bill in committee. One amendment, however, which has received a great deal of attention is the proposal relating to the taxation of printed advertising materials and the sales tax exemption for newspapers.

This bill addresses two issues relating to the sales tax exemptions for newspapers. First, it proposes amendments to ensure that the sales tax exemption is confined to newspapers and does not get extended to publications whose content is primarily advertising. Second, it extends the tax to apply to advertising materials such as catalogues and flyers which are not an integral part of a newspaper, but are inserted into newspapers primarily for distribution purposes.

I received a number of representations following the October budget from small weekly newspapers concerning the proposal that the exemption for newspapers be limited to publications which have no more than 70 per cent advertising content in 50 per cent of the issues in the previous three months. Some publishers expressed concern that while the advertising content of their publications was generally less than 70 per cent, occasionally they could exceed this limit for seasonal or other factors. In response to these concerns, and to provide some safety margin, I tabled a new motion on January 22, 1981, proposing that the 70 per cent limit be raised to 75 per cent. I believe that this new limit will provide a fair criterion for separating tax exempt newspapers from other forms of taxable printed matter and will address the specific concerns of the community newspapers.

Excise Tax

The second issue concerns the taxation of printed advertising materials. Prior to the October budget, all printed advertising material was taxable except those materials which were inserted in a newspaper for distribution purposes. Newspaper inserts were exempt from tax under a provision which exempted articles and materials used in the manufacture of a newspaper. This relief placed direct mail firms, the post office and door to door distribution firms at a competitive disadvantage in relation to newspapers. It was clearly inequitable because identical printed advertising materials were taxable when distributed by them but exempt when inserted in a newspaper. To correct this problem, amendments are being proposed to ensure that federal sales tax applies to all printed advertising materials, including those which are inserted in newspapers for distribution purposes. The new proposals will establish equitable tax treatment for alternate modes of distribution.

• (1230)

I wish to assure hon. members that the newspaper itself will not attract tax, nor will advertisements appearing on the regular pages of newspapers. The tax will apply only to advertising inserts.

The exemptions provided to newspapers and to certain other goods under the excise tax act constitute important tax concessions. Such concessions to one part of the community must be financed through higher taxes in other areas. The amendments proposed in this bill are designed to ensure that these tax preferences are properly targeted.

This bill also provides authority for two new energy-related taxes which I proposed in my budget. Part II of Bill C-57 imposes a special tax to be known as the natural gas and gas liquids tax while Part IV of the bill imposes the 8 per cent petroleum and gas revenue tax.

The gas tax will apply to all sales of Canadian natural gas and natural gas liquids, which are propane, butanes and ethane, regardless of whether the sales are to domestic or foreign buyers. The rate of tax is 28 cents per gigajoule on gas effective November 1, 1980, for domestic sales and February 1, 1981, for export sales. The tax rate will be increased in three stages to reach 70 cents per gigajoule on January 1, 1983. Equivalent rates of tax apply to gas liquids.

The petroleum and gas revenue tax will be imposed under a separate act. Under this tax, effective January 1, 1981, all oil and gas producers are subject to a tax of 8 per cent of their net operating revenue from the production of oil and gas. In order to ensure that the tax base is not eroded, no deductions are permitted for exploration and development expenditures, capital cost allowances, interest payments or royalty payments to governments. The tax applies to all persons who receive income from oil and gas production. In order to ensure equal treatment of taxpayers, whether or not they are liable for normal corporate income tax, the petroleum and gas revenue tax is non-deductible for income tax purposes.

These taxes are obviously an important part of the government's new energy program as announced in my budget. The program has three important objectives, namely, security of supply and ultimate independence from the world oil market; a fair pricing and revenue-sharing regime which recognizes the needs and rights of Canadians in all provinces; and greater Canadian ownership and control of the oil and gas industry. The two taxes contained in this bill are essential for the achievement of these objectives.

Revenues from the two new taxes will, of course, assist in the financing of new energy-related programs announced in the National Energy Program. These include incentive payments for exploration and development of oil and gas, grants for conversion from oil to gas, electric heating or other fuels, subsidies for gas pipeline extension into areas dependent on imported oil, and increased incentives for home insulation. All of these programs are important in achieving our goal of energy security.

The natural gas tax forms part of the over-all pricing strategy set out in the national energy program. That document outlined various goals for oil and gas pricing. They include providing adequate incentives for supply without giving unwarranted profits to producers, providing an impetus to conservation without undue shocks to the Canadian economy and encouraging consumers to switch from oil to gas.

The tax is an important instrument in serving those goals. Even with the full implementation of the tax, the price of gas to Canadian consumers will decline relative to oil prices, on a heat equivalent basis, from roughly 85 per cent to 65 per cent. There will be, therefore, a major incentive to switch from oil to gas.

The tax also has an important role in ensuring that the difference in the returns to producers from exported gas as opposed to domestic sales is not increased, thus not adding to incentives to find gas solely for export markets. Under existing arrangements the returns to producers from exporting are high. This creates an undesirable bias in the system to find gas and export it. On a long-term basis such a policy does not make a lot of sense for this country. As I indicated in my budget, our preferred approach to redress this bias would have been to impose an export tax on gas which would have captured some portion of the difference between the world price and the Canadian price. However, the producing provinces and Members of Parliament objected strongly to this approach. For this reason I proposed a tax on all sales of gas. Some have criticized the application of this tax to gas destined for export. But, as Canadians, are we really prepared to say that the gas used in Canada to serve Canadian needs will be taxed while gas sold abroad would be exempt? I, for one, was not prepared to put in place a tax which further increased the incentives to ship gas abroad rather than using it at home.

Let me turn now to another of our energy objectives—a fair division of revenues. Oil and gas prices have increased dramatically in the last few years and will continue to rise under the National Energy Program. In the absence of changes in the fiscal regime, the increase in prices would generate additional profits for the industry and would result in an inappropriate sharing of revenue between the federal and provincial governments.

Under the oil regime, Canadians in all provinces, through the federal government, bore much of the burden of rising energy prices. But they received few of the benefits. In recent years the federal government has received about 10 per cent of petroleum production revenue. Provincial governments and the industry have each been receiving about 45 per cent of revenues. It is to redress this imbalance that I have proposed the petroleum and gas revenue tax and have made certain changes to the income tax depletion allowances for oil and gas. I do not believe this tax intrudes into areas which provinces can legitimately claim as solely their own. The rate of tax, 8 per cent, reflects the capacity of the oil and gas industry to pay and brings its contributions more closely in line with what other industries are required to pay. The new fiscal structure is also more fair to companies in different circumstances. The new 8 per cent tax is the same, regardless of whether the company pays income taxes. The replacement of depletion allowances by a grant system also contributes to fairness in the fiscal regime. The depletion allowances benefited taxable companies who were generally the larger foreign producers, while the new incentive grants will be available to both taxable and non-taxable companies and will be better targeted in favour of Canadian companies.

In general, under the new proposals the industry will be left with significant levels of cash flow even compared to the high levels for 1978 or 1979. Although the cash flow of the industry will be obviously reduced from what it would have been if the old fiscal regime had been allowed to continue, nevertheless the industry is left with adequate cash flow to finance the levels of exploration and development expenditures necessary to increase our energy supplies. For example, cash flow in 1981 is projected to be up 28 per cent over the 1979 levels.

These are the main elements of this important bill. Undoubtedly there will be discussion in the House but even more detailed discussion and consideration of the proposals in the committee. From what I have said it is obvious that this is an important bill. It brings into law necessary changes in the sales and excise tax system which address real deficiencies in that structure as it now stands.

The energy taxes are also important. They are warranted at the present time, and I believe they deserve the support of members of the House.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, although we have been exposed in three budgets to proposals with regard to changes in the excise tax, this is the first time we are talking about a bill in that respect—after three budgets. As a matter of fact, there are additional ways and means motions which find their way into this legislation, and I am talking about those which appear in Votes and Proceedings of December 17 dealing with petroleum and natural gas.

This is a very wide-ranging subject. We always used to think of sales tax as being that hidden manufacturers' tax. When I first came into this House it was 6 per cent. Then Walter Gordon, of unlimited memory proposed in 1963 that that sales tax would apply to practically everything including productive machinery and all sorts of things. Of course, that was when the Liberals were in their 60 days of action.

Mr. MacEachen: Decision.

Mr. Lambert: Sixty or one hundred, I do not know.

Mr. MacEachen: Decision.

Mr. Lambert: "Decision". Well, it was 60 days of unmitigated daily disasters, as we recall it. Experts were hired for the preparation of the budget, which was then found to be contrary to practice. Amateur tinkerers were working with an amateur minister, and National Revenue officials were not consulted at all either with respect to income tax or customs or excise tax. Then when they were in deep trouble it was rumoured that the deputy minister of national revenue on the one side of that department just merely took off and went fishing, leaving the minister to wriggle on the end of the hook he had so fashioned.

In any event, now we are coming to these proposals, and while this debate will only last for today, because of the importance of the subject matter being covered I am very pleased to have participated through, shall we say, informal channels, to have this bill referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs rather than being considered as a ways and means bill in Committee of the Whole.

There are some very contentious areas. The minister has quite candidly admitted that one of the areas which will be very difficult and which will excite a great deal of controversy is the so-called marginal manufacturing. I will not talk too much about that. My colleague, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), will have something to say because he knows what it is all about. My colleague, the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), will also have something to say. While our colleague, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), brought out during debate on income tax the other day some real horror stories with respect to the application and interpretation of the Income Tax Act, the hon. member for Burlington has a whole book of horror stories of incidents about the application and administration of excise tax.

As far as the public is concerned the excise tax is a hidden tax. It is the indirect tax that the retailer has had to include in his price. Somewhere along the line it is included prior to the contact between the retailer or distributor and the consumer.

Provincial sales tax, on the other hand, is not included directly in price, except in the case of some things like alcohol, cigarettes and a few others. By and large sales tax is computed and applied at the time of sale. This means that regardless of who buys a pair of shoes, trousers or whatever the goods might be, and regardless of income, sales tax is paid. All consumers pay the same level of sales tax. This is regressive and contrary to the principle of ability to pay. I saw the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) shaking his head a moment ago. The parliamentary secretary, with his more inflated salary than mine, pays precisely the same amount of sales tax as I do.

Mr. Evans: Not for clothing and footwear for children.

Mr. Lambert: Again the hon. gentleman, in his inimitable fashion, is talking about oranges and apples. I am talking about the same commodity. I am talking about furniture, for instance. If he buys a chair and I buy a chair or table, he pays the same amount of tax as I do, and we both pay the same amount as a person earning half our income.

Mr. Evans: We pay the same price for a car, too.

Mr. Lambert: Taxation is justified in a number of ways. Our friends from the far left—and the government too—clothe themselves with the wraps of sanctity when it comes to income tax by saying that all tax should be on the basis of ability to pay, but that does not apply in the case of federal sales tax. In Ontario, however, when it comes to the question of provincial sales tax, there is an adjustment on the annual filing of income tax returns. When people in Ontario pay their share of provincial income tax, there is an allowance, albeit small, but it is an adjustment so that the lower income earner gets a break in respect of the quantum of estimated provincial sales tax he or she may have paid. There is nothing like that with regard to federal sales tax.

Adding federal sales tax to the cost of commodities is a means of providing fodder for that ever-widening mouth of the government's requirement for funds to spend. Ministers and senior bureaucrats are always looking for ways and means of spending money. They insist that they must spend more. Our bureaucracy is set up on the basis of encouraging spending more money because he who has the administration of a larger budget—or today a bigger envelope or purse—naturally merits a higher salary and usually merits a greater number of people under him.

There is an incentive to spend more money. In order to do so, one must get more money. We have a ludicrous situation today because of the economically and abysmally stupid practice of subsidizing petroleum products. These subsidies frankly are not holes in a rice bag; they are the bottom out of the rice bag.

But the federal government has programs requiring more and more money, and so do many of the provincial governments. True enough, there is the incidence of inflation, a great one now. We have not just achieved double-digit inflation this month, we have reached 12 per cent, the highest in six years. This is a great example arising out of the series of budgets with which the minister has been connected in the past years, when controlling inflation was to be the main aim of the government. Government spending programs were going to be limited. But now we see the truth behind the whole scheme where this government comes out to get more and more money, sometimes trying to legitimize it. We have here an extension of the sales tax on graphic art. Initially a mistake had been made and the tax applied to serigraphs. It was admitted to have been a clerical error, but the tax applied. Now, because an injustice seems to have been created by the application of the tax in the first place, it is being corrected by extending the tax to other works of art, limited editions and the whole field. In other words, two wrongs are going to make a right in this case, the right being the government wanting and needing more money.

There is a proposal in this bill dealing with the newspaper printing problems, the 70 per cent advertising content which has been raised to 75 per cent. I have copies of briefs here which show that the determination of whether a publication is recognized as a newspaper depends on advertising content. Some of these publications have been in existence for 50 years and some for even 100 years, and yet, if its advertising content does not meet the 70 per cent criterion and its editorial content does not meet the 30 per cent criterion, it is not recognized. The percentage has now been increased to 75 per cent. Incidentally, that does not cover the cost of operation, particularly in the case of the weekly press. I am looking at my own constituency where we have the flag ship of the Southam Press. In a newspaper which, on a Wednesday night may run from 140 to 160 pages and on a weekend certainly exceeds 100 pages, we see inserts four, six or eight pages long by supermarkets and department stores, plus inserts of Canadian Tire, Beaver Lumber and a number of others. At one time that advertising was distributed by hand from home to home and came out of the commercial printing press. Now much of that work is done in commercial printing plants and comes out as inserts in the big dailies. The big dailies have a much wider base on which to spread their costs and they can carry these inserts, but they will not pay tax on them. I know of some instances where the big chains which publish the newspapers control the commercial printing plant and, therefore, it is all within the house operation.

Let us look at this in another way. In order to legitimize the excessive amount of advertising which appears in specific editions of our daily newspapers—we get an eight or 12 page section in our dailies and 98 per cent or 99 per cent of that section will be whole page advertising—the back page will carry anywhere from one column down one side, or perhaps three or four inches across the top, some wire copy merely saying that this section is part of the newspaper, and this carries some of the editorial content.

I say to the minister that the increase of 70 per cent to 75 per cent in permitted advertising content will not save the weekly newspapers. I am quite aware of the fact that they are already trying to make very strong representations, and I think we should take a look at both sides of the question.

I hope we will recognize within this act the margin at which a person or a firm is a true manufacturer. There was the small manufacturer notch years ago, and I remember that it used to be $3,000 a year. Well, today, an industrious man with a jack-knife could almost whittle $3,000 worth of goods. We have to provide for a realistic increase in that ceiling so that the small manufacturer does not become involved in the Excise Tax Act. In so far as the marginal manufacturer is concerned, the smell of the value added tax emanates from the legislation so that if the goods are imported for boxing purposes or for packaging purposes, to put them in English and French as required, or for the change to cater to Canadian distribution, the value of the tax on the goods is added so that the goods will then be sold for tax.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair will expect to see the hon. member again at two o'clock to hear his continued intervention.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I wish to terminate my remarks at this time because I realize there are a number of members who wish to speak in the limited time available in the balance of today, but in summary I should like to return to the newspaper proposal and so the representations which have been made to myself and my leader. If I referred to the Canadian Community Newspapers Association assessment of the tax, it would put it before members most succinctly. First, the tax is a tax on newspapers.

Mr. Evans: That is not true.

Mr. Lambert: It is the first in North America. It fails to define a newspaper except by volume of advertising content. Anything with less than a 75 per cent advertising content is deemed to be a newspaper. In the context of today's operating conditions, it will be detrimental and discriminatory on smaller papers. It will increase the cost of newspaper production since central plant markets for other products may be reduced. Enforcement will be very difficult because of the numbers involved; that is, not only the number of newspapers, but the number of publications.

The Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) must wonder about the fact that it is one of those taxes which has a clear passage through to consumers and will simply increase the cost of living all the way around. As soon as it is on it will be reflected in the CPI. Does that do a great deal of good to the country? Coupled with rapidly escalating material costs, the tax affects newspaper support at a time that coincides with diminishing retail sales. So, the newspaper operation is caught between the two pincers of a jaw.

The tax is confusing, and its ramifications are far more extensive than could possibly have been intended in this legislation. Frankly, the local newspaper, in more instances than may be imagined, is probably the sole remaining local forum in many communities. If this tax strikes deeply and hard at those community newspapers, it is another knock on what we would like to have as the true system of free local press.

Free press is abused by both the press and others in many ways. I feel completely at ease here, because outside one distributive paper which contains some editorial comment—and the ads pay for its production and distribution, and there is no annual subscription—other than two city dailies, there are no newspapers distributed in my riding. Therefore, I am not arguing on behalf of a particular constituent. Surely, all those in this House who represent rural ridings in particular will want to be at the committee hearings when they start next week or the week after to hear what the tax people and the newspaper association people have to say.

I will conclude my remarks because a number of my colleagues wish to speak, and I am sure there will be other speakers from other parties. I hope the committee will deal with this bill quickly. It must return to the House some time before Easter, and there is a lot of other work to be done, including a companion piece of legislation called the customs tariff which also goes back Anno Domini in its origin, not having been considered by the House for nigh unto three years.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, because of the fact there has been agreement to move this matter to committee, I do not think it is necessary, particularly on Friday afternoon, that I deliver a lengthy address on the taxation policies of the government, the nature of the government's energy policy or any of the other topics on which a speech could be made. Because of the importance of the measures contained in Bill C-57, however, I do wish to give the minister an indication of some of the questions which we will be raising in committee with respect to this bill, questions which would involve officials from this department, representatives at other levels of government and representatives from the industry.

I will deal first with the non-oil and gas issues and refer the minister to two or three areas which have already been touched upon somewhat by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). There is the question of the new definition of newspapers, the impact of the government's plan to tax those newspapers which, in its opinion, have an unduly high advertising content, and the effect it will have on the community newspapers.

I expect the government has had studies performed to determine how many newspapers would be involved and how many have a content of more than 75 per cent advertising. This is a very important factual question. Just how many people and what kind of community publications will be affected? We are also entitled to know whether the tax will have the effect of restricting communications and the ability of smaller businesses and smaller community publications to communicate with a fairly wide public.

As the minister will know, the definition of advertising is sometimes a tricky one. There are many community newspapers printed in Canada's non-official languages which have a very high advertising content because of the fact many of them include government advertising for government programs. This question is of great concern to me because many multicultural publications have a difficult time surviving.

If the impact of this legislation will be to reduce the quantity of those publications and the ability of the publishers of those publications to make a living, then this must be taken into account. Obviously, the government is concerned with publications which have as their primary or sole concern the publishing of advertisements for various businesses. The government is intent on arriving at a definition which will eliminate these publications from the category of newspapers.

However, as the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) called out in the middle of the speech of the hon. member for Edmonton West, "The question is what is a newspaper and what is news". There are instances in many community publications where an ad could be defined as advertising in some context but, in another context, could be considered a very important aspect of the dissemination of information.

Since the minister has now returned to his seat, let me repeat, there is the question of heavy government advertising in many third language publications and the fact that these vehicle communications are terribly important to many communities in our country. I would like some hard factual information from the minister's department as to what forms of publications it hopes to deal with, what precise effect the government's proposal will have on the dissemination of information and the provision, in many cases, of a very useful service, and whether the taxation of this service will help the economy or eliminate an unnecessary loophole which presently exists.

There are many other areas with which one could deal in excise tax legislation. I am sure the minister is aware of many small businesses which have complained and lobbied vigorously with respect to the effect of the 9 per cent federal sales tax on cosmetics. I am sure he is also aware of the tax change being put on sales to the retailer trade level. I appreciate the justification from the department that the purpose of this tax is to eliminate tax avoidance arrangements which place Canadian cosmetic manufacturers at a disadvantage compared to importers of cosmetics. I think it is also important for us to realize that while this may be the intention of the department, in eliminating the previous arrangement of sales tax on cosmetics, we will again want to hear representations from the business community to see whether this is, in fact, the effect. We will want to judge for ourselves whether the government's purpose is well served by a measure that we will have put in.

We have also received letters from small independent retailers concerned about the new changes in retail sales tax. Shifting the imposition of the sales tax will have little, if any, effect upon the large retail chains, since they often deal directly with the manufacturer, buying in volume. They pay the 9 per cent federal sales tax on the f.o.b plant price, which excludes freight. The small retailer who utilizes the services of a wholesaler ends up paying the federal sales tax not only on the manufacturers' price but also on the freight from the manufactures premises to the wholesaler.

While I understand that the Department of Finance considers this to be a minor inequity and has so far not indicated any change in its policy, we will also want to see the precise effect this has on smaller businesses. We will want to see whether it does have the effect of reducing competition by giving, in a sense, an advantage to larger retailers which is not available to smaller retailers because larger retailers have different buying practices, as of necessity, than smaller retailers. This is the kind of question which I think we will be looking at in committee. I appreciate the opportunity to discuss these things in committee, since they are the kinds of details which I think can best be solved at committee level. They are basically factual questions, as to what the real effect of the changes will be, and can, I think be more effectively changed in committee than in the House.

The third general item I wanted to raise with the minister is that, as I am sure he is aware, we have all heard from the Canadian Wine Institute and from the wine industry. We have also heard vigorous representations from the Brewers' Association of Canada about the permanent increases now being built into the taxation of alcohol which may be unfair. This may have the effect of building in prohibitively high increases in the tax on these items. This also seems to me to be a factual question put forward by the Brewers' Association. Something the committee will need to consider is whether the separate indexes for beer, wine and spirits will result in a further distortion of existing relative tax burdens between beer, wine and spirits. Again, the relative impact of these increases seems to me to be an important question to be considered with respect to these industries.

There is one general question about the effect of the over-all excise taxes with which I think we must deal. This matter has been mentioned before by the hon. member for Edmonton West; that is, that the excise tax in general is, of necessity, not a progressive tax. This tax falls heavier, not on the consumer, but on the small businessman. It has a more serious effect on small business as opposed to large business, particularly at a time when we are entering a period of high interest rates and the costs of doing business are so high for the smaller businessman. Something which we will want to look at very hard indeed is the impact these kinds of measures are having on the relative power of small business as compared to large corporations.

It is within the context of the relationship between smaller and larger businesses that I wish to deal with the question of the 8 per cent production tax on petroleum and natural gas. As I understand it, the dilemma facing the federal government is this: the federal share of this very significant revenue source is too small. It amounts to roughly 10 per cent of the revenues from oil and natural gas, the other 90 per cent being shared almost equally between the industry and the provinces. This has been indicated several times in the House and, if I understand the Conservative position correctly, they have indicated this as well. If one looks at the figures over the last ten years dealing with the relative importance of resource revenues on provincial revenues, he will notice that there is no category of revenue which compares to natural resources in terms of increase.

There has been a tenfold increase in the revenues from oil and natural gas over the last ten years. There is no other industry where this has occurred; not the steel industry, manufacturing industry or in agriculture. You cannot take any other sector and compare the rise in the value of those goods with the rise in the value of oil and natural gas. Because this resource is a depleting one, and because of the pressure of OPEC price increases, one can predict that the price of oil and natural gas will increase dramatically. The federal government has obviously taken the view that if it does not now act quickly, to increase the federal share of that rapidly increasing resource revenue, not only will its fiscal position be threatened but the fiscal imbalance between the federal and provincial governments will simply be increased.

Again, if I understand the federal government's position, it has two or three choices. It could have done what the Conservatives did, which was to impose an excise tax on the sale of gas at the pump. The second thing it could have done was deal with the problem of its tax share through the income tax system. The third thing it could have done, and which it has done, is impose a tax, basically a kind of royalty, at source—a production tax. Obviously, for political reasons, the government could not take the first route, having denounced the Conservatives for introducing an 18-cent excise tax.

Mr. Evans: Who else denounced that tax?

Mr. Rae: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) asks who else denounced the tax. I also denounced it. I remember my speech very well and I do not regret having made it.

Mr. Evans: Keep the record clear.

Mr. Rae: I want to say to the hon. member for Ottawa Centre that, having rejected that kind of excise tax, I do not see how the federal government can now turn to another kind of excise tax and think it has done anything more progressive. Instead of simply attacking the buyer at the pump it has attacked the buyer at every single level. I do not see anything more progressive in the excise tax, which the government has put forward, than that which the Tory party put forward in its brief period in government.

• (1430)

I was not intending to give a highly partisan speech this afternoon, but the member for Ottawa Centre seems to be moving in that direction, much against my will.

An hon. Member: Much against your nature!

Mr. Rae: I was not going to say nature, but I am happy to give that kind of a speech. I would rather deal with some purely factual questions in respect of the effect which this excise tax is going to have.

I come back to my three choices. As I understand it, the second course, the income tax route, which the government could have taken, was rejected. I would imagine it was rejected because in the government's view corporations could have found a way to reduce their tax burden through their own internal accounting procedures, rapid depreciation and so forth.

Since the first choice was ruled out for political reasons, let us deal with the choice between the other two; that is, between the income tax route and the royalty route, which the government has taken. The problem with the 8 per cent production route—a question about which we will want to examine Department of Finance and Department of Energy officials very closely—is that it affects all producers equally even though all producers are not equal, either in size, in origin or in terms of whether they are genuinely independent Canadian companies. But it is the differential impact of the 8 per cent increase which has caused the most concern. Obviously the other problem is that the 8 per cent royalty affects the petroleum industry in some provinces more than it does in others, and in that way it affects the resource revenue going to those provinces. Which route is best for the federal government? Is it to go the excise tax route, as it has gone, or what I call the royalty route, the 8 per cent tax at source, or is it to go the income tax route? Our preference would be for the government to go the income tax route and build into the income tax system the kinds of distinctions, variations and discrimination which the government wants to carry out. It cannot do this by virtue of the 8 per cent royalty tax because the effect will be the same right across the board with no exceptions. It will have a much harsher effect on smaller companies than it will on larger companies. This is ironic, Mr. Speaker, in view of the declared intention of the government to carry out a policy that will discourage foreign ownership.

In this connection, I would like to hear from the industry and from those people who are aware of what is going on in the industry to find out whether this is really the case. The evidence we have seen so far is that the smaller producers and smaller exploration companies, most of whom are Canadian, are much harder hit than those companies which have achieved a very high degree of vertical integration. I refer to the multinational companies who are in a better position, through their own internal power and by the fact that they carry out not only production but also refining, distribution, merchandising and retailing of oil and natural gas to diversify their own production and increase their power compared to the smaller producers.

This is a purely factual and important question. In my opinion, it should be removed from the purely partisan discussion which we have seen so far. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has said that more drilling is going on this year than last year. Members of both my party and the Conservative Party, who know what drilling activity is in fact going on in Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, say that is not the case. They say there is extensive evidence that drillers are leaving the country at a great rate. I have not been in this House very long but it seems to me this is a factual question. It is a question which can be resolved by looking at what drilling activity was carried out last year and what companies' intentions were last year for the next year or two. We know that companies do not do things from month to month but plan for year to year, and we can look at what effect the petroleum and gas revenue tax has on the whole of the industry, whether it really is part and parcel of the Canadianization proposals of the government or whether it contradicts the Canadianization proposals. I think this is a genuine problem.

When the government introduced the 8 per cent tax, it did so, as I suggested at the beginning of my remarks, not to further the Canadianization of the industry, not to encourage self-sufficiency but to deal with a third problem, a genuine one, one which is recognized by all members of the House; that is, the federal government has to get a greater revenue share of a resource which is rapidly depleting. The current revenue-sharing arrangements are the source of what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) quite correctly describes as a severe fiscal imbalance within confederation. I hope the minister will recognize, in attempting to carry that out, and avoiding the income tax route for the reasons I have described—I am not sure those reasons are prohibitive but they obviously weighed heavily on the government's mind—that it is possible, it will have the effect of not increasing Canadianization of the industry but decreasing it. That tax and its effect will fall more heavily on smaller companies simply engaged in the production of oil and gas. These companies do not do anything else. They do not refine, distribute or retail. This will have a lesser net impact on the cash flow of the larger multinationals. If the name of the game is cash flow, and we are told all the time by those in the industry that is the name of the game and the nature of the problem. Then that is a purely factual question which has to be answered.

The other source of concern, expressed by a number of producing provinces, is that this is a form of taxation which directly conflicts and cuts into their source of taxation. Some members who come from non-producing provinces say, "Well, they have lots of oil and gas anyway." But if you are living in Alberta, British Columbia or Saskatchewan and see the federal government unilaterally, if you will, occupy part of a field—not the whole field—which up to that time had been occupied by a provincial government, you will clearly know the dramatic effects this will have on that provincial government's future budgetary and financial management plans.

I do not know who is right in terms of figures, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Department of Finance is right when they say the reduction in the provincial share will be two percentage points, or whether the spokesmen for the governments of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia are correct when they say a reduction in the provincial share and the relationship between the provincial, federal and producers share will be changed far more dramatically by this than the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has suggested in the national energy policy released on budget night. I do not know the answer to that question, but I do know there are conflicting stories and conflicting figures. I say to the minister that the effect will be significantly different from that set out in his budget.

There will be a reduction in the ability of certain provinces to provide for their future. The relationship between the federal and provincial governments will be affected because of a serious difference as to what the impact of their share will be. This clearly has to be resolved in committee.

Our party would have preferred an income tax measure which would allow the government to discriminate between Canadian and non-Canadian companies as they said they intend to do in order to increase Canadianization. We would have preferred to see the federal government deal with the problem of excess royalties at the provincial level in a more imaginative way than has been evidenced so far.

After suggestions from our party and the official opposition last week, the minister agreed to establish a committee. We do not know whether that committee will deal with the very large provincial surpluses and how capital surpluses can be recycled. That is a fundamental question which the minister did not deal with in his budget.

I come back to one point. The 8 per cent tax the government has put on is an excise tax, just as the 18-cent tax was an excise tax. On the night of the Crosbie budget, the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) expressed concern about the effect of an excise tax on Canadians. It fell equally on those able to pay and those less able to pay.

It increased the costs for workers who have to drive, through no fault of their own, 20 miles to work rather than use public transportation. That creates inequality. That is what is wrong with relying too heavily on the excise tax system for government revenues. There are certain problems inherent in it.

At the time of the Crosbie budget, we suggested the way to get around that was with a cost of living tax credit. The Crosbie budget included an energy tax credit, as the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) does not hesitate to remind us every time he gets up on his feet. The effect of the energy tax credit put forward by the Conservatives was miniscule because it was going to be delayed. Its introduction was to be phased in so the over-all impact would not have been felt for some two years. It would have in no way compensated for the price increases and the excise tax proposed in the Crosbie budget. It was clearly stated in the projections.

We know what the effects of the energy price increases will be. They will be even more serious if the government reaches an energy agreement with the producing provinces. We know what the impact will be of further OPEC price increases. Energy costs will rise substantially. Contrary to the position taken by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the government has consistently taken the position that it will not recycle its surplus from the production of oil and gas in the form of an energy tax credit.

If I understand correctly, the surplus will be essentially used on what the minister calls the supply side. The government will use it for the economic development envelope. I simply say with regard to the supply side and the demand side that you have to walk on both legs.

The differential impact as a result of oil price increases which are part of the government's budget will have a strong impact on lower-income people. The effects will be felt in a discriminatory way by people who through no fault of their own have a low income and must pay high energy costs. If this is allowed to continue, the government is betraying the fundamental image it presented to the Canadian public at the time of the Crosbie budget. The government is saying let bygones be bygones and look to the future. It is not going to recycle this money in the form of a cost of living tax credit, energy tax credit or whatever it might be called. The principle is the same.

The government is limiting its ability to provide a greater degree of fairness. It is limiting its ability to provide the growth in the economy which will be necessary so that Canadians can buy the capital and consumer goods on which the minister is concentrating all his efforts in the economic development envelope.

I realize the policy options we are putting forward have been rejected by the government. The minister will not stand up on this Friday afternoon and say that he will change the policy because he has decided to recognize the wisdom of the opposition. However, I say to the minister that there is a fundamental contradiction in what the government has done. It rejected the Crosbie budget because it provided for an excise tax. However, it has put on an excise tax which will have a much more serious effect on consumers, provincial revenues and the relationship between the federal and provincial governments than the Crosbie budget.

The government has refused to introduce a cost-of-living tax credit which would recycle some of the surpluses that have accrued in order to provide some equity between the supply side and demand side, the social policy envelope and the economic policy envelope. For those reasons I believe the government is missing an opportunity. Rather than being the source of federal-provincial conflict, it could produce a greater degree of unanimity. As I said on other occasions, we cannot go into every budget facing a constitutional crisis. We cannot go into every economic decision with such tremendous hostility between the producing and the consuming provinces. An agreement between the producing and consuming provinces and the federal government is essential for the future of this country.

The federal government must show leadership and concern for the consuming provinces and the consumers of Canada. Energy costs have been rising. It is not only the cost of gas, but heating oil and gas for the home. The government must use some of its surplus to help those who are so badly affected by these rising costs. I think then the consumers of Canada would say, "All right, if the government is prepared to exercise some leadership in this direction, we are prepared to go that extra bit and try to find an agreement with the producing provinces". But, as long as the government is determined to suck up whatever surplus there is, to go into provincial fields and to take up that surplus and run with it and not to put it to the use that the consumers of the country can see is good, then it is simply pitting consumer against producer in what is really an unfruitful and ultimately a very destructive course of action for the country.

This question of the sharing of oil and gas revenues is, in my opinion, one of the fundamental problems facing the country. The fact that we do not have an agreement is something which is clearly preventing the kind of investment, the kind of understanding and the kind of growth which would help a great deal in resolving not only our energy problems but also our constitutional and economic problems as well.

The government has decided not to take a course of action which would allow it to show leadership where leadership has to be shown and to take its share of responsibility and say to the oil companies that they do not need to take anymore. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has pointed out on many occasions, the key to the solution, is not cutting back on the public ownership of the largest multinationalists but by increasing the public ownership of the largest multinationals. The contradictory effect of the policies put forward by the government would be to increase the power of the multinationals and not nationalize, and that includes all of them except for one which has just been nationalized. In that way the power of all the others will be increased, the power of the Canadian independents will be decreased and the consumer will continue to regard any price increases as simply going into the coffers of the multinational oil companies. Rather than deal with that fundamental question and also the question of Canadianization, the federal government has chosen to follow certain policies. This is a difficult mix to get right, and I am not condemning the government for having failed to get it right, but in our view they have failed to do so and in failing they have missed an opportunity which may never come again.

As the stakes become higher, as the value of the resource becomes higher, and as the price of the resource gets higher, the cost of finding a solution also increases. In the government's failure to find a solution, just as the Tories' failure to find a solution in their budget, it is costing all Canadians very dearly indeed.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for giving me the privilege of speaking on Bill C-57 which I consider to be one of the most confusing bills for the small and medium-size enterprise sector in Canada we have seen for a long time. I also appreciated the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) coming over to advise me that he had to catch a plane for Halifax and therefore could not be present in this House for the few comments I have to offer.

I am very surprised that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is not here, and even more surprised that the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Lapointe) is not here in light of the tremendous mail load and communication load which I am sure most members have had from the business community in their constituencies. All the work done by the small business secretariat in paper burden removal and in trying to address the regulatory burden of the small business community has been wiped out in this bill.

This bill has given us a very sloppy and carelessly worded piece of legislation which has left confusion, not only in the business community, but confusion in the minds of the civil servants in Canada seeking clarification as to its intent.

Section 29.3 is an example of bureaucrats, which we need in this type of society, writing regulations and legislation for an area of activity in our communities they know nothing about. Perhaps they are concerned about a Supreme Court decision made sometime in the past which gave us a ruling that allowed advertising to be classed as being part of a newspaper and therefore not taxable. Ever since then they have been trying to find a way to increase the level of taxation as far as sales tax on that factor of advertising.

In presenting Section 29.3 in the amendments which the Minister of Finance has in this legislation, they are not asking themselves the basic question, "What is news"? When considering the answer to that question you are dealing with the heart of the free press. When I was agreeing with my colleague from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) I noticed the Minister of Finance shaking his head, saying I was wrong. I hope somebody will explain the apparent lack of understanding of that key issue because that is what they are doing. They are putting in legislation without addressing answers to key fundamental questions like that. What is advertising content? Who in the design phases of this legislation answered that question, so that there could be clarity given to the community at large?

There is the 75 per cent advertising formula, and the bill sets a threshold of 50 per cent of the issues. We have the pre-Christmas season when there is heavy advertising and we have the first quarter of the year when there is low advertising content. We need some kind of an average. This threshold goes along for three months and then an audit is done, all the bookkeeping has to be changed and the lineage count revised. This is an additional burden put on the community. If you do not meet the threshold for the quarter your penalty in terms of tax is retroactive for that quarter. How can anyone responsible for the delivery of payrolls, for solvency at the bank and for looking after the demands of organized labour manage to stay solvent as an economic unit with this type of burden added?

I do not think it is right for the hon. member opposite to stand behind the curtain and laugh at this. He obviously does not know, feel or care a tinker's darn about the concerns of people who are adding to the value of goods, creating meaningful payrolls, and paying income and sales tax. What is so funny about it? Go out there and earn your living. Be responsible for delivery of payroll and you will not find it a bit funny.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: What this type of legislation does is deliver us more and more of the control to the centre. We do not allow the boardrooms and owners of the nation any decision-making basis at all, so that decisions can be made in respect of the large and diverse activities of the nation. They have to come crawling in for grants. This will bring an avalanche of requests from the newspaper industry, and it will bring an avalanche of requests for specific rulings to clear up all of the problems in the regulations in this one area.

The hon. member for Edmonton West said that his riding was only serviced by two major dailies. We have two major dailies in my riding but we also have a very hard hitting and very talented weekly newspaper with a Sunday issue, so they are bi-weekly.

That organization has some 700 housewives and school students out delivering that community newspaper on Wednesdays and Sundays. In that community newspaper are fliers from building supply houses, chain stores and grocery stores. These are printed by different presses, the operators of which are trying to eke out a living. The presses are trying to meet good payroll standards throughout the community. That total distribution operation and that bi-weekly operation grew from a mimeographing service within the riding. That very fundamental operation has a solid payroll and a good balance sheet, but it is threatened by this type of legislation, which totally discriminates against it. How can such operations compete? How can the different presses in the community compete when the regulations now give the total cost leverage advantage to Pacific Press, which prints both the Vancouver Sun and the Vancouver Province?

The Liberals, along with their NDP cohorts, continue to label the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada as the party of the multinationals. Let me reply to that by saying that this legislation attacks the small and medium enterprise sector of Canada as nothing I have seen in this House in the last six years attacks it. This delivers unfair advantage to the Thompson and Southam chains. What backroom deal did hon. members opposite make with them to bring in a piece of legislation like this which puts an oppressive cost structure on all weekly and community papers across the land? It is just not fair. There is no equity. There is no fair sharing principle. It does not promote the just society hon. members opposite keep referring to in their rhetoric. Their deeds and their legislation are completely contrary to the principle of fairness.

There is a small business secretariat. There is a Minister of State for Small Businesses, but the small business secretariat is really just a political tool which is totally misused. Sixty-five per cent of the meaningful work created in Canada is created by the small and medium-enterprise sector which, on an individual basis, does less than $20 million a year in sales.

This place just does not represent that community which is not organized and does not have economic clout or economic leverage. I plead with hon. members on the government side to consider these small enterprises which create payrolls. It is true that some of them are marginal payrolls, but if small enterprises could be provided with all the benefits of the big monopolies, they would be monopolies themselves. As it is, some of them grow into very successful enterprises.

This piece of legislation is obviously the result of lobbying by the Thompson and Southam chains. It is obviously the result of the lobby of the Canadian postal service. That service, incidentally, wants to deliver all the mails and wants to change the definition of the word "letter" so that it will include all the electronic media. That service also wants a total monopoly over all communications, and the next thing it will go after will be talk. The government included that in its bill and it took a lot of work in committee to get it to recognize the folly of it. The Post Office is subsidized massively, to the tune of some $500 million or more a year, and now it wants to corral the distribution of advertising and fliers and everything else. At least community newspapers get to the doorsteps at present. There is no guarantee that they will get to the doorsteps through the Post Office, at least on time. Quite often advertised sale is over before the flier arrives through the Post Office. When we get to committee I will plead with hon. members opposite to be prepared to change their minds on that aspect, because the existence of all those independent newspapers is at stake.

With respect to this same issue, it is interesting that a very successful and productive printing enterprise in Vancouver, recently bought out by Southam, now finds itself in the deplorable position of losing all its flier and printing business. It is losing that business even to the Americans. The American multinational accounts in Canada can produce overruns in the United States, pay the sales tax on entry and have a delivered cost less than that of the printing industry in Canada.

When I criticize bureaucrats for creating confused legislation, believe me, there is some justification for it. We have to be out in that rough and tumble world of work to understand the downsides, the triggers and the traps which exist in this type of operation.

I have here a package of regulations with respect to different aspects of this legislation which officials are trying to draft. When I pick up the telephone and talk to departmental officials, they just cringe. They say, "We don't know". That is one aspect about which I feel very strongly, and I hope the government will think seriously about it as we approach discussion at committee stage.

I wish to discuss another inequity. I listened attentively to the Minister of Finance when he was talking about this legislation delivering solutions to anomalies, about different tax levels and about the avoidance which is taking place. Believe me, there is no tax avoidance going on out in the legitimate business world. Businesses do not wildly pay taxes. They hire lawyers and chartered accountants to advise them of the threshold at which they must pay tax. The tax department knows, encourages and puts that game in place. It is a very expensive exercise today to keep from moving into a retroactive tax position because of the lack of clarity in much of the law. I keep saying, please give us back the decision-making base which the government removed in 1972 in the tax legislation produced by the coalition NDP-Liberal government.

We have been slipping. In question period today the Minister of Finance talked about productivity being the key. I am glad he understands that because productivity is the key. It is the key to maintaining our quality of life; it is the key to licking inflation; it is the key to being able to service the world at large and to service the Third World more effectively. The gross national product can only be increased through productivity. However, what oppresses productivity is the complicated nature of the rules under which the wealth-creating sector must operate.

Listen to the howls on this: why tax profits? Profits are a new national resource. Profit is new working capital. The more profits generated in this country, the less we have to borrow abroad. The more profits we create, the bigger the tax revenue because that is what we have been taxing. Let us not tax profits. Let us create that wealth, that Canadian capital, and move to a tax on net cost of value added. This 9 per cent tax is tinker toy stuff, and as long as we have it in the system, that system will get worse and worse and more and more confused.

I think the Minister of Finance was misleading us when he gave credit to a government member for the reduction in tax from 12 per cent to 9 per cent. That is fantastic, but now what is the government doing with this legislation? It is moving the threshold of the tax up another notch and including all the partial manufacturers. I think this is a good move because if we assume value for duty on imported merchandise, which the minister thinks he is addressing with this tax, at 100 per cent of base and use 100 as the base, under the old tax—let us say the pre-January, 1981 base—when there was a 10 per cent duty factor and a 9 per cent federal tax, there was a multiplier of 155. In other words, if the world price was $1, the landed Canadian price would be $1.55. If there was a 17.5 per cent duty rate, it would be 164.5 or $1.64. Under the new budget by moving the threshold up to include the partial manufacturers, 155 becomes 143, so there is now a factor of 1.43, not 1.55.

I am using figures which come from an average of about 930 imported items. With the 17.5 per cent in the duty column, instead of the factor being 1.645 it is now 1.52. So the multiplier of the partial manufacturer has come down.

Let me also put this on the record. When you have a manufacturer's sales tax at the manufacturing level, there is a tremendous multiplier effect on the cost of consumer goods. An item which has the federal sales tax applied at the manufacturing level and which costs $5.50, to round off $5.49, would cost $5 at the retail level if the federal sales tax were not put on it.

Once again I say that if the aim is to make the country more productive, which the Minister of Finance recognizes as being the key factor in addressing most of the nation's problems, then let him move to the adoption of a net cost value added tax so that the value added at each stage is taxed, and any value added tax which was in any component of the cost can be subtracted in order to get a net value added tax. This would turn the whole matter of production back to the managers. As a result, they would not be buying big cars, putting extra facades on buildings, buying expensive furniture, or travelling first class unnecessarily, and thus building up all these allowable expenses which are charged against profits. The government would be taxing all the waste which exists in the community. Let the government start taxing waste in this land and let it leave profits as an incentive and a new form of wealth, and then let us watch this country grow.

I have another pet theory which should be considered in parallel. We are always looking for answers. I say: let the government get rid of the federal sales tax, which is nothing but inflationary, nothing but a drag and a charge against the payroll package of the work-force in Canada, and let it collect the cost of all social programs from an end-user tax. All of a sudden we will find that the country has turned into one of the most efficient industrialized nations in the world because each and every person will be able to measure what they are demanding of the government in terms of their own wallet or purse.

I do not see any resolution of our problems until we get right back to the basic philosophy of taxation and clean up all these artificial impediments which we have built into our system. I make this appeal once again most sincerely and most constructively.

There is another anomaly in our system which I find very serious. We have just enlarged the threshold and embraced partial manufacturing in the sales tax sector. The words of the Minister of Finance are in Hansard. While he thinks he is making the system more equitable, he is really just reacting to a self-centred lobby, and I know something about that because I lobbied before I came into politics. What has the minister done about the inequities in the definition of small manufacturers? Genstar has ready-mix concrete plants, and is doing a couple of billion dollars in business. It is a Canadian company whose president and senior executives operate out of San Francisco and which owns massive horizontally and vertically integrated subdivisions, using their own concrete products, their own building supply yards, and everything else. It is a beautifully run organization which is getting bigger and bigger. However, in terms of its ready-mix concrete operations, it is classified as a small manufacturer.

Next door to Genstar, or in the same vicinity, within a half mile, there is another organization doing $2 million in sales, which had the idea of buying cement, sand, gravel and different compounds, mixing them together and having the dry product packed for sale. If on a Saturday or on a Sunday I wanted to build a little form for something, I could buy a few bags of this ready-mix, add water to it and pour it in, and I would feel that I was pretty good at doing something with my own hands. Now the second company has to pay sales tax on the selling price of its product. The smaller company gets the sand, gravel and cement on a tax-exempt basis and has to pay the federal sales tax only on the selling price of the finished bag. The large company, which adds water to the same stuff pays the sales tax on the cost of the cement only, and does not pay it on the sand, the gravel, the administration and the profit. The small company is doing its best, is a good employer, employs good engineers and builds a beautiful little business which is doing $2 million in sales. Genstar is doing $2 billion in sales because it is a ready-mix manufacturer operating under the definition of a small manufacturer, and it pays the sales tax only on the cement. I am told that it does not have to collect the federal sales tax on the selling price of their dry products. It sells their product at 5 per cent below the lowest price the other company can ask.

Let me tell the government that when it brings in legislation with definitions such as the definition for small manufacturer or marginal manufacturer when it causes this type of confusion, it pretty well destroys any chance of improving the productivity of the industrial sector in Canada. What we need in Canada is more manufacturing, because if you move from a primary industry like mining or agriculture into secondary manufacturing where you have the value add, you get a far better multiplier factor in the economic community at large. However, somehow or other we do not think of that in terms of our taxation legislation. We work against ourselves, and then wonder why we are slipping from a very enviable situation in comparison to other industrialized nations, slipping down past all of them to end up in the garbage can.

There is not a nation in the world which that has been as blessed as we are with our hydro and mineral potential, with our nuclear potential in terms of peaceful uses, and with our natural resources. Everything the federal bureaucracy does suppresses the magic of adding to the value of goods and adding to the wealth of the country.

These games played with definitions should, I think, be of serious concern to all of us. I plead with the Minister of Finance, who is not present in the House now, to rid himself of the attitude that it is tax avoidance. It is not. There is no tax avoidance going on in the legitimate business sector. It cannot risk it, it cannot afford it, it does not want it, but there are all kinds of grey areas, so let us clean them up.

Now I should like to move to another small problem which I have been made aware of relating to Clause 4.4 of the bill, and that is the matter of marginal manufacturing. A small company started with one store and a couple of partners. They worked very hard, their wives were involved in the business, and they found the right combination. The company started to grow. The next thing you know, they had a second store, a third store and a fourth store. Then they started to buy Canadian-made products, and rather than go to a packager, they decided to instal their own packaging room and some equipment. They assembled and packaged their products and sent them out to their four stores. Under the new regulations they can do that and can buy on a federal tax paid basis, provided the product is only used in the store in which it is packaged. They have four other stores, so they must collect the federal sales tax, if they continue this operation, at the retail price. On one Canadian-made product they were paying about 24.9 cents in the way of tax; now they have to pay 47 cents. I could give chapter and verse on a series of products from both American and Canadian manufacturers which causes them anxiety. It is no longer worth having four or five people at work in a packaging room when they own more than one store.

For example, they used to buy large spools of rope. They used to eye splice, cut them off and sell them to length. Now that is partial manufacturing; it is cheaper to have it done either in the United States or elsewhere and purchase it already cut than retaining the four or five jobs in the organization which, by the way, kept people employed year-round even though it was a seasonal activity. It is all disturbed and distorted within the system.

The waste rag business is also affected, because it has such a high degree of unusable products in its operations. I am talking about successful companies, good tax-paying companies, with good payrolls and with 20 or 30 employees. They now find it is hardly worth the effort to stay in the game. They can buy bailed rags from the United States and bring them into Canada. In that way they can stay in the marketplace, whereas if they continue to run their own operations, they are not competitive.

When we design these things, it is important that the Minister of State for Small Businesses be given some muscle and some power rather than just be a political label. He should be instructed to have conference after conference with the different sectors involved so that the correct answers can be found.

I have already given the House what I think is the answer. The net cost value add tax system would turn the country back to the managers. It would eliminate, almost overnight, all the waste in the industrial sector. Hon. members know how conscious I have been of waste in the government sector. The waste in the government sector is nothing compared to the waste which exists at large in this land and out in the business sector because of the basic taxation system.

I should like to return to the remarks made by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance during question period this morning. He said that the issue is our national productivity. We will never resolve that issue, as long as our present taxation system remains in place and as long as the government brings down confusing legislation, such as Bill C-57.

I have dealt with the small business sector. I could go on to the things we do to ourselves in terms of tariffs. For example, another small enterprise in my constituency is concerned about clean air for industrial and grain workers. There are many grain elevators in my constituency. This company has designed a beautiful little pack which goes on one's back. It has an air hose and a mask, and the person wearing it can have forced, clean, filtered air. It requires a little motor with a peculiar little fan. It is a DC portable motor, and it must be brought in from outside. Through its stupid, idiotic definitions in terms of tariff items, the government forces the company to pay an excise duty and federal sales tax on the motor as it comes in, when they should be paying federal sales tax on the whole thing. They should be able to buy that motor and fan duty and tax free, so that the product can remain of Canadian manufacture. Because of the way that tariff item reads now, they should go down to the United States to have that item manufactured, then bring it into the country on a fully-finished basis. The things we do to ourselves, which affect people who have not had the background experience of the rough and tumble of the work world, are totally negative.

Another tariff item that troubles people is the peculiar light dentists use when they are examining mouths. If it is attached to a dental chair, it comes into the country duty free. If it is unattached, the dentists must pay duty on it. Why? They can buy the light, send it to Italy to be attached to a chair, and then it can be brought in duty free. But, if they want to buy the light and attach it to something made in Canada, they must pay duty on it. I could refer to example after example of negative traps and tricks which interfere with the Canadian value add.

I realize time is precious and one of my colleagues wants to say a few words. In conclusion, I should like to indicate that our very complex tax act is interfering with the productivity we so desperately need in the country. We need to return to a simple tax act. We need to return to an incentive system where the minds and brains of people are sparked and given a vitamin shot. We need to return the decision-making base to the managers and boardrooms of the country instead of leaving it in the halls of the big buildings in Ottawa. We should not tax profits; we should tax net value add, which I will explain in another speech some time. That would allow us to manage and to tax costs and would wring out the waste in the land. We should be given legislation which defines the behaviour expected of the business community. We should not structure the business community because that adds burden upon burden and confusion upon confusion for the creative sector. We should think about bringing in legislation which provides employee ownership plans, the same kind of tax haven which has been given in retirement savings plans. Then we should spread the ownership of the industry in the private, small and medium-enterprise sectors, and the ownership of larger corporations among the employees under some kind of a tax-exempt plan.

For goodness' sake, we should take the power to give research and development grants away from the bureaucracy. We should strengthen research in the universities so that we will have qualified people to send out to fill the positions and the need in our industries. We should include an incremental incentive for the spending of research dollars in the industry; then we could resolve the research and development dilemma in the country.

I have debated this issue for hours in previous Parliaments. For goodness sake, let hon. members hear that debate and share the decision-making base. We talk about sharing. The decision-making base should be shared among the people taking the risk, not in the halls where people say, "That tax point is ours; we can spend it more wisely than you can, dummy." That is not the proper attitude, it is not the way to resolve the problems in the land.

I will sit down now, and I hope the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) might be recognized next.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). I think he will realize it was a great tragedy for Canada and the people of the country that he did not have an opportunity, as minister responsible for small business, to bring this type of philosophy into the tax laws of this nation.

My remarks will be brief in order to allow the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) to have the floor. On this particular occasion I will only deal with a part of this bill primarily because it is an example of where the government has changed its mind and has done something as the result of advice from Members of Parliament. I would like to see that attitude continue in committee.

I am talking about a very historic matter in Canadian political history. According to this excise tax legislation, it is now legal to have an alcoholic still. If anyone knows the history of alcohol in this country, what I have just said immediately becomes significant. This question of the over-consumption of alcohol for drinking purposes runs through our political history. Because of the tremendous concern over this problem, we have put the damper on individuals owning their own alcoholic still.

Alcoholic distillation is an ancient process which many people have used to reproduce the waste of the products in the country around them for many purposes in addition to drinking. There is a little section on definitions in this bill. What the government has done to remove the great penalties found in the existing legislation is to call alcohol, "denatured spirits", rather than call it "denatured alcohol".

Canadians will soon realize that they have finally received some freedom. As long as they remember to call the product "denatured spirits" they will not be stepping on the toes of the police. Over the years many hon. members have tried to point out that there is more wealth in the waste in our system than there is in the product. I have mentioned this point in the House so many times that the nickname I was given when I first came here was Johnny Appleseed, because I kept trying to say that there is more money in trees than in grass.

Mr. Huntington: Oh, no, there isn't.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I am not talking about the type of grass to which the hon. member is referring; I am referring to cereal grains. The question of the utilization of waste is very important to the economics of Canada. Half of our fishing production is waste. A large proportion of our agricultural production is waste. Sixty per cent of our forestry production is waste. This is all because we are not using the knowledge which is there, to utilize this for waste in the interests of the people and the country.

Alcoholic stills might seem like a small item, but experts calculate that with the privilege of having stills and using the waste of the farm, fishery and other industries—even the housewife could use it if she wants—we could produce 3 per cent to 5 per cent of the total energy needs of this nation, which run into billions of dollars. I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) whom I accused in one of my earlier speeches of having zigged when he should have zagged. In this case he did zig when he should have zigged!

This change was in the Crosbie budget. It also included a tax deduction for people who paid wages to their spouses; a proposal that the cost of renewable energy hardware could be written-off in two years and a proposal for Small Business Development Bonds which would have cut interest rates just about in half. I could mention a couple of other points, but I am talking about stills. As long as the producer is careful to call the product spirits instead of alcohol, this legislation will get him off the hook and allow him to own a still. I have not seen too many headlines on this matter, but it makes the farmers dance in their yards.

Instead of brewing their alcohol out in the bush or in the bluffs, they can now brew it in their home, pay the wife to watch it—which is tax deductible—and produce $4,000 to $5,000 worth of alcohol. That was the intent of the Crosbie budget. This legislation, however, has a limitation, which is that these spirits can only be used for experimental purposes and only for fuel by the individual.

It will cost between $6,000 and $10,000 to build an efficient still to handle such waste products as frozen grains, certain vegetables and the list of 60 or 70 plants which can be put through a still to make spirits. I suggest to the government that it broaden these regulations and add a clause to allow the farmer or individual who owns the still—in addition to using the spirit for his tractor, car, or truck, keeping the motor clean and preventing wear and tear—to sell his legitimate surplus to a legitimate gasoline station, even Petro-Canada. The oil company which buys this surplus spirit would be able to sell it to customers along the highway. If gasohol is sold with a 10 per cent to 20 per cent mix and the price remains the same, many car operators will use it exclusively because it enables the car to run two to three times longer. Instead of disposing of the car at 75,000 or 100,000 miles, it will now run for 200,000 miles or 300,000 miles.

If an amendment is introduced which will allow that individual who owns this still to sell his surplus, which will be controlled through licence and checked by the RCMP, to a legitimate gasoline filling station, which will keep records of what is received and what is sold, then the operation will be economical for the farmer and will warrant the price of from $6,000 to $10,000 for a still. A still operator must put through a certain amount of volume to make it pay, because the price of alcohol is only $2 to $3 per gallon.

Beside the economic advantages of allowing the individual to sell a surplus up to a certain amount, say 2,500 gallons, which would cover the great majority I am sure, then the farmer will produce 3 per cent to 5 per cent of our total energy requirement from a renewable resource, namely, waste. The product will add to the life of the motors of the cars and, socially, it will stop the bootlegging. The farmer cannot be expected to throw away his surplus spirits. Since we are dealing with denatured alcohol which cannot be consumed, the farmer will give it to his friends, or, in some cases, peddle it, under the table. This will mean the continuation of what has been going on for the past 60 years to 80 years with the Mounted Police patrolling the roads every night, watching for smoke and trying to smell mash.

People live in an atmosphere of expecting that sooner or later they will be going to jail. Since the government has gone so far as to say the producer can use it for his own use, it should now make it legitimate by saying he can sell his surplus to a legitimate filling station operator. This is the case in 36 states of the United States. With our farmers living just across the road from American farmers who have these opportunities, I think it is important that we match them. This would not reduce or increase the revenue to the tax collector at all. It would solve a social problem, produce new wealth, fight inflation and make the cars and engines last longer. I think it is a measure which could easily be put in place.

I would now like to talk about the human aspect of this measure. The place where it would do the most good is in the areas of Canada where it is also most needed. I think of Cape Breton where the minister comes from. If there is any part of the world which needs more money it is Cape Breton. The opportunity is available to them, with their fish and farm combination, to make an extra $5,000 a year very easily, working along with their present jobs, utilizing waste, serving their country and making the engines of the district last longer.

I am also reminded of the vast regions of Quebec which are away from cities, northern Ontario, the prairies, B.C., even the Yukon and Northwest Territories. It would be possible to utilize waste in those areas by making this spirit still available up to economic levels where farmers could use it without abusing it. I think the limit should be set at 2,500 gallons, which I know was the figure to be used in the regulations under the previous administration. By using a simple device like this the worry would be taken off the RCMP, the farmer could sleep at night without worrying and, above all, we could make use of the wealth of this nation in a very constructive way.

I will conclude by congratulating the minister for accepting this proposal from the Crosbie budget. He should go whole hog and take advantage of the work that the Department of Agriculture has done, not only through the speeches of the minister but in the pamphlets which have been prepared to explain the operation of a still, its dangers and its good points. This information should be sent out to several hundred thousand people who live on the land, who work in the bush, who are on the farms and beside the sea. It would take a year or so to put a still of the size I am talking about into operation. More progress could be achieved by broadening the legislation in the way I suggest.

I would like to thank the House, Mr. Speaker, for letting me take this time to talk about such an historic occasion—when stills finally became legal in our country.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There was a House order indicating that this business would end at 3.45 today. I want to tell the government House leader that we do not intend to call a vote with respect to this matter. If that is the case, and if everyone is willing, perhaps we could continue the debate until four o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: We will agree to that, Mr. Speaker. We may call "on division" but we will not force a recorded vote.

Mr. Pinard: We agree with that proposal, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is understood, then, that the debate will continue until four o'clock, at which time I will put the question but there will not be a recorded division.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to express my thanks to the government House leader and to our own House leader, not only for the 15 minutes which we will gain but for the successful negotiating which was done to permit—

Mr. Knowles: Are you not going to thank me, too?

Mr. Hargrave: Of course. I also thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I do so not only for the time allowed me to participate in this debate but for arranging that this subject be referred to the standing committee. To me that is very important.

I would like to begin my remarks by saying that I consider this legislation the most significant of all legislation necessary to implement the National Energy Program launched by the October 28 budget. I say that because it offends and contradicts the very roots and fundamental concepts of Alberta and Saskatchewan's entry into confederation in 1905 and the subsequent transfer of our natural resources in 1930.

My remarks will deal almost entirely with the implications of this bill on our natural gas resources and the total natural gas industry. These remarks will also be appropriate for the companion tax provisions, that is, the petroleum and gas revenue tax or the 8 per cent wellhead tax.

Natural gas in Alberta, especially in southern Alberta, is very much a part of our heritage. It is part of our history from our very beginning. Natural gas is inextricably a part of our survival of the drought and depression of the 1930s and the ten year adjustment period following. That 20-year period of our history was, in reality, a lost generation and the memories and scars are still evident. Our natural gas history began about 100 years ago when the first gas wells were drilled in the communities of Medicine Hat, Alderson and Bow Island. They were drilled by a Mr. J. A. Grant, who came out west from Sarnia, Ontario.

After that early beginning, Medicine Hat quickly developed its own complete utility system for heating, electric power generation and even street lighting. Even in my day, as a schoolboy, I can remember the town's natural gas street lights which were never turned off because gas was so plentiful. In those early days the city regularly flared a gas well at the CPR station to entertain visiting dignitaries, including Rudyard Kipling, who was sufficiently impressed as to observe that surely Medicine Hat had all hell for a basement.

Those early gas wells were drilled with cable tools and walking beam rigs. The drilling derricks were built from 2 x 12 planking and took months to build. The drilling operations took years, very often with shutdown periods while the owners went off to arrange more money to carry on the operation. I can well remember one such well about 15 miles from our ranch which carried on for years and eventually made a big strike. This caused great enjoyment at first and then total disappointment followed because gas had been struck and not oil. Other than heating a caretaker's shack, that particular well was of no use, since there was no market for the gas. The enormous derrick eventually blew down and was used as firewood by neighbouring farmers. The well burned for several years before it was eventually sealed off by a new conservation authority. All of this took place about 50 years ago, but I can remember it vividly.

I have said that natural gas resources are part of our heritage. The modern-day development of the total natural gas industry began in the late 1930s and throughout the 1940s. Today's enormous gas industry, including gas wells, pipelines, petrochemical plants, compression stations and a vast array of natural gas service industries all began when a former Alberta premier, Ernest C. Manning, now Senator Manning, passed the necessary Alberta legislation to allow the export of natural gas and oil in 1949. That provision was applicable across provincial borders as well as the United States border.

The total natural gas development was a significant factor in the long, slow recovery following the lost generation about which I spoke. This was particularly so in the agricultural sector of southern Alberta. I would say it was at least a partial compensation for those drought years.

● (1550)

I am referring to gas development, of course. For the first time in our history as a province we were able to begin catching up to other parts of the prairies, which do not have our severe semi-arid climate, and this thanks to the newly developed part of our natural gas heritage.

Today, with this proposed legislation, all of this Alberta natural gas heritage, this Alberta way of life, is severely threatened in two ways; first, as to the constitutional legality as a result of this legislation, and second, as to the very obvious and crippling implications to come on the implementation of this act and the related petroleum and gas revenue tax.

The Alberta Court of Appeal has already heard the submission of the governments of Alberta and Canada on this issue. Its decision has not yet been brought down. Alberta is claiming that the federal government has no right to tax our natural gas for two fundamental reasons. First, Section 125 of the British North America Act says it all in just 15 words. It reads: "No lands or property belonging to Canada or any province shall be liable to taxation." Second, natural resources in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba were formally and legally transferred from the federal government in 1930 to the prairie provinces. I emphasize most emphatically that this 1930 transfer means that in those provinces we own those natural resources. Surely it takes precedence over the sweetheart deal between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) which referred to "management and control" subject to a federal override.

Mr. Siddon: That was an NDP sell-out.

Mr. Hargrave: That deal was, of course, made in the constitutional debate.

The Alberta argument was countered by federal lawyers who insisted that this position only applies to resources still in the ground and that all commodities become liable to taxation once they are in transit. Where do we stop with this argument? Our agricultural soils are a natural resource. Should a product of those soils, such as wheat, become taxable in transit? What about the case of our hydro potential from our rivers or from gas-fired electrical energy? Should this energy and end product become taxable in electrical transmission systems? The implications here are staggering, since it should surely include Ontario and Quebec hydro. It must surely be apparent now in the prolonged constitutional debate that Alberta is chiefly concerned about the complete takeover of Alberta's resources, by way of a referendum or by any other means. This is a very real concern in Alberta now.

I would now like to give some indication of the impact this legislation will have dealing with natural gas only. My remarks apply primarily to southern Alberta, but they do cover a much wider area as well. My city of Medicine Hat has developed and owned all of its own utilities beginning about 100 years ago. It includes electrical utilities generated from natural gas. Medicine Hat's population, including nearby Redcliff, is about 40,000. A large greenhouse industry faces staggering cost increases. Nine separate greenhouse operations face increases of 100 per cent, 102 per cent, 106 per cent, 166 per cent and 200 per cent respectively. These costs are for this excise tax only. They do not include the 8 per cent wellhead tax. A typical home owner in Medicine Hat using about 15 Mcf per month is now paying 50 per cent more. A senior citizen's home is paying 40 per cent more. The absolute dollar impact on the total city gas consumption is $6.5 million or about $18,000 a day. This is for the first incremental stage only.

I come now to the commercial uses in the city. A co-op shopping centre has an increase in gas costs of 77 per cent and an increase of 16.5 per cent for electrical costs. The gas costs for our district hospital, which services the whole rural community, have increased 106 per cent. Its electrical bill is up 23 per cent. All residential, commercial and industrial electrical costs have increases ranging from 13 per cent to 26 per cent. Again, these cost increments do not reflect the 8 per cent wellhead tax or the present very high interest rates. Easily the most severe impact of the gas cost increases will be felt by our senior citizens, especially those farmers, mostly from Saskatchewan, who seem to enjoy retirement in Medicine Hat with the comforts of natural gas.

The town of Brooks has already suffered more severely than Medicine Hat. Brooks has a population of 9,000 and has grown very quickly as a result of the oil and gas industry. Some 25 specialized service industries are based at Brooks and have already experienced severe cutbacks. There are another 175 businesses directly related to the oil and gas industries. Brooks expects a 30 per cent to 35 per cent reduction in its business activity, because of the National Energy Program, most of it as a result of the natural gas section within that policy. The number of drilling rigs in the Brooks area has already decreased from 70 to 50. Quite recently, and I find this most interesting, two rigs have left for Australia. The balance of this local reduction in drilling rigs has either moved to the United States or they have shut down. In the Brooks service area, less than 10 per cent of the companies have any affiliation with multinationals. More than 70 per cent of supplies, manufactured goods, fabricated goods and vehicles originate right here in central Canada.

I want to say a word or two about the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops Ltd. I am sure members of all parties will remember the 18-member board of directors of this rural, province-wide national gas consumer group which visited members of Parliament and other groups about two weeks ago. This federation is made up of 77 user-member gas co-ops, five county-owned utilities and other private gas utilities throughout Alberta. These 85 user-member-owned utilities provide over 40,000 natural gas services to over 140,000 rural people with a 40,000-mile distribution system. Their brief to all members of Parliament documents in some detail their concerns about this new legislation. They point out that 85 per cent of Alberta's rural population have homes which are heated by natural gas. They have, justifiably, concerns about the impact of fertilizer costs because, of course, natural gas is a major input component of commercial fertilizers. These gas co-ops have advanced a very sensible suggestion, namely, that the 30-day pay period for the tax be extended to 90 days.

All of the various cities, towns, rural associations and many others have grave concerns and misgivings about this legislation and the companion petroleum and gas revenue tax. I can certainly understand and appreciate these concerns. A very wide selection of both gas producers and consumers should be encouraged to appear before the standing committee when the bill is sent there. That is the very least the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) can arrange. It is my understanding that this is the government's intention.

As I indicated earlier, we in southern Alberta consider our natural gas resource as part of our 100-year heritage. It would be difficult to place a monetary value on this aspect of our gas heritage resource. I can only add that Alberta's other financial Heritage Trust fund—and most of you know what I am referring to—pales in insignificance in comparison to our natural gas heritage resource.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being four o'clock, pursuant to agreement made earlier this day, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question related to the second reading stage of Bill C-57. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

Item No. 25 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

POWERS OF COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs be empowered to examine, inquire into and report from time to time appropriate measures for the prevention, identification and treatment of abused persons involved in interfamily violence and in particular, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, to address the issue of battered wives and dependants and for such other measures in the same matter as the committee may consider desirable.

He said: Mr. Speaker, a few years ago this House took a giant stride forward in recognizing and coming to grips with the battered child syndrome. The House Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs conducted an in-depth study involving more than 300 different authorities into the question of child abuse which is a broad continuum stretching from deprivation and child neglect on the one hand to the physical battery of children on the other.

The line of demarcation between federal and provincial jurisdictions was traced, responsibilities of parties identified and sound recommendations for remedial action were made. Today I want to ask the House to consider a similar measure related to the broader spectrum of family violence and inter-family violence.

Inasmuch as we have focused the light of truth on the social and legal problems related to child battery, I think the time has long past when spouse battering should come out of the closet and we should attempt to identify the basic elements and seek remedies.

The excellent report on this subject by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, published just one year ago, interprets the statistics, puts to rest some old myths, identifies some causative dynamics, takes a realistic look at what is being done and addresses the question of what remains to be done.

The facts speak for themselves. Battering is rarely a one-time occurrence. The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women reports that one in ten Canadian women are battered and most of them have nowhere to go for help, and those who seek help face high legal and financial barriers.

There is no geographical, financial, educational or class exclusion to the perpetrators of this form of violence. We know that 50 per cent of the husbands of battered women interviewed by transition houses were beaten as children, compared to about one third of the women. We know that 55 per cent of the husbands were working; that the one transition house which asked whether the mate had a criminal record found that 34 per cent did, and that the husband's educational level tended to be, like his wife's, about grade 11.

It bears repeating that these statistics should not be interpreted as statistics on battered wives across Canada. They are statistics on one group of battered wives who went to transition houses for help in 1978.

This does not reduce the impact or the validity of the statistics. Still they must not be used to conclude that middle or upper-class women are rarely battered. Many transition house workers spoke of the web of silence around middle and upper-class wife battering. The information on middle-class wife battering comes primarily from doctors, lawyers, police and social workers who refer women to transition houses, and also for middle-class women who may phone for advice but do not stay in the house. These reports and the statistics confirm the conviction that wife battering is just as common in middle and upper-class homes.

Wife beating has been condoned throughout history. The Canadian advisory council report refers to the first known written laws, thought to date from about 2500 B.C., which proclaimed that the name of any woman who verbally abused her husband was to be engraved on a brick which was then to be used to bash out her teeth.

Wife beating and wife killing were recognized rights of men in Greek and Roman societies. Throughout the middle ages wife beating was openly encouraged and the Renaissance brought no relief to women. The eighteenth and nineteenth centuries also spawned laws that proclaimed man's right to abuse his wife. British law textbooks in the nineteenth century still stated that the husband had, by law, power and dominion over his wife and could beat her, but—and here we have the emergence of the first delicate sense of justice in the exception, which states—"but not in a cruel or violent manner".

What are the causes of wife battering? Alcohol, mental illness, natural male aggression, violence passed on from one generation to the next, status imbalance, alienation and the inability to communicate, stress—social pathology?

Alcohol is in fact present in a large number of cases of wife abuse and although it may be a facilitator, its role as a causal factor may be more prominent in the social use of alcohol to legitimize violence and to reinforce a certain image of family relationships.

Wife battering is too widespread to be explained primarily by mental illness. There are many theories and there are many commentaries on the theories, but perhaps the time has come for us to look for cause in the wider society rather than in the individual or the particular family. Wife battering is not a modern phenomenon, and there are many facilitators like alienation, alcohol, status imbalance, stress and social pathology.

Any examination of the phenomenon of family violence has got to take a look at the family as an institution and the relationships between not the individuals, but the individual roles within the family that perpetuate this form of violence; indeed the institution of the family has to be explored in the context of legal and medical institutions against the background of wife battering and family violence in the privacy of the marital home.

The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women has made some excellent recommendations for a series of changes to the Canada Assistance Plan, a federal-provincial cost sharing arrangement for social services, that would help battered wives. The council recommended modifications to provide more funds for transition houses for battered women, to base a needs test applied to the women on their own income rather than their husband's income, and to loosen residency roles because the houses do not exist in every community. The council recommended an emphasis in the justice system on wife battering as a serious criminal offence.

I believe that as parliamentarians we should address these recommendations and we should also invite the interdepartmental committee of senior civil servants who have been looking at this problem to share their thoughts with us.

The role of family violence and the law, medical response, the role of social agencies, the inevitable cycle of despondency and frustration, marriages outside the law, all invite study. Transition houses, police crisis intervention, police training programs, United Way initiatives, legal initiatives in Canada, are all indicators of what can be done to help alleviate a serious critical and unjust situation.

In my personal view the question of long-range prevention, and an inventory of emergency services and support services along with legal reforms, are high priorities for early action. What I have been describing for the past few minutes is not one problem, it is many problems; complex problems, interwoven problems and problems that have been with us since the emergence of civilization. The fact that it has existed for centuries is no excuse for one more day's delay. Last year an estimated 50,000 Canadian women were battered, some of them to death. How much longer do we have to wait before we take action?

This is not a political question, it knows no bounds of race, creed, religion or politics. We have before us a human problem and I believe that we have accumulated the intelligence, the desire and the ability to finally do something about it. In the name of humanity, Mr. Speaker, I urge this House to pass my resolution so we can take one giant step forward on the high road to a just and compassionate society.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased and honoured to have the opportunity to speak to the motion brought to the House by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie). I think it is an excellent motion.

When one reflects for a moment or two that homes across Canada can be the showcase of the best of human relations, one must also recognize that the worst of human relations can also be present there. As the hon. member has articulated very clearly and thoroughly in his presentation, they can be very dangerous places.

We are discussing a topic which has touched in one way or another the lives of all of us in the House. I would be surprised if everyone here did not know of someone who, at sometime in his or her life, had not been affected by family violence in one form or another, be it child abuse, wife battering, or sexual assaults. It is interesting to note that nearly half of the rape victims in Canada are either married or living common law. We are not talking about a situation involving strangers but rather something close to the family unit.

In the motion put forth by the hon. member he mentioned family violence relating to interfamily squabbles. I think the term would be "intra", within the family, as opposed to violence between families. It is fair to say that wives and children are the two groups we are primarily concerned about this afternoon. They are two groups that do not really have a voice and they are powerless in Canadian society. They do not have a lobby group in Ottawa and consequently more responsibility falls on our shoulders to raise this issue in the public consciousness and to take steps in the direction we are taking today. The hon. member mentioned a number of causes of family violence I should like to add one more to the very thorough list presented and that is, unemployment.

I think it is recognized now that unemployment results in a whole host of social costs to Canadians, costs such as increased suicides, alcoholism, hospitalization of one kind or another, prison terms, delinquency and, indeed, family violence. During periods of unemployment a person loses the ability to provide for a family, loses self-esteem, becomes frustrated and despondent. This often results in violence against other persons, including children and wives. At the moment, in Canada, family violence is a growing concern as is our concern about unemployment, the two being not causal but certainly related.

I listened with interest when the hon. member for York-Sunbury indicated that family violence cuts across all lines of society. It is not relegated to any particular sector of society. It is not an upper-class or a lower-class phenomenon but is found in all walks of life. One in ten wives is battered. Recently I read that in the United States there is a wife abuse in 60 per cent of all marriages. A recent study estimated that in metropolitan Toronto about 50,000 wives could be considered battered in one way or another.

In Vancouver, over an 18-month period, 800 wives came forward as victims of serious wife battering and physical abuse. The sad thing is that there is very little research on this topic in Canada or elsewhere. The study previously mentioned by the hon. member is one of the major studies, and it is one of the very few which exists on this topic. It is something we often take for granted. I would like to remind members of the House of the phrase "rule of thumb" which is one we have all heard and perhaps used ourselves. When we look at the origin of that term, it goes back to the old English common law when it was appropriate to beat your wife as long as it was for a good reason. You could not beat your wife with a stick thicker than your thumb. In other words, the "rule of thumb". When we consider the origin of that term we realize this problem has been around for some time.

Canadian statistics indicate that somewhere between 200,000 and 225,000 children per million feel the results of child abuse. I think by all accounts that is a very conservative statistic. The frequency and amount of child abuse in our society today is an increasing phenomenon and a very serious one. It is much greater than indicated by statistics. "Spare the rod, spoil the child" is a statement which is still heard very much within Canadian society today.

I read a 1977 task force study carried out in the province of Ontario which found that within the provincial context, very serious staff hampered the ability to deal with family violence. There are very serious shortages of resources and agencies to deal with this. I am certain Ontario is not unique in this respect. To begin to appreciate the seriousness of this problem, we find, looking at the logs of police work, depending on the municipality or the area of Canada involved, that between 10 per cent and 30 per cent of police calls have to deal with family disputes and family violence. One could almost say it has become a national pastime for many Canadians to beat their children or a husband, his wife. It is not a very pleasant thing to have to say. We must consider the pain, embarrassment and shame which result.

Obviously, we must increase community services, increase community resources and support systems. Transition homes of one kind or another are needed. Certainly we need large numbers of counsellors to deal in a professional way with this very serious problem. There is dearth of crisis centres across Canada to deal with family violence, child abuse, wife battering and rape. The latest statistic I have been able to obtain indicates that only 35 rape crisis centres exist across the country. When we consider the large metropolitan areas, that statistic is a poor implication of our concern as a society with these very serious problems.

The hon. member indicated the need for police training. There is a need for a new consciousness and a new awareness of that kind of training in our policy forces. Right now I suspect that a policeman is rather hesitant or reluctant to become involved in family violence and family disputes and will tend to avoid that kind of conflict instead of intervening.

With respect to the whole matter of our legal system, we certainly need to have laws with teeth in them and which show some sensitivity to this problem. I think it would be fair to say, as a generalization at least, that our legal system is rather "macho" in nature, especially when we think of the lawyers and judges within the system. It is a male-dominated system and rather macho in interpretation, which certainly does not result in sensitivity to this very crucial question.

There is also the matter of parenting skills. One assumption we in society make is that anyone is capable of raising a family. Our school system does not particularly reflect a concern regarding the development of parenting skills. I think we are dealing with perhaps one of the most sensitive of human relations, the raising of children. We are also dealing with the liaison between a husband and a wife. Yet no training in parental skills is really introduced in society. It is assumed that we all know inherently or have some innate ability. All of us here would certainly agree that that is not necessarily the case.

