The comments that you made, Sir, with respect to the drug problem and with respect to environment are timely and are of great importance to us. We know, because we are not naive, that the terrible scourge of the drug problem is not just as a consequence of where the drugs are produced, but also as a consequence of those who use them. So your comments are timely and helpful.

Your comments with respect to the environment come at a time when at a global level and all around the earth people are more and more realizing that this may well be the great issue that we have to resolve. Your comments bring encouragement and help to your friends here.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker Fraser: It means a great deal to us, who share the continent with you, to hear your comments because leadership is something that in this day and age must go beyond national boundaries and that when you make these statements, which are the statements of a true leader, they are an inspiration for all of us. We are deeply grateful for the message that you have brought to us from your country.

In closing, Mr. President and Madam, let me say on behalf of all who are here today, and many who are not able to be here, we value immensely our friendship with your country. We want to continue the relationship in a more and more effective way. We welcome you here today. We wish you could stay longer. We wish both you and Madam and your colleagues the very warmest best wishes from all Canadians. Thank you.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

"FOCUS ON CANADA" HANDBOOK FOR SECONDARY SCHOOLS—PROMOTION OF FILM "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, while I realize my Question of Privilege may have some implications, I must bring it to the attention of the Senate.

A recent action by the National Film Board breaks faith with a commitment made to the Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs some three years ago, and stands in startling conflict with the government's stated attempt to weld national unity from varied elements of Canadians and certainly our veterans.

The NFB's new publication, "Focus on Canada", carries information on films and videos recommended for secondary-level social studies work.

The introduction to the "Focus on Canada" handbook states that it was prepared with the assistance of eleven social studies educators from across the country. Each consultant evaluated a number of films and provided suggestions for their effective use in the classroom. Working from these notes and comments, media specialist Arlene Moscovitch then wrote "Focus on Canada."

As one of their themes, the NFB lists works examining World War I, and one of the films recommended is "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss"—the story of William Avery Bishop, Air Marshall and recipient of the Victoria Cross. Let me describe what the handbook says about "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss."

> The dark side of heroism and the horrors of war are examined in this exciting docudrama that uses excerpts from the play Billy Bishop Goes to War together with archival war footage, scenes from old movies, and interviews with fellow combatants of Canada's most decorated military figure.
> This particular film has generated a great deal of controversy because of its less than adulatory stance towards Bishop, one of Canada's well-entrenched idols. It provides a wealth of issues for students and teachers to explore and debate. Why does war need heroes? Should generals use people like Bishop and Von Richtoffen to promote war? How are Bishop and Von Richtoffen alike? Could the film have shown that World War I was a futile, imperialistic struggle that needed to manufacture heroes to hide the true nature of things from the public and yet still have acknowledged the very real courage of men in intolerable situations?

Honourable senators, it should be of deep concern to Parliament that despite a commitment made by the NFB Film Commissioner, Mr. Francois Macerola, and his successor, Ms. Joan Pennefather, that the film would be quickly consigned to the back shelves, they have defiantly accepted the recommendations of these eleven social studies educators; and, furthermore, that the powers that be at the National Film Board have no control over the decision to recommend "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" as suitable for study by secondary school students, especially when they agreed to allow the film to phase out.

As a matter of fact, honourable senators, their acceptance of the recommendations contradicts their commitment to the Senate and may border on contempt of Parliament.

It is quite alarming that the NFB administration could be so out of control with such a recommendation which ignores out-of-hand the agency's policy, unless they condone the action. This wayward direction is symptomatic of the irresponsible attitude of successive Minsters of Communication, both past and present, who hide behind their "arm's length" denial of their responsibility to Canadians. This action by the NFB also ignored the hurt that may again be inflicted on the Billy Bishop family.

The NFB agreed to insert a disclaimer with the title of the film and, as a resolution of the subcommittee report, decided to produce a new film, which is nearing completion at this very moment, entitled "Aces", which is a depiction of the many Canadian air pilots who became heroes in the world wars. It was expected, indicated, promised and stated by the Film Commissioner that "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" would gradually disappear from the National Film Board inventory. Their action implies that they are now just as guilty of not representing what the truth embodies for Canadians, over 75,000 of whom supported the Senate's action, as is the producer of the film, Paul Cowan, who tried to camouflage the truth of a Canadian hero. Instead, a recommended distribution of such an erroneous film cannot help our nation find itself, and is a mockery of their responsibility. It certainly cannot help Canadian students appreciate that history should be, and must be, the truth. It cannot possibly foster pride in our Canadian achievements.

"The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" should not be distributed as an accurate reflection of one of Canada's foremost heroes, Air Marshall Billy Bishop, VC. I intend to ask for the consent of the Senate to put this blatant attitude to rest, and I will do so utilizing my parliamentary privileges and the proper procedures of the Senate when the opportunity arises. Thank you.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, with respect to Senator Marshall's question of privilege, I should like to agree with everything he has said. I think it is time that we, as parliamentarians, should be able to depend on our public servants when they tell us they will put this film in the archives and not show it again. We do not have many Victoria Cross winners in Canada, and to have them belittled by our own National Film Board has gone beyond what is expected of it as an institution responsible to the Parliament of Canada.

I would like to suggest that Senator Marshall's question of privilege be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology and its subcommittee of Veterans Affairs so that witnesses can again come forward from the National Film Board to answer to this blatant irresponsibility. It makes matters even worse to think that young Canadians in their history lessons and through the promotion of this film will be seeing a film that belittles one of our national heroes.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I therefore move:

> That the Question of Privilege raised by the Honourable Senator Marshall regarding the action of the National Film Board with respect to the film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology for consideration and report.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. E. W. Barootes: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

I can explain if requested.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I would like an explanation as to why it is necessary to give leave.

Senator Barootes: I have asked for leave.

Senator Olson: Go ahead and explain.

[Senator Marshall.]

Senator Barootes: The explanation, honourable senators, is as follows: Bill C-98 has been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and we have asked the Minister of Agriculture to appear before that committee. However, the only time that we can obtain the services of the minister and his officials is at 3:30 this afternoon. We would therefore ask permission of the Senate for the committee to sit at that time.

Senator MacEachen: Three-thirty?

Senator Barootes: Fifteen-thirty hours, for those who do not understand, and, for the others, when the little hand is between three and four. That is our explanation.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I regret the necessity for seeking leave to have a meeting at 3:30 while the Senate is sitting when a number of important speeches are to be made, and I regret that the chairman of the Agriculture Committee has not been able to persuade the Minister of Agriculture to be available at a time other than 3:30. I would refuse leave except that I want to remain on good terms with my colleague, Senator Olson. So I agree to give leave; but I would ask the chairman of the committee, when this situation again occurs, to please use his acknowledged clout with the ministry to have the minister appear at a more appropriate time.

The Energy Committee is also meeting this afternoon, and presumably that committee too would like to hold an early meeting. I think it complicates matters but, having said that, I grudgingly agree.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, I accept the graciousness with which leave has been given today. The reason for the time agreed upon is that we had hoped to have half an hour with the minister who, although he has a fairly heavy agenda today, was persuaded to come at that time. We hope to be able to report back to the Senate on that bill as soon as possible.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ENERGY, ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE WITHDRAWN

Hon. William M. Kelly: With some hesitation I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a):

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, Environment and Natural Resources have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not want to appear to be the one who is trying to interfere with the plans of these committees. I realize that all of them have important duties to perform and important work to do. As Senator MacEachen has just pointed out, there are times when we have to attend to other duties in the chamber and there are times when we can arrange committee meetings when the house is not sitting. I think it is incumbent on the chairmen of committees to try to arrange committee meetings at times that do not conflict with the sittings of the chamber. The elitist little group which was here yesterday afternoon recognized the situation in which we in this chamber found ourselves. Trying to maintain the numbers here to deal with the business of the Senate is difficult enough without having to give permission for committees to sit during that time.

I shall not interfere with Senator Kelly's request. This obviously is something that he has arranged beforehand, and I suspect that he probably has witnesses coming. Perhaps he will explain that to us. I simply wished to place before the chamber the predicament in which we find ourselves. We have a number of committees, all of which have to be manned. There are times set out during the week for committees to sit. I think that committee chairmen should try to arrange their committee sittings for that time and not place us in the position, here in the chamber, of trying to maintain a quorum and to keep the chamber's business going while the committees sit, albeit, and quite admittedly, on important Senate business. However, the first responsibility while the Senate is sitting is here in the Senate chamber.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I could not agree more with what Senator Doody has said. The witnesses this afternoon before the Energy Committee are public servants from Ottawa and Halifax. I would like to attend the committee meeting this afternoon, as I have a personal interest in the matter, and I also have to stay in the house; so what do I do?

Senator Doody: Postpone the committee meeting until the Senate rises.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, under the circumstances I am quite willing to withdraw the motion, if that is possible. However, in so doing I would like, on behalf of the committee, to throw myself at the mercy of the chamber and petition Senator Olson, particularly, to contain himself during Question Period, and to express the hope that perhaps we can complete the business of the chamber by four o'clock.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, there is a limit to how much you should ask Senator Olson to do.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable Senator Kelly, are you withdrawing your motion?

Senator Kelly: Yes, I am withdrawing the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

QUESTION PERIOD

TRANSPORT

DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT COMPANY—SALE TO EUROPEAN CONSORTIUM

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Boeing announced today that it has sold de Havilland, a Toronto-based high-tech aircraft company, to an Italian and French consortium, which apparently is manufacturing aircraft in direct competition with the type built by de Havilland.

Could the honourable gentleman inform the Senate whether there are any strings attached to the deal that the government struck with Boeing? Can Boeing dispose of a high-tech company such as de Havilland to foreign companies without conditions?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, subject to confirmation, I think the transaction in question would have been cleared by Investment Canada, but I shall ask the minister responsible for that agency to let me have a report which hopefully I will be able to bring to the Senate later tomorrow or the next day.

● (1420)

Senator Bosa: Would the Leader of the Government comment on why it is possible for the French and Italian governments to have a controlling interest in an aircraft company but the Canadian government cannot?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is asking for a statement of policy. The original decision with regard to de Havilland was and remains eminently defensible. I am sure the transaction, which will be approved by Investment Canada, will prove to be in the best interests of that industry and of the Canadian economy.

DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT COMPANY—OFFER TO PURCHASE BY BRITISH COMPANY—CONSIDERATION BY INVESTMENT CANADA

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, when giving an answer to Senator Bosa's question, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate comment on the degree to which Investment Canada considered the reported offer of a British company to purchase de Havilland; or will he at least comment on the desire of that company to bid on de Havilland, something which was refused by the Boeing Company?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will ask my colleague what information he has on that matter which he can properly convey to the Senate at this time.

DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT COMPANY—JOB PROTECTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, in answering these questions tomorrow, or the day after, will the Leader of the Government inform the Senate as to whether there are any guarantees that the 4,900 jobs in Toronto will remain in place and that the workforce of the factory will not be diluted?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will ask for a full report on the matter.

THE ENVIRONMENT

PCB DESTRUCTION—STATUS OF FEDERAL PROGRAM

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The federal PCB destruction program was implemented two and a half years ago by the then Minister of the Environment, Tom McMillan, in response to the tragic fire at St-Basile-le-Grand.

This plan featured measures to destroy low-level PCB contaminated materials in the federal inventory within one year. In fact, at the time of the announcement the minister made a commitment to ensure that no low-level PCB wastes would be left on federal sites by the fall of 1989.

Second, measures to destroy high level PCB wastes using leased transportable incinerators included expenditures allocated by the cabinet of $6 million to lease a transportable incinerator to destroy 3,000 tonnes of PCB waste at CFB Goose Bay in the spring of 1989, and $15 million to lease a second transportable incinerator for the destruction of other PCB wastes in Canada.

One year later Minister Bouchard updated this program, offering to transport mobile PCB destruction facilities on a low cost recovery basis to areas where volumes of waste warranted it.

Finally, the Green Plan released in December of 1990 committed the government to destroying by 1996 all PCBs under federal jurisdiction, establishing mobile incinerators in Atlantic Canada, Quebec and Ontario.

Two and a half years after the official announcement the following situation exists. There are 131 tonnes of low-level PCB contaminated mineral oil in the federal inventory. At the end of 1989 there were only 112 tonnes. The total number of PCB waste storage sites has increased by four from 1989 to 1990. The number of federal government—

Senator Doody: Question!

Senator Kenny: I am coming to it. I have been coming to it for a couple of years, and I have not been getting any answers.

The number of federal sites has increased from 551 to 625 during this period of time. Total PCB waste has increased from 119,000 tonnes to 130,000 tonnes by 1990.

The incinerator at Goose Bay is no longer operational. Since the shut down, nothing has been set up in the way of transportable incinerators anywhere in the country. According to Environment Canada, the $15 million allocated for the second incinerator still remains untouched. This considered, how fast is the government progressing in ridding the country of high-level PCB wastes?

[Senator Bosa.]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, permit me to draw the attention of the honourable senator to Rule 20(4) concerning oral questions, which states:

> A debate is out of order on an oral question, but brief explanatory remarks may be made by the senator who asks the question and by the senator who answers it.

The honourable senator, in the guise of asking a question, has purported to place before the Senate a great deal of information which may or may not be factual; I have no way of knowing. I am therefore invited to comment on the premise and the preface to the honourable senator's question which, in the first place, I am not in a position to do, and, in the second place, it would be against the rules for me to do. I will take that part—that very brief part—of the honourable senator's speech which is a question as notice and ask for a report from my colleague.

Senator Kenny: Honourable senators, for two-and-a-half years I have been raising these questions. None of them is a surprise; they are on the order paper. The government does not answer the questions; they just hang there and hang there. The fact of the matter is that nothing is happening, and the Leader of the Government in the Senate is not prepared to stand up and admit that his government is doing nothing in this area.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think there is a prior matter which should be attended to, and, if I may say so with respect, it is that the honourable senator should learn how to ask a question and not impose on the time and patience of the house.

Senator Kenny: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate is hiding behind the rules and ducking the substance and the issue. The people of Canada are far more concerned with whether or not the government is living up to its promises with regard to getting rid of PCBs than whether I know how to ask a question properly.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

PROPOSED TRILATERAL AGREEMENT AMONG CANADA, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO—EFFECT ON CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Government Leader in the Senate a question concerning the negotiations now being put in train between Canada, the United States and Mexico, and which were the subject of the recent visit of President Salinas de Gortari of Mexico.

There is some confusion in circles interested in these negotiations as to whether the present Canada—U.S. agreement, the so-called Free Trade Agreement, is subject to a possible reopening. The Prime Minister is reported to have said this week that it would not be reopened, but I would like to know whether that is the case, because Mr. Crosbie, the Minister for International Trade, is on record as saying that he would not rule out changes if Canada signs a North American pact. I quote his words, as follows:

● (1430)

> If during the course of these events we agree to things that are to our advantage and affect the U.S.-Canada deal, then, fine, we'll make some amendments,

I am wondering whether newspaper speculation is correct, that the Prime Minister has said that this U.S.-Canada agreement is closed and will not be reopened. If it is correct, then there appears to be a contradiction in policy which I would like the government leader to sort out for us.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not see where the contradiction lies. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is not on the table in the course of these trilateral talks. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement cannot be reopened in any particular without our consent. Having said that, I suppose it is only prudent to state, as Mr. Crosbie has stated, that we would assess any suggestions for changes or modifications to that agreement in the light of the national interest.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I want to point out to the minister what I am sure he knows. I am sure he has a sophisticated appreciation of the issues involved in these trade talks. For example, there are very significant elements in the U.S. congress and U.S. business community who would like the reopening of some issues in the Canada-U.S. agreement and are using their position in the U.S. economic and political system, and in the discussions on the approval of the fast track system, as leverage to put these issues back on the negotiating agenda. I think it is very important for Canadians to know whether this agreement may be subject to being reopened, as Mr. Crosbie says, "if it is to our advantage" or whether it will not be reopened, and therefore those issues to which I have referred—I am not detailing them here because I know that my colleagues would like to get on with other business—will definitely be excluded by reason of government policy not to reopen the agreement under any conditions.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think that would be quite an unreasonable position to take. We think that the Free Trade Agreement represents quite an important step forward in our trade relations with the United States and that it holds tremendous potential for economic growth in Canada. We have never stated that it is perfect. I think it is only prudent to add the qualifier that Mr. Crosbie has added to our position; namely, that we would assess any suggestions for modifications to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement in the light of the advantages such suggestions would bring to Canada. The only person in a position of leadership in Canada who has suggested that the whole treaty should be reopened is my honourable friend's leader, Mr. Chretien.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I am going to face with stony silence the last remark of the minister and simply press him to realize that if the government is holding out the possibility that the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement could be reopened under any conditions at all, which the minister is now doing in adopting the words of Mr. Crosbie, if it is "to our advantage", then notice should be given specifically to important elements in our business community that their interests may be up for negotiation, because there is no negotiation without tradeoff. If some things are offered to our advantage then some other things may be offered to our disadvantage. There is no one-way win in any of these negotiations. For example, if intellectual property rights will be the subject of discussions in a trilateral way and end up as the subject of possible amendments in the Canada-U.S. arrangement, then I think the government should be warned that it should consult very carefully and openly with effective business and public interests in this country.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend is making an astounding leap in his argumentation. In my first sentence in reply to his first question, I told him that the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is not on the table in these talks, that it is not being negotiated, that there is no question of tradeoffs, and so forth.

There are also multilateral negotiations going on at the GATT. I believe intellectual property rights have come up at those negotiations. Is he suggesting that we should refuse to discuss them in that forum?

We are in the Canada-U.S.-Mexico talks to protect our own interests, to help open a tremendous market for Canadian products, to create economic opportunity here at home, and to achieve all the objectives that the honourable senator knows full well are totally possible in a more liberalized trading environment. We have no proposal to reopen the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, but it is always prudent in a matter of this kind to express the qualifier that Mr. Crosbie has sensibly expressed.

PROPOSED TRILATERAL AGREEMENT—POSSIBLE NEGATIVE EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that Statistics Canada recently published the sad fact that, since the implementation of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement on January 1, 1989, 200,000 jobs have been lost in Canada, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us whether the federal government has studied the possible negative effects of a trilateral trade agreement between Canada, the United States and Mexico?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, Senator Haidasz was perhaps not present yesterday when we had an exchange in this house concerning the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and the impact of that agreement on the Canadian economy. I may say, in parenthesis, that my friend could study, with profit, the statements made recently by another forum to the effect that the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement had resulted in a considerable increase in investment by Canadian companies in this country with the intention of taking advantage of the increased opportunities created by the FTA.

As for what he calls the negative impacts of a trilateral trade agreement, I can only tell him that in any liberalization of trade there is, as he knows, always a certain amount of adjustment to be made in all of the economies concerned; but our studies and consideration of the question leads us firmly and unequivocally to the conclusion that the advantages of a trilateral trade agreement vastly outweigh whatever adjustments or disadvantages might occur in some sectors of the economy.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would repeat that since January 1, 1989, unemployment has increased every year, and last week we were told that the unemployment rate in this country had reached 10.5 per cent. It is obvious that many Canadians are out of work. It is also a fact that a record number of companies have gone bankrupt and that others have left Canada.

Can the Leader of the Government tell us what the Canadian government will do to stop this haemorrhage, this tragedy of unemployment, bankruptcies and Canadian companies folding up or going south?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator cites the unemployment figures in the country, but he is wrong to attribute those statistics to the Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

As I indicated in an exchange here yesterday, some of the layoffs that various honourable senators and other critics of the Free Trade Agreement have attributed to the Free Trade Agreement turn out to be in sectors of the economy that are not covered by the Free Trade Agreement. The honourable senator should really analyze the situation a bit more rigorously before making general statements of that kind.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I am not blaming everything that has gone wrong in the Canadian economy on the FTA, which came into effect on January 1, 1989. However, the minister cannot deny the fact that many jobs have been lost. Statistics Canada says that 200,000 jobs have been lost since January 1, 1989, and that the unemployment rate is 10.5 per cent nationally.

What is this government doing to save the jobs of Canadians and to save Canadian companies from going under?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think it is proper to examine the economic policies of the present government since it took office and the results of those policies. If the honourable senator does so objectively, he will find that since this government took office something like 1.3 million new jobs have been created in Canada. He should not, therefore, focus, to the exclusion of everything else, on the recession in which we find ourselves at the moment.

If he examines the analyses that have been done by various think-tanks and economic commentators, in particular the Conference Board of Canada report that came out in the last day or so, he will see that they are at one with the projections made by Mr. Wilson in his budget last month to the effect that Canada will be coming out of this recession by the summer of 1991.

[Senator Murray.]

FEDERAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

EFFECT ON AFFORDABLE HOUSING IN TORONTO— REALLOCATION OF OLYMPIC GAMES' FUNDS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government.

Last week the Mayor of Toronto, Art Eggleton, brought to the attention of the City Council and the people of Metropolitan Toronto the grave shortage in affordable housing in Toronto and the effect of the cutbacks to the provinces with respect to federal fiscal arrangements. Would the federal government consider giving the city of Toronto the money that was earmarked for the Olympic Games to help that city provide affordable housing for the homeless people of that city?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am sure that money is already spoken for.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers, one to a question asked by Senator Olson on March 25 regarding interim financing for grain producers, and the other in reply to Senator Buckwold's question of March 26 regarding the use of GST revenues to reduce the national debt. I would ask that these answers be printed as part of today's proceedings, and I have duplicate answers for distribution to the senators.

AGRICULTURE

INTERIM FINANCING FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the first delayed answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on March 25, 1991, by the Honourable H.A. Olson regarding Agriculture—Interim Financing for Grain Producers.

> The Minister of Grains and Oilseeds announced on March 27, 1991, a $158 million interim payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act.
> The interim payment is for the 1990/91 crop year, which ends July 31. Producers who contributed maximum individual levy during the past two completed years will receive about $2,545. The average payment is expected to be about $1,200. The final payment will be issued in November 1991.
> This interim payment is made possible by an amendment to the Act in 1985. By province, it is estimated that the interim payout will be shared by participants as follows:

Manitoba	$27.5 million (in 23,700 cheques)
Saskatchewan	$80.5 million (in 67,000 cheques)
Alberta	$49 million (in 44,400 cheques)
B.C. & others	$1 million (in 1,300 cheques)

> The Western Grain Stabilization Program (WGSP) is jointly funded by farmers and the federal government. A payment is triggered under the program when net cash flow from grain, oilseed and eligible special crop sales falls below the average of the past five years.

The WGSP will end effective July 31, 1991, and be replaced by two new safety net programs. The Gross Revenue Insurance Plan (GRIP) is available through provincial crop insurance agencies. The Net Income Stabilization Account (NISA) is being administered by the federal government and will be applicable to the 1990 taxation year in participating provinces.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

USE OF REVENUES TO REDUCE NATIONAL DEBT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on March 26, 1991, by the Honourable Sidney Buckwold regarding Goods and Services Tax—Use of Revenues to Reduce National Debt.

(The answer follows:)

The Government in establishing the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund, has gone considerably farther than what was suggested by Senator Lawson in his proposed amendment to Bill C-62. Senator Lawson had suggested that any surplus revenue, that is revenue in excess of $21 billion, be applied to the reduction of the federal debt.

The Government is proposing that all Goods and Services Tax revenues, net of the rebate to lower-income Canadians and the applicable credits, be allocated to a special fund, called the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund. This Fund will also receive the net proceeds from privatization and debt contributions made by the general public. Public debt charges will be the only expenditure allocated to this Fund.

This means that all revenues collected from the Goods and Services Tax will be allocated to this fund, not just that amount in excess of what would have been collected under the manufacturers' sales tax. This will provide Canadians with the assurance that all revenues from the Goods and Services Tax will go directly to the payment of the interest on the public debt and therefore to deficit and debt reduction. By allocating all revenues to the Fund, none of the Goods and Services Tax revenues can be used to fund new program spending.

As noted in the February 1991 budget, beyond 1991-92, total budgetary revenues excluding the Goods and Services Tax will be sufficient not only to finance all of the program spending but also to contribute to deficit and debt reduction. Furthermore, the government has put in place a structure of revenues and program spending which will result in this surplus, between revenues excluding the Goods and Services Tax and program spending, growing over time. In 1991-92, there will be a shortfall of $3.7 billion which will have to be borrowed. (Copy of Summary Statement of Transactions from February 1991 budget attached)

The establishment of the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund, along with the proposal to legislate spending limits, will ensure that program spending will be tightly controlled over the next five years. In addition, these two initiatives will provide the assurance that the Goods and Services Tax will not be used to finance higher-than-projected or new program spending.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF TRANSACTIONS:

THE SENATE

DELAY IN RESPONSE TO WRITTEN QUESTION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable Senator Doody, I notice that you have given answers to questions asked on March 25 and 26. I put down a written question much earlier than that and I still have not received an answer. What is going on?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I tried to get the answer, senator, but it has not yet reached me. As soon as it does, I will make it available.

[Senator Doody.]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SEVENTY-FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Seventy-Fifth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Senator's secretaries), presented on April 9, 1991.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THE BUDGET, 1991

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the Budget statement made by the Minister of Finance on February 26, 1991.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, this order stands in the name of Senator Frith; but he has suggested that if any other senator wishes to take part in this debate, he or she should proceed.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I am pleased to have this opportunity, raised by Senator Olson, to discuss the recent budget of the Minister of Finance. Honourable senators will be aware from Question Period in the last few days that this is a subject very much on everyone's mind at this particular juncture. The financial features of the budget are that the budgetary revenue will be in the neighbourhood of $121 billion, $108 billion of which will be allocated to program spending, leaving an operating surplus, prior to the servicing of public debt, of some $13 billion. The public debt charges are estimated to be $43 billion, so there will be a deficit of $30 billion in 1991-92, which will be offset by non-budgetary transactions of $6 billion, which will leave a financial requirement for the government of $24 billion, plus or minus the additions or subtractions from the Foreign Exchange Reserve Fund.

The government has set explicit targets for inflation for the first time. They have actually been set by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, which is an astonishing departure from policy in the past. Over the many years that I was chairman of the Finance Committee we discussed with the then government and governors of the Bank of Canada the possibility of establishing targets, and the possibility of giving us some norm on which we could judge the performance of monetary policy. Time and time again we were told that that was not possible because there were too many targets to be concerned with and to set a target at all might create a problem by virtue of its very existence.

That situation has now changed and changed dramatically. The Governor of the Bank of Canada has said that he will conduct monetary policy such that, by 1992, the inflation rate, as indicated by the Consumer Price Index, will only rise by 3 per cent. By 1994 that rate will be reduced to 2.5 per cent, and, by 1995, to 2 per cent. Not only does he propose to conduct monetary policy on that basis, he also has the joint cooperation of the Department of Finance.

It is true that the Governor is ultimately responsible to the Minister of Finance; but, as honourable senators know, that responsibility is of such a form that if he were to disagree with the Minister of Finance, which disagreement could not be resolved, the Governor would have to resign. Therefore, there is a great deal of independence between the Governor and the Minister of Finance. This independence is being narrowed by virtue of these targets where the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance have agreed that those targets for reducing inflation will be met by a combination of fiscal and monetary policy.

We shall see whether or not this will be effective. There are certain escape clauses in the plan; but, nonetheless, the commitment is there, and, whenever it is moved away from, they are required by policy to return to it. So we have a new era that is going to change the whole concept of monetary and fiscal policy, perhaps quite dramatically. I sincerely hope that they can live up to it, as I am sure do all honourable senators and Canadians.

The other aspect of the budget that has been emphasized by the Minister of Finance has been the growth of program spending—that is, all spending other than interest on the debt and non-budgetary transactions. In 1984-85, when this government came into power, 19.5 per cent of the gross domestic product was allotted to program spending. That was reduced to 16 per cent in 1990-91, and the proposal is to reduce it further to 14.5 per cent by 1995-96. To put that in another context, the growth in program spending between 1984-85 and 1990-91 was 3.7 per cent per year. It is true that in 1991-92 that growth will jump to 6.9 per cent, the reason being that we are in a harsh recession and greater outlays will have to be made for unemployment insurance, old age security, farm interventions and defence. The long-range target for the program spending is 3 per cent a year.

It will be interesting to see what is done. The government proposes to put legislative limits on programs for the growth of program spending similar to the targets that have been proposed for monetary policy and inflation by the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Also, the government proposes to reduce government spending. I will not go into the proposed ways, but the most salient is that federal government employees will be restricted to 3 per cent increase in wages per year for the next three years.

I am happy to note that the government has decided to channel all GST revenues into what they call a Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund. That was a matter of some concern to all senators during the debate on the GST. If I recall, my colleague Senator Lawson proposed an amendment that the revenue be used to reduce the public debt. I am pleased that the decision was made to create the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund, which would channel all those revenues and others toward those purposes.

Honourable senators, this year the deficit will be $30.5 billion. The public debt is $388 billion, and by the middle of the fiscal year it is estimated that it will rise to $400 billion.

● (1500)

The cost of servicing that debt will be $43 billion. What is important and what gets my attention is the financial requirements of this budget and the estimated requirements of future budgets, because this is a cornerstone of government policy right now. In 1984-1985 the financial requirements were $29.8 billion. By 1991 that figure had been reduced to $23.8 billion. It is proposed that in 1992-1993 that will drop to $14 billion.

In the following year it will drop to $5 billion, and by 1994-1995 the financial requirements will reverse and the income will be a plus instead of a minus of $1.5 billion.

The Minister of Finance has stated that the budget objective is to eliminate federal government borrowing from private capital markets. If he were to eliminate the government's financial requirements by 1994-1995, then a very important policy objective will have been accomplished.

What we are facing today is the reliance on foreign borrowings, and that is skewing our entire economic policy in the wrong direction. We have to raise domestic savings. The government again has committed itself to that. The government has said that it has to eliminate the government sector dis-saving; and that to which I have just referred, namely, of arriving at the $1.5 billion financial requirement surplus, would, in fact, do just that. Most of all, we have to—and the government again endorses this—reduce our reliance on foreign borrowings.

Honourable senators who yesterday were privileged to be in the Senate listened to Senator MacEachen's brilliant speech—and I underscore "brilliant" speech—on the reliance that is being placed on foreign borrowings in our budgetary transactions and how those borrowings are being used to finance government spending on consumption rather than on investment either by the government or by the private sector—more importantly the private sector. Senator MacEachen raised an issue—and, indeed, Senator Buckwold, when he asked his questions about the effect on interest rates, also raised an issue—which I think is very important that we address.

Let us look for a moment at our external position, as a country, vis-a-vis the U.S. Our long-term rates—that is, Canadian long-term bonds—as of this morning are at 9.7 per cent. U.S. long-term bonds, on the other, hand have an interest yield of 8.19 per cent. That is a spread in interest rates of 1.51 per cent between the long-term yields of the two countries.

It is interesting to note that long-term borrowings have a relevant tracking—not complete, but a relevant tracking—to the rate of inflation. It is also interesting to note that the spread of 1.5 per cent, or 151 basis points, between our long-term interest rates and the American long-term interest rates is close to the traditional spread.

It is also interesting to note that the monetary aggregate M-2, which largely tracks current output, in 1990 grew by 8.4 per cent. Now this is compared to a growth of 14 per cent in 1989. So one can see that economic activity is slowing. There is much evidence of this before our very eyes, but the fact of the matter is that the figures support the suggestion that there is a substantial reduction in economic activity.

Let us contrast long-term rates with short-term rates. The Canadian three-month treasury bill, as of this morning, is 9.53 per cent. The U.S. three-month treasury bill yields 5.60 per cent. That is a spread of 393 basis points, almost 4 per cent. It is interesting to note that M-1, which tracks the Bank of Canada control of monetary policy, has contracted by 1.8 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1990 as compared with the fourth quarter of 1989.

[Senator Everett.]

So what we have, as pointed out in short-term interest rates, in the spread between our interest rates and the American interest rates, and the performance of the monetary aggregate M-1, is the continuation of an extremely tight monetary policy by the central bank.

The fact of the matter is—and I do not need to tell honourable senators this—that we are in a recession—a very serious recession. I have listened to comments for the past six or eight months about how it will be a shallow recession. Well, it is not easy now, and there is a good chance that it will not be easy for the next few months. It will be very tough. We all know the figures—I do not have to go over them for senators—on the level of unemployment, the loss of jobs, and the loss of output. The other day I saw an article from the head of the social services department of the city of Toronto saying that the welfare outlays in that city are the worst in numbers of people involved since the 1930s.

Let us look at commodity prices, which are a good proxy for what is going on in the economy. They have fallen for the last five months. They are 5.2 per cent below their level of twelve months ago. There are some commodities now that are actually selling for less than their cost of production.

Honourable senators, our exchange rate today is 86.76 cents in terms of the American dollar. Ontario consumers are crossing the border at such a rate that it is estimated they are spending in the U.S. this year—that is, in 1991—$1 billion. This is the biggest province, but it is only one province, and consumers are spending $1 billion. We have all heard stories about the lineups of people at Blaine, Bellingham, and Buffalo to cross the border. This is turning into an avalanche, honourable senators, and don't think the Americans are not taking advantage of it.

I live in Winnipeg. Here is a paper I got the other day from a shopping centre in Minneapolis saying, "come on down." I would love to take the time to read it to you. It tells of marvelous bargains. The Americans are not foolish; they realize that at the present time they are developing a good market in luring Canadian consumers down to the northern part of the United States.

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: They are taking our money at par in Blaine and Bellingham.

Senator Everett: The honourable senator says they are taking Canadian money at par in Blaine and Bellingham.

• (1510)

Honourable senators are aware, from what they read, of the plight of export industries trying to compete today. It is not caused by the Free Trade Agreement. The Free Trade Agreement is going to cause adjustments, but I have no doubt in my mind that in the long-term the Free Trade Agreement will be good for Canada. The problem today is the difference in exchange rates between the two countries. I have talked to export industry after export industry and they are getting killed. The low cost of imports is making it very difficult for our manufacturers to compete against American imports for the retailer's dollar.

So we have a problem. We are in a recession and yet we are finding out that we are not competitive with our main trading partner, and that is what is important. Why do we have the problem? First, our productivity in Canada has been lagging that of the United States. Also, there are a number of government mandated costs. It may interest honourable senators to know that government outlays in Canada total 44 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product. Let us compare that to 36.9 per cent in the United States and 39.6 per cent for the average of the G-7 countries which would include Canada.

As I mentioned earlier, the cost of servicing our public debt is $43 billion a year. We have the problem, for example, of universality—a pretty major problem if we think about it. I wonder if honourable senators know that the estimated government payments for family allowances, unemployment insurance, Old Age Security and Canada Pension Plan to those not in need totalled $7 billion in 1985, the last year for which they have figures. I think one could assume that if it was $7 billion in 1985, it is somewhat higher today.

In addition, of course, we have these high short-term interest rates. Let me again remind honourable senators that in Canada short-term interest rates are 9.53 per cent as compared to the American rate of 5.60 per cent. What does that do? Well, it all comes together to make us uncompetitive with the Americans. But despite that we have a very high short-term interest rate and a very high dollar in terms of the American dollar. What does that suggest to you? The automatic suggestion is to lower the interest rates, thereby lowering the exchange rate. We must remember that the exchange rate today is 86.76 Canadian cents for one American dollar. It is at a discount, but that is up considerably from a much lower figure not very long ago.

One of the problems of lowering the exchange rate is, of course, importing some inflation from the other country; and we can get into what is called the "British disease"—that is, you lower the exchange rate, you import some inflation, and labour reacts to it by trying to offset the inflation by asking for higher wages. So you devalue again, and the process goes on and on. It has to be done very carefully and at a particular time. I suggest to honourable senators that the time when it can be done is now. I think there is a minimum risk of inflationary fallout today.

I read that the GST had added 2 per cent to the inflation rate. Well, it did that in the month of January, but that will be spread over the whole year. I suspect that at the end of the year, if there is no change in policy stance, the increase due to the GST will be lower than the 1.25 per cent that was predicted by the Minister of Finance. We have an opportunity now. In my judgment, this economy is in such a precarious state right now that we are not going to import inflation; we are in much greater danger of letting our economy get away from us and harming some of our basic industries and our financial muscle because of lack of sales.

We will have to make a choice. The discipline of the relatively high exchange rate is that in order to compete you have to get your costs down, which means that increases in labour rates, profit margins, costs of commodities, and so on and so forth, have to be reduced. That is essential and that is a good aspect of government policy. But do not let us forget that in Canada our government intervention, especially in the social field, is such that we have a cost involved that adds to our costs far greater than to the American costs. We have to make a policy decision. Do we want to reduce the cost of social services? If we do and we can increase our productivity by reducing our wage increases, by improving our plant, by investing, by taking lower profit margins, by buying our commodities better, then we have to decide how much we want to spend on the landing nets of society. I for one would be loath to give up those landing nets. I think they are worthwhile in our society. I happen to be personally opposed to the concept of universality for the reasons I gave earlier, but the fact of the matter is that we can be proud of Canada's social programs. However, if we are going to have them, we will have to pay the price through a lower exchange rate. That is the option, and it seems to me that in the present recessionary climate the opportunity exists right now to lower short-term interest rates and the exchange rate in terms of the American dollar. We have the foreign exchange reserves today to protect against a run. I might say that lower interest rates alone will have a dramatic affect on the servicing of our public debt. A good percentage of our public debt is in short-term paper and the reduction in the cost of servicing that debt would be quite dramatic as interest rates reduce.

To follow on from where Senator MacEachen left off yesterday, and triggered by Senator Buckwold's question, I have no doubt in my mind that the Canadian dollar is overvalued, that it must come down, in my judgment, by at least ten cents. We cannot cure the problem just by lowering the exchange rate. We will have to be more productive, we will have to be able to compete with the Americans on terms of our costs; but if we want to maintain the services that we have, in my judgment we are not going to be able to do it at today's exchange rate. We must now, as a matter of policy, lower the interest rates. That will involve a more expansive monetary policy, an increase in the aggregate, but in the present recessionary climate we can do it and I think the fallout from it would be very beneficial to this economy. The failure to do it now, I am sure, will put us in a very difficult position, not only with regard to the problem that exists today but that which will exist as an ongoing legacy in the future.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

EIGHTY-FOURTH INTER-PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE, PUNTA DEL ESTE, URUGUAY

Hon. Joan Neiman rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, March 26, 1991:

That she will call the attention of the Senate to the Eighty-Fourth Inter-Parliamentary Conference, held in Punta Del Este, Uruguay, from October 15 to 20, 1990.

She said: Honourable senators, I apologize for asking you to be patient for another 20 minutes or so, but the requirements of our Inter-Parliamentary Union procedures are such that I have to get on record this speech I am about to make so that it can be reported to headquarters in Geneva. I will try not to detain honourable senators too long.

I would like to present to the house the report of the Canadian Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union for the eighty- fourth conference held in Punta Del Este, Uruguay from October 15 to 20, 1990, on behalf of the chairman of the Canadian group, Senator Nurgitz, who is unable to be present today.

It was very fitting that in a year which saw Canada join the Organization of American States that parliamentarians had an opportunity to attend a conference in one of the countries of South America. Uruguay is a country which is consolidating a return to the country's democratic values and institutions following the military dictatorship of 1973 to 1985. Although the country's economy grew steadily during the 1980s, it has stagnated during the past few years. Uruguay has not been traditionally a major trading partner of Canada, but recently the Canadian government moved the South American office of International Development and Research Centre to Montevideo, the capital of Uruguay.

Before leaving Canada, the delegates were briefed by a number of officials from External Affairs and International Trade Canada, the Canadian International Development Agency and the Department of Secretary of State. The Research Branch of the Library of Parliament prepared a number of papers.

Upon our arrival in Punta Del Este we were also briefed by his excellency Clayton Bullis, our ambassador to Argentina, who is accredited to Uruguay, about the current political and economic situation of that country.

Just before the opening of each conference the women delegates hold a meeting to discuss ways of involving more women in the work of the Union by increasing their numbers on the delegation and their representation on various committees. On this occasion Mrs. Sheila Finestone of the House of Commons and I were the only women delegates with the Canadian group.

On a personal note, I want to mention how much progress women parliamentarians have made at the IPU in recent years. When I first started to attend IPU conferences in the mid-1970s there was only a handful of women delegates, and none served on any executive positions. At Punta Del Este 19 per cent of the delegates were women, and at present there are three women on the executive committee and a few women serving as chairpersons or vice-chairpersons.

At their meetings the women parliamentarians also consider the subjects on the agenda of the full conference. The Canadian delegation presented a draft text on one of the items in which it was especially interested, literacy and education, which served as a working document for the draft resolution presented on behalf of women parliamentarians.

"Eliminating colonialism and its consequences by strengthening cooperation between developed and developing countries and exploring different models of regional cooperation" was the first topic on the conference agenda. This has been an ongoing subject of debate in the Union for years, but since the free elections in Namibia the number of persons still under colonial powers has decreased substantially. Thus, the committee on non-self-governing territories and ethnic questions has changed its focus to try to effect improvements in north-south relations.

The Canadian group submitted both a memorandum and a draft resolution and participated in the plenary debate. Mrs. Sheila Finestone was selected to chair the drafting committee which is usually quite contentious and difficult. She was obviously a very capable and resolute chairperson since, for the first time in the history of the IPU, the draft resolution on decolonization was adopted by consensus on the final plenary.

The second topic on the conference agenda was "Literacy and education as essential factors in the liberation of women and men to promote their participation in democratic life and as necessary instruments for development." As I mentioned earlier, the Canadian group assisted in the preparation of the draft resolution presented by the women parliamentarians. In addition, it submitted a draft resolution and a memorandum, and one of our delegates spoke in the plenary debate. Sections of the Canadian resolutions were incorporated into the final text.

At each conference there is an opportunity to add to the agenda a supplementary item relating to some event which has occurred in the six months since the last conference. It will come as no surprise that this time the conference agreed to examine the situation in the Persian Gulf.

Richard Lopez, a member of the other place, participated in the debate. He pointed out that Canada had played an active role through its position on the United Nations Security Council in drafting and sponsoring the series of resolutions designed to put pressure on Iraq. Canada had made every effort to ensure that its people and corporations observed United Nations sanctions against Iraq and to ensure that other UN members did the same.

He also noted that Canada had dispatched two destroyers and a naval escort to monitor the implementation of sanctions and to deter further aggression. He stressed that the success of a non-military action to end Iraq's aggression against Kuwait depended on maintaining the collective will to enforce sanctions. He concluded by expressing the hope that all nations represented at the conference have the necessary resolve to maintain their compliance with sanctions until all foreign nationals have been released by Iraq and Iraq had withdrawn from Kuwait.

The text of the resolution approved in plenary reflected many of the positions taken by Canada. Subsequent events have overtaken and overshadowed the views expressed at that conference last October. The IPU and other interested organizations—most importantly the United Nations—now have the challenge of finding, expressing and implementing the political mechanisms and accommodations which have the best chance of bringing peace and stability to the Middle East.

Occasionally a conference also adds an emergency supplementary item to the agenda when a situation of grave importance occurs immediately before or during a conference. The violence which had just occurred in Jerusalem on October 10, 1990, when 20 Palestinians were killed and more than 150 persons injured by Israeli security forces, was deemed to be of such importance.

The draft resolution expressed alarm at what had taken place, condemned the acts of violence, and called upon Israel to abide scrupulously by its legal obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention. The draft resolution was adopted by consensus, with several explanations of votes.

I know that a number of our honourable colleagues are interested in the CSCE process, which is the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. Traditionally this process has provided the main forum for discussion between the 35 members of the East and West blocs. In addition to the regular CSCE meetings, attended by governments of countries represented at the IPU, every three years there has been an inter-Parliamentary CSCE conference. The next one will be held in July 1991 in Vienna when changes in its format and structure to recognize the changes still taking place in Europe will be discussed.

In his report to you on the Nicosia IPU conference held last April, Senator Nurgitz mentioned a planning meeting in Nicosia which he co-chaired regarding the World Summit on Children. That meeting, which was co-chaired by our Prime Minister and the president of Mali, took place in New York in September 1990. A resolution, co-sponsored by Pakistan and Canada and adopted by consensus at the summit, called on governments to implement fully and quickly the major global commitments agreed to in the Declaration and World Plan of Action on the Summit, especially national strategies for child survival and development and the early ratification and implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and further to ensure that adequate financial resources are available for these purposes, and to establish appropriate national mechanisms to monitor the implementation. These are brave words which we can only hope will be followed by equally bold action.

I would now like to turn to the IPU activity in which I am most directly involved, namely, the Committee on the Human Rights of Parliamentarians which I chaired last year. Although I was chairman of the committee in Punta Del Este last October, this year Senator Solari Yrigoyen of Argentina and I have again switched places and he is the chairman and I am the vice-chairman. As I have explained to honourable senators several times just how the committee functions, I shall only mention that it conducts its meetings in camera and deals with each file on a confidential basis. It is only when the committee feels that it is not making any further progress dealing directly with the government against which there is a complaint, and that it requires the cooperation of other national groups to bring additional pressure, that it decides to report publicly and recommend to the council appropriate further action.

At this conference the Nordic groups made public their concern, which was shared by many other national groups, about the removal from office and subsequent treatment of the former Prime Minister of Pakistan, Benazir Bhutto, and especially the need for her trial, if and when it occurred, to be held in accordance with internationally accepted standards. The Human Rights Committee agreed to accept the case, then conducted a preliminary investigation with the cooperation of the Pakistan National Group. This type of monitoring role is often effective in discouraging actions which could give rise to formal complaints.