Finally, with respect to a public awareness program, there should be more of the kind of thing which is occurring here today. Members of Parliament are speaking out and recognizing the seriousness of this issue in Canadian society. The more the public is aware of the needs these crisis situations create, the more likely it is that solutions will be found.

In my community of Kamloops there is often a hesitation to accept a transition home, a halfway house or a transition home for young children with problems of one kind or another in the community. This public reaction is almost predictable. With public awareness and a more sensitive attitude toward this serious situation, the natural knee-jerk negative response would not be as common as we find it today.

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I say that our party will certainly endorse this motion. I congratulate the hon.

member for bringing it to the floor of the House. We look forward to action and results emanating from this motion.

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) for presenting this motion. I would like to express my full support for the motion.

[Translation]

All the hon. members in the House today are certainly aware that this government has committed itself to finding solutions to the problem of family violence, especially the odious issue of wife battering and child abuse, as I believe that one seldom occurs without the other. Recently, the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women published a brochure entitled The Battered Wife in Canada, an Anonymous and Silent Victim. I hope that this brochure can be distributed in our institutions throughout the country because I believe that the major problem in this regard is one of ignorance and silence and the fact that the population is kept in the dark or would prefer not to hear about it.

However, I would like to point out some of the initiatives taken by our government. First of all, since the Speech from the Throne, an inter-departmental committee including representatives from the Council on the Status of Women, from the Department of Justice, from the Department of the Solicitor General and from the Department of National Health and Welfare has undertaken a study on family violence and particularly on the problem of battered wives. Each of the three line departments represented has sponsored projects and taken certain initiatives: for instance, the Department of Justice has financed conferences, public assemblies and legal information brochures, as well as experimental projects to help the victims; the Department of the Solicitor General of Canada has offered a training program to the RCMP in the area of family violence and has also financed conferences and workshops, as well as a vast research and experimentation program to improve the response of the legislators to the plague of family violence; third, the Department of National Health and Welfare has now under way 40 research and experimentation projects related to family violence including transition houses. These programs are ongoing and I am convinced that others will be implemented.

Nevertheless, if we agree to a reference of this issue to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, it is because of the existence of a real need which was readily identified by the interdepartmental committee but which to a great extent still remains without an answer. I wish to emphasize the need to bring this issue to the attention of the public and to provoke and sustain the interest of Canadian men and women as well as their desire to solve this problem. Whoever abuses a member of our society is committing a crime against society as a whole.

This is not interfering in family relations, whether we are talking about women or children. Our society already recognizes as its duty to protect children, but not yet unfortunately in the case of battered wives. We must, through all available means, give protection to all abused persons, women being by far the largest in number. And I do not hesitate to add, Mr. Speaker, that this is probably the most odious-most often committed and yet the most rarely reported crime in Canada at this time.

The study of the matter will not be easy because it fills one with horror and the interest it attracts is not only a desire for information. One can stay awake all night fuming with rage just thinking about something like this. Until now, women's organizations alone have been trying to really deal with this. I am grateful that two of my male colleagues have agreed to consider the matter and are prepared to deal with it. Even though women's groups are still at the consciousness-raising level, I think we must go one step further and see how we could deal with the situation and solve the problem.

We must concentrate on identifying and treating the battered wives who are a product of family violence. For the time being we would only be wasting time in searching for causes without really helping the half million battered women in Canada, and that I think is a conservative estimate. We must help these women now, Mr. Speaker, without regard for the number of their injuries, the level of socially accepted violence or the frequency of the incidents, because from the victims' point of view, these situations are unacceptable. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sincerity that I support this motion and recommend that it be implemented as soon as possible by the interdepartmental committee.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, as much as we all would like to think of Canada as one of the more enlightened countries in the world, a country where law and order is well established and a country where the human rights of each and every individual is respected by all others, I am sad to say that such is not always the case.

The resolution introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie), this afternoon focuses on one of the ongoing tragedies in Canadian society, and that is violence within the family. It is a problem which cries out for government action but, more than that, it demands of each and every Member of Parliament that we have a better awareness and a much greater willingness to tackle the problem than we have shown in the past.

Violence is always tragic, but violence within the family is even more so, for the victims are so vulnerable and so defenceless. They are preyed upon by the very people to whom they give their trust and on whom they depend. Family violence is far more widespread than reported cases indicate. According to a study done by the University of Windsor, there are ten unreported cases for every case reported. There are ten unreported cases of battered wives to every reported case.

This is why family violence is so difficult to combat. It goes on in the privacy of the home and is very often hidden by the victim in order to protect the very thing that has turned against him or her—the family.

Now I want to focus very briefly, as others have, on one aspect of family violence, that is, wife battering. That is the subject we have been discussing this afternoon. All forms of violence are horrifying, as the hon. member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) said, but wife battering has not received the attention or concern that its seriousness merits. For example, the laws concerning child abuse in Canada are far ahead of those regarding wife battering. It is now mandatory for citizens outside the family to report known cases of child abuse, but this is not the case in the abuse of wives. Indeed, most provinces, sir, a woman still cannot sue her husband for damages because those damages have been caused by an assault committed during marriage.

The rape of a woman by her husband is not yet a criminal offence. I know that legislation is about to come before us, but I would like to see it brought forward much more quickly for second reading. It was only in 1968, 12 years ago, Mr. Speaker, that severe physical abuse became valid grounds even for divorce in Canada.

The problem of wife beating is real and it is very serious. Most Canadians have no idea just how widespread it is. Of all the forms of family violence, and there are many, three quarters of the hundreds of thousands of cases which take place involve wife beating.

In 1978, just two years ago, it was estimated that some 500,000 or half a million, Canadian women were beaten by their husbands or their live-in companions. That is one in every ten women who are married or living common law were physically abused.

The figures are staggering. The Vancouver police, when they formed their estimates in that city, said they receive, on average, 44 domestic calls about violence on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, and that on other days in the week the average number of these calls is 38 a day. We know that more than twice as many women as men are murdered by members of their own families.

This incidence of violence is an issue which we simply cannot ignore, and that is why I am pleased to see that my colleague has brought it to the floor of the House this afternoon. It is an issue to which we must begin to give much more priority. We can begin that by asking the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to look into this matter and recommend measures for the prevention, identification and treatment of victims of family violence.

Not enough is being done at the moment. For example, the transition houses, about which my hon. friend spoke, which give shelter to battered wives, are too few and are underfunded. About half the female population does not have ready access to transition houses, and those who do must qualify for welfare before they can get into a transitional house. I know that from my own experience as a member of the board of directors of one such interval house in Kingston.

Women who are forced to flee to transition houses often have to do so in the middle of the night with scarcely more than the clothes on their backs. They are forced out into the cold, into the dark, as a result of severe physical abuse. According to statistics—and statistics can never tell the whole story—one out of every three such women has been beaten not just once or twice, but daily or weekly. They leave their homes in sheer desperation, and therefore the financial situation of the family of which they were once part, should not be a criterion for receiving financial assistance. For these women who are driven out, no matter what social background they come from, are truly destitute.

If this resolution is referred to committee, then the possibilities of preventive action could be investigated. Better educational and counselling programs could be recommended. Not just the general public, but police forces throughout the country, as the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said, should become more sensitive to the problem.

It has been found that half the callers pleading for a police presence during husband and wife disputes were only given advice over the phone, but no physical protection. Couples should have better access to counselling, and the public should be made aware of the severity of the problem. Women should be encouraged to speak up and speak out if they are being abused. So many battered wives live in a world of private terror; they are afraid to stay and yet they are afraid to leave. These women must be provided with more financial and moral support than they have at present.

If this resolution is referred to the committee, it could also look into the legal aspects of wife battering to determine whether or not the laws on our books are adequate to protect wives who have been beaten and who are physically abused. For example, it could ask how effective restraining orders are. In a case study published last year by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women we were told of a woman, who, after she and her daughter had both been severely beaten by the husband, got the court to pass a restraining order on him. Not only did the restraining order not dissuade him from beating his wife again, nearly to the point of death, but when he was brought up on charges of attempted murder, he was given a suspended sentence for assault. He paid no fine, he spent no time in jail, but his wife still has the scars she received while he was under a restraining order.

Wife battering is, as has been said, a multidimensional problem, which calls for changes in the fields of law, education, medicine, social services, the economy and in the attitude of the public.

We must listen to what women have to say and we must be prepared to help. Indeed, sir, women are beginning to speak out more and more about this issue, in conferences, and in seminars across the country where they are meeting to discuss problems which women have in society. One such conference will be held here tomorrow, right on Parliament Hill, and I refer of course to the constitutional conference on women.

Hundreds of women from all across the country will be gathering together to discuss women's rights, family law, the role of the social services, women in employment and women in education. We in this chamber can do our part this afternoon by taking the resolution of my colleague seriously and referring it to committee instead of allowing it to be talked out.

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak to this motion. The Department of National Health and Welfare has been concerned for some time now with the prevention of family violence and countermeasures have been taken in that area. Several projects have been developed to help people take sound and positive life habits and thus avoid that kind of situation. For instance, a number of activities within the Health Protection Branch are aimed at fostering women's interest in their condition and keeping them well informed on their health and that of their family. An information kit on women and drug addiction has been developed, including a report on alcohol and violence. The Social Service Programs Branch is deeply concerned with family violence.

In the last three years the marriage counselling service has sponsored and financed 20 symposia throughout Canada. These meetings of specialists in various branches reviewed the common aspects of family law and social services, particularly reform of family law, custody and visiting privileges, alimony payments, arbitration, counselling standards, legal procedures and the responsibility of the public and the specialists.

The report on abused and neglected children drafted by the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare led to the establishment of a plan of action at the ministerial level and to the creation of a position of co-ordinator for the information program on child abuse within the social services division which has begun to play an important role in the field of public teaching by co-ordinating and circulating information through films and printed matter.

Consultations have been undertaken with provincial authorities and private organizations to determine early detection methods, interdisciplinary measures and appropriate treatment so as to help the abused children and the people responsible for the abuse. In addition, the national welfare grants program has sponsored 14 projects on mistreated children since January 1977 and we have begun the last stage of a two-year study on basic legislative questions related to child abuse. The Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Justice have funded an exhaustive study on sexual offences against children and young people.

While continuing our efforts and supporting programs to fight child abuse we now consider that the most urgent aspect of family violence is the case of battered wives. Under the department's two major grants programs, namely, the national welfare grants program and the national health research and development program, funds have been earmarked for over 40 pilot projects and research concerning family violence and sexual violence.

Through the Canada Assistance Plan we have paid for 50 per cent of services offered to neglected and mistreated children. Through that same plan we also share with the provinces half the cost of a great many financial and support services for victims of family violence. These funds help administer transition homes for battered wives.

We are also endeavouring, in concert with the Canadian Nurses' Association and the Canadian Association of Social Workers, to make the members of those two more aware of the problem of battered wives and inform them of the steps they can take. In fact, the social workers' association has set up a group of experts chaired by a department representative.

The problem is serious and far more widespread than anyone of us would dare admit. The efforts of the department are no more than a start and we are aware of it. The problem has now been identified but much remains to be done in determining the causes of wife battering and developing preventive measures, interdisciplinary services and appropriate care to help not only its victims but also those responsible for such ill treatment. We support whatever steps can contribute to educate the public and develop means to fight against the physical abuse of women; we therefore support the motion to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is refreshing this afternoon to sense the unanimity in this House. The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has spoken for us, and we hope that before the hour finishes the motion will have been passed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise in support of the motion of my good friend and colleague from New Brunswick, the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie). Indeed it is high time that this issue was brought out of the closet into the cold and harsh light of day, that it was discussed and acted upon.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has spoken of the need for public awareness. In that connection I am sure my colleagues in the House would want to congratulate the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for its presentation on Sunday, February 1, in the drama series "For The Record: A Far Cry From Home". For those of us who saw it, it was a compelling and frightening drama on the issue of wife battering. It made a lasting impression upon me, and I am sure all of us who saw it came away with the feeling that this cannot go on in a country such as ours. I congratulate the corporation which from time to time receives barbs from this august assembly; but in this case it deserves our heartiest congratulations for doing a tremendous job in bringing this issue to public awareness.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCauley: I also want to congratulate the various women's groups throughout the country which are working so hard to do something for battered wives in particular. In that connection I want to pay particular tribute to two groups in my own constituency of Moncton. There are two associations. One is called "Crossroads for Women". Its objective is to provide a shelter service for women who have been battered and abused, and to set up a referral service to aid women who are in crisis situations. The shelter or transition house which the association is trying to establish will accommodate women and their children. Also there is another project called "Project Aware". It is sponsored by the YWCA in Moncton. It provides access for women to assistance and resources to enable them to become self-sufficient. Both of these groups were to be funded under the Canada community services project. Unfortunately the money for that province ran out.

I have implored the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to see if more money cannot be found somewhere for these worthy groups and their worthy projects. I am pleased to report that the minister is very sympathetic to my pleas and to these women in my riding. I trust the money will be forthcoming in the near future.

The hon. member for Kingston and the Island (Miss MacDonald) quite correctly said that statistics do not tell the whole story, but we need to hammer the facts of this story home by statistics. In 1978 an estimated 500,000 Canadian women or one in ten of those married or living common law were battered by the men with whom they lived.

Two thirds of all divorce applications are filed by women. More than one quarter of these divorces are requested on grounds that include physical cruelty. Eight out of ten of the women seeking shelter in a Canadian transition house have been beaten while they were pregnant. One of three residents in homes for battered women have been beaten weekly or daily. Those are frightening and shocking statistics.

The ramifications go beyond the beating of women and the beating of children. Fifteen per cent of Canadian police killed between 1961 and 1973 died while investigating domestic disputes. My colleague, the hon. member for York-Sunbury will recall a very tragic incident in the province of New Brunswick a few years ago in which two RCMP officers were killed in circumstances such as this. So the ramifications go beyond even the serious situation which we know exists in the homes of this country.

The government is most concerned about the reported increase in these statistics. On January 12, 1981, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) tabled Bill C-53 which contains measures which would impose strict penalties for several of the problems associated with domestic or family violence. Such provisions resulted from careful study of the present legal sanctions within the federal sphere of responsibility and of the current use of these sanctions.

Pursuant to passage of clause 18, of Bill C-53, what is now called common assault, a summary conviction offence, will become what is referred to as a "hybrid" offence of assault. Under this hybrid offence, the Crown will elect whether to proceed by way of summary conviction where the maximum penalty is six months and/or a $500 fine, or by indictment where the maximum penalty would be two years' imprisonment. Because the offence is hybrid, the police will be able to arrest an assailant without actually finding that person committing an assault. This is terribly important, as the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands has pointed out. The police will operate on the belief that it is in the best interest of the public to take the assailant into custody in cases were they have reasonable and probable grounds to believe the offence is likely to be repeated.

This will be especially helpful in cases of wife battering where the police may be called by a neighbour. Their arrival on the scene usually stops the beating. At the present, unless the wife has sustained injuries sufficient to constitute the offence of assault causing bodily harm, the police are unable to arrest unless they actually see the assault occurring. This, of course, is rarely the case. As a result, where the wife does not seek shelter away from the house and the husband is not arrested, frequently when the police leave the scene, notwithstanding that they believe the tension has been defused, the wife is again beaten by the husband.

This amendment to the assault section of the Criminal Code will provide a tool to the police to arrest without actually seeing the assault. Their judgment in assessing each situation becomes all important, and we can only hope that individual police departments will ensure that officers answering domestic calls will receive specialized training. To this end, federal and provincial police forces are working together to develop such police training.

Of course, once an arrest is made, the prosecution of a case falls within the responsibility of a provincial Crown attorney. There is some dispute about whether such matters ought to be dealt with in family court or in criminal court. The legal forum in which a case is presented often depends on the local situation regarding such things as the availability of court time, the availability of a prosecutor, and the procedures established by the local judges and so on.

However, the federal Department of Justice has awarded research and demonstration grants to obtain further information on the legal process in such cases and to assist complainants in the court process. For example, the Women's Research Centre in Vancouver is preparing a report on the legal process, and a demonstration project for a complainant consultant is under consideration for Windsor, Ontario. Under this project information would be provided to those assaulted in domestic situations about their legal rights and this would further assist those victims who proceed with assault charges as they move through the court process, whether in family court or in criminal court. It is anticipated this project will assist the Crown attorneys in processing these cases brought before the courts.

In relation to the abuse of children, the Minister of Justice announced, in co-operation with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), that a national study would be established under the chairmanship of Dr. Robin Badgely on the sexual abuse of children. The study is expected to last two years. In addition, the federal government, in conjunction with the province of Nova Scotia, is funding a study on child abuse. Also, in Clause 6 of Bill C-53, serious responsibilities and sanctions are imposed on parents, guardians and others in authority not to molest their charges or permit them to engage in sexual misconduct.

As it has been demonstrated that the rules of evidence need to be amended to permit one spouse to be compellable and compellent to give evidence against the other spouse in child abuse cases, the necessary amendment to the Evidence Act is proposed in Bill C-53. These legislative measures are the one area within the federal sphere of responsibility involving domestic violence where the federal government can take immediate action.

Notwithstanding these current initiatives the government supports further study and action and would welcome the assistance of the Standing Committe on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. Therefore, in concluding this debate, I am pleased to indicate that the Government of Canada supports the motion of the hon. member for York-Sunbury.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being 5 p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m.

At 4.57 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

SIXTY-SECOND ANNIVERSARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Lithuania became an independent democratic nation on February 16, 1918. It lost that status in 1940 when the country was occupied by the U.S.S.R. Today Lithuanians who live in the free world celebrate their independence day. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche):

That this House recognize the sixty-second anniversary of the declaration of the independence of Lithuania, and join with those Lithuanians who seek an end to Soviet aggression and a return of Lithuania to a free and democratic society.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STATUS OF WOMEN

CONGRATULATIONS TO ORGANIZERS OF INDEPENDENT CONFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to seek the unanimous consent of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas 1,200 women met this weekend on Parliament Hill to discuss the proposed charter of rights and to ensure that equality for women is enshrined in the constitution, and since these women represented all the provinces and regions of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean):

That this House congratulate the organizers of the Conference on Women and the Constitution who mobilized, in less than two weeks, this forceful and effective demonstration of women's determination to achieve full equality in our Canadian society.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

PROFESSIONAL STAFF FOR INUVIK GENERAL HOSPITAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to introduce the following motion. In spite of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has been notified for some time that there has been no anaesthetist and no back-up surgeon at the federally run Inuvik General Hospital since Christmas, thereby not only forcing general surgery patients but also maternity cases to be evacuated to Edmonton some 1,300 miles away, and because the situation remains unchanged and critical, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That a full complement of professional staff be provided for the Inuvik, Northwest Territories, General Hospital, the only hospital within 600 miles, before patients die as a result of the minister's inaction.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

HOLIDAYS ACT

RECOGNITION OF HERITAGE DAY AS NATIONAL HOLIDAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), I move:

That this House recognizes that this is Heritage Day, and that congratulations are in order to all those who are celebrating it, including schools, local and national groups and the Governor General, and this House expresses its earnest hope that the government will soon call its own Bill C-37, an act to amend the Holidays Act, for second reading, and that it will agree to an amendment thereto so that starting in 1982 Heritage Day will be a national holiday for all the people of Canada.

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF NEW MINISTER OF CONSUMER AFFAIRS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given the double whammy dealt to Canadian consumers last Friday with news of the highest monthly increase in the cost of living in six years, coupled with the outrageous proposed hike by Bell Canada on residential telephones, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the Prime Minister show some concern for inflation's devastating impact on those Canadians who are least able to protect themselves, and appoint a new minister of consumer affairs who will devote full time to the welfare of consumers in this country.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

SUSPENSION DURING CONSTITUTIONAL DEBATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, in conformity with Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity I rise to move a motion which affects the individual members, not the government or the parties, and accordingly I am seeking the unanimous consent of all members irrespective of party affiliation.

In view of a temporary lessening in interest in private members' business, as illustrated by the difficulty in finding members willing to proceed with their public bills or motions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy):

That commencing next Monday, February 23, 1981, and continuing on those days on which the constitutional debate is the order of business and for the duration of the debate, the private members' hour be suspended.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

AIR SAFETY

CONDITIONS IN ARCTIC QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Over five years have lapsed since the signing of the James Bay and northern Quebec agreement. Subsection 29.0.30 of that agreement states that Canada and Quebec shall, together with the Inuit communities, undertake studies respecting air services, as soon as possible. The conditions of airstrips in northern Quebec are below standard. The Akulivik airstrip is 366 metres by 30 metres, Bellin 350 metres by 20 metres, and in Port-Nouveau-Quebec the airstrip has been classified by the Quebec government as dangerous. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the Minister of Transport initiate studies on air services in Arctic Quebec immediately, and that he take responsibility for rectifying the deplorable conditions that exist there.

EXPORTS OF BABY FOOD TO THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On December 15, 1980, I wrote to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) expressing my concern about Canadian companies marketing baby formulas to Third World countries in spite of the social and economic consequences thereof. In his reply to me the minister stated that the Canadian government has worked to "achieve international agreement recommendations that will bring about voluntary compliance by international companies". I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the minister state in the House what evidence there is to support his belief that these companies will voluntarily comply with regulations that would reduce their share of the export market.

In light of the publication of new regulations governing the fisheries on the west coast, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon):

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be provided immediately with an order of reference that will allow it to examine the new fisheries regulations for the sports fishery and herring roe fishery on the west coast and report back to the House.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That the leader of the socialists be asked to clarify the innuendo that those who do vote with the government may be doing so at variance with their consciences, that their illegitimate relationship with the Grits may have fuddle-duddled their thinking.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

CHANGES PROPOSED BY WOMEN'S CONFERENCE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question would have been to the Minister of Justice had he been here. In his absence I will direct my question to the Prime Minister.

The Minister of Justice, on several occasions this weekend, was reported as saying that he will not be considering new amendments of substance to the charter of rights. The Prime Minister will be aware that at a conference this weekend hundreds of women from across the country put forward proposals for major changes to the charter. What I would like to ask the Prime Minister is a very simple question. Was the minister ruling out in advance, on behalf of his government, all the changes that have been proposed to the charter by the women who met in Ottawa this weekend?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not seen the statement by the Minister of Justice, but it seems, from the quote given by the hon. lady, that he is saying the same thing as I said, that we are not considering any amendments. However, we know that some amendments may be moved in this House. Of course we will see if they are an improvement to the resolution or not, and we will make our judgment in consequence. For instance, I have not seen the particular resolutions from the meeting held over the weekend, but I am prepared to tell the hon. lady that if she supports the resolution, I would probably be ready to support the amendments.

An hon. Member: He's for sale.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, knowing that the government derailed the conference that would have taken place in the first place, I really am surprised at this point to find that the government is not sensitive enough to have found out what took place at that conference during the weekend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I would like to put my supplementary question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Justice, now that he is here. The minister or the Prime Minister will know that the weekend conference urged that if the government was not prepared to consider in total the resolutions put forward by the women's conference, then the total package should be separated and the bill of rights dealt with separately here in Canada by a constituent assembly. I would like to ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice if they are willing to consider that proposal.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Madam Speaker, I just answered that. I have not seen the resolutions adopted over the weekend in any detail, but I am prepared to gamble that they are probably very sensitive and worth-while additions. I tell the hon. lady and her party that if they will support the resolution as it is before the House, provided we accept these amendments, then I think we have a good bargain. Would she do it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR AMENDMENTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my further supplementary question is to the Minister of Justice, now that the Prime Minister has given that reply. As I understand it, these resolutions that have been put forward—

An hon. Member: Weaseling in.

Miss MacDonald: —by the women's conference will now be considered by the Government of Canada. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if, when he rises in his place tomorrow afternoon in 24 hours' time, he will say to the House which of those resolutions the government will be prepared to support.

An hon. Member: Take them one by one.

• (1420)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think the Prime Minister put it very well. If the hon. member thinks these amendments are important for women, she should be ready to say she wants them to be incorporated in the Constitution, and not vote against them in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I am not very impressed with that kind of argument because we have had the same problems with respect to aboriginal rights. Hon. members opposite were all in favour of enshrining aboriginal rights in the Constitution, but after the Indians had gone they said there should be no entrenchment unless all the premiers agree. Some of the premiers have already said that they do not want to have any charter incorporated in the Constitution.

If the opposition want to have those rights entrenched in the new Canadian Constitution, they should make up their minds and say they will support our activities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, quite obviously there is a division of opinion. At one moment members of the government vote against a motion under Standing Order 43, and then the next moment we are told that rights are negotiable.

My question arises from the conference at the weekend, and it is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that this conference was representative of every province, the regions, the territories, and all political persuasions. In light of the fact that the meeting was virtually unanimous in demanding that the minister responsible for the status of women be relieved of his duties and, second, that the advisory council report directly to Parliament, will the Prime Minister now act on the wishes of the women of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I understand that the wishes of the women of Canada have been expressed in the resolution to which the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands referred.

Miss MacDonald: The resignation of your minister.

Mr. Trudeau: If hon. members opposite are serious, they should support the position of the meeting at the weekend. That position was that this group of women would support patriation with an amending charter if we put certain amendments in. So I tell the Tory party, come on, listen to the women, help us get the charter as they want it and help us put these amendments in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister will know, once he is briefed, that the conference dealt not only with the provisions of the charter and the constitutional proposals but that it also addressed itself to the credibility of the instrument which advises the government on matters relating to women. My question was not answered. Will the Prime Minister act to request a change of ministerial responsibility, and will he respond with respect to whether the council will report to this chamber? Will the Prime Minister agree to the provision of a review group to report to Parliament by July 1, telling how the credibility of the council can be restored?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I say let us get the charter first. Let us entrench the rights of women, and let us have the support of the Tory party.

Miss MacDonald: Chicken.

Mr. Clark: Nothing is important but your own obsession.

STATUS OF WOMEN

RESTRUCTURING OF ADVISORY COUNCIL

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I wish to preface my question by saying that I was delighted to hear the Prime Minister say that he would accept these amendments. All the amendments but one were proposed by the New Democratic Party in the constitutional committee. All but two of the amendments suggested at the weekend, the Tories voted against.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Miss Jewett: I would like, therefore, to pursue another matter with the minister responsible for the status of women. Has the minister now seriously considered a matter which was discussed broadly over the weekend, that is, the restructuring of the advisory council? Has he considered asking for the resignations of the three vice-presidents? Has he considered restructuring the council and having it report directly to Parliament?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I plan to meet with a number of representatives of women's organizations this afternoon.

Mr. Nielsen: Lots of luck.

An hon. Member: Keep your back to the wall.

Mr. Axworthy: I thank the hon. member for his good wishes. We plan to meet with representatives of these groups to talk about different recommendations and points of view concerning the advisory council, and I am looking forward to their constructive recommendations in that regard.

Miss Jewett: Would the minister also look into the question of giving us the assurance that the council, as restructured, will be a permanently funded body and will be created by statute rather than order in council?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, there has never been any question in the mind of this government about the continuation of the council. Some question has been posed by certain former members of the council concerning that, but it has never been a question so far as we are concerned. We think that the council plays a very important role in this country. It represents women's points of view and it puts out some very good research to which this government has responded over the last several months in bringing about practical accomplishments rather than a lot of rhetoric. So we have a very high regard for the council, we think it could be improved, and we are meeting with women's groups to see that it will be improved.

• (1425)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: The minister responded to the wish of the Canadian women by getting the council to cancel or postpone a conference. That is how he responded. I should like to ask the minister a final question. Since the council was not representative of all Canadian women, will he ensure that all groups of women in Canada—and I am, in particular, looking at women in the labour movement, immigrant women and native women—are going to be represented on the restructured council?

Mr. Axworthy: It would certainly be my interest to see that the broadest range of points of view is represented on the council but, as the hon. member recognizes, in many cases there are hundreds of points of view. There is no monolithic point of view so far as women are concerned, as we have seen. There is a wide variety of points of views concerning all kinds of matters. What we are trying to get is those individuals who can apply the best judgment possible. But the council has been reflective of a pretty broad range. We will see if it can be improved, and if there are ways in which we can do that, then we will respond to the recommendations we hear this afternoon. But I would say, Madam Speaker, that I would like to listen to those points of view before I make any definite commitments, because the point of holding these consultations is to hear the points of view before making up our minds.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

REACTION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister, in a press conference following his recent visit to Washington, stated that the U.S. administration was being kept closely informed of the progress of the National Energy Program and was quite satisfied with the way things are going. Subsequent to that, a U.S. official is quoted as saying that the United States administration is not satisfied with the National Energy Program and has made representations to that effect. Would the minister clarify for the House today who was speaking the correct words on this, was it himself at his press conference, or was it the U.S. official?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, in my comments I was referring to the process of consultation which had been established—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: —and the fact that the U.S. government seemed to find it very satisfactory. In fact, my understanding up to the present is that, so far as the substance of the legislation is concerned, there are no offsetting difficulties. Their concern, as I understand it, is about what may happen in the future as a result of the regulations. When we are dealing with the imponderables in the future, there cannot be much dialogue about it at present.

PROCUREMENT POLICIES—POSSIBLE CONFLICT WITH GATT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I do not think it was at all clear at the minister's press conference that what he has said just now is, in fact, the accurate way of stating it.

I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. U.S. officials are quoted as saying that they were told by Ottawa that the National Energy Program proposal in relation to procurement was expressed in language which was directed for domestic consumption only, and that the government intended to abide by its treaty commitments under GATT. I should like to ask the minister if this is another means of saying one thing to people in Canada and another thing to people in other governments. What is the basis on which the government is going to implement the procurement policies under the National Energy Program in a way that will not be contrary to the agreements which Canada has under GATT?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member is raising this question since he is a member of the parliamentary Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works which is currently considering the bill on the Canada lands. In that bill there is a very, very specific reference to the fact that in the future, in order to get leases on Canada lands, the applicants will have to give very firm commitments that they will undertake certain work commitments and, in addition, that they will take into account Canadian suppliers and people who can provide Canadian services. This is right in the act itself. There is nothing wishy-washy about it. It is quite clear; it is on the record. As a matter of fact it is in legislation which has been before the House and is now before the parliamentary committee. So, it is all there for everybody to see. Once more, I am surprised that my friend has not seen it yet.

• (1430)

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I am fully aware that this is provided for under the bill, but the point of the matter is that the United States is concerned it will be implemented contrary to our obligations under GATT, as stated in this press conference. How will this be implemented in a way which will not contravene our treaty requirements under GATT?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, we have already had discussions about this with American officials. We stated very clearly that we believe our policy in this regard to be in accordance with our GATT commitments, and that, as concerns this particular question, the then minister of finance had tabled in the House agreements which clearly indicated that Canada was reserving the right to implement special policies for natural resources in view of the particular situation of Canada in this regard. Indeed, this was also stated at the international conference on this matter.

ENERGY

PROGRESS OF COLD LAKE PROJECT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Recently in Calgary the minister indicated that the Cold Lake project in northeastern Alberta would go ahead in probably one, two or even three years. Later in northeastern Alberta the minister indicated that there would be an energy agreement within months, thereby allowing the Cold Lake project to proceed within months. Which statement may we accept as the truth?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, if it depended only on the Government of Canada, the Cold Lake project would go on tomorrow, but unfortunately it does not depend only on the Government of Canada.

Mr. Wilson: That is not true.

Mr. Lalonde: I have indicated our position in this regard. Our view is that the Cold Lake project and the tar sands project at the present time are being unnecessarily suspended, delayed, or even threatened. It will not be helpful to the people of Alberta, it will not be helpful to self-sufficiency in this country, and it is not needed by Alberta to reach an agreement on energy with the Government of Canada. We feel this particular decision by the government of Alberta is not one which is necessary in the circumstances, and we regret it—

Mr. Andre: Nor is the National Energy Program.

Mr. Lalonde: —but there is not much we can do about it. I indicated that as far as we are concerned we certainly hope to have an agreement very soon.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, obviously the minister did not answer my question. He made two separate statements, and I just wanted to know which one we could accept as the truth. I should like to ask him a supplementary question. Is the federal government now willing to sit down with the producing provinces and truly negotiate? In other words, is it prepared to negotiate the export tax on natural gas? Is it prepared to negotiate the wellhead tax on the production of petroleum? Is the federal government prepared to show a real willingness to negotiate by indicating that these two items in the national energy policy are indeed negotiable?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the federal government indicated soon after the budget that we were ready to negotiate in good faith with the governments of the producing provinces, particularly the government of Alberta, and that we were not setting out any ultimatum or any pre-conditions. There seems to be an attitude on the other side to set pre-conditions. We are not setting any pre-conditions, we are not eliminating anything. But I must say that the negotiations up to now have been proceeding at an extremely slow pace. There have been only two meetings of deputy ministers, and I think a couple of meetings of middle management officials. I read in the press a statement by senior Alberta officials saying that they would not be in a position to make any report to their provincial government before mid-March and that, therefore, it would be unlikely there would be any serious negotiations before then. We indicated that we were ready to start sitting down at any time the government of Alberta was willing to start negotiations seriously. Up to now the government of Alberta has indicated that it wanted those discussions only at the official level. We respect that wish, although we feel it is indeed proceeding very slowly.

THE ECONOMY

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING INTEREST RATES

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. In December Mr. Bouey, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, said:

> We do know that we don't want interest rates as high as those in the United States.

Just ten days ago the deputy chief economist for the bank indicated that the Bank of Canada rate was staying high, above 17 per cent, and that the bank was keeping it there in order to return rates to what he described as the traditional levels above the United States rate. Is this the new policy of the government, to maintain interest rates for an indefinite period of time above those in the United States? I remind the minister that they have been at 17 per cent for over ten weeks and that there is no sign of them coming down. If that is the policy of the government, would he please tell us whether the government is reconsidering the possibility of carrying out tax policies and tax concessions which would lessen the impact of high interest rates on the average consumer and on those people who are so hard hit by the rates which apparently have become a permanent policy of the government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in reply to the first part of the hon. member's question, to my knowledge it is certainly not the policy of the governor of the Bank of Canada to proceed in the way described by the hon. member, namely, to keep the rates higher than those prevailing in the United States. As the hon. member knows, for considerable periods of time rates in Canada have been considerably lower than those prevailing in the United States. Certainly that trend was not bucked or opposed by the governor of the bank, let alone the government.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, the fact remains that American rates have started to come down, Canadian rates have stayed exactly where they have been for a very long period of time and, as the minister knows, the American tax system is different than our own; they provide concessions which our system does not provide.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: On Friday the bank announced that it would turn the screws even tighter on the money supply. This policy has been continued since 1975, and I remind the minister that since that time inflation and unemployment have gone up. So, clearly something is not working the way it is supposed to work. In light of those facts, my supplementary question to the minister is: would he not agree that the effect of these tighter monetary policies in other countries—and indeed in our experience in Canada in the last five years—has been that we have been able to squeeze real growth and jobs out of the economy but we have not managed to squeeze inflation out of the economy? Would the minister agree that this has been the experience not only in Canada, but also in Britain, France, and other countries which have attempted this policy as well?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, that is quite a large question on the orders of the day. I will attempt to answer it by saying that if the hon. member wants a simple one word answer, it would be no. His conclusions are not right.

THE ENVIRONMENT

NIAGARA RIVER SOURCE OF GREAT LAKES POLLUTION

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment, I should like to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. It is based upon an article which appeared in a Toronto paper yesterday under the heading "Act On Niagara Pollution". In view of the fact that the International Joint Commission which oversees the Canada-United States Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement has pinpointed the Niagara River as a dangerous contributor to the levels of organic, chemical and metal wastes in the Great Lakes, would the parliamentary secretary share with the House the attempts of this government and of the government of the United States to clean up known sources of contaimination and to prevent new ones?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the IJC released its report last Wednesday, February 11. It is interesting to note that the report follows rather closely the position which the minister and I have taken in so far as the Niagara Peninsula pollution is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1440)

Mr. Simmons: I invite hon. members to read the report and the minister's statements.

To respond to the member's question, as far as action is concerned we have made our views known to the United States, especially in regard to the proposed discharge of effluents from SCA of New York. We have taken the position that effluents should not be discharged until certain problems upstream have been remedied.

With respect to the subject of studies, which the commission also addresses, we have already put in place a federal-state-provincial committee which met last week in Burlington on this very subject.

NORTH-SOUTH RELATIONS

STATEMENT BY NON-ALIGNED NATIONS—DEVELOPMENT OF CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is now one month since the Prime Minister returned from his world trip in which he examined North-South questions. In that time he has made no statement to the House, nor has he said in this crucial year of summits on the North-South question what the Canadian policy will be. Will the Prime Minister respond, in his capacity as host of the economic Summit in Ottawa next July, to the charge made by the non-aligned conference of 94 nations in Delhi, as reported in the New York Times yesterday, in which they denounced the industrialized countries for a "negative and intransigent attitude" on the North-South question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, obviously that is a blanket charge made by a block of nations. It certainly cannot apply in any detail to different members of the North-South countries. They all have different performances, and some are better than others. I do not think the blanket charge is one which can be accepted.

Mr. Roche: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister neglected to indicate to the House whether he intends to make a full statement on the North-South question so that Members of Parliament can understand where Canada is going with regard to this question.

With respect to the North-South task force report, which was tabled in this House exactly two months ago today, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to take that report, which has 38 recommendations, and make it the basis of a Canadian policy which can be pronounced and acted upon in this year of summits on the North-South question?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I stated before that this was an excellent report and that its recommendations were being considered very seriously by the officials, the minister and myself. Certainly many elements of that report will influence this side of the House toward the kind of action we would like to see come to a head at the time of the Ottawa Summit, or perhaps before the North-South Summit. I only hope that the hon. member's party will be as supportive of it as we on this side of the House will be.

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR REFERENDUM ON COMPONENTS OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It arises as a consequence of some of the apparently conciliatory statements which were made earlier. The Prime Minister will know that the constitutional resolution now before this House again contains a provision with respect to a referendum. Will the Prime Minister divide the various items of his constitutional package, namely, the patriation, the amending formula, and his alleged charter of rights and freedoms—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Gamble: —and submit the same to the people in a referendum so that, indeed, the people of Canada can have an input in determining this very principal and fundamental law of the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I apologize, since there was some noise, but if I understand the hon. member correctly he is suggesting that we hold a referendum in order to justify the government's action. Is this his suggestion?

Mr. Gamble: Madam Speaker, it is regrettable that I must repeat my question for the purpose of receiving an initial answer to it.

My question to the Prime Minister is simply this: Is he prepared to take his constitutional resolution, divide it into the three component elements of which it currently consists—those three elements which now create such animosity and acrimony across our country—and submit them to the same test that he would ask of future governments when employing a referendum procedure to any constitutional amendment which might come forward, so that the people of Canada can vote directly in a democratic fashion on each one of these three packages before his resolution is dispatched to the United Kingdom for imposition on the people of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is changing the terms of reference as he states his question. He points out correctly that there is a provision for a referendum to make a choice between various amending formulas, if there is not agreement. If he would suggest that there be a referendum of that nature to accept or reject a charter once we had the Constitution back home, I might consider it.

Mr. Siddon: That is not what he said.

Mr. Trudeau: Exactly, that is not what he said. But that is in the resolution now. He should not argue that I should do with the referendum on the amending formula the same thing as I would do with the resolution on the charter.

Madam Speaker: I must allow the hon. member for North York a very brief supplementary since he had to repeat his first question.

Mr. Gamble: It is curious that in 1979 the Prime Minister made these very statements after allegedly failing to reach some agreement with provincial premiers. He said that "failing that we will bring it back and consult the Canadian people in a referendum, and that is the way we will do it". He said that we will at least be able to have a Canadian Constitution made in Canada for Canadians.

It is very clear that in making those statements the Prime Minister was talking about national unity in 1979. Has he now changed his mind and is he now pursuing a course of national destruction? Is that why he will not follow a policy of employing this referendum program before the charter, inclusive of all its provisions, is sent to the United Kingdom for imposition on the people of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, it seems to me the hon. member talks a bit lightly of national destruction. The picture we have now is of six provinces opposing this parliamentary resolution in the courts. They, too, fear national destruction. The six of them have obviously not been able to agree even among themselves. I was not present to sort of direct those debates. There are six provinces opposing this resolution before Parliament in the courts. These six had several months to come to some kind of consensus. They even failed in reaching a decision as to whether or not to go to London. It seems to me that demonstrates the righteousness of the case before Parliament now.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Trudeau: What could destroy the country is the fact that we would fail once again, after 53 years of effort, to bring back the Constitution to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MERCURY POLLUTION—COMPENSATION FOR GRASSY NARROWS AND WHITE DOG INDIAN BANDS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. For the past two years the Grassy Narrows and White Dog Indian bands have been negotiating with the Ontario government to receive compensation for mercury pollution from the operations of Reed Paper Company. Now, with the help of $5.2 million from DREE, the Ontario government wants to push a road through the area. This road would undercut these negotiations, it would open the area to exploitation by outside interests, and it would completely bypass the interests of the Indian people. Has the minister received representation from within his department urging that he contact the minister responsible for DREE to make certain that DREE funds will not be used until negotiations have been successfully completed with the Indian people? Has the Minister of Indian Affairs met with the minister responsible for DREE to make this request?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the matter has been studied as a result of representations made by officials in my department. I would be prepared to talk first with Ontario, if necessary, and then talk with my colleague.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, will the minister make clear to this House that he is prepared to do his duty to protect the interests of the Indian people and make certain that federal funds will not be used to undermine the Grassy Narrows and White Dog Indian people in their attempt to obtain compensation for the negligence of the Ontario government?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, I am certainly prepared to do my duty as far as the Indian people are concerned. Before agreeing with allegations of the kind the hon. member is making I really ought to talk to those concerned in the province of Ontario. I will do that first and respond to the hon. member in greater detail later.

THE CONSTITUTION

INCLUSION OF METIS UNDER DEFINITION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The resolution on the Constitution includes a provision which indicates a dramatic shift in government policy to include Metis under the definition of aboriginal rights. Has the minister or his department initiated any discussions with provincial governments which have had to take responsibility for the Metis in the absence of any federal involvement, so that there may be an immediate transition of responsibility regardless of what happens to the Constitution resolution, and that there will be no reduction of services to the Metis in this country?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I think that the Metis, as members of the native organizations and as native peoples of this country, are very happy with developments with respect to the Constitution. I certainly do not see how that affects the obligation of the provinces and the work the provinces are doing in terms of providing adequate services to the Metis people, and I hope that will continue.

Mr. Korchinski: Madam Speaker, I put it to the minister that the inclusion of Metis is window dressing and there is going to be no assumption of responsibility for providing housing, welfare, health care and so on. This is something that the Indians of this country assumed and expected to get from the government under the terms of the treaties.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The provision in the Constitution refers to rights. If the provinces do not believe the Metis have rights they can say so. In the meantime, what I am saying is that they have an obligation to provide services to citizens within the provinces and they should continue to provide them to the Metis people. This should not affect that situation.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PROTECTION FOR FILM INDUSTRY INVESTORS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The minister will know that many Canadian investors have lost money on the Canadian movie industry pursuant to the tax policy which encourages participation. Questions are now being raised about the prospectus, the marketing and other factors affecting films made in Canada. Is the government aware of these concerns? Has anyone contacted Jarnac or the film consortium of Canada or Mr. David Roffey to see if everything is in order? There are films which have cost millions of dollars and which apparently have not yet been marketed, with very serious results for the Canadian investors who are becoming restless.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I shall take this question as notice.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for his interest. Will he check to see the extent to which financial institutions are now going after Canadian investors to repay contingent liabilities that apparently were not made sufficiently clear when these people were encouraged to invest in Canadian firms? Would he see to what extent this is going on and if the prospectus and contracts and inducements were all in order?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, Madam Speaker, I will check and report back to the hon. member as soon as possible.

THE CONSTITUTION

INVESTIGATION OF ACTIVITIES OF BRITISH HIGH COMMISSIONER

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will recall that on February 5, when he was prompted by the Leader of the New Democratic Party about reports that the British High Commissioner had attempted to influence Members of Parliament and other Canadians with respect to the Constitution, he replied that if these reports were true it would be completely unacceptable to the government and, in addition, he indicated that he was investigating these reports. He has declined to make a statement on two occasions in the House. Today, would he inform the House whether there were any subversive activities found by the government? If so, what they were, and what else has his investigation uncovered?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, following questions by the hon. member for Oshawa, inquiries were made into certain activities of the British High Commissioner. These inquiries, conducted with the aid of officials, concerned contacts that Sir John Ford had with elected representatives at the federal and provincial levels. The information obtained has been shared with the British authorities in London, through diplomatic channels. The Canadian government has made and will make no recommendations to the British government. It has been known for some time that Sir John Ford was scheduled to retire soon. His successor has now been named, and the Canadian government welcomed the appointment on January 27.

The Canadian government has absolutely no objection to anything the High Commissioner may have done to represent the position of the British government in relation to its interests, or to communicate his understanding of the situation in the British parliament. This is an entirely appropriate type of diplomatic activity.

Miss MacDonald: Swallow yourself.

Mr. MacGuigan: In another context, the Prime Minister stated the government's position on such matters to the House on December 16, 1977. Part of the High Commissioner's activity, of course, was of this type.

However, there are indications that the High Commissioner went beyond these normal functions into internal political matters. I am assured that the High Commissioner has noted the views expressed in this House. I have also been informed that there is no intention on the part of the British government to intervene in affairs which are properly matters for Canadians. I now consider the matter closed.

FISHERIES

REFERENCE OF WEST COAST REGULATIONS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Would the minister be prepared, in light of developments in the last week, to have a reference made so that the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry could meet and consider the new regulations on the west coast?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I certainly have no objection to this issue being part of our discussions. I understand that the estimates will be brought before the House very soon. If there is an opportunity to discuss these matters, or to have briefings about them, I am perfectly open. I might say to the hon. member, on the other hand, that I would not want to mislead the House and allow the idea to spread that the decisions that were made, as difficult as they were, would be rescinded. What I have offered the sports fishing community is to suggest alternatives which would meet the same end as that hoped for, which is the conservation of chinook stocks.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, if the minister has no objection to the convening of that committee, I wonder if he would take steps now, before the estimates come forward, to make sure that the committee has an opportunity to meet and consider these two matters. Although he says he would not like to put the regulations that have been drawn up on hold, I wonder if he would reconsider that for a two-week period, that is, put them on hold or in abeyance until there is an opportunity for the committee to consider the matter and report back to the House.

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, some of the regulations have to go into effect within a few days or a very short time. It may be difficult to hold them in abeyance. I might say to the hon. member that I am perfectly open to have a discussion with all interested members on this issue. I think this is a case where all participants in the industry want to make sure that we are fair. I am certainly interested in that. I might say to him that the best way to achieve this is not through Standing Order 43. I hope we can have conversations that will allow us to move quickly on this.

TRADE

CONDITIONS OF GOVERNMENT'S AID TO COAL EXPORTS FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA TO JAPAN

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who answers in the House with respect to negotiations between the federal government and the province of British Columbia regarding the coal deal which involves the national railway and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. In reply to a question in the House last week the minister said that the federal government would assure that it would exercise all its jurisdictions in terms of socioeconomic conditions and the environment with respect to this monumental and important project. Could the minister tell the House today just what jurisdiction has been reserved to be exercised by the federal government and whether any strings are attached as a result of federal financial involvement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I really do not see the purpose of the question. The interest of the Department of Transport is in the operation of the port itself. In that respect the National Harbours Board and the Department of Transport are exercising their full jurisdiction. There are other matters involved such as, for example, the environment. This is a divided jurisdiction where the province does most of the work but where the federal government has some jurisdiction regarding environment in the Port of Prince Rupert. I fail to see other points. The railway is a federal responsibility and we are attending to it. Are there any particular jurisdictions that my hon. friend would like to point out to me?

● (1500)

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, I am more concerned with the activity around the mine. It is unfortunate that we do not have a minister in the House who can answer, and that the comments of the minister in the other place have to be interpreted by the Minister of Transport. He said in a statement that the federal government would exercise a number of jurisdictions to assure that certain socioeconomic conditions are met with respect to the mine, apart from the port which has to be developed at the same time. The minister knows the federal government will be significantly involved not only in the port but in other infrastructure procurements. Those are the jurisdictions on which I would like the minister to comment.

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, I will have a discussion with my confrère who is responsible for those jurisdictions. I just thought of another one, namely, the protection of Indians. This is a federal responsibility and there will be particular orientation toward that in the final agreement. However, I will get the full list and communicate with my hon. friend.

MR. SIDDON—1981 HERRING ROE MANAGEMENT PLAN—LICENSING RESTRICTIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid on the Table the thirty-ninth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—S.O. 43 MOTION OF MISS CARNEY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There might be a disposition in the House, by unanimous consent, to revert to motions moved under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to deal with the motion raised by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). The only nay I heard the first time was from the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau), which was not voiced the second time around. I am sure the House would now give unanimous consent with respect to that Standing Order 43 motion concerning women and the Constitution.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry but I did hear noes, and that closes the matter.

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—S.O. 43 MOTION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order which is much the same as the previous one. I did not hear any noes from the opposite side to my particular motion under Standing Order 43; if there were any they must have come from the far end of the room. I would suggest that if the motion were put again, we might have unanimous consent.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry but here again I did hear noes, so that finalizes the matter.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEVENS—STATEMENT BY MR. GRAY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, we can all see that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is not in his place today. Could I continue my notice of wanting to raise a question of privilege on another day?

Madam Speaker: The hon. member's question of privilege may be deferred.

MR. DOMM—PATRIATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, as the troops become restless across Canada and as added thousands of petitions are coming in to offices of various members of Parliament, it gives me a great deal of pleasure today to present to this House of Commons a petition containing 2,689 signatures. These are to be added to the many thousands of signatures which have been collected from across Canada opposing this government's unilateral action of patriating the Constitution against the will of the majority of the people of Canada, along with a wish that this government consider patriating the Constitution with an acceptable amending formula to the various provinces of Canada. I respectfully submit this petition to this House.

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

On the order: Government notices of motions.

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

CONSIDÉRANT:

que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications, il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit:

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

S.O. 21(2)

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

Short title

4. This Act may be cited as the Canada Act.

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin, sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

Version française

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

Titre abrégé

4. Titre abrégé de la présente loi : Loi sur le Canada.

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires. — Détention ou emprisonnement

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération. — Arrestation ou détention

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement trouvé coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

Cruauté

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités.

Equality Rights

Droits à l'égalité

Equality before and under law and equal protection and benefit of law

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

Égalité devant la loi, égalité de bénéfice et protection égale de la loi

15. (1) La loi ne fait acception de personne et s'applique également à tous, et tous ont droit à la même protection et au même bénéfice de la loi, indépendamment de toute discrimination, notamment des discriminations fondées sur la race, l'origine nationale ou ethnique, la couleur, la religion, le sexe, l'âge ou les déficiences mentales ou physiques.

Affirmative action programs

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

Programmes de promotion sociale

S.O. 21(2)

Continuation of existing constitutional provisions

21. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any right, privilege or obligation with respect to the English and French languages, or either of them, that exists or is continued by virtue of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada.

Maintien en vigueur de certaines dispositions

21. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet, en ce qui a trait à la langue française ou anglaise ou à ces deux langues, de porter atteinte aux droits, privilèges ou obligations qui existent ou sont maintenus aux termes d'une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada.

Rights and privileges preserved

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

Droits préservés

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province,

Langue d'instruction

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province, ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Recours

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits et libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

PART V

INTERIM AMENDMENT PROCEDURE AND RULES FOR ITS REPLACEMENT

Interim procedure for amending Constitution of Canada

36. Until Part VI comes into force, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and by the legislative assembly or government of each province.

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

37. Until Part VI comes into force, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and by the legislative assembly or government of each province to which the amendment applies.

Amendments respecting certain language rights

38. (1) Notwithstanding section 40, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada

(a) adding a province as a province named in subsection 16(2), 17(2), 18(2), 19(2) or 20(2), or

(b) otherwise providing for any or all of the rights guaranteed or obligations imposed by any of those subsections to have application in a province to the extent and under the conditions stated in the amendment, may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and the legislative assembly of the province to which the amendment applies.

Initiation of amendment procedure

(2) The procedure for amendment prescribed by subsection (1) may be initiated only by the legislative assembly of the province to which the amendment applies.

Initiation of amendment procedures

39. (1) The procedures for amendment prescribed by sections 36 and 37 may be initiated either by the Senate or House of Commons or by the legislative assembly or government of a province.

PARTIE V

PROCÉDURE PROVISOIRE DE MODIFICATION ET RÈGLES DE REMPLACEMENT

Procédure provisoire de modification

36. Avant l'entrée en vigueur de la partie VI, la Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes et par l'assemblée législative ou le gouvernement de toutes les provinces.

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

37. Avant l'entrée en vigueur de la partie VI, les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement peuvent être modifiées par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes et par l'assemblée législative ou le gouvernement de chaque province à laquelle la modification s'applique.

Modification concernant certains droits linguistiques

38. (1) Par dérogation à l'article 40, toute modification de la Constitution du Canada :

a) soit portant insertion du nom d'une province aux paragraphes 16(2), 17(2), 18(2), 19(2) ou 20(2),

b) soit prévoyant l'application à une province, aux conditions précisées dans la modification, de tout ou partie des droits ou obligations visés à ces paragraphes, peut être prise par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de la province concernée.

Initiative de la procédure

(2) L'initiative de la procédure de modification visée au paragraphe (1) appartient à l'assemblée législative de la province concernée.

Initiative des procédures

39. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 36 et 37 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes, à l'assemblée législative d'une province ou au gouvernement de celle-ci.

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution made or other authorization given for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

Possibilité de révocation

(2) La résolution adoptée ou l'autorisation donnée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Limitation on use of interim amendment procedure

40. Sections 36 and 37 do not apply to an amendment to the Constitution of Canada where there is another provision in the Constitution for making the amendment, but the procedure prescribed by section 36 shall be used to amend the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and any provision for amending the Constitution, including this section.

Restriction du recours à la procédure provisoire

40. Les articles 36 et 37 ne s'appliquent pas aux cas de modification constitutionnelle pour lesquels une procédure différente est prévue par une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada. La procédure visée à l'article 36 s'impose toutefois pour modifier la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, ainsi que les dispositions relatives à la modification de la Constitution, y compris le présent article.

Coming into force of Part VI

41. Part VI shall come into force

(a) with or without amendment, on such day as may be fixed by proclamation issued pursuant to the procedure prescribed by section 36, or

(b) on the day that is two years after the day this Act, except Part VI, comes into force, whichever is the earlier day but, if a referendum is required to be held under subsection 42(3), Part VI shall come into force as provided in section 43.

Entrée en vigueur de la partie VI

41. La partie VI entre en vigueur à la première des dates suivantes :

a) avec ou sans modification, à la date fixée par proclamation prise conformément à la procédure visée à l'article 36;

b) deux ans après l'entrée en vigueur, exception faite de la partie VI, de la présente loi.

Il demeure entendu que, si la tenue d'un référendum s'impose conformément au paragraphe 42(3), la partie VI entre en vigueur conformément à l'article 43.

Provincial alternative procedure

42. (1) The legislative assemblies of seven or more provinces that have, according to the then latest general census, combined populations of at least eighty per cent of the population of all the provinces may make a single proposal to substitute for paragraph 45(1)(b) such alternative as they consider appropriate.

Proposition de remplacement

42. (1) Les assemblées législatives d'au moins sept provinces dont la population confondue représente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins quatre-vingts pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces peuvent présenter une proposition commune en vue de remplacer la procédure prévue à l'alinéa 45(1)b).

Procedure for perfecting alternative

(2) One copy of an alternative proposed under subsection (1) may be deposited with the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada by each proposing province within two years after this Act, except Part VI, comes into force but, prior to the expiration of that period, any province that has deposited a copy may withdraw that copy.

Possibilité de mise au point

(2) Chaque province concernée peut déposer le texte de la proposition visée au paragraphe (1) auprès du directeur général des élections du Canada dans les deux ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur, exception faite de la partie VI, de la présente loi, étant entendu qu'elle peut retirer le texte au cours de cette période.

Referendum

(3) Where copies of an alternative have been deposited as provided by subsection (2) and, on the day that is two years after this Act, except Part VI, comes into force, at least seven copies remain deposited by provinces that have, according to the then latest

Référendum

(3) Dans les cas où, deux ans après l'entrée en vigueur, exception faite de la partie VI, de la présente loi, au moins sept provinces remplissant les conditions démographiques visées au paragraphe (1) n'ont pas retiré leur texte, le gouvernement du Canada

general census, combined populations of at least eighty per cent of the population of all the provinces, the government of Canada shall cause a referendum to be held within two years after that day to determine whether

(a) paragraph 45(1)(b) or any alternative thereto approved by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and deposited with the Chief Electoral Officer at least ninety days prior to the day on which the referendum is held, or

(b) the alternative proposed by the provinces,

shall be adopted.

fait tenir, dans les deux années suivant l'échéance des deux ans, un référendum pour déterminer laquelle des procédures suivantes sera adoptée :

a) celle qui est prévue à l'alinéa 45(1)b) ou l'éventuelle procédure de remplacement adoptée par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes et dont le texte est déposé auprès du directeur général des élections au moins quatre-vingt-dix jours avant la date du référendum;

b) celle qui fait l'objet de la proposition des provinces.

Coming into force of Part VI where referendum held

43. Where a referendum is held under subsection 42(3), a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada shall be issued within six months after the date of the referendum bringing Part VI into force with such modifications, if any, as are necessary to incorporate the proposal approved by a majority of the persons voting at the referendum and with such other changes as are reasonably consequential on the incorporation of that proposal.

43. Dans les six mois suivant la date du référendum visé au paragraphe 42(3), une proclamation sous le grand sceau du Canada est prise en vue de faire entrer en vigueur la partie VI, éventuellement modifiée dans la mesure nécessaire pour incorporer la proposition approuvée par la majorité des votants et pour intégrer les autres aménagements justifiés qui en découlent.

Entrée en vigueur de la partie VI après référendum

Right to vote

44. (1) Every citizen of Canada has, subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society, the right to vote in a referendum held under subsection 42(3).

44. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote au référendum visé au paragraphe 42(3); ce droit ne peut être restreint que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Droit de vote

Establishment of Referendum Rules Commission

(2) If a referendum is required to be held under subsection 42(3), a Referendum Rules Commission shall forthwith be established by commission issued under the Great Seal of Canada consisting of

(a) the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada, who shall be chairman of the Commission;

(b) a person appointed by the Governor General in Council; and

(c) a person appointed by the Governor General in Council

(i) on the recommendation of the governments of a majority of the provinces, or

(2) Dès que s'impose la tenue du référendum visé au paragraphe 42(3), il est constitué, par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, une commission référendaire composée :

a) du directeur général des élections du Canada, président;

b) d'une personne nommée par le gouverneur général en conseil;

c) d'une personne nommée par le gouverneur général en conseil :

(i) soit sur la recommandation des gouvernements de la majorité des provinces,

(ii) soit, si les gouvernements de la majorité des provinces ne présentent pas

Constitution de la commission référendaire

(ii) if the governments of a majority of the provinces do not recommend a candidate within thirty days after the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada requests such a recommendation, on the recommendation of the Chief Justice of Canada from among persons recommended by the governments of the provinces within thirty days after the expiration of the first mentioned thirty day period or, if none are so recommended, from among such persons as the Chief Justice considers qualified.

de candidat dans les trente jours suivant la demande que leur en fait le directeur général des élections du Canada, sur la recommandation du juge en chef du Canada, le candidat ainsi présenté étant choisi parmi les personnes recommandées par les gouvernements des provinces dans les trente jours suivant l'expiration du premier délai de trente jours ou, faute de recommandation, parmi les personnes que le juge en chef estime qualifiées.

Duty of Commission

(3) A Referendum Rules Commission shall cause rules for the holding of a referendum under subsection 42(3) approved by a majority of the Commission to be laid before Parliament within sixty days after the Commission is established or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first ten days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

Mandat de la commission

(3) Dans les soixante jours suivant sa constitution, la commission référendaire fait déposer devant le Parlement les règles applicables à la tenue du référendum visé au paragraphe 42(3), qu'elle aura approuvées par décision majoritaire. Si le Parlement ne siège pas, ce dépôt s'effectue dans les dix premier jours de séance ultérieurs.

Rules for referendum

(4) Subject to subsection (1) and taking into consideration any rules approved by a Referendum Rules Commission in accordance with subsection (3), Parliament may enact laws respecting the rules applicable to the holding of a referendum under subsection 42(3).

Réglementation du référendum

(4) Sous réserve du paragraphe (1) et compte tenu des règles déposées conformément au paragraphe (3), le Parlement peut légiférer pour réglementer la tenue du référendum visé au paragraphe 42(3).

Proclamation

(5) If Parliament does not enact laws under subsection (4) respecting the rules applicable to the holding of a referendum within sixty days after receipt of a recommendation from a Referendum Rules Commission, the rules recommended by the Commission shall forthwith be brought into force by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Proclamation

(5) Faute par le Parlement d'avoir légiféré, conformément au paragraphe (4), dans le délai de soixante jours suivant le dépôt des règles visées au paragraphe (3), celles-ci sont mises immédiatement en vigueur par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Computation of period

(6) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the sixty day period referred to in subsection (5).

Computation du délai

(6) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (5), ne sont pas comptés les jours pendant lesquels le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Rules to have force of law

(7) Subject to subsection (1), rules made under this section have the force of law and prevail over other laws made under the Constitution of Canada to the extent of any inconsistency.

Valeur de force de loi des règles

la Chambre des communes, à autoriser la proclamation mentionnée au paragraphe 45(1).

Authorization of referendum

(2) A referendum referred to in subsection (1) shall be held where directed by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada, which proclamation may be issued where

(a) an amendment to the Constitution of Canada has been authorized under paragraph 45(1)(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons;

(b) the requirements of paragraph 45(1)(b) in respect of the proposed amendment have not been satisfied within twelve months after the passage of the resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons; and

(c) the issue of the proclamation has been authorized by the Governor General in Council.

Autorisation de référendum

(2) L'ordre de tenue du référendum mentionné au paragraphe (1) est donné par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada. Cette proclamation est assujettie aux conditions suivantes :

a) le Sénat et la Chambre des communes ont, conformément à l'alinéa 45(1)a), adopté des résolutions autorisant la modification de la Constitution du Canada;

b) les dispositions de l'alinéa 45(1)b) applicables au projet de modification n'ont pas été observées dans les douze mois suivant l'adoption des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

c) le gouverneur général en conseil a autorisé la proclamation.

Time limit for referendum

(3) A proclamation issued under subsection (2) in respect of a referendum shall provide for the referendum to be held within two years after the expiration of the twelve month period referred to in paragraph (b) of that subsection.

Délai de tenue du référendum

(3) La proclamation visée au paragraphe (2) fixe la tenue du référendum pour une date comprise dans les deux ans qui suivent l'expiration du délai de douze mois mentionné à l'alinéa b) de ce paragraphe.

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

47. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

47. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement peuvent être modifiées par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province à laquelle la modification s'applique.

Amendments respecting certain language rights

48. (1) Notwithstanding section 54, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada

(a) adding a province as a province named in subsection 16(2), 17(2), 18(2), 19(2) or 20(2), or

(b) otherwise providing for any or all of the rights guaranteed or obligations imposed by any of those subsections to have application in a province to the extent and under the conditions stated in the amendment,

Modification concernant certains droits linguistiques

48. (1) Par dérogation à l'article 54, toute modification de la Constitution du Canada :

a) soit portant insertion du nom d'une province aux paragraphes 16(2), 17(2), 18(2), 19(2) ou 20(2),

b) soit prévoyant l'application à une province, aux conditions précisées dans la modification, de tout ou partie des droits ou obligations visés à ces paragraphes, ces dans les trente jours suivant l'expiration du premier délai de trente jours ou, faute de recommandation, parmi les personnes que le juge en chef estime qualifiées.

Duty of Commission

(3) A Referendum Rules Commission shall cause rules for the holding of a referendum under section 46 approved by a majority of the Commission to be laid before Parliament within sixty days after the Commission is established or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first ten days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

Mandat de la commission

(3) Dans les soixante jours suivant sa constitution, la commission référendaire fait déposer devant le Parlement les règles applicables à la tenue du référendum visé à l'article 46, qu'elle aura approuvées par décision majoritaire. Si le Parlement ne siège pas, ce dépôt s'effectue dans les dix premier jours de séance ultérieurs.

Rules for referendum

(4) Subject to subsection (1) and taking into consideration any rules approved by a Referendum Rules Commission in accordance with subsection (3), Parliament may enact laws respecting the rules applicable to the holding of a referendum under section 46.

Réglementation du référendum

(4) Sous réserve du paragraphe (1) et compte tenu des règles déposées conformément au paragraphe (3), le Parlement peut légiférer pour réglementer la tenue du référendum visé à l'article 46.

Proclamation

(5) If Parliament does not enact laws under subsection (4) respecting the rules applicable to the holding of a referendum within sixty days after receipt of a recommendation from a Referendum Rules Commission, the rules recommended by the Commission shall forthwith be brought into force by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Proclamation

(5) Faute par le Parlement d'avoir légiféré, conformément au paragraphe (4), dans le délai de soixante jours suivant le dépôt des règles visées au paragraphe (3), celles-ci sont mises immédiatement en vigueur par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Computation of period

(6) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the sixty day period referred to in subsection (5).

Computation du délai

(6) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (5), ne sont pas comptés les jours pendant lesquels le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Rules to have force of law

(7) Subject to subsection (1), rules made under this section have the force of law and prevail over other laws made under the Constitution of Canada to the extent of any inconsistency.

Valeur de force de loi des règles

(7) Sous réserve du paragraphe (1), les règles arrêtées en vertu du présent article ont force de loi et l'emportent sur les dispositions incompatibles de toute autre règle de droit fondée sur la Constitution du Canada.

Limitation on use of general amendment procedure

51. (1) The procedures prescribed by section 45, 46 or 47 do not apply to an amendment to the Constitution of Canada where there is another provision in the Constitution for making the amendment, but the procedures prescribed by section 45 or 46 shall, nevertheless, be used to amend any provision for amending the Constitution, including this section.

Restriction du recours à la procédure normale de modification

51. (1) Les articles 45, 46 ou 47 ne s'appliquent pas aux cas de modification constitutionnelle pour lesquels une procédure différente est prévue par une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada. La procédure visée aux articles 45 ou 46 s'impose toutefois pour modifier les dispositions relatives à la modification de la Constitution, y compris le présent article.

S.O. 21(2)

Idem

(2) The procedures prescribed by section 45 or 46 do not apply in respect of an amendment referred to in section 47.

(2) Les procédures prévues aux articles 45 ou 46 ne s'appliquent pas à la modification visée à l'article 47. Idem

Amendments by Parliament

52. Subject to section 54, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate or House of Commons.

52. Sous réserve de l'article 54, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat et à la Chambre des communes. Modification par le Parlement

Amendments by provincial legislatures

53. Subject to section 54, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

53. Sous réserve de l'article 54, la législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de celle-ci. Modification par les législatures provinciales

Matters requiring amendment under general amendment procedure

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

PARTIE VII

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

56. (1) The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

56. (1) La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par l'insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to phe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation : Taxation des ressources

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe. «Production primaire»

Saint John	3.6 per cent
Moncton	5.2 per cent

COMMUNITY SERVICES CONTRIBUTION PROGRAM

Question No. 1,560—Mr. Howie:

For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1980, what amount was expended under the provisions of the Community Services Contribution Program for the operation of the program in (a) New Brunswick (b) Fredericton, New Brunswick?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

(a) For the first program year (1979) $4.2 million has been allocated to Community Services Contribution Program (CSCP) projects in New Brunswick. Payments on eligible projects for a given program year are made in the following fiscal year. The first payment on 1979 projects, under the terms of the operating agreement on CSCP signed with New Brunswick, could not occur until May 1, 1980, and further payments would be made quarterly thereafter until March 31, 1981, which is the closing date for the first program year.

(b) For the first program year (1979) $200,000 has been allocated to CSCP projects in the city of Fredericton.

Order Paper Questions

STRATHCONA TRUST FUND

Question No. 1,899—Mr. Stewart:

1. On what date was the Strathcona Trust Fund established and what are its aims and purposes?

2. What was the initial funding in the account and what is the present amount?

3. (a) How are funds disbursed from the account (b) to whom have funds been disbursed and for what reason?

4. Who are the trustees of the fund and what remuneration, if any, is paid to each?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. The Strathcona Trust Fund was established on August 13, 1908. Its aims and purposes are to improve physical and intellectual capabilities of children by inculcating habits of alertness, orderliness, and obedience, as well as to foster a spirit of patriotism to a realization that the first duty of a free citizen is to be prepared to defend his country.

2. The initial funding was $500,000. The present amount is $500,000.

3. (a) The trust operates a savings account and disburses the interest by cheque.

(b) The funds have been and are being disbursed to the provincial committees of the fund to meet the aim of the trust.

4. Minister of National Defence, deputy minister of national defence, chief of the defence staff, vice-chief of the defence staff, deputy chief of the defence staff, chairman of each provincial committee, (a senior military officer appointed by the respective regional commanders), and 12 civilian members named by the respective provincial education minister (two from Ontario and Quebec, one each from the remaining provinces). No remuneration is paid.

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 2,032—Mr. Herbert:

Must (a) departments (b) Crown corporations and agencies, compete in open public tender with the private sector if they wish to purchase material or equipment from the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): I am informed by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation as follows: as per corporation procedure (G-24), federal government departments and/or agencies are given first priority in obtaining surplus material and equipment in which they have expressed an interest, without the formality of competitive bidding.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1981-82

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

The House resumed from Thursday, February 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-59, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, today I want to try to respond to some of the allegations made earlier in the debate by members of the official opposition and of the New Democratic Party with respect to Bill C-59. For example, that the government is asking for a blank cheque in this bill; that the government is requesting more borrowing authority than it needs; that the government has not put forward a plan for restraint of expenditures, as the minister indicated earlier, and that deficits will not be reduced under the plan forward which has, in turn, led to the borrowing authority bill.

In addition, during a number of days of debate allegations have been put forward by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and other members of the opposition comparing the December, 1979, budget introduced by the hon. member for St. John's West in the previous government and the budget put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on October 28.

I want to show through analysis that the kinds of assertions made—namely, that the 1979 budget would have led to a lower deficit, a greater reduction in financial requirement and generally a more responsible fiscal pattern—are fallacious. As well, I want to look at the commitment which the government has put forward regarding a change of priorities in the budget toward greater emphasis on economic and energy development. Finally, I want to respond to some specific criticisms put forward by the opposition of the government's program during the debate on Bill C-59.

First let me deal with the question put forward by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), a question repeated subsequently. Opposition members say the government is asking for a blank cheque, that it is asking for $14 billion with no plan and with no knowledge by members opposite as to what use the $14 billion will be put. That assertion by members opposite is total nonsense. In his budget of October 28 the Minister of Finance put forward the most comprehensive description of a government's expenditure plans of any government in the history of this House. The budget clearly showed the expenditure plans by category or envelope for this year and the next two years. It is clear from the budget document presented by the minister on October 28 that this $14 billion is needed for the government's expenditure plan. It is clearly laid out in that document. The idea that it is a blank cheque and that the opposition is given no indication where the expenditures will occur is pure rhetoric.

In addition, we will soon be considering the estimates for 1981-82. At that time we will have very detailed descriptions of what each department within the over-all envelope structure will be using the moneys sought in the borrowing authority for under the expenditure plan.

I commend the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) for what has been brought forward just recently. I refer to the beginnings of what will be a complete revision of the public accounts of Canada and a much more detailed description than we have had in the past with regard to government expenditure programs, even more detailed than what is now available.

Therefore, the argument that the government is asking for a blank cheque, that it simply does not want the public to know how it is going to spend the moneys asked for in the bill before us today, is pure rhetoric. It has no basis in fact. That argument simply cannot stand the test of fact.

An assertion was put forward by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) with respect to his belief that in this bill we were asking for some $5.9 billion more than was needed by the government under the proposed expenditure plan. That simply is not true. As of March 31, 1981, as I explained to the hon. member opposite, all existing borrowing authority will have expired. In other words, no borrowing authority will be carried forward into fiscal year 1981-82 from previous fiscal years.

There was unused borrowing authority in the budget presented by the hon. member for St. John's West which was carried over from the budget in 1978. At the time borrowing authority was requested, $2.9 billion of non-lapsing borrowing authority was carried forward into 1979. When the hon. member for St. John's West presented his budget in 1979, he had this unused borrowing authority.

It was carried forward after the election into the 1980-81 election year because the government's borrowing authority bill was not passed until July, 1980. The government ran between March 31, 1980, and that point in July on that unlapsed $2.9 billion borrowing authority. At that time it was completely exhausted. When the borrowing authority bill of last summer passed, there was $100 million of unlapsed borrowing authority. Therefore, to all intents and purposes there was no borrowing authority left.

The borrowing authority that was requested and granted by the House last summer will lapse in its entirety, if not used, as of March 31, 1981. Therefore, there is no existing borrowing authority that will be carried on to the next year. That being the case, and given the fact that from the budget our fiscal year 1981-82 financial requirements are $11 billion, the borrowing authority of $14 billion, subtracting the $11 billion—

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In order to keep the parliamentary secretary's argument straight, can he advise us how much of the $12 billion will lapse this year? He has been saying he has none left. How much of that $12 billion will in fact lapse this year?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The parliamentary secretary, if he wishes to answer the question.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, rather than try to recall off the top of my head the answer to that question, we will commit that when the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) speaks tonight to close the debate, he will have that information for the hon. member.

As I was saying with regard to the $11 billion of financial requirements for 1981-82—page 41 of the budget speech, if the hon. member is interested in looking at it—we are now asking for $14 billion of which $3 billion will be non-lapsing. In other words, the government is asking for $3 billion of the $14 billion to be non-lapsing to the extent that on March 31, 1982, that sum would not expire. It will be carried over into fiscal year 1982-83 after March 31.

The reason is to allow flexibility from the rigid 12-month borrowing authority rules. If the government could not get borrowing authority for 1982-83 passed by March 31, 1982, the government would have borrowing authority to operate on until such time as that bill could be passed. That is an extremely valuable flexibility.

In fiscal year 1980-81, at which time we had an election, we found that with the $2.9 billion of unused borrowing authority that was non-lapsing from the budget of the previous minister of finance in 1979 the government could keep going until it could introduce legislation to get borrowing authority for the new fiscal year. That is why we are asking for the non-lapsing portion.

That $3 billion of extra borrowing authority over and above our projected financial requirements is required for two purposes. First, it is to provide some degree of flexibility to ensure that we have enough borrowing authority to cover contingencies that may arise should the projections not be exactly as we have forecast. Second, that borrowing authority would be available to be used for foreign currency transactions which could be required in the event of a need to support the value of the currency, for example. For all these reasons, it is typical for governments to request somewhat more borrowing authority than they have the intention of borrowing for their financial projections in the budget.

That has been the case in the past. It is the case with this borrowing authority. I think the hon. member for Mississauga South now understands that the excessive $5.9 billion request that he was discussing earlier was under the assumption that we still had the $2.9 billion of unused borrowing authority from the 1978 budget that was non-lapsing. I think he understands that is not the case.

I think I have been able to show in this short period that we are not asking for a blank cheque or for an unnecessarily large amount, given the financial requirements that are projected. That is not to say we would not like to see the financial requirements be much less; but using realistic estimates, we are in the position where that is going to be the likely amount of financing that will have to be done by the government to finance governmental operations in fiscal year 1981-82. It is clear from the budgetary documents precisely what those funds will be used for.

There has been an accusation that the deficits of this government will continue to grow, that in effect there is no commitment on the part of the government to reduce the deficit or to restrain expenditures. That accusation has been made by a great many members on the other side of the House. I wish to state in the strongest possible terms that this is in fact false. The government has every intention, every commitment, to bring the deficit down in the future, starting this year—

An hon. Member: You have been saying that for ten years.

Mr. Evans: —and to keep the growth of expenditures over the next three years within the average growth rate of the gross national product. That commitment has been made by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance on a number of occasions. I can assure the House that this commitment is solid, that it is firm; it is a commitment which the government and the Minister of Finance are completely and totally committed to keeping to the people of Canada.

If we look at the situation, I think all governments have to operate on the basis of financial projection. The hon. member for St. John's West, when he was minister of finance, put forward his projections. All governments put forward their best estimate of how they are going to be able to finance in the forthcoming period. That does not mean that that is an absolute certainty and that that is the way the world is going to unfold; it means that at this point in time it is the best possible estimate of how we will do in the next financial period. In the set of projections that we have put forward in the budget, we find that the financial requirements will decline from a level of $12.2 billion in 1980-81, which is the present fiscal year, to a level of $7.2 billion in fiscal year 1983-84. That is a $5 billion reduction, and I note, in passing, that that is precisely the same magnitude of reduction as was promised by the hon. member for St. John's West in his budget of December, 1979.

In addition, we look at the figures for the budgetary deficit. The budgetary deficit will decline from $14.2 billion in 1980-81 to $11.8 billion in 1983-84. Finally, as a percentage of gross national product, the deficit declines from being 5 per cent of gross national product in this fiscal year to being 2.9 per cent of of gross national product in 1983-84; nearly a 50 per cent reduction in the percentage share of gross national product that is represented by the deficit of the federal government. That is an achievement that we are projecting and we will be proud to see occur.

In discussions on borrowing authority, the budget, the income tax bill, and on other pieces of financial legislation that have come before this House in recent months, including the emergency debate just before the Christmas recess, the recurring theme was that the December, 1979, budget would have done much better than the budget put forward by the Minister of Finance. I would suggest that is total fallacy as well. The reason it is a fallacy is that hon. members opposite revert back to the figures that are shown in the budget speech of the hon. member for St. John's West, and which were presented on December 11, 1979. Sometimes the world does not unfold as we predict and, in fact, the world unfolded much differently than the hon. member for St. John's West predicted in his budget. So much so, Mr. Speaker, that his projections are off between $2.5 and $3 billion with regard to deficit, with regard to expenditures and other figures—

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Evans: —and I will document precisely where those differences are. The hon. member for St. John's West has admitted many of these to me in our discussions over the last several months. First of all, there is the oil import compensation payments. We all know that in the early months of 1980 there was another large burst of oil price increases at the world level. The forecasts put forward in the December, 1979, budget were based upon a presumed increase in oil prices, prices that did not take into account this large burst of oil prices. Nothing could have been done or was proposed to have been done in the budget of December, 1979, that would have offset a major increase in the oil import compensation payments that resulted from this large increase in world prices of oil.