Seven in camera sittings were held in Punta Del Este, including eight hearings with delegations from countries concerned. The committee studied the individual situations of 50 serving or former parliamentarians from 19 countries. Six of these cases in four countries were before the committee for the first time. The committee was able to close five confidential files and four public cases, one in Chile and three in Sudan. Violations of 18 members or former members in six countries (Chile, Colombia, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Sudan and Turkey) were brought to the attention of the conference. During its 14 years of existence, the committee has investigated over 600 cases in some 50 countries. The majority have concerned parliamentarians imprisoned without charge or after improper trial. Many others simply "disappeared" and the authorities cannot or will not provide any explanation. Although the committee can record some comforting success statistics, I am personally appalled and often discouraged at the increasing number of horrifying cases which are brought to the committee's attention.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I want to remind you of the goals of the union: to work first for peace and cooperation among people; and, second, for the firm establishment of representative institutions. With the events in the Persian Gulf, all of us are especially aware of the need for peaceful resolution to situations of conflict. These events are a poignant reminder to us to make renewed efforts to solve differences diplomatically and not by force. So too, the events of the past year in Eastern Europe remind us of the need for assistance in the development of democratic institutions.

After discussions with our colleagues from the newly-emerging democracies of Eastern Europe, we are aware of the difficult road on which they are travelling and of the type of assistance they require in order to firmly establish representative institutions with multi-party systems.

Honourable senators, these IPU conferences provide a valuable opportunity for our legislators to meet their parliamentary colleagues from widely varying backgrounds and, through dialogue with them, to gain a better appreciation of the complex factors involved in resolving current conflicts and in establishing representative institutions. These conferences play a key role in enabling us to be good world citizens, knowledgeable about international events and committed to world peace and cooperation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would thank Senator Neiman for her interesting speech and ask her the following question: Can she tell me how many members of the IPU are multi-party countries and how many parliaments represented elected their members by universal suffrage?

I know the honourable senator may not have the precise answer today but an approximate answer would be appreciated.

Senator Neiman: That is a very difficult and awkward question for me at the moment. I would be happy to take it under advisement and try to get an answer for the honourable senator tomorrow. I know the numbers are not nearly as great as we would like them to be. However, I can give the honourable senator a more precise answer tomorrow because I do have some research material which would help me in that regard.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other honourable senator wishes to participate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated, subject, of course, to Senator Neiman's providing an answer to the question tomorrow.

Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present, on behalf of Senator Frith, two petitions comprising 46 names asking members of the Senate and members of the House of Commons to do everything possible to abolish the new goods and services tax and to demand that a general election be held immediately.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have the honour and the duty to present, on behalf of Senator Frith, two petitions coming from 41 residents from New Brunswick. These petitions come from the northeast region of New Brunswick, from localities such as Pokemouche, Tracadie, Shippigan, Évangéline, Sainte-Rose, Bas-Caraquet, Haut-Caraquet, Caraquet Centre, and so on. The petitioners are against the hardship caused by the goods and services tax.

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I would like to table a petition by 64 Quebecers, mostly from the LaSalle area, who are also against the goods and services tax, and who denounce all the bad effects of this nasty law. Thank you, honourable senators.

FARM INCOME PROTECTION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, presented the following report:

Thursday, April 11, 1991

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the honour to present its

EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-98, An Act authorizing agreements between the Government of Canada and the provinces to provide for protection for the income of producers of agricultural products and to enable the Government of Canada to take additional measures for that purpose, has in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, April 9, 1991, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

E. E. BAROOTES
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we give leave, or before we consider giving leave, perhaps the deputy leader would tell us about his program for the days ahead, when the Senate will be sitting and whether it will be sitting tomorrow, Monday or next week.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, perhaps I could shed some light on the matter. I do not believe we will be sitting tomorrow. I intend to bring forward on Monday next, under Notices of Motions, the notice of a motion to instruct the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to report before the end of next week on the motion respecting the appointment of the Privacy Commissioner.

Senator Hastings: Who is that?

Senator Murray: Beyond that, no decision has been made about prorogation. There is always that possibility and, as honourable senators are aware, the House of Commons is coming to the end of its agenda for the moment. I have every reason to believe that they will be adjourning in the next couple of days. We have two or three important matters at most that we would want to have disposed of, one being the resolution regarding the appointment of the Privacy Commissioner and the other the bill which has only this week gone to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance concerning amendments to the Financial Administration Act. I understand that committee met this morning and heard my colleague, Mr. Loiselle, President of the Treasury Board, and it has meetings scheduled for next week. So my concern is to ensure that the Senate is in a position to dispose of at least those two matters, which are on my mind now, so that the Prime Minister and the government would not be constrained in choosing a date for possible prorogation.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I take it, therefore, that the Senate will return on Monday, principally to deal with the motion which the Honourable the Leader of the Government will launch at that time, which is to deal with the appointment of the Privacy Commissioner. Insofar as the Financial Administration Act is concerned, that matter will be before the committee next week and would not require the presence of the Senate. In any event, the motion that is before the House of Commons calls for an adjournment, and it is pretty clear that the government does not intend to prorogue until close to the calling of the new session. In any event, in light of the fact that the Senate is not sitting tomorrow, we will agree to give leave for these two bills to proceed, and we will look forward to debating the motion that will come forward on Monday.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question. We were told that the bill with regard to the Financial Administration Act, which is a complicated bill because of the relationship between its clauses and the sections of the Financial Administration Act, would be available to be studied by senators up to the end of this month. I think that is on the record of the Senate. Certainly that is what some of us heard and that was the assumption on which we were planning our work. That was certainly the assumption that operated this morning in the work of the committee.

My question to the minister is this: Should the committee continue its work, or is it possible that the government will prorogue notwithstanding that this particular measure has not passed, with the thought that because the work has already been done the bill will be introduced in the next session and carried forward fairly quickly to enactment? Is that the plan?

Senator Murray: I do not think I can help the honourable senator very much, because, as I said, no decision has been made as to a date for possible prorogation. I am not in a position to read the Prime Minister's mind. I simply want the Senate to do the prudent thing. I am very happy with the work schedule that has already been set out by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Insofar as the question has been put to me about whether the members of the committee should continue or cease their work, I say to them: "continuez mes amis".

THIRD READING

Hon. Eileen Rossiter: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1991-92

TWENTY-SECOND REPORT OF THE STANDING COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE PRESENTED

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc has the honour to present the following report:

[Senator MacEachen.]

The Standing Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

TWENTY-SECOND REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-97, An Act to provide borrowing authority, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, March 27, 1990, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Simard, that the bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

[English]

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, on March 27 or 28 I expected to be speaking to the third reading of Bill C-97.

The Borrowing Authority Bill for 1990-91, Bill C-65, provided authority to borrow $25.5 billion. The Minister of Finance a year ago believed that the amount of $25.5 billion of borrowing authority would be more than enough to carry the government through March 31, 1991, and to leave a balance of up to $3 billion with which to begin the new fiscal year, 1991-92.

The Minister of Finance was wrong. The $25.5 billion of borrowing authority provided by Bill C-65 proved insufficient for 1909-91. The total was used up early in March. Even the $3 billion intended for the first part of 1991-92 was used up before the end of March 1991.

New senators may not know all about section 47 of the Financial Administration Act. That section permits the government to borrow on a short-term basis without the authorization of an ordinary borrowing authority bill. Section 47 states:

> Where it appears to the Governor in Council that the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be insufficient to meet > the disbursements lawfully authorized to be made from it, the Governor in Council may authorize the Minister to borrow, for a period not exceeding six months, an amount not exceeding such amount as the Governor in Council deems necessary to ensure that the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be sufficient to meet those disbursements.

Governments have been most reluctant to make use of section 47. First, debt management is destructive because too much of the debt is in the form of short-term instruments. Second, the interest on short-term instruments ordinarily is somewhat higher than on long-term bonds.

I note, honourable senators, that I had expected to be speaking on this motion over two weeks ago. I want to use a paragraph or two from what I had intended to say at that time.

I intended to say:

> Unless Bill C-97 goes forward for Royal Assent before April 1, the government's debt management program will be seriously disrupted. If the bill does not receive Royal Assent before the House of Commons returns from its Easter recess, two, perhaps three, bond issues will be impossible. Once again, the Senate must set aside its rules and practices to rescue the government.

Then I intended to say:

> Bill C-97 was read here the first time on Monday, March 25. Under the rules of the Senate, normally it could not be ready for Royal Assent before the House of Commons adjourns for Easter. The bill affords senators their first opportunity to debate a measure related to the budget brought down by Mr. Wilson toward the end of February.

Notwithstanding that it was the first opportunity for the Senate to consider budget matters, the Senate was being asked to waive its rules with regard to the enactment of this bill and to enact it very rapidly.

● (1420)

Once again, the Senate is being asked to rescue the government from the consequences of ministerial bungling. The minister was wrong in his financial forecast for 1991. Months ago, indeed in September 1990, he knew that all the borrowing authority would be used up and that there would be nothing left to finish the then current fiscal year, let alone to begin 1991-92. Nevertheless, on government motion, the House of Commons went on a prolonged adjournment for over two months covering late December, January and February. They came back for a few days in January to deal with the Gulf emergency, but they were away from Ottawa for over two months. I hope that honourable senators opposite will not regard what I am saying now as party partisan.

Senator Barootes: Heaven forbid! Who would think that?

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Stewart: It is a matter of relationship between senators on both sides of this chamber and the House of Commons. The House of Commons went away for two months. They needed the rest. Then, when they came back, the Minister of Finance gave his budget speech toward the end of February. In other words, they came back with only one month between the time of their resumption and the beginning of the new fiscal year. The government brought in the Borrowing Authority Bill, which was going to be needed immediately, but the bill did not reach us until Monday, March 25. What were senators on both sides expected to do? They were expected to have the bill through by the end of that week.

Again and again it is said that the relationship between the Senate and the House of Commons would be harmonized by a constitutional amendment comparable to the Parliament Act of 1911, thereby the Senate would be reined in. Under that act the Senate would have had one month in which to deal with Bill C-97. The truth of the matter is that the Senate, unlike the House of Lords in England, is so cooperative with the executive government with regard to these financial matters that ministers have come to take the Senate very lightly. The Leader of the Government in the House of Commons takes senators in the Senate extraordinarily lightly. Senators on both sides are supposed to be cooperative and come to the rescue regularly.

I was going to say on March 27 that "if the bill passes today, not one month but only four days will have elapsed between the first reading of the Senate and passage of the bill." That is what I was going to say. As it turned out, as Senator Doody reported to the Senate on March 27, as recorded in Hansard at page 5553, the government was not prepared to go forward. Let me quote what Senator Doody said at that time:

> Senator Stewart is absolutely correct. I did assure him that the government wanted this bill as quickly as possible. A meeting was arranged for him with members of the Department of Finance, who explained the urgency of the bill. For some reason—which I cannot explain and I do not understand—the government or the leadership in the other place did not make arrangements for the House of Commons to be present for Royal Assent tomorrow.

I gather there was also some problem with arranging for the presence at the National Finance Committee of a suitable minister. The House of Commons again went on holidays. The Senate adjourned and we came back this week. The National Finance Committee met last night. We were told that Senator Doody was wrong in what he told us with regard to the urgency of the bill. We were told that the understanding that had been given to me by the officials was wrong, that there was really no urgency at all. We were told that the government had not had to resort to section 47 of the Financial Administration Act except for a small part of an issue late in March. It did not need the borrowing authority.

In the speech I was going to make urging the passage of the bill before Easter I was going to say that if the bill does not receive Royal Assent before the House of Commons returns from its Easter recess, two, perhaps three, bond issues will be impossible. That is what I was led to believe, but last night the tune was very different. Only one issue was missed. When we asked whether there were serious consequences for the financial management, the minister told us that the consequences were not serious at all. Indeed, the minister urged the committee and the Senate to take all the time the senators thought they might need on this bill.

So Senator Doody was wrong. I was wrong. Why we were wrong remains to be explained. The credibility of people who mislead senators is in question. I do not think that honourable senators on either side of this house, who have the interest of this house at heart, should be prepared to tolerate this kind of treatment any longer.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not know whether to be angry or amused at the events that Senator Stewart described. We all recall our session on March 25 when the borrowing bill came from the other place. Senator Doody rose and asked for leave to have second reading on that Monday, which normally would require notice of two days. I declined to give leave but said that if the case could be made we would reconsider our position. In fact, in making that offer I said as follows.

> . . . it is my understanding that it is the intention of the government to bring back the House of Commons on April 8.

That happened.

> In that event, we would return on the following day. Therefore, would it not be appropriate to give the borrowing bill second reading, send it to the committee this week and deal with it finally on the week that we come back?

That is the schedule that is now being followed. When I made that proposal, Senator Doody again appealed in these words, after having stated that the government was now operating under section 47 which enables it to use short term borrowing only:

> That disrupts their mix of short-term, long-term and flexibility in terms of interest rates . . .

● (1430)

As Senator Doody and Senator Stewart confirmed, a meeting was arranged in which the case of the Department of Finance was heard. At that time the officials insisted upon the urgency of action, which convinced Senator Stewart and myself that we should waive all notice and provide for the passage of the bill because it was urgent—that is, it would be "disruptive," in the words of Senator Doody, to do otherwise. It would disturb the proper balance between short-term and long-term borrowing; it would create difficulty down the road; and it would destabilize the market.

I do not complain about the fact that the Royal Assent could not take place on the day that we expected had we passed the bill before Easter—in fact, I do not complain to Senator Doody at all on any of these points—but Royal Assent did not take place and we dealt with the bill last night. What I would have expected, in the light of the previous evidence given privately and in the Senate, is that the officials would have said, "Yes, it has been disruptive, as we said; it has embarrassed our borrowing plans and we confirm what we said previously." But what happened, as I understand it—not having had a chance to read this volume in detail—is that whatever urgency had existed had dissipated greatly in the meantime. The minister pulled the rug right from under Senator Doody when he said in his statement:

> I am not criticizing the Senate at all. I am not saying you have got to pass this tonight. I have not even suggested that.

This exchange took place on April 10, 1991. The minister went on to say:

> The sooner it is passed, the better . . . However, we are not asking you to rush or to hammer the bill through.

Senator Cools: You were there and you did not say a word.

Senator MacEachen: What is going on?

Senator Doody: Was that last night?

Senator MacEachen: Yes. That is what the minister said last night. That concerns the timing of the bill. He said there was no rush. I was tempted today to say, "Let us do the third reading next week and send it back to committee for another go," but being uncertain as to what mood I should adopt on the matter I gave leave. But last night Senator Stewart said:

> We are into April. You told us you have not done any borrowing in the new fiscal year using the authority of section 47 of the Financial Administration Act.

I understood the word was that there would be two or three. Senator Stewart asked:

> Has the fact that this bill has not yet become law had any considerable impact on the government's borrowing program? For example, has it had any considerable impact on the size of the borrowings that you will make in April?

The minister said, "The short answer to your question is that it is very minor."

Well, there it is. I think it would be very difficult in future to accept pleas of this kind that are backed up by appealing to our sense of citizenship and telling us that the taxpayers would be embarrassed, that the borrowing program would be disrupted, that the proper mix would be endangered and that it would create a difficult situation. It would have been better had the officials been consistent in their approach last night in order that we could believe what we hear in the future. However, what are we to think about this kind of situation? I believe that Senator Doody, when he said that it would be disruptive, firmly believed that it would be disruptive if it were not passed; but the minister said last night that, no, it was not disruptive, that it was very minor, "take your time, ladies and gentlemen; no rush, no rush from us." Therefore, let's pass it and get it out of our sight, for God's sake.

[Translation]

Senator Leblanc: Honourable senators, I want to emphasize to this Chamber that the National Finance Committee made every effort to give timely passage to the bill before the Easter adjournment. Even before the bill was referred, we had made tentative arrangements to hold a committee meeting on the evening of Wednesday, March 27 and were prepared to expedite the bill towards third reading and royal assent the following day. However, none of the three ministers with responsibility for the bill—the Minister of Finance and two ministers of State—was prepared to appear before the committee at that time. We accordingly arranged to meet the following morning, on Thursday, March 28, but could not obtain a minister for that meeting either. By then we knew that the House of Commons had not agreed to be present for a royal assent ceremony on the afternoon of March 28, so Bill C-97 could not become law immediately in any case. In other words, our strenuous efforts to co-operate in giving this bill speedy passage were to no avail through no fault of your committee's, but rather because the government was unwilling to make a minister available to the committee and unable to smooth the way towards royal assent. Any blame for the disruption of the government's borrowing program must therefore be placed squarely on the government itself.

I would like to make a few comments about the substance of Bill C-97 and in so doing to reiterate some of the points made by the Leader of the Opposition in his speech to this Chamber on March 27. As hon. senators are aware, the borrowing requirement of $26.4 billion consists of the government's net financial requirements for 1991-92 of $21.6 billion, plus $1.8 billion to cover exchange fund earnings and $3.0 billion as a reserve for contingencies. The financial requirements are of course closely related to the deficit, which, for the third year in a row, is estimated at $30.5 billion in 1991-92. When we look at the 1991 budget, we see that the public debt, which now amounts to some $388 billion, is expected to rise to $419 billion this year and to $476 billion in 1995-96. Given the government's track record of overly optimistic predictions, what reason is there to believe that the deficit and the debt will ever start to decrease?

The Main Estimates for 1991-92 are presently before the National Finance Committee for review. They indicate that the provisions for interest charges on the public debt, at $43.2 for 1991-92, is only 0.6 per cent higher than the forecast payments in 1990-91. Honourable senators will recall that interest rates in 1990 were much higher than the Minister of Finance predicted in his 1990 budget, and indeed the resulting high interest charges are the principal reason for the situation that the government now finds itself in, having exhausted its borrowing authority for 1990-91 before the end of the fiscal year. As well, the continuation of the high deficit was explicitly blamed by the government on the rapid increases in interest payments, which rose by 17.0 per cent in 1989-90 and 10.6 per cent in 1990-91. The Minister of Finance has also been claiming in his budgets of recent years that the government is controlling the growth of program spending, which it defines a spending on everything except interest payments on the public debt.

The government is now in the fortunate position of having to service its debt at a time of falling interest rates, and the provision for interest payments in the 1991-92 Estimates is therefore scarcely higher than the forecast for 1990-1991. Why then is the deficit expected to be $30.5 billion for the third year in a row? Again, the Main Estimates provide the answer. Proposed 1991-1992 program spending, far from being under control, is $115.8 billion, an increase of 6.9 per cent over 1990-1991. This compares to increases of 4.3 per cent in 1990-1991 and 4.4 per cent in 1989-1990. The budget announced an expenditure reduction of nearly $1.1 billion, which is not reflected in originally planned expenditures and reduces program spending to $114.7 billion. This still represents an increase of 5.9 per cent from last fiscal year. Part I of the Estimates states that the increase is the result of higher statutory payments for old age security and unemployment insurance. Increased unemployment insurance payments, of course, are caused directly by the high unemployment rates of the recession into which the government has plunged the country.

It seems that, when the government is managing its program expenditures fairly well, interest charges rise out of control while, when interest payments come down, it is only because we are in a recession, so program expenditures start ballooning upwards. The deficit and the government's financial requirements therefore end up at about the same levels. Year in and year out. This is the background to the borrowing authority that the government is asking Parliament to approve under Bill C-97.

Thank you, honourable senators.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
K1A 0A1

April 11, 1991

Mr. Speaker,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable William Alexander Stevenson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 11th day of April, 1991, at 4.00 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,

Judith LaRocque
Secretary to the Governor General

The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

NOTICE OF MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO REPORT

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Monday next, April 15, 1991, I will move that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be instructed to report no later than Friday, April 19, 1991, the motion respecting the appointment of the Privacy Commissioner.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g) moved:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday next, 15th April, 1991, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

APPEAL OF RULING—POSSIBLE REVOKATION OF AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON TRILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

The Minister of International Trade, Mr. Crosbie, is reported in the Globe and Mail today to have said that Canada's participation in any free trade agreement with the United States and Mexico would be endangered if the United States wins its controversial appeal of a recent ruling on Canadian pork imports. He went on to say that the U.S. appeal was an abuse of judicial procedures set up under the two-year-old Free Trade Agreement. He warned that a successful appeal could further erode dwindling support for the FTA in Canada and thereby threaten the government's recent decision to enter trilateral talks to forge a broader North American agreement that would include Mexico.

My question for the Leader of the Government is: Was the minister stating government policy? Is he hinting that the Free Trade Agreement might be revoked or reviewed; and, when he mentioned the recent decision of the Canadian government to enter the trilateral negotiations, does he mean that the government is not firm on its decision and that it is still contemplating committing itself to the trilateral negotiations?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my friend has based his question on a newspaper report attributing certain remarks to the Minister of International Trade. From there, the honourable senator has proceeded to suggest various alternative inferences that might be drawn from the statements supposedly made by Mr. Crosbie.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

• (1450)

The first step should be for me to verify with Mr. Crosbie the accuracy of those quotations to ascertain the context in which they were made. Having done that, I would be in a position to ask my colleague Mr. Crosbie, to let me have a report on the matter so that I can satisfy Senator Bosa and other members of the Senate on this quite important subject.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION BANK OF CANADA

UNDERTAKING TO ACCEPT GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE GUIDELINES—REQUEST FOR MONITORING AND REPORTING TO SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I have one delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Olson on March 26 regarding operating expenses of the Bank of Canada. I have a copy for Senator Olson. I would ask that the answer be printed as part of today's proceedings.

(The answer follows:)

> The Governor of the Bank of Canada stated on March 18, 1991, before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, that the Board of Directors of the Bank of Canada "will wish to ensure that the Bank's operations continue to conform with the broad guidelines of public policies".
> At its meeting of March 22, 1991, the Board of Directors of the Bank of Canada endorsed the above statement by the Governor. Additionally, the Board announced that it had "asked the management of the Bank of Canada to review its expenditure plans and to report back to the Board on any measures required to ensure that those plans will be in accord with the program of expenditure controls recently announced by the federal government and will conform with the program of wage restraint as it is being applied elsewhere in the federal public sector".
> Under the Bank of Canada Act, responsibility for the management of the Bank rests with its Board of Directors. This Board typically meets seven times a year. The Executive Committee of the Board holds a meeting every week that the Board itself does not meet.
> The Act requires the Bank to submit to the Minister of Finance a statement of its accounts along with the Governor's report within two months of the end of the financial year. The Act also requires the Minister to table a copy of the accounts and of the Governor's report before Parliament.
> As announced in the Budget, the government is not prepared to contemplate wage increases in the federal public sector beyond 3 per cent annually over the next three years. Crown corporations, including the Bank of Canada, are expected to implement wage restraint measures that are in keeping with the spirit of this commitment. The Governor of the Bank of Canada has signalled his support for such a program. The figures mentioned by the Honourable Senator, on the other hand, appear to refer to last year. In his Introductory Statement before the House Standing Committee on Finance on March 18, 1991, the Governor of the Bank of Canada gave a detailed explanation of the factors underlying salary increases at the Bank last year, and the Honourable Senator is referred to that statement.

The figure cited by Senator Olson (11 per cent) appears to be total expenses, not just wages and salaries, of the Bank of Canada in 1990. The Bank's total expenses, increased by 11.3 per cent in 1990. The statement of the Governor of the Bank, referred to above, provides details on the distribution of these expenses. The government's recently announced wage restraint program does not apply in retrospect. As noted in the first paragraph, the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Bank's Board have stated their support for this program.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

EIGHTY-FOURTH INTER-PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE, PUNTA DEL ESTE, URUGUAY

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have a somewhat inconclusive but informative answer to the question put to me yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate following my report on the IPU conference in Punta Del Este last October.

The Honourable Senator MacEachen asked me if I could tell him how many members of the IPU are multi-party countries and how many parliaments represented elected their members by universal suffrage. I consulted with Mr. Hucal, who is the assistant to the Canadian group of the IPU, and he reminded me that the IPU keeps at its headquarters a kind of record, called Chronicles of Parliamentry Elections and Developments, which tries to publish each year the latest developments from July 1 to June 30 of the following year. It records all the constitutional changes and elections that have taken place during that year. Unfortunately, the last one we have in our library is for the period ending June 30, 1989.

As honourable senators know, considerable change has taken place in many countries since then. As far as Mr. Hucal could tell at that point officially, of 113 countries that were members of IPU, 78 were characterized as being multi-party, 34 were single party, and one was called "other." That "other" happens to be the United Arab Emirates which really is operating under a feudal system and has no electoral system at all.

In addition, some of these countries are a little difficult to define, to pin down, or to characterize. For instance, the member country of Monaco has a constitution that provides for multi-parties, but never in its history has it had a multi-party system. The one party has governed since the constitution was recorded.

Mr. Hucal also consulted with our Department of External Affairs to see if he could obtain any other types of definitions or categories. He was told that things were constantly in flux, that everyone had a different definition. For instance, the U.S.S.R. is characterized as a multi-party system. Presumably there are some dissident parties there, but effectively for many years it has be governed by the Communist Party.

That is as close as I can come to providing an answer, Senator MacEachen, but your question has prompted me to suggest that it might be a good study for the IPU to try to define,more closely than we have in the past, these various categories of so-called electoral parties.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps the honourable senator would not mind if I asked another question. I understand perfectly as to why the chronicles are so shrouded in difficulty, but are these questions ever discussed at IPU or the Inter-Parliamentary Union? Do the members ever exchange and draw comparisons as to which parliamentarians taking the podium have faced the electorate and those who have not, or is it a "no-no" subject?

Senator Doody: Including Canadian senators.

Senator Neiman: It is not a subject that the IPU has been inclined to approach with any courage. I think it has followed the lead of the United Nations in that traditionally we have allowed everyone into the IPU so long as the country pays its dues or has done nothing really outrageous. The question has often come to mind when we speak of democratic countries and democratic institutions. As the honourable senator knows, during the past several years we could almost define a communist bloc country if it had the title "democratic" as part of its official name. So some of these words have lost their meaning. I think it is a subject that we should address.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable William Alexander Stevenson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Acting Speaker, the Honourable Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable William Alexander Stevenson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in his Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk of the Senate.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Parliament of Canada Act (Bill C-79, Chapter 20, 1991)

An Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act (Bill C-93, Chapter 21, 1991)

An Act authorizing agreements between the Government of Canada and the provinces to provide for protection for the income of producers of agricultural products and to enable the Government of Canada to take additional measures for that purpose (Bill C-98, Chapter 22, 1991)

An Act to provide borrowing authority (Bill C-97, Chapter 23, 1991)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, April 15, 1991, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, April 15, 1991

The Senate met at 2 p.m., Hon. Rhéal Bélisle, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have several petitions, all of them against the GST and asking that this tax of 7 per cent adopted by the government be abolished. They humbly ask senators and members of the House of Commons to do everything possible to abolish the new goods and services tax and demand that a general election be held immediately.

Honourable senators, I have today only one petition from the province of Saskatchewan. It is addressed to me from Saskatoon and Grant, although most of the petitioners are from Grant. This petition is completely filled with names. I also have 39 petitions from Quebec. Although most of these petitions are from Montreal, I note that a large number are from St.-Léonard. There are also some from La Durantaye.

I also have four petitions from Toronto and, in particular, one from Jamieson Avenue, Toronto, which is the street where Parkdale Collegiate is located, my high school alma mater. Some of the other petitions are from Grenoble and Don Mills.

All of these petitions are completely filled with petitoners' names.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

IT'S ALMOST TOO LATE—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

On Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I am so impressed with Senator Frith's presentation of petitions that I should like to inform the Senate that tomorrow I will start presenting petitions in this chamber on a daily basis. These petitions will relate to the 2,500 petitions that were sent out to ask the veterans of Canada to support the 12 recommendations contained in the report of the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, It's Almost Too Late. I will use Senator Frith's method and try to follow him each day.

Strangely enough, honourable senators, of the 2,500 petitions we sent out, over 600, which is more than 25 per cent, have been returned. This may well be a lesson to the companies that run these expensive research polls, who would probably be delighted to have a 25-per-cent return.

Apart from the 600 petitions, we have now received some 12,000 individual signatures or declarations of veterans groups, such as branches of the Legion and other veterans associations, commending the 12 recommendations of the Senate subcommittee and offering their support in our appeal to the government to implement those recommendations, which will help veterans at this late stage in the game.

Honourable senators, when the Presentation of Petitions is called, it is my intention to read some of the letters I have received from aged veterans who, if these recommendations were implemented, would receive the help they need and which they have been trying to get for the last 50 years.

I thank Senator Frith for giving me this idea. I will be presenting my petitions over the next few days.

● (1410)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, because Senator Marshall mentioned my name, I want to thank him for his intervention. Many senators I think will agree that this ancient, honourable and important right of citizens to address themselves directly to Parliament, was, until the GST came along, sadly underused.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: But now it is being used by you people over there, and abused!

Senator Frith: Of course, in the opinion of Senator Simard and many—

Senator Petten: Does he have an opinion?

Senator Frith: —of his colleagues—

Senator Simard: Yes.

Senator Frith: —it is an abuse. Notice the word chosen— it is an abuse for the people.

Senator Simard: You're abusing!

Senator Frith: I am not abusing anything. These are letters and petitions, directly addressed to me, asking me to present them to Parliament, as it was with the GST. Senator Simard thinks it is an abuse of our time to listen to the people. What a waste of our time to hear what the people have to say. What a waste of the taxpayers' money to allow us, in fact, to insist that we present, on their behalf, their views on legislation before them—especially on matters where they have to pay a tax that was imposed on them. It is an abuse, an abuse of Parliament, for them to ask us to present their views on the subject, and an abuse of Parliament, I suppose, by Senator Marshall. Is it an abuse for Senator Marshall to tell us what veterans think about legislation and other matters before us? Well, it may be an abuse of this institution to Senator Simard, but it is not an abuse as far as I am concerned, and I intend to use it. It is not an abuse to do so.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Simard: Honourable senators, on a point of order—

Senator Frith: Good, smoke them out! Now we're having a good time!.

Senator Simard: —Senator Frith wants to tell the world, after being away three weeks, that he is still in good shape, and that he has not changed his opinion, and he will not change his tactics. Of course Canadian citizens can make their views known through petitions.

Senator Frith: That is kind of you!

Senator Simard: That is a long tradition that I support.

Senator Frith: A little repentance is good for the sole.

Senator Simard: We know where you people are coming from, whether it is from the Liberal Party, from a Liberal Party convention, or what have you—anything partisan. You and Senator Hebert, you drum up business, you excite people, you agitate people, and you get them to send petitions. That is your business. That is what I call abuse of the system. We are looking forward to further debate and I for one am terribly please that Senator Frith is back in shape, so that he can continue to tell the world that you people can change anything, even in Opposition. You don't make amends! You abused the system when you were in power and you abuse the system now! Thank you.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I want to get one thing very clear on the record, namely, I did not drum up any business. All of these petitions were sent to me by people I do not know, and I did not incite them to do so. The second thing is to welcome Senator Simard's repentance.

Hon. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, on a point of order, this is Presentation of Petitions. It has nothing to do with the speeches we are getting from Senator Simard. If he is against people presenting petitions, let him put a motion before the Senate and debate the question. He is taking up our good time here and indulging his and our time with this foolish debate in the middle of presenting petitions. There is a place for presenting petitions and for presenting arguments. I suggest that he do so in the proper place and that he keep his seat in the meantime.

TRANSPORT

FERRY SERVICE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—INCREASE IN RATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate to see if there is anything he can do on behalf of the students of Prince Edward Island, who over the weekend came home to visit their parents and in order to get back to their universities and their schools had to pay twice the fare. They had to pay three fares to get home for the weekend on the CN ferries at Borden and Cape Tormentine. Will there be any rebate to those young students, who now have it hard enough since the payments by the federal government to universities have been cut and tuition fees are up? They had to pay three times to get across to visit their parents over the weekend. Can they get a rebate on one or two of those trips?

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I must confess that I am unaware of the circumstances described by Senator Bonnell. I shall ask my colleague, Mr. Lewis, the Minister of Transport, for a report.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, perhaps to make it a little clearer, the CNR ferries have fired about six people who sold tickets in Tormentine. They no longer sell tickets to people on the ferry. Apparently they can get over to Prince Edward Island free starting today, and then they are charged twice as much to get back. So Prince Edward Islanders have to pay twice what foreigners have to pay, because they have to pay twice as much to the get off the Island. These people paid to come over on the weekend, and to get back today they have to pay double the fare, which makes three fares to go back and forth. Perhaps the CN ferries can provide a rebate to those students who came home, and save them $5 or $10.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the situation is rather different with regard to Cape Breton. I have observed that one has to pay to get in, but one does not have to pay to get out.

Senator Bonnell: You have to pay to get out if you are an Islander. You cannot get off the Island without paying twice as much. We pay twice as much for everything on Prince Edward Island and I suspect they will do the same thing to Newfoundland and make them pay twice as much as well. Everyone else in Canada can go from one province to the other free, drive on the big Trans-Canada Highway with three or four lanes and it costs them nothing. We on Prince Edward Island have to pay double.

While I am on my feet, at the other end of Prince Edward Island we have a ferry from Pictou, Nova Scotia to Caribou, Nova Scotia to Wood Island. We have had three ministers of transport come down there since 1984 to promise us a new ferry. We had one in 1984, another in 1988, and another one last year. We have never received any of those new ferries. They have not even drawn up the plans yet. I suspect by 1992 we will get another promise. Can the Minister find out from the Minister of Transport if and when the plans will be drawn up, what they will look like, and where the construction is liable to be, in Quebec, Pictou or Halifax, or what shipyard?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can tell my honourable friend, without having to refer back to Mr. Lewis, that a decision on that matter is imminent.

Senator Bonnell: What does "imminent" mean—a month, a day, a week or today?

Senator Murray: Very soon.

Senator Bonnell: Does "very soon" mean before we go on to the next order of business or does it mean today? Will you be making the announcement or will the minister be making it?

Senator Murray: The government will be making it, honourable senators.

ELIMINATION OF TOXIC WASTE—STATUS OF FEDERAL PROGRAM

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, a federal PCB destruction program was announced two and a half years ago by the then Minister of the Environment, the Honourable Tom MacMillan, in response to the fire at St-Basile-Le-Grand. This plan contained a commitment to insure that no low level PCB remain in federal sites by the fall of 1989. At that time there were 112 tonnes of contaminated mineral oil in the federal inventory. Two and a half years later there are 131 tonnes in inventory. What progress is the government making towards ridding the country of this contaminated mineral oil?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there is a delayed answer that Senator Doody will be tabling later today concerning a question raised by the honourable senator some months ago—a rather detailed question having to do with elimination of a toxic waste incinerator at St-Basil-Le-Grand.

● (1420)

If this is a question that he is now putting, it will be answered under delayed answers later this afternoon.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

ELIMINATION OF TOXIC WASTE—STATUS OF FEDERAL PROGRAM

Senator Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government: Honourable senators, strangly enough, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Kenny on October 26 regarding elimination of toxic waste incinerator St-Basile-Le-Grand. I hope it contains the information the honourable senator is looking for. In any event, I have a copy for him. He can look at it, and if it not does contain all the information I will have another run at it. In the meantime, I ask that the answer be printed as part of today's proceedings.

In September 1988, after the PCB fire at St-Basile-Le-Grand, the federal Minister of the Environment announced the Federal PCB Destruction Program. The goal of the program was to destroy all PCB wastes under federal jurisdiction, by leasing two incinerators, one to be located in Goose Bay, and a second in central Canada. These incinerators were to be used to destroy only PCB wastes, not other toxic wastes.

A transportable incinerator was located at Goose Bay, Labrador, and over the winter and spring of 1990, it successfully destroyed 47 per cent (by weight) of the federal PCB inventory. The project was completed in August 1990.

In October 1989, the federal Minister of the Environment reaffirmed the government's commitment to offer mobile PCB destruction facilities, on a cost-recovery basis, to regions in Canada that have sufficient volumes of PCB wastes and require federal assistance.

On January 18, 1991, Environment Québec (MENVIQ) released a series of three communiqués announcing its strategy to destroy PCB wastes under provincial jurisdiction. The communiqués signal Québec's intention, after consultation with municipalities and the public, to identify sites for PCB destruction equipment and to evaluate technological options for PCB destruction equipment. Immediate action is aimed at eliminating PCBs under provincial jurisdiction in St-Basile-Le-Grand, Baie Comeau, Shawinigan-Sud, Saint Lazare and Pointe-aux-Trembles, by the end of 1993.

Environment Canada is now working with MENVIQ and Hydro Québec to develop a Memorandum of Understanding, agreeing to participate in a co-operative program to site mobile PCB destruction facilities in Québec so that remaining PCB wastes will be destroyed. Such an agreement may be ready for Ministers' signatures by late spring or early summer.

On other fronts, DOE is working with provincial partners and communities to site mobile PCB destruction facilities in Atlantic Canada, and in the vicinity of London, Ontario. As part of the Green Plan, the federal government has made clear its intention to destroy all PCBs under federal jurisdiction by 1996 by siting destruction facilities in Atlantic Canada, Québec and Ontario.

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO REPORT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations), pursuant to notice of Thursday, April 11, 1991, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be instructed to report no later than Friday, April 19, 1991, the motion respecting the appointment of the Privacy Commissioner.

He said: Honourable senators, I will take no more than a few minutes of your time with the introduction of this matter this afternoon, I assure you at the outset that it is not in any contentious or confrontational spirit that I embark upon this motion. Rather it is with a view to ensuring that the Senate will have the opportunity to decide on the appointment of Mr. Bruce Phillips as Privacy Commissioner, an opportunity which it appears might otherwise be denied this chamber because of the refusal of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to report.

Senator Frith: Refusal. Now you are getting confrontational right there. If you had not used the word refusal, we might have believed you.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, just for the record, let me quote the relevant statute under which this appointment is proposed. It is section 53(1) of the Privacy Act.

> The Governor in Council shall by commission under the Great Seal appoint a Privacy Commissioner after approval of the appointment by resolution of the Senate and House of Commons.

The resolution to appoint Mr. Bruce Phillips was moved in this place by the Deputy Leader of the Government on June 6, 1990. There was a debate on the matter on June 27th, a debate in which Senator Pitfield, Senator MacDonald (Halifax) and I participated.

On motion of Senator Frith, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, a resolution was carried to refer this matter to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee. Meanwhile, the proposed appointment of Mr. Bruce Phillips had been approved by the House of Commons on June 7,1990.

Senator Frith: On division and under closure.

Senator Murray: On division as the honourable senator observes. He have also says it was done under closure, but, in any event, it was approved by the House of Commons en bonne et due forme.

The committee of the Senate has now had this resolution before it for almost ten months. It would appear to me, and I think to most reasonable people, that that is sufficient time to have ventilated all the issues that needed to be considered with regard to this matter.

I should say for the record that the committee has met three times, most recently on April 10 last. They have heard if I am not mistaken from at least three witnesses, but they have not yet reported.

Honourable senators will be aware, because we had a discussion on this point the other day, that Parliament is faced with the possibility of a prorogation of this session within the next little while. Under the circumstances, it seems to me that it is incumbent upon the Senate to dipose, one way or the other, of business that has been before us a sufficient length of time to be fully considered.

At the meeting of the committee on Wednesday last, our friend Senator Doyle attempted to bring matters to a head. A motion moved by him to approve the appointment of Mr. Bruce Phillips as Privacy Commissioner was defeated by by the majority of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, but, having done that, the majority on the committee would not authorize the chairman, Senator Nurgitz to make a negative report, or indeed any report at all, to the Senate in order that the Senate, in accordance with our practices, could decide.

Well, without a report from the committee it appears as if the Senate cannot decide on the proposed appointment of Mr. Phillips, and, of course, if the majority on the committee continues to refuse to report, the resolution would die at prorogation and the government would have to retrace its steps in the House of Commons and would have to start all over again.

Senator Frith: And do it right this time.

Senator Murray: My honourable friend says, "do it right." That is a issue that we did discuss when the matter was debated here last June, was it, and which we can discuss again. The committee may wish to offer some observations on that issue when it reports.

• (1430)

It seems more than possible—it seems likely—that indeed it is the strategy of the majority on the committee to delay the matter so that it will be overtaken by prorogation and the Senate will not have had an opportunity in this session to pronounce upon it. Indeed an assistant to the Leader of the Opposition evoked just that possibility in an interview with Southam News carried in the Ottawa Citizen last Thursday.

Honourable senators, I do not think it is conducive to good relations between the houses of Parliament for us to force the House of Commons to deal a second time with a resolution because we or one of our committees had stalled it. My motion would allow the committee to have additional meetings this week, to hear further witnesses if it wishes, and to give further consideration to the issues involved here, so long as it reports by Friday at the latest. My motion, of course, would allow for such further debate in the chamber as senators deem advisable and for a timely decision, which is all I ask of the house at this time.

Of course issues have been raised in the other place, and during the debate that we had here last June concerning the suitability of Mr. Bruce Phillips for this position and concerning also the process that had been followed in this case or should be followed in appointments of this kind, subject as they are to the prior approval of Parliament. I—and no doubt others here—am perfectly prepared to debate these issues here if given the opportunity, but first the committee which has been discussing these issues should report and give us the opportunity to debate and decide them.

Therefore, honourable senators, I ask for your support for this motion which would instruct the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee to report by the end of this week on this matter which was referred to it ten months ago so that we may have an opportunity for an orderly and timely debate and a decision on the matter.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, only two petitions came in today. One is fully signed and is from Chicoutimi. The petitioners are humbly petitioning in the same manner as I put on the record yesterday.

The other petition is from Mayflower Drive, Agincourt, and it has only two names.

That is all I have today, honourable senators.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, yesterday I advised the Senate that I would be starting to present petitions from the veterans of Canada and indicated that we had over 60O petitions returned, out of 2,500, containing some 12,000 signatures.

I also explained that in some cases a branch of The Royal Canadian Legion, with so many members, made a declaration on behalf of the whole membership. To explain why we do not have the 367 signatures from that branch, there is a resolution adopted by the membership of the branch which states:

> Therefore Be It Resolved that the branch secretary forward to the Senate of Canada-Attention Hon. Jack Marshall, a listing of our current nominal roll of voting members which is to act as our endorsement of the petition.

That resolution was passed by the R.L. Beattie Branch, Ontario Branch 224 of the Royal Canadian Legion.

I have selected some petitions at random and I will read a few of them today.

Honourable senators, I have one here from an RCAF ex-prisoner- of-war, who resides in Ottawa, Ontario. I also have one from a resident of Kanata, Ontario. I have one from a resident of Terrebonne, Quebec. I have another which contains the names of 13 veterans who reside in Hemmingford, Quebec.

(Names of petitioners read)

I have two petitions from Kamouraska, Quebec.

(Names of petitioners read)

I have another petition from a resident of Toronto, Ontario, a member of the World War I Royal Flying Corps. I have one from a veteran who moved to Scottsdale, Arizona.

Other petitions contain signatures of residents of Ottawa, Ontario, and a veteran who served in both wars, 1917 to 1919 in the RFC-RAF and 1939 to 1946 in the RCAF.

Another petition contains the signature of a veteran who served in Iceland, France, Belgium, Holland and Germany, who enlisted in 1939 and was discharged in 1945.

Another petition contains the name of a veteran from New Brunswick; another contains the names of 13 veterans from Buckingham, and Sherbrooke, Quebec; another petition contains the names of 9 veterans from Sintaluta, Saskatchewan; and another petition contains 10 names from Scotia Branch Number 25, Royal Canadian Legion, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

There are also petitions from veterans who reside in Woodstock, New Brunswick, and Parry Sound, Ontario.

(Names of petitioners read)

Another petition comes from the Rideau Branch of the Royal Canadian Legion, Branch 542. All signees are veterans or associate members of the branch and reside in Newboro or Westport, Ontario. Other petitions come from St. Catharines and other parts of Ontario.

Those are the petitions I selected at random this morning. They came in on March 15. I will be continuing tomorrow, and may get some help from the deputy chairman of the committee, Senator Bonnell.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

THE HONOURABLE GEORGE JOHNSON,
LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF MANITOBA

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, may I welcome, on your behalf, our distinguished visitor, the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba, the Honourable George Johnson.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): If I may, Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is appropriate to note that His Honour is himself a distinguished former parliamentarian, having served with our friend Senator Roblin in the Government and Legislature of Manitoba, and that His Honour is also the father of a distinguished parliamentarian, our colleague, Senator Janis Johnson.

QUESTION PERIOD

ELIMINATION OF TOXIC WASTE—STATUS OF FEDERAL PROGRAM

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, yesterday I received a delayed answer to a question I asked on October 26, 1990. However, the response I received from Senator Doody did not really answer my question. There were six paragraphs that were very helpful—and I refer to page 5613 of Hansard—but they did not respond to the question.

The question to which I was looking for an answer was the following: When will the second PCB incinerator promised by the government in September 1988 be operational? That question, sir, is still outstanding.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): In that case I shall take the question as notice and try to obtain a reply for the honourable senator as soon as possible.

Senator Kenny: If I may, I shall proceed with the question I was asking yesterday, and which was not answered, on the chance that the response was in the document being tabled. That question is:

> . . . a federal PCB destruction program was announced two and a half years ago by the then Minister of the Environment, the Honourable Tom McMillan, in response to the fire at St-Basile-Le-Grand.

● (1410)

> This plan contained a commitment to insure that no low level PCB remain in federal sites by the fall of 1989. At that time there were 112 tonnes of contaminated mineral oil in the federal inventory. Two and a half years later there are 131 tonnes in inventory. What progress is the government making towards ridding the country of this contaminated mineral oil?

Senator Murray: There again, honourable senators, I shall ask my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, for an early report, which I trust will satisfy the honourable senator.