As a result, the budget of December, 1979, put forward by the hon. member opposite would have been out by approximately $2.3 billion from the point of view of expenditures. In other words, the oil import compensation payments would have been $2.3 billion higher than were anticipated in the December, 1979, budget. In addition, and the hon. member for St. John's West admitted this on page 4226 of Hansard, due to the recession which, in the first half of 1980, was worse than the hon. member had forecast in his budget, he admitted, that his deficit would have been "a few hundred million dollars higher". That is as a result of the recession, not as a result of the higher oil import compensation payments. Nor is it taking into consideration the higher interest costs, which again the hon. member for St. John's West did not forecast in his budget and which have had a major impact upon the interest cost of the federal debt.

That cost would have been $125 million higher than was estimated in the December, 1979, budget. When we add the cost of just these three factors together, we find that the budget deficit and the financial requirements of the previous Conservative government, had they continued under the budget of 1979 put forward by the hon. member for St. John's West, would have been $2.7 billion higher than those projected in that budget document.

In other words, the financial requirements under the hon. member's budget would have been, in 1980-81, $12.6 billion. I refer back to the figures I have given for our financial requirements this year, namely $12.2 billion. That is $400 million less than the financial requirements under the previous budget.

With regard to the 1983-84 figures, the $7.5 billion financial requirement under the Conservative budget and the $7.2 billion under the budget put forward by the Minister of Finance today, the deficit has precisely the same type of relationship. If we look at the 1983-84 deficit, it would have been $11.8 billion under the Conservative budget, and it will be according to our forecast, $11.8 billion under our budget. That implies to me that there is no basis whatsoever to contend that the financial picture of the Conservative government would have been any better.

• (1530)

With regard to financial requirements, from an honest analysis the projections are that they would have been slightly worse than they are under the budget of the Minister of Finance today. I know hon. members opposite have difficulty with figures which relate to economics, but I hope that once and for all this will lay to rest the hue and cry we have heard from the other side time and again. They say that had they been allowed to stay in office, financial requirements would have been much lower and the deficit would have been reduced much faster. In fact, an objective analysis of the facts indicates that that is utter nonsense.

Mr. Blenkarn: What about the Economic Council's analysis and comparison? Tell us about that.

Mr. Evans: I would like to discuss a couple of other things with regard to that budget in order to make a comparison of how the people would have fared under that budget as opposed to how they will fare under the budget we put forward in October. We must first look at the fact that now, given a realistic assessment of the economic situation, the financial requirements and the deficits of the two budgets are roughly equivalent. We were able to achieve that without an 18 cents a gallon excise tax on gasoline. That 18-cent a gallon excise tax would have raised $2.5 billion out of the pockets of Canadians. That fact cannot be argued, and we are saying that the deficit and the financial requirements will be the same as they would have been under the Tory budget without an additional $2.5 billion being taken out of the pockets of Canadians.

We have heard much about the refundable energy tax credit. That was supposed to be a great boon to Canadians. It was supposed to save Canadians from the higher cost of energy. If we look at the budget papers of the hon. member for St. John's West of 1979, we find that not one penny of that refundable energy tax credit would have reached the pockets of Canadian taxpayers until after March, 1982. They would not receive it in 1980 or in 1981 but in 1982. then it would have been only half what hon. members opposite have been claiming, $220 per family. In fact, in March, 1982, it would have been $110. Only in March, 1983, would it have been $220. Those figures come from that budget. That budget admitted those figures, yet we often hear about the great energy tax credit which was supposed to save Canadians from higher energy costs. The case has been grossly overstated by hon. members opposite.

There was to be a mortgage interest and property tax credit amounting to $575 million in 1980-81, and it was to climb to $2.5 billion only in 1982-83. It was to be in between in 1981-82. In 1980-81, $575 million would have been returned through the mortgage interest and property tax credit to those who, quite frankly, are not by any means in greatest need. Instead, we chose to increase the guaranteed income supplement by some $200 million. With respect to tax credits or money returned to Canadians in the form of expenditure programs, I think the priorities of this government are where they should be and not where they should not be. I suggest that the Conservatives' deficit would have been no lower than ours and that the financial requirements would have been higher than they will be under the budget put forward by the Minister of Finance. I hope we can lay to rest once and for all the argument that the great and glorious December, 1979, budget would do so much with respect to fiscal responsibility and so much for Canadians through tax transfers, because the facts simply do not bear that out in any way, shape or form.

We heard discussion from the other side during this debate with respect to what the priorities of this Liberal government are. Where are the incentives for growth, development and investment? Let us go back again and look at the two budgets. We find that the amounts to be spent by this government on economic development and energy research and development are substantially more than proposed by the government of hon. ladies and gentlemen opposite. The fact is that in 1981-82 economic development expenditures by this government will increase by 21.6 per cent. That is a substantial increase by anyone's standard.

This government will increase energy development expenditures by $3 billion to $4 billion per year through the years 1983 and 1984. Net of the oil import compensation payments, and not taking into consideration expenditures to help Canadians maintain their standard of living by compensating them for higher world oil prices, energy and economic development expenditures rise from $6.9 billion in this fiscal year to $13 billion in 1983-84. That is a substantial increase. It is almost a doubling of the expenditures for economic development and energy by this government over a period of three years. I say—and the budget documents show—that there has been a substantial shift in priorities toward economic development and energy development on the part of this government in the last year.

I ask hon. members opposite and those on my own side to assess the discussions and commentary we have been hearing for the last three or four months and try to establish the priorities of the opposition with respect to government expenditure reductions. On Friday the Minister of Finance stood in his place and asked the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) to stop his colleagues from proposing additional expenditure programs, if in fact he was serious about seeing the government reduce the rate of inflation. There is no way the government will be able to reduce the rate of inflation if we accept all of the proposals, or even some of the proposals, put forward by hon. members opposite for additional expenditure programs.

An hon. Member: What about Petrofina?

Mr. Evans: Hon. members opposite talk about Petrofina. If I have time, I will get to that and settle that issue once and for all.

The Minister of Finance has committed himself to a reduction in the deficit and in financial requirements, and I think by what I have said to this point I have shown that without any doubt.

I should like to refer to the emergency debate. In that debate the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition stood in his place and spoke eloquently about the economic situation, hon. members of the New Democratic Party spoke and we on our side spoke. The debate lasted some 26 hours or so. In any event, the debate set a record for length. During that debate the New Democratic Party called for additional expenditure programs in the form of a cost of living tax credit and a tax cut for low and middle-income Canadians. Those would be substantial expenditure programs which would place very severe strains on the fiscal position of the government. They would detract from the government's ability to reduce the deficit and detract seriously from the fight against inflation.

• (1540)

But far above and beyond the request for additional expenditure programs which were put forward by the NDP during the emergency debate, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition stood in his place and demanded the introduction of the energy tax credit, a shelter allowance, mortgage interest deductibility, and an exemption for home heating fuels from the energy tax. Using the figures in the December, 1979, budget of his own ex-minister of finance, and also using the October, 1980, budget figures for calculating these costs, I have calculated that these four policies which were recommended at that time by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would increase the deficit by $2.5 billion in 1981-82, and that increase in the deficit would climb to over $5 billion in 1983-84.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, if you took the projected figures in the October 28 budget for the financial requirements and for the deficit and added $2.5 billion in fiscal year 1981-82 and $5 billion in fiscal year 1983-84, you would find out what the results would be if the government were to adopt today the recommendations for additional expenditure programs put forward by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Add $5 billion to the $11.8 billion budget deficit in 1983-84, and we would have under a Tory government a budget deficit of $16.8 billion. In my view, and in the view of hon. members opposite, the implications of the kind of expenditure demands which we are facing from hon. members opposite may finally sink in. There is no way that that is consistent with fiscal responsibility; there is no way that that is consistent with fighting inflation; and there is no way that that is in the interest of Canadian taxpayers and citizens.

Hon. members opposite have been speaking about buying service stations instead of buying Petrofina. Hon. members have been misleading the Canadian public—I do not thnik intentionally but rather through their inability to do any kind of accurate analysis—with regard to the implications of the purchase of Petrofina by Petro-Canada.

An hon. Member: Two dollars for every $1 worth of stocks. That is what the implications are.

Mr. Evans: For example, I have heard the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), who is now the energy critic for his party, say that the purchase of Petrofina is not in the national interest because the government has paid far too much for it. The weekend before last on the CTV television network there was an interview with a senior member of Dominion Securities, the firm which previously employed the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre, in which he indicated two things: first, that the price paid by Petro-Canada for Petrofina was a fair price to both parties and, second, that if you were to start from scratch, if you replaced the refinery, purchased the land and replaced the 1,100 service stations, that alone, in the estimation of the gentleman from Dominion Securities, would cost more than $1.46 billion. And that does not include the leases, the land which Petrofina has, the oil rights and the gas rights which they have. All of that would be over and above the $1.46 billion.

We are seeing this happen more and more. The objective financial analysts in the press, who know what they are talking about, are coming forward and saying that it was a fair price for both parties. If another private sector company, such as Imperial Oil, had bought out Petrofina, it would have paid a price that was similar to what Petro-Canada paid. The rhetoric which flows around here, which is without logical analysis, is bloody well incredible!

Miss MacDonald: You have convinced us about your rhetoric!

Mr. Evans: We have heard that this $1.46 billion is going to cost the taxpayers 8 cents or 12 cents a gallon. The minister has given the data and hon. members can do the calculations. All it takes is adding, subtracting and a little bit of dividing. The contract calls for 25 months of payment; that is, there will be payments over a period of three years. Let us assume that you were to pay for the whole thing with the tax. The minister has not indicated that such is the intention, but let us assume this for the purposes of showing up the nonsense which we have been hearing from the opposition recently. By how much would you have to increase the pump price of gas to get enough money over three years to pay for Petrofina fully with the equity? It would be about half a cent to a three quarters of a cent per litre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Evans: That is how much, Mr. Speaker. I am glad that hon. members are goading me into giving them the figures; I have them right here. Hon. members opposite have said that it applies to home heating oil. Let us assume that it applied only to gasoline, not to anything else. I think all hon. members would agree that that would cut down the revenue base. What does 18 cents a gallon raise? I am referring here to the excise tax from the budget of the hon. member opposite amounting to $2.5 billion a year, 18 cents a gallon. If you can divide, you will find that we would need, if we were going to pay for Petrofina entirely with equity from that tax, $1.46 billion over three years; that is half a billion dollars per year. Four decimal one cents a litre is what 18 cents a gallon excise tax would have raised. If you needed half a billion dollars a year, it would turn out to be 0.8 cents a litre per year for three years. It is not 12 cents a gallon, it is not some outrageous figure, if the minister decided, in his wisdom, to pay for Petrofina from the tax, and he has simply not committed himself to doing that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some amusement to the comments of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). What I had to ask myself, as I listened, is what it is that these people on the opposite side of the House feed on that fills them with that degree of arrogance. I listened to the hon. member saying that no matter what has been discussed here "my speech will put an end to all the questions that have ever been raised; once you listen to me, you will have all the answers and there will be no doubt about anything any more".

What he does not understand about Parliament is that we come here, all of us, to make our contribution to the furtherance of the debate, trying to make suggestions, trying to put forward proposals; and not one of us has made the claim that we have the total answer or all the answers, until I heard the hon. member for Ottawa Centre rise in his seat this afternoon and say, "Once I have spoken, you will know the truth and you won't have to ask about anything else."

Mr. Evans: About the two budgets.

Miss MacDonald: While we all admit that the hon. member for Ottawa Centre may have some contribution to make, surely he does not have the last word in this House, even in a debate where the government has imposed closure as it has this afternoon. I know what the hon. member's speech really was. It was trying to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. It was even more difficult for him than the first person who ever tried to do that. He did not get very far with it.

In one statement he said—and he asked us to believe it—that the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has made a solemn commitment to bring down the deficit. He said that it was his solid commitment. We have had 12 years of Liberal rule and every year the deficit has gone up. Why should we suddenly believe that this one should be so solid that it will turn around the situation?

We have heard the other solid commitments of the Liberal government over the years. The Minister of Finance, speaking in his own constituency to the people of Cape Breton, said, "I make you a solid commitment to keep down the prices of oil and gas". That is what he said, and since then he has allowed the prices of oil and gas to go up eight times. This hits hardest some people in the country, those with the lowest incomes. Neither he nor the hon. member for Ottawa Centre offered them any comfort by providing any kind of tax credit for oil and gas purchases; neither the member nor the minister cared about that. All the minister wanted to do was to make a blatant election promise that the price of oil and gas would go down and stay down.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is the kind of rhetoric we have been hearing. The minister never made any commitment that the price of oil was going to go down. That is the kind of rhetoric about which I was talking during my contribution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a point of debate. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has the floor.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I will correct that. He said "stay down".

Mr. Evans: That is not what you said.

Miss MacDonald: And it has gone up eight times since he said that it would stay down. If the hon. member does not believe it, we can send him the proof. If he does not like to hear it, I am sure he will leave, as he is doing.

Nevertheless, there have been other commitments of the "great" Liberal government over the years about which Canadians are very well informed. They have heard about them over and over again. They said that the price of gas and oil would be down below 18 cents, and a gallon of gasoline has gone up 37 cents. That is what happened in the last year.

Under the minister's budget the rate of inflation for this year would stay at 10.2 per cent. We all know that on Friday of last week the rate of inflation was reported to be 12 per cent. It was not 10.2 per cent, not what the minister gave his word the inflation rate would be, but way above that. Again it hits hardest the people on low incomes. He said that the dollar would be trading throughout this year at 87 cents. As of noon today it was trading at 82.8 cents. Where is the minister's commitment on that? Also he said that interest rates this year would run between 10 per cent and 11 per cent. For the last ten weeks they have been running at some 17 per cent, plus or minus a little, which is the highest rate ever in this country; yet it is another of the minister's solid commitments.

I should like to go back to a well-known and historic commitment of the Liberal Party. It made the commitment that it would never introduce wage and price controls; it made the commitment that it would wrestle inflation to the ground. Why should we be expected even to entertain the word of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance? Why should we believe the commitment he gave this afternoon that the deficit will be brought down this year and that it was a solemn commitment of the minister? When any one of the 12 or 14 I have recited have not been kept, why should we suddenly believe this one? I have to say to the hon. member for Ottawa Centre that I do not believe it and I think it is unfortunate for the country that we cannot believe anything the government is saying any more.

The government is asking us to approve $14 billion in borrowing authority, which is a very large sum of money. But when that $14 billion is added to our already unmanageable national debt, it becomes a burden which jeopardizes the Canadian economy; it could be the straw which breaks the camel's back. As I am sure the parliamentary secretary knows, by March our gross national debt will be $120 billion, our net debt will be over $80 billion, and the interest alone will be $12 billion annually. When one thinks of those figures, they are mind-boggling—$120 billion in the gross national debt, $80 billion in net debt, $14 billion in new borrowing this year, and $12 billion in interest on borrowing.

We are forced by the government to toss around these figures, but as we grapple with them we can never forget that borrowed money has to be repaid. That is something the parliamentary secretary should take to heart when he is tossing out these figures. These debts must be paid. We know who eventually will bear the burden of paying off our mounting national debt. The Canadian taxpayer will bear the burden.

No one likes paying taxes; Mr. Speaker does not like paying them, nor do I. I am glad to see Mr. Speaker agrees with me. But at least we should be able to take some solace from the fact that supposedly our taxes are spent on improving Canadian society. One tries to comfort oneself with the thought that tax dollars from the hard-won salaries of Canadian citizens go toward funding hospitals and education, toward helping our poor and elderly, toward providing health care and supporting our arts and culture. Canadians think they are paying for those items, and those are the items for which Canadians should be paying. Those are the returns Canadians expect from their tax dollars. But as I have said, one quarter of the taxes taken out of taxpayers' dollars, some $12 billion, or, to put it another way, one tax dollar in every four, goes immediately into interest payments on the ever-increasing national debt.

The $14 billion we are being asked to authorize today will drive up our national debt and automatically drive up the interest charges we are required to pay on it. With $12 billion being creamed off the top for interest payments alone, Canadian people are not really getting their return; they are not getting their money's worth out of their tax dollars. It is as if the government is saying to them, "You give me $100 and I will give you $75 worth of services because I have to use the first $25 to get myself out of hock". That is what it is saying to the Canadian taxpayer. In the real world a consumer would not stand for that kind of business attitude. But in the make-believe world that the government has created for itself by spending money it does not have, it allows the taxpayer no choice. The Liberal government is playing fast and loose with the taxpayers' hard-earned money. If it is not sending the money abroad to service the debt, then it is sending it abroad to pay for Petro-Canada's acquisitions.

● (1600)

I have always been a strong supporter of Canadianization, Mr. Speaker, but I take great exception to what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance said and to the attitude of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde)—that money for acquisitions is no object as long as it is being coughed up by somebody else, that is, by the Canadian taxpayer. That is what the president of Petro-Canada said when he was asked where he would get the money from. He said that the Canadian taxpayer would shell out. What other attitude could explain authorizing Petro-Canada to buy out Petrofina at $120 a share—$59 above its trading value when this takeover was first rumoured? Nobody can make any sense—regardless of what the parliamentary secretary says—of a government which comes along and says that it will make an acquisition but will give a monetary gift of an additional $59 over and above what the shares were being traded for when it first began to think of acquiring Petrofina.

What really disturbs me about this is the priority accorded by this government to the manner in which it spends the Canadian taxpayers' money. It is willing to shell out a lot more money than it should to buy up an oil company. It is willing to send the money off to the vaults of some happy Belgians but it is not willing to do the things which should be done here at home.

It really disturbed me to learn that while the government was throwing money away on inflated shares and in other cases buying for Canadians what they already own, it is turning its back on the spending priorities which could bring about an equitable distribution of services for Canadians all across this country. The government is turning its back on the real needs of this country. That is what really concerns me. Its priorities are screwed up—there is no other way to put it.

Canadians have been really shaken in recent weeks to learn what little priority the government is giving to the development of trained research staff and innovative research programs in this country. Of course, it does pay lip service to research and development, but when it comes to supplying an adequate amount of government funds to the research granting councils of this country it falls woefully short of even the most basic requirements.

When the government goes abroad to borrow an additional $14 billion in foreign markets for heaven knows what—it does not explain that—it is backing away from the commitment which was made last year to carry out the five-year plan of adequate funding to the research granting councils. There are two important factors which we should bear in mind when we look at these councils in their role of furthering research and development in Canada. First, you must consider that a five-year plan is vitally necessary if scientists, engineers and medical researchers are to be properly trained and if the innovative research programs they undertake are to be carried through to conclusion. This cannot be a stop and go proposition. You cannot say to a researcher that funding will be available this year but next year it will be someone else's turn. People must be trained on an ongoing basis. You cannot say about a research project, whatever the field of science, that the particular project can be developed for the next 12 months but then must be abandoned for the next couple of years in order to start up something else. That is not the way to carry research programs to conclusion. Scientific research just does not work in that way. There must be continuity and consistency. There must be an environment created which allows those involved to look beyond next month and next year to well into the future. That is the first point about the granting councils.

The second point is that it cannot be an on-again, off-again proposition, as I have said. We must also bear in mind that the research granting councils are the very engine which motivates the spark, the impetus for much of this scientific and technological research in Canada today. The research councils are really the granting agencies through which funding is channelled to train and produce the human plant, the human resources without which there can be no progress.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) can talk in grandiose terms about providing incentives to carry out more research and development. But industry knows full well that even if you have incentives coming out of your ears you cannot put them to good effect unless you have the highly trained scientific manpower and womanpower to take advantage of those incentives. You simply cannot do without the highly skilled human plant.

There is a lack of trained scientific and engineering personnel in Canada today, which is already beginning to have a serious impact on the Canadian economy. Thus, we have two options. We can import personnel from abroad, as we have done in the past, although I suggest that option is less open to us now than it was 15 or 20 years ago. That is one option. The second option is to train the personnel here in Canada. The latter course is obviously the course of wisdom. But in order to do this the government must comprehend and come to grips with the need for funding research granting councils on a long term basis.

These two points which I have mentioned interact. More than that, if properly implemented they will provide an essential ingredient to Canada's future prosperity. They will provide a highly trained force of scientists, engineers and medical researchers who will be the backbone of Canadian industry and, hence, Canadian employment in general.

The history of the struggle to achieve this laudable and obviously sensible goal has not been an easy one. I remind the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance just how difficult it was with the Liberal government throughout the 1970s. At that time it failed to realize the potential of the research granting councils. One might use the analogy that it kept them at starvation wages on a month to month basis. There was no comprehension as to how the granting councils could be the engine to generate greater industrial output or how they could initiate preventive medical programs which would reduce the vast sums of money which we must now spend on health and medical care. In fact, the councils were treated as just another suppliant coming to the Treasury Board each year to be given their crumbs from the table. Their very existence throughout the decade of the 1970s was precarious. I have no doubt that there were Liberal cabinet ministers as, indeed, there were Liberal backbenchers who argued the case and the cause of the research granting councils. But their voices were weak and their political clout lacking. As a result, our talented personnel, our indigenous research projects and our industrial and medical development suffered through the 1970s.

I want to say, sir, that that changed when the Clark government came to office; a new approach was taken to the research granting councils. It says something about the differences in priority that we accorded to spending.

• (1610)

Adding to interest payments on borrowed moneys was not one of our priorities. Generating greater industrial development through improved research and technology was. And we knew where to start: with the research granting councils. I am sure I do not breach cabinet confidentiality when I say there were arguments in cabinet about the funding of the councils, but there were far more voices raised in favour of putting them on a proper financial footing than against, which is so different from the situation today.

The result of what was done under the Clark government was something in which I took pride. That result brought about a long-sought Conservative Party objective. It put the granting councils on a long-term, five-year basis so that they had adequate lead time for planning, and it dramatically increased their funding during the first year of that five-year plan.

Let us look at the record in comparison with what had gone before. The Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council had its budget increased by $41 million, or 35 per cent. The Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council had its budget increased by $5.8 million, or 16.7 per cent. The Medical Research Council had its budget increased by $12.8 million, or 17.4 per cent. A 35 per cent increase for the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council was brought in by the Clark government. Compare that to the 12 per cent and 8 per cent increases that the former Liberal government had allocated to that council in 1978 and 1979. It was just enough to meet inflation but not enough to initiate innovative research programs.

What we have seen recently gives pause to what the present government's intention is and how different it is to the reaction accorded the former government's moves in this direction. The reaction of the scientific community to the Conservative government's recognition of the importance of the granting councils was immediate, and, needless to say, positive. It had been given an infusion, a new lease on life. Plans were developed which would be ongoing; projects were undertaken which would be assured of a more than one year lifespan; and, most important, the numbers of young people engaged in scientific and medical research training were greatly expanded. The engine was rolling and the end result for Canada would be highly beneficial.

That was the situation a year ago. What do we find one year later with another Liberal government back in office? We find a minister struggling valiantly, I have no doubt, to maintain the program the Conservative Party initiated, but a minister with little clout and little support in cabinet. And as he battles away in a cabinet that is devoting most of its time and energy to borrowing moneys for less worth-while objectives, word is spreading throughout Canada's scientific community that it has been sold out.

I quote from an article on page 15 of the Ottawa Citizen, February 6, 1981, as follows:

> In what scientists consider the ultimate doublecross, the federal government has scuttled a major program for revitalization of university research and scientific training programs.

The article goes on to state:

> Designed to get Canadian researchers back to work and offset severe shortages of young engineers and scientists, the plan called for significant budget increases for the council until 1985. Despite reassurances the five-year plan would continue this year, however, it has been quietly sabotaged.

I should like to put on record what one member of the scientific community wrote to me from Kingston when he learned about the plans of the Liberal government to scuttle the five-year plan and lower funding to the research councils. As he contemplated the government's reneging on the five-year plan of assistance and the effect on the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, he wrote:

> We simply cannot start and stop five-year plans in this stupid way. In the case of NSERC this means that various new programs started in 1980-81 will either have to be closed down or seriously curtailed after but one year of operation. Specifically:
> 1. The University Research Fellowship Program has already been curtailed from 100 positions per year to only 75 for 1981-82;
> 2. The budget for replacement of worn out and obsolete equipment has been slashed by many millions of dollars;
> 3. The new program of undergraduate summer research awards (to encourage undergraduate students to prepare for careers in research and development) must be in some jeopardy;
> 4. The project research applicable in industry (PRAI) grant scheme, a very effective way of bringing industries and universities together will be seriously diminished in impact.

He is analysing the effect on the research community of what this government has done in cutting back, year after year, worth-while programs which had been initiated and worth-while programs and long-term research funding which would involve newly trained people in Canada—good doctors, geophysicists, chemists, electronic engineers, mechanical scientists, all of whom are involved in this new program and who take time to train. If the money is not available to finance that training period, then it is we in Canada who will not have enough men and women to staff our hospitals, search for our oil, test our drugs, modernize our computers, design our engines or improve our nuclear power.

This is what the government's program is doing at the present time. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance so proudly pointed out, the government has decided to take a great amount of money and send it abroad to pay for inflated shares of the newly-acquired Petrofina. It will take that out of Canadian taxpayers' money and be willing to spend it abroad on something that will not benefit Canadians, but it will not continue the funding to the granting councils at the same level as last year, funding that is so necessary if we are to have the kind of industrial development that this country is crying out for.

That is why I say the government has its priorities all screwed up. That is why I say the kind of gibberish we heard from the parliamentary secretary earlier today does not make any sense when worth-while programs are being slashed in order to feed the ego of some particular minister, be it the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is a very sad commentary on what the government is trying to do with its borrowing programs and its budgetary programs today.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and her impassioned plea for innovative research. It is too bad that she was not around in 1959 to make an equally impassioned plea to the then Conservative government that did away with the Avro Arrow—

● (1620)

Miss MacDonald: Come into the present.

Mrs. Appolloni: —as a result of which Canada has been deprived, perhaps forever, of the tremendous expertise we had in the scientific world.

I would like to say a few words regarding the government's request for supplementary borrowing authority. It represents this government's desire to operate the machinery of government responsibly and effectively, even though some members of this House may be determined to delay virtually all measures put forward by the government.

Many members opposite waxed indignant about what they called closure being applied in the House of Commons. Though many Canadians may not understand this idea, what they do understand is what they see in their House of Commons, and what they have seen recently are various attempts from time to time to delay the work of this government. However, this House of Commons should be more than just a place for people to speak; it should also be a way in which the people of Canada manage to govern. Once the various ranges of viewpoints have been expressed, it is time to get down to the business of managing and governing.

In our National Energy Program the government has shown its determination to use Canadian tax dollars wisely and responsibly. We are investing to Canadianize more of the petroleum industry in order to ensure that our energy policy is carried out in the best interest of the people of Canada and not of the multinationals. Moreover, we are providing a framework within which companies can plan and work and within which Canada can achieve oil self-sufficiency. We are also encouraging conservation of our finite resources in that regard and providing a revenue-sharing arrangement which will best benefit Canadians in the producing and the consuming provinces. And all of this at reasonable prices. That is what is known as responsible management.

We see in the budget real and vigorous attempts to restrain government spending while still providing Canadians with the services which are essential to their well-being. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has emphasized the necessity for the government to work as a partner with other sectors of the economy to create jobs, reduce unemployment, develop Canadian industry, manage our resources, and above all to combat inflation. That too, Mr. Speaker, is responsible management.

I am not one to overreact to highly political comments and I have a great deal of respect for members on both sides of this House of Commons. However, I was appalled by the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) during this debate. I have often admired and respected that member's talent and knowledge: however, I am now forced to reconsider.

On two occasion in this House, the member from Victoria seems to have forgotten his responsibility as a privy councillor. As a former minister of national defence—

An hon. Member: The best one we have seen in years.

Mrs. Appolloni: —he knows full well that successive governments in this country have agreed that, while our Voodoo aircraft are capable of carrying defensive nuclear weapons and we have the capability to store them safely on Canadian soil, we cannot acknowledge whether they are in situ at any given time or where they may be located. The hon. member knows the reasons behind this undertaking of Canadian governments, and I consider it unfortunate and irresponsible that he would choose to raise the matter in the House not once but on two occasions. The threat of terrorism and the threat to national and international security—

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt the flow of garbage which the parliamentary secretary is spreading, but the Hon. James Richardson first raised that matter in the House of Commons as a Liberal minister of national defence. It has been the subject of press releases by the Liberal government. I see nothing sacred about it. It has nothing whatever to do with security.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This has become a point of debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mrs. Appolloni) has the floor.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the Liberal government.

Mr. McDermid: Did he hurt your feelings?

An hon. Member: Listen and learn, McDermid.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting for the Canadian forces now to see what they have lost with this change in government.

An hon. Member: All 70,000.

Mrs. Appolloni: As I was saying when I was very rudely interrupted, the hon. member knows the reasons behind this undertaking of Canadian governments.

The threat of terrorism and the threat to national and international security always exists, and the hon. member opposite should recognize that threat. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has stated, and it has been clearly demonstrated by government representatives, that Canada's policy has been to choose not to deploy nuclear weapons on Canadian soil and with Canada's armed forces. I suggest that if anything is "cheap and sleazy and gives this place a bad name", to use the hon. member's own words, it may well be his attitude in this matter, because he cannot, as a former minister of national defence, claim ignorance of the facts.

I am also dismayed at the hon. member's attack on the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) over the CF-18 contract. Admittedly it is a very complex contract but it is also an excellent one. The hon. member from Victoria has a copy of it. This question of progress payments and enforcement of industrial benefit commitments is very well covered in the contract. The Minister of Supply and Services has now provided the hon. member for Victoria with the answer to his question. The answer can be found right in the contract. Can it be, then, that the hon. member did not read the contract or simply that he did not bother to check the facts?

In the same speech the hon. member from Victoria referred to his desire to see a white paper on defence. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) and the government are aware of his views on this subject. I would like to point out at least one misconception the member has about the current white paper. He called peacekeeping the last priority in that white paper. Where did he get that notion? Certainly not from the white paper itself. I quote from the 1971 white paper as follows:

> The policy announced by the Prime Minister on April 3, 1969, initiated the process of adjusting the balance between Canadian defence activities to ensure that priorities for defence were responsive to national interests and international developments.

A process of adjusting which is responsive to national interests and international developments is found in the white paper. To me this portrays an evolution which has taken place and continues to take place so that the basis of the white paper remains as valid today as it was ten years ago. Reading on in the white paper we find:

> Four major areas of ativity for the Canadian forces were identified in summary form as follows:
> (a) the surveillance of our own territory and coastlines, i.e. the protection of our sovereignty;
> (b) the defence of North America in co-operation with U.S. forces;
> (c) the fulfilment of such NATO commitments as may be agreed upon; and
> (d) the performance of such international peacekeeping roles as we may from time to time assume.
> This paper will next examine these four areas of defence policy in detail.

Nowhere, so far, have these four areas of defence policy been called priorities in either descending or ascending order. Perhaps the member from Victoria would like to examine the white paper again.

Borrowing Authority

At this point in the white paper we find that activity in each area must be assessed in terms of the priorities which have been, and if I may add, continue to be established.

The four areas of defence policy remain as eminently viable today as they were ten years ago, but the priority assigned to each is the subject of an evolutionary process which continues to take place. By delivering an annual statement on the subject, taking into full account the domestic and the international situation, the Minister of National Defence can do more to place emphasis and priorities in proper context and perspective than if he tried to rewrite a still perfectly valid white paper.

• (1630)

Instead of encouraging further efforts for the defence of Canada, the hon. member opposite has preferred to take cheap shots at the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence. For some reason, perhaps because he was frustrated by his own inability to persuade his cabinet colleagues in the previous Conservative government to achieve greater defence aims, he has chosen in his speech to denigrate government efforts to upgrade our defence capabilities.

The hon. member may prefer to speak of the past rather than the present or the future, but since this government took office we have achieved a great deal in national defence of which we are justifiably proud. We have chosen a new fighter aircraft which will enable our air force to carry out our commitments at home and abroad, and in so doing we have negotiated an excellent contract which is bringing considerable industrial benefits to this country. We are forging ahead with our plans to provide the navy with six new frigates while at the same time enhancing our Canadian naval shipbuilding capability. We have taken the means to extend the life of 16 of our existing 19 destroyers to maintain our naval capability until new frigates enter service.

After receiving new Leopard tanks, the army is taking delivery of 441 new armoured vehicles and a variety of wheeled vehicles of all types. We will soon be letting a contract for 2,800 new 2½-ton trucks. Plans also call for the purchase of 2,500 new jeeps in the near future.

We have initiated a search and rescue capability update program and we have earmarked more resources to be provided to reserves as equipment for their training, including helicopters and armoured vehicles.

Delivery of all 18 Aurora long-range patrol aircraft will soon be completed, on time and on budget. I need not remind the hon. member of the highly unfounded criticism of the opposition when we launched that program, one which has proven very successful despite the political play he and his colleagues made at the time.

In that same speech the hon. member for Victoria expressed doubt about the government's commitment to increase defence spending by at least 3 per cent in real terms in accordance with our agreement with our NATO allies. He used several statistics which I found interesting. Many things can be done with statistics, and they can be interpreted in many ways. For example, the hon. member pointed out that for 1979-80 the defence budget decreased by .23 per cent. I would merely like to point out to the hon. member that much of the responsibility for the budget for that year rests with him since he was minister during that period. I would like to point out to the hon. member that in the budget presented by the Minister of Finance a commitment to increase the defence budget was presented and the government intends to stand by that commitment. Therefore this government's excellent work in the area of national defence will continue. This is the pledge we have made to our NATO allies and we intend to keep it.

Our urgent and important equipment requirements have largely been provided for and the Department of National Defence is now undertaking a series of measures to meet new challenges in the field of manpower and, more particularly, the reserves. I believe that any impartial observer would have to admit that we have made and continue to make very significant progress in our defence posture despite very destructive criticism from both ends of the opposition benches. We on this side of the House have to be realistic in determining how much is enough when dealing with defence and national security, always keeping in mind that without national security there can be no social security.

I know the hon. member opposite cherishes such values as honour, integrity and responsibility. I would encourage him to demonstrate that. This government has made commitments to Canada's defence and to the Canadian Armed Forces. Our Canadian forces are among the most dedicated and capable people in the country, even in the world, and they deserve more support from the former minister than they are receiving. We on the government side will continue to take our responsibility seriously.

Mr. McKinnon: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would allow me to ask a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mrs. Appolloni) accept a question?

Mrs. Appolloni: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McKinnon: A moment ago the parliamentary secretary mentioned that in the year 1979-80 there was a smaller amount spent in real terms. I believe the figure was .38 per cent less. It is not important. It was a small fraction of 1 per cent. She blamed that on me because I was minister of national defence that year.

I simply want to ask whether she recognizes that our government came into office in June of that year when the estimates for 1979-80 had already been passed by this House of Commons. The only thing we did so far as changing the estimates in any way was concerned was to increase them by some $60 million in order to fulfil a commitment which had been made by the previous government with NATO. The money that is being spent this year by the lucky Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), who is spending it, is money we put into our estimates which were passed last spring.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have heard the hon. member. This appears to be a debate between two hon. members. With the consent of the House, I would prefer to recognize now the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-59, the borrowing authority bill, once again; that is to say, in another year and not another time on the same bill. I am impressed with the simplicity of the bill. It is smaller than most which we get a chance to debate here. There is only one clause other than the title. One wonders why we are spending so much time of the House on such a small bill, one that must be fairly straightforward. In fact, one might wonder why we are spending so much time on this bill regarding which the government has once again seen fit to invoke closure. This is the third time in five months that we have had closure invoked to stop the voices of the opposition from speaking out on matters of importance to Canadian taxpayers. After having taken an absolutely irresponsible attitude and invoked closure, the government then starts putting up speakers one for one, matching the speakers on the opposition side.

The hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) used his full allotted time. Your Honour interrupted him at the end of his time. The hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) just gave a speech which I suggest belonged to some other debate. I do not recall her mentioning much, if anything, to do with this bill. It is bad enough that the government uses this further muzzle on the opposition by putting up speaker for speaker, but the last two government speakers have been parliamentary secretaries. For the executive on the other side to be chewing up opposition time in a way like that is unpalatable and disgusting.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Offensive.

Mr. Clarke: Yes, offensive. There are two main reasons why this bill is so important, deserves a long debate and should not be cut off by this closure move. The first is the size of the authority sought by this bill, $14 billion. The second is the underlying ills that have produced the deficits which have made this amount of borrowing necessary.

There used to be an infamous saying attributed to the Grits—"What's a million?" Now we can ask ourselves in the same tone whether they have adjusted that to "What's a billion?"

When I go around my constituency, I give explanations to various school classes. From time to time I explain what is a billion. I am beginning to wonder if I have been explaining to the wrong people. Maybe I should make some of those explanations here. It is the government opposite which has a greater need to know what is a billion.

I could give an example here. Probably many members buy lottery tickets. I will take the case of a Canadian who wins $1 million dollars in the lottery. He invests that $1 million dollars at 10 per cent. I just use that percentage for ease of figuring, because with the inflationary rates of interest that this government has given us, he would get a lot more than that; but 10 per cent is an easy figure to get, and it is an easy figure to use. He would have an income of $100,000 a year, and that is, roughly speaking, $2,000 a week. Well, I suppose we all know somebody in the neighbourhood that earns $2,000 a week or $100,000 a year. But if we gave that same lottery winner $1 billion and he invested it in the same way, he would have an income of $100 million a year, or $2 million a week, and I do not think any of us could say we know anybody that had an income of that magnitude. It is about time that the government started thinking in billions instead of in millions.

Another example is a stack of bills. If we take a stack of $1,000 bills and we have a thousand of them, that will give us a stack of paper eight inches high. It does not take too much arithmetic to realize that if you multiply that stack of $1,000 bills by a thousand to get to $1 billion, you would have a stack of bills that was 667 feet tall. I am sorry I do not have the metric measurement. But if you stop and think of that size of stack of bills, that is a stack of bills higher than the length of two football fields. There is quite a difference between an eight-inch stack to make $1 million and a 667-foot stack to make $1 billion.

The final example that I often use is if we go back to the first year of our Lord and an individual had obtained $1 billion at that time, in A.D. 0, in other words, or A.D. 1, however you want to count it, and had started spending that money just straight off the top, no interest at all, in the year 1981, after spending $1,000 a day, for nearly 2,000 years that individual would still have $277 million left. He would be good for a lot more time spending $1,000 a day, and this is without receiving any interest, which I think is an important thing to remember.

Maybe this government is now finding out what a billion is worth, because their policy agent, Mr. Hopper, the president of Petro-Canada, has come crying back to the trough. He says, "But fellas, you know, I've bought that company you wanted me to buy, but now I need $1.5 billion, because my treasury is empty and I have not got the money in my coffers. So I want you guys to get the money somewhere. Maybe you will tax the consumers of gasoline or petroleum products, or maybe just go back to the printing press and print some more money." I do not think Mr. Hopper is telling us where to get it, but he needs $1.46 billion to complete the purchase of Petrofina. I would have thought that this outfit across there would have thought about it before asking Mr. Hopper, with his bankrupt or, at least, insolvent company, to buy that other company for them.

How is the government going to raise this $1.46 billion, and what is it going to cost? If, as Mr. Hopper suggests, the government just taxes Canadians to raise it, it will cost $65 per capita. Each and every person will have to pay $65. Well, that does not sound too bad; but if you take an average family of five, which is having a tough enough time as it is, then that family has to raise $325 in order to pay for the new toy, Petrofina, of the government. Well, maybe $325 is not so bad either; but we have to relate this $1.46 billion to the total debt of this government that they have run up over the years. It is hard to figure out exactly what the national debt is these days, but the public accounts, which I brought along today, indicate that the liabilities of the Government of Canada are $106 billion as at the end of the last fiscal period.

If we apply some simple arithmetic to that, it develops that that debt will apply to every Canadian, at the rate of $4,425. That is in addition to the other and ordinary personal borrowings that individuals make in Canada to acquire automobiles or homes or whatever they borrow money for. Again, if I apply that $4,425 per capita to the average family of five, it comes out to well over $20,000 for that family in addition to anything else it may have borrowed.

What exactly is $14 billion, and how much is that in relation to whatever else we have? It is about 14 per cent of the total liabilities that we have already. I consulted the taxation statistics, the 1980 edition, which is the latest one out, which analyses returns of individuals for the 1978 taxation year. Summary table two in that book shows that in 1978 $14 billion was the amount of federal tax collected from 14 million individuals who filed income tax returns that year. What this government is asking us to do by Bill C-59 is to take an amount equal to the total amount of tax paid by all individual taxpayers in this country two years ago, and just add it on, because they need some more money, to the total debt that these poor taxpayers are already saddled with.

The long-term policies which have resulted in this kind of situation developing where we need this borrowing bill are just that: long-term policies. They are not something that has popped up to surprise the government, and I have already referred to having had these borrowing bills before. Again, I refer to the 1980 public accounts. In the last five fiscal years, that is, from 1976 to 1980, the deficits incurred by the government have totalled $49 billion. Of course, not all of that is cash, but the cash requirements over that same five-year period were $40 billion. During that same five-year period, the unmatured debt, which I will have something to say about a little further on, increased by $34 billion. The total debt of the government is unknown. It is not known, probably, by anyone. Again referring to public accounts, page 2.9 in the current volume, the statement of assets and liabilities of the government shows liabilities, other than those for annuities, insurance and pensions, of $83 billion. Now, that is not quite the $106 billion of the total liabilities. In that same report, we can find liabilities of Crown corporations which are not consolidated, but are debts guaranteed by the government and have to be added, and that is another $8 billion. Those all bear interest. The contingent liabilities, which do not bear interest yet, are shown there as $4 billion. We also have unrecorded liabilities. These are arising mostly from pension indexing for those civil servants who are already retired, and also from termination benefits for those who are about to retire.

As hon. members well know, the public accounts are full of gems of information for those who are willing to dig for them and study them. I found a write-off in fiscal year 1979 of $546 million because of adjustments of assets for values. Then in 1980, the last fiscal year, $1.5 billion was written off, again to adjust the accounts to their proper values.

Earlier this month the public accounts committee was told by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to expect a write-off of about $700 million. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited was not quite sure of the amount which had resulted from La Prade and two other heavy water plants built by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited having to be closed down because there was no market for their products. What I am saying is that there is much debt shown in the public accounts, and the $100 billion figure I used can be well established.

Having established the size of the debt to some measure, we then have to determine the cost of borrowing all this money. Again I refer to the public accounts, which show a total unmatured debt of $72 billion at an average interest rate in 1980 of 10.13 per cent. It might be worth noting at this point that the government too is suffering from its inflationary policies in that only five years ago, in 1976, the government was borrowing at a rate below 8 per cent. The present rate of 10.13 per cent is up 29 per cent over 1976.

Mr. Blenkarn: They are not borrowing at 10 per cent any more.

Mr. Clarke: Goodness knows what the government will be paying. That will be disclosed in the next public accounts. The rate will probably be closer to 12 per cent. I want to remind hon. members, and particularly members of the Grit government, that the government used to have the ability to borrow at 3 per cent because that was about what the real value of renting money or borrowing money was. However, with inflationary policies—most notably put into effect over the past six to eight years—interest rates have risen to such a level because they must reflect the rate of inflation plus the natural worth of the money, which would be about 3 per cent.

What does the total direct borrowing cost us? It is easy to see that if we applied the 10.13 per cent to the $72 billion reported as unmatured direct debt, that comes to an interest cost of well over $7 billion. That is each and every year. We have heard that it will continue to rise, but using the $7.3 billion, how does that compare as an interest cost with other costs and transactions of the government? The total 1980 expenditures, again in the public accounts, were $51 billion, so we can see that $7.3 billion works out to 14 cents out of every dollar the government spends being used to pay interest on debt.

That is serious enough, but if we compare that cost with revenues, we find that of the total tax revenues in 1980 of $35 billion, the $7 billion means that 21 cents out of every dollar the government takes in in tax revenues goes out right away to pay interest on this debt.

If we want to shock taxpayers in a real way, we can go back to those taxpayers I spoke of earlier who, in 1978, paid $14 billion in tax. We can see that over half of all the individual income tax paid in 1978 went toward covering the interest costs of this government. Comparing that figure with 1980 when personal tax revenues increased, as most taxpayers know from looking in their pocketbooks, we find that the rate was 43 cents. That means that 43 cents out of every dollar every individual Canadian taxpayer paid to this government went to cover interest on debt.

Perhaps that is enough of looking back. I have established what the costs are and where the borrowings of the government are at this point. Perhaps we should look ahead a little and see what will happen and what we can look forward to with this government. After all, it was not many months ago—April 14, 1980—when the throne speech produced by the government opposite announced the following:

> It is the intention of my government to continue the policies of expenditure restraint—

We can all have a laugh at that.

> —and improved government administration . . . Improving the efficiency of the federal government is as important an objective of these reforms as reducing the deficit.

Following the example of the Progressive Conservative government in the Thirty-first Parliament, I see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), in presenting his budget last year did a five-year forward projection. It is interesting that that was the first time any Liberal government had ever seen fit to do that. He was following the example of the former minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), who became the first finance minister ever to make a five-year forward projection.

What do this government's projections show? First of all, in addition to the $51 billion I spoke of which we are spending in the 1980 fiscal year, the increases are shown at 15 per cent, then the next year at 12 per cent, the following year at 11 per cent and finally, for 1984, another 11 per cent increase. These are cumulative increases which will result in expenditures by the 1984 fiscal period of $81 billion. We have to find another $30 billion to spend and, knowing the government opposite, it will probably want to borrow again when that time comes.

In addition to the increases in expenditures the same table shows increases in deficits. There will be another $63 billion added on to the total deficits of this government since confederation and an increase in borrowings will be necessary. Further borrowings of $39 billion will be needed during the next four years.

With more borrowing and the higher interest rates about which my friend, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), was just telling us, it is not hard to imagine what kind of difficulty we will have in relation to the portions of budgets which will be taken up by the interest load this government has put upon us.

Do the Grits opposite know what is happening? I rather suspect they do not. Again I refer to comments offered by the Auditor General in his 1979 annual report wherein he made a number of recommendations which were the culmination of many years of work on his part. One of those comments was the following:

If the current government disregards the recommendations of the government-wide studies undertaken by the AG's office (and detailed in this report), inadequate control of the public purse will continue.

We know about the Auditor General's comment concerning control over the public purse. The government has the benefit of the Auditor General's studies, recommendations of the Lambert royal commission on financial management and accountability and the D'Avignon committee study on personnel management and the merit principle.

I have not finished my remarks yet, Mr. Speaker, but I note that it is five o'clock.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL POWER GRID

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of convening a federal-provincial meeting at the earliest date possible for the establishment of a national power grid that would connect all power systems in Canada and also, where possible, effect connections with grid systems in the United States, thus fully utilizing the power potential that exists in Canada.

● (1700)

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is not a new topic. It has been discussed in this House on many occasions but it is one that is most appropriate at this particular stage in our country's history. It is appropriate because, while we spend a great deal of time talking about oil and gas, there are many other forms of power which are of significance to the future development of our nation.

While these days we hear a great deal about the possibility of a major power shift from central Canada to the west, there is, in my opinion, as great a potential, if not greater, for the same type of power shift occurring in eastern Canada or in the Atlantic provinces, depending on where you come from. In the west they think that eastern Canada is Ontario and Quebec; in the maritimes or in the Atlantic provinces we think eastern Canada is the Atlantic provinces. But it is one of the sad facts of life and of history that as far back as 1959 we were very close to achieving a federal-provincial agreement—on which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) will elaborate in the very near future—which could have put in place a national power grid and eliminated, to a very significant degree, the insecurity of resource supplies in the fields of energy which exist at present and have put the Atlantic provinces and all of eastern Canada in the position of having to rely far too often upon the whims of the oil barons of the world.

To outline in a little detail some of the benefits which would come to the whole nation from the development of a national power grid, let me state some of the potentials which exist in Atlantic Canada and which are ours for development if a national power grid is put in place. We know about the problems between Newfoundland and Labrador and the province of Quebec so far as Churchill Falls is concerned. We know of the tremendous power potential which is associated with Churchill Falls and the development which has occurred there since the harnessing of Churchill Falls by Brinco. But we also hear a great deal in this House and other places about the possibilities of the Lower Churchill and the frustrations faced by the people in Newfoundland and Labrador over the fact that they cannot develop this tremendous power resource which they see there, both because of the transmission system which at this time will only move that power through the province of Quebec and because of a long-term agreement which was worked out between the then premier of Newfoundland, Joey Smallwood, and the government of Quebec many, many years ago, which, unfortunately for Newfoundland and Labrador, is to apply for many years in the future.

Let us stop to think what would happen if we had a national power grid and the opportunity to lay a cable which would move that power in Newfoundland and Labrador through Newfoundland to Cape Breton Island and on to Nova Scotia, and which would pick up the resources which are ours in the coal fields of Cape Breton, not to mention the coal fields on the mainland of Nova Scotia. Certainly the coal fields of Cape Breton are harnessed to a significant degree by the Buchanan government. This would offset the tremendous dependence which we have at present on bunker C oil which comes from off our shores and, unfortunately, in many instances from Arab nations, upon which we cannot depend because they themselves cannot depend on their capability to produce and deliver the oil which is theirs to sell.

However, let us go a little farther, past Cape Breton and the oil there to the Bay of Fundy and the tremendous possibilities which are associated with power generation there. Only last week I attended meetings in New York City with Premier John Buchanan and other experts associated with tidal power in Nova Scotia at which we talked with the New York State Power Authority and other people in the state about Fundy tidal power and its development.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, we in Nova Scotia have under way at this time a pilot project on the development of tidal power at the Annapolis River. That project will be completed in 1983 when, for the first time, a new type of generator called a straight-flow generator will be used for the harnessing of the waters in the Bay of Fundy which are at the Annapolis River to see if that particular generator will work as effectively as its creators believe it will. If it does, then it will be used onwards to the Minas Basin where the hydro power which could be produced is almost beyond man's comprehension. It would certainly be of the magnitude of Niagara Falls, if certain sites were chosen in the Minas Basin to develop that power. It would be comparable to James Bay in Quebec as a potential source of power.

What we require, even if we are going to harness the tides of the Bay of Fundy, are transmission lines which would deliver the power in question to users who require it at this time. There is no doubt about the fact that a national power grid, if it were developed, would guarantee that the power would be made available first to Canadians, that they would have the first opportunity to take advantage of the tremendous power potential available in those Fundy tides. But even if that could not happen overnight with the construction of transmission lines, either through New Brunswick to the New England grid or under water through the Bay of Fundy to Maine, we could still put that power into an area which could immediately use it. It would assist in the payment for the actual barrages which would have to be constructed and the generation systems which would have to be put in place, as well as the cost of transmission lines which would be required to deliver power to the area where it is needed at present. With payment, you could have a system whereby there would be a diminishing supply of that power going outside our nation if it were required in our nation, and if we had a national power grid in place we would be able to deliver that power to whichever part of this nation required it. That is what is so important about a national power grid. That is the difference between what we have now and what we should have had yesterday.

The tremendous advantage is that hydro, whether it be from tidal power or from rivers, gives two guarantees to the people of this nation. First, it gives pollution-free power. It does not run the risk of acid rain, nor the risk of destroying the environment, as does open strip mining and things of that nature. None of those problems is involved. Second, it provides inflation-free power. Once the dams are built, for instance the ones associated with Churchill Falls, the Lower Churchill or Fundy tidal power, they are in place for 50 to 75 years. Over that period of time the cost of the power would be a known fact, with very little escalation of any kind.

With regard to Fundy tidal power, the tides come in and the tides go out. Price does not make any difference because the tides still come in and go out. Once the dams are built they are in place, and it has been suggested that they would be in place for 75 years. This indicates that we will know the cost of that power today and, really, 75 years from now. The experts say that there is less than a 1 per cent inflation factor associated with the development of that kind of power. It is a substantial difference, especially when one looks at oil which was $2 per barrel in 1973 and today is something like $36 U.S. per barrel, with many experts saying that the price of oil will soon be something like $100 U.S. per barrel.

When one looks at those figures and the possible development in eastern Canada, one has some appreciation of what could be done if we could only develop a national power grid as soon as possible. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain will point out in detail, much of it is in place now, It is simply a matter of developing the connectors and upgrading the transmission lines across the country so that we can move power back and forth where it is needed.

These days we talk a great deal about security of supply for oil and gas. We in eastern Canada know of our potential to participate in making a two-way pipeline for either oil or gas tremendously valuable to the whole nation from a security of supply point of view. We can look at a national power grid in exactly the same manner. With such a power grid we could give a guaranteed security of supply not only to eastern Canada but to the entire nation from the point of view of being able to move electrical energy from Labrador to British Columbia. That is what the country requires; that is the foresight our leaders must have. It is the reason I suggest that there should be a federal-provincial conference committed to the development of an agreement which will ensure that this moves forward.

I suggest that agreement does not have to be at the first minister's level in the beginning. I believe we have resource ministers across the country with the foresight to want the required interconnections to ensure that we have a national power grid. It saddens me that although since 1973 we have been told the facts of life as far as oil supplies in the world and in this country are concerned, we have not moved or we have moved like turtles when we should have run like deer. Even at this late stage we must see to it that a mechanism is put in place which can produce a national power grid to move electricity, not only back and forth across the nation but north and south when it is required, and in many instances it is.

With power in the maritimes, with Fundy tidal power in Nova Scotia, certainly we will need to connect with American power systems to move our power north and south, to pay for the required facilities, to retain the long-term benefits for Canadians, and in the short term meet the problems faced by our American friends who are also in the same box as far as security of supply for energy needs are concerned, especially oil. They are most anxious to get out of oil usage and turn to alternate sources of energy, so that they will have a security of supply the same as we in eastern Canada desire.

As this debate goes on, I hope a determination will be expressed by the House to ensure that some initiatives are taken at the federal level to put in place, as quickly as possible, a national power grid for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the motion this afternoon by the hon. member opposite was introduced against the background of the recent National Energy Program announced by the government. It is within that context that I want to say a word about the motion and then turn to the more specific questions of the hon. member concerning the possibilities of a national energy grid, and also his concluding point with regard to electricity exports to the United States.

The House may recall that it was noted in the National Energy Program that Canada's capacity in electricity has more than kept pace with our demand for electricity, and that that margin of capacity gives us an opportunity to analyse further the choices we shall have to make regarding the generation of electricity in the future.

In referring to that element of the National Energy Program, the hon. member understandably concentrated on the requirements, as he sees them, of the region from which he comes. Indeed, electricity is a source of energy which holds great promise in the maritime provinces of Canada.

The National Energy Program draws attention to the opportunities represented by a number of major projects in the Atlantic provinces to which the hon. member referred. I am speaking of the Lower Churchill project which is under active consideration at the moment. Certainly it is the government's view, as indicated in the National Energy Program, that the technical, financial and political barriers to the rapid development of Lower Churchill power must be overcome without delay. In addition to that commitment, the National Energy Program and, indeed, existing initiatives of the federal government are also directed toward the generation of electricity in the Atlantic provinces in such novel ways as the tidal power to which the hon. member opposite referred. He will be aware of the federal financing of a development project in that regard, a project which I am sure all members in the House hope will indicate a viable and prosperous future for that particular potential source of electrical power.

Beyond that, of course, the member is conscious, as I am sure we all are, of the need to ensure alternative energy sources to that of oil-fired electricity generation in the Atlantic provinces. Therefore, the emphasis in the program is also on environmentally acceptable conversions to coal of oil-fired capacity in electricity generating stations, where that opportunity exists.

Against that background of electricity generation potential in the maritime provinces—and I have touched upon only one or two examples—I want to say a word about a national power grid to which the hon. member opposite has drawn the attention of the House. That question is not a new one by any means. As the hon. member pointed out, it is not a new idea. It has been discussed over the past decades, and there has been a continuing interest in that time in the possibilities offered by a national power grid.

There have been two major studies undertaken on an interprovincial basis to explore the opportunities for strengthening the electrical connections between provinces. The first of those studies began in 1962, almost 20 years ago. It was completed in two stages under the direction of a federal-provincial working group on long distance electricity transmission. At that time the committee had to indicate the nature and extension of the potential benefits of a trans-Canada interconnection as its objective, which might be expected to bring significant benefits to the whole Canadian economy. A further major expectation was that the grid would reduce the need for investment in generating capacity and, additionally, would reduce operating costs. The first stage of that study was completed in 1963. It was followed by a more detailed investigation.

The result of the study stated that there would be savings. But they were seen as minor savings—less than 1 per cent of the total electricity system investment. At that time the committee findings indicated that to obtain the maximum benefit of a national development plant would require the full co-ordination, planning, development and operation of the interconnected utilities. Of course, in turn, that implied a requirement for some form of central planning and operating authority. The members of the committee concluded that the estimated net benefits of the national network were too limited to justify the further immediate development of the idea. However, the committee did recommend that the subject be re-examined at a later date.

Some years later, in 1977, the possibility of a type of interprovincial grid was, indeed, examined by an interprovincial advisory committee on energy. A study group was established which undertook an assessment in a somewhat similar manner to the earlier study to which I have referred. In October, 1978, a report was issued which concluded that there was a very modest, but positive, indication that the value of strengthened east-west interconnections in the electricity system of Canada would increase over time.

From that very brief and somewhat simplified view of the studies, it can be seen that there were some indications of benefit from a major expansion of regional interconnections. Those benefits were seen as small, in terms of the total investment which would be required in the electricity industry in the years ahead. It was also seen that in order to achieve such modest benefits some form of central planning would be required. There were indications that the provinces would see this as an unacceptable limitation of their flexibility in their own planning of electricity capacity.

On the other hand, it is evident that there has been progress among electrical utilities in Canada in co-operating among themselves. Certainly, on occasion the national government has acted to encourage them to do so. For example, from the two studies to which I have referred, the provinces became more active in expanding their regional connections.

When the federal-provincial committee began its work in 1963, the major north-south transmission system between the Peace River hydro development in northern British Columbia, to take an example, and the load centres in the southern part of the province had not been completed. The Nelson River system in Manitoba had not been committed. The eastern-western portions of the Ontario system were isolated, as were the eastern-western parts of the Quebec hydro system. At that time no transmission interconnections existed between Quebec and Labrador or between Quebec and New Brunswick. Prince Edward Island was isolated from the mainland. The results of the studies encouraged an increased growth of transmission lines in many of the provinces. The federal government played an important role in assisting the provinces in the development of their electrical generation capacity and transmission facilities.

I would like to give one or two examples of such federal involvement. They include the extensive support of provincial electrical research and development, such as the $25 million contribution to the demonstration of low head hydro power at Annapolis, Nova Scotia, to which the hon. member made reference. This was a commitment to provide a loan of up to almost $200 million at Crown corporation rates. To date, over $100 million has been spent for transmission facilities from the Nelson River development in Manitoba. Other participation by the federal government was demonstrated in the joint involvement with the Newfoundland government to study the hydro potential of the Lower Churchill Falls in Labrador from which there are high expectations of real benefit. The federal government has also assisted in the construction of the cable between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, which substantially reduced the cost of electricity generation in that province.

It is obvious from these and other elements that in the past the federal government has been active in assisting the provinces to develop efficient and effective hydroelectric and other electrical capacity. Not only has the federal government demonstrated its interest and concern in the past but it is committed to playing an important role in the future.

To sustain Canada's energy security in the long run we need to substitute more plentiful forms of energy for those forms which are now less plentiful and more expensive, particularly oil. Within that program, as I have already noted, electricity remains a major element.

• (1730)

To that end the government has embarked upon a program to encourage Canadians to convert their domestic heating from oil to natural gas in some areas and to electricity in others. The incentive program, Canadians will want to recognize, does include electricity just as much as it does oil.

If our goal of substitution were achieved tomorrow, that is, the goal of reducing our use of oil in residential, commercial and industrial sectors to 10 per cent of the total energy used in those sectors, the daily saving would be almost 400,000 barrels of oil, the equivalent of what we import today.

The National Energy Program looks toward the ecouragement in the Atlantic provinces in particular of the substitution of electricity, where practical, for the high cost and limited oil that is available. That program will begin to be implemented vigorously in the months immediately ahead.

In addition to discussing some of the domestic benefits of electricity co-operation among provinces which in the hon. member's view would best take the form of a national electricity grid, I want to touch on the international aspect the hon. member raised, and that is a power grid which would maximize connections with the United States. In that regard hon. members may recall that international trade in electricity has grown dramatically in recent years; since 1975 there has been nearly a fivefold increase in our net exports. Net revenues from the export of electricity have risen from approximately $1 million in 1975 to almost $7.5 million in 1979. In fact, in 1979 our net export of electricity represented 9 per cent of net Canadian electricity generation.

Such a growing level of electricity exports understandably raises the question of whether the interconnections between the Canadian and the United States facilities are interfering with the development of greater regional interconnection within Canada.

I think it is worth taking a moment to explore some of the reasons for the growth in international links to determine whether there is any negative effect to the national interest or whether such exports represent a clear benefit to Canada and an activity which should be promoted and developed further.

During the early years of this century several hydroelectric developments were constructed in Canada, primarily to meet the needs of the neighbouring states of the United States. Some of those developments were undertaken under contract which continued up to as much as 60 years. That, in turn, led to some concern that the more attractive hydro sites were somehow being directed away from supplying the needs of the Canadian consumer. The isolated nature of electricity systems in the first decade of this century made it very difficult to replace energy from United States sources in the event that Canada wished to recapture its hydroelectric output. The export of electricity was actively discouraged by a number of measures and exports were regulated as early as 1907. From the period 1925 through 1963 a tax was levied on electricity exports, a fact that was not always recalled during the recent debate about taxes on the export of petroleum.

The establishment of the National Energy Board in 1959 provided an opportunity to review export applications in a much more comprehensive manner and to distinguish between export opportunities that could provide substantial benefit to Canadian customers from those that might endanger the cost of security of supply to Canadians.

More recently, the National Energy Board has put tests in place to ensure that exports will be permitted only after the Canadian people are assured of their own electricity requirements while at the same time taking the opportunities for foreign exchange earnings which such exports represent.

I do not doubt that in the time ahead we will hear more about the possibilities of electricity generation partly, perhaps, from the stations in the maritime provinces. It is an area to which the government is sensitive. We will work to assure the Canadian people that while their needs for electricity are fully met, equally the possibilities for co-operation with the United States in this area are also actively supported.

I touched upon some of the questions raised by the hon. member in his interesting statement. I think he will see that a number of initiatives have been taken in the past to encourage co-operation among the provinces in their electrical generation activities. He will see there are aspects of the National Energy Program which are designed to encourage the further development of electricity capacity in the maritime provinces.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am sure he will recognize that as a result of initiatives taken both by provincial governments and the federal government, the potential for electricity exports will be seriously examined and further developed as the capacity and needs of Canadians are met.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, when we talk of a national policy for Canada, I do not think there is any debate or argument about the fact that the key component of any national energy program has to be an energy power grid which will carry power from all types of sources.

The parliamentary secretary has just finished outlining the sad story of inactivity on this proposal for 20 years. Let me refresh the memory of the House about things done a generation ago when we finished 22 years of inactivity on the part of the federal Parliament in regard to the development of Canada.

In 1957 a fresh new government came in with the national power grid in its policy resolutions from the 1956 convention. It went to work on the proposal with vigour, spoke to every provincial government, got the support of every provincial government, spoke to all the hydro commissions, power authorities private and public, got their support and in 1959, after the preliminary technical study, the prime minister of the day announced in Kitimat a national power grid for Canada.

This grid would not just carry the power from the hydro resources of Canada which were and are abundant, energy would come from many sources—the tar sands of Athabasca, the heavy oils of eastern Alberta the geothermal energy below the surface of all Saskatchewan and the resources of the prairies. It would take in coal, although we did not know the full amount there was in B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan. In just those three provinces alone we now know there is over 200 billion tons of coal. We were looking to the coal of the offshore area because that figure of 250 billion tons I quoted does not apply to the northern parts of Canada, the Arctic Islands or the coal of the offshore area. That has a tremendous potential along the eastern part of the country. The Fundy Tidal Power was certainly part of that concept.

We visualize the power grid which runs from the Yukon in the north, with all the unused power each year going into the sea, together with all the power from the rivers in northeastern B.C., including the Peace River, the power from the Columbia system, the Saskatchewan Nelson system and the power from the Churchill. Then there is a big gap in northern Ontario. We thought of harnessing what is now called the James Bay power, the great power of the Churchill River and the tremendous offshore energy potential of the Atlantic provinces and bringing all of that and all of the LPP fuels for the fixed power part of the package. It was a great concept, but we had to assure ourselves that not only was it a hypothetical dream, it was an economically viable project. Even using the distressed prices of oil and gas referred to by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) that you could get offshore as dumped products, even referring to the very cheap power rates in Manitoba, what you will get in B.C., what you had in Ontario and what you were going to get in Quebec—with that, even as the parliamentary secretary stated, when that study was completed on the economic aspects as well as the physical and technical aspects the report in 1963 showed a marginal advantage. That was the case even at the low prices of that day.

What the parliamentary secretary forgot to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and Canadians, was that we went to that power grid as a basic fundamental in our national development policy because we knew from the Paley report in 1952 and the Netschert in 1959, and so on in that the world would be short of oil, the most popular form of energy in 1950. We knew that 1980 was the critical period and we had to get ready for that critical period. Prices would obviously have to rise from those rock bottom prices of $2 per barrel. If you were to add in the present costs of all the energy sources I have mentioned and put into that 1963 study what the benefit-cost ratio would be, as the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester said, it would be hard to grasp. Things are 30 times higher. Think what it would mean today to the Atlantic provinces if they were part of a national power grid, both contributing to and taking from that power grid. Think what it would mean to the hard-pressed industries of Ontario to get access to sure energy supplies, maybe coming from Alberta's coal or from Saskatchewan; maybe coming from as far away as the Yukon? The trick was bumping it back and forth.

As the parliamentary secretary mentioned, that report was never published. That report came into the hands of the minister in September, 1963. However, some of the information in it was obtained by talking to power corporations and commissions across the country. Some were private power corporations and did not want their figures known. When I asked the minister for a summary of the report, just to state what the parliamentary secretary stated here today, that the benefit cost was plus, we could not get it. From 1963 the provinces were forced, one by one, to develop their connections. They had already done it in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in 1957 through the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, which was passed in this House to help those provinces build connections. Manitoba, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta and B.C. are all being forced into the connection. Over the years they have developed the capacity to carry a higher voltage and reduce the cost.

Another factor is the research which has gone on. Take a look at what Quebec Hydro has done in research of high voltage transmission. What about the work done by the National Research Council, and what about the wind tunnel at the airport? What about that 1963 report and the losses that would not have to occur with our modern technology. That technology by Quebec Hydro and the National Research Council was available publicly 12 years ago, and nothing was done about it. The whole history of this subject, over the past 20 years has been sad. I cannot honestly blame anyone. There is this lethargy in Ottawa about doing anything. All this enthusiasm at the provincial power authorities level was squelched by politicians. I ask hon. members why? I can tell you that no one knows the answer.

I talked to Mr. Lévesque, now the Premier of Quebec, but was minister of resources in the Lesage government and he was enthusiastic. He was the first president of the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers. He said this was the only way the federal system would work, if we all sat down as equals and discussed what was best, and then do whatever came under our jurisdiction. What an opportunity Canada missed.

I have another fact. You have heard me talk about wind power and you have heard me talk about heat pumps in this House, but I have not yet talked about one of our greatest resources in energy, namely, geothermal energy.

Geothermal energy is found in the Cumberland Basin. It runs right across to Gaspe. Geothermal energy is under south-western Ontario, under the prairies and in isolated spots in British Columbia. We have no information about it in the north. But let me quote what scientists said two years ago. They said that on the prairies alone the energy content of this hot water beneath the prairies is 360 times the energy content of all the natural gas we will ever discover in Canada, and we have discovered a lot of natural gas in Canada. We still have 400 trillion cubic feet to come that we know about. But geothermal energy is 360 times greater. Geothermal energy can be turned on site into electrical power and sent anywhere, north, south, east or west. Think what security we could bring to the manufacturing province of Ontario. We could send that power east, west, north or south because we know we could get it back under this concept of moving power around to meet time zones east and west and to meet the peak loads north and south. I will not go through all the technical data about that.

I have not put a figure of energy content on the 250 billion tons of coal. I could do it, but I am simply saying that Canada has energy of a non-renewable sort running out of our ears. We sit in this House and fight and quarrel like a group of children over a silly little bit of oil, which is only going to last five years anyway. I would not like to see this Parliament continue dealing, as it is now with oil prices, because of this pride of confrontation which exists between politicians. One of the ways to settle this darned thing is to quit fooling around. Everyone knows that a power grid, which would have cost $300 million in 1963, with the knowledge we have today would only cost about $1 billion, would move power in tremendous volumes back and forth, way below the cost of what we have to pay for energy from local sources today.

We are no longer talking about $2-per-barrel oil in determining whether the project has a benefit cost ratio plus. We are talking about $30 and $50 for a barrel of oil. If we want to face this $30 and $50 per barrel of oil, we should just sit and wonder about these things.

Let us talk about all the things we have looked at. I have not seen the 1977 report.

If we had wanted to use this great energy of Canada 25 years ago to build up the Atlantic region to the highest level of any industrial complex in the world, it could have been done. It has all the markets of the world at its service, access to the Arctic resources by sea from the north, access to all of this energy in their own area and, with a labour force as good as any in the world, it should be one of the richest complexes in the world. Had we started that 20 years ago, what regrets would those of us have today who knew what the hopes were then? We have to face up to this and get it done.

• (1750)

I want to see an east-west power grid so that British Columbia, Manitoba and Quebec are not forced to sell south. That is the only way to finance their operations today with the high cost of energy. I would like to see these great unused power resources built in.

There is no use talking about Fundy tides if you are talking about a market in the Atlantic area. It needs a market 1,000 miles in diameter, and when those great surges come four times a day let the high voltage lines be built that will pump it out and bring it back so the whole area becomes secure. If we happen to help 100 million Americans in the process, so be it. We will get it cheaper; it is ours. This is what sharing means; this is what co-operation means.

I appeal to members on the government side to go after the department and ask for a copy of the 1963 report. No member of Parliament has seen it. Let us look at it. Let us apply the new cost figures to it. Take the report and study of 1977 and let those who know something about it look at it. Do not let these reports be taken as an excuse to avoid action. Do not bury them, bring them out into the daylight. It is amazing how many people across this country cry in their beer at night, thinking of all the work they did some 20 years ago. I have had them come into my office and show me the different parts of the report which they did. Why not let it be known, that is all we ask. Get the information out. Once you see there is a market for this great power of Fundy, the tidal power from other areas and all the other forms of energy across the country, there is no question about what the decision will be. If you want to fight inflation and energy costs, the key to it over the next 30 to 50 years will be this power grid. Let's look at it; let's get it moving.

The suggestion of calling a meeting is fine. Restore the old Canadian council of resource ministers or any group that will meet together. The various provincial ministers are not dolts. They would like to work together. However, they need the leadership of the federal government which seems reluctant to think big. That is the job of this House. If the members of this Parliament do nothing but get them back together again and start talking, if we make that contribution in the next three or four years, we will have served our country well.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the motion before us. I wish to clearly indicate that the members of the New Democratic Party have no hesitation in supporting the principles enunciated in the resolution. We believe the study and the eventual establishment of a national power grid would be just part of what we conceive as a major need in this country, the establishment of an industrial strategy to use the material and human resources to the benefit of all people, to meet their needs and provide the required jobs. In order to have an industrial strategy, we need planning on a major scale by the federal government in co-operation with the provincial governments.

One of the major resources in this country is hydroelectric power. Although we probably use more hydroelectric power per capita than any other country in the world, we have tremendous unused and untapped sources in northern Quebec, northern Manitoba, northern British Columbia and other places.

As the hon. member who introduced the resolution is from Atlantic Canada, he talked about the resources of Labrador and the Bay of Fundy. There are tremendous resources in western Canada. The Conservative Premier of Manitoba is talking about a power grid among the three prairie provinces.

These potential resources should be studied in detail, catalogued and used to the utmost. Hydroelectric power should be used as much as possible in place of our non-renewable resources such as oil, natural gas and coal. That cannot be done without a study and a national grid which would connect the sources of power we now have.

It makes no sense for Labrador power to be sold to Quebec and then to the United States rather than to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Ontario. It makes no sense for Manitoba to sell power to the United States when it could and should be selling to Saskatchewan or Alberta thereby obviating the need for the coal they now use. We support this bill in principle and hope it receives the support of the House.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to speak on the motion of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates). It fits in very well with the objectives of the National Energy Program to move away from expensive and insecure oil to electricity, natural gas, biomass and other renewable energy sources.

During the past 20 years we have seen a number of interconnections between northern and southern British Columbia, the Nelson River transmission system between northern Manitoba and the south, an interconnection into the United States between the eastern and western parts of Ontario, the eastern and western parts of Quebec, an interconnection between Quebec and New Brunswick and the cable system to Prince Edward Island, as well as the interconnection between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. There were a number of interconnections established through co-operation between the provincial utilities and the federal government. In some cases funding was provided for interconnections between the various systems.

In respect of exporting to the United States, it is very important to use utilities such as Ontario Hydro because of the tremendous power needs in New York City and New York state. This power is required for air conditioning during the summer months when our needs in Ontario are not as great. The load can be maintained and the exports take place. Very substantial financial rewards return to the utility in Ontario and there is a cost advantage for Ontario consumers.

There is a need for an interconnection between Saskatchewan and Alberta. With the very rapidly expanding economy of Alberta, there will be a need for an interconnection for the possible use of power from Manitoba. I understand an interconnection is being constructed between British Columbia and Alberta which will provide for the sharing of electrical resources between those provinces. It will make use of the hydro resources of British Columbia which are very extensive. Much is already being exported to the United States. There is a need for many interconnections.

We talked about the Fundy tidal power, the need for an interconnection between Labrador and Newfoundland because of the great potential of the Lower Churchill Falls system, and the ultimate possibility of exporting that power from the Lower Churchill Falls to the maritime provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I would indicate to the hon. member it is six o'clock. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1981-82

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-59, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the debate was interrupted at five o'clock, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) had the floor.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I was saying at five o'clock that the Auditor General had pointed out to the government many of the improvements that were necessary in order to return to fiscal sanity. We are now being presented with Treasury Board's recommendations of a review of information necessary for parliamentarians so they can have a rational review of expenditures. Appointments of departmental comptrollers have been too slow to assure that Parliament has the necessary departmental expenditure information.

The point of all these recommendations, and there are critics of them, is that these expenditures do not cost the government money. They save the government money. The faster this kind of thing can be put into effect, the better for all the taxpayers.

I want to refer to a conference I attended in Toronto, The Financial Post conference last year. It was called "Hands On, Hands Off". A few words from Milton Friedman would probably be in order for my friends opposite. There were 300 delegates there, including two former ministers of finance from the government opposite. Mr. Turner, one of the former finance ministers, made a comment, as he was introducing Mr. Friedman, about completely free markets. I think he said they exist nowhere and that Canada was built with a judicious mix of private and public capital and initiative.

Mr. Friedman was quick to take Mr. Turner to task on that remark, pointing out that there is no such thing as public capital. There is only private capital. Government and public expenditures come only from wealth produced by individual taxpayers. He also had an answer for governments generally, about inflation, reminding us that it was caused by governments, governments that were too fastidious to finance expanding social programs by raising taxes or borrowing at going interest rates, and so they had been creating money at a rate that outstrips the economy's growth. Of course, there is a solution: restrain monetary growth.

There are other solutions that have been tried. One has been tried, by the government opposite, namely, wage and price controls. History proved that both here and in the United States that was not the solution. It gave temporary relief to problems of inflation.

It is easy to blame people for inflation. The government blames the world, the weather, foreign markets, anybody else. They blame labour. Some people blame labour, which is certainly not responsible by simply making attempts to keep up with inflation. Business cannot be blamed for trying to raise their prices to cover higher cost. Even the banks have been blamed for inflation; but because of inflation caused by these bad fiscal policies, they have to pay higher and higher rates to people who are willing to save in order that the money can be loaned out to people who want to borrow. Of course, they have to pay higher rates for that money.

We need less government. That is the problem. That would go a long way to providing a solution. The government we have must stop smothering business with regulations and by controlling prices; for example, prices of oil. We have other examples of the government getting into matters like Petro-Canada and buying Petrofina. Just a month or so ago, the government purchased a whole string of service stations in the city of Vancouver. I do not think the taxpayers really wanted all that money to come out of their pockets to buy a string of service stations from which they were already getting good service.

We also need an overhaul in the tax system. We need an overhaul which would encourage savings and investment in Canada. The present policy of taxing illusory gains created by inflation discourages saving by taxpayers and encourages spending. That, of course, fuels inflation. The present system is unfair and inadequate.

I will give just a couple of examples. In 1978, according to the taxation book to which I referred earlier, 2,300 taxpayers making over $50,000 a year paid no income tax at all, and that number includes 96 who earned over $200,000 and paid no income tax. Can a system which allows that be fair?

Let us look at the rules which affect tenants versus owners of homes. The owner of a home pays no tax on his gain when he sells his home, and a tenant who invests his capital and pays rent is taxed at very high rates because he chooses to be a tenant and invest his capital.

There are no roll-over provisions which would allow one to sell a personal asset and buy another comparable personal asset. In case hon. members think only business people are concerned about roll-overs, let me remind them that some people probably have cottages, certain collections or other items they value which they may wish to sell in exchange for another, but there is no roll-over provision, and they will have to pay the full capital gains tax and then find that they are not in a position to replace those particular assets.

I have given some examples of why we have this bill before us now, and there are others. Perhaps before I finish I could just mention the Mirabel airport, which has been in the news recently. The original cost of Mirabel was about $600 million, which included $150 million to expropriate farm lands nearby. Now the Grits have decided they no longer need all that land around that airport, and they want to sell it back to some of the 2,200 families whose lands were expropriated. But now how do they decide to whom they are going to sell? Many of the home owners are gone. Some of the properties are leased to unsuspecting tenants, and some buildings are in disrepair, in spite of the fact that the government had a $10 million annual program to keep order in the general area. If we add all that to the $1 million a week being lost on the operation of Mirabel airport, we have an idea of why we have a bill like this before us.

It is clear that Liberal policies are leading us down the road to financial ruin, and there is no sign of needed changes, no sign of restraint from the other side, no sign of fiscal responsibility, no sign of fair taxation, no sign of reduced government interference, no sign of concern for individual taxpayers and no sign of concern for corporate taxpayers who, after all, get all of their ability to pay taxes from individual taxpayers.

With the policies of this government it is clear we will be back here next year, and maybe I will be taking part in a debate on another, bigger borrowing bill.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak about the supplementary borrowing authority bill. Like other members of my party, I regret the imposition of closure, which denies to other members the right to speak on this issue.

This evening I would like to look at the supplementary borrowing authority from the perspective of my concern for the Indian people of Canada. We all know that the question of borrowing raises fundamental issues about the way in which this government is managing, or mismanaging, the economy, and we all know that the social fabric of our nation depends upon a healthy economy.