Senator Kenny: As a supplementary question, in September 1988, the Minister of the Environment also announced measures to destroy high level PCB wastes using transportable incinerators. This included $6 millon to lease a transportable incinerator to destroy 3,000 tonnes of PCB waste at Goose Bay and $15 million allocated by the cabinet to lease a second transportable incinerator for the destruction of other PCB wastes in Canada. Since 1989 the total number of PCB waste storage sites has increased by 76. The number of government sites has increased by 74. Total PCB wastes have increased by 10,640 tonnes. When will the government start decreasing PCB waste and the number of PCB waste sites?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators I am happy to give the honourable senator the same undertaking in response to that question that I gave to his two previous questions.

[Senator Murray.]

THE CONSTITUTION

INVOLVEMENT OF ABORIGINAL PEOPLES IN CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I have a question on Canada's Constitution crisis for Senator Murray, the Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. We know there is a constant exchange between the federal and provincial governments on Canada's constitutional future. We have heard that there have been federal-provincial talks on the division of powers. I read that the federal government is now putting together a new constitutional package to satisfy Quebec's demands. I have even heard that the Prime Minister is talking about a royal commission on aboriginal matters.

My question is simple: When are Aboriginal peoples to be provided the opportunity to directly participate in the federal-provincial efforts to develop a new constitutional package for the future of the country? By participation I do not mean appearing before committees or commissions; I mean working and negotiating with the federal and provincial governments on a new constitutional package.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think there is a provision in the present Constitution for the participation of representatives of the Aboriginal peoples at First Ministers' Conferences at which Aboriginal constitutional affairs are being discussed. For the moment there is no plan to convene a First Ministers' Conference on constitutional matters in the near future, because we are awaiting the reports on the consultations that the Citizens' Forum has been conducting across the country, and also the reports of various provincial committees and commissions. In addition, we have our own joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons considering the amending process. The plan is to establish next summer or fall a new vehicle or process to consider these matters and to consult the general public on them.

My honourable friend is not correct in the premise of his question. His very first sentence, if I heard him correctly, was that discussions or negotiations on constitutional matters are now taking place between the federal government and the provinces. That is not the case.

Senator Watt: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question, but, before I come to it, I hope Senator Murray is not suggesting that we should be satisfied to appear before a committee or a commission. I ask him how satisfied would the people of Quebec be if they had no provincial government by which to access the federal-provincial talks on the future of the country? How satisfied would the Quebec people be if they were told they would have no direct input on the development of the constitutional package? How satisfied would they be if they were told they had to limit themselves to making presentations to a committee or a commission? If this were to be the case, the Quebec people would reject the entire process. If it is not good enough for the people of Quebec, it is not good enough for the Aboriginal peoples.

My supplementary question is: Does the government realize that it has no choice but to directly consult, discuss or negotiate with the Aboriginal peoples in their effort to put together a package to redefine the country's future? Anything less means having to relive the mistake that lead to the death of the Meech Lake Accord and other crises concerning Aboriginal peoples.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I believe I dealt with those points in my answer to the first question. We are not at the stage now where First Ministers' Conferences or negotiations or consultations are taking place. Of course the Aboriginal peoples have a right to full consultation on matters affecting them and to participate in any process that affects them, and we will do no less.

The honourable senator's question gives me the opportunity, however, to touch on a point he made in his first statement to the effect that this exercise is intended to put together a package, as he put it, "to satisfy Quebec's demands." I think it has been clear from the very beginning of this exercise, with the appointment of the Citizens' Forum, that this is a very broad- ranging discussion about Canada's future, including its constitutional future, and that the considerations are not limited to one province alone. The demand for change in this country is widespread. We are aware that it extends to various regions of the country as well as to the Aboriginal peoples. I have said publicly on several occasions that, to the extent constitutional initiatives are taken, I for one cannot envisage a new constitutional initiative that does not address the constitutional aspirations of our Aboriginal peoples.

ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION TABLED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ENTERPRISE NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): tabled the answer to Question No. 72 on the order paper—by Senator Marshall.

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO REPORT—ORDER DEFERRED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be instructed to report no later than Friday, April 19, 1991, the motion respecting the appointment of the Privacy Commissioner.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have asked Senator Doody if he would object to our switching Orders No. 2 and 3. Order No. 3 is resuming debate on the inquiry calling the attention of the Senate to the budget statement of February 26, 1991, standing in the name of Senator Petten. Senator MacEachen will speak on that, and Senator Doody knows that this change has nothing to do with delay.

So, with leave, honourable senators, I would ask that we call Order No. 3, and when Senator MacEachen, or anyone else wishing to speak to Order No. 3, is through, we will then call Order No. 2 and proceed with that.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order deferred.

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the Budget statement made by the Minister of Finance on February 26, 1991.—(Honourable Senator Petten).

Hon. William J. Petten: I yield to Senator MacEachen.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the budget and I thank Senator Frith and other colleagues for altering the order of business to that extent. Perhaps you will find that it was a mistake as I go through my comments on the budget, but this particular budget of February has, I believe, a particular significance because, for the first time since he became Finance Minister in September 1984, the Minister of Finance had to prepare a budget in an economic situation produced by the cumulative impact of his own policies.

The size of the annual budget deficit since 1986-87 has not been reduced. The national debt, in his period of stewardship, has about doubled in size. Unacceptably high interest rates and exchange rates were maintained, in spite of repeated warnings, producing a recession. Canadian competitiveness has further declined. Bankruptcies have reached a record level. Unemployment is rising. So is the tax burden; so is inflation. The balance of payments and Canada's foreign indebtedness have seriously deteriorated, and government revenues are falling. That is the background to the 1991 budget: a major recession, public finances out of control, and the country itself in serious difficulty.

Yet as recently as September 1990—that is not long ago—the Minister of Finance was declaring before the Canadian Chamber of Commerce: "Our policy is working". He was referring particularly to his monetary policy, which caused the recession. Indeed, one of the most remarkable features of the Minister of Finance's tenure of office is that over the years, in every budget speech, he reiterated that his policies were working, and that is true of the February budget. Yet his forecasts of budget deficits, interest rates, growth rates and inflation rates have consistently been wrong.

Another hallmark of Mr. Wilson's career as Minister of Finance must surely be his aptitude at crafting a mythology instead of facing up to the reality of the situation. There are many examples of this, but none more poignant than the concluding words of his second-reading speech on the GST on January 29, 1990. Mr. Wilson said:

> I believe that in the months following January 1, 1991 when the cut and thrust of partisan debate on this issue has calmed down, when the controversy has subsided, when Canadians can see our economy even more vibrant and growing, they will conclude, as I have, that this is the right policy for the right reasons at the right time.

Well, we are now in the months following January 1, 1991, and if our economy is now "even more vibrant and growing," it is only in the minister's mind.

It is because Mr. Wilson is more interested in crafting mythology than in dealing with reality that he must bear the full responsibility for Canada's current financial and economic situation. This is why his seventh budget is not more effective than the others. In fact, his seventh budget has been characterized by one of Canada's leading financial institutions as "probably the most economically inept and destructive budget since the 1930s."

Senator Barootes: Since your own!

Senator MacEachen: These are strong words, but words that are warranted when the record is examined. A brief flashback to Mr. Wilson's management will illustrate what I have in mind. Perhaps we should begin at the February 1988 pre-election budget, which Mr. Wilson subtitled, as he had all his previous budgets, "Securing Economic Renewal."

Senator Perrault: Ha!

Senator MacEachen: But in 1988 the tone was very different from previous budgets. The public was led to believe that economic renewal had been secured. In that budget speech Mr. Wilson said:

> In three and a half years, our economic progress has been dramatic . . . our policies and initiatives have worked in building the framework for the economic success we now enjoy.

Senator Perrault: Bafflegab!

Senator Simard: That will be the best part of your speech today.

Senator MacEachen: In the months following, Mr. Wilson went on tour to explain the drama and the success, and said:

> The structural changes that we are making in the Canadian economy have strengthened the foundation for economic growth and investor confidence. That strength will continue in the years ahead as our initiatives take root, grow and bear fruit.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator Perrault: It's the pits!

Senator MacEachen: The fruits that were borne out of Mr. Wilson's nurturing are there for all of us to see, and they leave hardly a sweet taste.

In his February 1988 budget the Minister of Finance predicted a 2.8 per cent GDP growth for 1988. This was a gross mistake, as actual GDP growth for 1988 turned out to be 5 per cent. The significance of the second figure is that in 1988 there was evidence of inflationary pressures on the Canadian economy. The time had come for the Minister of Finance to apply remedial policies. However, in February of that year the minister was clearly more interested in tabling a pre-election budget than with properly managing an overheating economy.

It took Mr. Wilson a full year to diagnose the situation, as seen in the document entitled "Canada's Economic Prospects in the 1990s" issued at the time of the April 1989 budget. This document acknowledged, at last, that serious imbalances had developed in the course of 1988 and were threatening sustained growth. This document identified as troublesome the rate of growth of domestic demand, which outpaced GDP growth, the tightening of product and labour markets, inflation increases, the rise of interest and exchange rates, the large deficit in the current account balance, the weakness of domestic savings and growing foreign indebtedness.

The key policy point was put in the following way:

> For the Canadian economy to achieve a balanced transition to sustainable, non-inflationary growth with lower interest rates, the federal deficit must be returned to a downward track.

There was nothing novel about that statement, but for it to be made in 1989 was a remarkable admission that the government, during its first term of office, had failed to keep the budget deficit on a downward track. The economic course was reset in the 1989 budget. The top priority went to the reduction of inflation, which by then had become much harder to defeat. High interest rates and a high exchange rate would be encouraged, taxes would be increased, and expenditures restrained. While admitting belatedly that imbalances had developed in 1988, Mr. Wilson was confident they would be corrected in 1989 and 1990. In his view, demand growth would moderate, growth in investment spending would also moderate but remain robust, and labour market pressures would ease, as would underlying cost pressures. Such were the minister's assessments and prognostications at the time of his budget in April of 1989. Unfortunately the assessment was a year late and his prognostication proved to be wrong.

Indeed, the improvements foreseen for 1989 did not occur and the country's economic situation and outlook deteriorated significantly. Inflation, measured by the CPI, rose from 4.8 per cent in 1988 to 5.5 per cent in 1989. Wage settlements became inflationary in the course of 1989.

The Bank of Canada's 1989 Annual Report is eloquent on the subject:

> Canada's underlying inflation performance deteriorated in 1989 . . . inflation pressures picked up in all regions.

Corporate profits were squeezed by rising labour costs and weakening demand. With sustained rapid growth of household and corporate borrowing, the financial health of the Canadian economy was weakened. That is from page 37 of the 1990 budget. Canadian labour costs had increased faster during the previous three years than those of our major economic partners. Combined with sluggish productivity growth, our competitive position deteriorated. That is from page 33 of the 1990 budget. Short-term interest rates continued to rise early in 1989 and stabilized at about 12.3 per cent from April 1989 to early January 1990. In early February 1990 they were about 13 per cent. That is from the 1990 budget, page 39. The current account balance also deteriorated sharply from a deficit of $9.4 billion in 1987 to an estimated $18.5 billion in 1989. The exchange rate moved from 75.4 cents to the American dollar in 1987 to 84.5 cents in 1989. Finally, GDP growth was reduced from 5 per cent in 1988 to 3 per cent in 1989.

I repeat these rather tedious summations of statistics because Mr. Wilson's rosy view that the imbalances would begin to correct themselves in 1989 is totally belied by the sombre picture emerging from these figures. Let me point out that apart from my quotation of the Bank of Canada report all these figures can be found in the 1990 and 1991 budget papers.

The treatment by the 1991 budget papers of recent economic performance is even more damning. It confirms that the retrenchment in interest sensitive consumer demand, cuts in business investment and manufacturing decline—all signs of an impending recession—were evident at the time of the 1990 budget. A year ago, with an unmistakable set of warnings about the trouble the Canadian economy was heading for, Mr. Wilson had an opportunity to change course, and to stop pursuing policies that were driving the country into a recession, but he stuck to his policy stance. His 1990 budget was little more, if you look back, than a footnote to his 1989 budget.

Even more surprisingly, the minister continued to daydream in spite of the reality depicted in his own 1990 budget papers. Once again he expressed confidence that after a short economic slowdown in the first half of 1990 the imbalances would be corrected, mostly by natural forces in the economy, and sound non-inflationary growth would be resumed in 1991. Inflation was projected in his 1990 budget papers to decline from 5.5 per cent in 1989 to 4.5 per cent at the end of 1990, and to reach 3.5 per cent at the end of 1991. With growth slowing and inflationary pressures easing, a decline in interest rates was also predicted. GDP growth was expected to be 1.3 per cent in 1990. However, thanks to export-led expansion, the minister expected renewed growth in 1991 with 3 per cent GDP growth. From then on, according to him, all signs were positive. GDP would grow at an average of 3.5 per cent during the period 1992-95, inflation would be maintained at 3 per cent, the budget deficit would decline, the current account deficit would decline, interest rates would continue to decline and Canada's competitive position would improve. The unemployment rate, which would have risen to 8.5 per cent in 1991 from 7.5 per cent in 1989, would decline to 7.6 in the 1992-95 period.

Of course, his predictions last year were regarded by most economic observers as totally unrealistic. A year later we are able to measure with some precision the gap between Mr. Wilson's fantasy land and reality. If he had been right, and had his policies worked as predicted, there would be no recession, export-led growth would have already occurred, and we would have non-inflationary GDP growth at a 3 per cent rate for 1991.

We owe it to Senator Olson to have raised in this chamber on May 1 of last year the possibility that the economy was moving into a recession. Senator Murray replied:

> The honourable senator, in asserting that the country is in recession, is wrong.

Figures in hand, we are now able to judge who was right. We know that the recession started in the second quarter of last year, and that in May 1990 the economy was sliding down. Last September, when the economy was already well into its second quarter of recession, Mr. Wilson was still unwilling to face reality and was talking of a mere "slowdown" and a "period of adjustment."

The reality is that the macroeconomic policies pursued by the minister did not work and that they produced the current recession. It must be remembered that, unlike 1981-82, this recession is peculiar to Canada, or at least it is not peculiar to the world. Mr. Wilson's own budget, at page 41, shows that while Canada will experience negative GDP growth this year of 1 per cent, Europe as a whole will have GDP growth of 2.3 per cent.

• (1440)

We are entitled to ask what has placed Canada in this unenviable position.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: We had not seen in recent years how a Conservative government in Canada would deal with a recession. Mr. Wilson's 1991 budget provides us with the answer. It is entitled, "The Plan for Economic Recovery." A most unusual feature of this so-called plan is that it ignores the recession. Instead of dealing with the recession, it provides a rehash of old policies designed at different times and in different circumstances to reduce the budget deficit and the rate of inflation. The Conservative doctrine is that a recession is handled by balancing ledgers, not by promoting growth. Resumed expansion eventually comes as a by-product.

We know, honourable senators, that six budgets have failed to achieve continuing deficit reduction and, more recently, to defeat inflation. Now, with the seventh budget, something is going to work effectively, and that is the recession. I think we all agree that this recession has created a dramatic new situation. Compared with the powerful economic forces unleashed by the recession, Mr. Wilson's 1991 budget measures are marginal as a piece of economic management. "The Plan for Economic Recovery" is built around the same old objectives: to control inflation, to put government finances on the course to a balanced budget, and, for that purpose, to restrain government operations. That was the core of the 1990 budget, itself an appendix to the 1989 budget. The Minister of Finance is recycling in a new context policies that can hardly be said to have been crowned with resounding success.

Just a word about inflation. The inflation rate increased to 5 per cent in 1989 and fell only to 4.8 per cent in 1990. The 1991 budget forecasts a 5.6 inflation rate for 1991. This is a remarkable figure given the fact that the economy is going through the deflationary impact of a recession; but remember, honourable senators, that the GST is boosting the inflation rate, which stood in January at 6.8 per cent and in February at 6.2 per cent. Over the years, despite the help of a recession, the minister has failed to reduce inflation significantly below 5 per cent.

Just a word about wage rates. I should mention that wage rates increased by more than 6 per cent in the last quarter of 1990. This was significantly above inflation and far above the government's expectation when it assessed the inflationary impact of the GST. Interestingly, wage rate increases of 4.7 per cent for 1991 and 2.7 per cent for 1992 are forecast in the 1991 budget. Both happen to be under the targeted inflation rate.

These figures are to be taken seriously, and they mean that the government expects the cost of the recession to be borne by Canadian workers, not only in terms of a current rate of unemployment in excess of 10 per cent in February of this year but also in terms of a loss in real wages.

Regarding the last point about the government's fight against inflation, careful readers of the 1991 budget papers may have noticed, on page 114, footnote 6, which reads:

> Temporary adjustments may also be made to the inflation target in the event of large changes in indirect taxes.

This, I suggest, is the first piece of evidence that the government has on its mind large increases for the GST rate. If this government stays in office, a greater fiscal load will be put on the backs of all taxpayers as Canadians are asked to redeem the national mortgage debt for future generations.

That leads me, honourable senators, to Mr. Wilson's seventh edition of how to deal with budget deficits. This is the seventh effort. Those of us with long memories, and I suggest that most senators have long memories, will recall how the Minister of Finance described his strategy for controlling the national debt in his first budget of May 1985. Those were the euphoric years. Those were the years when ministers were intoxicated by their new power and their new possibilities. So, in May of 1985 he produced the first budget. He called it the "clear and realistic medium term plan." Last year—about five years after the plan was launched—Mr. Wilson was still referring to it in his budget in spite of the consistent failure of "the clear and realistic medium term plan" to reduce the deficit. The record speaks for itself, and I invite honourable senators who want to contravert what I have to say, particularly regarding the numbers, to do so.

[Senator MacEachen.]

In his 1985 budget Mr. Wilson claimed that his "clear and realistic plan" would reduce the annual deficit at the end of the decade by $20 billion. He was anticipating a deficit of approximately $36 billion for 1984-85 and was thus projecting a deficit of $16 billion for 1990-91. The estimated deficit for 1990-91 now stands at $30.5 billion. That is at page 85 of the 1991 budget.

The estimated deficit, as I said, is now at $30.5 billion—an error in the implementation of the clear and realistic plan of a mere $14.5 billion. Whatever may be said about its clarity, its realism is somewhat in doubt at the present time. Mr. Wilson had perhaps grown wiser in his 1986 budget. He predicted a 1990-91 deficit of $22 billion. That was an improvement, since his margin of error decreased from $14.5 billion to $8.5 billion. By 1988, having been burned badly, Mr. Wilson was avoiding long-term predictions. His forecast in the 1988 budget was for a budget deficit of $28.6 billion for 1989-90. It turned out to be $29 billion.

Honourable senators, the temporary elimination of wild predictions should not obscure the significance of these budget deficit figures. In the fiscal year 1986-87, Mr. Wilson's second full fiscal year as finance minister, the budget deficit was $30.6 billion. At the end of the current fiscal year it will stand at a virtually identical $30.55 billion.

Those are the stark facts of the matter. The 1985 clear and realistic medium-term plan has totally failed to reduce the size of the budget deficit. That is why the minister has been hoping that his 1985 plan would fade away into oblivion.

In order to hasten that process, in 1989 he launched what he now describes as an "ambitious five-year fiscal plan." The clear and realistic medium-term plan has been superseded by an ambitious five-year fiscal plan. Mr. Wilson, who is never short of plans, mentioned this five-year deficit reduction plan in last year's budget. Forget the old clear and realistic medium-term plan; we are now back in the business of medium-term predictions with the minister's new ambitious five-year deficit reduction plan.

In his February 1990 budget speech the Minister of Finance clearly set out the key features of this new plan. They were to reduce the deficit to $28.5 billion in 1990-91; to cut it in half, that is, to $14 billion in 1993-94; and to reduce it to $10 billion in 1994-95.

With some benefit of hindsight, we now have a clear vision of what is happening under the first three years of this new ambitious five-year plan. The budget deficit was $28.7 billion in 1988-89. After one year under the new plan it was $29 billion. For 1990-91 it was $30.5 billion instead of the $28.5 billion forecast in the new plan. Moreover, the budget deficit forecast for 1991-92 stands at an identical $30.5 billion.

Honourable senators, I summarize at this stage by saying that after three years of operation under the new ambitious plan budget deficits will have grown from $28.7 billion to $30.5 billion. Remember what I said earlier, honourable senators, that the $30.5 billion is approximately what Mr. Wilson started with in his second full fiscal year as Minister of Finance five or six years ago.

With only two years left in the five-year plan, Mr. Wilson again takes a flight into fancy. He always talks about the future—the future that is never realized, because in this budget the fiscal outlook provides for a budget deficit of $24 billion in 1992-93, a drop of over $6 billion in a single year. How is that to be achieved? In 1993-94, the last year of the plan, the targeted deficit is $16.6 billion, another drop of $7.4 billion in a single year. A further drop of $6.6 billion in the following year brings the budget deficit down to the $10 billion mark for 1994-95.

One can only be sceptical. If you look further down the road, honourable senators, you will see that the 1991 fiscal budget is full of good news. We should expect a $6.5 billion deficit by 1995-96. I have a table, which I hope is accurate, showing the trend—

Hon. Pat Carney: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator MacEachen: I do not mind.

Senator Carney: Of course, we all recall the fact that you had the experience of being Minister of Finance and therefore have a great deal of background to draw on in your assessment of Mr. Wilson's budgets. I particularly remember the honourable senator's 1983 budget, when I was critic for the Minister of Finance. He was forced to withdraw or adjust some 28 measures in that budget.

In terms of the honourable senator's criticism of Mr. Wilson's budget, can he inform this chamber as to how he reduced the deficit in the budgets he brought in? If I recall correctly, every budget the honourable senator brought in increased the deficit. I know his successor increased the deficit by $200 million simply because he allowed a photographer to take a picture of the numbers in the budget document itself.

Could the honourable senator inform the house what the deficit of the Government of Canada was for the years he was Minister of Finance? I believe they increased quite substantially during his term in that position.

Senator MacEachen: I am just coming to that aspect of my speech.

I must say, in direct reply to the honourable senator's question, that I have never found it of deep interest to rehearse all the public policy questions in which I have been involved in the Senate since I became a member of this house, not only in matters of finance but external affairs, health and welfare, labour and other departments. I thought it my duty to address current affairs rather than to glimpse into history. Maybe I will do that in another way. I do not think it is appropriate to debate, for example, the 1981 budget, and not the 1983 budget as the honourable senator mentioned. I remember the date extremely well.

Senator Carney: They were both wrong; is that true?

Honourable senator, I bring up these issues because they speak to the quality of the criticism that this chamber is hearing today. In view of Senator MacEachen's distinguished background, I thought all members of the Senate should be aware of his experience when he was Minister of Finance. He added every year to the deficit of this country. This party inherited a $34 billion deficit when we took office. It was not euphoria we experienced, honourable colleagues, but a hangover because of Liberal spending excesses.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I thank the honourable senator for providing such a marvellous introduction to the next portion of my speech, because that is the fable, the mythology, with which I intend to deal.

Senator Carney: Are you going to answer my question? What was the level of deficit when you were Minister of Finance? It increased.

Senator MacEachen: I told the honourable senator that I will deal with it in some detail. I am delighted that the honourable senator raises it, because the same old mythology has now been repeated here. It has been said, "Well, you know, when we came into office we inherited a mess. Our predecessors in office, Mr. Lalonde, myself, Mr. Chrétien and Mr. Sharp were a bunch of bunglers. We came in and we intended to repair the damage of those Liberal years."

Let me deal with that and see whether I can put some realism into the debate, and maybe even cause Mr. Wilson to revise some of the scandalous comments he made when he became Minister of Finance.

• (1500)

It has been characteristic of this Conservative government that when criticism is levelled against it, and when pressure is applied, instead of standing up and defending its policies it deserts that ground and says, "Well, look what we inherited from the Liberals." We got it again today from the senator who asks the question! "Everything would be well were it not for the legacy we inherited from the Liberals."

In a speech I made before this house in June 1989 on Mr. Wilson's budget of that year, I began to draw attention to the first myth carefully crafted by the Minister of Finance, that in 1984 the Conservative government inherited an economic disaster, brought about by the inept economic management of its predecessors. That is the myth crafted by the Minister of Finance and repeated today by a member of the government who was part of the myth makers.

One of the first moves taken by Mr. Wilson in his brand new portfolio was the publication of a document dated November 1984 and entitled "A New Direction for Canada." This document contained a sharp indictment of Liberal economic policy that was alleged to be the source of "poor economic performances," "soaring government deficits," "rising unemployment," "sluggish economic growth," and "an economy dangerously off-course." These are direct quotes from Mr. Wilson's statement. It would be of interest to go over this descriptive vocabulary and check to what extent it would fit current economic conditions in Canada after more than six years of Conservative rule, but that is not my purpose now.

If we look back to November 1984, the date of Mr. Wilson's first economic paper, the truth of the matter is that the Conservative government—and listen to this—inherited a surging Canadian economy that had achieved a remarkable recovery from the 1981-82 recession, which was the worst recession since the Second World War. It was a worldwide recession. It hammered Europe, it hammered North America. This recession is not worldwide; it is a made-in-Canada recession and there is no influence from Europe or elsewhere that has caused this recession.

I said that it may sound exaggerated to say that there was a surging economy in 1984. The fact is that in 1984 the economy was growing at a rate of 4.7 per cent in real terms, a growth rate that was exceeded only in 1988 when it was 5 per cent. So in 1984 the country had come out of a deep recession; the economy was surging ahead at 4.7 per cent. Unemployment had declined from a recession peak of approximately 13 per cent to about 11 per cent. As the Leader of the Government said in another context, "We must watch the trend line." Inflation averaged 4.4 per cent, the lowest rate since 1971. The merchandise trade balance had a surplus of about $20 billion, a near record level; with a non-merchandise deficit of $17 billion, the balance of payments on current account showed a $2.7 billion surplus. Interest rates had fallen to less than 11 per cent from their pre-recession summits—the trend line again. The domestic saving rate was over 7 per cent of GDP—February 1990 budget paper, page 26—and government-held foreign indebtedness was being reimbursed.

What are we doing today? Borrowing 30 per cent abroad! We went into all of that recently. This was the disaster; this was the economy "dangerously off-course." This was the inheritance left over to an unfortunate Conservative government in quest of renewal. A growth rate of 4.7 per cent, a favourable merchandise trade balance, deficit on current account, falling interest rates, high savings rates, and we were paying off our indebtedness to other countries. This was hardly a disaster.

Senator Carney: And a deficit of $34 billion.

Senator MacEachen: Myths die hard, if they ever do, but facts are facts and they are verified in the budget papers and they tell the truth. In 1984 the minister began his term of office with a document laced with a disturbing display of intellectual dishonesty. The document, entitled "A New Direction for Canada," spoke of the "mountain of debt inherited as a result of the string of deficits over the past ten years," and warned that if nothing were done "net public debt would more than double from its present levels rising to over $400 billion by the early 1990s." Under the policies of Mr. Wilson this level of debt accumulation is right on target—the net public debt will exceed $400 billion in the course of 1992.

But what of the Liberal record to which Mr. Wilson refers and to which Senator Carney from British Columbia has also referred? What of the Liberal record? Was it awful?

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator Carney: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: Let's look at the facts and not the Conservative mythology.

In fiscal year 1974-75, after a long spell of Liberal government, the budget deficit was $2 billion, which is close to a balanced budget. The gross public debt was at $52.8 billion. At the end of the 1970s—and this is where I think we should be careful to anchor our analysis in the world situation, as I think Mr. Wilson is entitled to do if he can find world factors that have disturbed his prognostication; but he has never alluded to world factors, to my knowledge—stagflation, fuelled by oil price increases, had taken their toll. The budget deficit for 1980-81 was $13.5 billion and the gross public debt was $120 billion. That was on the eve of the 1981-82 recession, which caused further deterioration.

For 1983-84, the last full year of Liberal government, the former Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, projected a deficit of $31.3 billion.

Senator Carney: Shocking!

Senator MacEachen: That is about the deficit we have today. In his last year in office he projected a deficit of $31.3 billion. The actual deficit turned out to be $32.4 billion—the last full year of Liberal government rule, an actual deficit of $32.4 billion. What is it day? What is the great progress that has been made in the intervening years?

• (1510)

Senator Murray: Where was it in 1984-85?

Senator MacEachen: I am coming to that. For 1983-84, the last full year of the Liberal government, the former Minister of Finance projected a deficit of $31.3 billion. The actual deficit turned out to be $32.4 billion. He was not on target but it was not the worst record. It was pretty damn good if you compare it with the subsequent errors made in targeting by his successor.

Senator Murray: Are you talking about 1984-85?

Senator MacEachen: I am talking about 1983-84. Mr. Lalonde, in his February-84 budget, projected a deficit of $29.6 billion for 1984-85. Thus, after several years of severe economic adversity accompanied by budget deficit increases, the Minister of Finance of the last Liberal government had designed a budgetary stance to achieve a reversal of this trend, and he had produced an actual deficit of $32.4 in the last year of office.

Perhaps I should also point out that just before the 1981-82 recession the budget deficit of $14.8 billion, for which I was responsible as Minister of Finance, amounted to 4.2 per cent of GDP. The average for the whole of the 1970s was less than 3 per cent.

Now we're dealing with Senator Barootes' point, the relation of the deficit to the size of the economy. Let us apply that test. The average for the whole of the 1970s was less than 3 per cent. It was 4.2 per cent of GDP in 1981-82. This was a period of Liberal government, save for nine months with Mr. Clark. There is hardly any need to point out that this record has been unmatched by the Conservatives using the test of Senator Barootes', unmatched by the Conservatives working under much better economic conditions, in the 1980s. If one excludes the years 1984-85, which was a shared responsibility between Liberal and Conservative governments, the Conservative average is of a budget deficit of 5.3 per cent of GDP, using the test proposed by Senator Barootes.

Senator Barootes: Give the size of the budget.

Senator MacEachen: I have given you the relationship of the budget deficit to the size of the economy, which is the test you asked me to apply.

Senator Frith: That is the "Barootes formula." He wants to deny it now since it didn't work! Knock that Barootes formula if it doesn't work out!

Senator MacEachen: The reason I returned to this point, the percentage of the deficit to the size of the economy, is because the Minister of Finance and the budget papers are awash with references to the importance of this test. On that test, considering the times, I think it is unfair to accuse Liberal predecessors of fiscal irresponsibility. I think the figures speak for themselves, and they should dispel the myth of irresponsible fiscal management. The high budget deficit immediately following 1981-82 were related to policies designed to promote economic recovery and to alleviate the hardship caused by a severe recession for the Canadian population.

Honourable senators, if you want to compare the difference between the Liberal government and the Conservative government, take a look at the measures that were adopted by the Liberals to ease the burden of the recession. They were considerable. There are none in this budget.

Senator Buckwold: Take a look at the food banks.

Senator MacEachen: They cost money, but they eased the country out of a recession, with the result that in 1984 there was a surging economy with a growth rate of 4.7 per cent, exceeded only once, by a 5 per cent growth rate, by the Conservatives in 1988.

Senator Carney: Would the honourable senator permit another question?

Senator MacEachen: No, honourable senators. I have been courteous with Senator Carney and when I am finished I will be glad to answer. I am following a trend of thought.

Marc Lalonde had planned a budget deficit of $29.6 billion for 1984-85, and we are coming to the question that Senator Murray asked. In November 1984 Michael Wilson projected a deficit of $34.5 billion for 1984-85, and he said:

> . . . with this set of projections and no policy changes, the deficit for this fiscal year would be $34.5 billion . . . This is what we inherited.

Those are the words of the minister. Well, $34.5 billion is what I take as the benchmark established by Mr. Wilson when he became minister. We know that in that single year the actual deficit climbed to $38.3 billion. No longer have we heard reference to $34.5 billion; now $38.3 billion is the benchmark. This figure, and not what he acknowledged as inheriting, became the benchmark in Mr. Wilson's mythology of measuring Liberal management.

I turn now to another point that has to do with exchanges in this house. While debating with Senator Olson on April 10, Senator Murray said, "We are borrowing in order to pay the interest on your debt." In 1984-85 the national debt was $199 billion. For this current fiscal year it reached $388.5 billion. For next year it will be more than $400 billion, which Mr. Wilson said would be the outcome if nothing were done. That is what he said in 1984 when he said, "If we don't do anything, if we leave current policies in place, the debt will be in excess of $400 billion." That is what it is. Next year it will be $419 billion. Even on the assumption that the Conservatives have no responsibility at all for the 1984-85 deficit, which is not correct, Canada is paying interest this year on $189 billion of Conservative debt and next fiscal year on $220 billion of Conservative debt. So much for accuracy and fairness of the government side.

Honourable senators, I do not know what is going on in the government, but I read the papers and see there is widespread expectation that Mr. Wilson has delivered his last budget.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Perrault: Protect the world. Don't turn him loose on the world!.

• (1520)

Senator MacEachen: If that is to be the case, perhaps it would be appropriate to take an overview of his tenure of office and to conclude with a brief summary of where I think he was right, where he was wrong, and where he made his mistakes. There is no doubt in my mind that Mr. Wilson pursued legitimate objectives when endeavouring to bring down budget deficits, thereby attempting to bring our public debt under control. He was right in that objective. He was right to emphasize public expenditure control. He was right in trying to defeat inflation. In the pursuit of these goals, he constrained the expansion of program spending and produced a positive operating balance.

Now, it will be remembered that Senator Castonguay made much of this point when speaking on third reading of Bill C-62. He said:

> While in 1984-85, when this government took over, there was an operating deficit of $16 billion. There is now a surplus of $9 billion. These figures are definitely impressive by any standard.

That was from November 27 of 1990, page 4000. Those were the days when we really added to the pages of the Hansard! Senator Castonguay was, in fact, echoing Senator Murray's statement of October 1990 in this chamber when he said:

> In 1984 the government incurred an operating deficit on all programs other than interest costs of $16 billion. This has been changed into an operating surplus of $13 billion . . . I think that speaks volumes—

Senator Perrault: Sure does! It's a myth!

Senator MacEachen:

> —for the competent and frugal administration of the nation's finances by the government.

Senator Perrault: Frugal?

Senator MacEachen: Well, I already made the point that the figures for 1984-85 ought to be treated with some caution. However, a more serious matter of concern with Senator Castonguay's and Senator Murray's statements is their failure to mention how the surplus came about. How did they achieve it?

Senator Buckwold: Magic!

Senator MacEachen: Program spending for 1984-85 was $86.6 billion, according to the 1986 fiscal plan, page 47. For the current fiscal year it is $108.3 billion, an increase of about $22.3 billion. So program spending has increased by $22.3 billion, but there is still an operating surplus.

I turn now to revenues. For the current fiscal year budgetary revenue is $120.7 billion, an increase of about $50 billion. It is expected to reach about $140 billion in 1992-93. To put it another way, budgetary revenue has increased two times more than program spending over the period covered in Senator Castonguay's statement and will have doubled by 1992-93. That is a reason—the main reason—for the operating surplus. A buoyant economy and sharp tax increases have produced that result. Most of the credit for this achievement by the Minister of Finance should go to the taxpayers and is attributable to the minister's ravenous appetite for the taxpayers' money. It has been achieved principally by an increase in budgetary revenue rather than through frugal and competent administration.

There is another point concerning ways of explaining away budget deficits that was quite appropriately raised by Senator Olson when speaking last year to the 1990 budget. He said:

> To say that "this is program spending and this is debt service charges" is a new kind of bookkeeping that no one else in the world has got away with, and you are not getting away with it either.

Well, I listened to Senator Castonguay, to Senator Murray and to Senator Olson, and this fact certainly caused me to examine the trend in budgetary revenues, which is the principal reason for the operating surplus. I was a bit taken—or, as it were, struck—by the statement made by the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Royal Bank of Canada, Mr. Taylor, who seemed to echo Senator Olson's words when he said in January:

> The Government of Canada talks about an operating surplus, but what does that mean? It's like an individual Canadian saying he or she would have a positive cash flow if it weren't for the mortgage interest. It's true, but it's irrelevant. The fact is that the deficit is again moving in the wrong direction. Depending on how deep the recession bites, it will grow much larger, with smaller tax revenues and larger unemployment benefits.

[Senator Perrault.]

I make those points for honourable senators to digest, accept or reject in any way they wish.

To continue, Mr. Wilson, as Minister of Finance, has, in my opinion, made a number of irretrievable policy mistakes. Early in his mandate, following two years of genuine budget deficit reduction, Mr. Wilson relied on increases in government revenue thanks to higher taxes and an expanding economy, and on an easing up of debt service charges caused by low interest rates, to fight the deficit. He relaxed after two years of genuine progress and said that the deficit would be looked after by economic growth producing increased tax revenue and that it would be assisted by lower interest rates on the public debt. He said the deficit would go down, and he was wrong.

Senator Buckwold: As usual.

Senator MacEachen: I must say that on June 13, 1989, in this very chamber, I mentioned the risks that were inherent in that policy upon which he was relying to reduce the deficit. I warned that if economic expansion slowed down and interest rates went up, the policy failure would be exposed and our public finances would be in deep trouble. What was true in 1989 became evident in 1990, because this is precisely what happened. That was his first mistake.

The second mistake was his failure to pay attention to the strong warnings of inflation, rising interest rates and the upward movement of exchange rates in 1988. In my opinion, that was the time to launch timely macroeconomic policies to cool off a situation that was rapidly getting out of hand, but I think his mind, and the government's mind, were on winning a general election, and Canadians subsequently had to pay the price for this improvidence.

The third mistake was to ignored signs of an impending recession late in 1989 and early in 1990, and to press on with high-interest-rate and high-exchange-rate policies to the point of generating a full-fledged, made-in-Canada recession. Perhaps the minister was simply too obsessed with the GST to realize that this new tax measure was ill-timed and inflationary.

In any event, he did proceed with the GST and ignore the oncoming recession. That was another error. The cost paid by all Canadians for these cumulative mistakes has been a dramatic increase in the tax burden, particularly for individuals. Tax increases under this government must hold a record for the century. It is just unbelievable. The price also includes a grave mortgage on Canada's future in the form of federal debt which, before year end, will have doubled under the Conservatives since 1984. Canada has joined the ranks of the most internationally indebted countries and our future ability to manage monetary policy will be even more constrained.

Honourable senators, I believe that these costs are manageable in the sense that tax policy can be changed and the debt brought under control in the medium term. What is irretrievable is the gradual destruction of the federal government and its place in the balance of the Canadian federation, and that cost has been allowed to creep in insidiously under the guise of expenditure control. For this reason Mr. Wilson will be judged severely not only for poor or indifferent economic management but for lack of vision when faced with the greatest current challenge to Canada's existence as a dynamic and united country.

When one looks at the record one is driven to say that the minister was damned good at public relations and at soothing the Canadian population into believing that each new budget had a solution in the future which had eluded him in the past. The clear and realistic plan of budget deficit reduction failed, the economic renewal plan failed and the five-year plan for further deficit reduction is in the course of failing. The expenditure restraint plan is adding stress on the federal fabric of this country. This does not inspire much confidence in the latest inventions, the economic recovery plan and the inflation targets.

All along the Minister of Finance kept asserting and repeating that his policies were working, that the plans were on target and that tomorrow would be a much better day. That is what he has said again in the budget for the seventh time: "Tomorrow will be a much better day." So we were not surprised when the Minister of State for Finance, Mr. MacDermid, said on March 18 that the government would spend $1.5 million in publicizing the last Wilson budget, the purpose of which is to say that tomorrow will be a better day. That has been the PR achievement of the Wilson era. However, the reality has been the opposite.

It is also worth noting that when Mr. Wilson had to take tough economic decisions he was influenced by the political desires of the Prime Minister and his colleagues. He gave up fighting budget deficits halfway through the first Conservative mandate for fear of the political damage that might ensue; he postponed fighting inflation because of the coming general election, and he pressed on with the GST. The country is now paying for the results of these policies and will continue to do so even if Mr. Wilson moves on. The problems which he leaves will have to be confronted by a new minister, who I hope, when he takes on those responsibilities, will not fail.

Senator Carney: Or she.

Senator MacEachen: Or she; and why not one from the Senate.

Senator Frith: Carney for Finance!

Senator MacEachen: And we will have to face those problems.

Honourable senators, in closing, I have a couple of tables that I would like to include, if senators wish, in order to ensure that my budget figures are correct.

(For tables see appendix, page 5635)

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO REPORT—DEBATE CONCLUDED—DIVISION DEFERRED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be instructed to report no later than Friday, April 19, 1991, the motion respecting the appointment of the Privacy Commissioner.-(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, you can tell a weak government by its eagerness to resort to strong measures. That is a quote from Benjamin Disraeli and applies very well today. You notice the word is "eagerness," not "willingness." Any government has to resort willingly at times to strong measures, but the word is "eagerness." What is the eagerness of this government to resort to strong measures that has us here this week? The House of Commons is adjourned. As far as we can see, the Senate cleaned up all of the government's business except the Financial Administration Act. The study of the Financial Administration Act in the committee was to continue until the end of the month, so what are we doing here?

We tried to get some advantage out of it by a very excellent speech on Tory financial and fiscal policies and the regime of Michael Wilson, but we would not have been here for that reason and we would not have been here for the Financial Administration Act. We are here for Mr. Bruce Phillips; that is what we are here for. I figure, on the basis of the public accounts, that it is costing the taxpayers between $70,000 and $80,000 for us to be here for Mr. Phillips. The taxpayers are putting up that amount of money which would not be spent if the Senate had not been called in order to make sure that Mr. Phillips gets his job.

What is it, honourable senators, that Mr. Phillips knows about this government that the Prime Minister is prepared to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to call the Senate back for the sole purpose of making sure that Mr. Phillips gets his job? What did Mr. Phillips say to the Prime Minister? We can imagine what he said to the Prime Minister. Mr. Phillips said, "Look, I understand there is a chance that you are going to prorogue. Do you realize that I do not have my job and I will not get my job if you prorogue? You had better call the Senate back and force them to give me my job. You now have the majority in the Senate; bring back those 104-plus people in the stuffed Senate. Bring them all back for me, Bruce Phillips." What does he know? What does the government owe him that it is prepared to bring Parliament back in order to get one man his job?

Senator Barootes: You could have settled it last week, but you refused to report back.

Senator Frith: My question was what does Mr. Phillips know? What is his influence? What leverage has he got on the government to force back the Upper House of Parliament to get him his job? Senator Barootes' answer is: "We could have cleared it up last week." I do not know what that has to do with the question.

What does the government owe him in order to make it easy for him to have Parliament called back to get him his job? And what is more relevant: what will Bruce Phillips owe them—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Frith: —for having done it? What will this servant of Parliament, what will this watchdog on the government—

An Hon. Senator: Watch.

Senator Frith: —owe them? Can honourable senators imagine the situation of his acting as a watchdog, as an agent of Parliament and saying something unpleasant to the government?

Senator Perrault: A pit bull terrier, that guy.

Senator Frith: What would the government say? "Mr. Phillips, are you criticizing us? Do you realize that in April of this year we called Parliament back to get you your job, and you are going to criticize us? We have brought 104 or more people back, brought them from all across the country just to get you your job, and you have the nerve to criticize us?"

Some Hon. Senators: Shame! Shame!

Senator Frith: What kind of a parliamentary watchdog could he be?

Senator Perrault: A trained poodle.

Senator Frith: I know Bruce Phillips, and in my opinion it has nothing to do with whether, under proper auspices and in the proper job, he could not do such a job. However, he is never going to be able to do that job in these circumstances. Nobody could in those circumstances, not just Bruce Phillips. Nobody who has that kind of partisan background and whose appointment is going to be confirmed in these circumstances can ever be independent.

Senator Perrault: Putting a rabbit in charge of the lettuce patch.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the sad part of all is that this is just another example of the extent to which this government is prepared to go to make Parliament irrelevant.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Think of where we stand now as Parliament. Let us take the picture. Here is a prime minister, not just this Prime Minister, any prime minister in Canada. He or she wants something. He comes into a cabinet. Whom are we looking at in the cabinet? If I am speaking as the prime minister, I have picked each one of you. If I have a majority in the House of Commons, and I am speaking of the relevance of Parliament in Canada today, for a government that has a majority in the House of Commons, my question is, "I have the following proposal. I want it. I have picked every one of you in the cabinet for your job. There are 150 or more out there and every one of them wants your job."

Senator Perrault: Slavering for the job.

Senator Frith: "I am going to fire you if I want to, and I am going to appoint them if I want to. Any questions?" Not very many.

An Hon. Senator: Yes, sir!

Senator Frith: "Yes, sir" would be the answer. Now, having gone that far, I go out into the House of Commons. There are those 150-odd all wanting to be members of the cabinet, all there because I won an election for them. I am not talking about Brian Mulroney now. I am talking about any prime minister under our system, certainly as it has developed. Is there anyone in the House of Commons who is going to defeat me? Are they going to say no to me? Are they going to give up their chance to be in cabinet? No. Well, then, what about the Opposition? What can the Opposition do? It can stand up and complain, but what do I say to the Opposition? I say, "You can stand up and complain, but only for so many minutes, because that is the rule in the House of Commons; and you can only debate this as a whole for so much time. So if you want to get up and speak for 15 minutes, or whatever our rules will allow you, or you want to speak for a few hours or days on it, that is fine, but I am telling you, I am going back to my red book. This is if I am a cabinet minister or if I am the prime minister and I am going to be signing my correspondence. You go ahead and talk, but I am telling you that next Tuesday at 5:45 I am going to have my way, whether you like it or not!"

Senator Buckwold: Appalling!

Senator Frith: This government has made it even worse by the amendments they just made to the House of Commons. So what is the relevance of any member of the House of Commons under our present system, whether they are on the government side or the Opposition side? They have hog-tied themselves, paralyzed themselves by their rule changes. So what does that leave? That leaves the Senate.