If ever we want evidence that the government has mismanaged the economy, we can find it by considering the plight of the Indian people. In many respects the Indian people are something like the miners' canary. When miners had to enter shafts where there was a possibility of dangerous gas or bad air, they used to take canaries with them. The miners knew that if the canaries survived, they could survive. They knew that if the canaries succumbed to bad gas, they had better get out of there very quickly.

When we look at the situation of the Indian people, we see that in many ways it forecasts and highlights the situation all Canadians are facing. Indian people suffer the highest unemployment in Canada. For example, Norway House in Manitoba has a population of 2,500, and of that population of 2,500 there are over 700 people listed as unemployed employables. We will not find these people listed in the regular statistics on unemployment which come out from Statistics Canada every month. They are not part of the 945,000 people about whom this government does not seem to be concerned. They are an additional number. There are no records kept of them.

The ratio of employed people to dependants in the Indian community is one to ten. Whereas in the rest of society it is approximately one employed person to two dependants. This gives some idea of the serious situation, and to maintain this pace or even keep up with this deplorable situation of one person in ten employed, the government will have to create some 13,000 new jobs in the next ten years. But the government is not even doing that, it is falling behind and this deplorable rate is getting worse. Instead of creating an average of 1,300 jobs a year to maintain this ten to one ratio, the government is creating about 1,000 jobs. Next year the situation will be worse unless something drastic is done.

Because of their remote locations most Indian communities suffer even more than others from the high cost of living, and Indian people are the ones who suffer most from cutbacks in government spending. Government policies over the last 100 years have destroyed the economic basis for self-sufficiency. The people have had to depend upon government grants, public works projects and welfare. In some Indian communities the social assistance rate is over 95 per cent. Migration of Indian people to cities over the last 14-year period increased from 15 per cent to 30 per cent. People try to escape from one kind of poverty only to end up in another. They turn from unemployment in one area only to find themselves unemployed in another.

When the government cuts back, the Indian people feel it most. I believe it is time, as we look at this borrowing authority, that we looked at what is happening to the Indian people because, like the miners' canary, the welfare of the Indian people has a message for all of us, if we can only understand it.

I was talking today to someone from the Union of New Brunswick Indians who was concerned about the cutbacks in that area. On only two reserves were there minimal increases. On some reserves there were cutbacks in their administration funds which equalled 62 per cent. This means they have to cut back on basic essential services like street lighting. At the same time they are concerned about advertisements in newspapers for senior management consultants at salaries of between $31,000 and $36,000 a year. They will have the job of helping Indian bands manage their programs more effectively. The government is cutting back with one hand, and with the other it is offering to pay consultants $31,000 to $36,000 a year to help these Indian bands manage. They can be experts on how people can survive on nothing, but they themselves will be getting very nice salaries. The Indian people asked where the money for this new consultant program will come from, and they suspect very much that it will come from some of the cutbacks they experience.

The total budget for 60 Manitoba bands is up this coming year by only $10 million, from $122 million to $132 million. That represents an increase of only 8 per cent at a time when the cost of living is increasing by 12 per cent. We expect that the Indian people will be able to get along with 4 per cent less than last year. The director general for the region has asked for a barebones grant of $159 million, instead of which only $132 million was made available. The department is putting a penalty on those Alberta bands which have resources of natural gas by pressuring them to use the revenue from these resources. Instead of using the revenue for development, they want them to use it to supply services which normally the department has supplied.

I was speaking to someone from a smaller reserve in Manitoba who told me that a year and a half ago these people took over the management of their own school. At present, they are providing services from grade one to grade nine, and they hope to expand. Now they face cutbacks. They presented full cost estimates, with which the department agreed, for $737,000. Instead, the department says that $610,000 will be available for the next year. They are $127,000 short for the operation of that school. The department agreed with their needs, it agreed with their estimates, but it said it was sorry, it had no money.

What I am saying is that the government has not managed its finances properly. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that these cutbacks are as wasteful as any of the wasteful expenditures which some other hon. members like to draw to your attention. When we cut back on basic items such as education, we are being wasteful of our human potential. This reserve is having to cut back on its social development programs, social assistance and minor home repairs. In every way we expect the Indian people to do with less. These are the conditions which result from cutbacks. We have created a dependence for these people, and then we cut back. I submit that if the government were borrowing money to invest in the future of Canada and if it were borrowing money to invest in the future of Indian people, we would agree. But this is not happening. In real terms, federal expenditures for Indian people have increased by 15 per cent over the past decade, while federal expenditures for non-Indian programs have grown by 128 per cent per capita in the same time; a 15 per cent increase for the Indian people, 128 per cent for other programs.

The Indian economic development fund has been described by department officials as a fund of last resort, and truly people need to be desperate to apply for it. In the current quarter, the interest rate for loans under $75,000 is a modest 19.75 per cent, but for loans and portions of loans over $75,000, the interest rate is 21.75 per cent. This is the fund which we expect Indian people to use to get development capital so they can develop their communities, so they will not be dependent on welfare, and so they will not always have to be coming to the government for a handout.

Last fall, when this was brought to the minister's attention, he agreed it was a deplorable situation. I understand he was hoping very much there could be some kind of a true development fund established which would make money available for the Indian people. But the minister was not successful in convincing Treasury Board there was such a need, so the present pitiful conditions are continuing. In 1979 and 1980, less than half of the money which has been allocated to development was actually used for that purpose. Much of the rest was used to cover over-target expenditures in education and social services because the government is always cutting back and giving less than the barebones estimates. When there are cost overruns, the government dips into the Economic Development Fund and uses that money to cover these cost overruns.

This is the way we continue to perpetuate a dependence rather than helping the Indian people to establish a true system of development. While less than 4 per cent of the total budget of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is available for development purposes, over 20 per cent is used for social assistance programs. It seems we want these people to continue on welfare, we want them to continue to be dependants rather than to give them the resources they need to develop their communities and develop economic self-sufficiency. I suggest that instead of the government using its borrowing power to allow the Indians to reach self-sufficiency and economic independence, it uses it to create a system of welfare dependence.

We have all seen the report of the Auditor General for the past year in which he indicates very clearly that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is out of control and does not know what it is doing.The report states:

> An example of the effect of these planning and control weaknesses can be found in the implementation of the policy for transferring program delivery responsibilities to Indian bands. We found that the department had not forecast the rate of transfer, nor were conditions for transfer specified.

When they found that costs had increased, they decided to implement cutbacks, and the Indian people are in the unhappy position of having to administer their own misery.

With regard to the Economic Development Fund, the report points out that:

> —the department has approved loans totalling $81 million.

It does not know where they are going. It has had to write-off $17 million. The report goes on to state:

> In our view, a significant portion of these proposed write-offs is due to the department's inadequate management of the approval of loans, monitoring of projects and collection of loans,—

There is a confusion of roles in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It does not know whether its job is to keep the Indians in line or whether its task is to help them with development. In October of 1980, officials of the department estimated that some $10 million was needed to help bands prepare for some of the massive development projects which would affect them in the near future. Last week they were offered $1 million. If the government is serious about the needs of the Indian people it will begin to shift its priorities from bureaucratic red-tape management and welfare dependence and begin to give priorities to economic and community development. This will cost money, and I urge that the government use its borrowing authority for this kind of a developmental purpose.

As a beginning it should adopt a clear policy for settling Indian band land claims in a manner which would give these people a base for their own economic development, and then it should institute a development fund which will give Indian bands access to capital. In this way they can use their resource base and their natural ability and have the capital to develop both.

We in our party very definitely oppose wasteful expenditures. We also oppose wasteful cutbacks, we oppose the waste of human resources and human potential about which this government does not seem to care, the waste that is represented by the more than one million people who are unemployed, and the waste that is represented by allowing our Indian people to exist in the backwater where no one pays any attention to them.

• (2030)

I want other speakers to have an opportunity to participate this evening, so in conclusion I urge the government to use its borrowing authority for positive purposes, not for a continuing patchwork of programs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this particular debate. I guess all

hon. members in the House do not like the notion of shortening the debate but, on the other hand, when one is on this side—and I think the Tories would have experienced this had they been in power much longer—there is a very great need to move these things along. If we did not shorten debate at one time or another, I do not think we could possibly get done what must be done. I think this particular subject fits very well into committee. I will welcome it there, and I hope many members will participate at that level.

Part of what I have to say concerns what I would call neo-conservative mathematics. Those of us who have been involved in education, as I have been over 22 of the last 30 years, must feel that we are reaping the whirlwind of our own inadequacies when we must deal with this kind of mathematics. There always seems to be some kind of notion that one can just pull out an absolute figure, and that gives total meaning. For example, when we use an inflation rate of 12 per cent versus the inflation rate of 6 per cent or 7 per cent in West Germany—and I am not sure what it is at this particular point—we are dealing in figures which are relative, but we are not dealing with the base. I do not have any later figures but in 1978, dealing with an index on what can be bought, taking an index of 100 in the United States or 102 in Canada, and using the same currency in West Germany, one would get $150. It would be similar to a railway worker who may be new on the job. if he received a 10 per cent raise on his $10,000 income, his 10 per cent would amount to $1,000, but someone at the top end of the scale, such as an engineer, will go home with $3,000 as a result of the same 10 per cent raise. We have to be able to determine these bases.

The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) used a figure of $80 billion as the net national debt. She said that was very, very high. I have heard other members talking about the net national debt being $8 billion or $9 billion in 1960, comparing these two figures and saying, "Look at what terrible thing has happened." Of course, one must deal with the net national debt in terms of some figures to which one can have reference. For example, if I owe $10,000 it is very important, if I want another line of credit, whether my income is $5,000 or $100,000. It is very, very relative. There is no point talking about my debt of $10,000 without some base. I must have a base, and if I do not have a base of reference, then the figures are meaningless.

Similarly when we talk about the net national debt we must have a base. I always have a great deal of trouble when they talk about the gross national debt being $120 billion, the net national debt being $80 billion and the difference being $40 billion. Surely that is arrived at in a very, very devious way. The combined assets of the federal government must be worth more than $40 billion, certainly in terms of land, in terms of the north, and so on. However, that is not the argument at this particular point.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McRae: I would be glad to permit a question, but I made an agreement with some members on the other side that I would be finished my remarks by 8.50 p.m. I will take a quick question, but I do not want to lose that time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question will be very brief. For the benefit of the House, would the hon. member indicate what is the main thrust of his remarks? In effect, is he saying that we should be relatively happy with a 12 per cent inflation rate and a net debt position of $80 billion?

Mr. McRae: The thrust of my remarks is not to say that we are happy. If the hon. member listens to my entire speech, I think he will get the thrust of my remarks. In fact, very shortly I will refer to an article which will provide the thrust of my remarks. Basically, it is that the doom and gloom which comes from the other side really does not make much sense. Nobody likes a gross national debt of $80 billion, but the point of the matter is that $80 billion represents 26 per cent or 27 per cent of the gross national product, and if we go back to 1962, it was about 30 per cent of the gross national product. It is the relative thing about which I am talking. That is what is left out of a lot of the neo-conservative comments, which I will illustrate in a minute.

I should like to look at the purchases of Petro-Canada. I hear people talk about some large oil company, such as Mobil or Gulf, buying and investing in the holdings of some other company; it may very well be the Thomson chain investing in Hudson's Bay. This is an investment. Thomson did not go out and spend $400 million or whatever; he invested it. When we went out and bought Atlantic Richfield in 1976, I believe we paid $340 million. I am told it is now worth about $1 billion. Is that a good investment? Certainly there must be a reason for it being worth a good deal more. Of course, I think one of the reasons is that all corporations in the oil industry are worth a great deal more. But in late 1978 or early 1979 I remember Morty Shulman saying to me on his show, "You threw away a lot of money; it was a waste of money", and today we are told that it is worth 2.5 times what it was then. If that is the case, how can one call it a bad investment? I would say that the people who sold it might very well have been skinned at that rate; if a company can appreciate 250 per cent in the course of two or three years.

It seems when the federal government purchases a company it is spending money. No one ever talks about the investment or what will be the return to Canadian people. They do not talk about those things. It is all right for the Alberta government to buy PWA; it seems fair enough. But when the federal government does it it is some kind of crime. Those mathematics always bother me.

Over the weekend when I was preparing for this particular speech, I noticed an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail. In fact I was surprised to find it in The Globe. I always suspect that Rupert Murdoch has secretly bought The Globe and it is now a new paper. At any rate, I should like to refer to the article by Lawrence Martin in Washington. He said:

> Ronald Reagan tells the country it is in its worst economic mess since the Great Depression. He lofts a 1960 dollar on the television screen and, illustrating the nation's misery, demonstrates that it is only worth 36 cents today. He says that big government is at the root of most of the country's economic problems. He vows to take a meat axe to the budget.

Let us take a look at that in terms of American funds at this particular point in time.

> In 1960 when a dollar was worth a dollar, the median family income in the United States was roughly $5,000 a year. In 1979, the median income was $19,000 a year. Nineteen thousand dollars worth 36 cents each comes out to $6,840 real 1960 dollars. In those terms, the standard of living, despite what the president tells the people, has risen sharply—by almost a third.

So, the American people are better off by a third. In 1960, in terms of 1971 fixed dollars, our gross national product was $53 billion. In 1975, in terms of 1971 fixed dollars, our gross national product was $110 billion. In that period of time we see a doubling. We can certainly say that Canadians are far better off than we were in 1960, in spite of the kind of thinking put forward by the Conservatives.

Mr. Martin in his article says:

> Myth No. 2 that the new administration is trying to pass off is that big government and its deficits are the prime cause of inflation. The new-right Reaganites have such deep faith in this theory that it is the one prong of their one-pronged anti-inflation program.

Basically, that is what I have heard from the opposite side of the House since 1974-75. Mr. Martin in his article goes on to ask about oil prices and food prices.

At this point let us take Vancouver as an example. What about the land which is being bought by people from Hong Kong, and Alberta, which is pushing prices up tremendously? There you have a situation of tremendous tension brought on by super-inflation. It is not caused by government. These are real inflationary effects which are structural in nature. They can be defined very easily. The increase in oil by seven or eight times has a tremendous effect on inflation. To say that there is really only one inflationary factor does not make sense.

Mr. Martin's article goes on:

> Myth No. 3 is that government has grown so big that it is out of control. In fact, government hasn't grown so much.

Mr. Kilgour: Why do you not talk about Canada?

Mr. McRae: Let us go to Canada. I would really like to compare what is happening in the United States with what is happening in Canada.

The article goes on:

> Two decades ago, the government purchased 11 per cent of the country's total output. By last year, it was below 8 per cent.

Mr. Kilgour: What do you suppose it is in Canada?

Mr. McRae: Everyone seems to be calling for Canada. Let us take a look at it. I can do it in terms of inflated dollars or in terms of constant dollars. It can be done either way.

Mr. Kilgour: Do both!

Mr. McRae: There are two kinds of government expenditures; one is on goods and services, the other is on transfers. No one can say that transfers can be inflationary since they are transfers from one Canadian to another. You may not like it if it happens to be coming out of your pocket.

Mr. Kilgour: What about on the part of Canada?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) has the floor. It is very disruptive if other hon. members insist on interrupting. I suggest the hon. member be allowed to conclude his speech.

Mr. McRae: In 1954, 10 per cent of the gross national product went for goods and services. By 1978 that was down to 6 per cent. That is a decline in terms of inflated dollars. In terms of constant dollars it went from about 8 per cent to about 3 per cent.

Mr. Stevens: What about total spending? Tell us about that.

Mr. McRae: We are talking about the federal government's expenditures which tend to create spending.

Looking at another set of figures, let us see what has happened to government spending. President Reagan says that the great offender is the federal government. It has been shown that it is not the great offender. But let us take a look at what is happening in Canada, since members opposite seem to want to talk about that. Using 1960 as an example, federal government spending amounted to 17.0 per cent of the gross national product.

Mr. Kilgour: What is it now?

Mr. McRae: In 1979 it was 16 per cent. I am glad the hon. member opposite is asking these questions, since I have the answers right here. I talked before about having a reference point, which I think is very important. As I said, in 1960 it was 17 per cent of the gross national product and in 1979 it was 16 per cent.

Another interesting example can be found in the provinces. In 1960 provincial expenditures represented 6.1 per cent of the gross national product. In 1979 it rose to 15 per cent. What happened is that there was a growth in government spending by the provinces and the municipalities. Municipality spending has increased, but not by a great deal, as I see it. It has probably increased by about 5 per cent or 6 per cent over the particular period of time about which I am speaking.

What has really happened is that there has been a massive transfer from the federal government to the provinces and the municipalities. This bears particular importance when you consider the subject we will be debating tomorrow. The party opposite talks constantly about the power of the federal government and how we must maintain the power of the provinces. That is the basis of the difference between the constitutional views on this side of the House and what has been said opposite—certainly by the Tory party.

It is extremely important to realize that the growth of provincial government in terms of the gross national product has been at least infinitely faster than that of the federal government.

The only way power can be defined is by looking at who spends what. For instance, if we went back to 1943, which was a time of war and rather a poor period to look at, we would see that federal spending in terms of the gross national product was 22.3 per cent whereas the provinces spent 3.3 per cent.

Looking at 1955, the figure for federal spending was 17.6 per cent compared with 4.8 per cent for the provinces. I think this means there has been a relative shift in power from the federal government to the provinces. I think the new Constitution and the thinking on this side of the House reflects the need to reverse this.

The Economic Council of Canada spent a great deal of time looking at the relationship between the federal and provincial governments with respect to surpluses. In its seventieth annual review, page 60, it deals with the kinds of surpluses that exist between the federal and provincial governments. It shows that with the resource revenue being transferred to governments such as Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and with the surpluses that these provinces will have, basically the total of all government deficits will disappear in three or four years. By that time there will be a zero deficit at all levels of government in this country. Even today, deficits are being reduced in this way. What do we do with a $14 billion federal government deficit?

● (2050)

An hon. Member: Sixteen.

Mr. McRae: A $14 billion or $15 billion federal government deficit which, when put alongside the provincial surpluses, gives us a net surplus in terms of all the governments of Canada. That is the only way these things can be compared. It is the reference point that we must have.

As the future unfolds and as we deal with the Constitution and with a second phase, we will have to deal very seriously with the kind of distortion that has been created of a large federal deficit side by side with very large provincial surpluses. I think there will be a lot of debate on this situation over the next year or two.

I want to conclude by saying that this is not just simplistic mathematics; it is not a matter of picking a number and saying, "that is it". We have to deal with these references, with these trends and the things that really count. A figure of 10 per cent or 12 per cent inflation has to be associated with the base and with the relative base of other countries and so on. The net national debt has to be associated with gross national product. If we do not do that kind of thing, then I believe we are failing as legislators.

Borrowing Authority

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to the principle of Bill C-59, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, I am reminded that this is my first opportunity to speak since the change of government in the United States of America, our great neighbour. Therefore, I should like to take a few moments to remember the six years I spent working in New York and Arizona, to congratulate President Reagan and his cabinet and to wish them well in the difficult years ahead. His conservative philosophy held for me a fascination and won my admiration during my U.S.A. political experience.

In recognition, also, I should like to pay tribute to retiring President Carter, irrespective of perhaps a somewhat different ideology. I do so, perhaps, because of our early common experience in nuclear engineering.

All members in this House recognize recently retired President Carter as a man who worked for peace among nations and know that during his term, America was not at war. During his term, the fundamental principles for world arms limitation were established and he laid a foundation for the evolution of a lasting peace settlement in the Middle East.

Furthermore, I am certain that all in this House, indeed all Canadians, recognize President Carter as a man of faith and belief in the fundamental human rights of all peoples and of the liberation of the human spirit of all economically and politically repressed peoples throughout the world.

More pointedly, let me deal with the borrowing Bill C-59 which is before this House. It is always unfortunate when we have to deal with legislation that has come under the sword of closure. This bill is an indictment of Canadian governments. The bill reminds us that our national government debt has exceeded $100 billion and that we are generating additional debt at between $14 and $15 billion per year. This is a national disgrace; indeed, it is a national tragedy. It is a shame, indeed almost treasonable, as the Government of Canada presides, in my estimation, over the richest nation in all the world. Only 23 million people share the ownership of this vast wealth of arable land, immense freshwater systems, vast untapped storehouses of minerals and hydrocarbon resources, forests, hydro potential, fish, wildlife and literally every kind of resource one can imagine. What a vast potential for wealth generation and yet we borrow and borrow. We are living off the backs and the sweat of coming generations. I would ask, why? It is because the government's management systems and the political guidance of this House over the last decade have failed economically. We have imposed a management system where wealth redistribution has throttled wealth production in a nation with unlimited economic potential. Repeatedly, Canadians today are worried about the future, about the changes to the Canada of the future brought about by the government's inadequate management policies, worried about inflation and the lack of an over-all effective industrial and social policy.

Let us look into the past a bit to see if we can gain some insight into where we are going. What have we done in Canada during the last 35 years since the war?

In summary and in over-all perspective, I perceive the following to represent what we have done in building the Canadian society during the last three and a half decades.

First, we have educated ourselves, as a people, to one of the highest standards in the world. Our education has been broadly based with a wide and non-constricting and non-dogmatic perspective. It was moderately permissive and generally directive toward material rather than spiritual ascension. It predominantly, though not totally, followed the American mould.

Second, we applied technology extensively, most of it imported from the United States of America through the media of the multinational corporations, though we have excelled in a few areas like nuclear energy, on our own. Because we used extensively the multinational corporations and their access to American-developed technology, these corporations became dominant in owning our resources and industrial wealth. We became an intermediate manufacturing and exporting nation with declining competitiveness.

Third, economically, on an over-all basis, we have had phenomenal growth in our national economy, primarily based on harvesting and selling our vast resources. Our economy grew from a GNP of $31 billion by approximately four times in constant dollars during three and a half decades. Our population grew only by 75 per cent. We became rich as a nation though other nations surpassed our growth because of much greater productivity. We built in Canada a physical plant system of unprecedented inefficiency and only now are we realizing it as world energy costs are skyrocketing. We almost forgot that fundamental, applied and innovative research must be an integral part of a highly complex industrial society like ours.

Fourth, economically and socially, the nation experienced an intense preoccupation with security; security against almost every eventuality: sickness, unemployment, old age, catastrophe, business bankruptcy, and so on. Most of this security was backed or sponsored by government action. We built a humane society based on government redistribution of wealth. Our system adopted tenure as a right rather than a privilege tempered with responsibility. We provided undisputed tenure to our civil servants, professors, teachers, professions, and thereby generated an increasing demand for tenure without productivity requirements in all organized labour. With increasing tenure, productivity waned. We became lazy, and the pride of doing was replaced with the enjoyment of loafing. Elaborate procedure and refined specialization became a substitute for performance. We demanded more and more from our governments.

Fifth, we became preoccupied with enjoying all the material goods of life at an increasingly younger and younger age. Homes, suites, cars, goods of all sorts were demanded and promoted for the young. In providing all these goods, we established a vast credit system to give us what we wanted now, and increasingly mortgaged our future. Mass advertising created the appetite, credit provided the means, mass production and technology and imports provided the goods and lowered prices. We spoiled ourselves with obsolescence; redundancy, style, throwaway and fraud prevailed and is prevailing. Our appetite increased, our frugalness decreased, we damned the future and lived for the present. Governments evolved a taxation system of unprecedented complexity and unfairness. The poor are paying hidden taxes at every turn. The hidden tax load in Canada is excessive on such necessities as housing.

A few years ago when the Hon. Barney Danson was the minister of housing, I pressed very strongly at a conference of housing ministers for an analysis on the tax structure on housing in Canada. An intermediate analysis was done which found the tax load excessive. It was tax on tax on tax. The federal government did not conduct such a study. It shied away from it. Instead it laid out the terms of reference for the Greenspan study.

Sixth, we demanded more and more from our governments, and governments grew dramatically and involved themselves in every facet of our lives. Governments at the three levels grew without attention to political ideology, rationality or prudence. Politically, we have dashed madly toward de facto socialism with the three levels of government this year expected to tax 43 per cent of the gross national product of Canada. Governments have engaged themselves massively in wealth redistribution at rates which exceed the nation's ability for wealth production. Our appetite as governments is so voracious that massive debt formation has almost overwhelmed us.

The federal government deficit this year is expected to reach $15 billion alone. As debt rises, we print more paper money and so institutionalize inflation rates in double-digit figures. What is inflation? It is a reminder of the reality that we are living beyond our means, that we are getting poorer and must increase our productivity and competitiveness as a nation. We borrow more, we print more and delay the final reconciliation with fiscal prudence, but we shall not escape. The poor, the needy, the weak, the old, suffer the most during these terrible readjustment periods. The time for readjustment is upon us whether we know it or not. This borrowing bill is nothing more than an escape from fiscal prudence that is so vitally necessary.

Seventh, politically our nation has evolved peacefully. Partisan politics has become ideologically blurred with all parties moving significantly for greater socialization and greater government involvement in the economy, regardless of political direction.

One party in Canada had its vision of splitting the country fail. In my opinion, it will try again if given the chance. Out west we have an embryonic separatist movement but the durability of the nation shall prevail.

Provincial governments have grown and gained significantly in relative posture and prominence over the national government in some cases. The national presence and dominance has receded in economic terms but has ascended in emotional and communicative fervour. Some constitutional redefinition, reemphasis and redistribution are timely. Patriation of the Constitution is a vital necessity. It has been delayed too long and permitted too many national and regional problems to accumulate.

Eighth, the world around us for a while grew in stability and then began to come apart at the joints. Political, social and economic instability is increasing. World-wide inflation is causing a severe form of economic dislocation. Economic issues resulting primarily from nationalistic protectiveness and resource-pricing policies are now foremost in the minds of world leaders. The risk that the operation of the international economy may spin out of control presents a graver threat to world order today than the nuclear arms race or the struggle between differing political ideologies. Democracy as a form of government is severely threatened by world-wide inflationary pressures.

As I see it, over the last 35 years, that in a nutshell was the situation both internally and externally and it is the situation facing Canada in the 1980s. One might ask, have we built our national economic house upon a rock or upon the sand? I think our living room is anchored on rock but our economic kitchen is on pretty slippery sand. We have many adjustments to make during the 1980s.

First, can we revise our economy and re-establish private enterprise as our motivating force for accelerated wealth production, or, at the least, can we find a workable and productive partnership between the private and the public sectors? I think we can. We are intelligent enough in Canada to do this irrespective of governments.

Second, can we contain the voracious appetites of governments and restrain their growth rates by re-establishing the community, the home and the family unit as the prime motivator, caretaker and babysitter of the social dislocations of our society? The Crosbie budget was the beginning of the movement in that direction.

Third, can we in the organized workplace rediscipline ourselves to increase productivity, innovativeness and deploy new technology to improve our competitiveness in the international marketplace? That was the intent and policy of the Progressive Conservative government a few months ago.

Fourth, can we control inflation and its ravaging effects upon the less fortunate? The Crosbie budget set a new direction in this regard, but some policies across the way may help in this regard in the future.

Fifth, can we meet the challenge of energy self-sufficiency in all forms of energy use? In particular, will we be able to meet the world food crisis resulting from environmental, climatic and population growth patterns?

Sixth, will we be able to cope with the inherent economic and social restratification needed to cope with an increasingly aging population? We must examine seriously our pension systems and anchor them to a more solid financial foundation than those to which they are now anchored.

Seventh, will we be reaching for greater brotherhood rather than increasing isolation in our urban conglomerates as we move toward a new century of civilization?

Eighth, can we meet the challenge of constitutional patriation, redefinition and renewal in the 1980s? I think we can.

• (2110)

In conclusion, may I again say that this borrowing bill before the House is a reflection of the inadequacy of the Canadian government's management system. As governments, we do not manage the national economy well. We try to administer it through bureaucracy, a guaranteed process for moving toward bankruptcy. What we need is a national government with the vision, understanding and determination to right the national wrong in our country, a faltering economic system in the richest country in the world.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) who just spoke. He covered many of the introductory remarks I would have made in addressing myself to this disgusting example of a government which has to stoop to borrow large amounts of money and to mortgage the future of our children. It borrows against the equity of the national resources of some regions of Canada in order to finance a style of government extravagance which is far beyond the ability of this country to pay in the short term. What we have from this government is another very poor example to the private sector and to the children whom we hope will grow up in this country knowing something about economic responsibility.

The statistics of borrowing and deficits of this government over the past decade have grown to horrendous proportions indeed. As a member from western Canada, I say that these statistics are depressing to all Canadians who know something about frugality, saving a penny for a rainy day. They do not believe in living beyond their means at the expense of their children in years to come.

The mood in this country is ugly. It is ugly because of the government's constitutional initiatives taken without regard for the sensitivities of the people in the regions, their premiers and Members of Parliament from those parts of the country not represented on the government benches.

The mood is ugly as well because people have had it up to their teeth with a government which fails to recognize the importance of restraint. It pretends, adopting the Keynesian philosophy of economics, that it does not matter if we incur these massive deficits because we will pay for them in the future with smaller dollars. In other words, it pretends it is incurring ever-increasing deficits on the notion that it is always easier to pay in the future than it is today. It is a sad commentary that the government assumes inflation as a given input for the justification of its deficits.

Much of what we are having to contend with is reflective of a tremendous misunderstanding of the concept of equality of opportunity on which this great country and our friend to the south, the United States of America, was based. The concept of equality of opportunity is quite distinct from the concept of equality of outcome. I wish to read some familiar words by a well known current author, one of the so-called neo-conservatives that my friend was referring to a moment ago. Milton Friedman writes, and I quote:

A society that puts equality—in the sense of equality of outcome—ahead of freedom will end up with neither equality nor freedom. The use of force to achieve equality will destroy freedom, and the force, introduced for good purposes, will end up in the hands of people who use it to promote their own interests.

That is what we are seeing in this country today, a system of patronage designed to benefit those who happen to be on the good side of the government in Ottawa, and disrespect and disregard for regions and political philosophies that may disagree with them.

How large is our deficit? The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) often uses an example. He points out that if any of us had the privilege of having a million dollars in the form of $10,000 bills, they would form a stack six or eight inches high. If you squash them down, your million dollars will be a stack of $1,000 bills only four inches high.

By comparison, if you stack those $1,000 bills to accumulate a total of $14 billion, which this government is asking to borrow, you would have a stack over a mile high some 7,000 or 8,000 feet high. If the net public debt in this country were changed into $1 bills and stacked up, they would reach to the top of the stratosphere, some 50,000 feet into the atmosphere, or 16,000 metres. That illustrates the dimension of the problem which faces Canadians and our children in the future.

I am alarmed that this government in its budget has shown no evidence of restraint, in total contrast to the sanctimonious-sounding promises in the throne speech of a few months ago. The government has shown no willingness to put into action the words expressed in the throne speech, and I quote:

My government will reduce the federal deficit in a planned and orderly manner . . . Improving the efficiency of the federal government is as important an objective of these reforms as reducing the deficit.

Balderdash! Where is the evidence shown to this House of improving the efficiency of the federal government? I will deal further with that in a few moments.

The government is spending 10 per cent more in the 1981 fiscal year than it spent last year, at a time when our gross national product is not likely to grow at all. If it does, it will grow by something less than 1 per cent. We keep hearing the myth in this House that things are bad all over, that times are tough in the United States and elsewhere. It is ludicrous for the Liberal members to blame the rest of the world, especially the Americans, for the serious plight of our economy.

All we have to do is compare the level of the U.S. deficit as a fraction of its government budget with our own to see the stark reality of the situation. The United States budget for 1980 was projected a year ago to amount to $600 billion, roughly ten times larger than our own. The projected U.S. deficit for that period was 3 per cent of that budget or about $16 billion, incidentally at the same level as our own.

It is now a year later and the Carter administration has left office. At the end of that year, Carter was projecting expenditures of some $663 billion, with revenue of $607 billion for a deficit of $56 billion. That deficit was only 8.3 per cent of government spending in that very bad year as far as the U.S. administration is concerned. By contrast, this government is advocating a deficit in the order of 20 per cent of our government budget, a deficit of at least $14 billion in the present fiscal year. Our budgeted deficit of $14 billion out of $67 billion is three times as large as the U.S. deficit per capita and Ronald Reagan says he has a crisis on his hands.

There is indeed a crisis in the United States and they recognized it much earlier than we did. Our crisis is compounded all that much more, not merely because our deficit per capita is much larger, but because our economy is so intricately tied to that of the United States.

It is alarming to realize that this government and its finance minister have reverted to the old habits of the former minister of finance in his budget, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). In the budget presented in November, 1978, the government projected a deficit of $10 billion on a budget of $50 billion for a 20 per cent deficit.

When the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) came into this House and presented his budget in December, 1979, he put forward a budget for the 1980-81 fiscal year which reduced that deficit to only 14 per cent of his budget. By 1983 to 1984, the Conservative deficit would have been reduced to 6 per cent of budgetary spending. If we compare that with the projections of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) we will find that for the same fiscal year, 1980-81, the Liberal budget shows we have gone back to a deficit in the order of one-fifth of our government budget, some $12 billion. For 1983-84, we have a deficit of some 9 per cent of projected government expenditures of $81 million. In other words, even by 1983-84, this government opposite is projecting a deficit one and a half times as large as that which the Crosbie budget projected. This is just totally unacceptable.

If one looks at that well-read report by the Economic Council of Canada called "A Climate of Uncertainty", and looks at figure Chart 1-1 on page 8 of that report, he will find that of all of the governments in the western industrialized world, the Canadian government is the only one that reports an economy where the annual percentage of output is on the decline and has been continually since 1967. The other industrialized countries have, since 1973, shown a resurgence, a recovery in their economic output as measured by their gross national product. But this government and this country is contending with an ever-diminishing output as a percentage of gross national product and it just shows the extent to which our economy is in serious, serious financial shape.

In addition to the some $14 billion the government is asking to borrow tonight to add to the $80 billion gross net public debt, it is important government members realize what they are doing to public servants in this country, because they have now accumulated a $20 billion liability to all of the public service employees in Canada, and the armed forces, Department of National Defence, and the public service, generally. There is a $21 billion book liability to those government employees and that liability is growing at the tune of $2 billion each year.

If you look at the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance in October, you will find, in table 1, on page 21 of that budget, there is an item "Annuity Insurance and Pension Accounts". This item amounts to some $2 billion, and this item amounts for the discrepancy between the financial requirements of the government and its deficit. This government deficit is some $2 billion greater than its financial requirements because it has the benefit of a low-interest loan at the rate of four percentage points, compliments of the employees of the Government of Canada. I think that is shameful. I think the employees of the Government of Canada have been sold a bill of goods. They have been promised indexed pensions, but in fact their pension funds are growing at a rate three times the rate of outlay by way of payments to retirees. This government opposite, in a very scandalous move, is borrowing now to the tune of some additional $20 billion which adds to our present level of an $80 billion net public debt, and borrowing it out of the hides of the public servants of Canada. I think it is high time that question was addressed. Those employees are entitled to a properly accredited accounting as the Auditor General has demanded, and they are entitled to sit on a board of trustees to see those contributions secured in a form of equity so that they know, if faced with any possible range of economic circumstances, that the government has the ability to honour its commitments to those employees of the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: I could go on much longer, but I know that my capable colleague, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) would like to speak. I just want to say of this approach taken by the government opposite, there is a very lopsided sense of priorities. If we look at the breakdown of the tax dollar paid by every citizen of this country to finance the extravagance and the essential programs of the government, we will see a breakdown somewhat as follows: out of that tax dollar, 39 cents go to health and welfare; 10 cents go to debt charges to cover the ever-growing cost of debt, including that portion of our debt to which we are beholden to foreign interests in order to borrow money because we cannot find enough within our own country. Communications and transport, and I presume that includes the CRTC, the CBC and the Post Office, that accounts for 7 per cent. In total, we have some 56 per cent of the tax dollar, 56 cents on every dollar in the area of health, welfare, debt charges and communications, including the CBC, the CRTC and Post Office.

By contrast, only 4 per cent of the federal tax dollar goes to education, only 2½ per cent to manpower and immigration, only .7 per cent to research and only 2 per cent to industry, trade and commerce and another 5½ per cent to general government.

What we have in this country is a lopsided set of priorities where the productive areas of our economy and the potential for future development of opportunity and expanding industry, that portion of our economy, is very seriously underfinanced and undersupported. The non-productive sector of our economy, including health and welfare, debt charges, and the CBC, is eating up more than 50 per cent of the federal tax dollar. That is at the heart of our dilemma in Canada today. We have only to look at the foolish extravagance in a concept like CBC 2, which is absolutely unnecessary at this point in time. We have only to look at the implementation of metric conversion which has imposed upon small manufacturers in my riding tremendous financial burdens in terms of additional inventory accounting, in terms of mismatching of parts and components, all tremendous economic burden to them, and let us not forget the whole question of bilingual printing.

Why do I have to receive in my office every day mounds and mounds of glossy Canadian newsprinted paper, printed on both sides, when the government could well print French and English in two separate volumes; print them in the required numbers. I would not be throwing nearly as much paper waste into my waste basket. This is paper produced by the pulp and paper industry of Canada which could well have been exported, instead of having me toss it aside and burn it because I do not happen to read the other language. It is utterly foolish. In conclusion, I would just like to recite what I consider the old prairie ethic, and I am a prairie kid.

An hon. Member: I don't even know what language you speak.

An hon. Member: Some of us like to speak two languages, Tom.

Mr. Siddon: That's fine. You do not have to read both of them at once. Policies are being made in this country by a group of people including our silver spoon socialists to the left, who were born with silver spoons in their mouths. The key examples are the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), the finance critic for the NDP, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Speaker, they are like spoiled children born into a millionaire's family, and the result is invariably the bankruptcy of the family business. These individuals have never had to build their own homes or businesses.

An hon. Member: Yes, I have.

Mr. Siddon: They have not had to work an honest day with their hands. They have never had to sweep a floor or stook bundles on the prairies. They have never worked on a production line, or a drilling rig or in a mine. They have never had to hold down two jobs, and with two wives working—or one wife—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: Two if you can get the extra one. They have never had to seek out a second job in order to pay the family grocery bills. They have never gone to bed hungry, these silver-spoon socialists in the federal offices. They never learn about the rainy day frugality which people of western Canada understand so well, particularly after the experience of the depression years. These experiences made western Canadians, prairie dwellers in particular, strong and independent. These members opposite do not believe in laying up storehouses for tomorrow. They do not understand the old adage: "You don't get something for nothing". There is no such thing as a free lunch. They do not believe that. They believe we can just use inflation to offset the growing burden of interest charges. They believe in devaluing Canadian dollars for capital borrowed from foreign interests. They are busy spending this country into oblivion with money borrowed against the future security of our children and their children and against the resources of the resource-rich regions which they are so intent on grabbing.

• (2130)

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon), for allowing me a few minutes to talk about this bill. I am sure he will now be departing and calling his one and only wife.

I want to speak briefly against this bill. I spoke seven months ago against another bill, Bill C-30. It seems a little ridiculous to rise seven months later to talk about an even bigger bill involving not $12 billion but $14 billion. In addition, I rise on a night when a debate, lasting 12 hours prior to today, is being reduced. It seems to me that it is an abuse of Parliament to be pressing this upon us, not allowing us as representatives of our constituencies to speak on behalf of those constituencies with respect to this bill.

If this government had not gone into debt as much as it has, it is obvious we would not have to rise as frequently to debate these bills. We do not like to talk about bills such as this. If there were no Liberal handouts in this bill, we would not be debating it tonight.

In 1979-80 the deficit was almost $12 billion, and now it is over $14 billion. The government admitted last fall it was spending $1 billion a month more than it took in, and now it is admitting it is spending $1.18 billion more than it is taking in. It is spending $180 million a month more than it is taking in. This is more than it was spending last year.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) tells us the deficit is going down, but why in heaven's name do we have to approve a bill, not for $11 billion, but for $14 billion? Hon. members opposite want $3 billion as a cushion. What will hon. members opposite do with the $3 billion?

Mr. Kilgour: It goes to deserving Liberals.

Mr. Wright: One of my colleagues says it goes to deserving Liberals, and so it must. We do not know where it is going because they will not tell us. At meetings we ask the Minister of Finance how he will spend the money, and he will not tell us. He says it will be spent on something. We ask him why he wants to borrow in foreign currencies, and he says he does not really want to borrow in foreign currencies, yet the government borrowed $1.1 billion last fall and has only repaid $300 million of that. However, he will not tell us what he wants to spend that money on.

Mr. Evans: Read the budget.

Mr. Wright: One year ago the Bank of Canada said there was little doubt that the key reason for the slide toward more inflation was the public policy of this government. In 1968 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised in Moncton, New Brunswick, he would control spending. He said that to large audiences. At that time the deficit was $500 million. Now it is over $14 billion. Where is the restraint? When we ask this of the Minister of Finance he says he will restrain spending. Does he not know how to restrain spending?

Mr. Kilgour: He prints the money he spends.

Mr. Wright: It is quite obvious that we have to do something to control spending, and perhaps there is a way by which all of us can control the spending of government agencies. Perhaps we as Members of Parliament should look toward controlling our spending to a percentage of gross national product. Let us say spending was 30 per cent and the gross national product was $130 billion; we could control government spending in any one year to, say, $40 billion. That means all government departments would be committed to efficiency because they would only have so many dollars. We do not have that now, we have unlimited spending. The government comes to us for authority to borrow money and, if that is not enough, it comes back and keeps coming back. This government does not know how to put a limit on spending. Therefore, it cannot build up any efficiencies within any government agencies.

I would like to conclude with a couple of remarks about the energy policy because it is part of the spending package. The government says it wants to have oil self-sufficiency. In 1974 the Prime Minister said there would be self-sufficiency by 1980. We do not have it. Now hon. members opposite say we will have it by 1990, yet the Alberta government says by 1990 we will be importing three times the amount of oil we are importing at the present time.

I could go on, but hopefully we will get another chance to debate this bill at third reading. There are aspects of this bill which are alarming. It is unbelievable that this government does not know how to control spending. Unless all of us as Members of Parliament take a stand, sooner or later the public will rebel.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have now spent seven days debating this bill to authorize the government to borrow $14 billion. I should like to recall briefly that in addition to this authority to borrow $14 billion for the financial year 1981-82 the bill contains one provision under which any borrowing authority in excess of $3 billion left at the end of the financial year 1981-82 will be automatically cancelled. However, there is also another provision under which we are asking that any borrowing authority under $3 billion left at the end of the financial year be transferred to the following financial year.

Hon. members will recall that this bill stems directly from the budget tabled last October. The borrowing authority we are now seeking will cover the $11 billion financial requirements forecast in the budget, the exchange operations provision as well as contingencies. As hon. members know, the budget strategy of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is to reduce the deficit by limiting the growth of government expenditures. The budget deficit should drop from $14.2 billion this year to $13.7 billion next year and to $11.8 billion in 1983-84.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bussières: The hon. member may laugh, but he should remember that the Canadian population put their trust in this government and that, in the few months where his government was in power, it showed so much irresponsibility that it was thrown out by the Canadian voters.

During this period, increasing sources of funds from non-budgetary accounts will help to finance the budget deficit of the government. During the second reading debate, the hon. members talked, of course, about the general direction of the economic policy of this government. However, they also referred to the national energy program. They talked about the authority to borrow in foreign currencies which is provided in this bill and which was also provided in the previous borrowing authority bill. They also talked about the direction of the monetary policy of the government, about the support given by the government to the Bank of Canada to reduce the money supply, about the impact of government deficit financing on private investment financing, and also about the debt structure in Canada.

During this debate, some members had the opportunity to explain why they disagree with this bill, and others to say why they support it. I would like to reply to some of the comments made during the debate, and I want first of all to refer to some of the points made by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). For instance, the hon. member said that the government has lost $1.1 billion by redeeming Canada Savings Bonds and attributed this redemption to a loss of confidence on the part of the citizens in their government. Mr. Speaker, the redemption of Canada Savings Bonds has a very different explanation from that given by the hon. member for St. John's West. In fact, the government is trying to reduce the part these bonds play in the total financing of the government borrowing operations or in the over-all management of the national debt. Moreover, if the hon. member for St. John's West would think back, he will remember that this was explained in detail in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs when it studied the borrowing authority bill only a few months ago.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, Canada Savings Bonds can become a costly means of financing for the government. The interest rates on the bonds follow any upward adjustment of the interest rates payable in the marketplace. However, the downward movements of those rates are not reflected in the rate of return of the bonds. Furthermore, I would like to add that savings bonds are as good as cash since they can be redeemed any time at their face value.

Mr. Speaker, I see time is running short and I would like to deal with an aspect raised by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) a few moments ago, namely, that hon. members do not have the opportunity to discuss what use the government will make of this money. I would like to remind him that hon. members not only have the opportunity to discuss what the government will do with this particular amount of money, that is the $14 billion in borrowings, but that they have many opportunities to discuss all government expenditures during consideration in committee of the estimates and also during the numerous sittings of the Committee of the Whole House on supply issues.

Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that in the seven days of debate on this bill we have had ample opportunity to hear and consider the pros and cons with regard to this piece of legislation. We now know the position of the different parties on this borrowing authority. We will also have the opportunity in the standing committee, starting this week, to discuss further this borrowing authority and the management of the government debt.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House.

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion of Mr. Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) which was agreed to on the following division:

METRIC CONVERSION

ADVERTISING BY COMMISSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent necessity. In view of the fact that government expenditures continue to accelerate at an unbelievable rate, notwithstanding promises by the government to curb spending, and having viewed some of the advertising being carried out by the Metric Commission recently on the CBC with respect to temperature readings in Celsius, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Metric Commission be advised that those few people in Canada who have accepted the metric system understand Celsius and that further juvenile advertising by the Metric Commission is nothing but a fraudulent waste of the taxpayers' money and should be discontinued immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SHIPBUILDING

ASSISTANCE FOR INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the shipbuilding and ship repairing assistance program, known as SIAP, has been cut back steadily since 1976 so that it now stands at a paltry 8 per cent from a previous subsidy level of 20 per cent. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is on record as saying that he intends to "develop, in consultation with the industry, a new form of assistance which will be cost effective and bring long lasting benefits." As Alfa-Laval Ltd. of Peterborough, to name just one company, is ready and willing to be consulted, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce take immediate action and meet with the member companies of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association and begin to develop his so-called "new form of assistance".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INCREASE IN COSTS SHARED BY MUNICIPALITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the federal government is proposing a formula that is going to result in drastic increases to municipalities in Canada as far as policing costs are concerned, in some cases as high as 100 per cent, and whereas many Canadian municipalities utilize the services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to provide municipal policing, by way of contract with the federal government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the proposed increase in cost sharing of RCMP policing be deferred until all Canadian municipalities complete a financial impact study of these proposals, and in the event that the proposal of increased costs be implemented, that it be staged over several years in order to lessen the tax impact on municipalities in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY WOMEN'S CONFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House unanimously endorse the statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister at page 7250 of Hansard, that the resolutions adopted by the Conference on Women and the Constitution over the weekend relating to the proposed Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms are "probably very sensitive and worth-while additions" to the charter.

THE LATE JOHN W. FISHER

EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On Saturday, February 14, this year, Mr. John Wiggins Fisher, centennial commissioner for Canada's 100th birthday, affectionately known as "Mr. Canada", died at the age of 68 at his winter home in Florida. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne):

That this House pay tribute to the outstanding contribution to Canada of Mr. John Wiggins Fisher, and that this House express its deepest sympathy to his family and friends.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

CALL FOR INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Interest rates paid on Canada Savings Bonds are 11.5 per cent, but the government pays 14 per cent on its market bonds and nearly 17 per cent on its treasury bills. Banks and trust companies are paying depositors 13.5 per cent on relatively small deposits and notes. Since January 1 of this year nearly $1 billion of Canada Savings Bonds have been placed for redemption. This debt has to be replaced by significantly higher interest rate costs to Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That this House does direct the Minister of Finance to increase forthwith the interest rate paid on Canada Savings Bonds to at least 12.5 per cent in an effort to stem the redemption of Canada Savings Bonds and as an indication that the minister will for once be fair to the ordinary people of Canada who have lent their savings to Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

SHORTAGE OF VETERINARY INSPECTORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since the Department of Agriculture has failed to fill job vacancies for veterinary inspectors, thus placing in jeopardy Canadian consumers, farmers, meat exporters, as well as our long-term animal disease research capabilities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House instructs the Minister of Agriculture to take action immediately to reverse the cutback policy which has allowed at 32.4 per cent vacancy rate amongst veterinary inspectors, in order that this country's ability to be assured of a safe and healthy food supply can once again be enforced.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

REVIEW OF MARITIME POLLUTION CLAIMS FUND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The maritime pollution claims fund has accumulated over $60 million in contributions, but the Canadian Labour Congress and the fishermen report that less than $1,000 has been paid in compensation for damages from oil spills. Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to review the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act governing the maritime pollution claims fund to provide easier access for fishermen's claims and to ensure that adequate contributions to the fund are made by ship owners.

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of this House in order to put a motion concerning an urgent and pressing matter.

Since the constitutional debate which is starting today is one of the most important debates to be held in this chamber in many decades and since a considerable number of members of this House have voiced their intention to take part in this debate, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert):

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of economic importance. It has been suggested that monuments of the minister responsible for the new National Energy Program be erected by Americans in Houston and Denver in honour of his overwhelming contribution to the U.S. economy.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources either withdraw the NEP, thereby inducing Canadian companies to stay in Canada, or else make himself available to American sculptors so that he may be enshrined in concrete for stimulating the U.S. economy instead of the Canadian economy.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR VIS-À-VIS U.S. CURRENCY—DECLINE IN REAL WAGES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Canadian dollar closed at 82.75 cents in U.S. terms, down 5 cents from 12 months ago when the minister assumed office. For every one cent devaluation the minister knows the cost of living in Canada goes up .4 per cent. We now have inflation of 12 per cent. In the budget document of October 28 the minister forecast the Canadian dollar would be worth slightly more than 87.5 cents in 1981. This is 1981.

My question to the minister is this: what are the minister's plans to boost the value of the Canadian dollar by 5 cents, or to keep the Canadian dollar from declining further? What are his plans in that direction? Is he going to encourage higher interest rates in Canada, or is he going to encourage changes in the new energy policy that is so damaging the dollar? What are his plans to help the Canadian dollar, and does he plan to bolster it by 5 cents to meet his forecast?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, I have no intention of accepting the suggestion of the hon. member for taking steps to bolster the value of the Canadian dollar by 5 cents. I think that is an absolutely absurd suggestion to make.

Mr. Clark: It was your own.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, this minister is truly comical. The minister's forecast is that the dollar will be in the range of 87.5 cents. That is 5 cents more than it is today. There is serious concern that it will go below its historic low of 80 cents if the minister does not take some steps.

Let me ask the minister, then, in another direction about this fact. For the fourth year in a row, the Conference Board of Canada says we are going to have a decline in real wages this year in Canada. The working people of Canada are going to fall behind for the fourth year in a row because of the cost of living increases, helped by the lower Canadian dollar and other reasons. The minister said on September 9 last year that he became minister to improve living standards. Does he believe that the lowering of the real wages of Canadian workers helps improve living standards and, if he does not, what steps does he propose to overcome this lowering of living standards and the fall in real wages this year? What steps is he taking?

Mr. MacEachen: First of all, the hon. member will be pleased to know that the Canadian dollar did firm today and exceeded the value at which it closed yesterday. As he knows, the Canadian dollar does fluctuate within a range, and I do not think he ought to become traumatized by the events of yesterday because they have been reversed to some extent by the events today.

The hon. member has talked about the decline in real wages in the country, and that decline has been evident for several years now. He knows as well as I do that the cause of the decline in real wages is due to two factors, the necessity of absorbing real increases in energy and the declining productivity in the country. These are the two factors that account for the decline in real income in Canada. There is in the budget which I presented a medium-term strategy which, in my view, over time will provide the basis for growing productivity and declining inflation, and it is on that medium-term strategy that I am pinning my hopes for a reversal of these unsatisfactory trends.

However, no action taken by any government anywhere in the world can overcome the impact on the economy of the kinds of increases in real energy prices we have experienced in Canada.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, we have to take the minister seriously; he is the Minister of Finance. I just checked on the Canadian dollar, and it is trading at 82.95 cents today, still under 83 cents. It is just as firm as is the minister and his policy, which is like jelly.

● (1420)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: That is the minister's definition of "True Dough", when the Canadian dollar is at less than 83 cents U.S. Let me ask the minister again. The "True Dough" Canadian dollar is now at 82.95 cents U.S. What steps does the minister plan to take to prevent it from sinking any further and to allow it to reach his own forecast of just three months ago that it would be trading at around 87.5 cents U.S.? He is the Minister of Finance, he is responsible, and the Canadian people would like to hear from him, as would the working people in Canada who, this year, will be more militant than ever in labour negotiations. What steps does he plan to take?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to respond to the hon. member's suggestion that some action be announced today to deal with the currency which has perceptively improved in value since yesterday—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I want to tell my hon. friend that the Canadian dollar with respect to the value of the U.S. dollar is performing reasonably well in comparison with other currencies which have been declining in value relative to the U.S. currency, today and yesterday. The hon. member should observe some of these facts before making some of the more outlandish suggestions which he has been putting together on orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Finance. Speaking about the falling dollar, which is now below 83 cents U.S., would the Minister of Finance indicate whether, as might be surmised from his earlier responses to my colleague, it is government policy to ensure that the dollar not fall below the 82.75 cent level? The government has lost $200 million in further reserves so far this month. Would the minister clarify to the House whether he believes that the dollar should not drop lower than 82.75 cents U.S.?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is playing one of the oldest and most discredited games ever played by a politician, namely, to ask the Minister of Finance to place a fixed value on the Canadian currency. It was done one time by a former Conservative minister, much to the regret of all of his colleagues during an election campaign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, again I direct my question to the Minister of Finance whose comments are well justified, judging by where they came from. May I ask him this question. Essentially, he has two options with respect to the dollar. With the rising interest rates in the United States he can allow Canadian interest rates to rise still further and thus defend the dollar, or he can choose the second option, that is, to allow interest rates to remain where they are or to go lower and see the dollar fall, which will result in more inflation in the country. Which option, would he tell the House, does he intend to pursue?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I have no difficulty in accepting the hon. member's definition of the options which have been before the Bank of Canada and the government for some months, indeed for a year. The pressure which has been exerted on the Canadian dollar, for example, through higher interest rates in the United States for most of this year, has been reflected in a balanced approach of taking some of that pressure on interest rates and on the value of the currency. There has not been at any time an exclusive reliance on either one or the other of these options. In most cases it has been a balanced approach, taking into account both economic variables.

An hon. Member: Bafflegab.

DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

GOVERNMENT'S JOB-CREATION PLANS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Special Committee on the Handicapped and Disabled produced its report which showed that the disabled in Canada are confronted with widespread discrimination and have considerable obstacles in the way of pursuing lives which provide any satisfaction. High among these obstacles is their level of unemployment which ranges between 60 per cent and 80 per cent. Considering the devastating facts revealed in this report, is the minister now prepared to admit that his own program, which will provide only 2,300 jobs, is sheer tokenism? Therefore, is the government willing to commit itself to a substantial increase in job opportunities made available to the disabled people of Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I had the opportunity to meet with members of that committee, both before Christmas and just prior to the release of its report. As I understand the findings in the report, they deal not only with direct job-creation measures but propose a number of initiatives, including affirmative action programs, which would open up a wide variety of opportunities in the private sector.

As the hon. member knows, we initiated affirmative action programs in the Public Service of Canada as a first step in dealing with discrimination in the work place. At the same time we introduced a trial program to provide incentives for private sector employment. If that program succeeds and is taken up by the private sector—and we are evaluating it closely—we will certainly be prepared to look at it further to see if it can be expanded. I think it is wise first to see if it does work and to test it out over the first year. That was certainly the response we received from a number of spokespersons for the disabled community when the program was announced; they welcomed it. We are certainly prepared to look at it as our future model for other programs.

NECESSITY FOR AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PROGRAMS IN PRIVATE SECTOR OF ECONOMY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question which is precisely on the topic the minister suggested, for the Minister of Supply and Services. The experience in the United States and other countries where they have compulsory affirmative action programs has shown that the disabled unemployment level averages around 15 per cent, compared to our unemployment levels for the disabled which average between 60 per cent and 80 per cent. Considering that on the average the federal government conducts $11 billion a year worth of business with the private sector, is the government prepared to make it a condition for a private company to obtain a government contract that it have an affirmative action program in place? That would put teeth into it.

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Indeed, Madam Speaker, I would simply like to make a minor correction. Our purchases from the private sector amount roughly to $3 billion and not $11 billion as the hon. member has just suggested. I might also indicate, Madam Speaker, that I am having discussions with the Minister of Employment and Immigration about this very interesting topic in which I have great interest. I noted as well that the committee report which was tabled yesterday makes certain recommendations in that area. Although I did not have time to review all the issues analysed by that committee I can assure the House and the hon. member that I will do so at the earliest opportunity and listen carefully to the representations made to me by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

ACTION BY DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, after the representations are listened to, we hope we can expect some action within a matter of weeks on a rather straightforward proposal which has been very effective elsewhere in the world.

I should like to turn to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I understand that all departments were requested by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to do something in the way of affirmative action for the disabled this year. I further understand that all that happened in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was that it prepared a plaque complimenting VIA Rail for its achievements in this area, which is about a $2 contribution. Is that all his department plans to do with respect to providing programs for the disabled, that is, to give a two-buck plaque to VIA Rail?

● (1430)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I have not yet had the opportunity to review the report. I think its recommendations deserve to be taken seriously. I will see what I can do to upgrade the response of my department in this important area.

After all, I have had some personal and, thankfully, temporary experience in facing up to the problems of the physically handicapped. I will say, Madam Speaker, that this is an experience which could be a good lesson to a great many people in terms of being sensitive to the needs of the physically handicapped.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

IMPLEMENTATION IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with respect to the implementation of the National Energy Program in eastern Canada. The minister knows that the government's trades training program for offshore jobs has been deferred and that the gas pipeline extension is bogged down in Quebec land squabbles and in National Energy Board procedures. The Nova Scotian government has been left alone to negotiate Fundy tidal power with the New York State authority.

Will the minister tell the House exactly what he is doing to solve the energy problems in eastern Canada and to reduce the use of foreign oil and the costs to the taxpayers of $4 billion a year? Will the National Energy Program remain a paper tiger, or will the government move to implement it and solve these problems in eastern Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the answer to the last question is yes.

[English]

DEVELOPMENT OF BAY OF FUNDY TIDAL POWER

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the other day in the House the minister indicated that he was interested in tidal power development, yet the province of Nova Scotia was meeting last week with the New York authority to advance the Fundy tidal power project which will provide 4,000 megawatts of power to Nova Scotia and eastern Canada. Will the minister tell us what his involvement is with that project and what his government's involvement is? If there is no involvement, what does he intend to do to involve the Government of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I must advise the hon. member that the government of Nova Scotia did not invite us to consult with them before going to New York. They are very welcome to go wherever they want, since it is a pretty free country.

As far as the issue of tidal power is concerned, the hon. member knows that the federal government has participated with the government of Nova Scotia repeatedly in feasibility studies. The federal government remains of the same disposition vis-à-vis this project. We are ready to review the situation in terms of the financial viability of the project at any time. Our officials have met in the past, and I am sure will meet in the future, if the government of Nova Scotia has any specific, valid projects to put forward.

AIR TRANSPORT

SALE OF NORDAIR

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning the sale of Nordair.

[English]

Madam Speaker, there are reports that the sale of Nordair is imminent, if not already a fait accompli. Can the Minister of Transport confirm that the regional carrier has already been sold, or will be sold, to primarily Quebec-based interests, specifically a group headed by Quebecair? When will the hon. gentleman be making an announcement in this regard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, no announcement is to be made at this time with respect to a sale. I must deny that. The other day, on this same subject, I was reprimanded by one of the members opposite for not having effected that sale up to now.

I want to emphasize the fact, which I have repeated a number of times, that I have selected a group called Regionair which will have first choice with respect to this airline. But that is not unconditional. I have said repeatedly that there must be a fair distribution of shares between the owners of the future integrated company. I have said a number of times that there must be an agreement, a modus vivendi, between the management of those two companies, and between the unions. I have also said repeatedly that there must be a system by which the airlines would be evaluated. Up to now these conditions have not been met, which is why there has been no sale yet.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I gather that the new name of Regionair is the name given to the group headed by Quebecair. Can the minister assure Nordair employees and, indeed the House of Commons, that both major regions which are served by the airline will be represented in the ownership? Can he also assure the House that the announcement of the sale will not be delayed until after the Ontario provincial election?

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member should learn what Regionair is, Madam Speaker. It is a holding company made up of five members, three of which are in Quebec and two of which are in Ontario. Of course, the sale will be announced when it is made.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister announced yesterday that he is once again retreating in the face of heavy pressure from the oil industry. First, there was a $40 million loan to Imperial Oil and, second, the government made a 68 per cent foreign-owned company, Dome Petroleum, presto into a 52 per cent Canadian-owned company. We now have the government reducing the minimum requirements from 75 per cent to 65 per cent in order to qualify for petroleum incentive grants. How can the minister tell this House that his energy program to Canadianize is really not breaking down?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I accept the tribute of the hon. member to the flexibility and the willingness of this government to listen to reasoned arguments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I hope that all other parties in this particular debate, whether they be provincial governments or industry, will show as much flexibility or readiness to listen to reason.

As far as the arguments put forward by the hon. member are concerned, I want to stress to him that the various measures which have been announced are in order to ensure that we will achieve self-sufficiency during this decade and that the Canadian people will end up owning the majority of that industry well before the end of this decade. That is the determination of the government. The measures which have been announced deal with energy security and Canadian ownership being achieved promptly and in an efficient way in favour of all Canadians.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, the minister calls it flexibility. I call it backing down. I am tempted to quote the remarks of the Liberal leader in Newfoundland reported yesterday in The Globe and Mail.

My supplementary question to the minister is this: the president of Imperial Oil publicly admitted today that there is an agreement giving Exxon all of Imperial Oil's research patents and information. Will this be allowed to continue under the goods and sourcing regulations and provisions of Bill C-48?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I do not think that in Bill C-48 there is any provision which would prevent the continuation of such an arrangement. The president of Imperial Oil has indicated that through this arrangement with the parent company, Imperial also had access to all research being carried on by Exxon in its parent company and around the world. Therefore, there was a pool of research and development which was available to Imperial Oil through its own contribution to Exxon. As far as I can see there is nothing illegal or improper with that arrangement.

Mr. Waddell: It is colonial mentality.

Mr. Lalonde: However, there is now an arrangement on a contractual basis, whereby the registration of the patents is made by Imperial Oil in this country rather than by Exxon in the United States. In that respect there has been progress.

Our objective is to increase research and development by all companies in this country. We will continue to do this through the National Energy Program.

DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

IDENTIFICATION OF PROBLEMS AND REMEDIES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare with respect to the subject of the disabled. The magnitude of the problem of the disabled and handicapped is not generally appreciated. Is there any mechanism in place at either the provincial level or the federal level, such as a data bank or census-taking, in order to identify precisely the problems of the disabled in such a way that appropriate measures can be considered?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, it is a fact well acknowledged by the very good report of the parliamentary task force tabled yesterday that the statistics are lacking on the subject of disabled persons. There are three specific sources of better data on which we are working. One is the Canada Health Survey carried out jointly with Statistics Canada which will provide us with more information. It is being analysed right now. The other source is the Canada Fitness Survey and we are working in co-operation with Statistics Canada for the 1986 census in order that this does include categories of collecting information that will help us to know better those who are disabled, who we think amount to two and a half million Canadians.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

OTTAWA "CITIZEN" INDOOR GAMES—ALLEGED PAYMENTS TO PARTICIPATING ATHLETES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour who has the responsibility for fitness and amateur sport. The CBC today has carried a report with respect to activities surrounding the Ottawa Citizen indoor games, which indicates that payments have been made to amateur athletes, or star athletes, up to $1,500 over and above expenses in order that they participate in this particular event.

In view of the fact that this kind of payment may in fact prejudice the amateur status of athletes in Canada, affecting our internal competition and also international competition, has the minister investigated this particular allegation, and has he also had his departmental officials make an investigation into how widespread this may be across Canada?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I have not investigated the allegation. I have a copy of the article from the newspaper here. I do not believe that my responsibilities as minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport would give me any power or any responsibility to be the guardian against shamateurism, as it used to be called, and I have no knowledge as to the accuracy of the story in the newspaper.

In any event, I would believe that it would be a matter for the sport governing bodies to determine whether there are any improper practices, and not a matter for this department.

KENT ROYAL COMMISSION

INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED SUPPRESSION OF NEWSPAPERMAN'S REPORT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I only ask the minister to report to the House in view of the fact that he has some special responsibility for amateur sports, and I would like to know what that does cover if it does not cover amateur sport.

My supplementary question, on another distressing aspect of this story is to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, to whom I understand the Kent commission is reporting. It relates to a report that there was in fact a suppression of the reporting of this particular set of circumstances by a reporter, Mr. Harper, of the Ottawa Citizen.

In view of the fact that the minister has been looking at the monopolistic activity of the newspaper industry in Canada, I want to know whether the Kent commission will in fact be looking at the ability of one-newspaper towns to receive news and reporting, unfettered by the interests of the publisher or the newspaper in a commercial concern, whether it will be reporting to the minister and then to the House on this aspect of the matter?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I am afraid I am not aware of that particular case. Of course, as a Royal commission the Kent commission operates at arm's length from the government, but I would certainly be pleased to draw that concern to their attention, and I share some of the concerns the hon. member has in that situation.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDING LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH PROSTITUTION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice in regard to his proposed legislation relating to sexual offences.

Vancouver hotel operators are maintaining that the sexual harassment of guests by prostitutes who arrive by the busload during convention times is costing the city millions of dollars in lost convention business and is damaging the image of Vancouver as a safe, clean city. I see the minister winces at that, but it is important for our city that it maintain its reputation as a safe, clean city, and not one where people cannot go out at night.

Last summer the minister promised angry citizens' groups that he would deal with the issue of prostitution in his proposed legislation on sexual offences, yet this legislation does not deal with the issue at all in a meaningful way. Why did the minister not keep his word on this matter?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, last fall I was in communication with the attorneys general on the subject and we received some different points of view from the provinces on the advisability of moving in that field at this time. The second aspect of the problem is there is a case at this moment in front of the Supreme Court and, of course, it is a tradition for the Minister of Justice to wait until the court has established the final determination of the law before proposing amendments. When the Supreme Court has disposed of that case on the subject, at that time, in relation to solicitation, we will advise the House about the next step to take.

Miss Carney: My supplementary is addressed to the Minister of Justice. I would suggest that over the last several months he has maintained that he is waiting to hear from other groups, he is waiting to hear from other provinces, and now he is waiting to hear from the Supreme Court. I would suggest he is working both sides of the street on this issue.

One of the basic principles set out in the proposed legislation, and which is not being dealt with by the Supreme Court, is the elimination of sexual discrimination, or, quoting from the minister's own information paper, "sexual offences should apply equally to both sexes". If that is the objective of the legislation, why did the minister not introduce legislation to ensure that the customer, or the "John", is prosecuted as well as the prostitute?

Mr. Chrétien: In the legislation that we have tabled in the House we are not discussing solicitation and prostitution. It deals with other aspects of the criminal code. In the case of prostitution and solicitation, I gave the reason why we have to wait, and I would like to tell the hon. member that the previous administration made their views very well known last year. They said they were not going to do anything at all; at least I am trying to find a solution.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ACID RAIN POLLUTION—POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION TO FARMERS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of the Environment. I think we know that government and industry inaction has caused the death of about one lake in ten in Ontario. Friday's bilateral interim report makes it clear beyond doubt that Canada's agricultural sector is losing productivity and money because of acid rain, and I quote briefly, "Plant tissue loss may approach 15 to 30 per cent and yield losses of 5 to 10 per cent may occur." Does the government plan to compensate farmers in Ontario and elsewhere in Canada for these losses?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, of course we are very pleased that the interim report has come forward so quickly and it has confirmed the very real and urgent pressing dangers which we have previously described. Further work is continuing and, as the hon. member knows, we expect further reports in June and a rapid conclusion of the initial stages of negotiations with the Americans. However, the question of compensation to specific people affected by this general problem is not one on which we have yet made a determination.

Mr. Fulton: Well, Madam Speaker, since 50 per cent of the acid rain falling in Canada is from Canadian sources, and the facts are clear beyond doubt that industry is profiting by not installing available reduction technologies, is it the minister's position that industrial pollution profit is more important than crop yield in Canada?

Mr. Roberts: No, Madam Speaker, that is not a fair description of the position. There is still much work to be done to trace specific consequences of specific polluting sources. A great deal of work has been done in that way, and the models which are being brought forward by computer analysis are beginning to converge, but there is not yet an assured way of determining how an initial polluting source affects what particular place of deposition.

THE CONSTITUTION

INCORPORATION OF REFORM OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice on the Canada Evidence Act. The minister will be aware that a task force has spent, I suppose, hundreds or thousands of hours studying a new Canada Evidence Act; meetings have been held across the country by a great many people over the last, I believe it is three or four years, and have now received a draft, I understand, of the proposed new Canada Evidence Act. Would the minister tell us, Madam Speaker, if the considered recommendations of this task force were taken into consideration when the government wrote its proposed evidence features into the constitutional resolution, and if so whether they were given the full weight that the amount of work that went into them would appear to warrant?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, when we were in the committee and we looked at some aspects of the charter of rights, this was debated. We received a lot of evidence and the government has made some recommendations. Of course, we kept in mind the views of the people who have been consulting on the Canada Evidence Act, but in fact the charter of rights is part of the answer and I think that this aspect of the charter receives very strong support from all the members of the committee, including some on that side of the House.

Mr. Kilgour: The minister received the report very recently and, if my information is correct, he would not have had time to consider recommendations of these people who have been working now for several years. Can the minister tell us when he received the proposed report and whether in fact he gave it any weight whatsoever in his proposed charter of rights?

● (1450)

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I do not know about the date. My advisers have been in touch with the people involved with the study for a long time, who knew the background of their thinking. But we had to have a charter of rights and we have to make it as good as possible. That is why we are pleased to be before this House today with the resolution to give a charter of rights at last to all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: You mean to have the British do it.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS BOARD

DECISION RESPECTING OTTAWA HOME OF JOHN G. DIEFENBAKER

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment as the minister responsible for the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada. My question relates to the home of the late Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker in Rockcliffe, about which the minister made an announcement yesterday. I must say I am very unhappy about the approach of the minister in releasing a written statement as opposed to coming into the House and telling us the government's intention or in advising us of the decision of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada regarding the request made by the former Prime Minister of Canada.

The minister is suggesting the board made its decision on the basis that Mr. Diefenbaker lived in his home on Lansdowne Avenue in Rockcliffe neither during the period he was prime minister nor when he was leader of the opposition, but did that Board understand, appreciate, or take into consideration that we have a residence for the Prime Minister at 24 Sussex Drive, and a residence for the Leader of the Opposition which is called Stornoway? In neither case could Mr. Diefenbaker have lived in the home he resided in while he was a Member of Parliament for Prince Albert. Did the board take into consideration all of the things which were of great significance to Canadians which were achieved during the period of time he resided in Rockcliffe Park?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Yes, Madam Speaker, I am sure it did.

Mr. Coates: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of the Environment. Was the minister speaking for the government when he indicated the request in Mr. Diefenbaker's will to all Canadians was rejected, or was that a statement from the board itself? Is that the position of the government in so far as the home in question is concerned?

Mr. Roberts: Madam Speaker, the recommendation was one which came from the board. The board considered the request. The board, as you know, is made up of distinguished historians and citizens of Canada. They came to the decision on their own. They made a recommendation to me and I accepted the recommendation which they presented to me.

Mr. Coates: May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister, Madam Speaker?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville.

Mr. Coates: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister about a former prime minister of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The usual practice is to allow a question and a supplementary. I am not treating the hon. member in a different way from anyone else. The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville.

Mr. Coates: Madam Speaker, I realize you are not treating me in a different way, but this is a question to the present Prime Minister of Canada about a former prime minister.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

THE CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY RESPECTING VOTING PROCEDURE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who, I am sure, along with all of us, has heard the statement made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party that he was prepared to allow a free vote on the constitutional issue. Of course, we realize that he had to because he had to drown revolt in the ranks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: My question to the Prime Minister is this: could he tell us, without his usual figure skating evasion, whether or not he is prepared to allow a completely free vote on his own side of the House on the issue of the Constitution?

An hon. Member: They do not know what that means.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, when the hon. member was asking his question I saw the Leader of the New Democratic Party was shaking his head no, that he was not the author of the words ascribed to him.

Mr. Stevens: What is your answer?

Mr. Trudeau: I wish they would argue among themselves.

Mr. Epp: We heard the clang over here.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I preface my supplementary question by saying that was not figure skating—he might better have been a ballet dancer—that was dancing all around the question. Will the Prime Minister tell the House, when his Minister of Justice has been quoted in the press as saying that he realizes the majority of Canadians are against what the government is doing with respect to the Constitution but the government will go ahead anyway, how he can justify having the government go ahead in spite of an obvious democratic opinion against what he is doing? Can the Prime Minister define to us where this is democratic? Is he going to go ahead or is he going to listen to the people of Canada for a change?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I have quoted to the opposition before the hon. member for Provencher who on behalf of the Conservative Party—it may not be the opinion of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville—said that it was popular will that we have patriation, that we have an amending formula, and that we have a charter of rights. That is exactly what is before the House at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

ALCOHOL AS PROPELLANT FOR AUTOMOBILES MANUFACTURED IN CANADA

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact Brazil produces 150,000 cars per year which run on alcohol, and Volkswagen has been developing cars to run on alcohol since 1973 when OPEC countries first raised oil prices, will the minister consider asking the automobile manufacturers to produce cars which use alcohol as fuel and provide some incentive to Canadians to convert their cars from gasoline to alcohol?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it is possible to produce methanol or gasohol from biomass of various kinds. There are pilot projects being considered at the moment and there are funds available for that purpose. Discussions are being held with various parties in various provinces. I believe announcements will be made in the next while about certain pilot projects in this country.

THE CONSTITUTION

VOTING PROCEDURE WITH RESPECT TO RESOLUTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to that put by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville. I understand that the Leader of the Liberal Party usually takes his marching orders from the Leader of the New Democratic Party, on these questions, or vice versa. I am sure that the Prime Minister would not want to leave a matter of such gravity unanswered simply because he was not sure what the thinking of the Leader of the New Democratic Party is at the moment, so I would like to put the question to him as a matter of policy. Is it the policy of the Government of Canada to recommend to the House of Commons, directly or through House leaders, that there be a free vote on the constitutional resolution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, other parties are free to conduct their affairs as well they can.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: There has never been any doubt on this side of the House that this was a government measure. It was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. It has been very central to the debates in this Parliament since the last election, and it has been made quite clear to members on this side that this was a government measure and that people were expected to vote freely for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, we have seen the Prime Minister avoid free votes before on questions like capital punishment, and the way in which he introduced that measure into the House of Commons as a practical matter. This is a very important question. We all know that there are very many members of the Liberal Party who are unhappy with elements of the constitutional package—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —just as there are many members of the New Democratic Party who are, and just as the hon. member for Edmonton East in our party is unhappy with the position that I have taken as the leader of our party. I am prepared to treat this matter as one of fundamental seriousness. Is the Prime Minister prepared to treat the Constitution of Canada as being sufficiently free that he will allow his Members of Parliament, members who sit as Liberal Members of Parliament, to vote their conscience, to put their province or their principle ahead of their party on this question? Is he saying that there will be no free vote among the Liberals? Is that what he is saying?

• (1500)

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Madam Speaker. I hope very earnestly that members on this side will vote according to their consciences and I so authorize them to do so, if I have any authority on the matter. I hope they do not cop out as the opposition has done on this fundamental matter, which means bringing the Constitution to Canada after 54 years of failure, bringing it in with a charter of rights which the people want.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. DOMM—PATRIATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

ADJOURNMENT—ADJUSTMENT OF SITTING HOURS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have had consultations with my colleague on the other side. We have been asked not to sit on Friday, February 27. We have come to an agreement and we will recoup the hours as stated in the following House order.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the House shall not sit on Friday, February 27, 1981;

That on Thursday, February 26, 1981, Monday, March 2, 1981, and Thursday, March 5, 1981, the hours of sitting shall be from 2.00 o'clock p.m. to 7.00 o'clock p.m. and from 8.00 o'clock p.m. to 10.00 o'clock p.m.;

That on these days private members' business shall be taken up at 9.00 o'clock p.m. instead of at 5.00 o'clock p.m.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Does it agree to the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is so ordered.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,804, 1,978, 1,979 and 1,980.

CORE FUNDING GRANTS TO NATIVE COUNCIL OF CANADA

Question No. 1,804—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Does the government have a policy in making Core Funding Program grants to organizations, like the Native Council of Canada, if the government does not know how many individuals are actually paid up members in the council and, if so, what is such policy?

2. How is the leadership of the council elected and what criteria were placed in determining the word Métis as to a blood relation to aboriginal people?

3. (a) Who are the members of the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee (b) how many members are paid up (c) what is the committee's source of funding other than from the government?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Secretary of State as follows: 1. The principles behind the Secretary of State Department's programs for native citizens derive from the following objectives and sub-objectives of the citizenship branch as a whole: to promote and assist the development of effective Canadian citizenship and to co-ordinate the formulation and development of national policies affecting citizenship; to encourage an appreciation of the peoples, regions and cultures, official languages and institutions of Canada; to promote a greater understanding among groups and individuals and to combat prejudice and discrimination; to encourage and assist effective citizens' participation and to facilitate access to government and other societal institutions with particular emphasis on the socially and culturally disadvantaged segments of the population.

The Core Funding Program is particularly related to the latter sub-objective, and is based on the premise that the provision of sustaining support to Metis and non-status Indians and Inuit organizations enables the native citizens of Canada to formulate and present their views and to develop program and policy proposals to further their own development. The Native Council of Canada is the national body in Canada which represents the Metis and non-status organizations. Past studies have indicated that there are approximately 500,000 Metis and non-status Indians who identify socially and culturally with their Indian ancestry.

2. (a) All organizations comprise an elected executive and a board of directors with the exception of some status Indian organizations, the boards of which are elected chiefs of bands. The Native Council of Canada's board is comprised of the presidents of the member provincial and territorial organizations.

(b) The Metis are those individuals of mixed Indian and white blood which are described in Indian communities as those people who identify socially and culturally with their Indian ancestry.

3. As the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee is a private organization, it would be inappropriate for the government to respond to this question. Answers to this question should be sought from the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee.

RETIRED ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,978—Mr. Knowles:

1. THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice) moved:

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

CONSIDÉRANT:

que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications, il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

Short title

4. This Act may be cited as the Canada Act.

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin,

sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

Version française

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

Titre abrégé

4. Titre abrégé de la présente loi : Loi sur le Canada.

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement trouvé coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

The Constitution

Continuation of existing constitutional provisions

21. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any right, privilege or obligation with respect to the English and French languages, or either of them, that exists or is continued by virtue of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada.

Maintien en vigueur de certaines dispositions

21. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet, en ce qui a trait à la langue française ou anglaise ou à ces deux langues, de porter atteinte aux droits, privilèges ou obligations qui existent ou sont maintenus aux termes d'une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada.

Rights and privileges preserved

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

Droits préservés

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province,

Langue d'instruction

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province, ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Recours

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits et libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

General

Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

25. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and (b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Dispositions générales

Maintien des droits et libertés des autochtones

25. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne porte pas atteinte aux droits ou libertés — ancestraux, issus de traités ou autres — des peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment :

a) aux droits ou libertés reconnus par la Proclamation royale du 7 octobre 1763;

b) aux droits ou libertés acquis par règlement de revendications territoriales.

Other rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

26. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada.

Maintien des autres droits et libertés

26. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne constitue pas une négation des autres droits ou libertés qui existent au Canada.

Multicultural heritage

27. This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

Maintien du patrimoine culturel

27. Toute interprétation de la présente charte doit concorder avec l'objectif de promouvoir le maintien et la valorisation du patrimoine multiculturel des Canadiens.

Rights respecting certain schools preserved

28. Nothing in this Charter abrogates or derogates from any rights or privileges guaranteed by or under the Constitution of et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

Engagement relatif aux services publics

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

PART IV

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

PARTIE IV

CONFÉRENCES CONSTITUTIONNELLES

Constitutional conferences

35. (1) Until Part VI comes into force, a constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once in every year.

Conférences constitutionnelles

35. (1) Avant l'entrée en vigueur de la partie VI, le premier ministre du Canada convoque au moins une fois par an une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) A conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

Participation des peuples autochtones

(2) Sont placées à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) les question constitutionnelles qui intéressent directement les peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment la détermination et la définition des droits de ces peuples à inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada. Le premier ministre du Canada invite leurs représentants à participer aux travaux relatifs à ces questions.

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

Participation des territoires

(3) Le premier ministre du Canada invite des représentants élus des gouvernements du Yukon et des territoires du Nord-Ouest à participer aux travaux relatifs à toute question placée à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) et qui, selon lui, intéresse directement le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

PART V

INTERIM AMENDMENT PROCEDURE AND RULES FOR ITS REPLACEMENT

Interim procedure for amending Constitution of Canada

36. Until Part VI comes into force, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and by the legislative assembly or government of each province.

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

37. Until Part VI comes into force, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and by the legislative assembly or government of each province to which the amendment applies.

Amendments respecting certain language rights

38. (1) Notwithstanding section 40, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada

(a) adding a province as a province named in subsection 16(2), 17(2), 18(2), 19(2) or 20(2), or

(b) otherwise providing for any or all of the rights guaranteed or obligations imposed by any of those subsections to have application in a province to the extent and under the conditions stated in the amendment, may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and the legislative assembly of the province to which the amendment applies.

Initiation of amendment procedure

(2) The procedure for amendment prescribed by subsection (1) may be initiated only by the legislative assembly of the province to which the amendment applies.

Initiation of amendment procedures

39. (1) The procedures for amendment prescribed by sections 36 and 37 may be initiated either by the Senate or House of Commons or by the legislative assembly or government of a province.

PARTIE V

PROCÉDURE PROVISOIRE DE MODIFICATION ET RÈGLES DE REMPLACEMENT

Procédure provisoire de modification

36. Avant l'entrée en vigueur de la partie VI, la Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes et par l'assemblée législative ou le gouvernement de toutes les provinces.

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

37. Avant l'entrée en vigueur de la partie VI, les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement peuvent être modifiées par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes et par l'assemblée législative ou le gouvernement de chaque province à laquelle la modification s'applique.

Modification concernant certains droits linguistiques

38. (1) Par dérogation à l'article 40, toute modification de la Constitution du Canada :

a) soit portant insertion du nom d'une province aux paragraphes 16(2), 17(2), 18(2), 19(2) ou 20(2),

b) soit prévoyant l'application à une province, aux conditions précisées dans la modification, de tout ou partie des droits ou obligations visés à ces paragraphes, peut être prise par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de la province concernée.

Initiative de la procédure

(2) L'initiative de la procédure de modification visée au paragraphe (1) appartient à l'assemblée législative de la province concernée.

Initiative des procédures

39. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 36 et 37 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes, à l'assemblée législative d'une province ou au gouvernement de celle-ci.

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution made or other authorization given for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

Possibilité de révocation

(2) La résolution adoptée ou l'autorisation donnée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Limitation on use of interim amendment procedure

40. Sections 36 and 37 do not apply to an amendment to the Constitution of Canada where there is another provision in the Constitution for making the amendment, but the procedure prescribed by section 36 shall be used to amend the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and any provision for amending the Constitution, including this section.

Restriction du recours à la procédure provisoire

40. Les articles 36 et 37 ne s'appliquent pas aux cas de modification constitutionnelle pour lesquels une procédure différente est prévue par une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada. La procédure visée à l'article 36 s'impose toutefois pour modifier la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, ainsi que les dispositions relatives à la modification de la Constitution, y compris le présent article.

Coming into force of Part VI

41. Part VI shall come into force

(a) with or without amendment, on such day as may be fixed by proclamation issued pursuant to the procedure prescribed by section 36, or

(b) on the day that is two years after the day this Act, except Part VI, comes into force, whichever is the earlier day but, if a referendum is required to be held under subsection 42(3), Part VI shall come into force as provided in section 43.

Entrée en vigueur de la partie VI

41. La partie VI entre en vigueur à la première des dates suivantes :

a) avec ou sans modification, à la date fixée par proclamation prise conformément à la procédure visée à l'article 36;

b) deux ans après l'entrée en vigueur, exception faite de la partie VI, de la présente loi.

Il demeure entendu que, si la tenue d'un référendum s'impose conformément au paragraphe 42(3), la partie VI entre en vigueur conformément à l'article 43.

Provincial alternative procedure

42. (1) The legislative assemblies of seven or more provinces that have, according to the then latest general census, combined populations of at least eighty per cent of the population of all the provinces may make a single proposal to substitute for paragraph 45(1)(b) such alternative as they consider appropriate.

Proposition de remplacement

42. (1) Les assemblées législatives d'au moins sept provinces dont la population confondue représente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins quatre-vingts pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces peuvent présenter une proposition commune en vue de remplacer la procédure prévue à l'alinéa 45(1)b).

Procedure for perfecting alternative

(2) One copy of an alternative proposed under subsection (1) may be deposited with the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada by each proposing province within two years after this Act, except Part VI, comes into force but, prior to the expiration of that period, any province that has deposited a copy may withdraw that copy.

Possibilité de mise au point

(2) Chaque province concernée peut déposer le texte de la proposition visée au paragraphe (1) auprès du directeur général des élections du Canada dans les deux ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur, exception faite de la partie VI, de la présente loi, étant entendu qu'elle peut retirer le texte au cours de cette période.

Referendum

(3) Where copies of an alternative have been deposited as provided by subsection (2) and, on the day that is two years after this Act, except Part VI, comes into force, at least seven copies remain deposited by provinces that have, according to the then latest

Référendum

general census, combined populations of at least eighty per cent of the population of all the provinces, the government of Canada shall cause a referendum to be held within two years after that day to determine whether

(a) paragraph 45(1)(b) or any alternative thereto approved by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and deposited with the Chief Electoral Officer at least ninety days prior to the day on which the referendum is held, or

(b) the alternative proposed by the provinces,

shall be adopted.

fait tenir, dans les deux années suivant l'échéance des deux ans, un référendum pour déterminer laquelle des procédures suivantes sera adoptée :

a) celle qui est prévue à l'alinéa 45(1)b) ou l'éventuelle procédure de remplacement adoptée par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes et dont le texte est déposé auprès du directeur général des élections au moins quatre-vingt-dix jours avant la date du référendum;

b) celle qui fait l'objet de la proposition des provinces.

Coming into force of Part VI where referendum held

43. Where a referendum is held under subsection 42(3), a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada shall be issued within six months after the date of the referendum bringing Part VI into force with such modifications, if any, as are necessary to incorporate the proposal approved by a majority of the persons voting at the referendum and with such other changes as are reasonably consequential on the incorporation of that proposal.

43. Dans les six mois suivant la date du référendum visé au paragraphe 42(3), une proclamation sous le grand sceau du Canada est prise en vue de faire entrer en vigueur la partie VI, éventuellement modifiée dans la mesure nécessaire pour incorporer la proposition approuvée par la majorité des votants et pour intégrer les autres aménagements justifiés qui en découlent.

Entrée en vigueur de la partie VI après référendum

Right to vote

44. (1) Every citizen of Canada has, subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society, the right to vote in a referendum held under subsection 42(3).

44. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote au référendum visé au paragraphe 42(3); ce droit ne peut être restreint que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Droit de vote

Establishment of Referendum Rules Commission

(2) If a referendum is required to be held under subsection 42(3), a Referendum Rules Commission shall forthwith be established by commission issued under the Great Seal of Canada consisting of

(a) the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada, who shall be chairman of the Commission;

(b) a person appointed by the Governor General in Council; and

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

Procédure normale de modification

45. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'une majorité des provinces; cette majorité doit comprendre :

(i) chaque province dont la population, avant la date de cette proclamation, représentait, selon un recensement général antérieur quelconque, au moins vingt-cinq pour cent de la population du Canada,

(ii) au moins deux des provinces de l'Atlantique,

(iii) au moins deux des provinces de l'Ouest, à condition que la population confondue des provinces consentantes représente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de l'ensemble des provinces de l'Ouest.

Définitions

(2) Les définitions qui suivent s'appliquent au présent article.

«provinces de l'Atlantique»

«provinces de l'Atlantique» Les provinces de la Nouvelle-Écosse, du Nouveau-Brunswick, de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard et de Terre-Neuve.

«provinces de l'Ouest»

«provinces de l'Ouest» Les provinces du Manitoba, de la Colombie-Britannique, de la Saskatchewan et de l'Alberta.

Modification autorisée par référendum

46. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par un référendum tenu dans tout le pays conformément au paragraphe (2) et lors duquel la modification a été approuvée :

a) d'une part, à la majorité des votants;

b) d'autre part, à la majorité des votants de chacune des provinces dont les résolutions de leurs assemblées législatives suffiraient, avec les résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes, à autoriser la proclamation mentionnée au paragraphe 45(1).

Authorization of referendum

(2) A referendum referred to in subsection (1) shall be held where directed by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada, which proclamation may be issued where

(a) an amendment to the Constitution of Canada has been authorized under paragraph 45(1)(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons;

(b) the requirements of paragraph 45(1)(b) in respect of the proposed amendment have not been satisfied within twelve months after the passage of the resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons; and

(c) the issue of the proclamation has been authorized by the Governor General in Council.

Autorisation de référendum

(2) L'ordre de tenue du référendum mentionné au paragraphe (1) est donné par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada. Cette proclamation est assujettie aux conditions suivantes :

a) le Sénat et la Chambre des communes ont, conformément à l'alinéa 45(1)a), adopté des résolutions autorisant la modification de la Constitution du Canada;

b) les dispositions de l'alinéa 45(1)b) applicables au projet de modification n'ont pas été observées dans les douze mois suivant l'adoption des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

c) le gouverneur général en conseil a autorisé la proclamation.

Time limit for referendum

(3) A proclamation issued under subsection (2) in respect of a referendum shall provide for the referendum to be held within two years after the expiration of the twelve month period referred to in paragraph (b) of that subsection.

Délai de tenue du référendum

(3) La proclamation visée au paragraphe (2) fixe la tenue du référendum pour une date comprise dans les deux ans qui suivent l'expiration du délai de douze mois mentionné à l'alinéa b) de ce paragraphe.

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

47. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

47. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement peuvent être modifiées par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province à laquelle la modification s'applique.

Amendments respecting certain language rights

48. (1) Notwithstanding section 54, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada

(a) adding a province as a province named in subsection 16(2), 17(2), 18(2), 19(2) or 20(2), or

(b) otherwise providing for any or all of the rights guaranteed or obligations imposed by any of those subsections to have application in a province to the extent and under the conditions stated in the amendment,

Modification concernant certains droits linguistiques

48. (1) Par dérogation à l'article 54, toute modification de la Constitution du Canada :

a) soit portant insertion du nom d'une province aux paragraphes 16(2), 17(2), 18(2), 19(2) ou 20(2),

b) soit prévoyant l'application à une province, aux conditions précisées dans la modification, de tout ou partie des droits ou obligations visés à ces paragraphes, ces dans les trente jours suivant l'expiration du premier délai de trente jours ou, faute de recommandation, parmi les personnes que le juge en chef estime qualifiées.

Duty of Commission

(3) A Referendum Rules Commission shall cause rules for the holding of a referendum under section 46 approved by a majority of the Commission to be laid before Parliament within sixty days after the Commission is established or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first ten days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

Mandat de la commission

(3) Dans les soixante jours suivant sa constitution, la commission référendaire fait déposer devant le Parlement les règles applicables à la tenue du référendum visé à l'article 46, qu'elle aura approuvées par décision majoritaire. Si le Parlement ne siège pas, ce dépôt s'effectue dans les dix premier jours de séance ultérieurs.

Rules for referendum

(4) Subject to subsection (1) and taking into consideration any rules approved by a Referendum Rules Commission in accordance with subsection (3), Parliament may enact laws respecting the rules applicable to the holding of a referendum under section 46.

Réglementation du référendum

(4) Sous réserve du paragraphe (1) et compte tenu des règles déposées conformément au paragraphe (3), le Parlement peut légiférer pour réglementer la tenue du référendum visé à l'article 46.

Proclamation

(5) If Parliament does not enact laws under subsection (4) respecting the rules applicable to the holding of a referendum within sixty days after receipt of a recommendation from a Referendum Rules Commission, the rules recommended by the Commission shall forthwith be brought into force by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Proclamation

(5) Faute par le Parlement d'avoir légiféré, conformément au paragraphe (4), dans le délai de soixante jours suivant le dépôt des règles visées au paragraphe (3), celles-ci sont mises immédiatement en vigueur par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada.

Computation of period

(6) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the sixty day period referred to in subsection (5).

Computation du délai

(6) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (5), ne sont pas comptés les jours pendant lesquels le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Rules to have force of law

(7) Subject to subsection (1), rules made under this section have the force of law and prevail over other laws made under the Constitution of Canada to the extent of any inconsistency.

Valeur de force de loi des règles

(7) Sous réserve du paragraphe (1), les règles arrêtées en vertu du présent article ont force de loi et l'emportent sur les dispositions incompatibles de toute autre règle de droit fondée sur la Constitution du Canada.

Limitation on use of general amendment procedure

51. (1) The procedures prescribed by section 45, 46 or 47 do not apply to an amendment to the Constitution of Canada where there is another provision in the Constitution for making the amendment, but the procedures prescribed by section 45 or 46 shall, nevertheless, be used to amend any provision for amending the Constitution, including this section.

Restriction du recours à la procédure normale de modification

51. (1) Les articles 45, 46 ou 47 ne s'appliquent pas aux cas de modification constitutionnelle pour lesquels une procédure différente est prévue par une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada. La procédure visée aux articles 45 ou 46 s'impose toutefois pour modifier les dispositions relatives à la modification de la Constitution, y compris le présent article.

Idem

(2) The procedures prescribed by section 45 or 46 do not apply in respect of an amendment referred to in section 47.

(2) Les procédures prévues aux articles 45 ou 46 ne s'appliquent pas à la modification visée à l'article 47.

Idem

Amendments by Parliament

52. Subject to section 54, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate or House of Commons.

52. Sous réserve de l'article 54, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat et à la Chambre des communes.

Modification par le Parlement

Amendments by provincial legislatures

53. Subject to section 54, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

53. Sous réserve de l'article 54, la législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de celle-ci.

Modification par les législatures provinciales

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

[English]

He said: Madam Speaker, on February 8, 1865, the Hon. George Brown stood in the Parliament of Canada at the beginning of the Confederation debates and said:

It is with no ordinary gratification I rise to address the House on this occasion. I cannot help feeling that the struggle of half a lifetime for constitutional reform—the agitations in the country, and the fierce contests in this chamber—the strife and the discord and the abuse of many years—are all compensated by the great scheme of reform which is now in your hands.

Today it is with very great pride that I rise to begin the concluding stage of debate on another great scheme of constitutional reform. Like George Brown over a century ago, I am convinced that once the strife and the discord and the abuse are all behind us, all Canadians will be compensated by the reform which we are now debating.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, four months ago, I spoke at length in the House about the efforts that were made and were frustrated on several occasions for one reason or another during the past 53 years to repatriate our Constitution. I then introduced in the House a proposal to repatriate our Constitution and entrench a charter of rights and freedoms as well as the equalization principle and the notion of sharing, with an amending formula and mechanism designed to solve constitutional deadlocks.

I then proposed that the resolution be deferred to a joint Commons and Senate committee. That resolution, Madam Speaker, has been considerably altered in recent months and much improved, thanks to the hard work of 132 members of Parliament and 51 senators who have taken part since October in the proceedings of that committee, and thanks also to submissions made before that committee by some premiers, by a large number of national organizations, by individuals, thanks to submissions which were made to the committee in writing, to hundreds and hundreds of reports which were considered and to experts that were heard. And today, Madam Speaker, we have before us a resolution which has been drawn up in Canada by Canadians for the Canadians of today, and especially for the Canadians of tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I should like first to pay tribute to the permanent committee members, especially to the co-chairmen, Senator Hays, who with his experience and his sense of humour has been a great help to the committee, and more especially to the member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal) who has chaired most of the sittings and performed an impossible task with dignity, neutrality and ability, thus earning the admiration of committee members, and particularly of all Canadians who followed those proceedings on television.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. Chrétien: During this debate we will hear a great deal about process, and I will speak to that issue later, but I want to speak more about substance. Because long after the debate over process is finished and forgotten, Canadians will take pride in the results of the substance of our work.

If anything came out of the joint committee, it is that Canadians want their common values and common aspirations to be reflected in their Constitution. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms, in my view, is a good reflection of the hopes and dreams of Canadians.

I want to examine the charter both in terms of what it holds out for tomorrow and also in terms of how it fits into the stream of Canadian history. While our history is one in which we can take pride, it is not without its stains. Some of these were brought out very clearly during the hearing by the joint committee of testimony from representatives of our native people, of the National Association of Japanese-Canadians, francophone groups outside of Quebec, of anglophone groups in Quebec, of the National Black Coalition, of women's groups, of the handicapped.

● (1510)

Part of our task is to recognize the injustice of the past, to say "never again shall rights be trampled upon". Part of our task is to ensure that the enormous evolution in our values is reflected in our Constitution. That is what we are doing today. We are building a modern Canada for tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: In the modern Canada of today with a vast administrative apparatus spanning two levels of government, we need a charter of rights to ensure that rights common to all Canadians are protected from the actions of both levels of government. Indeed, few have been as clear as the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who told the joint committee, and I quote:

It is the popular will that we have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms for the Canadian people, embedded in the Constitution.

What does this charter of rights and freedoms do? First, it protects fundamental freedoms common to all Canadians, such as freedom of speech, of religion, of the press, freedom to vote and to hold office.

Second, it guarantees the freedom of Canadians to establish residence and seek a job anywhere in Canada without regard to provincial borders. It establishes one Canadian citizenship rather than ten provincial citizenships.

Third, the charter guarantees legal rights of Canadians. It sets out protections against arbitrary arrest, against unreasonable search and seizures. It enumerates the rights of an accused to be defended by counsel, to have a fair trial, not to be forced to testify against oneself. It ensures that where evidence is obtained illegally it shall not be used where, by so doing, the administration of justice would be brought into disrepute.

Fourth, the charter enumerates equality rights. In this area, the government is taking bold steps forward in order to ensure the equality of women before and under the law. Indeed, when I announced new wording for section 15 on January 12, Mrs. Doris Anderson called it a major step forward. She said: "I think the government's come a very long way toward meeting the consensus of Canadians, including women." We agree with Mrs. Anderson that it is a major step forward.

Yesterday, in this House, the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith), assisted in his task by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), tabled a moving report on the handicapped. Today I take pride in presenting a constitutional charter which specifically prohibits discrimination against the handicapped.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Fifth, the charter deals with language rights, and I will speak to this in a few minutes.

Sixth, the charter makes specific reference to the multicultural nature of our society. At the time of confederation our forefathers established a new country based on two great cultures, the English and the French. Over the last 114 years, Canada has been enriched by the contribution of immigrants from the four corners of the globe. And because Canada prides itself on not being a melting pot, we are establishing today that the charter "shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians". As far as the government is concerned, the multicultural heritage of Canadians is such an essential fabric of our nationhood that it must be reflected in our Constitution.

Seventh, the project of constitutional reform which we have before us recognizes for the first time, and I am proud to say so, the aboriginal and treaty rights of the Indian, Inuit and Metis peoples of Canada. It is not possible to correct generations of injustice merely by adding words to a Constitution. But it is possible to take a giant step toward a new beginning so that, in the words of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), "together we will build a great nation."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I would like to tell the House that in all the lists of rights that I have spoken about so far, we have not changed in any way distribution of power in Canada. The limits that we are imposing today are limits that we are imposing on both levels of government. We think that in a modern society like ours the rights of the citizen should be protected in the Constitution so that the errors of the past—there were not many, but there were a few—will not be repeated, and I stress that point, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I should like to deal now with the language issue and, in this regard, maybe I should direct my remarks especially to my fellow Quebecers. On May 20 of last year, we elected together to remain faithful to our Canadian heritage and roots. During the referendum campaign, the Prime Minister, other Quebec members and I indicated that if Quebec were to remain part of Canada, we would have to change Canada. I, for one, played a very active part in that campaign, and in every speech I made I insisted that if the No side won, we would carry out in-depth reforms. As I said then and repeat now, we intend to patriate our Constitution, adopt a proper amending formula, enshrine both English and French as the official languages of Canada, make sure that from now on the rights of Canadians to deal with federal institutions and courts are protected by the Constitution, and include the Canadian legislation on official bilingualism in the Constitution.

I also indicated a while ago that we would provide francophones outside Quebec with the constitutional right to set up French schools in all Canadian provinces, and that the price to pay for this right which has not been recognized for the past 114 years in Canada would be to grant anglophones in Quebec the same education rights as those being granted to francophones outside Quebec.

I also said that we shall enshrine in the Constitution the notion of sharing because it is part of the fabric of Canada. There have been good years and lean years, depending on the occupation or the area in which one lived. What has made Canada a great country is the fact that when times were hard, the rich have always helped the poor. That is why we are still here together today.

Madam Speaker, the reform we are proposing today follows the trend set by great francophone leaders who were concerned with the whole of Canada, men like Laurier, Henri Bourassa, André Laurendeau and others. I am thinking of Laurier, the first French Canadian to lead our country, the statesman who always claimed that all of Canada was the country of French Canadians. I am thinking of Henri Bourassa who had this to say, and I quote:

> Our very own nationalism is the Canadian nationalism based on two peoples, on the distinctive traditions that duality implies. Our country, our land, is all of Canada.

When Henri Bourassa spoke of constitutional reform, he insisted on the right of all minorities to be taught in their own language everywhere in Canada. Fifty-five years ago today, speaking to the Ontario premier, Bourassa said, and I quote him in English:

● (1520)

[English]

We claim for ourselves the right, natural, historical and constitutional, to have the French language taught to our children in all public schools attended by a sufficient number of them in every province.

[Translation]

That is what Henri Bourassa said 55 years ago to the Ontario premier.

Madam Speaker, that is exactly what we are doing at last in Canada today. We believe it is important to maintain the people's mobility in the country because there are Francophones in every province of Canada and because there are also Anglophones who feel at home and comfortable in Quebec. Here is what Henri Bourassa said about minorities outside Quebec, and I quote:

It is not only the right but the strict duty of the province of Quebec to ensure the conservation of French groups in other provinces, because their survival is the guarantee of its own existence. Let us not forget it. If by an attitude of despicable selfishness or in the torpor of a foolish apathy, we allow the other French groups within confederation, those scattered shoots of the main stem, to perish one after another, we shall be soon attacked on our own ground. We shall suffer the punishment of cowards and egoists.

I am thinking also of André Laurendeau and his struggle to recommend true bilingualism at the federal level. The Official Languages Act is his legacy. Today, Madam Speaker, we are making it a constitutional guarantee, and because such progressive advances have been made in Canada, what would have triggered a revolution 15 years ago now goes almost unnoticed.

Madam Speaker, that is what we are offering Canadians at this point in our history: a new foundation on which to build a more united, a more generous and a greater country. But to achieve this, we must patriate the Canadian Constitution. Why patriate it? As we all know, Canada is now a sovereign and independent country, but it is still lacking something very important. We cannot amend our own Constitution in Canada. It was in 1867 that British colonies joined together to form our country Canada which gradually achieved its independence. This was done by the Balfour declarations of 1926 and the Statute of Westminster of 1931 which virtually recognized Canada's independence. The government of the day, under Prime Minister Bennett, asked that the Constitution remain in Britain until such time as an amending formula could be worked out. According to the historians and the government of the time, it should have been a matter of six months or at most one to two years.

Since then, Madam Speaker, six prime ministers and 11 constitutional conferences have tried to solve the problem. Among those prime ministers, there were some Liberals and some Progressive Conservatives. In the short time that I have been in public life there have been many near misses. In 1963, just as I was getting ready to enter politics, Mr. Fulton, the Minister of Justice under Mr. Diefenbaker, was working on a solution. Subsequently, one of our good friends, the late Guy Favreau, spent a considerable amount of time trying to achieve consensus with the Fulton-Favreau formula and at one point he thought he had found the answer, but again it escaped him.

The House may recall the fiery period between 1968 and 1971 when all governments attended the Toronto conference convened by Messrs. Robarts and Johnson which continued thereafter because Ottawa and the provincial governments had to reach agreement, which is what was achieved in 1971. For the first time in Canada's history there was agreement. Unfortunately it did not last. A few days later, for reasons altogether foreign to the amendment formula, Quebec withdrew its consent.

And in 1975 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a renewed attempt at repatriation, and repatriation alone. That did not lead anywhere so we introduced Bill C-60 in 1978 which again ended in failure. This time we began in 1980 and we are now in 1981. Fifty years of efforts, Madam Speaker, 50 years of failure. That is why we are committed at this time to settle an anachronistic situation wherein we have to go through the British parliament if we want to amend our own Constitution. We must set aside the rule of unanimity and break out of that vicious circle; and the only way to do that is to act as we are doing now, although it may not be the easiest way, Madam Speaker.

[English]

As I said in French, it is not the easiest way, but it is the only way. It is the only way because we tried under the best circumstances last summer right after the referendum. Hon. members will remember the good wishes of this House of Commons before and after the referendum when I went to the provinces telling them that we wanted to have some changes in Canada. All of them said, "Yes, yes, yes," but in September there was no agreement. The hon. member for Provencher tells me in good faith to try again, but I am telling this House that that is just wishful thinking.

Mr. Clark: That's not true.

Mr. Chrétien: I will come to that point later on when I talk about the many amending formulas proposed by the opposition.

I am telling this House that the amending formula we are proposing at this time is the best one, and I will tell the House why. First, we are patriating. We are making the Canadian Constitution a Canadian document. After that we will not impose an amending formula. There will be the rule of unanimity for two years. During those two years the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers will have to meet twice to try to find an amending formula. If for whatever reason seven provinces representing 80 per cent of the population—and we have agreed that will be the amending formula—do not agree, the matter will be put to a referendum, and the people of Canada will settle it once and for all. I think that is the only way to get out of that problem.

At the moment it looks as though there is not a great chance of agreement among the provinces. There was a meeting in Montreal last week. Not all ten premiers attended. Only six of them did, and they could not agree on an amending formula. They were not even able to agree on whether or not to go to London. If there is not agreement, we will have the Victoria formula. It is not a perfect formula, but it is the only one which received the approval of 11 first ministers in 1971. In their wisdom they all agreed at that time. So there must be something good about it.

According to the Victoria formula, first, the provinces will have a legal say in the amending process. That is the last time we are going to London. Now we can go unilaterally. When the patriation process is over, under any of the amending formulas which have been proposed, as well as under the one we are proposing now, the provinces will have a say in the amending process.

Second, the Victoria formula gave the regions a say in the amending process. The rule is an easy one; it is the rule of 25 per cent. Any province which has to date 25 per cent of the population has a right to agree or disagree on any new amendment. Any province which some day will have 25 per cent of the population will acquire the same rights. In terms of the regions, as was agreed by the western premiers in 1971, if two provinces representing 50 per cent of the population of western Canada agree, the Constitution can be amended.

The situation is somewhat different in the maritimes. We wanted to apply a similar rule to the one which applied in the western provinces under the terms of the Victoria formula, but after listening to the first ministers of the maritime provinces, we accepted what we called the Henderson amendment according to which two out of the four maritime provinces will have to give their consent. This is the amending formula. Under the amending formula there is sufficient regional protection to ensure that nothing is imposed on the maritimes or on the western provinces unless, in the case of the western provinces, two provinces representing 50 per cent of the population agree with it. The rule is different for the maritimes, but that is the way they want it. So it would be impossible for central Canada to impose its views on the rest of Canada in constitutional matters.

Why do we need in Canada an amending formula that has some flexibility? The answer is very simple, that what we are doing today is the start of the process, not the end. Much reform has to be undertaken in Canada in future in terms of constitutional powers. For example, take the upper chamber, the Senate. The senators themselves prepared a report a few months ago in which they proposed some reforms of the upper House. In my meeting with the ministers last summer, one item took up a lot of time when we were trying to find a formula for reforming the upper House which would result in more adequate regional representation. This was not resolved, but some agreement will have to be reached on it.

We will have to constitutionalize the Supreme Court. There was much discussion of this issue and we came very close to a conclusion this summer. That will have to be done some day. The problem of family law will have to be clarified. The re-examination of the division of powers in Canada will have to be tackled. Some powers could be delegated to the provinces and, in the best interests of Canada, some powers could be transferred to the national government. It is very important also that we strengthen our economic union in Canada.

In short, Madam Speaker, what we are proposing to the people of Canada, through their elected representatives from all across the country in this chamber, is very simple. It consists of the patriation of the Canadian Constitution at long last, and the entrenchment in the Constitution of a charter of rights and liberties, a dream which has been referred to in this House so eloquently and so many times by the former member for Prince Albert. It contains the entrenchment of native rights in the constitution, equalization payments, the notion of sharing, the recognition of the ownership of the resources by the provinces in a very clear test, coupled with the power given to the provinces to tax the resources and to pass laws in interprovincial trade, within, of course, federal parameters. Also, as I said earlier, it includes an amending formula which will permit the many changes which will be brought about in the future.

I should like to tell you, Madam Speaker, that when you look at the distribution of powers, as mentioned in the motion before us, the only changes you will find are in favour of the provinces in matters of resource ownership, indirect taxation and interprovincial trade. It will be the first time that, under the law, the provinces will have to be consulted and will have to agree to any change in the Constitution. We are imposing on the national government a new obligation to grant to those provinces which are less fortunate equalization payments and other schemes to ensure the sharing of Canada's wealth in the future.

In my judgment, our scheme is not that complicated, and I think that the Canadian people are strongly in favour of it. Of course, the Canadian people do not like the unilateral obligation which we have to accept, but when you are the government you have to take your responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: There was very little quarrel in the committee regarding these matters. Everyone from across Canada who came to testify before the committee said that we needed a better charter, that we have to inscribe into the charter new protection for certain rights and other such proposals. We have not been able to satisfy all the demands but this is a good beginning. It will clearly establish that what is important in Canada is that we are all equal. We can be different in our society and be equal at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: What was the reaction of the opposition? I think it is a very amusing situation and at the same time not very amusing. I have seen the work of the members of the opposition in the committee and I have to tell you, Madam Speaker, that when there was no disagreement or protest on the substance, opposition members made some very good contributions, and I thank them for that. They worked very hard, especially the hon. member for Provencher.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: But—

Mr. Crombie: But what?

Mr. Chrétien: I will come to the hon. member soon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: From the start they all said they were in favour of patriation. That was a great step forward. Some months or a year ago there was no accord on patriation, and it was the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), seconded by the hon. member for Provencher, who put forward a motion, which was approved in this House at the time of the referendum, that we should patriate the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: All hon. members are in favour of a charter of rights. That is very important. I quoted the very eloquent words of the hon. member for Provencher, and we are all in agreement. Hon. members are in favour of enshrining native rights in the Constitution. They want to enshrine equalization payments. All that we have done is for the good, but it is not complete and we should do more. But they say the process is wrong. What are they proposing? They have two or three amending formulas but the process is always the same.

According to their formula, the entrenchment of the rights of the natives, of the rights of women, of the handicapped, and so on, will be subject to the approval of the provinces. The Premier of Manitoba, the province of the hon. member for Provencher, said, not only in Canada but in London, that he will never accept any section of the charter of rights in Canada. How can they be in favour of a charter of rights and an amending formula which will ensure that there will never be a charter of rights that will apply to all Canadians; that we have different classes of Canadians in Canada; that in some provinces there will be some natives who will have aboriginal rights and other natives who will not have them; that women in some provinces will have some rights and other women will not have the same rights in other provinces; that the handicapped will have some protection in some provinces and will not have the same protection in other provinces? That is the ambiguity of the opposition.

● (1540)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I understand their embarrassment; they have to face their responsibilities and the reality. They were all there that Friday morning when we agreed to entrench in the Constitution the protection of aboriginal rights. It was one of the high moments in my political life, when I saw the unanimity in that committee and some members were crying because there was a commitment on that day that the injustices of the past were at last to be corrected.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Suddenly there is an amending formula from Mr. Tremblay which nobody understands as yet. There was, for four months, an amending formula; they might have another one four months later; from the eighth to the twelfth month there was a third possibility. And if there was no agreement, it was "unanimity"; again going back to Mr. Lyon to get approval to entrench any rights in Canada. It was not understandable.

Today they come with a new amending formula; they had a new release yesterday. Now it will be an amending formula with no more unanimity; it is something new. This can be studied at another time, but I think the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) will probably deal with that, with great pleasure, tonight, or the Minister of State for Science and Technology and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) will deal with that tomorrow. But the new amending formula is something different this week; now it is seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population. But have they consulted Mr. Lougheed about it? Have they consulted Mr. Lyon about it who said in London that it is unanimity or nothing? What about Mr. Lévesque, their new friend?

An hon. Member: Or Claude Ryan?

Mr. Chrétien: What about Roch La Salle? I hope he will come and explain it in this House.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, you cannot have both ways. One cannot claim to be in favour of a charter of rights—I can guess what is going to happen soon in the House; hon. members will stand each in turn and move preposterous amendments to the charter of rights and then the next day they will vote against it. I find that situation ridiculous. What we are doing here is not a charade. If we want to have a charter of rights it must apply to all Canadians.

[English]

I want to tell the opposition that what we are doing here is not a charade. As I said in French, I expect them to come forward with new amendments, all sorts of great amendments, as was the case with the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) yesterday concerning women's rights. But the fact of the matter is that the rights of women will never be protected in the Constitution if there is not unanimity; if there is not unanimity, according to the so-called Vancouver formula provinces will opt out of the protection of the rights of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: What I am telling you, Madam Speaker, is that it is not the kind of Canada I want. I have worked on that.

I think that our projects are the best we can produce today. They are not perfect. As I said so many times in the committee, perfection is the enemy of good. But these are good projects, projects which will realize the hopes of a lot of Canadians.

[Translation]

I must say, Madam Speaker, it is time we took our responsibilities in this House. This problem has been around for 53 years, 54 now. Of course, some professors will have more than one pet subject to expatiate upon in coming generations, and I refer to Mr. Dion, but I feel enough has been said about it. To me, this is a unique opportunity. Last spring we decided we would make major changes. Some will ask who is speaking for whom. I must say, Madam Speaker, that there are 282 Members of Parliament in this House who were elected by all Canadians in the last election. The House has transformed us all. How come? Because when we come to the Parliament of Canada, we take a different view from the one we had before. I am proud to admit that I have been transformed by the 18 years I have been a Member of Parliament, because I got to know my country. I have been through the whole country from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Victoria and from Windsor to the North Pole, in my ministerial capacity. There are not many parts of Canada I have not visited. I learned to know my country. This is a country with a fantastic future. And this is also a country that has to attune its institutions to today's needs. This country has become adult. This is a country which must bring home its Constitution. This is a country which, because of its diversity, must guarantee the helpless in our society equal rights and safeguards the like of which are not commonly found in other democratic countries.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, this is an historical occasion. We have the occasion, after the traumatic experience of the spring, to build for our children and the children of our children a better Canada—a Canada which will recognize the diversity and equality which should be in our society, a Canada which will protect the weakest in society, a Canada which will have forever two official languages in the Canadian Constitution, a Canada which will be an example to the world. This is a generous land; now we have the occasion to make it even a better country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, four months ago I rose in the House and commented on a proposed resolution concerning the Constitution and the motion which established the parliamentary committee to study that resolution. At that time I expressed very grave reservations over the course of action the government was adopting and over the contents of that resolution. Other members of the official opposition and I entered the entire constitutional debate from the perspective that, despite our profound opposition to the process, we would approach the work of the committee in a positive spirit of co-operation and with the determination that the process should be open to more Canadians.

● (1550)

I would like to take this opportunity, Madam Speaker, to thank the co-chairman of the committee for the work he did, namely, the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: I know it is not generally the tradition of this House to do that, but I want to say to all members that I believe he dispatched his duties not only with the care his office required, but also with a fairness we all appreciated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: If I might, Madam Speaker, I would like to make reference to a few other hon. members. One is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Irwin) with whom I have had very deep divisions. While those divisions remain, I appreciate that although the divisions were there in the committee they did not become, nor have they remained, in the area of personal animosity, which I feel has no place in the parliamentary system.

I also enjoyed the loquaciousness and the homilies of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey). While at times they were a little lengthy, I believe they were always in the interests not only of protecting his party's position but also his vision of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: There are two other members I want to mention. One is the member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar). Although he holds partisan positions other than my own, I developed an appreciation of his vision of Canada's north when I was minister of Indian affairs and northern development. He was able to express his vision in the committee.

I would also like to mention the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I am sure that times were difficult for him from day to day. I know he presented his case with the sincerity which the occasion demanded.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: That being the case, Madam Speaker, what do we have before us at the present time? I want immediately to lay out before you and all members of the House that we regard this debate as a serious one. We will treat it in that manner. We also will expect, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said on October 2, that every member who wishes to participate on this side of the House will have that opportunity at this stage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Additionally, we will act in a very straightforward manner. As well, we will move a minimum of amendments regarding the matter which is now before us.

Having said that, our divisions and our differences with the government run deep, revealing differing views on the nature of Canada. We are today in one of those periods of profound difference between the major parties in this House, between the Liberal Party of the Prime Minister and our own party. Our concern that the proceedings of the committee be televised and that the deadline of the committee be extended beyond December 9 was a means to allow more Canadians to be heard. It reflected both our desire to ensure that Canadians would be heard and also that they would be involved. We are proud and pleased that our determination forced the government's hand on both issues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Our amendments in the committee reflected our positive spirit of co-operation. We offered a number of substantial changes to the charter of rights, some of which were adopted to help create a document which we believe would better reflect the fundamental nature of our nation and provide the best possible guarantee of the rights of all Canadians.

We offered a number of other amendments as well, all of which were rejected. Together these amendments would have provided Canadians with an alternative to the government's unilateral and divisive course of action. Thus, four months later we find ourselves before this House, again commenting on a resolution which is certainly better than the one proposed in October; but despite the tremendous work of the committee, those aspects of the proposed resolution threaten the very nature of the Canadian federation. Those parts of the resolution have not been changed. In its most controversial aspects it is the very same resolution. As a result, our principal objections to the resolution remain unchanged.

From the outset the prime focus of our objections has been on the unilateral and divisive nature of the government's action. On October 6 I feared that the government's determination to act alone and to ask Westminster to make substantial changes to our Constitution would create an atmosphere of distrust, of disunity and open confrontation. I believe then, as I believe today, that this is a step which would block the future progress of constitutional reform. While the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) says there will be other steps, I do not believe that those steps are possible and that they will result in positive action, in light of the atmosphere which has been created.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: This resolution is creating an atmosphere which will disrupt any possibility of genuine reform taking place in the coming years. The government's proposal is based on a false premise. That premise is this: the approach is based, fundamentally, on the view that the federal system no longer works and that progress cannot come from consensus. That is the basic premise upon which the government has launched this proposal—that consensus does not work and that negotiation will not result in success. The premise is that, ultimately, the negotiations will fail. On that premise the government justifies acting arbitrarily and unilaterally, and in face of the opposition not only of the provinces but also of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: With all respect to the Minister of Justice, it is important to note again that today the provinces, the partners in this federation, are continually created as straw men. One can then go ahead and knock them down. That is not the way to build a consensus. It is not the way to build a federation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: As well, the government insists on incorporating a referendum proposal which would give the central government unilateral power to change our Constitution without any reference to either the elected legislatures or the elected governments of any province. That is what is proposed.

On that false premise the government is asking another country, Great Britain, to vote on basic Canadian rights and freedoms. It is a blatant surrender of Canadian sovereignty which the Liberals seek to justify on grounds that we could never reach agreement on these important questions in Canada. That is the false premise upon which the government is proceeding.

We are told over and over again that Canadian federalism is a 54-year record of failure. The Prime Minister loves to tout this 54-year deal. It was 53 years when we started; it is now 54. The record shows that since 1927 this matter has come up in federal-provincial relations on 48 different dates. That is less than a day for every year. The Prime Minister continues to insist that it has been a record of failure. The interesting point is that, of those 54 years, he sat as chairman for 13 of them.

In fact, the Canadian federal system about which I have spoken, when run by reasonable governments—and I stress "reasonable governments"—has produced agreements on hospital insurance, medicare, the Canadian Pension Plan and equalization. In fact, that process could go on to the point where every agreement between the provinces and the federal government could be reached one way—by agreement, negotiation and consensus. That success story is suddenly to be put in the waste can and we will now be moving unilaterally. The genius, Madam Speaker, of Canadian federalism is that it does work; that is the genius of it. When reasonable governments and reasonable leaders allow it to work, it works.

• (1600)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: The system fails only when its leaders let that system down; it works when its leaders make it work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: And so we reject the Liberal idea that after 114 years of our Canadian partnership, suddenly that partnership should be abandoned and our federal system should be replaced by a form of unitary state. Our federal traditions grew out of the nature of this country. There is no other system that could thrive here, no other system that can suit our diversity. That nature has not changed. Suddenly, to tear it up, to tear up federal traditions, would be a risk.

To tear up those federal traditions that are at risk now, Madam Speaker, is threatening to tear up our own country, especially the region from which I come. The events of the past four months have confirmed that the Prime Minister will replace the tyranny of unanimity, as it has been called, with the chaos of unilateralism. That is his solution. He says, "You do not like tyranny, so we will give you chaos."

The political atmosphere in Canada now is highly charged and Canadians have witnessed wrangling and outright confrontation between the federal and provincial governments. We are now in legal battles, and the disturbances among Canadians in different regions of the country is something all of us in the House should be aware and take note of.

In my responsibilities within my party I have received numerous letters, telegrams, telephone calls from Canadians in all walks of life and from all parts of the nation. Many of the people sending those messages do not really know much about the substance of what the government is doing, and that is not a deprecating statement, Madam Speaker. But what they convey is that they are deeply concerned by the unnecessary hostility and division which is being created in our country. That is the message that they are giving to us.

As well, Madam Speaker, this is not another flag debate, as the members of the government like to say it is. Charters of rights, amending formulae, referenda are more than just symbols; they are the practical rules, the practical tools, by which our nation will be governed in the future. All laws, and in particular fundamental constitutional laws, are not worth the paper they are written on unless they reflect and represent a true consensus. The government, in its determination to impose this resolution, has forgotten that laws and lawmakers must never just command, but rather in a democracy they must command respect for themselves and also for what they are doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Throughout the constitutional debate our party has attempted to strike the compromises which are necessary to put an end to division and hostility within Canada, hostility which is now spreading between Canada and the United Kingdom. It has poisoned the atmosphere which the government has now created, and as a result we have attempted, sincerely, Madam Speaker, to offer alternative solutions to the government's unilateral action.

For example, we have encouraged the holding of another first ministers' conference on patriation and the amending formula; we have proposed a way in which the final details of an amending formula, which already commands substantial support, the Vancouver consensus, could be finalized here in Canada. We have also adopted a position which would invite and encourage the provinces to change their position and adopt a charter of rights.

Our alternatives would have ensured that Canada's Constitution would be amended here in Canada, and that all substantial changes would command respect from Canadians from sea to sea and to Canada's northern sea.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, the government has rejected every one of those proposals, every one of those compromises, every one of those thoughts, because they are determined to act in the face of opposition not only from the opposition party, but also from a number of the provinces and, most importantly, in face of the opposition of the majority of Canadians.

So, Madam Speaker, the unilateral action, the divisiveness of the government's proposition, remains unchanged and for that reason we oppose it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: As I have said, Madam Speaker, the Conservative party has offered Canadians a positive alternative, a way out of the needless conflict, strife and division which is being created in Canada and between Canada and Great Britain. I emphasize that we have a positive alternative, and I emphasize the difference in approach between the so-called constructive approach of the New Democratic Party and ourselves.

Let us take a look at the contribution of the New Democratic Party just for a minute, Madam Speaker. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) is going around the country claiming victory for the constructive approach of his party.

An hon. Member: Shame, shame!

An hon. Member: Because he is right.

Mr. Epp: He is claiming personal responsibility for nearly every amendment which was made to the charter and to the resolution.

An hon. Member: You are against it.

Mr. Epp: That has struck another chord. Madam Speaker, the very claim the NDP make, that they were the ones to propose, is a direct insult to the many interest groups which were able to persuade the government and the members on the committee to introduce the favourable amendments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: The fact is that out of the 43 amendments the New Democratic Party proposed in committee, the majority report that they supported and voted for claims that they only received two amendments; and they claim that they were the architects of two amendments.

What is the record, Madam Speaker? In October the New Democratic Party members told us that they had grave concerns over the amending formula. They offered four changes to the amending formula. All of them were rejected. In October the NDP members told us they had grave concerns over the minority education provision. That amendment was rejected.

An hon. Member: The most concerned party of Canada.

Mr. Epp: In October again they told us there were serious flaws in the legal rights. Fourteen proposed changes were all rejected.

Again, in the same month, they expressed fears that the charter did not provide adequate protection for women and natives. They moved six additional amendments; all were rejected.

An hon. Member: By the Tories.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I find it somewhat humorous that the member from New Westminster says we rejected them; I did not know we had a majority in the committee. I always thought, Madam Speaker, it was the NDP-Liberal coalition that had the majority. I must say, Madam Speaker, that if that is the manner in which he taught political science, we are in trouble.

An hon. Member: If that is the best you can do, Jake, try again.

Mr. Epp: What, then, Madam Speaker, was the constructive approach of the NDP? I want to say there were constructive measures that they took. For one, they did move on the matter of indirect taxation respecting resources. It is interesting to note when the Leader of the New Democratic Party says there will be hundreds of millions of dollars accruing to the provinces that that position is not concurred in by the federal-provincial relations minister of the province of Saskatchewan. In fact, at the caucus of the New Democratic Party he was asked that very question. He was asked how much money would accrue to the province of Saskatchewan which could not be obtained either through direct taxation or through the royalty regime.

• (1610)

Mr. Broadbent: Tell us about Alberta, Jake.

Mr. Epp: He cupped his two fingers and said "this much", which is zero. That is what the NDP got.

There were other "positive" approaches which the New Democratic Party took. For example, it was through its efforts that fundamental property rights for Canadians were not included in the charter. It was the New Democratic Party that moved that the word "information" should be replaced by the word "communication" in the charter; it got that too. Obviously the price of New Democratic Party support for this resolution which undermines and disrupts the nation was very low.

What about the government's proposal? First of all, let us take a look at the amending formula. The Minister of Justice said there would be a two-year interim period—if we actually look at the clause it is approximately a period of two years—and after that period of time there would be the unanimity factor. What happens after that? Our Constitution will then be changed by a formula discussed in Victoria ten years ago. We rejected the Victoria formula on October 6, 1980. The reasons we gave then are the same reasons we reject it today.

The Victoria formula represents an outdated consensus which no longer corresponds to the reality of the Canada of the 1980s. I believe there is a better consensus on which to build. I believe the Vancouver consensus is a better consensus and a more up-to-date one. Quebec had already rejected large parts of the Victoria agreement in 1971, but as early as 1974 various provinces went on record and stated very clearly that they could not accept the Victoria amending formula. That was seven years ago. The government is still trundling it forward as a consensus project. It has never been the case. That is a political argument, I grant that. But aside from that, there are certain criteria which an amending formula must meet. If it does not meet those criteria, it is not worth entrenching in the charter.

What are those questions and how does the Victoria formula measure up? The first question one must ask about an amending formula, that basic change to any constitution or federal state, is this: Is the proposed amending formula fair? I reject the Victoria amending formula because it does not recognize the equality of the provinces. It is not fair. It provides a perpetual veto to certain provinces regardless of population while creating different classes of provinces in the Atlantic region and again different classes of provinces in western Canada. Discrimination on the basis of population already exists in the House of Commons and in the Senate. I accept that. But do we have to use the power of the veto, which the majority will now enjoy, at all steps of an amending formula in the federal state? The same population discrimination should not be involved in the provincial requirement.

If we think about most other federal states, including our neighbour to the south, such a double discrimination does not exist. In amending the constitution of the United States, the requirements are: population only in the House of Representatives, a two-thirds majority in the Senate and 75 per cent support of state legislatures. What happens is that North Dakota, the state immediately to the south of where I live, is treated as an equal partner with California in the American federation. At no time can the residents of North Dakota argue that they are less American than the people who live in California.

On the test of fairness, the Victoria formula fails. The Victoria formula must also be rejected because it is no longer acceptable to the majority of the provinces, not only because it discriminates between the provinces, but because it creates difficulties in the fields of resource jurisdiction so critical to the western and the Atlantic provinces.

Second, does the formula work? What the government proposes is that Canadians accept an amending formula which no longer corresponds to the Canada in which we live. It takes no account of the tremendous population growth in western Canada and the potential for growth in the Atlantic region. It also contains no provision as to how this regionally-based formula will be adopted in the future when some of the people living north of sixty in the Yukon and Northwest Territories in their wisdom decide to become full partners in the Canadian confederation. The Minister of Justice did not answer that question. What happens with regional imbalance when the other areas of Canada want to join our federation? Based solely on the Canada of 1970, the time the Victoria formula was created, it does not reflect the Canada of 1980. I suggest it is even short of the potential of what this country could be by 1990 and on.

Since this resolution was proposed in October, the government has made a change in the permanent amending formula. The Minister of Justice made that point as well. We supported this change to drop the population requirement in the Atlantic provinces to deal Prince Edward Island back into confederation. The earlier proposition had dealt that province out; the government now dealt the province back in. I do not think the government should take any credit for dealing Prince Edward Island back in after having first dealt them out, but they like to take that credit as well. That being the case, there is no accounting for population in the Atlantic region, which is fine.

What is the situation in the west? If we are to be equitable, the 50 per cent population requirement, it could be argued, should not apply to the west either. Such an action, for example, would strengthen the position of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, but it would deny any additional responsibility to British Columbia and Alberta which they might have or should enjoy because of increased numbers, if you are going to stay in the numbers game, as the Victoria formula does. No matter how you manipulate the formula, the fact remains that you cannot bring equity to a formula that is based on inequity.

I ask the second question: Does the formula work? Let us examine whether the Victoria formula would have worked if it had been in place. The Victoria formula requires the consent of the province of Quebec, the consent of the province of Ontario, the consent of any two provinces in Atlantic Canada and the consent of two provinces in western Canada enjoying at least 50 per cent of the population in that region. We talk about protecting rights and protecting Canadians. At the time medicare was proposed, the province of Quebec rejected it. When the Canada Pension Plan was proposed, the province of Quebec rejected it. Had the Victoria formula been in existence at those times, neither of those programs, which Canadians wanted, would be presently a fact of life in Canada. Those social benefits that Canadians have enjoyed over the years would be seriously jeopardized, if they had existed at all. Therefore, our objection to Victoria remains and the reasons we have given are obvious.

What about the interim amending formula? The minister spoke, for example, of the two-year period of an interim amending formula whereby the rule of unanimity would apply. Then, of course, the Damocles sword would come down on all of us and we would have Victoria. Last October I was skeptical of the government's provision of an interim amending formula. It was suggested then, and continues to be argued, that this two-year period would allow the federal government and the provinces to agree to a permanent amending formula.

The hon. member for Lincoln made one of his favourite arguments in committee. I say to him with the respect he knows I have for him that this provision can only be viewed as the two-year illusion. The proponents of the two-year illusion ignore a number of facts. They ignore the poisoned atmosphere in which federal-provincial discussions will take place over those two years. That will be there. No one can or will deny that. Moreover, they believe that the federal government will bargain in good faith even though the amending formula, which it always indicated it wants, will come into effect if those discussions break down. Therefore it is a Catch-22 situation. No matter what happens, the feds win. That is the kind of deal they talk about during those two years. There is no hope for agreement as long as the federal government holds every trump card.

The question can then be asked whether the committee has been able to alter this situation in any way. The answer is clearly no. I expressed the concern earlier that just to get a provincial alternative on the ballot, it would take eight provinces with 80 per cent of the population to agree. That population figure ensured an automatic veto for both central Canadian provinces.

I must admit one change that took place. Canadians will be pleased to know that the government responded to these concerns by reducing the number of provinces required from eight to seven while maintaining the 80 per cent population factor. Therefore, the veto remains. Despite the work of the committee and the various amendments that were moved, the two-year interim amending formula remains what it always was, a two-year illusion.

What about the referendum proposal? I find it rather humorous. The Minister of Justice and I have had many exchanges. He talks about the number of formulae we have. I do not know whether the pot has the right to call the kettle black, but I could talk for some time about his own amending formulae.

What about his referendum proposal, which is another amending formula? Alongside its outdated amending formula which I have already talked about, the original resolution contained a radical new proposal to have constitutional amendments accepted or rejected by referenda. Many members of my party and the New Democratic Party as well were concerned with the potentially dangerous effects of a referendum permanently entrenched in the Constitution. Questions were put to the Prime Minister in the early days asking whether this will be used once only as a deadlock-breaking device, which in sincerity a number of those members thought its purpose was. We found out in committee that is not its purpose. The purpose is to have it as a permanent amending formula and to keep it in the proposal so that at any time the federal government, whenever it chooses to declare deadlock, can trigger the referendum proposal.

I have serious concerns about that proposal. Why? In particular, any government of the day might get a hollow victory which might be won in a referendum, given the tremendous powers at the disposal of any federal government and the powers of persuasion in the media, for example; or given the charismatic role of a political leader of the expenditure of public moneys without accountability until the deed is done. All those things can be used in a referendum.

I remain deeply concerned that the government has chosen to retain a permanently entrenched referendum in its Constitution. While claiming they are trying to build a united Canada, members of the Liberal Party and New Democratic Party, if the New Democrats vote for this provision, are including a divisive mechanism for changing the Constitution which would pit provinces against the federal government, regions against regions and Canadians against Canadians. They are supporting, New Democrats included, a referendum proposal which could turn constitutional change into a perpetual win-lose situation and will certainly create continued confrontation between the various governments in Canada. All Canada want a Constitution which unites us. Let us not put into the Constitution that which divides.

Where do I go for the best evidence? On October 7, 1980, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville had this to say about the proposal. I quote him from page 3344 of Hansard. Referring to the referendum, he said:

> I think that has very dire consequences because it means the government can control the timing of the question, which is very important. One can put his finger to the wind and take public opinion polls. If the timing is right, there is a referendum . . . What would happen if there were a tremendous energy crisis, a conflict in the Middle East and a tremendous increase in the price of energy, if there were a national referendum to have more control of resources going to the federal government? That may even carry in two of the western provinces representing 50 per cent of Canadians. For example, it could isolate the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta which have the oil. It is dangerous to have the power which exists in sections 42 and 46 of the resolution.

● (1630)

The numbers obviously have been changed in the new resolution but the statement, I think, remains what it was.

What about a second authority? When the Premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Blakeney, appeared before the committee on Friday, December 19, 1980, he said in part:

> As now drafted, a referendum could be used to by-pass provincial legislatures entirely. There is no requirement that the provincial legislatures be consulted or in any way involved in future constitutional changes before a referendum is called. Thus, there could be a situation of an extensive and well-publicized debate in the federal Parliament, little or no debate in provincial legislatures, a well-orchestrated appeal to the public and then a referendum, what I call the "instant referendum". This clearly undermines the position of democratically elected provincial legislatures.
> The instant referendum, as I say, has all the charm of instant mashed potatoes, and it must be changed.

An hon. Member: You must be choking on the NDP federal position.

Mr. Epp: I was. In order to keep the record straight, I want to refer to the position that the Premier of Saskatchewan took. There was a change made regarding the instant referendum: they could not trigger it until 12 months had expired after the declaration of deadlock. For clarity and a straightforward approach, I want to put on the record that that change took place after those comments. But the basic argument against referendum remained the same.

Those people who support the referendum proposal argue that the people should be consulted and should be trusted. It should be clear by now that our party is not afraid to allow Canadians to participate in the making of their Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: We have done all we could, and we will continue in this process, to open up any means whereby government will be opened up and Canadians will be included.

If the people should be trusted, as we say they should be, why, for example, is there no inclusion in the resolution of a citizen-initiated referendum procedure? Or has that thought never crossed the minds of the government? Should the public not have the right to initiate a referendum? Or, for that matter, should the provinces not have the right to initiate a referendum? Why only the federal government?

Both of the authors of the 1978 discussion paper on constitutional amendment, published by this very government, and the authors of the infamous Kirby memo—and I have to say something here, Madam Speaker, just as an aside to the members of the committee. I understand that we have been wrongfully blaming Mr. Kirby all these long months, and I want to apologize to him publicly. I understand Mr. Kirby only saw the document; it was Mr. Eddie Goldenberg who wrote it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: But that memorandum sought to provide this government with advice suggesting that should either the federal government or any number of provincial governments block a constitutional amendment, 3 per cent of their electorate should be able to initiate a referendum to challenge the decision. This was their own advice. As the Kirby memo explained, this would support the view that sovereignty resides with the people. Follow your own advice.

There is no citizen-initiative in the resolution. It is the view of the federal government that the people should be consulted only when it wants to and on which terms. Despite the minor changes introduced since October, the federal government retains ultimate control of the use of referenda for constitutional change. It is not the people we do not trust; it is this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: For the same reason, it is curious that this same federal government which wants to entrench referenda into the constitution refuses to hold a referendum on this resolution.

One must ask why. Let us go to the Minister of Justice. In answering questions on the CTV "Question Period" program this last weekend, he explained to Canadians why they would not be consulted on the very fundamental change being proposed by the government. He explained that constitutional amendments such as the charter of rights are very complex issues for the people to understand. He recognized that a referendum might not concentrate on the substance of an amendment, but might involve other issues.

An hon. Member: Oh, my God!

An hon. Member: Oh, my Pierre!

Mr. Epp: Above all, he warned of the divisive nature of referenda, I quote him:

> You know, the Optimist Club in my riding in Grand'Mere had split in two during the referendum... and so there is no more Optimist Club in Grand'Mere.

That is the reason the minister does not want to take this proposal to the Canadian people. How can he then turn around and tell the people, the good burgers of Grand'Mere and the people of Canada, that he is going to entrench a permanent referendum mechanism in the Constitution? It need be said no more better, I would think, than in the editorial in today's The Globe and Mail. I quote but one sentence:

> A federal cabinet which can ask the question it wants, under the rules it wants, can be pretty certain of getting the answers it wants.

That is what they want.

An hon. Member: That is why they are afraid to go to the people with it now.

Mr. Epp: On October 6, I singled out four main objections to the proposed resolution, namely, the unilateral nature of the project, the phony interim amending formula, the outdated permanent amending formula and the referendum mechanism, as wrong, and they remain wrong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Because we believe that the government's approach was unilateral and divisive, our party offered a series of amendments to the committee which would have offered Canadians what we believe is a real and positive alternative. We suggested that the resolution should be split into a patriation package which would be sent to Westminster, and a Canadian package which would be approved by Parliament and referred to the provinces and their legislatures once the amending formula was in place.

What about the patriation package? That package would have provided for the immediate patriation of Canada's Constitution so that Canadians could settle their constitutional problems here in Canada without involving a foreign government.

Before I get to that point, I want one point clearly understood in the House during this debate. It was not the British government, the British Parliament or the British people that insisted on keeping the Constitution in Britain in 1931. It was done at Canada's request. Let us have no argument here that for some reason the British people have a colonial mentality toward the resolution. That is the reason, our party believes, that the British Parliament has no business making important constitutional decisions for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1640)

Mr. Epp: We also believe just as strongly that the Canadian Parliament has no business asking the British to make those decisions. Worth-while constitutional progress does not lie in abandoning federalism, nor does it lie—and I say this especially to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan)—in attacking other countries. That is also something which has been in the arsenal of the Prime Minister.

There is only one acceptable role for Britain to play, and that is to accede to only one acceptable request. Let Britain send our Constitution home immediately with an amending formula acceptable to Canadians, and let every other question about our Constitution be decided in Canada by Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: What has happened in the last two weeks? In the last two weeks we have seen a serious deterioration in Anglo-Canadian relations. We have seen forced and trumped up charges by the Secretary of State for External Affairs against the British High Commissioner. The minister then had to come back into the House humiliated. All of us were humiliated by the action he took, in partnership with the hon. member for Oshawa. We have seen documents over the last two weeks. Where is the truth? There is a lack of truth. The Prime Minister says it is a lack of candour. Where I come from it is the truth. What about the inevitable collision between the British Parliament and the Canadian Parliament, or is the possibility of collision the very ace the Prime Minister wants to use?

What Britain has to do is repeal section 7(1) of the Statute of Westminster. That is their responsibility; the rest is ours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: We believe the patriation package should also include a means by which Canadians could adopt and approve an amending formula in Canada which reflects a truly Canadian consensus as it exists today, not in 1971. The Vancouver formula found agreement in principle—and I am glad the Prime Minister is back—and I believe the Vancouver consensus could have been developed further and could have brought about consensus, if the Prime Minister had wanted it to. But he did not want that. The Vancouver formula fulfils the criteria I spoke of earlier. It respects the equality of the provinces in the Canadian federation.

No province retains a veto over constitutional changes. It is flexible, yet it provides significant safeguards for the rights and powers which the Fathers of Confederation felt were essential to the nature of the country, and especially the provinces. It is simple enough to be adaptable, whether it be to further demographic shifts in Canada or to the introduction of new northern partners in confederation. It does not freeze a concept of the nation in time, as does the Victoria formula. The Victoria consensus can reflect the Canada of the 1980s only if the aspects I described earlier are removed. I believe the Vancouver consensus is a formula on which we can build for the future.

What about the legitimate concerns raised by the Prime Minister and others about the so-called opting out provisions? I have been very candid about this, and I know the minister was candid about Victoria today. I share that same approach about public life. I have been candid in the committee, and I know there is a need to refine the Vancouver consensus. That is why we say, let us have one more go at it with the premiers.

The Prime Minister is concerned about the so-called checkerboard effect. We do not live in a unitary state. We live in a federal state. We should recognize differences and use those differences to build one common country. In a federal state with 11 governments and two territorial governments, the only way to avoid the so-called checkerboard effect is to demand unanimity on all counts. That is the only way to avoid the chechерboard effect. That is not the Prime Minister's formula, that is not the formula of the hon. member for Oshawa and it is not our formula. So no matter how the Prime Minister wants to use it, there will be to some greater or lesser degree a certain checkerboard effect regarding any formula the Prime Minister wants to adopt.

I therefore believe that if we are to succeed in this venture and if we are to protect the powers which were given in 1867, it is important to recognize and maintain the unique regional identities and traditions. In Canada unity has never meant uniformity. All of us have been proud that in order to find national unity, we have to find that national unity in our diversity. I believe the Vancouver consensus protects that diversity and yet gives us the foundation to build a great nation.

What about the Canadian package and the charter? The Minister of Justice and members of the New Democratic Party say that if we delay, Canadians will not have the charter and their rights will not be protected. There are two aspects to this, and other members of our party will speak to them. Should we have a charter or not? I personally favour a charter. We have always enjoyed rights under the British parliamentary system, so it is not that by some stroke of lightning, because of the action of the Prime Minister, I will suddenly have all the rights he gives me. It is not that I did not have them before. Yet that is what he is saying. So I say that the very premise on which he starts is wrong. Our party—and I want to say this on the public record, because we have not said it in the House, although we have said it in committee—supports a charter of rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: But not yet.

Mr. Epp: They can do whatever they want. If they feel embarrassed, that is fine. The point I want to make is that, in order for the charter to find agreement among Canadians, it must be more than words, noble though they may be. It must enjoy consensus and legitimacy. This charter does not enjoy either.

Canadians want a charter of rights. I said that earlier, but what they want is a charter which is carefully considered and approved by Canadians in Canada. I am not for a moment convinced, as I said earlier, that the power of public opinion cannot in fact bring about those changes. I am not yet ready to give up on that sort of federalism.

Is the charter complete? I agree with the Minister of Justice that there were many amendments which improved the charter. I had the honour to move a number of them. In fact, if we were working at all on any deal, I must admit we were much more successful than was the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Broadbent: Because you moved them first.

Mr. Epp: —because all we have to look at is the majority report, which we rejected and they approved.

What does this charter do? Where does it start from? This charter starts from the premise that the government will grant us rights. That is where the charter starts from and that is where the charter is wrong. My rights, our rights in this House, the rights of Canadians, are not granted by any government.

• (1650)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: It is for that reason that we moved an amendment, not only because the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, the then leader of this party and the prime minister of this country, had that entrenched in the Canadian Bill of Rights, but because the philosophy underlying the charter was right. What it did was to say that every human being created in the image of God has certain inalienable rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Once you accept that principle, whether you live under the Canadian parliamentary system or under the American republican system, or in Poland where people are struggling for their rights today, or in the U.S.S.R. where many of our people came from, you still have rights, even though the government abrogates them or does not allow people to enjoy them. But you know inside that you have those rights because you are a human being.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: It was for that reason that we moved the following amendment:

> Affirming that the Canadian nation is founded upon principles that acknowledge the supremacy of God, the dignity and worth of the human person and the position of the family in a society of free individuals and free institutions,

Affirming also that individuals and institutions remain free only when freedom is founded upon respect for moral and spiritual values and the rule of law,

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: That proposal was rejected by the Liberal members, and no matter how often they say that we are delaying the entrenchment of the charter, the point is that their charter is based on a false premise. If the minister says that he wants to finish the work of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, let me tell him that what he has now done is to gut and destroy his work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: The charter which the right hon. gentleman recognized was based on the very principle which we have just stated. Governments cannot be supreme; it is the people in a democracy who must be supreme.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: What about our other roots? Can a nation grow and develop if it forgets about its roots? For example, if we want to forget about this amendment, why was this country the Dominion of Canada? Why did the Fathers of Confederation go back to Psalm 72, verse 8, "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth?" Why was the dominion and the country to be vested in the supreme God and not in government? What the charter does is to remove these roots.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: If hon. members want to laugh about God, go ahead, that is their choice.

What about property rights? Property rights, as I said, were agreed to by a minister of the Crown, by the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan). He gave the solemn commitment, in place of the Minister of Justice, that property rights would be included. It was because of the NDP and the deals that were made that Canadians will not have that amendment in the charter.

Mr. Chrétien: What about Prince Edward Island?

Mr. Epp: I am glad the minister asked that question because we have been dealing with Prince Edward Island. Prince Edward Island does not want it in the fundamental section. They have never been against the private ownership of property; what they want is some protection of the shore line. I ask the minister not to confuse the Prince Edward Island position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Red herring.

Mr. Epp: What about property rights? Every person who has understood the common law has said that a man's home is his castle. Why not entrench it? What about the immigrants who came to this country for one thing—the right to own land because they could not enjoy it in their own country or because it had been taken away from them? So if anyone says that they are completing Mr. Diefenbaker's work, let them say that no more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: I will try to conclude, Madam Speaker, if you will give me a few minutes more.

What is the situation that we face today? I should like to speak provincially for a little while. I am concerned, for instance, when I look at the history of my part of the country. There were various parties which developed as protest parties. The New Democratic Party, which was known as the CCF, is one of them. Today, the west feels strong, and at least some of the protesters in the region believe that the region could find greater strength outside Canada. I believe that separatism runs against the very basic nature of the people of western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Western Canadians do not want to dismantle, they want to build. They are attracted by the opportunities in Canada, and they will not exchange the excitement for something smaller and more narrow, as some of their leaders, or proposed leaders, think they might. What I do not want to see in this resolution is that the horizon of any region of the country will be narrowed or that the other options can, in fact, become options. I say to the Prime Minister, let him not make the option of rejecting the country a viable option to anyone anywhere.

There are various other amendments and proposals on the national institutions and the Supreme Court which should be made. I do not have time to enumerate them all today, and I thank the House for the indulgence it has shown me so far. But what about our parliamentary approach in the immediate future? In the committee which studied the resolution members of our party offered a series of amendments which, we believe, represented a reasonable alternative.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I wonder if the House would be willing to dispense with the private members' hour today, and let the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) complete his speech and the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) make his speech as well.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement to that proposal?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is so agreed.

● (1700)

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, as I said earlier, members of our party in the committee offered a series of amendments which we believed were reasonable alternatives to the destructive actions of the government. In this debate in Parliament, our party will continue to offer compromise solutions to the dilemma which we feel is facing our country.

Our amendments to the resolution will also seek to eliminate those provisions of the resolution which we find most objectionable. As the official opposition and the only opposition, we will continue to defend the interests of the federation and of the nation. We will both propose and oppose.

But I do not believe that there is any provision in this constitutional proposal which is more objectionable than the permanent enshrinement of a referendum to change Canada's Constitution. This is not just any referendum, it is not asking the people; it is a referendum which could be held in order to break a so-called deadlock, a deadlock wholly determined by the federal government. It is a referendum which will still be controlled by the federal government. It is a referendum which would be used to by-pass the people's elected representatives in provincial legislatures. It is a referendum which could be used by a majority to override the rights of minorities, the very essence which this proposal purports to protect.

Referenda have been used in extraordinary times and circumstances in the history of our nation. In all cases they have created serious divisions within our country. As I said earlier, even the Minister of Justice recognizes that referenda are open to abuse and create needless strife within communities.

Canadians do not want a constitution which contains a provision that will pit government against government, region against region, Canadian against Canadian. Therefore, as a unifying gesture to all Canadians we ask that the government abandon its provision for referenda in the resolution. If the government is truly flexbile, I urge it to accept the following amendment which would drop this divisive provision from the resolution. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the motion be amended in Schedule B of the proposed resolution by deleting Clause 46, and by making all necessary changes to the Schedule consequential thereto.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: I will close with the following remarks. I reiterate that all of us feel we are as Canadian as any other member in this House. All of us love our country. Each and every one of us has had experiences which have made our love for the country what it is today. If that feeling for the country, if that love for the nation, is to continue, we must respect the very fundamental rules by which we live—our Constitution. It is important that we respect federalism and not change it unilaterally. The Canadian system works and it is time for the Canadian government to respect it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have the amendment of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I am sure the House would want me to give it very careful consideration. I will take its receivability under advisement.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Madam Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Veterans Affairs—Backlog of cases before Pension Review Board—Call for minister's resignation; the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—National Energy Program—Multinational oil companies moving to meet Canadian ownership requirements; the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—The Constitution—Proposals made to the province of Saskatchewan.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed debate on the motion of Mr. Chrétien, seconded by Mr. Roberts, for an Address to Her Majesty the Queen respecting the Constitution of Canada.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, we are now in the final stages of an historic debate which began not four weeks or four months or even four years ago; we are in the midst of a debate which goes back at least as far as the last decade.

In the past decade there have been studies and proposals on the Constitution by our political parties, by the legal profession, by an earlier joint House-Senate committee and by a royal commission, to name just a few groups. It has been the subject matter of numerous first ministers' meetings. These reports, these studies and these meetings did not take place in an historical vacuum. They were undertaken because social, economic, cultural and regional change in our country during the past dozen years made them necessary.

Indeed, the Quebec referendum was last year, but what led to it reaches far back into the history of our land. Talk of western alienation has only recently become fashionable, but I recall making a speech on that subject more than ten years ago and, in fairness, members of other parties have spoken on that important issue of western grievances more than ten years ago. Finally, all the provinces, not just in recent months but for many years, have brought to first ministers' meetings constitutional grievances which they have wanted resolved.

What does one conclude from this? After years of studies, conferences and proposals coming from the private sector, the public sector, the federal government and provincial governments, our conclusion is clear: now is the time in Canadian history to act; we have waited long enough.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Let me emphasize in underlining this conclusion three current and pressing reasons. First, the old, pervasive provincial and federal wrangling which takes place at first ministers' meetings, in my judgment, is divisive. It is something for which I do not lay the blame on individual premiers, whether they are in the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party or my party. Nor do I blame the prime minister, whoever he may be or has been for the past decade. I blame the decision-making framework of those conferences which has required the unanimity principle to be changed. Year after year we have seen premiers coming to Ottawa, not in the mood to make agreements because they knew unanimity was virtually impossible, but rather, being politicians—and that is their responsibility—to speak for their regional grievances and concerns. Instead of a premier of Newfoundland coming to Ottawa and saying that Newfoundland would like a particular settlement, we have a premier of Newfoundland—I am not talking about the current premier; I mean this as a generalization—who talks only about the grievances of Newfoundlanders. Or we have premiers from western Canada who come to Ottawa to talk only about the grievances of western Canadians, and so on down the line. So year after year we have seen in our first ministers' conferences Canadians who at home I think are men of good will—indeed, I know they are men of goodwill. I hope that one day there will be a woman among them.

● (1710)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: What I am saying is that these conferences should show Canadians, on television, what a rich, magnificent and diverse land we have. They could show our leaders coming together to reach decisions. Instead, what happens is that they come together to bash Ottawa. I stress that it is not a conscious, deliberate plot. It is built into a structure which does not enable decisions to be taken because the unanimity principle has been at work. That must change, since these methods are destructive. These kinds of conferences on national unity are not constructive.

The second reason I suggest on behalf of my colleagues that at this poignant moment in our history we need to make a decision is, of course, related to the Quebec referendum. Politicians' memories tend to be very short. I give credit to members opposite for what they did in the province of Quebec. They did what had to be done. I say in passing that they helped to create the problem. I must also say that they helped persuade Quebecers to vote for the right side in that referendum. It was an historic moment of serious consequence for the unity of this country.

After the referendum took place there were a number of people who spoke in this House. I quote one of them from Hansard for May 21, 1980, at page 1265:

> We need a new constitution. I welcome the commitment made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice which was reaffirmed here today. It is a commitment, which I share, to a new constitution for Canada. We need a constitution that is located here in our country, a constitution that can be amended here in our country, a constitution that guarantees certain fundamental rights, and a constitution that articulates a sharing of powers that is appropriate to a diverse federal country. We now have a climate where that can be achieved.

The person who said that is the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark). I submit we have that kind of proposal before us now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The suggestion was made to the people of Quebec during the referendum by those of us who live outside Quebec—and I want to stress that as well—that if they voted for Canada, which we all knew the vote was about, then early action would be taken. Premiers from different provinces said that, as did all party leaders in this House. I think we have an obligation to live up to that commitment to take early action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The third point I would like to underline, in terms of its immediacy, concerns western Canada. During the past half dozen years particularly, but also a bit further beyond that, western Canadians have been expressing an exuberant optimism. I do not think it is distorted to say that everywhere in western Canada one now senses a greater degree of optimism about the future and about personal prospects than is the case in central Canada or Atlantic Canada. The reasons are obvious. They are quite analogous to what has gone on in world history. We are a part of the world, in broad historical terms, which is growing economically. People sense there is a vitality here, which creates a greater degree of optimism. I know that is true in western Canada where the growth has been greater. Western Canadians had a tough time during the depression as compared with the rest of Canadians. We must remember that. But they now have a sense that the future is in their hands, and those of us who live elsewhere in Canada should be pleased with that reality and should be supportive of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We need a constitutional change now which moves toward partly resolving some conflicts and concerns which western Canadians have had. But, secondly, we need constitutional change which provides a decision-making framework which can meet the grievances of western Canadians as well as others.

I have outlined three reasons. One has culminated this year in the perpetual wrangling of first ministers, which must be terminated. The second reason is the need to meet our collective commitment to Quebecers on the referendum. The third is the need to resolve the grievances of western Canadians. These reasons lead my members in this party to the conclusion that decisive action is required now.

In short, we in Parliament must make a very difficult decision. And we have made it—at least some of us have. That decision is to act without the co-operation of the majority of the provinces. Indeed, to be quite honest, it is to act in the face of the opposition of most provincial governments. That must give us pause as national politicians. We know we have the legal authority to do so; I do not think there is any doubt about that at all. But is it morally legitimate? Is it politically appropriate? Is it desirable that unilateral action be taken at this time? I would like to address and answer those questions.

The critic for the Conservative Party spoke ably from a perspective which I do not share. He outlined his case ably and he raised this point. He said that by acting now, without the co-operation of the provinces, would be divisive. I want to deal with that issue in two senses, both in the short run and in the long run. It is certainly divisive in the short run among the premiers. There is no doubt about it; Sterling Lyon does not like it one bit, nor does Mr. Peckford. I could go down the line and cite a whole number of premiers. There is no one who will challenge that. Indeed, I will add to the list because I am sure he will soon make it known publicly. The premier of Saskatchewan will be opposing unilateral action. Thus, it cuts across all party lines in our land. We must deal with that. The premiers are unhappy. Of course, in one sense that is divisive.

What about the people of Canada? Are they unhappy? Is this action divisive now? In the short run I would say the answer to that, regrettably, must be yes. Part of the reason for the divisiveness among the people of Canada, as opposed to the politicians of Canada, surely has to be the performance of the Government of Canada in the whole process before Christmas. I say this bluntly to the government side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The initial refusal to have radio and television coverage of the committee, the refusal to extend the deadline for Canadians to appear before the committee and the bringing in of closure early in the debate, created tension and unhappiness in the country. That is a banal truism. I say at this time that there were almost 100 groups who wished to present their testimony before the committee. It was the people who basically liked the charter of rights and those who wanted change, who were unhappy with the process before Christmas. I think it was a reflection on the efficacy of Parliament that both opposition parties made that clear. They fought that kind of process. Also, part of parliamentary efficacy is to show that this process can work and reflect the genuine needs of this country.