Now the Senate has the problem of less political muscle because it is not elected, and, if it has a government majority, what can it do? Therefore, except for a minority Parliament, we really might just as well—on the basis of the trends that we are making, including what has brought us here today as an example for a parliamentary watchdog, and if it is a majority government— send everyone home until the next election, because the prime minister is going to get whatever he wants.

The only time that Parliament has any relevance is in a minority government if we are going to keep up with these trends. Here is an example—a small example, I admit—of where the government is simply saying, "We want our way. We have not followed parliamentary procedures, we have not respected Parliament even for the appointment of a parliamentary officer, and there are not that many of them. Most of the appointments to senior federal government positions are made by the executive, by the Governor in Council, by the prime minister effectively. There are only a few select posts that have

The reasons, of course, for selecting them by a different method than just a statement that they have been appointed are:

> First, that the officials report to the legislative rather than the executive branch, maintaining independence from the government. Second, that because of the quasi-judicial or ombudsman-like role of these posts, the confidence of all parliamentarians in these officials is crucial. Third, non-partisan appointments are generally thought to have a greater credibility and respect with the public at large. Therefore, the importance of consensus among parliamentarians in the selection, which has always existed in the past, is of central importance to the effectiveness of the parliamentary appointment.

That is being ignored in this case, again even in this little thing, one of the few little things that have been left to Parliament—one of the few. "Look, we force all sorts of things through you. We have closure, we have time allocation, we can ram anything we want past you, but there are a few appointments that you all have to agree on. It has nothing to do with party politics. It is a parliamentary thing. You all have to agree."

"What we do is to consult with all the parties before we make these appointments." Some of them, mind you, are important posts. If the procedure that was followed for Bruce Phillips is to be followed now—if that is the precedent that this government wants to establish—then why can the Prime Minister not decide what Chief Electoral Officer he would like? All he has to do is to follow the Bruce Phillips' precedent, the Privacy Commissioner precedent. He simply has to introduce it in the House. He does not talk to the Opposition about it. He does not talk to Parliament about it. He talks to his own cabinet and caucus about it.

If this appointment does not go through, why can't the Prime Minister say, "I appoint Bruce Phillips as Chief Electoral Officer." He asks members of his caucus if it is okay, and they say it is. So they bring it to Parliament. Members of the Opposition will stand up and say, "Wait a minute, you are supposed to consult us. This office of Chief Electoral Officer is one of the five or six appointments that you are supposed to make with the consensus of all of Parliament." The government will say, "That's too bad. Remember, we did it with the Privacy Commissioner. We are going to do it for Chief Electoral Officer too." "What about the Senate?" they will ask. The reply will be, "We have straightened the Senate out too. They were worried about the Privacy Commissioner in the Senate so they sent it to a committee." They will ask, "What did the committee do?" They will be told that the committee did not want to approve it. "So what did you do about that?" will be asked. The reply will be, "We got Senator Murray to bring in a motion instructing them to do it. Who the hell do they think they are, these senators? What does this committee think it is? I want this man. Instruct them to do it, Mr. Murray. Is that clear? What is the next item on the agenda? Tell them to do it."

The really sad thing about all this is that the people do not seem to care. That shows us when we really become irrelevant as parliamentarians. It is the media's job to criticize politicians. In a free country the press has an important role to do that, without wishing to do it, I am sure, in the long run; but by doing it week after week, month after month, year after year, decade after decade, in giving the impression that politicians are all venal people, that they are not interested in the principles of Parliament, that they are interested only in their own advantage and that they are irresponsible, I suppose we cannot blame the people for not caring. They will say, "What are they making such a fuss about? What difference does it make whether the government has decided that even this one of a very few parliamentary posts will now be hammered and made by executive decision?" I think it is sad that the people do not care. I think that the principle involved in this thing is just as important to Senators Johnson, Murray or Phillips as it is to me. If we are parliamentarians, it is important. But the people just do not seem to care.

If it develops that this motion passes and that the committee is forced to report and we have to speak on the actual appointment itself, something which is not before us at this moment, then I will want to ask a number of questions. These are matters about which the committee is worried. I hope that we will think of many of the principles that are involved, especially as to whether the Privacy Act has been complied with here.

Concerning the wording of the Privacy Act in requiring a resolution of approval from the Senate, does that mean that something more positive and more active than consent is required? In other words, is simple assent all right, or does it require examination, consideration and a more positive act? Is it reasonable to ask someone with prior affiliations to act not only as a sentinel for Canadians through the Privacy dossier, but to stand up to the very institutions with which he was affiliated and that are often those most questioned by Canadian individuals in regard to privacy? I have a great many such questions that I want to ask.

All I am dealing with at the moment is the significance of Senator Murray's motion in the context of where Parliament stands these days. That is really the objection. The real objection is that, again, it is a matter of just another bit of parliamentary relevance being chipped away. It is the method, the way it is done. It is not Bruce Phillips as a person. In my opinion, it would be the equivalent of a Liberal government appointing me to the job. I think that would be ridiculous. Everyone knows that I am an avid supporter of the Liberal Party, and have been a supporter of the Liberal government. It would be as if I had done all these things that I have done in support of the Liberal Party and there was then an election and the Liberal Party got in and nominated me Chief Electoral Officer or Privacy Commissioner. I tell honourable senators that I do not think that will ever happen; but, if it did happen, and I were crazy enough to accept it, I hope you would turn me down, because I would be the wrong person for the job. I hope you would all turn me down.

Some Hon. Senators: We will.

Senator Frith: Thank you. Do I have that undertaking?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Frith: I would be just as inappropriate for this job as Bruce Phillips is. Any procedure that appointed me to the job, similar to the procedure the government wants to use to appoint Bruce Phillips to the job, would be just as inappropriate.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Why? Would you not be professional?

Senator Frith: I thought I had made that point clear.

Senator MacDonald: Why? Are you not suited for the job?

Senator Frith: I thought I had made that point clear. I am glad the honourable senator has given me a chance to repeat it, since he did not get my point.

I think that I could do the job, just as I think Bruce Phillips could do the job; but the problem is that he can never be seen to be doing the job, because what is the job? The question is not Frith or Phillips for the job; the question is the job. The job is to be an independent watch-dog on the government. Most important, it is to appear to be independent, to have people have the confidence that the person is independent. In other words, it would be an embarrassment to me, as it should be an embarrassment to Bruce Phillips, to take this job, because no one is going to believe that he has the independence, just as no one would believe that I would have the independence if a Liberal government appointed me.

That is why. It is because he would not have a chance to be professional. No matter how professional Bruce Phillips or I would be, no one would think we were being professional, not only because of our backgrounds and our affiliations with the government, but because of the way the government went ahead to force the appointment through against every precedent and every convention—all of those precedents, all of those conventions—established for the very good reason that they establish the confidence of the body I represent.

To continue the analogy, my position would be the same as Bruce Phillips' position if this matter had gone through the House of Commons and all the Conservative and NDP members had voted against me, while the only people who voted for me were Liberals. Who is going to believe me? It would then come to the Senate and the Senate would try to say, "No, this is not the right thing to do," and the government would then force it through and force me on the people, as it is planning to do in this case.

I think it is wrong. That is why I think we have a chance here. I am making an appeal on this motion to all of my colleagues in this place not to proceed with this motion. I think it is an embarrassment for all senators. What can Senator Murray do? He has been told what he has to do. He takes the job. He is a member of cabinet. It is a question of cabinet solidarity. It is also a question of his being told, "We want this thing. We are going to bring everyone back, and force a motion through the Senate. That is your job. You are our representative in the Senate."

I have an invitation for all of my colleagues. It is to forget about this thing. Leave it in the committee. That is the best solution. I have an invitation to Senator Murray to withdraw his motion. He has had a long career in politics. He has had a career here as Leader of the Government in the Senate. He has been very severely criticized for some of his enterprises. I do not know how enthusiastic he was about them, but I do know him well enough to know that he understands political duty, and he understands with regard to a lot of things that the Prime Minister has asked him to do, that he had to do it whether he liked it or not.

● (1600)

Senator Bonnell: He could resign.

Senator Frith: He could, but I have another suggestion. Perhaps earlier on, in connection with other pieces of legislation, when what seemed to be reasonable amendments were being proposed, he may have found some of those amendments attractive but was told by the Prime Minister and by cabinet to turn them down. One can imagine what kind words Harvey Andre would have in cabinet meetings for any suggestions that came from the Liberal dominated Senate, as it then was.

What about Meech? Certainly, when someone is examining Senator Murray's career, he will take into account what happened with Meech. As a skilful negotiator, I should have thought that Senator Murray, with experience in negotiation, would never have liked the seamless web approach. Who knows what might have happened in the case of Meech Lake if there had not been a seamless web but a compromise had been made. If some amendments had been accepted, it would have passed in this place, and it did not pass in the Senate. Incidentally, I am sure that the Prime Minister said, "Lowell, not a change. Nothing changes, and don't you give me any argument about it."

Senator Simard: What is the offer? Do not keep us waiting all afternoon, tell us what the offer is, please.

Senator Frith: You will hear it.

I think what the Prime Minister asked Senator Murray to do was ignominious, to ask him to make no concession, to give him the job of federal-provincial relations, which surely means some compromise, not just "my way or no way;" but he had to do that.

Then, on the GST, he was up against Senate rules. Instead of moving to amend those rules, I suppose Harvey Andre and his colleagues said, "No, ram it through. In a pinch we will get Charbonneau to break the rules if we have to, but just ram it through and don't try to change any of the rules."

What about amendments to the GST? Maybe Senator Murray said, "Look, these amendments on books, co-ops and on energy are pretty reasonable amendments, Brian, maybe we should accept some of those and, if we do that, a lot of political support that the Opposition has will at least be changed." I am assuming that he suggested that they might be accepted and was told, "No, sir, do it my way or no way."

Think of all the things that Senator Murray has done for the Prime Minister. Now we read in the paper that the Prime Minister is going to dump him.

Senator MacDonald: We have heard the same thing about you.

Senator Frith: Yes, you have heard the same thing. That convinces me that I am probably right that he is; is that your point? You know something that I do not know. Well, in that case, even more so, is it going to make any difference if this goes through? Surely not. The chances are that, having done all these things for the Prime Minister, he is now asking him to do this, which I think must go against every fibre, certainly every parliamentarian fibre, that Senator Murray has, if he is being asked to do this in addition to a whole lot of other little things. I do not know whether he had anything to do with Senator Carney's having to leave the constitutional amendment committee.

Senator Simard: If you do not know, do not talk about it.

Senator Frith: Whether or not he did, I say that Senator Murray has done everything, and a lot of things he should not have done, as asked for by the Prime Minister; and, on this last thing that he is being asked to do, I suggest that Senator Murray tell the Prime Minister, "No, I will not do that. I am going to withdraw that motion and end my career with a bang instead of whimper."

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: May I inform honourable senators that if Senator Murray speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate on his motion.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not know whether the Deputy Leader of the Opposition was issuing a farewell to me or indeed his own valedictory.

Senator Frith: Probably both; easily could be both.

Senator Murray: If I were preparing to leave my post tomorrow, how could I possibly leave with a resolution, ten months old, sitting in a Senate committee? This is not the kind of unfinished business that one would want to leave. The ten months that this committee has kept this resolution indicates to me that the time has come for the Senate to decide.

My motion before the Senate is to direct the committee to report. I am not trying to direct the committee how to report. I am not asking it to approve or disapprove Mr. Phillips' nomination; I am asking that it report so that we can facilitate a decision on this matter by the Senate, after ten months.

Is ten months enough for a committee to have? Any reasonable person would agree that ten months on a matter of this nature is more than enough and that the Senate does have an obligation to deal with this item that has come to us from the House of Commons.

• (1610)

We are here, Senator Frith said, for Bruce Phillips. No, honourable senators, we are here to fill an important post in the service of Parliament and of Canada.

Senator Perrault: Come on!

Senator Murray: The Privacy Act, under which we are moving to appoint a commissioner, and its twin, the Access To Information Act, have a long and honourable parliamentary history.

Senator Perrault: Don't dishonour it now!

Senator Murray: The names of some of our most distinguished former parliamentarians, such as Ged Baldwin, are associated with this legislation. There was a bill before Parliament in 1979-80, the first government bill brought in on privacy and access to information, and it was introduced by the administration of Prime Minister Clark. It died with the defeat of that government. The Trudeau government resurrected it between 1980 and 1984. The bill was finally passed, and provided for the appointment of a privacy commissioner and the twin legislation provides for the appointment of an access to information commissioner through a procedure set out in the legislation.

It is important to fill the position because there are powers assigned to the Privacy Commissioner that cannot be exercised by an acting commissioner. They can only be exercised by the commissioner who has been duly appointed by the Governor in Council after an affirmative vote by both houses of Parliament. So it is important, because we consider the post of Privacy Commissioner to be important, to fill it. We have been waiting for 10 months for the Senate committee to report on this matter.

Senator Bonnell: What happened to your committee? Why didn't the chairman call a meeting?

Senator Murray: My friends opposite have a majority on that committee, as they have on all committees. If they had wanted to deal with the matter, it would have been dealt with.

Senator Frith: The chairman can call committee meetings. He doesn't need a majority to call a meeting.

Senator Murray: Senator Frith has said that the process we have followed in this case makes Parliament irrelevant. Again for the record, I want to point out that the legislation provides that the appointment of a privacy commissioner shall be made by Governor in Council after approval by the House of Commons and the Senate. It must be stated that there is no mention in the legislation of any consultation among the political parties. If they had intended that there should be such consultation, they probably would have included such a provision in the act itself.

Senator Frith: You didn't need to, because it has always been done.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator says it has always been done. Well, it has not always been done.

Senator Frith: You have found another exception, have you.

Senator Murray: The record is very mixed in this regard.

Senator Frith: No, there shouldn't be any exception. It just proves the rule.

Senator Murray: I referred in my remarks last June to the experience I have had in various incarnations around here, including, for example, the years I spent as Chief of Staff to Mr. Stanfield when he was Leader of the Opposition. I well recall the consultation that took place under both the Pearson government and the Trudeau government with regard to some of these appointments. The consultation consisted of a telephone call from our old friend Marc Lalonde, who was in Prime Minister Pearson's office and later in Prime Minister Trudeau's office saying, "Here is what we are going to do."

Senator Frith: Did you do that in this case?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can't say whether that was done in this case or not.

Senator Frith: Why are you accepting it?

Senator Murray: A telephone call is hardly a consultation. It is a notification.

Senator Frith: It depends on the response. You have to make the call to start it. Did you object to them?

Senator Murray: These notifications were usually done the day ahead. In some cases we were asked a second—

Senator Frith: So did you ever object?

Senator Murray: Oh, yes.

Senator Frith: Did they go ahead anyway?

Senator Murray: Oh, yes, absolutely.

Senator Bosa: Did you object to the appointment of Gordon Fairweather?

Senator Murray: I am telling the honourable senator that the record is very mixed with regard to consultation.

Senator Frith: If it is, you made no call in this case, not even a call.

Senator Murray: I well remember the appointment of D'Iberville Fortier in 1984, I believe, as Commissioner of Official Languages, which was sprung on us. I had never heard of the nomination until the moment it was brought forward. There was no real consultation.

Senator Frith: You got a call, and you did not make any calls. So it is no precedent.

Senator Murray: Notification is hardly consultation.

Senator Frith: It is a start. You didn't even bother to start consultation.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator cannot really assert that there has been consultation on these matters in every case in the past.

Senator Frith: Don't shoot the piano player; he is doing the best he can.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Murray: It is interesting that in several cases there is legislation on the books that requires consultation among the parties. That is the case with the legislation governing the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service in which the Security Intelligence Review Committee is appointed by the Governor in Council, not after a parliamentary vote, but after consultation among the political parties. The same holds true for the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security.

It is also interesting to note that when this legislation was going through Parliament back in 1982 an effort was made by the New Democratic Party to establish a higher threshold of approval in the case of the commissioner of privacy. Mr. Svend Robinson, then as now a New Democratic Member of Parliament, took the position that there should be a provision that would ensure a very large measure of consensus for this appointment.

Senator Frith: I remember that, and I agreed with him.

Senator Murray: My friend says he agreed with him, but when the matter came up in an amendment proposed in the committee by Mr. Svend Robinson, requiring a two-thirds approval by the members present and voting for the Privacy Commissioner, you did not support it.

Senator Frith: That is not the same thing.

Senator Murray: You didn't support it.

Senator Frith: I was not there; I was never in the House of Commons.

Senator Murray: At the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee of the House of Commons—

Senator Frith: I was never a member of that committee.

Senator Murray: I am glad to know, however, that you supported it.

Senator Frith: What are you trying to prove, that there is something here between me and Mr. Robinson?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is making a case that it should not be sufficient for the government of the day or for a simple majority of the House of Commons or the Senate to approve of such an appointment.

Senator Frith: That's right.

Senator Murray: That was exactly Mr. Robinson's point, that there should be a higher threshold of approval. He proposed that two-thirds of the members present and voting should be required to approve the appointment of a Commissioner of Privacy and a Commissioner of Information. The sponsoring minister at the time was the Honourable Francis Fox. Mr. Fox simply stated that these positions, privacy and access to information, were being filled on the same basis as the Commissioner of Official Languages, the Chief Electoral Officer and the other officers that Senator Frith mentioned. Mr. Fox concluded that a simple majority should suffice, period. In the event, he and his Liberal colleagues—and I may say their Progressive Conservative colleagues on that committee—together voted down Mr. Svend Robinson's attempt to provide for a higher threshold of approval.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Murray a question arising out of that? Obviously, Senator Murray has done a good deal of research. Can he give us one example of such an appointment—and we know we are talking about this class of appointment—that was made in spite of recorded voted opposition by the two major opposition parties?

Senator Murray: No, I cannot, honourable senators, but I do not think that the answer speaks very well for honourable senators and honourable members of the other place who have voted against the appointment of an experienced and reputable journalist to a position of this kind because he had spent two years in a political office. I do not think that particular stand on the part of honourable senators and their counterparts in the House of Commons speaks very well for them.

The honourable senator speaks of the need for objectivity in a position of this kind, and the appearance of objectivity, but where more than the bench must we have people who are non-partisan, who are objective, and who also have the appearance of objectivity? Yet my honourable friends opposite have appointed people to the courts right out of the Liberal caucus, right out of the Liberal cabinet.

Senator Simard: That's right!

Senator Murray: In one of their last acts, in June of 1984, they did that with a number of their colleagues.

Senator Frith: Come on! This is hardly the question I asked you, but go ahead. None of those judges are parliamentary agents, which is what we are discussing here. We are not discussing judicial appointments. We are discussing appointments of agents of Parliament. Your answer to my question was that there never has been a case where anyone was so appointed against the voted opposition of the major parties. So that is the answer to my question.

Senator Murray: What I am saying, honourable senators, is that what we are really discussing here is integrity and objectivity, and the appearance of integrity and objectivity, and there is no one that I know of in this caucus or among my friends on the other side who raised a syllable of objection when Mark MacGuigan, Yvon Pinard, Bud Cullen, Jean-Eudes Dube and a number of other people went directly from the Liberal caucus in the House of Commons, or indeed from the cabinet, right to the bench.

Senator Frith: They were appointed in accordance with traditions and procedures established—

Senator Murray: That is what we are doing now.

Senator Frith: No, we are not. You cannot give us a single example of anyone who was appointed to this kind of job against such opposition. That is all I was asking. We are not talking about judicial appointments. That is another debate, as you say.

Senator Murray: But why are you objecting to this appointment? Do you question his integrity? Do you question his objectivity?

Senator Frith: No. The question is about following the procedures which make it clear that this person is an agent of Parliament. That is all. It has never been done against such opposition. That was my question and that was your answer.

Senator Murray: The procedures are set out in the Privacy Act. The procedure is that the person is appointed—

Senator Frith: You cannot give us an example of its ever being done against opposition.

Senator Cogger: Order!

Senator Murray: —by the Governor in Council after an affirmative vote by the Senate and the House of Commons. When an attempt was made some years ago to have a higher threshold, such as two-thirds approval or a wider consensus, it was rejected by the government of the day on the basis that a simple majority should suffice. So let us have the report back here; let us, by all means, discuss the suitability of Mr. Phillips for the post; and let us discuss, if you wish, the process that was followed. I am saying that the experience has been mixed over the years and no one has adduced evidence to the contrary. There is every reason why we should bring forward this report from the committee now, or at any rate before Friday, so that the Senate will have an opportunity to vote on this matter.

Senator Frith: Nice try!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have said enough on this matter, I think. I have tried to be non-contentious and non-controversial. Apparently I was not unprovocative judging by the speech we have heard from Senator Frith and the numerous interruptions of my remarks. Having said that, and because the issue is anticipated in Senator Frith's remarks, I want once again to state that, for my money, on the basis of an acquaintance that goes back almost 30 years, Bruce Phillips is an eminently well-suited candidate for this post. He has all the objectivity, experience, integrity and ability needed to fill the position with distinction. I hope, honourable senators, that in your wisdom you will see it this way when we come to the second vote by Friday, which will be for the confirmation or otherwise of Mr. Phillips in this position.

Senator Frith: And none of that can change if one-third of Parliament does not want him to represent it.

Senator Murray: A simple majority should suffice.

Hon. John B. Stewart: I should like to ask a question or two. Senator Murray has made the point that the procedures for the appointment of the Chief Justice of Canada are not as stringent as those prescribed in the case of the Privacy Commissioner since, in the case of the Privacy Commissioner, there has to be a positive resolution of each of the two houses of Parliament. That is a significant point. I understood the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate to say that the procedure laid down by statute for this appointment is comparable to that for the Chief Electoral Officer. Did I understand him to say that?

Senator Murray: I think that was Senator Frith's point.

Senator Stewart: But I believe you confirmed it in your statement.

Senator Murray: I think so, yes.

Senator Stewart: I am not disputing that statement; rather I want to ask a question, and to put that question in a caricature form. Let us say that we had a Liberal government.

Senator Simard: No, no! A nightmare!

Senator Stewart: The precedent now being established will apply whether there is a Conservative government, a Liberal government or a New Democratic Party government. Let us say that we had a Liberal government with a majority in the House of Commons and a majority in the Senate, and let us say that the Liberal Prime Minister proposed Mr. Eddie Goldenberg as the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada and that his nomination was opposed, I would think understandably, by the Conservatives and the New Democrats in the House of Commons and that it was opposed by the Conservative senators. The question is: Would that be the kind of appointment that was contemplated when Parliament enacted provisions stating that these special appointments would be made on a basis even more demanding than those that apply to the appointment of the Chief Justice of Canada?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am sure there are many positions that Mr. Goldenberg could fill with considerable distinction. For all I know, he may be looking for some of those appointments in the near future. I must say that the analogies that the honourable senator tries to draw, first of all, in the respective positions held by Bruce Phillips for, I believe, two years and Mr. Goldenberg for his entire life, and, secondly, between the Chief Electoral Officer and the Privacy Commissioner, really do not compare at all. You are talking about sending the campaign manager, in the case of Eddie Goldenberg, to take charge of Elections Canada. In the case of Mr. Phillips, we are talking about a man who has spent 35 years of his life in the journalistic profession, two or three years in Washington serving the ambassador of the Government of Canada, Mr. Gotlieb, and two years in the Prime Minister's office as Director of Communications, going to a position of Commissioner of Privacy—

Senator Frith: For Parliament.