Belatedly, I give credit to the government; it came to its senses and it did respond. It could have remained intolerant. It could have remained even more rigid to its deadlines. It could have kept out radio and television. But after pressure was put on from this side, it yielded. I think the yielding was sensible, but regrettably it did promote dissension and divisiveness in the country from which we are still somewhat recoiling.

However, I want to go beyond the short run, and before doing so I want to say this, because in a debate of historic significance it certainly behooves us to look back in history just occasionally; and by that I mean beyond last week's headlines or even last year's referendum.

There has not been, Madam Speaker, significant constitutional change anywhere in the world at any time, beneficial change, that has not been divisive. That is the reality of politics, particularly in a democratic age. The United States, to achieve independence, had to have a war of independence. We now look back to 1867 with rather romantic eyes and at what was achieved by some distinguished leaders who put aside partisan differences.

Those who know the history of the period well know indeed a lot of divisiveness remained in Atlantic Canada, remained in Quebec, remained in parts of what was then Upper and Lower Canada. So at the very birth of our nation, although our forefathers came together to create a Canada, that action was certainly divisive, too; at the time it was divisive. Just a few years ago, Newfoundland voted to come into confederation—how short historical memories are. If I recall correctly, there were two votes and the population of Newfoundland was almost evenly divided. So that, too, was historic action that I think we are all happy about. Those of us who do not come from Newfoundland welcome Newfoundland as a sister province, and a vast majority of Newfoundlanders are proud today to be Canadians.

So I am saying, Madam Speaker, that the divisive argument, to a considerable extent, is a bogus argument. It would be nice to have significant historic change where we all sat down and said: Aren't we wonderful fellows? A community of communities. There would be no differences. We will just sit there and, even though we come from different cultures, even though we come from different regions, even though we come from different economic groups, we will sit down and agree overnight. Well, history just ain't like that, Madam Speaker. It is a little more uncomfortable.

So if we are going to act decisively in history—and that is what we are doing now—we have to be prepared as parties, as politicians, to take a little divisiveness, even if it means, as it does for most of us, divisiveness within our own parties too, if it is good for Canada in the long run.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The serious question, Madam Speaker, about divisiveness then is not in the short run but in the long run. To assess whether this package is divisive in the long run, one has to look at it in terms of its substance; one has to look at the essence of what we are being asked to deal with and say, as our founding fathers did more than a hundred years ago: Is that going not only to please our children but our grandchildren and our great grandchildren? Is it going to keep the people in Atlantic Canada, in central Canada and in the west happy or make them happier or more content with their existence as Canadians? That is the serious question that has to be asked.

Therefore, we have to look at the substance of the proposal. During three months of committee hearings I as one Canadian was proud to see other Canadians who were not politicians, who were not in many cases active in any parties, come before a committee and speak for the women of Canada. They spoke for the multicultural dimension of Canada, for our disabled, for the rich, for the poor. There was a very good cross-section of the people of our land who made a remarkable contribution in a remarkable period of our history in that committee; and high among these I want to include, of course, the original inhabitants of our land, the aboriginal peoples themselves. I will come back to them in a minute.

So I ask this question, Madam Speaker, particularly of the people of Canada today. Put aside the notion that this is a Liberal proposal, or that it is a Liberal-NDP proposal, or that it is opposed by the Conservatives and therefore others must oppose it. I ask the people of Canada to think of the substance of what we are dealing with and to forget its political parentage.

I also ask, particularly after the months of work that was done by members of all parties in that committee and by the citizens of Canada: What are the results? Can any MP who puts aside that partisan difference now seriously doubt the viability of this charter of rights? After the improvements that have been made, can any person who takes human liberty as a fundamental value oppose what is probably the best charter of rights in the world? I say that and I mean it. I say no. With this charter we will be entrenching not only individual rights but also group rights, a process so essential in a federal state as diverse as ours.

To those who say a charter of rights is unnecessary—and there are in this land a number who say that—I say do not think of American history, do not think of the Soviet Union, do not think of Europe, do not think of anywhere else, just think of Canada. Think of our own history; think of how Japanese Canadians were treated during World War II; think of the padlock law in Quebec and of the anti-free press legislation that was once passed in Alberta. Think of the smashing of the IWA which was trying to get established in Newfoundland; think of the denial of schools to francophone kids where they happen to be a minority; think of all Canadians who are not of British or French ancestry and think about the number of years that they had to grow up in our country called in very pejorative terms "bohunks" or "wops" because they did not happen to be francophone or anglophone. This is Canada I am talking about.

Think of the discrimination which has persisted and persists today against women in our land; think of the denial of equality to our disabled; and, Madam Speaker, most important for all of us in this Parliament and elsewhere whose ancestors came from other continents, think of our aboriginal peoples and the abominable way they have been treated throughout our history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Well, Madam Speaker, my party says now is the time to redress some of these injustices; now is the time to provide equality and freedom within the Constitution; now is the time to entrench a Canadian charter of rights in a Canadian Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the point has been made that such a charter curtails the legislative power of federal and provincial governments. Well, we in this party have said since the Regina manifesto back in 1933 that this is, of course, true and it is, of course, desirable. That is one of the central purposes of a charter of rights. And if it had existed around 30 or 40 years ago, a number of the injustices that I have just listed would probably not have taken place.

However, in making this point about the limitations on both federal and provincial jurisdictions that results from a charter of rights, I want to stress the findings of our legal experts, those who know that the effect of bills of rights in other countries is not the curtailment of legislative authority; the most beneficial effect that charters of rights or bills of rights have had in other lands is the protection of individuals in the administration and enforcement of laws. That is the prime benefit from a charter of rights, and we must always keep that in mind.

Although many Canadians citizens and Members of Parliament from other parties have made substantial contributions to the improvement of the charter, I want to pay special tribute to some members of my party who made what I regard as an outstanding contribution. I want to do so because some of them are not happy with the over all effects. There is a small minority of well meaning conscientious members of Parliament in my party who are not in agreement with the very substantial majority. Some of them made outstanding contributions to this process, nonetheless, in good conscience, fulfilling a very difficult role as human beings.

I want to say that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the hon. for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who worked hard on that committee did an outstanding job not only for our party, but for Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) will deserve, when history is written about this period, much credit for the progress we made in entrenching aboriginal and treaty rights in the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I congratulate the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) for achieving remarkable progress in ensuring the charter provides equality for Canadian women not only before but under the law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I compliment also the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young) who, along with members in other parties, worked hard to ensure that those with physical disabilities are recognized in our Constitution. I want to express appreciation to the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) who joined with others in fighting for recognition of our multi-cultural heritage in this constitutional document.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I want to emphasize that this charter is of utmost significance to the francophones of this country. It acknowledges at last the duality of Canada concerning federal institutions and access to education in either language.

There is no need to say here that the anglophone minority in Quebec has always enjoyed fair and equitable treatment from the majority of the people in that province. And at last with this charter we are beginning to recognize that our francophone minorities outside Quebec have the same rights. I must insist that this charter does not take any power away from the provinces which want to pass legislation on linguistic matters. It is perfectly normal that Quebec should want to be the main centre of French culture in Canada. The fact that Quebec is now as French as Ontario in English demonstrates the cultural vitality of Quebecers. When the Quebec government enacted Bill 101, we endorsed the aims of that legislation because it was the answer to the need felt by Quebecers to assert themselves, not only in cultural endeavours but in all spheres of activity as well.

The proposed constitutional resolution does not negate the spirit of that statute. We do not want a uniform Canada. The aspirations of Quebecers are compatible with Canadian federalism. What makes this country exciting and rich on the cultural and human level is precisely the contribution of those two great civilizations which, in spite of everything, have managed to live side by side and in harmony throughout our brief history.

Of course, there were some difficult moments, but the common experiment of French-and English-speaking Canadians is unique and has proved to be mutually enriching. Obviously, the French fact in Canada transcends the borders of Quebec. Over one million francophones living in the Atlantic provinces, in Ontario and in western Canada have been impatiently waiting for their Parliament to confirm their basic rights. This proposed resolution meets these century-old expectations. Let us not deceive them. If we let this opportunity go by today, it may be too late tomorrow. Canada belongs to all Canadians wherever they are and whatever language they speak.

[English]

If I may make a personal observation on that point, I will tell hon. members that I am married to a Franco-Ontarian and I have a daughter who attends a francophone school here in the city of Ottawa. But I was disturbed to discover that the first publicly financed, as opposed to ecclesiastical, francophone school was established in the city of Ottawa just last year. It shows, Madam Speaker, that we have just begun the battle, but with this charter of rights, at long last we anglophones are beginning to smarten up and do for francophones all over Canada what anglophones have had for themselves in the province of Quebec throughout history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to say also that in addition to this central duality of this country, which my party has long accepted and cherished, the proposal in the constitutional resolution on equalization is a matter of great concern to social democrats. The disparities that exist between regions and which have resulted in unequal opportunities in life must always be fought against. It must remain a concern until the end of time. If a child grows up in one of the outports of Newfoundland without the same opportunities in life as a child who grows up in downtown Toronto or Vancouver, as long as these disparities exist which make it impossible for a young man or woman to achieve full fruition in the development of his or her talents, we must do everything we can to overcome those inequalities. We are happy about the provision for equalization which resides in this resolution and it merits support.

I turn now to the amending formula. As noted, it is basically one which was agreed to a number of years ago by all the provinces but one and the federal government. In our judgment it is a practical formula which gives each of our four major regions a veto on constitutional change. A notable improvement in the proposed amending process was to make clear that a referendum cannot be used except as a deadlock breaking mechanism. As a result of improvements which were made to the resolution at committee stage, a referendum on constitutional change can take place only after it has been thoroughly discussed for some period of time at the first ministers' level. That is the way co-operative federalism should work.

We stress in our party, unlike the Conservative party, that a referendum is not a bad idea for constitutional change. We do not like referenda for normal responsibilities of Members of Parliament. We have long argued that when tough issues are faced in terms of normal legislation it is our responsibility to face them, whether they deal with abortion or capital punishment. They are things which Members of Parliament should debate, debate honestly and for which they should be prepared to stand up and be counted. Like other federal states, for example, Australia and Switzerland, we can see the utility from time to time of perhaps going to the people directly on matters which affect the framework within which other decisions are made, namely the Constitution. It is a pretty basic democratic idea. Our party supports a referendum as a deadlock breaking mechanism.

I want to come to another element in the package which leads us to the conclusion that what we have is substantively solid, correct and will wear well over the years, and that is the issue of resource control.

When I first met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the day the Leader of the Opposition met with him last fall, we went over matters in the proposal and talked about equalization, language rights and a general charter. The Primer Minister had done his research with his staff. He knew the NDP position and principle on these things. It was not long after that my party in general supported the principles embodied in the resolution.

During that first meeting and subsequently, I said there was something missing which had to be dealt with at this time in our history; that is the resource question. It was not put in there as some attempt to buy off one province. The matter of resources and resource control is something which now affects Atlantic Canada, something that has historically affected the province of Quebec but in particular concerns western Canadians. We are all well aware of that.

It was my view and that of my party that if we were going to make serious constitutional change, we should deal not only with grievances as they emerged historically, with good reason, from the province of Quebec, but also deal with possible serious grievances in western Canada. The issue which stood out above all others in that area was the control of resources.

I suggested on behalf of my colleagues to the Prime Minister that if reasonableness was shown in the amending process at the committee stage, on the charter and other aspects of the proposals, and if they added three key elements regarding resources, we would be prepared to accept this package as being good for Canada at this time. Contrary to what the Conservative Party has been saying, and if there is anything that has disturbed me in a partisan sense in this debate—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired. I must interrupt him, unless the House gives its unanimous consent to allow him to continue his speech.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't make it partisan.

Mr. Broadbent: I will pretend that objection did not occur because I intend to get partisan for a minute. Something that has disturbed me is the failure of the Conservative Party to recognize for western Canadians the relevance of these resource concessions. There were Supreme Court decisions, and I will not go into them in detail, which caused concern among western governments. Alberta was very much among them. They wanted change.

I give credit to the government because we insisted on the change and they went along with it. What has not been so widely recognized is that the government did show flexibility. The Prime Minister knows very well that in the summer when they discussed change in respect of resource control going to the provinces, the federal government said it would have to reintroduce new broad powers over the economy. We were told that if we were going to have one, we were going to get the other. We did not agree to that. Demonstrating the flexibility required in constitutional building, the government did not reinstate or reinsert the broad powers. That was very wise.

What we have obtained in terms of addressing a provincial concern of particular relevance to the west is that the provinces now have ownership of their non-renewable natural resources clarified in the Constitution. They can participate in interprovincial trade with federal paramountcy. For the first time they can levy indirect taxes on those resources. I say to the Conservative members that this means in revenue potential for the province of Alberta in excess of an additional $600 million. Even for Alberta, that ain't hay. It counts for something.

We wanted this resource change because those who grew up in central Canada in particular, and received their livelihood on the basis of industry protected by tariffs and other arrangements, know full well that western Canadians had a certain grievance about that. We know full well they wanted to use their resource potential to provide themselves with wealth for the future as the industrial structure provided did for us in the past. Although the resource amendment we obtained from the government does not go all the way, three out of four demands are not bad. Those three concessions are going to be very good for western Canada.

Having said all these good things about this proposal I want to express some reservations we will be debating in this final stage of the process. First, we deeply oppose the Conservative and Liberal position to remove the limited degree of reform which was in the original package of the Senate. We think the Senate, to put it euphemistically, has outlived its existence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It has outlived its legitimacy for some time. I see some embarrassed looks on Liberal faces.

Mr. Lalonde: We need it for Stanley.

Mr. Broadbent: We objected to the Conservative and Liberal vote on that. We will have something to say about that later. Similarly, we would like to see coastal provinces have control of their offshore resources just as provinces have control of inshore resources. We would like to see limited participation, with federal paramountcy, in international trade. These are legitimate goals. We regret the government did not see fit to accept them.

We would also like to see the western provinces put on the same basis as the Atlantic provinces in the amending formula. If two provinces are all that are required in Atlantic Canada to fulfil part of the veto requirement, then we should have simply two provinces in western Canada, and not two provinces with more than 50 per cent of the population.

Among all these concerns there is one that is fundamental. I discussed this earlier today with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). It concerns the entrenchment of aboriginal and treaty rights. I am pleased to report to the House that, as a result of those discussions, the government has agreed to accept an amendment which will be moved to Clause 54. It will ensure that aboriginal and treaty rights of our native people will be as firmly entrenched in the Constitution as all other rights for all other Canadians. That must be done.

I want to finish my comments on the details of this proposal by saying that if the government ensures a fair and full debate and adds nothing objectionable, my caucus will proudly vote for a motion that at long last will provide us with a Canadian bill of rights in a Canadian constitution that can in the future be amended exclusively here by Canadians.

I conclude with one additional observation. We live in one of the most difficult nations in the world to govern, one of the most regionally and culturally diverse in existence, but we are rich in natural resources and human potential. We must now use this new Constitution we are acquiring as the beginning step of a new spirit of nation building which will lead to the creation of one of the most just and exciting nations on the face of the earth. We know we can do that.

● (1750)

Madam Speaker: I have now had time to examine the motion presented by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), and I can say that it is in order. Therefore, the amendment moved by Mr. Epp, seconded by Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton), is that the motion be amended as follows:

That the motion be amended in Schedule B of the proposed resolution by deleting Clause 46, and by making all necessary changes to the Schedule consequential thereto.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Mr. Mackasey: May I call it six o'clock, Madam Speaker?

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the debate the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) was kind enough to mention me in his opening remarks as well, of course, the co-chairman and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). I appreciated that gesture because in the many months during which we were locked up together in committee we both realized we shared the same concern and appreciation for the House of Commons and its institutions, and we realized that one can debate without being personal; one can make his point without heckling and interfering, and I think quite unexpectedly that type of atmosphere dominated more often than not the many meetings we held on the Constitution.

The hon. member even mentioned that at times I was rather loquacious—

Mr. Knowles: Oh, no.

Mr. Mackasey: —which is a polite word for long-winded. I felt sorry today when I checked the record to find that the hon. member for Provencher—he is agreeing with me—surpassed me in time in the last ten days. I only wish I had known he was creeping up. I might have pre-empted a little of his time.

This is one of those great debates; it is an opportunity for members of the House of Commons, and I can recall a few since 1962. No matter how people criticize the House of Commons and no matter how imperfect the procedure tends to appear, I have found that given half a chance, the House of Commons usually meets the challenge placed before it. I mention this because I think—and I will develop the theme—that we have two ways to go before this debate is over. We can procrastinate further, or we can accept the challenge and go on to greater things in this country. I do not pretend to know for which parliamentarians will opt. I think it is too early to say.

Over 100 members of this House of Commons participated to some degree or another in the committee hearings. That is a remarkable number of members. Some participated for only fleeting moments. Others participated for days and weeks on end replacing sick members or members unavoidably absent. Over half the members of the Senate participated in the deliberations of the committee.

Over 914 individuals expressed their opinions to that committee through letters, telegrams or participation. No less than 294 groups made their views known either directly or indirectly to that committee.

What I am saying is that nobody can suggest for a moment that the resolution before this House was made anywhere else but in Canada, by Canadians and for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: It is wrong to suggest that we are asking Great Britain to amend our Constitution. We are asking Great Britain to respect the amendments which the House of Commons and the Senate—the Parliament of Canada—have felt to be in the best interests of this country. That is a very important distinction.

I would say that perhaps unintentionally the committee of which I, the hon. member for Provencher and others here were members has probably opened a new avenue of communication for Canadians from all walks of life. In retrospect I feel the insistence of other parties that we televise the proceedings was wise.

I think it provided an opportunity, for the first time in Canadian history, to countless hundreds of thousands of Canadians, of watching, not simply members of a committee at work, but their neighbours, their friend, their representative, and thus participate directly in the constitutional processes. What a change, Mr. Speaker, from what had been the custom and the tradition over the last two decades when backbenchers were ruled out of the constitutional process, when they had no input. Backbenchers were as curious as other Canadians as to what the provincial premiers, the federal government or its representatives would decide on their behalf.

It seems to me that the success of the committee's work, its ability to bring forward a good document has reflected, not simply in two amendments by the NDP, seven amendments by the Conservatives and 28 or 48 amendments by the government—those statistics are unimportant—but more important is that 25 members of the House and of the Senate of all political parties were able to produce a document, a bill of rights which, as the Leader of the NDP Mr. Broadbent indicated tonight, is one of the finest of its kind anywhere in the world.

Why is that document a good document, Mr. Speaker? It is a good document because of the sincerity and the eloquence of those who appeared before that committee. It is no secret that many members shed a tear when they listened to Canadians of Japanese origin telling us quietly and in a dignified manner about the type of discrimination they suffered in the war. They did it, not in a reproachful tone but in a sad tone of voice, suggesting in a moderate way that they hoped this blot on our history would never be repeated.

Then came the very deeply proud Canadians of Ukrainian origin who reminded us rather forcefully, with dignity and integrity, that they accepted the bilingual nature of Canada but this is a multicultural country now, a pluralistic society, and they wanted their culture, their language and their traditions respected and reflected in the Constitution.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, to talk about other groups, and I will do so about a few of them, about the quiet dignity of no less than 16 groups of aboriginal people who came before that committee and, with their earthy wisdom, dedication and determination, insisted, but did not plead, that we enshrine in the bill of rights some recognition that aboriginal rights existed. They did not ask us to define them, they left that up to the courts or, better still, for negotiation. But what was important to these very proud Indian and Eskimo people and Metis was that we at this level recognize once and for all that aboriginal people have rights still to be defined and injustices still to be rectified.

Women's rights, the rights of the disabled, our fundamental freedom, our legal rights all presently enshrined in that document, for the most part were not enshrined when we began the process last October or November. Now they are enshrined because Canadians, for the first time, had a direct input into this Parliament and said to their elected and their non-elected representatives, "We want a charter of human rights now, not in five years, in ten years or in 20 years, but now." I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we adopt the proposal of the Conservative Party, we will prolong indefinitely the passage of a bill of rights for Canadians. Those of us who sat on that committee—I am certainly talking for the Liberals and, I gather, for the NDP—do not want to be part of any procrastination in the enshrinement of the bill of rights at this time.

What do my good friends opposite propose? Let us look at the minority report which they presented to the Canadian people some days ago. It is a good document, a precise document and an accurate document in that it reflects the views of the Conservative Party. What does it propose? It says something that would please all of us if read not too carefully. It says that the Constitution should be patriated, and it will be, Mr. Speaker. It recognizes if that is to be a meaningful gesture, there must be an amending formula. It goes further to suggest that the overwhelming number of people and groups who appeared before us wanted a bill of rights containing legal protection against overzealous legislators, overzealous law enforcement officers or insensitive bureaucrats.

Hon. members opposite recognize the need for an amending formula for a bill of rights to be patriated. What is the formula? Having said that we must have one before we bring the Constitution home, they suggest it must include, preferably, a charter that is known as the Vancouver charter. One of the dilemmas we have with the Conservative position is that really they want their cake and they want to eat it too. They want to amend the Constitution, they want an amending formula, they want a bill of rights, but not too soon, some time in the future when the climate is better, when the premiers will agree, and if they do not agree then there would be no amending formula, no patriation and no bill of rights.

Where is the evidence that there is any dramatic shift in the attitude of the premiers? All of us who have followed this debate for many years will recognize the need for a bill of rights. I still remember with horror the dying days of the last provincial-federal conference when one premier tried to trade mobility rights for mineral rights, and another premier tried to trade fishing rights for minority rights. This has not been the exception; it has been the practice for some 50 years. We have discussed the need for a bill of rights not for 50 years, but certainly for a couple of decades. Yet Conservative members would suggest that public opinion would force the premiers to change their hardened attitude.

Today we heard how the big bad Liberal Party opposed the entrenchment of the recognition of the deity, God, that somehow we all got together, we non-religious members, and huddled and decided that we did not want to see the word "God" enshrined in the Constitution. We heard also that we did not recognize supremacy, the essential worth of a human person or the special importance of the family in our society. That declaration was included in the preamble last fall. It was placed there by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development; by the Liberal Party. Who decided that they did not want a preamble which included these declarations? It was the ten provincial premiers of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: No one in this House has any monopoly on virtue or religion. I find it rather strange that these arguments are brought into the House of Commons. Perhaps it is because they must divert attention from a bad argument or a weak case.

Now, why bring in the Vancouver formula? Why are so many of us adamantly opposed to the Vancouver formula? We are concerned and we will continue to be concerned about people. We do not want a formula which would make it possible for Canadians in one province to have different rights than Canadians in other provinces. The Victoria charter we suggest recognizes four distinct regions in Canada; the Atlantic, Quebec, Ontario and the west. We recognize the uniqueness of British Columbia and the western region. By saying we would need the support of two provinces and 50 per cent of the population, that automatically means, certainly in the foreseeable future, the inclusion of British Columbia. The Prime Minister said that that formula is not etched in stone. It is one that could be changed or altered in the next two years or at the next federal-provincial conference which, under the proposed resolution, must be held once a year.

What is obnoxious to us about the Vancouver formula? I will let Quebec members tell the House what is wrong with it later on in this debate. For instance, it fails to recognize the unique position of that province. Quebec is rightly concerned with its language and culture because it is the home of the majority of French-speaking Canadians, Canadians who worry that unless they can exercise some unusual prerogative in the form of a veto, things could take place in an amended Constitution which would make it difficult for that province to retain its language, its culture and its control over the educational process. I do not intend to belabour that or elaborate beyond what I have said. I will leave that to other hon. members.

The most insidious provision of the Vancouver formula is that it permits the provinces of the country to opt out of any change they do not like. If you, Mr. Speaker, were one of the spokesman for the aboriginal groups appearing before the committee, how would you feel if you saw Parliament endorsing a formula which permitted one province to recognize aboriginal rights but the next province to deny aboriginal rights? How would one feel as a francophone from Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Quebec, who wanted to transfer to another province and did not have the assurance when he or she moved to that other province that their children could be educated in that minority language? How would they feel about constitutional change which permits one province to recognize minority rights but denies the same rights to minorities in another province?

How about the disabled? The plight of the disabled has not been recognized with great warmth by all provinces. The minister told me that one day. Provinces recognize that if this desirable recognition of the rights of the disabled goes into effect, many provinces will have to insist that the building code reflects basic changes to make the lives of disabled people a little easier. They will have to toughen up their labour laws to bring an end to the discrimination which has been practised for too long against disabled people. What kind of a Canada is the opposition proposing when some provinces can recognize the particular problems of the disabled and other provinces are not required to? That is essentially what they are proposing when they propose the Vancouver formula. It does not surprise me; at least they have been consistent in their opposition. Anything that they may feel is undesirable the provinces could object to.

What about the rights of tradesmen such as electricians, carpenters and construction workers living in a country in which mobility rights are recognized in some provinces but not in others? What I am describing, if I was describing it to a stranger, is not one country, but ten countries, maybe four of five regions, ten associate states, ten sovereign nations or ten nation states. That is not the Canada we in this place want; that is not the Canada that Canadians want.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: That is the kind of Canada we would have if the amending formula permitted certain provinces that did not like the changes to opt out.

What about women's rights? Once again we find a variation from one province to another. What about legal rights, which is perhaps the most important item in a charter of human rights? There would be no uniformity. Some provinces would respect the charter and some would opt out because certain elements in those provinces might feel that one is guilty until proven innocent. That is the kind of balkanization this party does not want to see.

Hon. members opposite might say they do not want a unitary state. Of course we do not either. The Fathers of Confederation selected very wisely when they decided to opt for the federal system. This country is great because it is not bland, uniform or over-centralized. In 1867 the Fathers of Confederation would never have agreed to any other form of government. Somebody in the House must remind hon. members opposite, the public, the intellectuals and the provincial premiers that federalism is a two-way street. We should not be ashamed to suggest that Canadians want a strong federal government as part of our federal system.

• (2030)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: When you listen to some of the premiers you would think we were a community of communities, or ten provinces bound together very loosely, almost as a nuisance factor, perhaps to look after the army, the military and a few other services. That is not what the Fathers of Confederation expected, nor is it to be the legacy of Pierre Elliot Trudeau.

I said earlier, Mr. Speaker—and I am conscious of the time, it will be a long debate—that we have two choices before us. I can see the same mood coming over this House as the one that came over the committee. I saw a committee evolve from a group of individuals, some of whom wanted no part of patriation. They certainly wanted no bill of rights. I will not mention names, since they are sincere people. They are people of conviction who believe in the British system, the unwritten code. I saw the evolution, and in many ways, I understood a little better the opposition to the extension of certain language rights which, as an English Quebecer, I always took for granted. I did not approve of that opposition but I understood, just as members opposite, and perhaps some members on our own side understood, that if we were to have a bill of rights it should be a good one.

I am suggesting that in the next three weeks or a month we may be able to come to some accommodation in this House. We may be able to put aside the tendency of the Conservatives to procrastinate, to delay to another day the passage of a bill of rights, the concern which reflects the fear of anything that may be temporarily unpopular with the people. Perhaps it is the concern for the views of six or seven Conservative premiers, although this does not include Bill Davis. Whatever their logic for proposing a formula which would postpone the passage of the bill of rights, I think they may realize that if we patriate the Constitution, include the Victoria Charter and a bill of rights and if we dump that whole package on the table at the next federal-provincial conference and the premiers realize they have nothing to fear from that bill of rights, or from that particular formula which could be amended and improved or changed to some degree in the next year, they may very well be taking a type of progressive, bold initiative which would unlock the future of this country for the new generation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: In the few minutes I have left, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that our challenge is not to simply bring back the Constitution but to unlock the future, to make certain that the students of the future coming out of our universities are not saddled with the same constitutional dilemma, the same impasse, the same procrastination that has characterized federal-provincial relations in the last two or three generations in this country.

As someone has already mentioned, we have a great country. I think it was the hon. member for Provencher who said so eloquently today that we have the greatest country in the world. It could be greater because we are rich in resources. The richest resources we have are not natural resources or minerals but human resources. Thanks to medicare we have the healthiest work force in the world. Thanks to our educational programs, both federal and provincial, we have the best educated work force in the world. We have had the freest people in the world until some of these provincial barriers crept in, interfering with mobility and the flow of capital.

Out there we have hundreds of thousands of young Canadians who want to get on with the job of nation-building and who want to see the constitutional issue behind us, not in front of us. That is the message which comes through loud and clear to all members when they return home.

What is the message of the business community? They say, "For goodness sake, Bryce, get the constitutional problem off the table and let us get on with other issues. Let us get on with unemployment problems and with the issue of inflation. Let us resolve the energy problem." This is what people are saying. We have the power in this House in the next few weeks to do precisely that, to bring back the Constitution with a decent amending formula and a bill of rights.

If we were to do that we would show French-speaking Canadians we appreciated their gesture last year when they opted for Canada when faced with the choice of looking inward or looking outward, despite their grievances, real or imagined, that they were wise to opt for Canada. This was the result of the work of members of this House, particularly the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister to whom we should be thankful.

Think of the contribution the Atlantic provinces could make if we unlocked the future. They are a proud people, independent minded, who have exported their human resources to central Canada for far too long. Think of the contribution the native peoples can make if we can only recognize their rights and put the Constitution behind us, bringing them into the mainstream of thinking, as they were before. Think of the people of the west. They seem many times to me to be forgotten, maligned, misunderstood and misrepresented. When I travelled in the west in 1978, to Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary and Winnipeg, speaking on this very subject, not always in the largest cities, I realized that perhaps the first generation of unhyphenated Canadians would come from the west, not from Quebec, the Atlantic provinces or from Ontario. They are Canadians who can trace their roots back for one, two and three generations or more, Canadians who look puzzled at our dilemma. The westerners want to participate in nation-building, and they want to do it from the west. They do not want to have to constantly come to Ottawa, Toronto or Montreal to participate. We need to get rid of the stereotype image we have of the west, as simply that of the granary, of the empire.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What is this stereotype?

Mr. Mackasey: It is of an immeasurably rich people, but its contribution goes well beyond that. Those of us who spent any time in British Columbia know of the contribution that province makes in the field of architecture. It is way ahead of that of other countries and other provinces. Universities in the west are at the forefront of research; cancer research and in the use of the cobalt bomb. There is research going on with respect to optic fibres in the west. The west has much to contribute.

When you ask me what the west wants I say they want to participate as equals, as Canadians.

We in this House of Commons have a unique challenge to put the constitutional problem behind us. We have the challenge to bring the Constitution home, including in it a bill of rights fashioned by Canadians, for Canadians and in Canada. Then let us marshal the forces out there, Canadians of all walks of life; the aboriginal people, an independent people; the warm people of Cape Breton, the Atlantic provinces; the potential and joie de vivre of French Canada, now that they have turned once more to this great nation, and the untapped potential of the westerners. This is what makes this country; this is the challenge that the House of Commons has to face. I am not sure if we are worthy of it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

● (2040)

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the Constitution is a country's statement of fundamental principles that determines how it shall be governed. What we refer to now as our Constitution is a British law enhanced and encumbered with formal amendments, court decisions, orders in council and unwritten convention. The British North America Act is the heart of our Constitution, enacted by the British Parliament in 1867 after extensive preparatory work by Canadians. It distributes powers between the federal and provincial governments.

Since a good part of our Constitution is already here in the form of court decisions and unwritten convention, this really means transferring the power of amendment to the British North America Act from Britain to the Canadian federal and provincial governments. At the moment the British North America Act can only be amended by the British Parliament. After it is patriated, however, there must be some method of amending it when necessary, and this poses the problem. All parties agree there must be an amending formula but they cannot agree on the formula.

Personally, I feel the Constitution should be patriated unchanged except for the amending formula, and that amendments should be made in Canada and agreed to by at least seven provinces representing more than 50 per cent of our people.

I pose the question: if seven provinces and 50 per cent of our people do not favour change, should it be made? Is there a mandate for change?

The constitutional proposals of the government are skilfully conceived, designed and executed. Constitutional proposals attract great interest in the Atlantic provinces. Who of us have not noted from our boyhood days the agitation in these provinces by the sea for fairer treatment at the hands of Ottawa? We recall the delegations which from time to time have appeared before the central authorities, and constant representations of provincial governments and other groups protesting alleged discrimination against our provinces because of tariff, trade and transportation policies and practices of Ottawa. At this very moment I am protesting the severe cutbacks in Canadian National Express services, services which were supposed to be a quid pro quo for the reduction of rail services not so long ago. I am also protesting the neglected development of oil shales which have the potential to supply Canada with 15 billion barrels of oil.

On several occasions in this very session of Parliament I have pointed to the long-term savings that an enlightened investment in regional development could produce for both the Atlantic provinces and the central government. That is why any constitutional amendment which can provide the Atlantic provinces with the assistance that is now denied us, and which we feel is due to us in consequence of our participation in confederation, would merit careful consideration. National policies of restraint, restricted credit and high interest rates hit adversely against the Atlantic provinces. We must have a claim for redress against such policies.

Actuated by that thought I have considered the arrangements and understandings in effect in 1867 when my province, then prosperous and thriving, entered confederation. I have the view, which many others have shared, that confederation was the result of an agreement among the original provinces which comprised certain definite understandings as to trade and transportation arrangements which were to be developed to the advantage of my province, and if the federal authorities could be prevailed upon to carry out the original plan, the grievances about which our people have complained would tend to disappear.

If the confederation of the colonies of British North America was not the result of an agreement between the original provinces which entered into it, then to what was it due? Surely no one suggests it was thrust upon them by the Imperial Parliament.

Our Constitution is really the crystalization into law by an imperial statute of an agreement made by the provinces after full consultation and discussion. Probably one of the most learned and eloquent dissertations on the Constitution was made in this House a very long time ago, on February 18, 1925, by the then minister of justice, the Hon. Ernest Lapointe. He said, and his words are reported in Hansard at page 297 of that year in column two:

> There were many obstacles in the way of achieving confederation. Everybody who knows something of the history of Canada knows what some at least of those obstacles were. The country was on the verge of civil strife. During the two years which preceded the Quebec resolutions, not less than four cabinets succeeded each other at the head of the affairs of Canada. The provinces got together; they tried to effect an understanding and they effected one.
> In the language of Sir John A. Macdonald, the very pact of confederation bears on its face all the marks of a compromise.

I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, these words of Sir John A. Macdonald to a pact of confederation which are quoted by the hon. Mr. Lapointe. These words are contrary to many of the propositions and positions being advanced and taken today by the government.

Mr. Lapointe continued at page 297:

> The provinces relinquished some of the powers which were theirs and they retained for themselves other powers. The powers which they relinquished, they relinquished subject to conditions which were put into confederation, some of those conditions being more or less important, others essential, and without such conditions confederation would not have taken place. They tried to combine federal strength with local freedom of action. Everything that was private, domestic, home rule, the provinces kept to themselves, and they saw to it that their powers in that regard should never be interfered with. It is to be noted that in the British North America Act, they have the right to amend those provisions which concern their own constitution, except as regards the office of the Lieutenant-Governor.

Not so in the case of any of the provisions concerning the federal Parliament; and there were reasons for that. If confederation was a pact, an agreement, is it possible for one of the parties to the agreement, or rather for the body which resulted from the agreement, to amend, to alter the conditions of that pact without consulting and without securing the consent of the parties to the original agreement?

You will again observe, Mr. Speaker, the use of the word "pact" and "agreement". Mr. Lapointe made it very clear that the Constitution cannot be altered without the consultation and the consent of the parties to the agreement.

Mr. Lapointe continued at page 297 as follows:

As regards the United States as well as Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, they all agreed at the time of the enactment of the statute creating their constitution that they would have the right to alter it. They possess that right because it was made one of the conditions of the statute constituting them a state. Not so with Canada, because there were special conditions and difficulties in the way. I ask my hon. friend this question. Confederation was achieved and the new parliament was opened in 1867.

Does he believe that two years afterwards, in 1869, for instance, this parliament could have fairly and reasonably amended the British North America Act or have asked the Imperial parliament to amend it without the consent of the four original provinces? Could he fairly say that that could have been done two years after the opening of this parliament? If it could not be done at that time, could it be done 25 years afterwards, or even 50 years afterwards, without the consent of the contracting parties in the pact of confederation.

I would commend a full reading of this learned address to all members of the House. The hon. Mr. Lapointe goes on to indicate that the other provinces, which joined the first four and came later into a joint confederation, have the same status, powers and rights as the original four provinces, and they should be consulted just as much as any other province if any substantial changes are asked regarding the British North America Act.

The learned gentleman concluded his remarks with the admonition that we cannot ask for power to alter the Constitution without the consent of the provinces, for it is their Constitution as well as ours.

In 1906 to 1907 Sir Wilfrid Laurier speaking in this House, as reported in Hansard, said:

In Parliament here we can do as we please; we are in the majority; but are the members of this House prepared to say that if any province finds itself aggrieved by the terms of confederation, which have been accepted by all the provinces, they will ask the British parliament to alter the Constitution in the way desired by that particular province?

Such a course might be followed by very serious consequences. Confederation is a compact, made originally by four provinces, but adhered to by all the nine provinces who have entered it, and I submit to the judgment of this House and to the best consideration of its members, that this compact should not be lightly altered. It should be altered only for adequate cause, and after the provinces themselves have had an opportunity to pass judgment on same.

In what surely must have been one of the landmark addresses ever made in this House, the hon. Mr. Lapointe took support from the remarks made by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, Sir George Etienne Cartier, Hon. George Brown, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Robert Borden. In their words which he quoted, he held that the British North America Act is a covenant, is of a nature of a treaty, the provinces of which were essential for the acceptance of the whole scheme, and he was forced to the conclusion that we do not have the right to ask to alter it without the consent of those who are parties to the agreement.

One of the greatest constitutional scholars to whom I have been exposed was the late Chief Justice of New Brunswick, the Hon. John B. McNair. In his illustrious career Mr. McNair served not only as chief justice but also as lieutenant-governor and indeed he was premier of New Brunswick for 17 years.

An hon. Member: He was a Liberal.

Mr. Howie: Yes, a Liberal.

I would like to share with you Mr. McNair's thoughts on the important question of constitutional amendment. I am quoting from the synoptic of the proceedings of the legislative assembly of New Brunswick on March 17, 1939, as reported at page 223:

Democracy had its roots in a very small state that existed in Greece many centuries ago, where all freemen were entitled to meet in the public forum to transact the public business. That was the democratic system in its purest form.

In these days of great population, with wide expanses of territory to be governed, that method of administering public affairs is impracticable. British genius, however, long since developed a system under which the people send to the legislative halls persons of their own choosing to represent their interests and do their business for them.

It is desirable to keep government, the administration of the affairs of the people, as close to the people as is possible. No doubt it would be easier for those elected to office to rule from afar off where, protected by an army of bureaucrats, they would hear little of the individual problems and needs of their constituents. That is the way totalitarian rulers carry on—from behind a screen. But is not close contact with the people the very essence of our democratic representative system of government?

Life might be easier without it for those who are administering public affairs. But is it well for them to be out of touch with the leaders of thought who are found all over—in the municipal councils, on the farms, in the factories, in divers places in every community?

In support of the doctrine of centralization it has been suggested here that sweeping changes are essential in the distribution of legislative powers between the Dominion and the provinces, as now found in the Constitution. Might I suggest this question for hon. members to consider—what authority does the Dominion Parliament not now possess that is necessary for the solution of the problems of our day?

I have expressed my view that the Constitution should be patriated with an amending formula. There is merit in both the Vancouver consensus and the Victoria charter, and there are drawbacks to both formulas as far as smaller provinces such as the maritimes are concerned. My personal preference is for the Vancouver consensus because each province is treated equally and given one vote, seven of ten provinces must vote in favour of the changes and they must represent more than 50 per cent of our population.

The Victoria charter, on the other hand, takes a regional approach and has much to commend it from the point of view of smaller provinces like the maritimes. It does, however, give both Quebec and Ontario a veto power, but this would be reflected, by their larger populations, to a great extent in the Vancouver consensus as well. Where both amending formulas have much to commend them, I would tilt in favour of the Vancouver consensus because it appears to have a wider acceptance among the provincial partners to Confederation.

One thing the lengthy committee discussion has done is to acquaint more Canadians with the problems which face our constitutional deliberations. I believe it has created a new climate where one more attempt at winning agreement with the provinces on the amending formula is justified and desirable. After all, as Sir John A. Macdonald pointed out, the nation has been built on compromise and our federal and provincial governments have repeatedly demonstrated the ability to come up with a great compromise when it is required. In terms of an amending formula, I believe that compromise is required now.

Unilateral patriation is a move that would completely change the constitutional relationships between the federal government and the provinces as established in 1867.

A cautious and prudential position is well taken. Present necessary amendments to the British North America Act can be quickly procured in the usual way; by imperial statute and pursuant to an address by the federal Parliament with the concurrence of the provinces. To reduce the BNA Act to the category of a federal statute would be a retrograde move, contrary to the spirit of Canadian confederation, replete with possibilities of constitutional confusion and future trouble.

It is simply astounding that the government proposes a trend against which statemen of all parties have been protesting vehemently for decades. Revision of the British North America Act may seem to be essential in certain respects but in no respect will the work of amendment lack difficulty, and it is right, of course, that constitutional changes should not be regarded lightly or made an easy matter. The provinces, especially Quebec, will be wary of alterations. They will be jealous to maintain their rights and tenacious in clinging to the powers given them by the British North America Act.

There is every reason why we should go slowly with amendments to the British North America Act, especially with regard to the transfer of the powers to amend the act from Westminster to Ottawa.

We are told that we are living in a new age under conditions which the Fathers of Confederation never contemplated; the old arrangements must be modified; there must be a fresh alignment of powers.

No one will deny that some adjustments may be necessary, but the suggestion that social reconstruction is possible only through federal legislation and control carries little conviction. In theory that message might create greater uniformity; but in practice uniformity has not resulted from the exercise by the federal government of its privileges and its powers. Our forefathers in 1867 rejected the arguments in support of uniformity when they refused to enter a legislative union. The grounds for such rejection are just as strong today. Each province has its own special conditions, its own special problems and its own special interests.

There is no question but that some adjustments may be necessary or advisable in the division of legislative powers made in 1867 and in the financial arrangements now existing between the federal government and the provinces. But as to the real move now afoot to give to the Parliament of Canada the power to enact a substantial constitutional amendment to the British North America Act and impose a new charter on the provinces, I view the entire proposal with great misgivings.

• (2100)

It is my fear that such a scheme would entirely destroy our federal fabric. The division of legislative and executive powers, which is the pith and substance of the federal system of government, must depend for its maintenance and stability upon a paramount law; in our case upon the supremacy of the British North America Act.

Legislatures hold their present powers because each province is an autonomous self-governing province under the BNA Act, sovereign within the sphere defined for it in the act and independent of the Canadian Parliament to that extent.

It has been suggested by critics that the course taken by the provinces is the course of obstruction. Why should they not oppose? A province has every reason to mistrust a greater exercise of power by Ottawa. The high hopes held out in 1867 have not been realized; the fine promises then made have not been honoured. Take for example the trade of Ontario and Quebec and the regions beyond. It was to flow through New Brunswick and make of the seaports of the maritime provinces great emporiums of the world. But it continues to find channels through a foreign country or over artificial water routes, maintained at our expense and closed by nature for a great part of the year.

Our domestic products, which were to find markets in Ontario and Montreal, are turned back by a manipulative freight rate structure. Even the inter-colonial railway, the substantial quid pro quo for New Brunswick's entry into confederation, has had its value largely destroyed. Within a few short months the modern day quid pro quo, the CN Express, the remnant of the CPR valley line through New Brunswick, will be closing its doors to the capital city of the province, isolating it from contact by rail with the rest of the country. It is the bounden duty of this government to see that these wrongs are remedied and that the trust imposed in the central government is observed and fulfilled.

In speaking of Canada, the Hon. Mr. Lapointe said, "It is the child of the provinces, it is not their father." The great caveat which I enter at this time is that a nation's constitution is not just another statute, it is the foundation of all the laws, federal and provincial, which are enacted in the name of the Crown. The Constitution is not just a set of goals and objectives. It is the bedrock of our rule of law and it permeates every statute and regulation enacted within Canada. It will require vast changes and significant adjustments. Why should not this package in its new form be submitted to the provinces? What rights are contained in the new proposed Constitution that are not now enjoyed by Canadians? Admittedly they will be in a more permanent form enshrined in a new constitution, but could they not wait to be put through the amending process here in Canada after the Constitution is patriated with an amending formula? That is the route I prefer because it maintains the checks and balances which are the hallmark of our federal provincial system; it honours the pact of confederation and it meets the dictum spelled out by some of the greatest parliamentarians of our age.

I have no objection to the enshrinement of the equalization principle or to many of the excellent human and civil rights which are proposed for the charter to be included in the British North America Act. My great concern is for the process by which this is being accomplished and I have spelled out my objections. I have asked that the proposal be put before the provinces again and I have given my reasons why that course of action should be taken.

On the substance of the proposal, I have one final caveat to file. The proposed constitution's bill of rights has been steadily expanded while in committee. The bill was to include a few guarantees such as the right to an education in either official language where numbers made this possible. Since then proposed additions to the charter have multiplied like fruit flies. Various groups have pushed for the inclusion of specific guarantees to protect different people who make up our population. Many of these are justified. The committee majority decided not to include mention of the deity in a preamble and the question of property rights was discarded. Is the resultant constitution—the resultant charter of rights—the best charter of rights that can be given to Canadians?

I would really like to see a cooling off period, a reference to the provinces and a second look at the charter before it is enacted. After all, if seven of ten provinces representing 50 per cent of our population will not vote for it, should we really enact it? That is the challenge I want to leave with the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of taking part in this debate. As you know, in the previous debate held last fall I was denied that right despite the fact the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of our country indicated to the country and the members of this House on October 22 that each and every one of us could have the opportunity of participating in the debate.

Within the last few days there have been rumblings in the press and the media about the possibility of closure once again in this debate. I hope that is not true. We are at a critical time in our history and the resolution is so important that we must have a full and complete debate which allows the expression of opinion by all of us in this House. That is what democracy is all about.

As I rise to take part in this debate, I do so with a certain degree of sadness in my heart, sadness because this debate is so unnecessary. It is a debate which has come about because of the ideological theories of one man, the Prime Minister of Canada, an individual who, in my opinion, does not understand or, more likely, does not want to understand, the true nature of Canadian federalism which singles Canada out as being unique in the world. He does not understand the importance that Canadians for more than 100 years have placed upon consultation, negotiation and co-operation between the partners in confederation.

I can see two Canadas, the Canada of the present day and the Canada which existed only two or three decades ago. The Canada of yesterday existed before the decay set in, a cancerous growth which began to grow and spread and now is attacking the very heart of this great country.

The Canada of yesterday is a Canada which struggled through the thirties, the depression years, and then suddenly found itself faced with an even greater struggle, the Second World War. That war was started by a nation whose ambition was to conquer the world. The survival of western European and the North American continent and our democratic way of life was in jeopardy. Hundreds of thousands of proud Canadians, both men and women, volunteered to serve their country; many paid the supreme sacrifice. There are others, of course, but they were relatively few in number, who because of their ideological beliefs were not prepared to serve their country. We came out of that war respected as a nation, a proud nation, rich in resources, both human and natural.

We elected the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, and later on the Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker, as prime ministers of our country: two gentlemen that, in my opinion, personified Canada. People across the country from all walks of life and different ethnic backgrounds, regardless of their political affiliation, were able to say with pride, "He is my prime minister. He is the leader of my country." When they visited abroad, they displayed dignity, integrity, and statesmanship so befitting our country.

No Prime Minister since, who has held office for any lengthy period of time, has had this statesmanlike quality necessary to instil in Canadians that same feeling of oneness, of belonging and being part of that great multitude of people of all races and creeds that make up this great country of ours. Lacking that leadership, we have drifted over the years, ignoring the direction in which we were headed.

But there was one man who knew, the man at the helm, the man who is still the Prime Minister of our country, a man who said this:

> I am satisfied, but I suppose one has to be in the wheelhouse to see what shifts are taking place. I know that we have spun the wheel and I know that the rudder is beginning to press against the waves at sea—but perhaps the observer who is on the deck and smoking his pipe, or drinking his tea, sees the horizon much in the same direction and doesn't realize it, but perhaps he will find himself disembarking at a different island than the one he thought he was sailing for.

Having spun the wheel, the Prime Minister has brought us to the Canada of today: a country divided by language, by region, and over energy; a country where the vast majority of Canadians no longer are filled with pride for their flag, their country or their national anthem.

As a Member of Parliament for eight and a half years I have had the privilege of visiting a number of countries in various parts of the world as a delegate with parliamentary associations. I am always filled with emotion when, in the opening ceremonies, the host country raises its flag and its national anthem is played. As in the Canada of yesterday, the people snap to attention. They stick their chests out, and with pride they join in singing their national anthem. During the singing, my thoughts returned to the Canada of today. I had visions of some of our official functions such as football games or hockey games where our national anthem is played. One can observe people wearing hats, standing with hands in their pockets or chatting with neighbours. That is the Canada of today, with a Prime Minister at the helm whose personal ambition is to change the face of Canada even more.

For 113 years, we have had a constitution, the British North America Act. It has served us well. It is a constitution that was made in Canada by Canadians. It is a British statute, however, and because of this amendments have to be made in Westminster.

We had the opportunity in 1931 to break those ties, as did South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, The Irish Free State and Newfoundland. They seized the opportunity. We did not. It is not Britain, as suggested by the Prime Minister, which has prevented patriation, but we ourselves as Canadians, because Canada could never agree on an amending formula.

So the tie with Britain remained with the unanimous consent of the ten governments. Over the years, various attempts have been made to find an acceptable formula, without success. Basically, I suppose, this is because of the regional nature of our country and the fear that one region or one province could take advantage of another region or province.

The fact that amendments have to be made in Westminster has really caused no problems for Canada. Many amendments have been made over the years based on requests, after consensus between the provincial and federal governments. There was never any undue delay. However, there has always been a desire or consensus on the part of all Canadians to have our Constitution brought back to Canada. That desire or consensus is stronger today than it has ever been.

I am sure that had the first ministers' conference last fall been called to reach an agreement on patriation and an amending formula only, such agreement could have been arrived at, but the Prime Minister was not prepared to limit the discussion to these two items. He insisted on including a so-called "people's package", a charter of rights to be entrenched by the British parliament.

This caused concern amongst the premiers because they felt, and rightly so, that some of the package could intrude into provincial rights. In many cases, they doubted the value of the bill of rights. They felt our British parliamentary system was such that the protection of the citizens of Canada was better under that system than under the entrenchment.

I would like to comment for a moment on the charter. I listened with interest this afternoon to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). He said, "Never again will our rights be trampled upon." He was attempting to give the impression that once entrenched, those entrenched rights are inviolate.

A short time ago, I took the opportunity of asking the parliamentary library to supply me with a copy of the constitution of the U.S.S.R. I would like to quote a few brief paragraphs.

Art. 125. In conformity with the interests of the working people, and in order to strengthen the socialist system, the citizens of the U.S.S.R. are guaranteed by law:

(a) freedom of speech;

(b) freedom of the press;

(c) freedom of assembly, including the holding of mass meetings;

(d) freedom of street processions and demonstrations.

● (2120)

Article 126 reads in part:

In conformity with the interests of the working people, and in order to develop the initiative and political activity of the masses of the people, citizens of the U.S.S.R. are guaranteed the right to unite in mass organizations, trade unions, co-operative societies, youth organizations, sport and defence organizations, cultural, technical and scientific societies—

Article 127 reads:

Citizens of the U.S.S.R. are guaranteed inviolability of the person. No person shall be placed under arrest except by decision of a court of law or with the sanction of a procurator.

The final article I would like to read is Article 128, and it says this:

The inviolability of the homes of citizens and privacy of correspondence are protected by law.

One can conclude that writing basic rights and freedoms into a constitution is not in itself a guarantee to the individual citizen that he will enjoy these rights and freedoms. The only real guarantee is a democratic system of government in which the right of an individual to exercise his or her franchise freely is guaranteed and in which every two, three, four or five years citizens have the option of replacing the government.

The rights and freedoms in the government's charter of rights, and many more, have been enjoyed by us as Canadians under the British parliamentary system since we became a country 113 years ago, and they are not written down. They are not entrenched. These rights we have enjoyed during our lifetimes and the lifetimes of our forefathers have their roots in the Magna Carta, which goes back to the year 1215.

Under the system that exists today in Canada, each of us now has the right to own property. As the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) said this afternoon, many people emigrated to Canada attracted by that right to own homes or farms. Early in the century the railroads of Canada and the government advertised extensively in Europe encouraging people to come to Canada and to take up homesteads, land of their own. Now the government, because of pressures exerted by the New Democratic Party, has refused to include in the charter the right to own land. I wonder why. Is it because the NDP sees it as an obstacle to its plans to try to bring in socialism? Why would the Prime Minister not turn his back on such representations from the NDP? Would that perhaps spoil his plans as well?

Mr. Althouse: Maybe it is a provincial right.

Mr. Epp: Let's get into that one for a moment.

Mr. Neil: I hope when my friend to my left goes back to Saskatchewan he is able to explain that to his constituents.

As my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher, so eloquently put it this afternoon, members of the Liberal Party refused to acknowledge the supremacy of God. They did so by turning down the amendment of our party based on the Diefenbaker bill of rights. Why was it turned down? Was it because the late hon. gentleman from Prince Albert had drafted it, or has our country reached such a state that the Prime Minister and members on the government side of the House refuse to acknowledge that all power comes from God?

On the positive side, I would like to say I agree with the government's indication that it will protect mobility rights, and I will give the reason. A short time ago a constituent visited me at my office back home and told me he was leaving the Armed Forces very shortly. He had travelled to another province. I will not name the other province, but when he got there he looked around and decided that was the place where he would like to retire. He thought perhaps he should find a job before he tore up his roots in Moose Jaw, so he went to the local Manpower office. Everyone knows that Manpower offices are run by the Government of Canada. Do hon. members know what he was told? As soon as Manpower found out he was not a resident of that province, he was told that Manpower was sorry but Manpower could not take his name and register him for employment. Is that mobility? The government is preaching mobility, but is certainly not practising mobility.

On the eve of the conference of first ministers a leaked government document left the impression that the government hoped the conference would fail. As one who watched the complete proceedings on television, I was impressed with the premiers' sincere attempts within a limited time to reach a consensus. I am satisfied that given more time, with a Prime Minister who sincerely wished for an agreement, we would not be involved in this debate today.

The Prime Minister has attempted to stress the urgency of patriation, but what is the urgency? There is no matter pending in Canada at the moment which requires immediate changes in our Constitution. The Prime Minister said this was a promise to Quebec during the referendum campaign and that Quebec is expecting it. It is interesting to note that there is not one political party in the province of Quebec, including the Liberal Party under Mr. Claude Ryan, which supports the steps being taken by the government on the Constitution. So what is the urgency? I suggest that the Prime Minister has spun the wheel too far, the boat is capsizing and he is making a last vain attempt to make his mark in history. He really does not care if in doing so he does irreparable damage to our country.

As I said in my opening remarks, the Prime Minister does not understand the true nature of federalism or the importance Canadians for more than 100 years have placed upon consultation, negotiation and co-operation between the partners in confederation. Would it not make sense for the Prime Minister to call a halt to his unilateral action and invite the provincial first ministers to a conference to deal specifically with an address to Her Majesty requesting patriation of the Constitution with an amending formula and leave the other issues to be dealt with by Canadians in Canada? This would give Canadians and the provinces an opportunity to take time to consider the matter of a charter of rights. I know that suggestion will fall upon the deaf ears of the Prime Minister and Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), the leader who has been so anxious right from the start to ally himself as closely as possible with the Prime Minister. The reason, of course, may be that the philosophies of the two are not that far apart, and at times both of them may have had their hands on the rudder.

• (2130)

What is the future of our country if this resolution passes? Are we headed for a unitary state? This afternoon the hon. member for Provencher discussed the amending formula and the referendum clauses in some detail. I watched the look of amazement on some of the faces of the backbenchers on the government side of the House and I honestly do not believe that, until it was explained to them by the hon. member for Provencher, they fully realized the unfairness of the resolution and the problems it can create in our country. Quebec and Ontario will have a permanent veto while the other eight provinces will have none, and unless a province can join with another province in its region, they will have no clout at all.

What about my own province of Saskatchewan? What about Alberta or British Columbia? It means that the other provinces in Canada could gang up and take control of our resources, or, under the referendum process, the federal government could do the same thing, on its own.

I am sure further discussions and negotiations with the provincial ministers would lead to a solution of our problems, but I gather from the remarks of the Minister of Justice that such a step will not be taken. Therefore, I appeal to the backbenchers on the government side of the House, and to the more reasonable members of the New Democratic Party who have indicated they will probably be voting against the government, to give serious consideration to what they are doing by supporting the Prime Minister in his unilateral action.

Parliament is in the course of dealing with a matter which could change the course of Canadian history, and I think members on the other side and members of the NDP should consider that on such an important issue they are not answerable to the Prime Minister, not answerable to the Leader of the NDP, but they are answerable to all the people of Canada and, above all, they are answerable to themselves and to their conscience. I urge each and every one of the backbenchers on the government side and the NDP members to think the situation over. They must live with their conscience as long as they live. The decision they make with respect to this vote is vital for our country. Let them examine their conscience well and, I beg them, vote to defeat this resolution.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that in the process of this debate, Parliament stands abused. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of our country chose to introduce this important resolution at a press conference rather than in Parliament. That might perhaps have been excused if television had not been available in the House but, since the same media was available here, the same exposure and the same ability to communicate with the people of this country was available. One can only presume that his failure to present that motion in the House of Commons was an example of his arrogance, contempt and an abuse of this institution.

The rights of the people of Fraser Valley West have been abused in this House of Commons by the closure motion. I stand here tonight with half of my rights gone. The debate has gone full circle. It started in the House of Commons, went on to committee, and now my input comes after the fact. The input of the people of Fraser Valley West has been denied.

Mrs. Mitchell: Do they like your behaviour?

Mr. Wenman: I am certain that the people of Fraser Valley West and, I hope, people who stand for parliamentary democracy, as I thought the hon. member did, recognize this kind of abuse. I would have expected the hon. member stand with me on closure, not against me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Wenman: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. The rights of the people of Fraser Valley West were abused by that closure. My privilege and responsibility as their Member of Parliament have been impinged in the same way. The offending closure motion, as we sit tonight, has not been withdrawn despite representations to the minister responsible. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), said in this House of Commons that this is an unconscionable rule which should be re-examined. To my knowledge, it has not been re-examined, it has not been withdrawn, and another potential motion hangs like an axe over this Parliament, hangs like an axe over this debate.

I cannot understand why, when the Prime Minister and the government House leader see the seriousness of this, members of the House of Commons do not rise against this closure rule and have it struck from the records. Party after party, prime minister after prime minister, have stated that it should be struck from the record. I should like to quote Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he spoke the first time this motion was to be used—

Mr. Collenette: By a Tory government.

Mr. Wenman: I do not care whether it is a Tory government, a Liberal government, an NDP government or any kind of a government. This rule is an inequitable rule, and you know that too. Stand up for democracy in the House and listen to your former prime minister, listen to the echo of Liberalism—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Remarks should be directed to the Chair.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking directly to you, sir. This is what the Liberal prime minister of Canada said:

> Let me repeat to my right honourable friend: As you sow, so shall you reap; as you are fair, so shall you meet with fairness; as you are unjust, so shall you meet with injustice . . .
>
> In the words of Shakespeare "this even handed justice commends the ingredients of our poisoned chalice to our own lips".
> The poison that he offers to us today will come to his own lips at some future day. We are in the minority; we can be gagged, we can be prevented from expressing our opinions; they can trample upon our rights. But, sir, the day of reckoning will come!

Those are the words of a great prime minister, a Liberal prime minister. Those are Laurier's words. Laurier's words are as true today as the day they were uttered in April of 1913. They are as true today as we watch our current Prime Minister's universe unravel in a poisonous and less than candid, way.

• (2140)

In the future, history may well show its repetition of the results of the April 9, 1913 resolution. With the implementation of the obnoxious and infamous closure of October 23, 1980, history may well repeat itself. Like that initial debate in 1913, it may in fact mark the pivotal point for the ultimate defeat of intent and purpose, not only of this resolution but also of the government itself. Hopefully this closure motion will not be the pivotal point for the final severance of this nation as well.

Laurier went on in his speech at that time to say:

> But, sir, I also have the honour to belong to the great Liberal Party of Canada. I have occupied a position of some importance in it; nay, I may say that for 20 years and more I have been entrusted with its chief command. During the 15 years I was in office it sometimes happened that friends came to me and told me that I was not doing justice to myself or to the party, but that I should impose closure, as had been done in many other Parliaments. Sir, I am a Liberal of the old school; I have been brought up in the school of Fox and of the old leaders of the Liberal minority in Parliament of such a valuable weapon as it would be deprived of by the introduction of closure. Perhaps I was wrong; perhaps I was too generous. Nay, I was not; I would rather stand here today, having refused, after the 15 years of my administration, to impose closure, and having decided to abide by the old rules.

Mr. Knowles: I would rather stand here in opposition than be over there "by the power of the gag".

Mr. Wenman: I know the hon. member stands for the principle of democracy and against closure. I thank him for that comment.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member entertain one question now that we have referred to each other? What did Diefenbaker do during the five or six years he was in office?

Mr. Wenman: I have already covered that aspect. I said that if it had been the New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia, if it had been the Conservative Party of 1980, if it had been the Liberal Party of 1981, the Liberal Party of 1913 or whatever date it happened to be, it does not make it right. You, a man of principle, understand that only too well. Of course I make that comment through Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: We both understand it.

Mr. Wenman: If freedom is the absence of coersion, then closure marks the desecration of freedom. Surely freedom is the essential philosophic principle of our Parliament and our democracy. The most obnoxious form of closure is therefore undemocratic and should be removed from our procedures before it is further allowed to erode the fundamental values and traditions of our Parliament.

In our Parliament freedom of speech—the obligation, the privilege, the platform, the right—is far more important than the substance or process of this speech, of any other speech to be given, of any other bill or of any other resolution which may be placed here. The irony of the resolution we are debating today is that it purports to guarantee the process it has already taken away. The process has tarnished and subverted its own most basic freedom of speech.

The Prime Minister of Canada who claims to stand for justice and equity knows that the closure motion is wrong. He knows he has wronged both his own principles in invoking it, as well as this Parliament. He stands in a position to correct it, and I call upon him to do so.

I have had the best of all Canada has to offer. This nation has been good to me. I have received the best of education, the best of spiritual values, material plenty and opportunity unbounded. This country has been good to me. I have also had the opportunity to put words together in an educated and parliamentary way. But last week when I talked with a person in my riding, he said, "You know, one thing you are doing is starting to sound like them. When you get up and speak on the Constitution, why do you not just tell it the way we feel it? Why do you not just get up and say these kinds of things?"

I said in the early part of my speech I would use some of his words. These were the things he told me to say. I think that sometimes the majority of the people out there, the great democracy out there, somehow speaks with a clarity that we, the mechanics of the Constitution, confederation and re-confederation, do not have. Sometimes we really cannot see the forest for the trees.

The people I represent see the issue of the Constitution so simply. They say to me, "Why do you not just bring the Constitution home as quickly as possible, with as little change as possible, and then make whatever changes are desirable and as many as possible here in Canada?" This sounds simple. It is simple patriation with a majority amending formula, with no special status for any partner in confederation, with fairness, justice, equality, but above all let us get on with the business of the House and the country of solving pressing economic and social problems. They do not understand why the government cannot hear and see this simple message. The consensus is clear. It is clear, whether it is among the women of Canada, the provinces of Canada or the parliaments speaking in unanimity. The consensus is already obvious. My constituents cannot understand why we do not just do it, or why we did not do it when we had the unanimous resolution of the House. Quite frankly I agree with them. I do not understand why we did not, or and why we cannot. The consensus is clear.

My constituent also said that there was a sense in the west that somehow the centre is fiddling around with the Constitution while the west burns. There is a sense that the east and the centre mistake western tolerance for western ignorance. The west is tired of being tolerant, the west is tired of being laughed at with blue-eyed Arab jokes. The people are tired of being put down as red-necked yahoos. Westerners feel that the west has turned a blind eye to this kind of centralist bigotry, but that does not mean the west is blind. The west has had enough of one-way equalization.

A westerner's salary might be 5 per cent higher than salaries anywhere else in Canada, but it costs 100 per cent more to buy a house in western Canada. That 5 per cent more does not make up for it. It costs more than 5 per cent more to buy a car in western Canada than it does here in Ottawa or in central Canada. It costs more to pay for a telephone in the west. The cost of living in the west is very, very high. The west does not mind paying under these equalization formulas, but they do get tired. The people in the west want the centre to wake up and recognize the facts before they say, and they are seeming to say it in the telephone calls from my constituents, "Take your subsidies, take your tariffs and quota barriers, take your unfair freight rates, take your smug constitutional veto, take your eastern credit institutions, take your weighted electoral system home. If you want us to be a continuing part of this great federation, we want to be a part of it on a fair and equal basis." We do not want to play with your loaded dice. We do not want to play with your stacked deck. We want a new deal from a straight deck in the west.

Mr. Paproski: We want to get in on the poker game.

Mr. Wenman: You are darned right we do, with a straight deck. We will play poker but let us not have stacked cards. The response must be that if you want to play the game with a straight deck then you must say what you really want. We want the potential of the west recognized. We want you to help us build upon that potential. We want you to recognize that the future of and for the east lies in the building of the west, not the exploitation of the west. We want you to see that the west is but a gateway to the great markets in the world of the Pacific Rim. That is the first step. It is British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba which hold great potential, not the far east. The near west of the Pacific Rim holds even greater potential since we were excluded from the traditional markets in Europe. Why can you not see that potential and build with us? That is what we want, and we want it in a very positive way. We in the west want one strong, united Canada. I have no doubt about that, even in light of separatist groups which come to me in anger. When you get right down to it, when you get past the argument, they still want one strong, united Canada. Our country holds forth great promise. We believe Canada is a federation of equal individuals and equal partners who can build on that promise. We in the west are proud Canadians. We love Canada. Do not force us out. Help us build together for our mutual benefit, for it can be done.

There are so many of these concerns I want to bring to your attention. I would like to be more specific about them rather than just talking about them in the rhetorical form. Rhetoric is fine, but we want to be seen, heard, to be understood and to be a part of. Westerners see this constitutional package, unfortunately, as yet another attempt to make the citizens of the west second class.

Tariffs have caused the longest standing grievance on the part of all. Tariffs were originally instituted in 1879 to protect and promote Canadian manufacturing which, at that time, was located almost entirely in central Canada. In view of the potential competition from the much larger American industry to the south, such a policy was justified in its place and in its time.

As the west opened up and settled, tariffs meant only one thing to westerners. They meant westerners had to pay higher costs for manufactured goods. Input costs for industry were also higher in the west than in the east. Tariffs meant that western industrial development was, in fact, hampered. The reality of these tariffs was that western Canadians paid higher prices for goods than other Canadians. Because Ontario and Quebec had more industry, central Canada enjoyed a disproportionate share of the tariff benefits. Canadians outside Ontario and Quebec pay for central Canada's higher wage bill without gaining proportionate benefits. This is not an opinion, it is fact.

The figures on the relative level of tariff benefits are revealing. In 1977 British Columbia had 10.8 per cent of Canada's non-agricultural employment. At the same time British Columbia had only 8.5 per cent of Canada's manufacturing employment, a sector with the highest nominal tariff protection at 8.49 per cent. The discrepancy in respect of the prairies is even greater. While having 16 per cent of Canada's non-agricultural employment this region has only 8.2 per cent of the country's manufacturing employment.

On the other hand, Ontario and Quebec between them have 66 per cent of Canada's non-agricultural employment. However, they have 78.4 per cent of all manufacturing employment. It is clear that if high tariffs were to benefit all provinces equally Ontario and Quebec should only have 66 per cent of the manufacturing employment. Obviously, that is not the case.

Moreover, B.C. and the prairies have a greater than proportionate share of primary industrial employment which receives only nominal tariff protection. That tariff protection is only 1.12 per cent. Ontario and Quebec have a less than proportionate share of this low tariff sector. In effect, B.C. and the prairies are paying as much as Ontario and Quebec for tariff protection yet they are not receiving even proportionately as much protection as are the two central Canadian provinces. This means there is an unrecognized transfer of payment from the west and from the Atlantic provinces to Ontario and Quebec. This is what I mean when I say "two-way equalization". If you equalize on income tax you must equalize on the other factors as well. This is just one example.

I have been very specific, Mr. Speaker, in order to show you some of the obvious injustices. It may be something to which we have turned a blind eye and said nothing about it. Now that we are talking about equalization we must weigh all these factors. These factors were not weighed in the committee which heard briefs. They were not weighed there, at least from what I heard. I do not think they will be weighed because the provinces have not yet had an input, have given that point of view. Somehow the regions in this great country are not heard, understood or felt. But we will start talking about these specific items. We will bring them to you. Will you do something about it now? Either you respond to what I have just said or you call me wrong and correct my statistics. Do something about it one way or the other. Do not ignore us again. We are tired of being ignored. We want to be heard. We want to be felt. There is representation in this House from western Canada. I am standing here representing western Canada. It does not take a Liberal on the side opposite, a member of the NDP, or a Conservative to represent the west. It does not matter who does it. We are elected representatives. We are here to be heard. We have a message to give to you. You must hear it. You must listen because this is something specific. Let us see what you can do about it.

This is just one example of how western Canadians have been doing more than their share to assist in Canadian economic development. I do not think it is healthy for anyone to suggest they are doing anything else. I do not think the west is asking too much when it says it deserves an equal say on how the Constitution will be amended, nor do I believe it is helpful to threaten western premiers with scorn every time they object to proposals which could hinder their future social and economic development. We have that feeling.

The last time I stood in debate in this House I quoted Premier Lougheed, I quoted Premier Blakeney, and I quoted Premier Bennett. I was hooted down for quoting them, and I wonder why. That is something we in the west do not understand. We will not put up with it any more. To be sure, the federal government has provided great assistance to the development of the west. I want to recognize that, but at the same time they have acted in too many cases to hinder, to retard and to throw sand in the gears.

The case of freight rates is a clear example of what I am saying. Again, I want to be specific so that I give you not just rhetoric. The substantial benefits from confederation should not all flow from west to east or from east to west. Yet westerners must pay higher prices for consumer goods from central Canada because of expensive rail charges. I find it absolutely amazing that I can move the same furniture and goods from Ottawa to Vancouver on the same van line more cheaply than I can move them from Vancouver to here. There is something wrong there.

An hon. Member: It is further from Vancouver to Ottawa.

Mr. Wenman: That is the kind of answer we receive, that it is further.

I would call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS—BACKLOG OF CASES BEFORE PENSION REVIEW BOARD—CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, on February 11 my colleague from Grey-Simcoe directed a question to the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lamontagne) regarding a pensioner in his riding who was having great difficulty having his pension application reviewed. He received a letter from the Royal Canadian Legion, Ontario command, stating that he would have to wait from 12 to 14 months before his application would be reviewed. We find this unacceptable. This matter has been raised continually in this session, even by Liberal members, and we are not satisfied with the answers we are receiving about the delays, Mr. Speaker.

I also posed a supplementary question to the acting minister pointing out, as recorded on page 7127 of Hansard for February 11, 1981:

> There is a backlog of serious proportions before the Pension Review Board, and many veterans are dying before their claims are processed. As the two previous ministers of veterans affairs were making progress in clearing up this problem, and as things have gone from bad to worse under the minister's direction, is he now prepared to resign and let another minister take his place so that this serious, shocking matter will be cleared up in the department?

He gave me no answer at that time, Mr. Speaker, and one of his Liberal colleagues pointed out to him: Don't answer it. We are going to keep asking the question until we get the answer, you can be sure of that. We are not going to stop raising this.

The reason I suggested this Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs resign, Mr. Speaker, is that I believe he is having great difficulty in handling the two portfolios, the Department of National Defence and the acting veterans affairs role. I would suggest to him, and I hope the parliamentary secretary will relay my feelings and the feelings on this side of the House, that he have a talk with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), suggesting that he just handle one portfolio or the other. We have no objections on this side to the acting minister taking over as the full-time Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Prime Minister giving the Department of National Defence portfolio to another member.

I believe there are some ministers who can handle two portfolios. I have seen that on both sides of the House. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) had no difficulty handling both portfolios, but we feel on this side of the House that the present acting minister is having great difficulties.

He is not here tonight, he is out visiting military bases or he has been the last few days. That is part of his job and there is nothing wrong with that, but we want a full-time minister who is going to be spending some time over on Wellington Street at the Department of Veterans Affairs headquarters in order to find out what is going on with this Pension Review Board.

I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that in this letter my colleague from Grey-Simcoe was quoting from about that 12 to 14-month delay before a review of this man's pension claim, it actually says he might have to wait up to two years—two years, Mr. Speaker.

Veterans are getting older, they have been hit hard with the budget, they are hit hard by this new energy package and they are looking to increased pensions. To tell them they have to wait for up to two years before their pensions are reviewed is absolutely ridiculous. That is why we are calling for a full-time minister.

I have here a list of several pages I received from the War Amputations of Canada of veterans who have passed away waiting for their pension to be reviewed. This is totally unacceptable. We cannot accept these continuous excuses, or that it takes six to eight months to clear this up. That is the standard answer; in six to eight months we are going to get some action on this. We are finding that even Liberal members are asking questions in the House about this matter, and I pointed that out a couple of weeks ago.

One Liberal, in a question to the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs, pointed out that as a Member of Parliament one hesitates to recommend to a veteran that he go through the appeal procedure because it takes so long. It is a sad situation when a Member of Parliament has to tell a veteran that he may as well forget about his problem because it might take two years before anything happens. This is discouraging news to give a veteran.

Perhaps the parliamentary secretary could ask the present acting minister to consider discussing his role with the Prime Minister. We need a full-time minister of veterans affairs in light of the problems we are having in the Department of Veterans Affairs, especially those with the Pension Review Board. I hope the parliamentary secretary will have some good news for us tonight. I hope he is able to give me some assurance that he will pass the message on to the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs on his return.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. John Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) for the opportunity to clarify the situation concerning the backlog of cases to be heard by the Pension Review Board.

When an application is received, action is initiated without delay, usually within the same week, to keep the applicant informed about the appeal process. The backlog arose some four years ago when applications to the Board increased from 550 appeals to 1,400 appeals. Three years ago the government appointed two additional ad hoc members to the board, thus increasing the board's production from 560 decisions to 1,100 decisions annually. Unfortunately, there remained some 200 cases which were not heard, and the Pensions Review Board was not meeting the demand for appeals.

Under the previous government, vacancies occurred and the membership of the board was never brought up to strength. These unfulfilled positions had the unfortunate effect of compounding the problem.

Upon forming the government last year, we moved quickly to bring the board to full strength and the acting minister personally recommended and obtained government approval to provide six additional person-years to assist board members in the researching and gathering of facts, thus speeding up the appeal process to meet demand. The year-end statistics show that the Pensions Review Board is now disposing of more cases than new applications received.

Contrary to the statement by my hon. friend, progress has been made and we have taken the steps necessary to ensure that further progress is made in reducing the backlog. The Canadian Pension Commission is presently dealing with a backlog of cases at the first division level. Problems created by the loss of trained medical and other support staff and the lengthy time it takes to train new staff have contributed to the increase in time required to prepare a case for a first decision. Other factors, such as the availability of pertinent medical information only obtainable from private physicians or non-departmental hospitals have also contributed to delays in adjudication. During the last meeting of the Standing Committee of Veterans Affairs the chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission explained the situation at length with regard to delays in adjudication.

It should be noted that a few months ago Parliament gave the commission the added responsibility for adjudication on the award of proportionate pensions for widows. These applications are being processed rapidly with an absolute minimum of delay. Not long ago there were many complaints about the length of time required to hear a claim which was appealed to the second level of adjudication, namely, entitlement award hearings. The commission has been able to reduce the waiting period so that now it is less than at any time in the last ten years. There is every reason to believe it will be just as successful in reducing the number of claims awaiting first decisions.

Hon. members will know that the Pension Act makes provisions for retroactive awards to successful applicants so that applicants are not penalized for delays in adjudication beyond their control. We are very aware of the difficulties delays cause to our veterans and their families, and we are taking steps to improve the situation.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM—MULTINATIONAL OIL COMPANIES MOVING TO MEET CANADIAN OWNERSHIP REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on February 11, 1981, I put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) concerning the National Energy Program and what has happened with respect to Canadianization.

It seems to me there are three important parts to the program. The first is the pricing and distribution of revenues, which gets perhaps 80 per cent or 90 per cent of the present publicity and interest across the country. The second, which is very important, relates to conservation and substitution. I hope that in the next month or so the minister will be moving ahead with plans for greater conservation and substitution of oil by natural gas, electricity and renewable energy sources. The third part which is very important and certainly will be important to the future of this country relates to the Canadianization program.

In my question, I asked the minister if he could confirm press reports that some seven multinational oil companies were moving rapidly toward Canadianization.

This question was based on a press report on page six of the Ottawa Citizen of February 10, 1981, to the effect that multinationals are scrambling on to the bandwagon. The press report suggested that several oil companies, Getty, Murphy, Suncor and Ultramar, are about to be taken over by Canadian companies in order to qualify for the petroleum incentive grant system which will be available to Canadian-owned companies.

It further suggests that Gulf Canada submitted a report to its parent company in the United States suggesting three alternatives for Canadianization of that company. It suggests that Shell and Mobil are negotiating with medium-sized Canadian companies for greater Canadian ownership and corporate arrangements which would make them eligible for the Canadian petroleum incentive grants as well.

If these negotiations are taking place, it will be a major step toward breaking the log jam and moving toward greater Canadianization of our petroleum industry, especially when coupled with the actions by Dome in its move toward Canadianization and, of course, the recent takeover of Petrofina by PetroCan.

The president of Imperial Oil appeared before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. He indicated that company was not contemplating corporate structure changes, that it would be able to continue on without moving toward greater Canadianization. It has been suggested in some circles that by using farm-in arrangements for drilling on their lands that in fact they can qualify for the grants available.

These moves are important. I hope the parliamentary secretary will indicate how much progress has been made. We are told that 71 per cent of our petroleum industry is foreign owned and 82 per cent is foreign controlled. If these press reports are accurate, this means we are starting to move toward greater Canadianization of our petroleum industry. I hope the parliamentary secretary will be able to confirm this in his response to my comments tonight.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member raised the question of Canadianization in the petroleum industry since it is a principal feature of the National Energy Program tabled in the House last autumn.

I want to note, as the hon. member has already done, that the acquisition of Petrofina by Petro-Canada and the recent move by Dome Petroleum toward a greater degree of Canadian participation represent major progress in the program of Canadianization, a program which carries broad support across this country. In asking the question a few days ago, and in pursuing the matter this evening, the hon. member referred to possibilities of further Canadianization moves that can be anticipated.

● (2215)

Those moves must necessarily remain within the terms of commercial confidentiality during this stage of discussion and negotiation, but I share his expectation that in the time ahead we will see a greater degree yet of Canadianization in this dynamic sector of our economy.

In that regard, I want to emphasize the willingness of the government to assist petroleum companies in meeting the Canadianization objectives. In that context, I should like to refer to the statement made yesterday by the minister which set forth some details about the ownership criteria to qualify for the petroleum incentive program. The minister announced yesterday that the incentives will significantly help companies meet our Canadianization objectives. The hon. member may well be aware that the phasing-in approach to the program will ensure that more companies are immediately eligible for the maximum incentive payments for exploration and development, particularly in the so-called "Canada lands", or the frontier areas. These new regulations will give the companies more time to increase their Canadian ownership rate, a measure which, in some respects, is similar to that now in place in Australia.

I refer to these and other provisions as indications of the desire of the government to facilitate the move toward Canadianization of a number of corporations in the petroleum sector, and, indeed, of the importance the government places on this objective. I do not need remind the House that the degree of foreign control in the industry has been greater than in other industrialized countries, and that the government is committed to ensure a greater degree of Canadian control in the petroleum industry.

THE CONSTITUTION—PROPOSALS MADE TO PROVINCE OF SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), and his question with respect to the energy policy. It is my understanding that members traditionally use this opportunity to express their concern and dismay over the inadequacy of answers which have been given during question period. I can fully understand why the hon. member for Algoma would ask that question.

My question has to do with the Constitution. I would really appreciate the opportunity, following the speech by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), of a Liberal member speaking on this issue. It appears that the seals are silenced; the Liberals are sitting back with their lips zipped, not participating in this debate leaving it to members of the House of Commons on the opposition side to speak. Maybe by this device of asking a question in the course of the late night show we can get some Liberal to stand in his place and talk about the Constitution.

This matter has preoccupied the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Liberal Party. My question is very specific. I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) in the House what in the world was going on in respect of his negotiation with the province of Saskatchewan, trying to bring Premier Blakeney and the province of Saskatchewan on side in this constitutional debate?

This is a very serious debate in the course of our country's history. I do not deny that for a moment, but I think this kind of debate, discussion and negotiation requires candor on the part of the government. The government should keep the people of Canada advised on what it is prepared to do and how far it is prepared to go in order to win political support for this package.

While we hear many statements from government spokesmen, particularly the Minister of Justice, to the effect that these are fundamental principles which will be entrenched in the Constitution by way of a charter of rights, the government has demonstrated in the course of its activities during this debate that it is prepared to be so flexible as to do almost anything to receive political support in order to get the package through.

I think it was not unfair for me to ask what is happening with the province of Saskatchewan. There was no secret. Everyone across the country knew that the attorney general of the province of Saskatchewan was involved with senior officials of the Department of Justice. Offers were made. These negotiations went on for a full week while the committee was sitting and considering constitutional proposals. The Premier of Saskatchewan raised two questions at the constitutional committee in respect of his requirements. One question was in respect of a definition of ownership of resources, and the second was in respect of an amending formula and referendum provisions. He was opposed to the government's proposals in those respects.

The negotiations went on. I asked what offers were being made. The Minister of Justice refused to answer. All of a sudden, once the negotiations broke down, we found a line was given to the press. The press was being fed different versions of the story. What did we read in the press of February 10, 1981? Spokesmen for the federal government, one Edward Goldenberg, an aide to the Minister of Justice, and Senator David Steuart, a former Saskatchewan Liberal leader and a political opponent of Premier Blakeney's New Democratic Party government, said that the government offered Saskatchewan all it asked. That was the word being fed to the press. That was the contrived press manipulation this government is so good at and attempts to use so often.

The next day there was a report from Mr. Romanow, the attorney general of the province of Saskatchewan. He said the federal government never offered to meet the bottom line of Saskatchewan's constitutional demands. I know it is not a very parliamentary term, but if one party says one thing and another party says exactly the opposite to what the Liberal spokesmen were saying, I would say the other party was accusing the Liberal spokesmen of not speaking the truth.

I simply want to know what the government was doing in the negotiations. Is it in a position now that it is still prepared to negotiate with the province of Saskatchewan? Will the parliamentary secretary stand in his place and explain, after all this press speculation and press manipulation, precisely what game this government is up to in respect of its negotiations with the province of Saskatchewan? I come from Saskatchewan and I am interested in knowing what is happening to my province. The people of Canada want to know how far the federal Liberal Party is prepared to go in order to get this package through.

I very much look forward to the parliamentary secretary's response, which I know will not equivocate. It will answer this question without any attempt to deviate from the facts of the case, and it will let us know exactly what was offered and what is the true story in this instance.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to answer the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) this evening in respect of the particular points he just mentioned in his question. First I should state with regard to the strategy of dealing with the constitutional debate, I thought it rather ironic that the Conservative Party, which decried the lack of opportunity to speak before Christmas when the resolution was in the House, would now complain that there are too many opportunities to speak. I would like to point out to the hon. member that the interventions from this side of the House cannot and will not be judged solely by their quantity but mainly by their quality.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Now for the serious part of the answer.

Mr. Collenette: On the particular point at hand, the record is quite clear. On February 5, the minister gave what I thought was a very clear response to the hon. member for Saskatoon West. The deliberations with regard to all provincial governments are a matter of public record. Ever since the proposed resolution was made public on October 2, 1980, the government has been prepared to discuss with any province any changes they may wish. Certainly I would say that the government is still prepared to entertain any further suggestions on the part of anyone, whether it be the opposition in the House, provincial governments or any other individuals. Notwithstanding the fact that the committee stage has passed, this matter is still before Parliament. The final decisions will not be made until the final vote is taken in this chamber.

• (2225)

Premier Blakeney has said several times since October that he was not going to take any position on the package until it was clear what its final contents would be. He appeared before the special joint committee on December 19 and publicly submitted his views on the resolution. He suggested a number of changes, some of which have been adopted.

For example, and I want to be quite candid with the hon. member, Mr. Blakeney proposed a referendum rules committee. This request has been met in Sections 44 and 50 of the resolution before us. Secondly, he and Premier Hatfield suggested a change in the equalization provision. This change is now reflected in the text of Section 34. He urged the adoption of provisions confirming or transferring authority over resources to the provinces. The text supported by him has been adopted, except it does not give the provinces jurisdiction over international trade, as he advocated. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has been equally strong in his point of view that there will be no change in the government's position in respect of the provincial role in international trade and resources.

The government has discussed all these matters with Mr. Blakeney and his representatives from time to time, and after considering all the factors has made recommendations to the committee. This is reflected in the resolution now before the House, and it is up to Canadians, and the people of Saskatchewan in particular, to judge the actions of Mr. Blakeney for what they are, and whether he is acting in the best interests of the people of Saskatchewan and in the best interests of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSING

PROGRAM OUTLINED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In the Speech from the Throne delivered on April 14, 1980, when the mortgage interest rate was 16 per cent, the government said it would assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating home mortgages, but later cancelled the alleged program of assistance because the interest rate decreased. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That this House direct the government to keep its promise made in the Speech from the Throne to assist those Canadians who cannot afford the home mortgage interest rate which today exceeds 16 per cent in most of Canada by providing the promised program of assistance.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

PROGRAMS OUTLINED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the promises made in the throne speech that the government would undertake major initiatives to ensure the quality of fish products, to ensure orderly marketing, and to guarantee adequate investment in the fishing sector, through partial cost recovery, and whereas none of these promises has been fulfilled over the past 12 months, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass):

That this House condemns the inaction of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in failing to carry out the promises made to Canadian fishermen in the Speech from the Throne, and directs him to take immediate initiatives which will restore the economic potential of Canada's fishing industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

LEGISLATION OUTLINED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Notwithstanding the government's promise of April 14, 1980, in the Speech from the Throne, to provide employment opportunities for handicapped Canadians and to add new legislative protections to the Human Rights Act, the government vacillated on entrenching the rights of handicapped persons and said the status of handicapped persons could not be defined. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House condemns the government for failing to fulfil its promise to handicapped Canadians to introduce legislation amending the Human Rights Act to protect the rights of the handicapped in addition to any recognition granted by a charter of rights.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that there are reports of the Conservative-Rhino coalition breaking down and that card-carrying red rhinos have found problems in obtaining invitations to next week's party convention, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

S.O. 43

That Joe come clean on his relationship with the Rhinoceros Party and that this House support Joe's attendance at the Rhino leadership convention on May 16 at the Granby Zoo.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

LEGISLATION OUTLINED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Canadians recognize that fuel efficiency standards for automobiles can result in immense energy economies and cost savings to consumers, and welcomed the promise in the Speech from the Throne for federal legislation establishing fuel efficiency standards. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House condemns the government for failing to formulate and introduce legislation setting mandatory fuel efficiency standards for automobiles as promised in the Speech from the Throne and for thereby permitting inefficient automobiles to be supplied to Canadian consumers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEDURE

USE OF STANDING ORDER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, on this historic day, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin):

That the opposition's flagrant abuse of Standing Order 43 be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization for action.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta.

PENSIONS

CONVENING OF CONFERENCE OUTLINED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Everyone in Canada recognizes the plight of our senior citizens. Those who battle inflation on fixed pension incomes welcomed the government's announcement in the Speech from the Throne of a national pension conference for the fall of 1980. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That this House condemns the government for its cruel deception of senior citizens in failing to convene the national pension conference promised in the Speech from the Throne and in failing to fulfil its promise to aid those on fixed pension incomes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

CREATION OF CORPORATION OUTLINED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Development of alternate energy sources to replace oil is vital to the resolution of Canadian energy problems, and all Canadians wanted the creation of an alternate energy corporation as promised in the Speech from the Throne on April 14, 1980. Since this has not been done, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That this House condemns the failure of the government to create an alternate energy corporation as promised in the Speech from the Throne to stimulate the development of new and renewable energy sources to replace oil so that Canadians in the east will not be dependent on costly foreign oil.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EMPLOYMENT

PROGRAMS OUTLINED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I join my colleagues on this historic day to remind the people across the aisle of the broken promises in the throne speech.

Unemployed Canadians welcomed the government's promise in the Speech from the Throne to develop critical trade skills to prepare Canada's labour force better for tomorrow's jobs by providing trades training programs. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this House condemns the government for implementing a national energy program which has drastically reduced resource exploration and development and resulted in deferment of trades training programs for offshore and onshore skilled jobs instead of fulfilling the promise made in the throne speech.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

MEASURES OUTLINED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I am also rising under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The government said in the Speech from the Throne on April 14, 1980, that it would implement the recommendations of the Marin royal commission to formalize internal discipline in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and provide for an external review of public complaints against members of the RCMP. As is the case with other promises, we have not seen legislation in this respect. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That this House condemns the government for failing to fulfil this and other promises in the Speech from the Throne, especially with respect to internal discipline and public complaints, and thereby undermining the status of the RCMP and its bond of trust with the public.

Madam Speaker: Is there uanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE MINISTRY

RESPONSIBILITIES OF INDIVIDUAL MINISTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has written to a constituent of mine as follows:

As minister responsible for the riding of Broadview-Greenwood, I am pleased to send the attached cheque in the amount of $15,568 on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Jim Fleming, Minister of State for Multiculturalism—

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the House congratulates the Solicitor General on his new and onerous responsibilities as the minister responsible for the riding of Broadview-Greenwood and that the Prime Minister indicate who are the other ministers responsible for this or other ridings and in general for public expenditures in constituencies throughout Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

ENERGY SERVICES ASSOCIATION REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, one year ago today Canadians were paying 25 cents a gallon less for gasoline. One year ago today well drilling starts were on the increase. Now, one year later, they are declining at the rate of 16 per cent, depriving Canadians in the drilling industry and support and supply service industries of jobs.

The Energy Services Association of Alberta has issued a documented report on the negative effect the government's energy policy is having not only on oil and gas exploration but also on downstream jobs and even on the food, textile and all service industries.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That members of the government read this report, which will be delivered to their offices today, and act immediately to redress the disastrous results the government's policies are having on the economy, creating disastrous effects for most Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

ECONOMICS OF OIL SANDS PROJECTS—SUBMISSION BY CANADIAN PETROLEUM ASSOCIATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The National Energy Board has been hearing evidence on energy supply and demand in the last few months. It is fair to assume that the minister has instructed his officials to monitor these hearings. Is the minister, therefore, aware of the submission of the Canadian Petroleum Association in which it stated that the main reason for not proceeding with oil sands projects is simply that they are no longer economical under the National Energy Program? What is the minister going to do to get the projects going again?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that two governments had to be involved in this matter, the government of Alberta and the Government of Canada, that we were ready and willing to undertake additional discussions with the government of Alberta in this particular regard, that the net returns to the industry had to do not only with the price of oil but also with the taxation and the royalties imposed on those companies by Alberta, as well as the taxes raised by the national government.

We indicated last year that we were ready also to make a deal with Alberta so that the tar sands projects could be proceeded with on their own without having to wait for a comprehensive agreement with the government of Alberta. Unfortunately, the government of Alberta has refused this offer and has decided that it wanted to hold those projects as a kind of ransom for a comprehensive deal. That is its decision. We have to carry on those discussions, and we are available.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, the same association has requested that, owing to the critical importance of oil supply, on which I think the minister agrees, and the devastating effect which the National Energy Program is having on future supplies, the National Energy Board submit as soon as possible an interim report on oil supply. Is the minister prepared to advise the board to meet this request, or does the minister consider it to be in his interest to delay the production of such a report?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the hearings by the National Energy Board are concluded. I am sure the National Energy Board is reviewing the evidence submitted to it and will be preparing its report. When the board is ready to submit its report, it will be made public. That is a decision for them to take.

So far as the so-called devastating effect of NEP is concerned, I want to refer the hon. member to a report by the Alberta Energy Conservation Board which has stated quite clearly that the devastating effects on energy supply in the 1980s were going to come mainly out of the decisions of the government of Alberta rather than from the NEP. The board stated that while the NEP might have a negative effect of about 50,000 barrels a day, the current decisions by the government of Alberta would have a negative effect of around 300,000 barrels a day, if I remember well. That is also a report which my hon. friend might want to examine.

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I do not know which comes first here, the cart or the horse. The minister must understand that his policies will have very serious consequences on the policies of producing provinces.

This brings me to my final supplementary question regarding the absolute necessity of having some kind of an agreement between the producing provinces and the federal government. The lack of it is deterring activity and causing great apprehension. Rigs are leaving the country, owing to the fact that the NEP, announced on October 28, was simply the kiss of death. The indecision has caused a movement of rigs out of our country ever since the government took office. I want to ask the minister what initiatives he is taking to reconvene discussions with the producing provinces so that we can move forward together, or is he prepared to sit back and wait for someone else to take the initiative?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I quite agree with the hon. member on the necessity of having an agreement with the producing provinces. I know that he has spent many months of fruitless efforts in trying to arrive at an agreement which, unfortunately, he did not succeed in getting when he was in office. Unfortunately, we have not been more successful up to now, but I hope we will. I have already met with my counterpart from Saskatchewan with whom I have had a very good discussion and a fruitful meeting. There have also been discussions at the official level with Saskatchewan officials. Unfortunately I have not been able to arrange a meeting with my counterpart from Alberta.

• (1420)

The government of Alberta indicated publicly and repeatedly that it wanted discussions to be carried on at the level of officials for a while. The last indication I had was from a statement by a senior official of Alberta saying that they would not be ready to report to their government before mid-March, and that they did not think there would be any opportunity for serious or extensive negotiations to commence before then. I find this regrettable but, again, our officials are available, I am available, and the Government of Canada remains available for resumption of discussions with the government of Alberta as soon as that government is ready for such discussions.

ADVICE GIVEN BY MINISTER'S OFFICIALS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Those of us who live in western Canada and are familiar with the industry have considerable concern about the supply situation. The minister brought up the issue of his officials. He said that they were willing to talk. Recently The Globe and Mail reported that the minister's officials, before a gathering of engineers and geologists in Alberta, said that 22,000 wells would have to be drilled in western Canada to find a four or five-year supply of oil. Also they said that in the north this would take 75 wells.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hawkes: Is that the kind of advice he is receiving from his officials, and does he believe that kind of advice?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member referred to The Globe and Mail. He knows that paper does not refer to me very positively, very often.

Mr. Epp: Never.

Mr. Lalonde: But while he is dealing with The Globe and Mail, I might suggest that he read the article this morning on the question of oil rigs and gas rigs. It indicated that the arguments of the drilling contractors' association lack complete credibility. They lack complete credibility when they claim that the NEP has been the cause of reduction in drilling in some areas. My friend might find an advantage in reading this particular article.

As far as the specific article to which he referred is concerned, I have not seen that article. I will read it and let my friend know what are my views on it, but I am not aware of statements by my officials to that effect.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, the bafflegab gets longer and longer. I asked the minister whether he believed that kind of advice; at least he could answer that. The minister brought up the issue of drilling contractors in the province of Alberta. Those of us who live there and drive north in the wintertime see rigs going south. That is believable, that is what is happening, and the supply situation is suffering.

Does the minister have his officials working on a new supply forecast based on the fact that we will have fewer rigs drilling in this country in the years ahead? The drain of rigs began prior to the NEP because they knew it was coming. The minister should back off. We need oil in this country; we must have rigs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, if it helps the hon. member, I might remind him that on February 10 of this year, which was approximately eight days ago, there were 577 rigs active in Canada compared to 531 on February 12, 1980. So, there are more rigs active at the present time in Canada, including western Canada, than there were last year; not fewer.

An hon. Member: Why don't you go out there and see?

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COMBAT INFLATION—REQUEST FOR CUT IN TAXES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last year in the election campaign he promised to "assist those who need it most". He specifically promised to control inflation. Today's Gallup poll indicates that Canadians are not exactly impressed with his efforts, when 50 per cent said that inflation is the number one problem, for the obvious reason that the costs of essentials are up more than 12 per cent, well in excess of wage increases. Is the government now prepared to act on his election promise to do something about inflation? Specifically, will he bring in a tax cut for middle and low-income Canadians, many of whom cannot afford to wear the roses that all the Liberals are sporting in their suits today?

● (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Baa, Baa!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I think the reaction of the members on this side to the question of the Leader of the New Democratic Party shows that they are not prepared, as he seems to be, to condemn the flower growers and gardeners of Canada. They are workers, too. The people who sell flowers have an honest living to make, just as any other worker has.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Who paid for them?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, in so far as who paid for them, hon. members opposite can look at a question asked by one of their own members on this general subject. If they are interested in what their own members are asking about, then they can read the answer. They obviously do not take their own people very seriously.

In the Speech from the Throne we made a clear commitment that we would first help those who needed help most. That was why, within weeks of the meeting of this House after the last election, we introduced a measure to provide the old age pensioners with a very sizeable increase in the guaranteed income supplement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, members on this side should be excused for thinking that the Liberal cheers when the Prime Minister stood up were for the rate of inflation. It indicates their concern.

Notwithstanding the assistance which was provided to pensioners, which all members in this House support, no one else has received anything. Since the Prime Minister acknowledged in the campaign that interest rates had some bearing on the cost of living, and since the government has refused to interfere with the Governor of the Bank of Canada and his high interest rate policy, there are two areas of specific concern upon which the government could move. One is mortgage rates and the other is small business loans. Since small businessmen have to pay in excess of 20 per cent in order to expand, and since mortgages are up to 16 per cent to 18 per cent, will the government at least take specific action and make the banks put up money for small businesses at lower rates through mandatory legislation, and will it substantially lower mortgage rates?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, as far as small businessmen are concerned, we responded to the request of the Small Businessmen's Association. We extended to the end of this year the small business development loan, and that is a significant gesture.

Mr. Crosbie: The bond—my bond.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the bond.

The hon. member talks about the causes of inflation. Of course there are many. As he knows, one of the main causes of the rapidly increasing cost of living is the cost of energy. The government has been putting forward policies and seeking the support of members opposite for an energy policy which would keep inflation at about five to six points below what it would have been if we had followed the Tory energy policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, for almost a year now the issues of special assistance to senior citizens and lower energy prices than would have been provided by the Tories, have been singled out. That probably leaves out 95 per cent of Canadians from receiving any serious action which would benefit them in terms of inflation. Is that to be the sum total of the government's action on inflation? Or, is the Prime Minister going to stand back and allow the average income of working families to decrease by another $1,200 this year, as the figures of the Minister of Finance indicate? In effect, is the Prime Minister saying that he does not care about that and that the financial policies of the government will remain unchanged?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am sorry if I offend the hon. member. But when he mentions the figure of 95 per cent of Canadians being untouched, it seems to me he is showing a great ignorance of the need for energy by all Canadians in this country, from farmers to old age pensioners, to young people, who all across the country are benefiting from the government's policy to keep inflation at about five points below what it would have been under the budget of the party opposite.

HOUSING

IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS OUTLINED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): My question is to the minister responsible for housing. In the Speech from the Throne the government promised to protect those Canadians most affected by unacceptably high interest rates, and they have been unacceptably high since the government took office. What action has the government taken on this promise?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for the question because in fact it is a repeat of a question that he has asked and that I have responded to in the House on previous occasions.

I would simply remind the hon. gentleman of the history of the ministry since that time. The first action, again within a month of taking office, was the movement by the corporation and the ministry to respond under government programs to those people who had been promised continued assistance; I refer to the AHOP assistance program to keep costs below 30 per cent of income.

Secondly, I would remind the hon. gentleman of the increase of the non-profit social housing commitment of this government, to increase the annual commitment from 25,000 starts in a year to 30,000 starts.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I am happy to have the occasion to point out to the hon. member the provisions of the report on the handicapped yesterday, which complimented CMHC for its action in addressing the handicapped in this nation and for the leadership it has shown in that regard.

Mr. Lewis: We keep asking the question because we do not get an answer.

Turning to another part of the Speech from the Throne, the government promised to assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided. CMHC is now swamped with the spectre of foreclosed homes. Why did the minister not take any action on that promise?

Mr. Cosgrove: I would be repeating my last answer to the hon. gentleman, that when we said we would address assistance to those who needed help first, we did, to those people who were on the bottom end of the lower-income scale and that is why we addressed, for example, the rule to protect on an equitable basis those people who would have to pay more than 30 per cent of their income towards shelter cost. That is why we address the issue of social housing units, because those units, by and large, serve the target area, those people who find it difficult to come into the market, or find it difficult to compete or find housing in any other form.

FISHERIES

LONG-TERM PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): My question, Madam Speaker, is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The throne speech makes a number of sanctimonious sounding promises with respect to initiatives affecting the fisheries sector which would be expected to increase substantially Canada's share of our own natural resource and to assure a maximum return to fishermen and fish processing companies. In the past ten months the exact opposite has happened. We see chaos in the industry, a lack of consultation, last minute changes of regulations, and this is all summarized in a condemning news letter put out by the Fisheries Council of Canada in December, which suggests that the minister is guilty of politicizing the decision-making affecting the management of the fisheries.

Will the minister tell us why it is that he has refused to continue the comprehensive long-term planning and development of a national fisheries policy for Canada which was initiated by his predecessor, which he has abandoned, and which the Fisheries Council of Canada has scorned because he reneges on that very important initiative?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, taking the last point first, in fact I did not discontinue the work. A draft report is on my desk now and I hope that the good work started by my predecessor, which was an update of the document published in 1975, will in fact be useful information, which is obviously what the hon. member needs.

As to the question of maximum return, the hon. member may not have heard that the great push of the department, the industry, fishermen and processors, in the last months and the months to come would be to enhance the quality of Canadian fish in order to ensure consistent quality in the markets that we wish to penetrate. This work is going ahead very positively.

As for the question of the politicizing of the fisheries policy I might say that if tilting in favour of the fishermen who earn a living from the fishery is politicizing the debate, then I have to plead guilty to having politicized the discussion.

Mr. Siddon: That is not quite the accusation of the Fisheries Council of Canada, Madam Speaker. They allege in fact that the tilt has been to the advantage of incumbent members that happen to represent Liberal fishing ridings.

The throne speech promised that licensing regulations would be changed so that Canadian fishermen could benefit more fully from the resources out to our 200-mile limit. That clear promise in the throne speech has been reneged upon. Will the minister tell us when he is going to allow Canadians to benefit fully from our own resource, without licensing foreign trawlers to enter Canadian waters and harvest our resource, and when is he going to make some progress on resolving the long-standing situation with the United States on reaching an agreement on the shared use of those stocks which straddle the Canada-U.S. border?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, one of my colleagues suggested the hon. member fire his research bureau. It is a very positive suggestion. The fact is we have embarked on a difficult reorganization of the licensing program and, as hon. members on all sides of the House recognize, the goal is worthy but the way is difficult.

As for the question of Canada's role in the 200-mile zone, it is very clear from the Law of the Sea consensus that those species in which our fishermen and processors have no interest are allocated to foreign interests. As far as we are concerned, those fisheries which we are interested in are taken by the Canadian fleet. There may be a modest amount which respects treaties. We have, for example, a treaty with France, but surely the hon. member is not advocating that we do not live up to our responsibilities, having signed treaties.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM IMPLEMENTS TAKEOVER—QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT AID

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): My question, Madam Speaker, is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but in his absence I will address it to his parliamentary secretary.

The White farm implement industry in Brantford has been shut down since last August throwing 1,100 workers out of work. The parent company in the United States has apparently found a buyer, three groups of Canadian investors, one in Guelph, Ontario, one in Brantford, and one in Montreal. I would like to ask what response will the federal government give to this group of Canadian investors who are seeking a $10 million loan from the federal government at a low interest rate in order to purchase this very viable farm implement industry and save it from going under permanently?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member had given me notice of this question, I would have been able to give him an answer immediately. I shall take note of it now and provide him with the details requested in the near future.

[English]

Mr. Blackburn: I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker. This apparently has been in the press for at least a day, and I am surprised the parliamentary secretary was not aware of it. The same group of Canadian investors has approached the government of Ontario for a $5 million loan, and in view of the fact the federal government came to the rescue of an American multinational, Chrysler, with respect to its Canadian operations, and in view of the fact that the Ontario government has been approached, will the minister assure this House and the stockholders of White farm implements, and the 1,100 workers at this operation that produced the best North American combine yet invented, that the Canadian government will not see White go under and will do everything it can to help the Canadian investors buy out that company so that it will be back on the tracks in a matter of a few weeks?

● (1440)

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, I am happy to see that some members have enough leisure time to spend their day reading the newspapers. I would like to tell the hon. member that we are aware of the problems faced by this industry at the present time. I understand, but of course I would like to check on this, that the business development program has offered to that group of investors a loan guarantee of $10 million.

Oral Questions

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER DISCUSSED AUTOROUTES 13 AND 50 WITH QUEBEC COUNTERPART

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport.

In view of the election promise of the Quebec minister of transport to start work on highway 50 and complete highway 13 if the federal government is willing to negotiate and assist in the financing, can the minister tell the House whether he has been approached by his provincial counterpart in relation with such negotiations?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, many factors will eventually influence the decision to transfer to Mirabel some of the routes now going to Dorval. In passing, I am willing to postpone my appointment as ambassador to be there when this decision is made.

There will be the cost to the government, the cost to the carriers and the cost to the passengers. Obviously, the quality of the road network around Mirabel will be a major factor. It is in this context that an extension of highway A-13 must be considered.

Until now, as far as I know, the Quebec government had indicated that the federal government should make a decision about the transfer before negotiations on highway A-13 are undertaken. My hon. friend for Argenteuil now says that the Quebec minister of transport is willing to reconsider this position.

Mr. Fox: For the third time.

Mr. Pepin: For the third time, as one of my colleagues has just said. As I expect to meet with the Quebec minister very soon concerning the announcement of an agreement on the Montreal commuter train network, we shall probably discuss this matter at the same time.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

LEGISLATION RESPECTING FUEL EFFICIENCY STANDARDS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given that a promise was made to the Canadian people that the federal government would introduce legislation to set mandatory fuel efficiency standards for automobiles, will the minister give an explanation of why the government has failed to introduce this legislation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the legislation is currently being drafted and will be introduced soon. The hon. member knows that there has been no time in the schedule of the House to consider a number of pieces of legislation. There are something like 40 bills awaiting consideration by Parliament. I am very eager, as are my colleagues, to see Parliament examine expeditiously these bills as well as others that will come forward, including the one referred to by my hon. friend. I hope we will get the co-operation of the opposition.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, it is obvious who has the pull over there and who can get their bills introduced in the House. Since the government is trying to convince Canadians that the most important step to energy self-sufficiency is conservation, why would the minister have put increased costs and energy taxes ahead of the conservation legislation? Could it be that the government is broke?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the hon. member must have been living in a dreamworld in the last six months, unless he was living some kind of nightmare of his own. In effect, we have introduced conservation measures and I will name one in particular, whereby Canadians can switch to natural gas or electricity in most provinces and get an $800 grant for that conservation.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: When?

Mr. Lalonde: They can do that, keep receipts, and the program will come into effect on April 1, without having to wait for the co-operation of my hon. friend, which is not very forthcoming when it comes to passing legislation in this House.

PENSIONS

DELAY IN CONVENING NATIONAL PENSIONS CONFERENCE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Speech from the Throne promised the convening of a national pensions conference by the fall of 1980. Within six months that promise was broken. I should like to ask the minister why there was such indecent haste to break that promise; has she been collaborating on a way to promise conventions and then break those promises by working with the Minister of Employment and Immigration?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have a real—

[Translation]

—how should I say, it really hurts me, Madam Speaker.

[English]

It really hurts me to have to inform the hon. Tory member that another hon. Tory government, namely, the government of Ontario, had to wait until it called an election to publish a very important report on pensions, which was released on Friday last week. By courtesy and elementary common sense we did not want that money to be wasted. We have that report now and our conference will be held on March 31. I hope the hon. member will be there.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the minister is operating on the Gregorian calendar. The conference was supposed to be held last fall and the election happens to be this spring, so there is a six-month gap there somewhere. The Speech from the Throne also promised that we must "begin immediately"—and I emphasize immediately——to design better methods of providing flexible, portable, and secure pensions both in the private and public sectors. To start this process, my government will soon release a major study on the Canadian pension system.

I should like to know what has happened, and when that study will be released?

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Frankly, Madam Speaker, being asked such wonderful questions is almost a pleasure because they enable us to give political answers.

[English]

The hon. member does not seem to have in the research bureau of the Tory party a copy of the Lazar report which we begged the Tories, when they formed the government, to release. They had problems with the French translation. We had to wait until we were back in office to release that report. It has been released for months. If the Conservative opposition had had the common sense to identify pensions as a major concern of Canadians for their future, for tomorrow and for their children, they would have appointed a critic for pensions and they would have sent a delegate with me when we travelled to a few European countries to study the pension systems over there.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED TALKS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT RESPECTING GARRISON DIVERSION PROJECT

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Early in March, President Reagan of the United States is scheduled to visit Ottawa. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to use the opportunity of the President's visit to ask the new American administration for a clear and unequivocal commitment that no new funds will be appropriated for the Garrison diversion unit until such time as Canadian concerns about interbasin biota transfers and water quality are resolved?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have dealt with this matter before. I would remind the House that I raised the matter on my very first meeting with the previous president, President Carter, and that he had given us an undertaking that, in so far as his administration was concerned, he was very conscious and respectful of the Canadian objectives in this regard. I intend to make the same points to President Reagan.

Mr. Sargeant: Madam Speaker, I hope the new president has more effect with the U.S. Senate appropriations committee than the last one.

U.S. CONGRESS COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In April this year the United States Congress appropriations subcommittees on energy and water development will hold hearings of witnesses in opposition to the Garrison diversion. Is it the intention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to seek an opportunity to speak before these committees in order to outline Canada's grave concerns about this project, or should the minister be unable to testify, would he be prepared to send an all-party delegation of members of this House to testify at these hearings?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I certainly do not think it would be appropriate for me to appear before an American committee, Madam Speaker. I will consider the hon. gentleman's representations as to the best way in which this should be handled.

DISASTERS

LOCKEPORT, N.S.—AID FOR REBUILDING OF PLANT DESTROYED BY FIRE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On January 13 I directed a question to the Deputy Prime Minister concerning the disastrous fire which had occurred in Lockeport, Nova Scotia, and which caused loss of employment for some 305 people. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion replied that a proposal concerning this matter would be made within the next few weeks to the advisory board of the department. In the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. As more than a month has passed, I would ask if the advisory board has now completed its examination of the company's proposal, a proposal I might add which was made over a month ago by company officials. Will he make this an anniversary day for Lockeport by making a decision which would lead to the rebuilding of the plant in that town?

• (1450)

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In relation to what the hon. member stated, Madam Speaker, the advisory board has made its recommendation. The department in Nova Scotia has presented its proposal to the minister, and he will be making an announcement on this within the next few days.

Oral Questions

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO PROVIDE JOBS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I wish to remind him of a short phrase in the throne speech, that there will be an increased effort to develop critical trade skills so as to prepare today's labour force better for tomorrow's jobs. The only thing the government signalled, during the year it has been in power, is its intention to reduce and shift some of the burden for manpower training and education to the provinces, to the tune of $1.5 billion. Will the minister advise whether there are any other initiatives which the government has undertaken to redress this critical situation in view of the fact that half the unemployed are under the age of 25 and industry is critically short of skilled manpower?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to answer that question. I ask the hon. member to review some of the other announcements we have made since the throne speech. We introduced a new training program for women to bring them into non-professional fields. We established additional training funds for native people in Canada. We established a major parliamentary task force to look into the whole area of developing new programs for training, and held a number of meetings across Canada. In that regard we will be negotiating with the provinces in the forthcoming months to establish new training agreements. We have established new programs under the $350 million industrial adjustment program act. We have established a brand new generation of critical skills training to make sure there will be an upgrading of training opportunities for Canadians in displaced communities, as well as right across Canada. That is just a short inventory of a number of initiatives we are taking to provide for additional training because we recognize it to be one of the very important issues this country will face in the coming decade.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, the tomorrow that the throne speech talked about was here yesterday. Canada's industrial future lies in high technology jobs. The time for study has passed. The minister knows the situation. He knows that he has to involve industry, the provinces, labour unions and the government in redressing this critical situation. The time for study is no longer here, the time is for action. When is the minister going to take some action to bring the players together and produce some effective programs?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, unlike some members of the opposition, we believe more in accomplishment than in rhetoric.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is what the women thought too.

Mr. Axworthy: We put into place a number of meetings with industrial representatives, and in the last year signed several major agreements with groups like the mining industry, the aerospace industry, the electronics industry, and the forest industry in the hon. member's province, to establish brand new critical skill trade programs. I will be very glad to send the hon. member copies of these agreements if he is genuinely interested.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

TORONTO HARBOURFRONT DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works. Will the minister give an accounting to the House with regard to the program in Toronto which caused so much excitement some while ago, the Harbourfront development, particularly with regard to the question of the terminal building?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I presume the hon. member is referring to news reports to the effect that, because of some problems at the municipal level and regional level in metropolitan Toronto, the plans for Harbourfront have run into some delay. I understand from the president of the corporation that those were simply delays and the program is continuing.

PARLIAMENT

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING RIGHTS FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. As he knows, some 3,000 employees on Parliament Hill are denied the fundamental right to choose free collective bargaining concerning their working conditions on the Hill. In view of the fact that over 13 years ago a joint Senate-House of Commons committee recommended an extension of these rights, and the then government House leader some two years ago promised changes in this area, what action is the government prepared to take to put an end to this unjust and primitive state of labour relations here on the Hill, and bring in the necessary legislation to extend to our employees on the Hill full collective bargaining rights?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe this question was asked the other day. The hon. member was reminded that these employees are not employees of the government but of the House of Commons, and I believe the Speaker told the hon. member that this type of question would be more properly raised directly with her.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): If ever there was an instance of buck passing, this is it. Madam Speaker has said that the government must bring in legislation to extend these rights. My supplementary question is the following. While the government has delayed this legislative action, and I might say this is a rather surprising attitude from a Prime Minister who purports to act on behalf of workers, at least who did some time in the past, and defends freedom of association—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): While the government is delaying this legislative action in circumstances in which an employee in an office of a non-New Democratic Party Member of Parliament is arbitrarily fired, disciplined, or harassed, in the absence of any legislative action on the part of this government the Speaker said that she is powerless to intervene.

Madam Speaker: Order. Now I do have to object to the length of the question.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): In view of the fact there is no avenue of appeal whatsoever for such an employee, when is the government going to bring in the necessary legislation to extend collective bargaining rights or, at the very least, provide some sort of appeal mechanism or grievance procedure for employees in an MP's office who may be unfairly dismissed, harassed, or unjustly disciplined?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I find it regrettable that the hon. member is bringing back his allegations of harassment. He has been challenged by many people, by the press and by myself, either to put up or shut up on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CHRYSLER CANADA—TERMS OF NEW LOAN GUARANTEE AGREEMENT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance. It is with regard to the new loan guarantee agreement with Chrysler. In view of the fact that this new agreement is substantially inferior as far as Canada's benefits and Chrysler's guarantees are concerned, when compared to last May's agreement, and because presumably the Minister of Finance along with cabinet had to approve such a program, I now ask the minister to justify the government's new position in this regard, keeping in mind for example the reduction of some 3,000 jobs with this program as opposed to the one of last year, and the reduction of 50 per cent in small cars to be produced in Canada by Chrysler, not to mention the $50 million discrepancy in the actual amount of the funds agreed to, and to explain how the government can justify taking a step backwards in this regard as compared to the agreement last May with Chrysler.

● (1500)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have been involved in the discussions with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and other ministers on this particular proposal, and we did approve it because, in our view, it represented a very good deal for Canada in light of the support which the Government of Canada proposed to give. It was my impression that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had done an extremely good job in negotiating with Chrysler and getting very substantial benefits for Canada.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

TREATMENT ACCORDED SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, notwithstanding the minister's answer—from a questionable program to one which has taken a step backward—I would like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of State for Small Businesses.

In view of the fact that small business provides over 50 per cent of the labour force in Canada, as he well knows, and because this vital sector is experiencing a record number of bankruptcies, primarily as a result of high interest rates and the lack of venture or working capital, could the minister explain why, on one hand, the government is able to support a large foreign company to the extent of $200 million while, on the other hand, Canadian-owned small and medium-sized industries, which provide the largest possible employment potential, are left high and dry by their own minister? What action is the minister taking from his standpoint when, on one hand, we have the government guaranteeing $200 million—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should check his figures before making allegations. Indeed the loan guarantee given to Chrysler Corporation amounted to about $150 million.

As to the small business sector in Canada, the hon. member ought to recall that the moment we were returned to office we rushed through the House a measure to raise the loan ceiling from $75,000 to $100,000 under the Small Businesses Loans Act. In addition, as early as April 17 the Minister of Finance announced that Small Business Development Bonds would be issued and, a few days ago, he stated that this program would be extended until the end of the year. The hon. member spoke about the record number of bankruptcies experienced by the small business sector. He should know as well that the bankruptcy rate is less than 1 per cent of the total number of small businesses in Canada and he forgot to say that 1980 saw the creation of 50,000 small businesses in this country.

COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY RESPECTING NATION-WIDE TELIDON PROGRAM

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Communications.

About a year ago, the Minister of Communications announced a subsidy to Telecable Videotron for the development of Telidon. About two weeks ago, the Minister of Communications also announced a commitment by the government to the Telidon program amounting to $21 million. Can the minister assure the House that the Telidon program will be developed right across Canada and not only regionally?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the nature of the news I announced last week with regard to Telidon is such that it should really encourage the Canadian industry, which is very much interested in that new technology in which we have a leading edge.

I am particularly happy that Telecable Videotron, which is firmly established on the south shore of Montreal, should participate in the pilot project and that the people there should be amongst the first to enjoy the benefits of that new technology. In addition, as a result of the expansion of Telecable-Videotron throughout the island of Montreal, several Montrealers will also be among the first Canadians to enjoy its advantages. I am also happy to tell the hon. member that similar pilot projects will be scattered throughout Canada.

More good news, Madam Speaker: yesterday, the great multinational Time-Life announced that it was going to choose the Canadian system's Telidon, over those of its great international competitors, namely, the French system, Antiope, and the English system, Prestel. Naturally, that is very good news for the whole Canadian information industry.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

VISIT OF PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—QUERY RESPECTING ADDRESS TO PARLIAMENT OF CANADA

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Prime Minister. There has been an announcement that the President of the United States and Mrs. Reagan have accepted the Governor General's invitation to visit Canada on March 10 and 11, 1981. Is the Prime Minister in a position today to indicate generally the program for that visit, and particularly is he in a position to say whether or not the president will be addressing Parliament?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the dates were only decided in a final way yesterday, and through our officials we are now trying to establish the agenda for those two days. If consideration is given to having the president address the joint Houses, I would be happy to consult with the leaders of the opposition parties and determine their views on this.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-42

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I realize that tomorrow is the day for dealing with House business for the days that lie ahead. There was some urgency to the passage of Bill C-42, the bill under which the Post Office is to be turned into a Crown corporation. I wonder if the House leader could schedule a time when we might deal with that bill and get it passed, particularly so we can avoid a strike situation.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to consult with the minister responsible and my colleagues, the House leaders on the other side, to try to deal with that bill as soon as possible.

An hon. Member: Thursday is tomorrow.

PRINTING OF ADDRESS TO HER MAJESTY

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am sure that members have noticed the unusual size of both the Order Paper and Votes and Proceedings. That is the result of the requirement that the entire text of the motion for an Address to Her Majesty be printed each day, in the case of Votes and Proceedings and Hansard, sometimes two or more times. Needless to say, this is a rather expensive and not entirely necessary practice.

After consulting the other House leaders, I believe there would be consent to permit the Table to devise an appropriate abbreviated form for use in the Order Paper, Votes and Proceedings and Debates, with the understanding that the full text of the main motion would be printed in the Monday Order Paper every week; that the full text of any amendment under consideration would be printed each day; and that Votes and Proceedings carry a full text on each day on which a vote is taken on an amendment and on the day that the matter is finally disposed of.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There have been consultations, and we are agreeable to the House order as stated by the government House leader.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, so are we.

Madam Speaker: The proposal of the hon. minister is agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COATES—RESIDENCE OF LATE RIGHT HON. J. G. DIEFENBAKER

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Madam Speaker, I will not take a lot of time of the House, but I have to bring a matter of privilege to the attention of the House that I feel affects every member of this chamber, since we represent the people of Canada. It relates to the request by the former prime minister of Canada, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, to the people of Canada that his home in Rockcliffe be used specifically as a museum in association with his contributions as a prime minister and as a Canadian of great significance.

In recent days, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) has announced a decision of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board in Canada in relation to Mr. Diefenbaker's home in Rockcliffe. As far as I am concerned, the decision rests with the people of Canada and should not be sloughed off to a board of any kind. The decision is the responsibility of the Government of Canada and, more particularly, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) as to whether we accept the gift which the Canadian people have been notified by the executors of the estate of the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker is available to them.

● (1510)

I have been in communication with the Prime Minister, the Minister of the Environment and the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox), and I have indicated to all three that the John G. Diefenbaker Memorial Foundation would be willing to enter into discussions with the Government of Canada with the objective that that Foundation assume the responsibilities as outlined in Mr. Diefenbaker's will as far as any—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would like the hon. member to try to let me know exactly where his question of privilege stands. I can see the hon. member is pressing a point. He has a complaint about a situation with which he does not agree, but that does not in itself constitute privilege. I would like him to restrict himself to indicating to me where his question of privilege lies.

Mr. Coates: Madam Speaker, I will get to that quite quickly. What I am endeavouring to indicate is that a board established by the Government of Canada to carry out certain responsibilities on behalf of Canadians has made an announcement through the Minister of the Environment which reflects on the role played by Mr. Diefenbaker during his lifetime. Certain actions this board anticipates taking relate to some aspects of his distinguished career. As I read the announcement, this board has at the same time proposed that this gift which is part of Mr. Diefenbaker's estate should be rejected. The gift made through Mr. Diefenbaker's will was not to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada. It was to the people of Canada, to the Parliament of Canada and to the Government of Canada which naturally must act on behalf of the people of Canada.

What has happened is that a board has taken a decision which leads one to believe that the government will not accept the gift which has been made to the people of Canada.

I believe the people of Canada have the right to expect that the bequest made in Mr. Diefenbaker's will will in fact be acted upon. I have no doubt at all that the people of Canada and the members of this House who represent the people of Canada would want to see that happen. I do not believe that, by the use of a vehicle such as a board of one sort or another, we can eliminate the bequest which has been made.

The solicitors for the executors of the estate of Mr. Diefenbaker have made certain statements to the effect that, if this gift made to the people of Canada by the late John G. Diefenbaker is not accepted, it will become a part of the residue of Mr. Diefenbaker's estate and be disposed of as the executors perceive it should be disposed of. It would be a terrible travesty and tragedy for the people of Canada if the Government of Canada failed to indicate whether it would accept the gift made in the will. This House and the people of Canada have the right to know where the government stands. I do not believe the government should use a vehicle such as a board to eliminate its obligation to the people of Canada.

Just to clarify this matter for members of the government, the Diefenbaker Foundation has indicated in correspondence with the Prime Minister, the Minister of the Environment and the Secretary of State that it would be willing to assume the responsibility set out in that bequest if the Government of Canada accepts the gift, so the taxpayers of this nation should have no fear that they will be asked through their tax dollars to assume the responsibility of maintaining and operating the Diefenbaker home.

What I really find reprehensible and unacceptable is the suggestion that, because Mr. Diefenbaker did not live in the home when he was prime minister or leader of the opposition, it is not a home of significance. The Prime Minister of this nation lives at 24 Sussex Drive. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) lives at Stornoway. Private Members of Parliament live at wherever their residences are. For many years Mr. Diefenbaker lived in his home in Rockcliffe. That is the home where he wrote his memoirs. That is the home where his wife died. That is the home where he died. It is unbelievable to me that a board charged with responsibility for historic sites and monuments in Canada would reject out of hand the suggestion that the home in which Mr. Diefenbaker died is a significant place to be a museum for future Canadians to see.

As far as I am concerned, it is facetious to suggest that the Canadian government, through the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, would build a monument in Prince Albert as a substitute for accepting the gift from Mr. Diefenbaker's estate. All members of this House realize that few people get the opportunity to go to Prince Albert, but we should also realize that almost one million people visited this capital as tourists last year. This is the place where we have Laurier House and Kingsmere.

What the government, through this board, is suggesting is that we should not accept a gift and have a museum to the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker. I do not accept that. I believe the government should not try to use the device of a board to squirm out of its responsibility to the people of Canada to accept this home. I believe we should hear today a clear statement as to what its intentions are. If its intentions are to refuse a gift from a former prime minister of this country, let it be known. Let the people know.

I can give the government the guarantee that the home will be retained. It will be a museum open to Canadians. It is terribly important that all Canadians know that the Government of Canada accepts the gift of a former great Canadian of his home, that it will be under the auspices of the government and all the people of Canada so that Canadians today, tomorrow and forever will be able to see that home as a memorial and a tribute to a great Canadian, indeed one of the greatest Canadians who has ever lived in the 114-year history of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak briefly on the same question of privilege. I listened carefully to the hon. gentleman's remarks, and I would like to comment on one or two of the points he made, particularly because of my desire to clarify, in case there should be any misinterpretation or in case I might have misinterpreted his remarks.

At one point I thought I heard the hon. member indicate that this decision which has been taken might be one which reflects on the role of Mr. Diefenbaker as a former Prime Minister or in Canadian public life. If I understood the hon. member correctly to say that, I want to assure him and the House immediately that nothing could be further from the truth. I doubt if there are many members of this House who had more affection and respect for the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker than I had, and I am sure the Historic Sites and Monuments Board is extremely conscious of his contribution to Canadian history and the high esteem in which he was held by so many Canadians.

● (1520)

The fact of the matter is that a set of policy guidelines has been established, not by the government but by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. If I understood the hon. gentleman correctly, he is urging me to overturn the recommendation made to me by a distinguished group of historians and citizens whose purpose is to come directly to a determination of this kind of difficult and sometimes delicate question. If the hon. member wants to say that the responsibility rests with me rather than with the Historic Sites and Monuments Board, I would have to accept it; but I would also have to say to him frankly that I would be extremely loath to overturn a decision taken by such a disinterested—and I do not mean uninterested—body, and that this kind of decision should be expressly removed, not only from partisan judgment but even from the possible public interpretation that a partisan judgment was being applied by a minister.

The reasons which the board put forward for rejecting this generous offer were not only that it was in conflict with this request—

An hon. Member: "Bequest".

Mr. Roberts: I accept the hon. member's correction. The reason the board did not accede to this bequest was, first of all, that it did not correspond to the established policy because it felt there were more appropriate ways of recognizing Mr. Diefenbaker's contribution. It should be underlined also that the board felt that the purpose of the bequest, the kind of museum which was envisaged, could not appropriately be fulfilled at the Rockcliffe site. I think it would be foolhardy and wrong for me to overturn the professional judgment exercised by very competent people.

I will read the remarks of the hon. gentleman carefully, but on the basis of what I heard during my attentive listening to his remarks, I do not think it would be appropriate today to overturn the decision taken by the board; and I do hope that nothing in his remarks could be interpreted as undermining or attacking the decision which the board has taken.

Madam Speaker: I will not hear any more speakers on this question of privilege because the first speaker, the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates), did not make, in my view, any kind of argument which would indicate to me that there was a question of privilege in the point he raised. Yesterday the hon. member pursued this matter in the proper way by asking a question of the minister during the question period, and he received some answers. Obviously he is not very satisfied with those answers, so today he wants to push the point. That is probably quite legitimate, but it should not be done under the guise of a question of privilege, which it is not. Therefore, I will not hear any more speakers on the ground that this is not a question of privilege.

When the first speaker on a question of privilege does not succeed in convincing me that there is even a hint that there might be a breach of privilege, my policy is not to hear second speakers. So my ruling on this question is that the hon. member has a complaint, which is probably very legitimate; that is not for me to determine. But complaints have to be aired at other times and not through questions of privilege.

I have notice of another question of privilege from the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae). I will hear it now.

MR. RAE—LETTER FROM MR. KAPLAN RESPECTING MULTICULTURALISM GRANT

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, now that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is in the House, I want to indicate to him that Mr. Ian Martin, who is one of the executive officers of the Canadian Association of Teachers of English as a Second Language and who is a constituent of mine, received a letter on February 12, 1981, from the Solicitor General which I should like to read into the record. The letter reads as follows:

As minister responsible for the riding of Broadview-Greenwood, I am pleased to send the attached cheque in the amount of $15,568 on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Jim Fleming, Minister of State for Multiculturalism, in respect of the submission you presented to him for approval under the multiculturalism grants program.

With all best wishes for a successful endeavour,

Yours very truly,
Bob Kaplan, P.C., M.P.

I must say that I had no idea prior to last night when my constituent came to my office asking me whether it was true that the Solicitor General was in fact responsible for Broadview-Greenwood riding, since this constituent was labouring under the illusion that I was the Member of Parliament who was responsible for his interests. I said no, I was not aware of the fact. He then showed me the letter which I read.

I should like to put to the House and to you, Madam Speaker, that we have here an application for a grant under a program which has nothing to do with politics. It is a program which has to do with English as a second language. It is not political, it is not tainted by NDP, Liberal or Conservative politics, and as soon as it touches the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Fleming), I would have anticipated and indeed expected, since this is the real world of politics, that the Minister of State for Multiculturalism would have given out the cheque and would have given me notice, as happens with every other program with which I am acquainted, of the fact that this money was sent out. Instead of this, we find now that the Solicitor General has been appointed the "minister responsible for the riding of Broadview-Greenwood".

What is the nature, Madam Speaker, of those onerous and difficult responsibilities for Broadview-Greenwood?

An hon. Member: Sending out a cheque.

Mr. Peterson: To make up for your inadequacies.

Mr. Rae: That is a nice thing to say. The only inadequacy that I have in the eyes of this government is that I am not a member of the Liberal Party, and that is the only reason they decided to appoint a minister responsible for my riding. Can the hon. member tell us who the minister responsible for his riding is in Willowdale?

As a Member of Parliament for Broadview-Greenwood, I want to register my state of disbelief that there is a minister masquerading in front of the people of Canada as the minister responsible for Broadview-Greenwood. What other riding is he responsible for? Why are we not allowed to take our own responsibilities and take account of whatever government programs there are? If there is a letter to go out, let it go out from the minister of state to whom my constituent applied rather than from the interloper masquerading as a minister responsible for my riding. If he is indeed the minister responsible for Broadview-Greenwood, why was he not sworn in before the Governor General and why did he not take his oath of office as Solicitor General and minister responsible for Broadview-Greenwood? He is exercising this privilege on government stationery and government letterhead. He is not describing himself as the Liberal Member of Parliament undermining the NDP Member of Parliament for Broadview-Greenwood; he is describing himself as the minister responsible for Broadview-Greenwood.

Finally, as a matter of pure courtesy, I would have thought that if the Government of Canada is going to nominate ministers responsible for opposition ridings or for all ridings, and obviously ministers responsible for the dispensing of public moneys in an individual constituency, the least they can do is to indicate to the member involved that this is what is happening and tell him that, if he wants to get any money for his constituents, he must go crawling on all fours to the Solicitor General before he can get it.

Madam Speaker: Would the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) not want to rise later? I would prefer to recognize the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), following which the minister could reply.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, normally I would have preferred to follow the minister. However, I have a similar and related point to the one raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae). He will learn that these things happen when these honourable rascals are in office!

I have a question on the Order Paper asking why the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), who was following the same kind of practices, has set up a constituency office in my riding.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nielsen: He has done the same thing in another riding and intends to do it again. The question on the Order Paper asks how many more ministers are setting up constituency offices in ridings which do not have Liberal members. If the Chair finds that the question raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood is properly based, I would ask the Chair to take into consideration the propriety of ministers of the Crown using taxpayers' money to set up a constituency office in a riding which they do not represent.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am very glad to have this opportunity to inform the constituents of Broadview-Greenwood who do not know about these responsibilities, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has asked me to assume in relation to that riding.

• (1530)

I should say by way of background that all members of the government have been asked to assume similar responsibilities for ridings—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: —not particularly Liberal, Conservative or NDP ridings, because the ridings for which the Prime Minister asked me to assume this responsibility do not only include ridings held by members of the opposition, but as well a number of ridings which are represented by Liberal members.

Mr. Knowles: Do they know it?

Mr. Kaplan: In saying that, I want to point out how very inaccurate it is to characterize this as involving members opposite having to come crawling to me on all fours to get money for their ridings. This is a perfect example; the hon. member did not even know that this application had come in from his riding. Over $15,000 was awarded in a perfectly proper grant. The Member of Parliament did not come crawling on all fours to me. He certainly does not have to, and this grant proves that he does not have to.

Let me come to the responsibilities the ministers have been asked to assume. It is sometimes believed by Canadians, if their riding is not held or represented by a member of the government or a member of the government party, that they cannot address the government directly but are obliged to make representations to the government only through members of the caucus, members of the government or through members of the opposition. I am glad to have this opportunity to let the people in the hon. member's riding and other ridings know that there are ways to make representations to the government other than through their own Member of Parliament, whether he is a member on the government side or a member on the opposition side.

Mr. Rae: This is incredible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: It is straightforward government programming; it has nothing to do with politics.

Mr. Kaplan: I think the hon. member opposite should check the facts.

Mr. Rae: I have checked the facts.

Mr. Kaplan: I am willing to use this case, although I am not familiar with all the details of the background, as an example to see whether anyone came crawling on all fours to a member of the government or to a member of the government party to get this particular grant. I am sure the member will find that no such demeaning activity took place, nor should it.

Mr. Rae: That is not what I said.

Mr. Kaplan: I should like the good constituents of Broadview-Greenwood to know that if any of them want to make representations to a member of the government, the Prime Minister of Canada has asked me to go out of my way to be available to the people living in that riding.

Mr. Rae: This is unbelievable.

Mr. Kaplan: If they should choose to make representations directly to a member of the government, they will find me available and willing, within the limits of my other responsibilities, to meet with them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: Of course, they continue to be free, as are all Canadians, to make representations to any member of the government, to their own Member of Parliament or to other Members of Parliament. It is a matter of their choice. If they want to come and make representations to me, I should like them to know that the Prime Minister of Canada has asked me to take the extra trouble to be available to people from that riding.

Miss Jewett: I cannot believe it.

Mr. Kaplan: I make no apologies for that.

Some hon. Members: You should.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, we have been treated to the greatest example of patronizing, condescension and arrogance I have ever seen in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am surprised and shocked that it would come from a Member of Parliament who I thought heretofore understood what Parliament was all about and what a Member of Parliament was all about.

Only a Liberal could make that argument with a straight face, although to save himself he at least smiled when he sat down. It is a carryover of the ethics of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) which he expressed many years ago as to his view of Parliament, that parliamentarians are nobodies; that somehow Parliament is the handmaiden of the government. And now this is being extended to ridings.

If the minister is prepared to put the doctrine with which he just dealt to the test, if the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) wants to put a motion to send this entire matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, I am prepared to second it. If it is seconded, I want to see the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) rise in his place and say that he is prepared to let it go. Then we will have an opportunity not only to get the answer to the question put by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), but also an opportunity to get to the bottom of what I think is a sleazy practice on the part of the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I will hear one more intervenor on this question.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I wish to speak on this question of privilege because I think it is about the most serious one which has come up in this session of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The laughter over there only shows how serious it is. If a minister of the government writing to people in a member's district saying that he has now been given the responsibility of representing that district is not a breach of the privileges of the members of this House, then I fail to see that we have any privileges whatsoever; we have none.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) is the Member of Parliament for that district. He has been sworn in to this House. For a cabinet minister to write people in his district pretending that somehow he is responsible for the district is beyond belief. Then to give the excuse in this House that this is the case because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the imperial potentate, asked him to take on that responsibility, not only for a Member of Parliament in the opposition but for Members of Parliament of his own party, is also beyond belief. Members of the Liberal Party will have a cabinet minister holding them by the hand and telling people in their districts that he is responsible for their district, and when a letter goes out with money for a group in the district, that the Liberal member cannot be trusted in his own district. Adult, intelligent members over there laugh about it and think it is an hilarious practice, one that is all to the good of Canada. If that is not prostitution of the democratic process, what are we seeing?

I have been involved in provincial politics, and I always thought that federal politics were on a higher level. But I was quickly disabused of that when I came here and saw how members of the government opposite operate.

I have an example in my own district. I will raise a question of privilege tomorrow with respect to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who tossed aside all the rules and regulations of his own community services program and gave a grant of $25,000 to a project which was ranked as No. 56 in order of priority of 67 projects which were not financed. Because a provincial Liberal member of the House of Assembly spoke to the cabinet minister who is supposed to be responsible for Newfoundland—the "cabinet minister irresponsible for Newfoundland"—the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), they advanced $25,000 of government funds and ignored their own department and the advisory board. A project which got .23 points out of a score of nine received an additional $25,000 not included under the program, nor recommended by the department or by the local advisory board. If this is not a scummy way for a minister of the government to operate, if this is not even scummier, if the minister's explanation is not the lowest we have heard, I do not know what is. There is a prima facie case for this matter to go to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to see if we have any rights with respect to this government. Or will the tyranny of the majority rule hereafter?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, obviously this is not a prima facie case of privilege. No regulation or statute has been breached. No directive has been violated. So, obviously it is a difference of opinion. This debate comes at a very bad time because for a while we believed that the opposition was serious in their wish to see the debate on the Constitution of Canada proceed normally and without undue delay. Madam Speaker, this is a silly and continued question meant to delay unduly the debate on the Constitution, and I ask you to dismiss it as such.

● (1540)

[English]

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I heard you correctly, Madam Speaker, just before the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) stood up on his point of order you said you would hear one more member. I thought that member was the hon. member for St. John's West. Following his intervention there was another intervention. Therefore, I claim my right to intervene as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, this House has been insulted today. It is an absolute disgrace that a minister of the Crown, who has taken an oath to uphold the rules of the House and to observe the rules of democracy and proper behaviour in this country, should have the arrogance to write a letter such as he wrote and to sign it. I can imagine someone writing the letter but not the minister signing it. It is an abuse of power. I suggest that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) about there being constituency offices established in other ridings through public funding should be referred to the Auditor General for examination and report. I make the motion here and now that the matter be referred to the Auditor General for examination and report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I will hear the hon. member on his point of order.

Before I do that I want to explain to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) that I did say I would hear another person on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: I said I would hear another intervenor. Then no one on this side rose, but I usually give a chance to both sides. There were four members on this side who rose. Before hearing the hon. minister I said that I would have to hear him. If the hon. member was listening he will remember that I said that I will now have to hear the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). In all fairness, I must hear the arguments on both sides of the House.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Madam Speaker: The Chair should also have a chance to explain. In doing so I try to be brief and to take as little as possible of the time of the House. I explained what I was doing. The hon. member did not quite understand what I had said. I think I have a chance to explain to him. It is now not too late to explain an action. I hope we can all explain our actions in the House. I know now that the hon. member agrees that I should be able to give this explanation.

I will now hear the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood on a point of order.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, I neglected to move the necessary motion. I would like to do so now. If you do find, Madam Speaker, that I have a prima facie case, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the matter of ministers of the Crown being appointed as responsible for ridings already represented by a duly sworn Member of Parliament be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: We have heard several contributions in the House which have come close to the matter we are now discussing. I have ruled a few times on matters which come close to the matter which has been brought up today. I do not find in the question that was raised a prima facie case of privilege.

I want to remind hon. members of the duties of the Chair as defined in Standing Order 12(1), which sets out that the duties of the Chair do not extend to regulating in any way the responsibilities assigned to cabinet ministers, either officially or in the way described by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

It is true that there is a dispute with respect to this action. There is also a judgment as to the propriety of this action. It is different on both sides of the House. It is not in the Chair's competence to determine or rule on the propriety of actions. Therefore, I recognize that there is a complaint. The matter has been brought up in the House in the form of a question of privilege, but I cannot find that there is a prima facie case of a question of privilege in this case.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise on a point of order. In order that I might inform my constituents who the minister responsible for my constituency is, could you, Madam Speaker, request the government to table the list of ministers who are responsible, so that I may go and appeal to him as a Member of Parliament and be able to direct my constituents to him?

Madam Speaker: I must tell the hon. member that I cannot request the government to do any such thing. The hon. member might pursue this matter during question period or at another time when the question can be debated. I am sorry that I cannot accommodate the hon. member. According to the rules I am unable to ask the government to do any such thing.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it implicit in your ruling that such a matter may not also be considered by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections?

Madam Speaker: Yes, it is implicit in my ruling, since I did not find a prima facie case of a question of privilege. If I had found such was the case then I would have put the hon. member's motion to the House and the House could have decided after debate, or without debate, whether or not they wished to send it to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. If undermining a member in his own riding does not fall within a question of privilege, then what is a question of privilege?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have explained that many times in the House. I refer the hon. member to definitions which I have given quite frequently in some of my rulings with regard to privilege. From time to time I attempt to remind members of the definition of privilege as given by Erskine May or by Beauchesne. I do this in order to remind members what really constitutes a question of privilege, since we often hear some questions which cannot be recognized as questions of privilege. I think it is important to say from time to time in the House that members apply themselves to raising questions of privilege which are legitimate. That is why I define what it is from time to time. I would refer the hon. member to some of my rulings.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—CONDUCT OF MEMBERS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Speaker enjoys a particular position in this House. May I ask whether you would consider making a comment on the propriety of practices—perhaps not today—from the point of view of protecting the members of this House from practices of other members of the House, which at least a substantial number of us think are reprehensible? This has been the practice of your predecessors from time to time.

I would like to bring a case to mind. There was a case involving a report commissioned by the former minister of transport, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). That report was found wanting by Mr. Speaker and he admonished the government at that time for dealing in the way it had. We accepted that admonition. Whether it was right or not is a matter of record. There were some precedents put before Mr. Speaker Jerome which indicated that his admonition was not in order. Nonetheless, the Speaker of the day took it upon himself to protect the position of Members of Parliament from improprieties or conduct unbecoming of a minister or a ministry. That was a good practice, Madam Speaker.

If there was ever a case where you should stand and protect Members of Parliament from improprieties, if you do not find a prima facie case, then this is the case. I invite you to indicate to the ministers what is proper conduct in so far as members of this House are concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I believe, and I think the hon. member knows, that there is a place to determine the propriety of these types of actions. These questions can be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I would say that is a very wise rule, if I want to protect my own office, since I do not see myself, as Speaker, in the position of frequently admonishing the House or members on what is proper and what is not. It is enough that I have to keep telling members that something is in order and something else is not in order. I think that is about the limit of my role in this House because I only act under the rules, customs and traditions built up by the House itself. I dc not make my own rules and judgments on the deliberations of this House, but I always take seriously what the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has to say and I will look into the precedent that he invokes. I am sure I will not want to admonish members but I will look at the precedent and see if what he is requesting of me is at all possible in light of my conception of my office.

● (1550)

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, with respect to the reflection on this issue which you will apparently undertake, might I direct you to the mechanics spelled out with respect to this matter on page 25 of the fifth edition of Beauchesne, paragraph 84, which reads as follows:

(1) Once the claim of a breach of privilege has been made, it is the duty of the Speaker to decide if a prima facie case can be established. The Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that privilege appears to be sufficiently involved to justify him in giving such precedence (or as it is sometimes put, that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed); and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

(2) It has often been laid down that the Speaker's function in ruling on a claim of breach of privilege is limited to deciding the formal question, whether the case conforms with the conditions which alone entitle it to take precedence over the notices of motions and orders of the day standing on the Order Paper; and does not extend to deciding the question of substance, whether a breach of privilege has in fact been committed—a question which can only be decided by the House itself.

Those last words are particularly significant. It is with respect to that specific issue that I draw your attention and I would hope you might reflect upon that at the time you make your deliberation. The reason I suggest that is that it may be proper, having regard to the rule, for the House to decide the issue and not for the decision to be made before the House has an opportunity to decide that issue.

Madam Speaker: I read it as the hon. member went along and I understand it, but I will reflect upon it. It seems to me that this confirms some of the things I just said but I will take that advice and read extensively what is the role of the Speaker in determining a prima facie case of privilege. That is quite easy to understand, but the part the hon. member did not quote and which I have to deal with is, what does constitute a breach of privilege or contempt of Parliament? That is the question on which I have to determine whether there is a prima facie case. What the hon. member read seems to confirm what I am saying.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) on the same point of order?

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): On the same point of order, Madam Speaker. While you are contemplating that I wonder if you would go just a little further and look at what is happening in Alberta where the government has named twin Members of Parliament. This is terribly confusing to the people I was elected to represent; they wonder what is going on. Is the whole democratic process breaking down? Just two weeks ago the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) was out there. People hired a hall to hear him and presented him with a brief; it is brought back but nothing happens. They want to know what is going on.

Madam Speaker: I have to stop the hon. member because he is getting very close to discussing the ruling; however, I will take this fact into account.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE RESPECTING COMPUTER RELATED CRIME

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-628, to amend the Criminal Code (computer crime).

Madam Speaker: I understand the hon. member wishes to speak very briefly to the bill.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to introduce a bill entitled "An act to amend the Criminal Code (computer crime)". I will give a very short explanation of the bill.

Computer related crime is a growing problem which occurs and brings great loss to the public. Losses for each incident of computer crime tend to be far greater than losses associated with each incident of white-collar crime. The prosecution of persons engaged in computer-related crime is difficult under present Criminal Code provisions which, when enacted, did not envisage our present technology.

The purpose of this bill is to amend the Criminal Code so that the integral elements such as magnetic tapes, programs and date are included in the offences against property.

The penalty for an indictable offence is imprisonment for ten years. This amendment is badly needed today in view of the universal use now being made of data systems and the personal and confidential information contained on same.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 984, 1,437, 1,652, 1,674, 1,675, 1,758, 1,860, 1,944 and 2,005.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

IMPORT STATISTICS

Question No. 984—Mr. MacKay:

Did the Import Analysis Division of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce undertake a detailed analysis of the import statistics published by Statistics Canada and, if so, did they find "enormous and unpredictable errors" as well as "significant variations in reliability of data, even when aggregated at the industry, or subsector level" and, if so, are such "errors" and "variations" likely to impede the division's ability to carry out its objective of encouraging import substitution by Canadian manufacturers?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: the Import Analysis Division of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce carried out a small detailed analysis of the import statistics published by Statistics Canada and concluded that errors and variations occurred. Such errors and variations were substantial and occurred in a generally unpredictable pattern, leading to extremely unreliable and often misleading statistics. The consequence of error is particularly great at the company level where such data may be used to estimate market volumes and value at the product level. Furthermore, such errors and variations impede the ability of the Import Analysis Division by, in some cases, making it impossible to collect accurate product level market information and by, nearly always, substantially reducing the productivity of the division in its effort to disaggregate data for market analysis purposes.

The Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, has been authorized by Treasury Board to hire additional resources to implement a program of corrective action at ports of entry. In addition, Statistics Canada and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are developing additional measures in connection with the Customs and Excise initiative.

RCMP—CONTRACTS FOR SERVICES

Question No. 1,437—Mr. Crosby:

1. What is the projected cost per man that will be used to negotiate contracts with the provinces that utilize the services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police when current contracts expire in 1981?

2. What is the projected percentage increase in the cost to the provinces when new Royal Canadian Mounted Police contracts are established in 1981 and what items will be increased other than the cost per man?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. The RCMP agreements are not based on a "cost per man" calculation. The full costs of the program are detailed (e.g. salaries, transportation, clerical assistance) in order to provide a comprehensive report to the contracting parties. The provinces are then billed for a proportion of that cost base. The federal government has proposed that, under a new agreement, the provincial and municipal governments should pay 75 per cent and 90 per cent respectively of the total cost of providing police services in their jurisdictions.

2. On average, the provincial share of the contract policing program will increase about 50 per cent. In addition to the increased share of the cost base, the cost base itself is to be modified slightly by the addition to it of certain administrative, rental, pension and interest expenses arising from the program. Cost recoveries are also intended to become more current.

GRANTS TO UNIVERSITY OF QUEBEC, CHICOUTIMI

Question No. 1,652—Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi):

Did the government grant (a) research funds or subsidies (b) direct or indirect grants or other types of subsidies to the University of Quebec in Chicoutimi and, if so (i) in what amount, by year (ii) through which department or agency?

MR. P. HOMULOS

Question No. 1,674—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. P. Homulos, Director of the National Inventory Program, National Musuems of Canada, fly from Kennedy Airport, New York, to London, England, on or about October 11, 1980 and, if so (a) was he a passenger on British Airways flight 172 (b) was the aircraft a Concorde and, if so, for what reason did he not travel economy class on a regular flight (c) was the cost of the flight paid by the taxpayer (d) what was the extra cost between the Concorde and regular first class travel and was it approximately $1,022?

2. What did Mr. Homulos do on behalf of the government while in England and what is a list of all items that he acquired or attempted to acquire including the cost in each case?

3. Is it the policy of the government to allow senior bureaucrats to travel in luxurious supersonic aircraft at the expense of the taxpayer and (a) if so, for what reason (b) if not, will the government request reimbursement for such excess travel by Mr. Homulos and any others?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Museums of Canada that the reply to the above question is as follows: 1. Yes.

(a) Yes, Mr. P. Homulos was a passenger on British Airways flight 172 on October 11, 1980.

(b) The aircraft was a Concorde. Mr. Homulos did not travel economy class because none was available in the time he was given to book the flight.

(c) No. Mr. Homulos was travelling to Europe to attend a meeting at the invitation of the West German government and his travel to and from Europe and his expenses in Europe were paid by that government. Mr. Homulos also used this opportunity to conduct business for the National Museums of Canada as part of his work. Costs for this work were borne by the National Museums of Canada in the normal way.

(d) Not applicable.

2. Mr. Homulos was only in transit in England and did not leave the airport.

3. (a) Travel regulations state that "commercial air travel shall normally be by economy class. For program related reasons, in a limited number of exceptional cases, continual travel by first class may be necessary. The deputy head may personally approve all such use. If, in the opinion of the employer, the use of first class air travel is unavoidable, such use shall be recorded by the department or agency concerned and reported on a quarterly basis to the Treasury Board". (Administrative Policy Manual—Chapter 370—Section 3.2.2.—Travel).

(b) Not applicable.

Question No. 1,675—Mr. Cossitt:

What is a complete list of all flights taken by Mr. P. Homulos, Director of the National Inventory Program, National Museums of Canada, during the month of October, 1980 and (a) what was the total cost to the taxpayer of all such trips including transportation, accommodation, etc. (b) what was the reason for the trips (c) what items were acquired and what was the cost in each case?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Museums of Canada that the reply to the above question is as follows: 1. Mr. Homulos made two trips during the month of October, 1980. They were as follows:

October 8—October 21, 1980

Albany, New York

Stockholm, Sweden

Cologne, West Germany.

October 26—November 1, 1980

Mexico City.

(a) The total cost to the taxpayer including transportation, accommodation, etc. for the first trip was $2,005.05 and the cost for the second trip was $1,506.38.

(b) There were three reasons for the first trip:

1. To present a paper at the Museum Computer Network meeting in Albany, N.Y.

2. To meet with the chairman of the International Council of Museums Documentation Committee to discuss the agenda for the meeting held at the end of October (Mr. Homulos is a member of the executive of this committee).

3. To participate in a meeting on Museum Inventories sponsored by the government of West Germany.

The reason for the second trip was to participate in the International Council of Museums Documentation

Committee meetings being held at the Museum of Anthropology.

(c) None.

ADVERTISING EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,758—Mr. Stevens:

For the current fiscal year, what are the estimated expenditures of the Department of Public Works for (a) advertising (b) free or subsidized publications (c) other information conveyed to the public?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): The estimated expenditures of Public Works Canada are as follows: (a) Advertising $205,500; (b) Publications $223,733.63; (c) Other Information $43,831.

FRENCH LANGUAGE ONLY LABELLING

Question No. 1,860—Mr. Cossitt:

Is the government aware that free milk is being distributed to school children in waxed milk cartons bearing the French language only in the province of Quebec and, if so (a) who is responsible for distributing such cartons (b) is it the government's intention to protest to the government of Quebec the absence of English on the cartons and what further action, if any, will be taken?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Under the requirements of the Food and Drug Regulations, locally-produced products can be unilingually labelled on the condition that they are distributed within a local government unit that does not have a population of more than 10 per cent of the second official language group. A local government unit means a city, metropolitan government area, town, village, municipality, or other area of local government. Within the boundaries of a local government unit as described above, many areas in Quebec will qualify for unilingual labelling in the French language only.

Under the requirements of the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Regulations, a product such as milk distributed on a free basis to schools would be exempt from the language requirement.

WELLAND CANAL—TRANSIT TIME

Question No. 1,944—Mr. Benjamin:

What is the time in transit through locks of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, including those on the Welland Canal, for the months of July, August, September, October and November, 1980, compared with the sames months in 1979?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows:

Time in Transit (Hours)

	St. Lawrence Section		Welland Section
	1979	1980	1979	1980
July	20.4	26.4	12.2	14.7
August	21.1	20.4	12.5	14.8
September	20.5	20.5	12.6	12.2
October	21.6	22.8	17.4	14.3
November	23.9	21.2	49.0	20.7

Transit time data is averaged by periods of four weeks rather than by months. The above table provides average times for the four-week period which most closely corresponds to the months in question.

PETRO-CANADA OIL PURCHASES

Question No. 2,005—Mr. Wilson:

1. Were instructions given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to Petro-Canada regarding the amount of oil which should be purchased by the corporation on a direct state-to-state contract and, if so, what were they?

2. Does this policy extend to an instruction to the Canadian subsidiaries of multinationals to divide their purchasing between direct purchases from exporting countries and purchasing through the networks of affiliates and, if so, what was the instruction?

3. What proportion of Canada's total imports has the government authorized Petro-Canada to purchase on a state-to-state contract and over what period of time is the authorization in force?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. No estimates have been given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to Petro-Canada regarding the amount of oil which should be purchased by the corporation on a direct state-to-state contract. However, Petro-Canada has been directed through an order in council to be responsible for the purchase of the Mexican crude oil and the direction of the transportation of the crude to Canada.

2. There has been no instruction to the Canadian subsidiaries of multinationals to divide their purchasing between direct purchases from exporting countries and purchasing through the networks of affiliates. In order to ensure equitable distribution and obligation in the matter of imports of Mexican crude under the Mexican program, the federal government has utilized a system of allocation.

3. The federal government has not taken any position with respect to a specific level or proportion of crude oil imports that should be developed on a state-to-state basis.

NOTE: The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is continually reviewing trends and circumstances evolving in international crude supply and evaluating in what direction oil import policy should develop.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed debate on the motion of Mr. Chrétien, seconded by Mr. Roberts, for an Address to Her Majesty the Queen respecting the Constitution of Canada.

And on the amendment of Mr. Epp, seconded by Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton),—That the motion be amended in Schedule B of the proposed resolution by deleting Clause 46, and by making all necessary changes to the Schedule consequential thereto.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, as I just witnessed the previous exchange a new low in Parliament has been found. I wonder if there is any point in my standing and speaking and asking to be heard on the floor of this Parliament. What is the point if in fact another cabinet minister has been appointed by the Queen to represent me? What is the point if I cannot be heard?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I think it is fairly well understood that even in a case where the Speaker has given what I understand to be a ruling today and has undertaken to give further consideration to an aspect of that ruling, it seems to me that the hon. member would be more in keeping with the rules if he were not to comment on that matter which is now under consideration. We are on orders of the day and I suggest the hon. member address himself to the bill.

● (1600)

Mr. Wenman: If hon. members opposite cannot see the relevance of this and how it is related to this Parliament, to my right to stand here, to my right to be heard, that is too bad.

When I left off speaking yesterday I was referring to western alienation, to the closure brought against me, against my constituents and against this House of Commons. I was talking about the very problem that was mentioned by hon. members across the way. The hon. member opposite said that you need no longer go through the Member of Parliament. Therefore, you need no longer go through Parliament; you now go directly to "the king". That relates to the basic foundation of what the Constitution and parliamentary democracy are about.

We can go back and examine this. Somehow, the Constitution that we are talking about began its evolution in history as an outgrowth of the feudal system. I do not know whether it was in the Magna Carta or in Simon de Montfort's parliament or where exactly, but there was something which was meant to stop exactly the kind of abuse we have just seen. It came from a feudal system where the king handed out fiefs, he handed out parcels of land, parcels of constituencies and the recipient had ultimate control of whatever form of law there was in the land.