Senator Murray: —for which, because of his background as a journalist, I believe him to be—and most people believe him to be—eminently suitable.

● (1630)

I want to share something with the honourable senator since he mentioned the Chief Electoral Officer. One of the early appointments to that position way back in 1920 was a man by the name of O.M. Biggar, whose appointment was brought forward by the Conservative government of the day. There was an exchange in the House of Commons about that appointment on June 26, 1920, in which Mr. MacKenzie King, the Leader of the Opposition, speaking of Mr. Biggar, said:

> . . . I mentioned to the minister at the time that so far as I was aware, Mr. Biggar, at the last election, was a supporter of the Union Government. As my hon. friend knows, I was opposed to the Union Government. If being a supporter of the Government was an evidence of partisanship, Mr. Biggar was certainly a partisan on that occasion. On the other hand I have reason to believe that Mr. Biggar in the judgment that he exercised at that time, took the position he did from an independent mind. He took, I believe, the course which seemed to him right and proper. I have the highest admiration for his character. I think he will prove an honourable and an efficient public servant, and although the fact that he supported this Government in the last election is a misfortune, I do not think that should be held against him indefinitely. I am prepared to say that as far as we on this side of the House are concerned we have implicit confidence in his integrity and ability.

That was a rather higher standard of objectivity and, if I may say so, of charity demonstrated in 1920 by MacKenzie King than we are having here today.

Senator Stewart: I thank the honourable Leader of the Government for his reply. That reply makes my point. I do not suggest that either Mr. Phillips or Mr. Goldenberg is not an admirable person. That is a matter of personal judgment. The question is whether the two Opposition parties in the House of Commons are prepared to support Mr. Phillips for the post of Privacy Commissioner and whether the Opposition in the Senate is prepared to support Mr. Phillips' nomination. They have given an unequivocal negative response. I took Mr. Goldenberg as an example. I am not saying that he would not be a good Chief Electoral Officer, but I can understand why Opposition parties might not be prepared to support his nomination. Senator Murray should realize that our resistance to his motion is not directed specifically against a particular person. The two Opposition parties, perhaps rightly, perhaps wrongly, came to the conclusion that they did not want Mr. Phillips. As Senator Frith has said, it is difficult to see, given that background, how Mr. Phillips can perform satisfactorily. Mr. King, in the comment that Senator Murray just now has quoted, made the point perfectly. He said that the man had a partisan background, but that partisanship was not in itself decisive against such an appointment. That was said, of course, in the committee on Mr. Phillips' nomination. Partisanship is not decisive. It was not decisive in the case of Mr. Fairweather, for example. A lot of people can be partisan and become excellent judges or fill those posts to the satisfaction of everyone. The truth of the matter—

Senator Murray: What is the point? Why do you oppose him?

Senator Stewart: The truth of the matter is that—

Senator Frith: He doesn't get it, he doesn't understand it.

Senator Stewart: The truth of the matter is that when Mr. Biggar was to be appointed, Mr. King said that he understood that Biggar had been partisan but that he had confidence in him. The same was said in the case of Mr. Fairweather. The same is not being said in the case of Mr. Phillips. It is not a question of explaining why people react as they do. One does not have to justify why one refuses to marry a particular person.

Senator Barootes: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker and honourable senators, it appears to me that the closing speech was being made in this debate, and I have waited to hear a decision. Now we are hearing intervening speeches and, as far as I am concerned, that is out of order.

Senator Stewart: Perhaps Senator Murray would deal very briefly with my question. Will he not agree that the parties in opposition have made it clear that they are not satisfied with the proposed appointment and that because of their dissatisfaction is it not improper for the government to use its majority to pass the nomination?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot accept that proposition because the honourable senator is putting forward the proposition that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, or the opposition parties, should have a veto over parliamentary officers. That is a proposition that cannot be put forward and defended.

Senator Frith: And has been followed.

Senator Murray: No, it has not been followed.

Senator Frith: You have not been able to give a single case of an exception; you have not. Do not keep saying that, because you have admitted that you cannot give an example of its ever happening against parliamentary opposition.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, when the question was put to Parliament and to the parliamentary committee, "Should there be some higher threshold than a simple majority?", the answer was no.

Senator Frith: That is not the point, for God's sake. You know it's not the point.

Senator Murray: We do not accept that there should be a veto, but if the committee wishes—

Senator Frith: I cannot believe you are saying this.

Senator Murray: —to suggest that in the future something requiring consultation should be put in this legislation, such as exists with the CSIS legislation and with the legislation regarding the Canadian Institute of International Peace and Security, that can be considered. If the committee wishes to bring in a suggestion that at some future time these acts should be amended to provide that there must be unanimity or to provide that there has to be the approval of the leaders of all the parties in Parliament, we can consider that. However, the law provides that a simple majority of approval in the House of Commons and the Senate should suffice. When challenged on it the government of the day insisted on that position. That is the law, and the honourable senator has not been able to show that a veto has ever been attempted or exercised in any other circumstance.

I ask for the report to come forward so that the Senate can decide. I hope that my friends will take advantage of the opportunity to do something they have not done and state what failings of character, integrity, ability or background Mr. Phillips has which render him unsuitable for this position.

DIVISION DEFERRED

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be instructed to report no later than Friday, April 19, 1991, the motion respecting the appointment of the Privacy Commissioner.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say, "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say, "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Please call in the senators.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, after consultation with the opposition whip and under rule P-3.(e), I move that the vote be deferred until four o'clock tomorrow. I would point out that the rule calls for a 30 minute bell to ring at 3:30 for a recorded voted at four o'clock.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): And it also calls for 5:45. The rule provides for 5:45, so I take it Senator Phillips and Senator Petten have agreed on this.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, the government whip and I have discussed this and we agree that the vote should take place at four o'clock with the bells starting to ring at 3:30. So that there will be no doubt anyone's mind, the bells will start at 3:30 and the vote will be at four o'clock.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave I move that all remaining orders, inquiries and motions stand.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF ENACTMENT

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, today, April 17, is an important day in contemporary Canadian history, for today we mark and celebrate the coming into force of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Charter, to which many honourable members of this house contributed in its making, serves as a cornerstone for the practice of freedom in Canada.

It is therefore appropriate that this day serves also to anchor National Citizenship Week, being celebrated this year from April 14 to April 20. The theme of this year's National Citizenship Week has two components. The first is to encourage individual Canadians to reflect upon the common values and beliefs that characterize Canadian citizenship and that have contributed so much to our nation's cultural, spiritual and material wealth. The second is to nurture and strengthen those citizenship values for the benefit of future generations. In the years ahead our sense of fairness and justice, our commitment to peaceful democracy and our belief as Canadians in equality of opportunity and respect for diversity will gain deeper meaning as they are tested by the events around us.

Honourable senators, we must ensure that our sense of common purpose is strengthened by this process so that the great legacy of Canadian citizenship will pass on as that which brings all Canadians closer together.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

USE OF REVENUES TO REDUCE NATIONAL DEBT—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege involving the response received from the government to my question further to the proposed Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund. You will recall that the government has indicated through the recent budget of Mr. Wilson that every penny of revenue from the GST, a tax which we are all aware has replaced the manufacturers' sales tax, will go to debt servicing and reduction. Members on this side and others asked that at least the surplus funds received from this unpopular tax, which I think will be fairly substantial, would be designated to debt reduction.

For those honourable senators who were not here or who did not read the Hansard, as reported on March 26 at page 5511, I read from the budget debate. Mr. Wilson said:

> As part of our Plan for Economic Recovery, we will ensure that all GST revenues are allocated solely to the effort to bring the public debt under control. This will be done through legislation to establish the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund into which all GST revenues will flow.

I then said that I was delighted to see this. I referred to Senator Lawson's amendment, which asked for surplus revenues to go to debt reduction. I wanted an explanation of how this was going to work, in view of the fact that there was $20 billion worth of former revenue from the manufacturers' sales tax. I wanted to know where that was going to be replaced if all the revenue from the GST was going to debt reduction, which was the impression given by the minister and, of course, applauded by newspaper editorials and others who said how marvellous it was that, finally, with the GST we were going to have debt reduction of all revenue.

The response to this question came from the government last Wednesday. I would like to read it to you. It is in the record. It was never discussed or read; it was just tabled. I think it is very important. I will read just three paragraphs of the government's response, among other things. It reads:

> The Government, in establishing the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund, has gone considerably farther than what was suggested by Senator Lawson in his proposed amendment to Bill C-62. Senator Lawson had suggested that any surplus revenue, that is revenue in excess of $21 billion, be applied to the reduction of the federal debt.
> The Government is proposing that all Goods and Services Tax revenues, net of the rebate to lower-income Canadians and the applicable credits, be allocated to a special fund, called the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund. This Fund will also receive the net proceeds from privatization and debt contributions made by the general public. Public debt charges will be the only expenditure allocated to this Fund.
> This means that all revenues collected from the Goods and Services Tax will be allocated to this fund, not just that amount in excess of what would have been collected under the manufacturers' sales tax. This will provide Canadians with the assurance that all revenues from the Goods and Services Tax will go directly to the payment of the interest on the public debt and therefore to deficit and debt reduction. By allocating all revenues to the Fund, none of the Goods and Services Tax revenues can be used to fund new program spending.

I did some research on just how they are going to work this magic. That was the response, and I think all of you who are following will say that that is great, they are going to take all that money and we will have a reduction in debt. Let me read into the record an analysis of what the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund is and what it is not.

> The federal budget, tabled in February, 1991, contained proposals to create a new Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund, (DSRF) into which would flow all GST and privatization revenues as well as any donations to the government for debt reduction. To the extent financially possible, this fund will finance debt service charges and debt reduction. The legislation establishing this fund is forthcoming.

That is a review of what I have just said.

> The existence of this new fund is neither necessary nor sufficient for future deficit reductions! That is, future deficit reductions are not assured because of the existence of this fund nor would deficit reductions be precluded by its absence.

It really does not mean a thing.

> The budgetary deficit measures the extent to which the total spending (program spending plus interest charges) exceeds total revenues (GST revenues plus all other tax and non-tax revenue). Whenever total spending exceeds total revenues, the budget is in deficit and the net debt of the federal government increases.
> If we take one component of total revenues and apply it against one component of total spending, the deficit will not change. To alter the deficit requires a behavioral change on the part of the government. The Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund does not necessarily provide that change; rather, it might simply be a rearrangement of the line items in the Public Accounts.

I will not go into the detail of the line elements, although I have it available here. I can only tell you that by simply rearranging the Public Accounts presentation, a new debt service retirement fund has been created simply as a subtotal on the way to calculating the deficit.

● (1410)

If this is all that the DRSF is, it is a meaningless feature of economic policy. Although the legislation creating the fund is not yet public, let us assume that it will include some behavioural content. In particular, let us assume that the legislative intent is to convert any positive balance in the DSRF—that is, the Debt Servicing Reduction Fund—into a reduction in the deficit. In other words, let us assume that any positive DSRF balance cannot be used to justify a negative non-DSRF balance. Such a restriction could be effective in predicting that the non-DSRF balance will be positive next year, 1992-1993.

It could be positive. However, its practical significance is nil since the DSRF is not expected to be in surplus at any time in the foreseeable future. Indeed, what is particularly interesting about the Summary Statement of Transactions from the 1991 budget is the fact that future deficit reductions are really coming from rapidly increasing non-Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund balances, not from changes in the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund.

Even if any DSRF surplus were required to be used to purchase existing government securities and to reduce outstanding debt, there is no assurance that the deficit debt would be reduced. As long as non-DSRF budgetary items are free to be altered, the deficit and the debt will not be constrained by the existence of this fund.

Honourable senators, the importance of legislative limits on program spending becomes evident. These limits are more important in controlling the deficit than in the proposed Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund. Even with these spending limits, deficit reduction is not assured, because line 5 in the new public accounts—that is, non-GST revenues—are still free to fluctuate or to be changed by government policies.

I conclude by saying that by itself the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund cannot control and does not reduce the deficit. The deficit identified contains too many elements that are outside the realm of the DSRF. It is worth repeating that the annual deficit is the difference between total spending and total revenue. It does not matter that GST revenues go to pay debt charges or paying off the debt. If they did not, some other taxes would pay for those costs. Because GST revenues are used exclusively for paying interest costs, they are no longer available to finance existing programs the way those programs were financed by the old federal sales tax.

Comparing the budgetary provisions creating the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund to the amendment of Senator Lawson can be misleading. As honourable senators will recall, the government, in its response, said that this is much better than Senator Lawson's proposal. Honourable senators will remember that on the amendment that was brought forward, and supported by those of us on this side and some others, Senator Lawson said that any surplus revenue more than the present manufacturers' sales tax should be directly applied. The response was, "Oh, no, this is much better."

However, I say that Senator Lawson's provision applies to all GST revenues, not what is simply called a debt reduction fund. Therefore it is incomprehensible to me how the government could say that this fund will have the effect of reducing the deficit better than Senator Lawson's proposal, which is impossible, or whether, in fact, it reduces it at all.

In the government's scheme, GST revenues apply to interest charges before they apply to debt reductions, and the large amount of interest charges guarantees that it will be a very long time before they are actually applied against debt reduction. In Senator Lawson's scheme, excess GST revenues would be applied to debt reduction much faster. Therefore it is inaccurate to suggest that the government, in establishing the Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund, has gone considerably farther than what was suggested by Senator Lawson in his proposed amendment to Bill C-62.

Once again we have seen the government mislead the public and give information which is not based on facts. This is another illustration of smoke and mirrors, of hocus-pocus, of funny financing, and trying to convince the Canadian public that, suddenly, GST revenues are going to reduce the deficit. That has been the headline in any number of newspapers, as I have said. It is not generally understood that this has been just another of Mr. Wilson's attempts to fool the Canadian public. I think it is important that we have it clearly on the record just what this Debt Service Reduction Fund means. It is just another way of manipulating the figures. It makes no difference to the bottom line.

Here is a headline from today's Globe and Mail: "Survey Shows GST Slash Spending." I will not read you the article from Senator Doyle's famous former paper. Here is another one: "Trips to the US Up 27.3 %." Honourable senators, the economy is in a shambles. A good part of it is due to the impact of the GST on the purchasing habits of the Canadian public. There is no doubt that they are holding back in their spending. There are any number of surveys that have been made that have indicated that spending has dropped. The poll conducted in March by the Angus Reid Group found that 41 per cent of people in Atlantic Canada cut their spending because of the GST. Elsewhere it was 45 per cent in Quebec, 48 per cent in Ontario, 45 per cent in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, 39 per cent in Alberta and 40 per cent in British Columbia.

We wonder why the economy is on the point of bankruptcy. Honourable senators, should get out into the streets to find out what is happening in the retail trade and in the service industries of this country. They will discover the impact of the GST, which we on this side said was a tax that should not have been applied at this time, that it was inappropriate in its present form because of its recessionary and inflationary nature. We are seeing the chickens come home to roost. We have watched bankruptcies soar and retail spending drop. We have watched cross-border retail transactions increasing by leaps and bounds. From this we see some of the damage that has been done to the economy by an uncaring government; a government that is prepared to give a misleading answer to my question, saying that it is going to reduce the debt by the GST. In fact, it is just a bunch of flim-flam and nonsense.

● (1420)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, this is all very interesting, but whatever it is it is not a question of privilege. Once again, the honourable senator has demonstrated the need for some positive changes in our rules to define what is a question of privilege and how it should be dealt with when it is brought up.

Having said that, I suppose I cannot complain, because the honourable senator, with his speech, has cut into the time that would otherwise have been spent on the Oral Question Period.

Honourable senators, the subject matter the honourable senator raises, and the subject matter of the question and answer about which he is speaking, will be the subject of a bill to be brought in by the Minister of Finance in the next little while. That bill will establish the Deficit and Debt Reduction Fund. It will indicate how this will be done.

The honourable senator and others will have an opportunity to express their views on it at that time, and to ask questions of the responsible minister when the bill goes, as it surely will, to one of our committees.

[Senator Buckwold.]

LAW DAY, 1991

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS—NINTH ANNIVERSARY

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I rise today, April 17, on a day that has come to be known in our country as Law Day.

The notion that all people have certain inalienable rights marks the beginning of modern, democratic, civilized society. It began for western nations when King John, at Runnymede in 1215, put his name to a document that guaranteed certain rights to his subjects that were independent of their position in society. To quote, "To no one will we sell, to no one deny or delay right or justice."

Today this principle seems self-evident. Yet, when it was accepted grudgingly by King John, it represented a great step toward a different kind of society, one that would more and more become anchored in the notion that freedom and liberty depended to a large extent on the respect for individual human rights.

More than seven and a half centuries later Canada has continued in this tradition of the Crown guaranteeing fundamental rights.

Today Canada celebrates the ninth anniversary of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms that gives all Canadians inalienable rights, including democratic rights, legal rights, mobility rights, equality rights and minority language education rights.

It is with pride and a sense of accomplishment that Canadians can mark this ninth anniversary of the Charter, which will contribute to the future evolution of the Canadian legal system as our society heads toward the 21st Century.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

WAYNE R. CHAPMAN, QC, PRESIDENT OF THE CANADIAN BAR ASSOCIATION
MISS CARMEN BROWN, WINNER OF NATIONAL HIGH SCHOOL LAW DAY ESSAY CONTEST

Hon. Gérald-A Beaudoin: I should like at this time to draw the attention of honourable senators to the presence in the gallery of the President of the Canadian Bar Association, Wayne R. Chapman, QC, of Saint John, New Brunswick. Mr. Chapman is visiting us as part of the celebrations associated with Law Day. He is accompanied by the winner of the National High School Law Day essay contest, Carmen Brown, of Kelowna, British Columbia.

Law Day, commemorated across Canada on the anniversary of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is sponsored by the Canadian Bar Association. It is aimed at providing the general public with an increased awareness of our legal system and how it works.

[Translation]

In recognition of the work accomplished by the Canadian Bar Association to promote legal training and provide information on our legal system across Canada, I should point out that the association, which represents lawyers at the national level, has joined the Department of Justice and provincial legislatures in helping the public learn about our legal system and its institutions.

[English]

Across the country, thousands of lawyers and notaries are going out into the communities they serve to demystify the law and inform their fellow citizens about their constitutional rights and freedoms. Canadians from all walks of life coast to coast will be learning about how the law works and how it should work for them.

[Translation]

In many cities there will be information booths, visits to the court house, mock courts and other activities open to the public and designed to make Canadians more familiar with legal matters.

[English]

Hundreds of high school students across Canada participated in the essay contest as part of this year's Law Day activities. The subject of this year's contest was environmental law. Carmen Brown was selected as the national winner from the provincial finalists. As winner, Carmen received an award from the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada earlier today.

I ask honourable senators to join me in acknowledging Mr. Chapman and Miss Carmen Brown, and the work done by the Canadian Bar Association, regarding Law Day, 1991.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would not want to let the occasion of the anniversary of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to pass with praises being given only by members of the Conservative Party and not by members of the Liberal Opposition.

I should say that when I was sitting on the other side—the government, then Liberal, side—of the house, when the Charter was passed, the praises for it from the Conservative side of the house were not as fulsome as they are today. However, I think we can all agree that we rejoice in its existence.

I should like to take a moment to congratulate the President of the Canadian Bar Association and his colleagues for what may seem like a small thing but which, to me, seems like a very creative idea. In today's The Ottawa Citizen—and, I take it, in many other newspapers, there is a listing of all the lawyers in the region, categorized by their specialty. For Law Day the public is entitled to phone and ask questions of any of these specialists in their field. All lawyers on the list are categorized. Some of my colleagues in Perth are in several categories. The public is invited to call for free legal advice. I think that is a very creative idea, and I am sure it has been accompanied by other creative ways to celebrate Law Day.

I join with my colleagues in congratulating the Canadian Bar Association for the development of the idea of Law Day and the very creative and successful way in which it is promoting it.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have before me several petitions from branches of the Royal Canadian Legion of Canada. They were presented to the chairman of our committee, Senator Jack Marshall, from New Brunswick; from Richmond, Melbourne and other cities in the province of Quebec; from Angus, Agincourt, Ajax, Toronto, Mississauga and Nepean in the province of Ontario; from Dubuc, Tribune and Weyburn in the province of Saskatchewan; and from Hastings and London in the province of Ontario.

● (1430)

I have others from London, Ontario, from Winnipeg, Manitoba, from Winfred, Alberta, from Branch 628 in Chatham, Ontario, from Smiths Falls, Ontario, from Vancouver, British Columbia, and Prince Edward Island.

Senator Murray: What part?

Senator Bonnell: The regions of Morell, Charlottetown, Rustico.

Let me tell honourable senators what these veterans are asking for. The petition states:

> WHEREAS Canada once again has become involved in an international war, this time under the auspices of the United Nations, and has dispatched a substantial number of armed forces to the theatre of war, and
> WHEREAS there remain a number of inequities and anomalies in Canada's treatment of the veterans of previous conflicts and peacekeeping operations, most notably in Canada's treatment of veterans of the merchant navy, veterans living abroad, veterans who were prisoners of war, veterans blinded as a result of wartime service, veterans of United Nations emergency special and peacekeeping forces, and
> WHEREAS a Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has just finished a study of these inequities and anomalies and has tabled its Report, It's Almost too Late.
> WHEREFORE the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge the government to take immediate steps to consider and implement the recommendations of the aforesaid Report, to wit:

1. THAT at the earliest possible opportunity, the Government of Canada introduce legislation to extend full veterans benefits to all Canadian merchant seamen who served in dangerous waters in Canada's armed conflicts;

2. THAT the War Veterans Allowance Act be amended to define as a veteran all merchant seamen—

Senator Simard: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order.

Senator Bonnell: What is your point of order? Is it against the veterans?

Senator Simard: Yesterday, or the day before, Senator Frith told us that he tried to remain within the bounds of tradition and fairness and he was allowed to proceed with a brief explanation of the petition.

I submit, Senator Bonnell, that you are in breach of this policy and tradition and what is accepted in this house, and perhaps you will consider keeping this presentation a little briefer than you had in mind. We want to hear from people in P.E.I. and the rest of Canada, but I believe there is other business in this house that needs to be attended to.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I never thought Senator Simard was against the veterans, but apparently he is. Again he is making speeches under presentation of petitions. I do not see why he does not make his speech and ask questions in the appropriate place.

Senator Simard: Respect the rules.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, the petition continues:

3. THAT the Government of Canada prepare and place in the Peace Tower [of the Parliament Buildings in Ottawa] a Book of Remembrance honouring merchant seamen who died of enemy action in Canadian armed conflicts and, further, that suitable monuments to their sacrifices be erected;

Who would be against that?

4. THAT the residency requirement of the War Veterans