We have now come full circle from the law coming out of the mouth of the king, through control of law transferring, it is hoped, to parliaments like this one; now it has come full circle back through the mouth of the king who calls himself the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

In this, Parliament is the ultimate example. Parliament has become a sham. Members are elected by universal suffrage, by the ballot, and constituencies are marked with an eye to equity or at least the appearance of equity. Unfortunately, as we can see today, it is only a pretence. All that is left of this place in which we stand to speak is a pretence because, in fact, power is no longer here. Power is no longer vested in me through my constituents. It has been transferred directly, not by some minister with an idea, not by some political party, but by the Prime Minister of Canada. He has transferred the authority given to me by my people back to himself through his government and his cabinet.

How did we reach this stage, Mr. Speaker? Where did the power go? How did it slip away when we were all standing here thinking we were watching, so freely and openly? Who saw Parliament die? Did it die at the hands of a clever and devious tyrant?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Wenman: Was it smothered by the apathy of myself and my colleagues through being too comfortable? Was it through the expediency of your rules, Mr. Speaker? How did it happen? How did Parliament, how did this great place of debate and dignity, fall into such disrespect, such contempt? How did it arise that the Prime Minister can flaunt his arrogance? How can he flaunt that arrogance by appearing on television, instead of in this House of Commons, to present this motion? That is the ultimate arrogance in this situation. He has not appeared in this House of Commons to speak in this debate on this very resolution. He has bypassed the House of Commons on the basic debate, on what we are talking about today, and now he is bypassing the representation of the House.

In 1981 we have a new low in the House of Commons. Let this speech of the minister stand as a symbol to all Canadians of the travesty done to democracy. Let them see it as one more step. How can I tell members who support the government that the west does not want a cabinet minister representing me in the riding? The people want me to represent them. They chose me to represent Fraser Valley West. If hon. members opposite think that those constituents will put up with the arrogance of the king in appointing someone else, they will never grasp the true sentiment of the alienation felt in the west.

My constituents expect a fair forum to be created here so that hon. members opposite can hear what I have to say and respond to it accordingly. That is what the west wants. That is what democratic people across the nation want. They want a forum where all members can be heard. But do we get a forum where we can be heard, Mr. Speaker? No, we get closure. Our constituents send us here and then they say, "We do not hear our members speak." How can they hear their members speak when the government invokes the most obnoxious form of closure known to this House, to this Parliament, to the British parliamentary system?

Hon. members opposite want to have things all their way and they are destroying this nation. They are destroying this democracy and putting forth high-sounding words.

What good is this piece of paper, this Constitution, this bill of rights? What good is it to me or to the people of Canada if it is but a piece of paper and no respect is shown for this institution itself? It is nothing, and I am really sorry about that.

This is very symbolic of what is wrong in our country, about what is so wrong about this institution. This particular document is described as the best document in the world. That is a pretty broad statement and it was made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). He claims modestly that this is the best document in the world. I suggest that his research has fallen short. After all, this document does not promise a "harmonious and happy society". There are constitutions that promote a harmonious and happy society. Those words are contained in the constitution of democratic Kampuchea. It was going to reform Cambodia. The first measure of reform was an act of genocide: the slaughter of 25 per cent of its people! Yet a "harmonious and happy society" is a written guarantee in its constitution. We have those guarantees, theoretically, in the Constitution of Canada. Ours does not go quite that far; this one is more elaborate.

The constitution of Chile declares that "Men are born free and equal and nobody may be deprived of his personal freedom." That is in the charter; it is a guarantee.

The Leader of the NDP claimed that ours is the greatest charter in the world. But he did not look at the charter of the Soviet Union. I do not say this facetiously, but the Soviet Union has one of the most elaborate, attractive and best constitutions in the world. It is all-encompassing. The Soviet constitution guarantees freedom of speech, of the press, of assembly meetings, street processions and demonstrations; it includes the privacy of citizens and their correspondence, telephone conversations and telegraphic communications. These are protected by law in a written constitution.

Our Constitution is more modest; it does not go that far. Does that make our Constitution better or worse? Not at all. What makes our Constitution more valuable is not what is written but instead what is contained in the basic philosophy, in the principles and values held by those who chose to be governed by this establishment. The people chose me, they chose all of us who sit here; they did not choose a person appointed by the Prime Minister.

This whole Constitution rests on the will of the people. That is why their participation is so important. That is why my participation, which has been diluted through restriction of opportunity and through closure, is so important. I think this point of principle and values is where it all rests.

● (1610)

That is why there was a little glimpse or opening in the committee's resolution which had something to do with philosophy, principles and values. As everyone knows, that is the Diefenbaker preamble. I can understand why my socialist friends and athiests, none of whom is here, which does not surprise me, are in such a hurry to pass this resolution.

Mr. Knowles: Order!

Mr. Wenman: The New Democrat is here to comment on my speech again. I thank him very much. I can see why the athiests and socialists want this motion passed right away. They have been successful in blotting out all references to the supremacy of God, all references to private ownership of property, the sanctity of the individual as a human being and the value and position of the family as the basic structure and unit of our society. Certainly the socialists and athiests want this through quickly.

However, the big surprise was to find the Liberal Party of Canada under this Prime Minister not only condoning the desecration of these values and refusing to recognize them in our Constitution, but attempting to implement some kind of charter without them. Such a charter is deficient and must not be allowed to proceed through this House of Commons. These values are the only ones that give credibility to any constitution for Canada. The piece of paper will be meaningless without them.

Herein is our statement of creed, our beliefs, what we will stand for and not stand for. Not only should this charter suggest rights, but it should be extended. We need a charter of responsibilities as well as a charter of rights. We should be equally ready to discuss and entrench not only these rights but the responsibilities that a Canadian owes his country.

I wish there were an adequate way for me to express my gratitude that I feel in being a Canadian, the appreciation that somehow through fate I was born a citizen of this country. This country has given me everything; education and an opportunity to develop the individual being that is within me. I care about this country. I love this country. I want to keep this country together.

A basic foundation for keeping this country together is the Constitution. I care too much to have my Constitution, the Constitution of my country, shortchanged to suit the expediency and timetable of one man in his particular space and place in time.

I would be doing my constituents a wrong, I would be doing everything that I understand this Parliament to have been throughout history a disservice, if I were to support this motion in this form through this process and for the purposes stated so far. I have no problem in voting against this resolution. It is lacking in the basic principles and values which have made this nation, Canada, the nation it is today.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is an historic debate, a momentous debate, a serious debate. Initially I want to congratulate the leading speakers for each of the three parties for their contribution to the debate; my colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). They made responsible contributions to the discussion. I only hope that as the debate proceeds we will be able to sustain that serious level.

The hon. member for Provencher said yesterday our differences on this question run deep, revealing different views on the nature of Canada. I believe his statement is true, although not in the way he described. This has become clear. It became clear to me during the summer when I, along with my colleague, the Minister of Justice, took part in federal-provincial discussions. It became clear during those discussions and during the first ministers' conference, and it is becoming clear in this debate, that there are, underlying the divergent views expressed, different views given on the nature of Canada. Simply put, our view on this side of the House is that Canada is much more than the sum of its provinces or the sum of the regions of the country. It is not a kind of self-help contract made among the provinces. It is not, to use Senator Forsey's expression, a "geographical expression".

When the Fathers of Confederation did their work in the 1860s, they were not only concerned, although they certainly were, about maintaining the economic and military security of regions of their society; they consciously undertook the task of building a new nation from coast to coast. That view, if one goes through the confederation debates, blows like a tempest through their discussions. Here are the words of George Brown, expressed 116 years ago this month. After having drawn a comparison between the British colonies and various countries in Europe, he went on to say and I quote:

> Well, sir, the bold scheme in your hands is nothing less than to gather all these countries into one—to organize them all under one government—
> Our scheme is to establish a government that will seek to turn the tide of European emigration into this northern half of the American continent—that will strive to develop its great natural resources—and that will endeavour to maintain liberty, and justice, and Christianity through the land... Sir, the whole great ends of this confederation may not be realized in the lifetime of many who now hear me. We imagine not that such a structure can be built in a month or in a year. What we propose now is but to lay the foundations of the structure—to set in motion the governmental machinery that will one day, we trust, extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific. And we take especial credit to ourselves that the system we have devised, while admirably adapted to our present situation, is capable of gradual and efficient expansion in future years to meet all the great purposes contemplated by our scheme.

It is in furtherance of those objectives that we have presented this resolution to the House of Commons. The hon. member for Provencher said yesterday repeatedly, I am sure sincerely but falsely, that the view on this side of the House is that the federal system had not worked, that it had failed and that we were seeking to alter the fundamental nature of the federation, that the federation would be subverted.

None of those charges is true. We are proud of the achievements of the Canadian federation. Indeed, we believe that our party has been responsible for many of those achievements. We are proud of our system of government, of its accomplishments and of the historic role that our party has had in pursuing them.

We have not said the federation has failed. What we have said is that the pursuit of an amending formula agreed to by all provincial governments, a pursuit that has taken place over half a century, has failed. We are saying the time has come in light of that failure to take our responsibilities as a national Parliament, representing the citizens of Canada, to strengthen our system of government by clearly defining how changes to the powers of government can take place within Canada.

● (1620)

Why has it failed? The reasons for the failure can probably be left to the historians. I suspect that when they examine the reasons for the failure, they will decide that, understandably, within any federal system there is natural tension between the views of the national and provincial governments. I suspect that they will also decide that the provinces were reluctant to give up an advocacy of unanimity for amendment knowing full well that that provided them with a useful bargaining instrument to try to get greater administrative and legislative powers from the federal government.

It is because we believe that historical evidence has shown us that unanimity is impossible to achieve that we have brought forward for the consideration of the House proposals which deal particularly with two areas: the charter of rights, to which I will refer later, and the question of an amending procedure for the Constitution of Canada.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) said yesterday that the amending formula, whatever it was, should have two characteristics: it should be fair and equitable and should reflect the federal nature of Canada.

The amending process which we have brought forward for the consideration of the House exactly meets those requirements. It reflects the federal and the regional nature of Canada. For the first time, it formally involves the provinces in the amending procedure—a procedure which is designed to ensure that there is substantial support for amendment to the Constitution in each of the four regions of Canada. It is a fair procedure because it provides opportunity for the provincial governments to present an alternative formula for the approval of the people of Canada, if the provincial governments can agree on one to be presented.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Provencher said, "Well, there is virtual unanimity on the part of the provincial governments as to what formula they would like, the Vancouver formula." Then he went on to say that our requirement of seven provinces, seven out of the ten, representing 80 per cent of the population, should agree, and we would put that formula to the people, was, he thought, an "imposition of tyranny". It was a very bizarre statement, because later on, when he discussed his own amending formula, he suggested that what is required at one stage in the procedure is the agreement of seven provinces containing 50 per cent of the population. It is difficult for me to understand why seven provinces containing 80 per cent of the population is a "tyrannical imposition", while seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population he calls an "achievement of consensus".

An hon. Member: Taking it out of context.

Mr. Roberts: Well, the hon. member says I am taking it out of context. It is a bit difficult to do otherwise because there are so many contexts out of which one can take things.

There have been at least three varieties of amending procedures suggested by the opposition. There is the Tremblay formula, which I gather has now been taken back. There is the Vancouver formula, which they now find difficulties with. There was a whole range of options presented yesterday by the hon. member for Provencher. The difficulty with his point of view is that, literally, one does not know what the end result of his proposals would be?

At one point he said he was against unanimity. Fine. Then he held up the example of the United States as having an equitable constitution. The United States required approval of three quarters of the states. If you apply that to Canada, it means you would need to have approval of only eight of the provinces. That means that you could have constitutional changes imposed over the views of the Ontario and Quebec governments together, or over the views of the Alberta and British Columbia governments together, or over the views of the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick governments together. And he thinks that that is an equitable formula.

Then he suggested that perhaps what should be done is to repeal Section 7 of the Statute of Westminster. The effect of repealing Section 7 of the statute would be to transfer authority from the British North America Act to this Parliament with no role for the provinces in any way. Is that the kind of amending formula that he wants?

Then he suggested that what we should have is the Vancouver formula, because he says there is an agreement in principle by all governments. One difficulty with that is that it is simply not true. Premier Hatfield indicated to the joint committee that there was not support for the Vancouver formula. Indeed, Mr. Wells, a minister in the Ontario government, wrote to the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko). It is a matter of public record. I will just read two paragraphs from his letter on the Vancouver formula which the hon. member for Provencher says is accepted by everyone in principle. I am now quoting Mr. Wells:

> I have gone to some considerable length in recounting these events because I believe that they should be carefully considered by you and your colleagues in determining your ultimate stance on the federal resolution. While ministers and first ministers were willing to give various consideration to the Vancouver formula in spite of its potential checkerboard effect in the hope of achieving consensus, they could not come up with solutions to the two serious technical problems the formula contains. The problem of applicability, in particular, reopened all the arguments with regard to the general formula. If opting out could not be applied, then a 50 per cent population requirement was considered too flexible; unanimity was too rigid; 85 per cent left out the Atlantic provinces; a regional formula was regarded as treating some provinces unequally.
> In sum, our discussions held out the potential for consensus, but it was not achieved in fact. The explanation lies not in the ill will of any of the participants, but in defects inherent in the formula itself.

Then the hon. member for Provencher says, "We recognize that there are some drawbacks to the Vancouver formula, some uncertainties". So what we will have, as I mentioned earlier, is that if seven provinces containing 50 per cent of the population can agree on something, that is what we will impose. But he never goes on to say what will happen if we do not have the agreement of seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population. It is a pig in a poke. It is unknown. In the ultimate analysis of the process put forward by the Conservative Party, one simply does not know what one is getting. It is a sincere point of view, sincerely expressed. It is not, I suggest, a view responsibly expressed.

The opposition yesterday, and I think throughout the debates of the committee, has really attacked the process by which we have sought constitutional reform, much more than the substance. They have described our efforts as "unilateral and divisive". It is always a surprise to me when people use the word "unilateral". I know sometimes it escapes members of the House, but words actually have a meaning. One can look them up if in doubt. "Unilateral" means imposed by one person or party. That is not what we are doing. We are proceeding with the support, I believe, of members in every political party in this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: We will proceed with significant support from the provinces. I believe, and the hon. member for Provencher has confirmed this in his remarks, that we are proceeding with a charter of rights which has the support of the people of Canada.

Of course, there are people who are unhappy with the process by which we have arrived at this position. I am unhappy with it. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) is unhappy with it. We would all prefer to go with the support of all the provinces. We would have loved to do that. The reason we are proceeding in the way we are is that we recognize that that kind of support is impossible to achieve.

Nor is this new Constitution one which is being made, as was charged yesterday, by foreigners, by the Imperial Parliament, by Great Britain. This Constitution is being made in Canada. Indeed, it has the longest gestation period of any baby in public life, going back well over 50 years. It is being made by the members of this House of Commons in this debate and by the decisions they will take. It has been made by the past Members of Parliament in previous parliamentary discussions, by the work of at least two joint committees of Parliament which have assessed our Constitution, by the continuing participation of a whole host of interested groups who made their views known to the joint committee, and by the witnesses who appeared before it. The role of Great Britain in this process is a formal one, not the exercise of moral authority. It is rather like a notary who ratifies a contract or a civil authority which registers a marriage.

There has been much talk, I think wildly exaggerated, on the part of the opposition about the divisiveness of this process that we have gone through, about the strength of debate and discussion taking place in the country. That is not a source of divisiveness. It is not a source of weakness. It is a source of strength that in this country we freely, forcefully, frankly and passionately debate these views. I suspect there is no institution which expresses more strongly a conflict of views of various representatives than this House of Parliament, this House of Commons. The expression of those views in this manner is not divisiveness. It is a way in which we come to a conclusion and develop consensus for our policies.

It is now before the House of Commons. It is not the process, not the manner of arriving, but the substance. What we must decide is whether in our heart of hearts the substance of what is being proposed is what we want for Canadians and what Canadians want for themselves.

● (1630)

The official spokesman for the Conservatives has said they want entrenched rights, but not by this process, even though he believes an entrenched charter of rights has popular support. This is a serious matter, but perhaps once in a while we can look at serious matters lightly. I could not help but think yesterday that I was rather happy the hon. member for Provencher was not around when Moses came down from Sinai because he would have said: "Of course, we are all in favour of the Ten Commandments, but we think Moses went up the wrong mountain, took the wrong path or should have had someone with him and, in any case, all of the tribes should be able to opt out." That is a lighthearted view. I see by his smile that the hon. member appreciates that, but the point I want to make is that it is the substance on which the House must now pronounce. It is the question of whether we want these rights made legally enforceable for Canadians.

Mr. Siddon: We have those rights.

Mr. Roberts: The hon. member for Provencher addressed himself seriously to those questions yesterday. He spoke of the inalienable nature of rights. He regretted the omission of a reference to the divine sanction for rights. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) raised the same point a few minutes ago. The hon. member for Provencher sincerely, but falsely, misrepresented the government's effort, and I personally feel strongly about this because I was the representative of the federal government during our discussions at the federal-provincial conference who argued as strongly as I could for the inclusion of a preamble to the Constitution with explicit reference to divine majesty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: It was the intent of this government to have those exact references in our Constitution. That is a matter of public record. That intent was made known last summer—July 1, to be exact, and I want to take a moment to read it. It contains five or six paragraphs, but I want to read it because it makes that point clear and also makes clear the expression of the idea of the Canada we are trying to achieve in these constitutional proposals. I will cite the preamble which we urged upon the provinces to include in this Constitution.

We, the people of Canada, proudly proclaim that we are and shall always be, with the help of God, a free and self-governing people.

Born of a meeting of the English and French presence on North American soil which had long been the home of our native peoples, and enriched by the contribution of millions of people from the four corners of the earth, we have chosen to create a life together which transcends the differences of blood relationships, language and religion, and which willingly accepts the experience of sharing our wealth and cultures, while respecting our diversity.

We have chosen to live together in one sovereign country, a true federation, conceived as a constitutional monarchy and founded on democratic principles.

Faithful to our history, and united by a common desire to give new life and strength to our federation, we are resolved to create together a new Constitution which:

shall be conceived and adopted in Canada, shall reaffirm the official status of the French and English languages in Canada, and the diversity of cultures within Canadian society, shall enshrine our fundamental freedoms, our basic civil, human and language rights, including the right to be educated in one's own language, French or English, where numbers warrant, shall define the rights of our native peoples, and shall define the authority of Parliament and of the legislative assemblies of our several provinces.

We further declare that our Parliament and provincial legislatures, our various governments and their agencies shall have no other purpose than to strive for the happiness and fulfilment of each and all of us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: It was not the federal government which prevented the adoption of that preamble.

Mr. Siddon: You have the power to put it in right now.

Mr. Roberts: It was not the federal government which objected to a reference to divine majesty, it was provincial governments representing the party of hon. gentlemen opposite which rejected that view.

Mr. Siddon: That is a cop-out. Put it in right now.

An hon. Member: Listen and learn.

Mr. Roberts: I still want that preamble in the Constitution. The government still wants that preamble in the Constitution. We are determined in our further discussions with the provinces, and there will be continuing discussions with the provinces, to have that preamble in the Constitution. I hope they will take place soon, and I believe there will be that preamble in the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: The hon. member for Provencher misrepresented our views even more fundamentally yesterday. He argued passionately for inalienable rights. I agree; we agree. He argued that rights are not created by governments. I agree; we agree. What we are saying is that rights are inalienable. They are the essential condition, the context, for the fulfilment of the human personality and the human potential, including the moral and religious capacities of men and women. They flow from the nature of man. We argue that rights are inalienable, and we also argue that the time has come to have the Constitution recognize that inalienability and to make that recognition legally enforceable.

Some people disagree that that is a proper approach. I will go on a little bit later to explain why I think it is the proper approach. However, I think the hon. member for Provencher honestly misunderstood and misunderstands our position on rights. I will go further and say quite frankly that I do not understand the view of rights held by the hon. member for Provencher. He argued eloquently and passionately for inalienable rights. How can he then, in virtually the next breath, argue that they should be subject to provincial approval and to provincial opting out? He wants a charter of rights but he does not want this charter of rights.

An hon. Member: We live in a federal system.

Mr. Roberts: He does not want this charter of rights because, although he wants inalienable rights, he wants the provinces to be able to alienate them. I do not know how anyone can make that argument consistently. It is not credible, I suspect, to very many members of this House.

Our great objection to an amending formula based on the Vancouver principle, which the hon. member supported so strongly yesterday, is, as is commonly said, that it could create a checkerboard of rights. I would not use the word "checkerboard". There is a certain consistency about checkerboards. It would be a "crazy quilt" of rights across the country. However, the hon. member said a checkerboard is acceptable. Why is it acceptable? Because we do not live in a unitary state? I suggest it is not acceptable, and the question has not to do with whether one is in a federal or unitary state. It is not acceptable because it transgresses exactly that ideal of inalienable rights the hon. member expressed and because it creates different categories of rights for Canadians living in different parts of Canada. It is an exact contradiction of what a right is.

I believe passionately, as does the hon. member, in inalienable rights. I believe strongly that they must be entrenched with legal protection for all Canadians and not be subject to the whim of acceptance by provincial governments nor, for that matter, the whim of acceptance by a federal government.

There are those who protest—this was a point the hon. member made yesterday—that protection by Parliament and by legislature has been a safe enough protection for individual rights in Canada. I do not think history bears that out. There have been infringements of those rights based on racial discrimination, and I refer to Japanese-Canadians. Rights have been infringed on religious bases, and I refer to those of the Jehovah's Witnesses. Language rights have been infringed. The rights of free expression have been infringed by padlock laws. I do not think those aspects of Canadian history we are not so fond of recalling would justify the view that always the protection of rights by parliaments and legislatures has been satisfactory. There is a good reason for that. It is that parliaments and legislatures are dominated by majorities. While it is important to protect the rights of majorities, it is most often the rights of minorities and the rights of individuals which are threatened by governments and require the protection of the rule of law.

In any case, even if one does hold strongly to the view that parliaments and legislatures are an adequate protection for natural rights, there is nothing in these proposals which prevents legislatures from respecting the rights of their citizens.

There is nothing which encourages them to infringe those rights.

● (1640)

What we have here is a safety net, an added protection, so that in case provincial legislatures or the federal government do not respect those rights, there is a recourse to the courts. An entrenched charter of rights makes assurance for Canadians doubly sure. I am sure Canadians want that kind of protection. If one were to ask the people of Nova Scotia whether they would like to have their rights protected by the majority government headed by Mr. Buchanan or by the courts, they would say, the courts. If one were to ask Quebecers whether they would like to have their natural rights protected by the Parti Québécois led by Mr. Lévesque or by the courts, they would say, the courts. If one were to ask the people of Ontario whether they wanted their basic rights protected by Mr. Davis and the Conservative government or by the courts, they would say, the courts. If one were to ask the people of Manitoba whether they would want their rights protected by Mr. Lyon and his majority or by the courts, they would say, the courts. And if one were to ask the people of Canada whether they wanted their basic rights protected by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Liberal government or by the courts, they would say, the courts.

This concept of rights is something that does not flow from government. It cannot and should not be created by some contract or some deal between the provincial and national governments. This concept of rights is basic and reflects the idea that we have of Canada. Those rights are the common heritage of Canadian citizenship and they should be binding, regardless of the government's view, because they fulfil and express the common promise to all Canadians, wherever they may live in this country, that we shall have a country which provides rights, opportunities, equality of status and respect for the individual and the dignity of our citizens.

We are now entering the last phase of a long and earnest debate. Its conclusion will mark one further great step along that path which George Brown charted 116 years ago and which I cited at the beginning of my remarks. It is a great step, an historic one, and all those many members who have taken part in the committee's debates, those who have supported as well as those who have opposed, will have settled into a niche in our history. It is a great step in the continuing task of nation building, the building of a still new nation, the building of one united nation. We now have a unique opportunity to move forward. We have, too, the possibility of failure and the fundamental shock that would bring to our society.

I urge the House, as the only body which truly represents all Canadian citizens, to accept this resolution, imperfect as it may be in this or that detail, but on the whole, an imaginative and fair response to the challenges of our country. We have the opportunity to build and maintain the most civilized society in the world, civilized in our federal system of government, civilized in out tolerance and respect for the inalienable rights of humanity. Our past, the record of our federation, is a proud chapter in the life of our country. The best is yet to be. Let us go forward together on this surer foundation, this new Constitution, for the hoped-for country we all wish to build.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to express my appreciation for the opportunity to speak again on this matter. I have spoken three times in this House on the matter; in the fall before the matter was referred to the special joint committee and, of course, I have spent the last four months on that committee and have had the opportunity to address myself daily to the 59 sections contained in the government's resolution.

My colleague, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), expressed, at the outset of his remarks yesterday, our appreciation of the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal) who did such an outstanding job as co-chairman of that committee. I think every member of that committee should also thank the House and the respective authorities for the opportunity to participate, primarily because this has been an experience—I cannot recall having had any other such experience in public life and certainly not in my two and a half years as a member of the House—which has broadened our minds, taught us to listen to what people in other parts of the country have to say and directed our reading so we could understand a little better how this country functions.

I am one of those who recognizes, as I am sure all members of the House do, that the most important things which affect our constituents on a day to day basis are matters more immediate to the individual concerned, such as inflation, jobs, etc. Therefore I know there is a great number of my constituents who wonder why we spend so much time on the Constitution. I have never been backward about responding to that query because the Constitution is fundamentally what Canadians are all about. It tells us what are our values, our interests and our beliefs. It determines what our relationships with one another as individuals are and what the relationship between individuals and the government is. That is why I thought I might take this opportunity to look briefly at some of our history. I will try not to touch on the points raised yesterday by my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher. I will try not to touch on the points I have raised in my three previous interventions in the House.

I am glad to see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) is here now because I can offer him my congratulations. I think it is important we recognize that when countries make their constitution, they do not think of it as being drawn up for lawyers. The Constitution is not something that comes from the sky. The Constitution comes from us, who we are and where we have been. My old friend and colleague, Marshall McLuhan, said that all of us go through life as if we were driving a car and looking through a rear view mirror. That is not a bad analogy. Perhaps that is what we should do when it comes to the Constitution, because while we are going down the road to the bright new future to which my friend, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Roberts), wants to take us, it is also wise to see where we have been. That helps us to determine whether we will be surprised by what is coming from behind us.

Let me look briefly at certain historic events which determine what kind of a Constitution we must have. It is hard to know where to begin in Canadian history and I do not want to bore people with history, but I have always been fascinated by time machines. When I was a boy and I heard of H. G. Wells' time machine I was fascinated with it. When I found out there were none in my neighbourhood, and if there had been, I probably could not have afforded one, my mother explained to me that all she could do was to suggest legs and a library card.

My own reading preference is to look at the future and to look at the past. This helps me to adjust, like driving my car, to the present. Let me jump right into it and start at about 1750. At about that time Canada got into hot water in history. This country was formed as a consequence of the activities of two empires from about 1750 to the end of the century. At about that time the British empire and the French empire left. What was left was us and the original inhabitants of the land, the native and the aboriginal peoples. The first and most important document which came to us then was the proclamation of 1763. What it did was to define for the aboriginal peoples the basis of their rights. It was a recognition by the new visitors from Europe of what those rights would be. That is why a month, or some weeks ago, the whole burden of the argument by native peoples was to have the 1763 proclamation recognized again. History is useful to know; 1763 was important because of one group of people who said, "You have rights."

● (1650)

The next document which defined who we were was the Quebec Act of 1774, because two, three or four years before the British empire lost the rest of the American empire, it acquired what was left of the old French empire. Although they recognized rights for aboriginal peoples, they did nothing for the French-speaking population acquired under the Treaty of Paris in 1763. The Quebec Act was established to ensure that there was a restoration of the rights of French-speaking people in what was then geographically called Canada. It restored not only language rights, but also religious and legal rights.

Those two documents already put in perspective for Canadians the reasons for which Constitution and rights are important. The Constitution Act, 1791 divided the old province into two; Upper and Lower Canada, as they became. We acquired a new custom called "Good fences make good neighbours"; an instinct which we will find throughout our Constitution, by the way.

The first defence of the new country was in 1812. For those who want to read Bishop Strachan, the first Anglican bishop of Ontario or what became Ontario, it is interesting to note that he morally justified the war of 1812 on the basis that if Canadians did not defeat the Americans, there would be a holocaust visited upon native peoples. Bishop Strachan said that the moral justification for the war of 1812 was to defend native peoples from the Americans who had started to come across the Appalachians.

In 1841 we had the Act of Union. I will not go through them all, but I wanted to make a couple of points.

While we were dealing first of all with British, French and native peoples, there has always been an assumption in this country—badly taught history—that it was sort of consecutive—the native peoples, the French, the British and then others. But right from the start we had people from all over the world, in particular Germans and Dutch. Throughout the nineteenth century, as it wore on, we had people from all over the world.

There was a great poem written by F. R. Scott a couple of years ago, the first time he read Ed Pratt's classic poem on the building of the CPR. Pratt went through the entire building of the CPR without mentioning a single Chinese worker; quite a feat when one thinks about it. As F. R. Scott said to Ed Pratt in his poem, "Where are the Chinese in your poem, Ed? Where are the oriental gentlemen who swung picks at forty below?" We have had people from all over the world, not just the two founding cultures and the native people. They have made an impact on our understanding of who we are and what we are. They gave us three instincts as a people, and they are instincts which only we have; other peoples do not have them. They are born of that historical experience.

As can be seen in our history, it was absolutely essential for Canadians to learn one instinct, to allow for diversity. That is why in the history of this country, and today, one will find differences in education programs, language and religion. We had to learn the instinct of diversity in order to survive. It is not a thing we thought would be nice to do; it was in order to survive and to deal fairly with all the peoples who were here. We had to ensure that people could do what they needed to do in order to be who they were. That is what diversity really means on the street. It allowed us to nurture customs; it allowed Canadians to be new and to be old at the same time. It allowed them to acquire a new personality and to maintain an older one.

The second instinct we learned very early as a people was an instinct for rights. That mélange of people who required diversity brought with them the second instinct, the need for rights.

We have learned something very clear and specific about rights. As the hon. member for Provencher said yesterday, first we learned that rights do not come from governments. This is not to be sneezed at because it is a fundamental principle. Indeed, older Canadians understood that most bills of rights were limits on governments; that is the point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: If one wants to go through 1215, Runnymede, 1628, all the British and the French stuff or whatever, one will find that rights limit governments. That is why citizens need rights. They need rights, and those rights are to limit the power of government over them. That is what it was always about. Rights do not come from governments; rights limit governments.

Rights also always rested on the basis of some spiritual entity, a supreme being. This was not merely because it was a nice thing, which it was, but primarily because it had a very practical advantage. When law rests on religion, when legal orders relate to spiritual principles, it allows for diversity and dissent. The roots of democratic dissent have always begun with religious dissent; laws imposed by governments were always fought on the basis of an appeal to God. This is why we insisted in the committee that not only should there be a preamble respecting the supreme authority because it was in our hearts that it should be related to spiritual principles, but it had a practical democratic value as well. The way in which generations of western people have been able to overcome tyranny was by being able to appeal over the head of the government which oppressed them.

The third thing our forefathers learned about rights was that they were very often related to property. It is only people born wealthy who do not understand that to own something not only makes it better for you, but it ensures that you are protected.

The reason all those people came to this country from all those lands was in order to have the security which property gave them, and the freedom to acquire and enjoy it. When my friends in the New Democratic Party on the committee said that property was not for the kind of people they would like to represent, they did not understand. The poor people in this country know the importance of the enjoyment of property. They worry very much when the government of the day will not allow it in the Constitution.

The fourth thing our forefathers learned about rights was that their rights lay in the common law; not always kind, very often harsh, but there was something about it they understood clearly. What they understood was that their rights were to be assumed. They did not need to have their rights listed. In fact, the only listing came when those rights were reduced. As they used to say, "If they can write it down then they can take it away." They understood that right. The rights we have allow us to do anything we like, except what you would restrict. That is how they understood those rights.

The first thing they understood was diversity and the second was the instinct for rights. The third instinct they understood was how to deal with conflicts and differences of opinion. All that diversity, all those needs for rights could not be dealt with on the basis of unilateral action by anybody. The country could not afford it. That is why Canadians organized a way of dealing with conflict, a way of dealing with differences, on the basis of consensus and consent. Tolerance, civility and compromise, those are the tools Canadians used, not the drawing of lines, not compulsion and not unilaterally. The stability, the freedom and the security which brought them to this country, and which is still bringing them to this country, rests on the fact that in this country we deal with our differences on the basis of consensus and consent. That is why in 1867 the federal principle was adopted. It was not because somebody thought it up and said, "Let's give it to the Canadians." The Canadians sucked it up from their own roots. It is the only way this country can go. Federalism means those three things; diversity, rights and consensus. That is our history.

There were two or three items raised by some speakers yesterday on the government side with which I would like to deal. I think the hon. member for St. Paul's also mentioned them. He mentioned the question of the checkerboard or, as he calls it, the "crazy quilt". They say that somehow the government is opposed to a Vancouver Formula or, indeed, just generally opposed to anything that has different categories of rights. I think those are pretty close to the exact words of the member for St. Paul's.

Let us look at that matter for a second, since the diversity in this country has allowed us to do just that. We have adopted the checkerboard, or the crazy quilt, as the minister called it. I would like to show you one or two things, Mr. Speaker. The British North America Act lays out the checkerboard. It says there are certain powers given to the federal government and there are certain powers given to the provincial government. Section 92 gives the provinces their powers. The province can do as it will in relation to them, subject in some areas to the courts. When Newfoundland came into confederation it came under a different set of circumstances than the other provinces. Section 133, which deals with language rights, imposes on the province of Quebec different categories of rights than it does on any other province, a fact that still remains.

Does the crazy quilt pattern mean all provinces must have the same rights at the same time? If it does, if that is what the minister means, then we are in great difficulty, since most of the social programs in this country were adopted by provinces able to conduct their own social experiments, then later on having them generalized across the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Today, the province of Quebec in its bill of rights offers rights which are not available to other Canadians. I do not know if the minister remembers that, but it is true. One of them deals with sexual orientation. It is included in their charter of rights in Quebec and not in any other province. That is the checkerboard. The province of Quebec wants to do that. Indeed, while I am dealing with the province of Quebec, it was because of that checkerboard, that crazy quilt, that the freedom to protect the language and the culture of the province of Quebec exists. Indeed, the language and culture of all the other people in this country results from the diversity which the crazy quilt allows.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: I do not blame the government for not wanting to remember those things, since it destroys the argument that somehow it is against an amending formula because it is against a checkerboard. At least, it should remember that it created the checkerboard in its own resolution. It has now created four categories of language rights in this country; not one, but four. That is a checkerboard. Their own amending formula creates three classes of province. That is a checkerboard. I guess it all depends, Mr. Speaker, on whether it is the checkerboard you want or the checkerboard you do not want. But to raise the question of opposing an amending formula because it is a checkerboard is dishonest, not intentionally so, but dishonest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: If the Victoria Formula had been adopted in 1968 there would be no medicare and no Canada Pension Plan in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Behind all of that is a philosophy which is alien to this country. As I indicated, this country has always required the necessity for diversity. This government only understands the pressure of one thumb—its own. The only thing the government seems to understand is that the power must be with it. If it is with other governments then that is a difficulty.

I would like to deal with the charter and make a few comments in respect of my own feelings about it. I talked of the rights that Canadians learned about in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries and, indeed, also in the twentieth century. I also indicated in my wee story about F. R. Scott that there were thousands of people—nay, hundreds of thousands—who did not have the rights which British people had. There are a great many examples of this in our Canadian history. That is why I have always been one of those who support a charter of rights. I have great hopes for that charter.

The people who came to the committee over the past four months represent the sons and the daughters, the grandsons and the granddaughters, the great-grandsons and the great-granddaughters, of all the people here before who did not have those rights. They did not know how to deal with the culture which gave its fruit, the common law. That is why in my view a charter of rights is essential in this country.

The charter needs to be two things. It must be one which will work and one which does not destroy the essentials of the country at the same time. Let me deal with that. This charter does not include the Diefenbaker preamble. It ought to since we have few enough symbols in this country. Twenty years ago this year this House adopted the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights. The preamble included not only belief in the Supreme Being and the role of the family, but included a number of things which Canadians hold dearly. We put that to the committee and the government voted it down.

● (1710)

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Crombie: I would ask what is the status of the Diefenbaker preamble? We do not know, but this charter of rights does not contain the Diefenbaker preamble.

Secondly, it does not include property, as I mentioned earlier. The right to enjoy property is essential to people's understanding not only of their rights but of their freedom and security. We put a motion to include privacy as a right; and it was voted down.

The government is always talking about how interested it is in freedom of information. Well, it voted that proposal down, too.

Finally, in dealing with the charter, what impressed me was the argument that somehow throughout this whole piece the provinces are narrow provincialists who do not guard other people's interests or needs; only the federal government would do that. I guess I spent too long as a municipal politician to accept that point of view. As I said in the committee, there are hundreds of thousands of women and men in this country who work for municipalities and provinces doing the actual work of delivering the rights contained in the charter. The day the government decides it does not care how many provinces oppose and, therefore, how many municipalities are not involved, that is the day they lose touch with space ship earth, because this federal government does not deliver services to the handicapped, to women, or to those who need care and comfort. In urban areas it does not deliver services; municipalities and provinces deliver services. The charter of rights may get the Liberal Party votes but it is not going to help the people who are in need.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Finally, Mr. Speaker, let me deal with what we regard as the crucial problem. I indicated earlier the Canadian instincts for diversity, for rights, and for consensus were important. The government's resolution has no consensus. For the first time in our history we are forgetting how to go about change. We have always made change by consensus. The government now is going to move unilaterally.

They may regard that as simply a process which is not connected to the goal or to what is being done. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says, yes, that is a bad process, hold your nose. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) says, long after the process is over you will like the product and the process will be forgotten. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said it is time for a decision, time for change. We have to act decisively in history. I always worry about people who are going to act on my behalf for their history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian I would like to see in the future is one that still knows what is going on in the rear window, because this country is not like the Leader of the New Democratic Party's analogy of the United States and their civil war. The thing that has always impressed me about this country is that we are not a people who solved problems and differences of opinion by civil war and revolution. Canada is unique, and that was really the burden of what I wanted to say when I was going through the historical development of the country. We are unique, we do not move unilaterally, one level of government against another; and we do not impose one level of government against another.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: In short, unilateralism is unacceptable because it is the exact opposite of the federal system. That is why we oppose it.

Let me deal finally with that old, old question of process. The government and the New Democratic Party are saying: Don't worry about the means, you will love the end. Every time human beings decide that the means will justify the end, that is the time ordinary people get hurt. All political questions at root are moral questions and anyone who has read history knows that the day you let a bad means attempt to achieve a good end, you will rue that day. This country will not then be looking to the future that the hon. member for St. Paul's talked about, it will be looking to a number of years of unnecessary bitterness and division. We would like to say to the government: Think one more time.

An hon. Member: Fifty-three more years.

Mr. Crombie: My friend from Toronto says 53 more years. I was reading a book called "Miracle in Philadelphia" which concerns the American bill of rights. It took them a long time, many years to adopt it. If things are worth doing, they are worth doing well. We have not had 53 years of failure. This country had grown and grown well over the last 53 years.

I am saying that what the government can do is go to Britain and say: Send it back, thank you very much. Everyone agrees on that. I think you can get some agreement on the amending formula. The charter needs some work, even the government will admit that. My friend, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) kept saying: we have three years before it is in practice anyway so we can tidy it up here, turn a spigot there. Well, he wants to pick up the votes now and pay later. I can understand that but I do not applaud it.

Let me conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the process over the past four months has been a very important one for this country, and if the government persists in its course of action we will be in greater difficulty than it can imagine. The three instincts that Canadians had long before this government came along are diversity, rights and consensus. They will be here long after this government is gone. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the hon. member, not only on his performance in the House today, but especially on the rather remarkable work that members opposite as well as government members have done in committee. On the other hand, I am rather disappointed to find that after many hours of work and sound suggestions by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), he is not ready, at a rather crucial moment, to support a charter which has been improved, thanks to his co-operation.

Mr. Speaker, I was reluctant to speak at this stage of the debate on the government resolution because several points I raised in the first part of the debate last December have been discussed and amended by members of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada, and also because some aspects of the constitution were not perfect. As was so aptly pointed out by the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Chrétien), nobody has to be perfect. In the speech I made in December, I drew to the attention of the House some weaknesses of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Today, in light of the report of the special joint committee, I note that several of those weakness have been corrected. For example, in Section 1 of the first resolution, the individual rights were restricted as follows: "It is subject only to such reasonable limits as are generally accepted in a free and democratic society within a parliamentary system of government." As a result of some amendments, the section now reads as follows:

> The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

I suggest that this change is consistent with the many requests made by human rights groups and will prevent any discriminatory action not only on the part of provincial governments—for the restraining effect of the charter does not apply exclusively to provincial governments—but also to the federal government. The new Section 15 which deals with Equality Rights is an improvement over the old Section 15 which dealt with Non-discrimination Rights and which read as follows:

> Everyone has the right to equality before the law and to the equal protection of the law without discrimination because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age or sex. This section does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged persons or groups.

The section as amended is much more specific, because it adds discrimination based on mental and physical disability and states that every individual is equal before the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law.

If we may set the charter aside for a while, Mr. Speaker, I think that the patriation of our Constitution, the enshrinement of our freedoms and rights, as well as the new amending formula are truly the first steps torward an in-depth reform. This reform is that which was promised to Quebecers by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself on the eve of the referendum when he stated, and I quote:

> I know that I can solemnly promise that, should the No-side win, we will set in motion forthwith the mechanisms required for renewing the Constitution, and that we will not stop until we have achieved this goal.

I am convinced that the Prime Minister was at the time relying on the good will which most premiers had expressed during the referendum campaign to carry out the necessary reform through federal-provincial conferences. I, for one, was expecting a lot from the consultations which the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development had undertaken last summer, as well as from the federal-provincial conference which was held last September. Instead of witnessing people involved in negotiations to achieve the goal of a renewed constitution, we saw our first ministers discuss the power-sharing issue first, apparently neither too anxious nor concerned about the patriation of our Constitution and the inclusion of a human rights charter.

After something like ten such conferences in 54 years, I find that the Constitution has not moved an inch, because there have only been minor changes brought about and it is still locked-up in London. How then can we fulfil that promise to provide Canadians with a modern constitution attuned to the Canadian reality at the dawn of the twenty-first century? On the one hand, Mr. Speaker, from the very moment when the Government of Canada brought forth its proposed resolution, a strong opposition front has accused Ottawa of acting unilaterally, without the support of the provinces or of the population. Some people are wondering whether the action taken by the government is wise or legal.

By means of a vast offensive of advertised propaganda, the Quebec government is fostering confusion stating that Ottawa should come back to the table, negotiate and come to an agreement because "we are not to be fooled" as the slogan goes; also there are editors, columnists and intellectuals who call the federal Liberal Members of Parliament from Quebec sheep, traitors and voiceless. From their pulpit, Mr. Speaker, those high priests of the day even go as far as urging our members to ignore party line and to vote according to their conscience.

To hear them, Mr. Speaker, one would think that the proposed resolution means an end to the present federal system, that it comes to us overnight without notice and without consultation. Such is not the case, Mr. Speaker. Throughout last summer, the provinces were consulted; the Quebec caucus and the national caucus met several times to make sure that the proposals of the government and the provinces would meet with the approval of all hon. members, and among others, the Quebec Liberal members.

At that time, I witnessed the good will of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice in starting negotiations with the provincial premiers. There was no end to their efforts in making sure that at no point would hon. members on this side of the House be unable to support them. One thing is sure, much more was expected from the first ministers' constitutional conference of last September. I was disappointed, like some of my colleagues, to see that after so many hours of negotiations, the participants had failed to agree on a formula to amend the Constitution once patriated. I admit that more flexibility would have been desirable on the part of both the Canadian government and the provinces in order to achieve real agreement between the parties. But that conference having failed, are we to sit on our hands and just wait for another constitutional conference, or should we not, instead, accept the project through which the Canadian people can have a truly Canadian constitution, not in 54 years but much sooner, a project that bypasses the principle of unanimity which has caused first ministers' conferences to end in deadlock for some 40 years, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

Some people have asked me how a member who has a reputation for taking a more peaceful approach to negotiation based on consensus and not on confrontation, one who is known to some of his colleagues on the other side as a dove, can support this resolution. Sure, I will identify myself as a dove; sure, I do not like the situation we are in now; sure, I would rather we arrived at a negotiated deal, but we did try and we did not succeed. We now have a choice. We admit a partial failure in arriving at unanimity and take a chance on going back to the negotiating table with partners who cannot seem to agree among themselves and risk losing the progress we made, or we can support the resolution. I stand for supporting the resolution. It is an important step forward and a first step in obtaining the goal we all search for, and that is, constitutional change. If we give up now we are doomed to failure, and failure after 55 years of effort only favours support of the status quo. I am not one who supports the status quo, Mr. Speaker.

As a Quebecer who participated actively in the referendum I will not accept this resolution as the only change promised during that referendum. This is but one step. It will be our duty as members of the government caucus to assure ourselves that the constitutional changes continue to occur and that they occur with the full participation of members of this House.

The performance of the parliamentarians on the joint committee is proof that we should not leave constitutional changes to 11 premiers and their civil servants.

• (1730)

[Translation]

As a whole, Mr. Speaker, the resolution proposed by the Government of Canada has already gained support from the majority of members in the House, from two provinces—a third one is still sitting on the fence—from several provincial political parties, and from most of the groups which gave evidence at the public hearings of the special committee as a result of the amendments moved by the Minister of Justice.

We know that the people of Canada are asking for a change and the proposed resolution fulfils their expectations. That does not mean that the federal project is altogether perfect; it has to be seen as a tool which will enable us to break out of the deadlock. As for me, that tool meets two significant criteria. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I admit that the unilateral amending formula imposes a rhythm and new rules which do not suit all provincial governments. But one essential fact remains for us members from Quebec, namely, that the government of Quebec and all Quebecers maintain their right of veto and that in future no constitutional change can be made without their consent. I consider that this right of veto is a prerequisite condition for anyone who acknowledges the specificness of Quebec. We have seen that members of the opposition, not unlike the provinces, have so far failed to agree on an amending formula. Once we had the Vancouver formula, now we have Senator Tremblay's formula. Mr. Speaker, what can we say about the Vancouver formula? We can say that it is endorsed by the Parti Québécois and by several provincial Conservative governments. What is the formula? It allows opting out, one of its great qualities, according to the Quebec premier. For someone who is bent on opting out to the extreme and separate from his country, of course, he can find something interesting in a formula under which he can withdraw from all federal programs and reject certain constitutional provisions. But that is certainly not the wish of hon. members from Quebec.

With regard to Senator Tremblay's formula I am still quite astonished to realize that, for all practical purposes and depending on economic circumstances, Quebec would lose its rights of veto. If the final count were to be 70-30, for all practical purposes Quebec would be in an extremely embarrassing situation, whereas with the amending formula of the Victoria charter Quebecers, representing 25 per cent of the population, would be guaranteed that no change can be made without their consent. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, any formula which is criticized throughout Canada because it is overly generous to Quebec can indeed be an option to which the Parti Québécois would object. But, Mr. Speaker, I think it is our duty as Liberal members from Quebec to make sure that the Victoria formula is the strict minimum.

Second, I want to speak in favour of the charter of rights and freedoms, particularly the section about mobility rights, labour mobility, and the right to education in the language of the minority. As Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I consider that enshrining those rights in the Constitution is essential if we want to make sure that all Canadians participate in the economic growth of the larger regions of Canada. We now hear the Quebec government advertise that this will take jobs away from Quebecers. In my opinion, it is quite clear that according to all the studies that have been made recently that there are more Quebecers leaving their province to find jobs elsewhere in Canada than there are other Canadians entering that province "to steal our jobs" as they say. When you think of the economic boom in the west and the development in Newfoundland and Labrador Quebecers will certainly not be penalized in being given the right to share these jobs which are the jobs of the future in our country.

The fact is that this must be associated with another factor; the access to French schools. You cannot ask Quebecers to leave their province and get stranded in another province where they will not have the right to send their children to French schools. I also think that this is a change that is perhaps not as far-reaching as one would have wished, but at least it gives assurance to those Quebecers that they will benefit from those jobs that will be created all across Canada. It is certain that if they did not have this right, they would be reluctant to go. Now at least they have the assurance that they will have access to French schools.

The same applies to the entrenchment of the principle of equalization which gives the economy an additional stability. It is the concept of sharing that is now recognized by most Canadians and which has enabled Canada to become one of the most prosperous countries in the world. I think that it should be entrenched in the Constitution. The equalization principle will force both levels of government to favor economic development in order to reduce inequality of opportunities and in order to provide Canadians with essential services that are of acceptable quality. By entrenching this concept of sharing we are ensuring the future of Canadians in keeping with a tradition which was established in the early days of this country.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the proposed resolution is but one stage which will launch the renewal process for which we have been waiting for 54 years. After patriation, the provinces will have to come back to the table to negotiate and reach some agreement, as the Quebec government is so fond of saying in its ads. At that time, the premiers can put forward their proposals for an equitable division of powers. We must recognize, Mr. Speaker, that the provinces have several justifiable demands. Moreover, most of the requests made in the sixties were recognized by the Pearson government.

Also, the changes and reform called for in 1968, 1969 and 1970 were accepted by the present Prime Minister. Many people seem to have forgotten the progress made in the social field after the Victoria conference. What about the agreements on immigration and the successful telecommunications agreements in the mid-seventies. During the next round of federal-provincial negotiations, we should adopt as a principle that every bit of progress made should be entrenched in the Constitution. Had this been done in the past when the first ministers agreed on six or seven items out of 12 on the agenda, we would probably be much further ahead now in the division of powers. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, they were out to get package deals.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the input by Members of Parliament in this constitutional renewal process should not, as I have said, be restricted to this particular debate. It must continue at all stages following the passage of the proposed resolution. I think that future constitutional changes must not come only as a result of discussions between the federal and provincial ministers but must involve Members of Parliament. I think we can be proud of the way in which the joint committee operated, of the resolutions and amendments proposed by both opposition parties and by government members, and I believe that all members have an important role to play. I can only hope that this will continue in the future.

During the first debate last December, some members on both sides of the House seemed reluctant to take a stand on the proposed resolution as a whole, or on part of it, such as the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. My advice to them at the time was to take part in the work of the special committee to suggest improvements or express their views so that the final resolution might be the best and the most perfect possible.

Those who suggested changes, Mr. Speaker, and who obtained that the original resolution be amended deserve our congratulations. To those who did not succeed in imposing amendments or having them accepted, I would ask this question: can we afford at this time in our history to miss this unique opportunity to recognize the bilingual character of our country and its respect of human rights? While I respect those who intend to vote against the resolution, Mr. Speaker, I believe that, as representatives of the Canadian people, we must accept this proposal so that the government may act immediately by taking a first step in the right direction and by taking this important initiative of patriating the Constitution.

This leads me, Mr. Speaker, to speak once again briefly of those who accuse federal members of Parliament from Quebec of failing to comply with the wishes of their constituents and call us grovellers or sheep. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that we have any lesson to take from these people. The day before yesterday, I was listening to the Quebec premier in a radio interview. He was saying that he did not understand why the Liberal members from Quebec were not more independent of their party. He did not understand why they did not vote against the proposed resolution. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why the Quebec premier would make such comments. We all know that in the four and a half years that the Parti Québécois has been in power in Quebec, PQ members were never allowed to vote freely. How can those people suggest that we should not support our leader and our party when, for nearly five years, the great majority of PQ members have toed the party line as we have done ourselves. The Parti Québécois executive even decided after the referendum to change considerably its electoral platform by abolishing the principle of a referendum and pushing back the basic objective of that political party, namely, sovereignty, into the background among its priorities.

Where were those who now say that federal members have failed to protect the interests of their constituents, of their members and of the population? Where were those people who are now criticizing us? Why did they not protest when this decision was imposed by the Parti Québécois leaders? No, Mr. Speaker, we have nothing to learn from those people. They should know that in a parliamentary system like ours, the party line and party solidarity must be maintained and respected. If the personal views of a member are at too great a variance with the line adopted by his party, it is up to the individual member to take his responsibilities by accepting the decisions of his caucus or to consider the result a vote against it would have.

However, as a member has many opportunities to express his views at caucus meetings or in committee, he can reach an acceptable compromise by playing an active role. As I said earlier, perfection is impossible to attain and we should leave well enough alone. In the present situation, if I were to rely on the pundits, I could easily become a national hero. I would simply have to vote against the proposed resolution, and editorialists, Conservative and Parti Québécois members would congratulate me on my gesture. I would go back to Quebec City to a triumphant welcome by the people of my constituency who, in any case, probably never even voted for me. I would get all this because I would have gone against the wishes of the party which was elected by the population and against a leader who, for all practical purposes, is respected by Quebecers. By voting against it I would have prevented the federal government from imposing its will. There is nothing revolutionary in that. Those are things which have been claimed by the people of both Canada and Quebec for some time. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) stated in an interview published in last Saturday's edition of Le Devoir, and I quote:

> It is important that party leaders think of their country, and not only of their supporters. A true politician should be capable of entertaining such an attitude and of explaining it in the presence of his supporters. It will be difficult for my party, but it was necessary for the country.

It will be the same for the hon. members from Quebec. It will be the same for the Progressive Conservative members if they were against, and also for those who will have some reservations to make on the resolution. So where is the unfairness about the reform of the Constitution as proposed by the Government of Canada? Is it in patriation? Certainly not, since I know very few people who are against the idea of bringing back our Constitution, which is now in London.

[English]

We have seen some battles here in the past. We have seen all kinds of confrontations between Quebecers and English Canadians. When for years Quebecers were calling themselves French-Canadians or Canadiens, the rest of the people of Canada were calling themselves British subjects or British citizens. Maybe after so long Quebecers decided they wanted to identify themselves with something closer to them, and then started identifying themselves as Québécois. If we had not waited so long to adopt our Canadian Citizenship Act, and to start identifying ourselves as Canadians, maybe Quebecers would not have seen that necessity.

We have seen the fight for a Canadian flag when people on both sides of this House voted for or against it. We can remember that great flag debate when the Quebec caucus was fighting so that Canada would adopt its own flag, because after a hundred years, French Canadians could not identify themselves with a flag they did not relate to: the Red Ensign or the Union Jack. No, we have to wait a hundred years for our flag. Quebecers, after waiting so long, decided in the early fifties that they wanted their own flag because they needed something they could relate to.

During the referendum, Quebecers started flying the Canadian flag, and I think they have been flying it for a long time, because they realize that it is their flag and they have an attachment to it.

We have to ensure that this Canadianization continues. We saw the example last summer of our national anthem. Once again Quebecers had to be ahead. They had to sing "O Canada" long before the rest of Canada, which was singing "God Save the King" or "God Save the Queen". Quebecers were perhaps bored with that, and started singing national songs in Quebec. During the referendum, we saw that Quebecers wanted to identify themselves as Canadians.

[Translation]

Canadians had placed great hopes in the negotiations scheduled for the premiers' constitutional conference last fall. We all wished that those in attendance would reach a consensus on the different items on the agenda. After the failure of this conference, I would have liked to see the provinces try once more to come to an agreement with the federal government, to put forward a proposed resolution unanimously agreed to by all of them.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we found out that the provincial premiers were having some difficulty in coming to an agreement and, by the way they never even reached a consensus on anything. Whether it was about going to London, or the amending formula, or any formula at all, the only thing to which they agreed unanimously was their opposition to the federal proposal. Surely, this negative attitude of provincial "partisanship" will not help build a better Canada!

The Government of Canada is acting in the interests of the people of all Canada and in order to move foward along the constitutional path, they are seeking the authorization of Parliament, which represents the Canadian people. I want to give them that support and I urgently ask my colleagues of the Progressive Conservative Party to set aside their partisan views and join with the New Democratic Party and Liberal members in giving their unconditional support to this proposal, so that we may go ahead with the constitutional reform.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I say there have been the necessary discussions, and I believe you will find that the House will agree to sit a few minutes beyond six o'clock if necessary so that our friend, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), can complete his speech.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief.

Mr. Knowles: Take your time.

Mr. Ittinuar: Mr. Speaker, my friend, the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), likes to say, when he speaks of the natives in the Constitution, "together we will build a great nation". He said this yesterday, and I would like to follow up on his response and explain how we could build a great nation.

As we all know, this is a critical period in Canadian history. As usual, I am pleased and honoured to be a participant in the debate on the Canadian Constitution. I am particularly happy because this is a significant time in the long history of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. We have a responsibility to see that consideration is given to the interests of all Canadians, but I will be speaking specifically to the issue of entrenching aboriginal rights in the Constitution of Canada. The significance of this, as I said earlier, cannot be overstated.

When I spoke in the House last fall, I was fairly despondent about the future of aboriginal rights in Canada. The first draft of the constitutional resolution was a serious blow to us in our long fight for legal and political recognition of our rights as original inhabitants. It appeared that all our voices had fallen on deaf ears. A constitution without affirmation of our rights signalled the beginning of the end for us as distinct peoples within confederation.

At the time, Britain seemed the only avenue for change open to us. However, we pressed very hard to have our positions heard at the joint committee on the Constitution. I believe, for once, members of that committee listened. We owe a great debt to those people who came in good faith, facing what looked like impossible odds, to make the case they have tried to make so many times before.

When the Minister of Justice introduced amendments to the resolution on January 13, our hopes for recognition were dampened, dampened by amendments which fell disappointingly short of entrenchment. Native people were united in their belief that the amendments were not nearly enough to protect our cultures and lifestyles and to secure our future within confederation. We redoubled our efforts to achieve this last chance for recognition because we always maintained that entrenchment would be impossible after patriation, given the views of most of the premiers in the provinces of Canada.

For once, native leaders from all parts of the country, Inuit, Indian and Metis, worked together in a process of intensive discussion, consultation and debate with members of all parties. My own party, and particularly the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), who, in our language, we like to call the "Downright hon. member for Oshawa" played a large role in convincing the government to accept our amendments, which were won only after a long and hard process of negotiating with the federal government.

We would, of course, prefer that aboriginal rights were recognized because they were self-evident of a society where principles of simple justice prevailed. But I am sorry to say they were not aspects of that charter. Aboriginal rights were ignored in the first draft, whether by design or accident, and I prefer to think by design, but that does not matter now. The fact is that they were missing.

As I said in the committee, there have always been members in all parties who were sympathetic to our goals and who have worked on behalf of native peoples. The unanimous all-party agreement which recognized aboriginal rights on January 30 was a great accomplishment. It was not just a result of intensive work in the last week of committee hearings, but the culmination of years of struggle.

This marks the beginning of a new era for native people in Canada. The importance of this recognition of aboriginal rights lies precisely in its being a beginning. Our historical relationship with the federal, provincial and territorial governments has not been a happy one to date. Until January 30, we faced the prospect of a Canadian constitution being patriated without any positive inclusion of the rights of the native people of Canada. For us this could only lead to the erosion of our distinct native cultures through a gradual process of assimilation, which is a negative process. The true significance of the aboriginal rights amendments is that they guaranteed us freedom to follow our traditions and to speak our own languages within the greater Canadian society. The constitutional resolution before the House recognizes the principle of aboriginal rights, and the process of enumerating and defining these rights will follow in the post-patriation period.

● (1750)

Section 35 allows for native participation at constitutional conferences held during the two-year period following patriation and calls specifically for the agenda to include the matter of identifying and defining aboriginal rights. This section implicitly recognizes the principle that the aboriginal peoples of Canada must be involved in the process of defining exactly what their rights are and, more importantly, that only the native peoples themselves can adequately represent their own interests. Only through a process such as this can the paternalism which unfortunately has existed in the past be eliminated. I must say it is through the help of members in all parties who have worked toward this that we have achieved this end.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ittinuar: I sincerely hope that when the native representatives sit down at the table with the first ministers, the first matter to be resolved will be agreement on the formula which permits the ongoing participation of native peoples at all future conferences and on all matters which affect their interests.

I believe the Conservative Party is in agreement with me when I say that the amendments with regard to aboriginal rights passed by the joint committee are not only fair and just but also long overdue. In fact, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) put it rather well when he said:

> If justice is to be done in the country it must also be done first to Canada's aboriginal people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ittinuar: Members of the party to my right applaud, but I wonder if they are aware of the implications of patriation without the inclusion of the amendments on aboriginal rights. Let me explain. First we would not be represented at constitutional conferences and, second, the possibility of obtaining provincial agreement on these amendments is tenuous at best.

The amending formula at least recognizes the power of the provinces, but without the amendments which we have achieved the native peoples of Canada have nothing and face the prospect of never again seeing their rights recognized and affirmed by a Canadian constitution.

Unilateral patriation is not the most desirable route, as we are all aware, yet in spite of this I ask hon. members to consider seriously Canada's native people when the vote is taken. This would take justice out of the realm of abstract idealism and put it into the Constitution of Canada.

Section 33 of the proposed resolution recognizes and affirms the aboriginal and treaty rights of the Indian, Inuit and Metis peoples of Canada. The significance of this amendment is twofold, for it entrenches the collective rights of the aboriginal peoples while at the same time recognizes important distinctions within the broad category of aboriginal or "native" people.

Inuit, Indians and Metis cultures, languages, histories and traditions are very different from one another, and yet we share the right to identify ourselves as aboriginal. The recognition and affirmation of aboriginal rights at the constitutional level provides protection against the erosion of these rights. It means that federal government lawyers can never again argue against the existence of aboriginal rights, as they did in court against the Inuit of Baker Lake. The principle has been affirmed, and the long process of clearly defining the nature of such rights will follow. Entrenchment of aboriginal rights marks the beginning of a new era in which native people themselves will have a hand in shaping what those rights mean.

The limitation of rights through such indirect means as government programs and policies will be more difficult. Considering the level of distrust which presently exists, and has always existed between native people and governments, the process of redefining the relationship between these parties can only lead to greater understanding and mutual respect.

Section 25 of the charter of rights and freedoms protects aboriginal rights from being gradually eroded by the assertion of other rights or freedoms in the charter. This is important historically, for many of the conditions faced by native people in Canada today are not the result of an assault on native rights but, rather, the indirect consequence of policies and legislation which had other purposes.

Section 25 also protects the sanctity of land claims settlements, as it holds the government responsible for upholding the guarantees obtained in settlements. It is my hope and trust that the federal government will fulfil the great moment of January 30 and move to settle all claims in this country.

The inclusion of the Royal Proclamation of 1763 is also very important. I believe it has the significance for native people that the Magna Carta has in the British tradition. I would like to quote from the Royal Proclamation of 1763, which I think explains why it is significant for us.

> And whereas it is just and reasonable, and essential to our interest, and the security of our colonies, that the several Nations or Tribes of Indians with whom we are connected, and who live under our protection, should not be molested or disturbed in the possession of such parts of our Dominions and Territories as, not having been ceded to or purchased by us, are reserved for them, or any of them, as their Hunting Grounds.

"Hunting grounds" today can mean any number of things. Aboriginal people have never relinquished their rights as the first inhabitants of this country. Aboriginal rights have always been ours. What is important about this resolution is that it recognizes those rights.

This is not to say this is the last word on aboriginal rights. It is simply the beginning. My friend Charlie Watt, president of the Makivak Corporation of Quebec, said before the joint committee, and I quote:

> All we are asking for is recognition that we are a distinct people, we live in Canada, and we are here to stay. If you recognize that principle, let us work out the details after patriation.

The amendments won on January 30 are an immense and dramatic improvement on the aboriginal proposal and are certainly worthy of our support.

There have always been differences among Canadians, and among native people too. We would be naive to expect otherwise, but it is our shared sense of pride in our unique identities and histories which gives us our strength. That is what makes consensus and agreement such a triumph.

I certainly have grievances about the charter of rights. I have grievances, for instance, about the section on mobility rights. The rights in that section do not accrue to the people of the north because they speak neither English nor French, and they have no desire to move anywhere else in Canada. However, the people of southern Canada can move into northern Canada at their leisure because that section benefits them. This is a likely prospect because of the potential development of those lands on which the Inuit of the north live.

I had an unfortunate argument with the Minister of Justice during the joint committee hearings. He agreed with my arguments but, because of party discipline, he could not agree to amend that part of the constitutional charter.

I would like to say to native people, to my fellow parliamentarians and to all Canadians that we do not need to deny our differences in order to acknowledge our achievements. As I said in my first speech in this House in Eskimo—and I would like to speak again in Eskimo in answer to what the Minister of Justice said yesterday—together we can make a great nation. The Eskimos would say:

> Atautikkut kisiani sanajunnaqpugut Canadattiavangmik.

Only together can we build a great nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, and with the consent of the House earlier given, I now leave the chair until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

FIVE-YEAR FUNDING PLAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Considering the misleading statement by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Roberts) on January 19, 1981, in which he pretended to confirm the higher, but still inadequate goal of 1.5 per cent of gross national product spending on research in Canada by 1985, while in the same statement announcing that the government's share would be cut by some 7 per cent, to the serious and even critical detriment of the entire scientific and research community and to young Canadian students and would-be scientists on whom the country must depend for technological innovation, creativeness and scientific, economic and social development, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That the minister live up to the promise he made in this House to support fully the previous Conservative government's five-year funding plan for research, or admit his duplicitous statement and position that as minister responsible for science and technology he is unable to fulfil his responsibilities and obligations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SMALL BUSINESS

INCLUSION OF VENTURE CAPITAL IN BOND PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Small Business Development Bond program introduced in the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), as everyone knows, has since been watered down considerably by the Grits. In response to my request last week to expand the program in order to include venture capital, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) said in this House, "Any extended provisions to the SBDB would be an expense we cannot bear."

In light of new information revealed in a study by the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses that this program will contribute $77 million to the federal treasury in the first year alone, obviously dispelling the minister's excuse, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to extend forthwith the provisions of the Small Business Development Bonds to include venture capital so necessary to the very survival of the small business sector.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENT

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the inability of local environmental groups in the Niagara area to halt SCA Chemical dumping into the Niagara River, and in light of the International Joint Commission's recommendation that such further dumping be discontinued, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the Prime Minister be condemned for failing to follow through with his election promise made over a year ago that he would urge the U.S. government to deny SCA permission to dump into the Niagara River.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

CANADIAN AMATEUR HOCKEY ASSOCIATION—PARTICIPATION OF FEMALE PLAYERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to move a motion which I believe has the general support and, perhaps, the unanimous support of the House.

In view of the controversy occurring in Winnipeg over the recent suspension of three girls from their respective hockey teams and subsequent threats of suspension toward their coaches for playing them anyway, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House encourages the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association to be more flexible and, in all fairness, to allow girls like Heather Kramble from the Pirates Community Club in Transcona to play out the season with a view to sorting this problem out between seasons, and not now at the expense of the girls and their teams.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

Mr. Paproski: Regan said no.

Mr. Collenette: The Tories said no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1410)

Madam Speaker: There were noes, and I am the one who hears the noes.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

Madam Speaker: I would be grateful to the House if hon. members would let the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) speak.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: There is no point in indicating where the noes came from; I am the only one who knows.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

FEDERAL AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCE OF ALBERTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the head of the Economic Council of Canada, Mr. David Slater, has predicted that, even with moderate growth in the demand for energy, Canada will need another five energy megaprojects in addition to Syncrude, Alsands and Cold Lake, in order to achieve oil self-sufficiency by 1990, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That this House direct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to demonstrate, as the minister said, "some spirit of flexibility and compromise" so that an energy agreement can be reached in the very near future with the province of Alberta, thus allowing several important oil sands megaprojects to proceed immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S SHARE OF OIL REVENUE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This week Mr. Robert Blair, president of Nova Corporation, declared in a speech given in Toronto that the federal government was entitled to a larger share of oil revenue. I move, seconded by the hon. member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield):

That this House urge Mr. Blair to reiterate his wise statements at public forums in Alberta and in direct representation to the Premier of Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POST OFFICE

DELAY IN DELIVERIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that problems of postal delivery have deteriorated to epidemic and crisis proportions, and in view of the fact that the Guernsey post office in the Channel Islands has stated:

We have, however, been warned by the British post office that the Canadian postal administration is not one of the most efficient in the world! We were advised that a reply could take at least six months, and this is in fact proving to be the case.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the Postmaster General make a statement on motions explaining his abdication of responsibility in this very important communications department, and also negotiate with the Minister of National Health and Welfare that post-dated pension cheques be mailed two weeks earlier than at the present time so that pensioners need not suffer because of late delivery.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ARTS AND HUMANITIES

TRIBUTE TO FRANK R. SCOTT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I move:

That this House note the timely tribute that is being paid tonight and for the next two days in my home province of British Columbia, in Vancouver, to Frank R. Scott, a poet, lawyer and academic, born in the province of Quebec 81 years ago, who has constantly stood for human rights and justice and who has been a unifying influence in French and English Canada and who, in poetry, has dramatized our basic tensions in the Canadian tradition, and who in law, Madam Speaker, has expressed his strong social concerns.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I see that the House does want to pay tribute to this remarkable personality. However, this is not a motion that I can accept under Standing Order 43.

FISHERIES

REFERENCE OF WEST COAST REGULATIONS TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, given the absence of objection from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) to the new fisheries regulations for the west coast being considered in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, on the basis of an order of reference, I am encouraged to believe that I shall obtain unanimous consent of the House to a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the adverse economic consequences of the new regulations on fisheries and the tourist industry on the west coast, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be provided immediately with an order of reference to permit it to meet, examine the new west coast fisheries regulations, and report.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

DURATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT PERIODS FOR INDIVIDUALS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. He will know that recent labour force figures show he now has one more economic accomplishment, namely, that more Canadians are staying out of work longer. The January figures showed that the number of Canadians unemployed for 14 weeks or longer was 18 per cent higher than last year. Most of those Canadians want to work. Will the minister tell us whether he intends any new measures to help them find jobs they can go to, jobs they can work at?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to bring in new measures at this stage. Personally I have been impressed by the strength shown in the Canadian employment picture in the last year. The rate of unemployment is moderating and is less than it was last month. In those circumstances I personally do not intend to bring in any further measures in addition to those announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which are directed toward skill training and adjustment programs. They seem to be the most appropriate response in present circumstances.

RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the minister has now set another record. He has shown that not only is he prepared to have more Canadians out of work longer, but he is prepared to stand up in the House and boast about it. It is an absolutely unacceptable position for a Minister of Finance of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, perhaps I should address my supplementary to the Minister of State for Finance as it is of particular concern to the province of Quebec where the permanent unemployment problem is much more serious than anywhere else in Canada. The figures published by Statistics Canada show that the rate of permanent unemployment in Quebec is more than double the rate in the rest of Canada. Is there a program that the minister would recommend to the government to assist Quebecers in finding the jobs that they want today?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition should know that this government has always taken into account the regional implications of its policies. Whether in the fight against unemployment or in the area of industrialization, the government has always considered the particular concerns and problems of the regions, and this same policy was followed in the last budget. The problem mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition is of constant concern to the government.

[English]

INCREASED GROWTH IN RATE OF HIDDEN UNEMPLOYED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, some preoccupation! It means that the rate of permanent unemployment in the province of Quebec and in much of Atlantic Canada is double the rate in the rest of the country. I suppose we can ask that the rest of the country be spared that kind of special preoccupation.

Let me return to the Minister of Finance. He will know that one other impact of his government ignoring the Canadian economic situation has been a dramatic growth in the rate of the hidden unemployed in the country. Statistics Canada indicated that the rate of hidden unemployed—Canadians who are simply giving up hope and stopping their search for jobs—rose 25 per cent last year. We have a situation where one agency of government has identified those people. I ask the Minister of Finance whether his department intends to do anything to help those people who are out of work and have lost hope to such a degree that they are not even looking for work.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the right hon. member's rhetoric must be put in perspective and in context. The context is that the employment situation in Canada over the year 1980 was such that we registered a drop in the level of unemployment in January, 1981. The number of persons unemployed in January, 1981, was less than it was in mid-1978. The over-all strength of the Canadian economy in producing jobs, despite the serious level of unemployment, was quite considerable in comparison with other countries, especially the United States. We are concerned about unemployment. That is why we have launched this special adjustment program, which I described earlier. We are not in a position like that of the Leader of the Opposition, who advocates new measures of spending one day, and restraint and a battle against inflation the next. We do not have the luxury of inconsistency which the official opposition portrays every day.

● (1420)

GOVERNMENT'S MONETARY AND FISCAL POLICIES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. I want to assure the minister that we are not engaged here in rhetoric. We are engaged in the potential tragedy and human suffering behind those figures. There are 1,300,000 people, given the real rate and hidden rate of unemployment, in Canada today, some 1,300,000 potential human tragedies.

In light of the lowering of real wages, the increase in the cost of unemployment insurance premiums, the lowering of the rate of unemployment insurance benefits as a result of continuing double-digit inflation, and the increase in the hidden rate of unemployment and the real rate of unemployment, I ask the minister, one year after he has assumed his responsibilities, will he now discharge the commitment he made when he was in opposition that the government should not be waging its monetary and fiscal policies on the backs of the unemployed and the poor?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am again surprised at the inconsistency in the attitude of the official opposition. Earlier in the week the member for St. John's West was advocating a strong stand against inflation and a strong stand against spending, as has been the case throughout the last several months. Today the hon. member takes a different course, like his leader, and suggests new expensive programs. I would ask him how he can balance these two contrary objectives, one day advocating spending more in the way of stimulation of the economy, and the next day advocating a reduction in the deficit by spending less. I do not have the luxury, as Minister of Finance, of speaking out of both sides of my mouth.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I would suggest to the minister that if he wants guidance he should take a look at President Reagan's economic package which he presented last night.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The President of the United States made a commitment that there would be no decrease in social payments in the United States.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: What we are talking about in Canada is a change in priorities. Will the Minister of Finance rearrange his priorities so that he can discharge the commitment he made a year ago to the poor, the low-income earners and the unemployed of this country? We have seen during that year a total erosion of the $35 income supplement, which is all he has in his bag.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the statement made by the hon. member about the guaranteed income supplement is totally false. The guaranteed income supplement has not been eroded.

An hon. Member: It sure has.

Mr. MacEachen: It is fully indexed. It increases and maintains its real value in line with changes in the cost of living . That the value has eroded is one of the biggest falsehoods which has been put forward in the House of Commons. The guaranteed income supplement maintains its real value.

I want to tell the hon. member that I do not intend to take guidance, as he has suggested, from the message given last night by the President of the United States in terms of the reduction of expenditures. Shall I take guidance and reduce spending on the arts and humanities? Shall I take guidance and reduce expenditures on welfare, as the hon. member suggests? Shall I take guidance and reduce expenditures on meal aid subsidies to schools by a billion and a half? Shall I take guidance and cut medicare by a very substantial amount? That is the kind of guidance I am not taking from the Leader of the Opposition, from the hon. member for St. John's West, or from the President of the United States.

• (1425)

Mr. Clark: Tell us about the meals you have cut out, Jean.

THE MINISTRY

RESPONSIBILITIES OF INDIVIDUAL MINISTERS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): My question, Madam Speaker, is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I would have thought one Regan was bad enough for this government without their having to choose to follow another one.

My question has to do with the announcement yesterday by the Solicitor General that the Prime Minister has appointed ministers to be responsible for constituencies throughout Canada including those not chosen by the people of Canada. When was the Solicitor General appointed as minister responsible for the riding of Broadview-Greenwood, and other ridings which he did not mention? What is the exact nature of his duties, and could the Deputy Prime Minister tell us what ridings he is responsible for now?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): First of all, Madam Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that the Government of Canada does not believe that any minister has been given responsibility for representing, in this House of Commons, any riding other than the riding for which he has been elected. That is the view of the Government of Canada.

What I would like to tell the hon. member is that ministers for various regions of the country have special responsibilities within the cabinet for representing the interests of those regions.

An hon. Member: Handing out cheques is a tough job.

Mr. MacEachen: For example, for almost 17 years now I have had a special responsibility within the cabinet for representing the interests of my region, namely, the province of Nova Scotia. That is not to say that I usurp the rights of any other Member of Parliament from that province. The fact of the matter is that other Members of Parliament are not present at the cabinet table to represent the interests of their particular regions, and that is precisely the role that ministers in the Government of Canada perform as regional ministers. I believe it is an essential role, time honoured, and ought to be appreciated by members of this House.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, what unmitigated nonsense from the Minister of Finance. It is totally contrary to the patronizing drivel we heard yesterday from the Solicitor General, and the Minister of Finance knows perfectly well that you do not have to be represented at the cabinet table in order to hand out cheques and to indicate to the constituents of a particular riding that a minister has been named responsible for that riding. Those are precisely the words the Solicitor General used in his letter to my constituents—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would urge the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. Rae: Those are precisely the words that he used yesterday in the House. The Deputy Prime Minister did not answer the first question. What are the duties as described by the Solicitor General yesterday, who is carrying out those duties, and will you table a list of ministers who are responsible for particular constituencies, as indicated yesterday by the Solicitor General?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I did answer the question.

An hon. Member: You did not answer it.

Mr. Crosbie: Slippery shoes!

Mr. MacEachen: As I understand it, it was a follow-up to the question of privilege which was raised yesterday to the effect that in some way ministers of the Crown were supplanting the proper role of Members of Parliament in the House of Commons.

Mr. Rae: Exactly.

An hon. Member: Now you are getting the point.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the question that I am answering, and the hon. member has agreed that it is the question. I am telling him that it is not the policy of the Government of Canada to usurp in any way the proper role of Members of Parliament in representing their constituencies in the House of Commons. Not at all. I would be the first to object to that procedure, but I think it is essential, in our system of government, that ministers be given responsibilities for representing in a special way the interests of their regions in the cabinet and around the cabinet table. That has been the tradition, and it is simply that tradition that is reflected in my answer and the responsibilities which the Solicitor General is carrying.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance would try to pretend that he is the piano player in the brothel who does not know what is going on upstairs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that it is not a very convincing part.

Let the Minister of Finance answer this simple question: what is the nature of the duties assigned to the Solicitor General of Canada with respect to my riding and with respect to other constituencies? Will he table the list of those ministers who are carrying out these functions, and will he please tell us what in God's name they are?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows about a lot of things but one thing he does not know anything about is cabinet government, and maybe he never will.

Some hon. Members: Oink, oink, oink!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order! Will the House come back to order? This only shortens the question period. The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member has asked for the third time what the responsibilities of regional ministers are. I would be glad to go over the ground for the hon. member. The first point I want to make is that it is the special responsibility of regional ministers—

An hon. Member: Table the list.

Mr. MacEachen: —to represent the interests of regions within the cabinet.

An hon. Member: Table the list.

Mr. MacEachen: In my region—

An hon. Member: Table the list.

Mr. MacEachen: Hon. members are saying "table the list." I will come to that, but I want to answer the question first.

Miss MacDonald: You had three tries.
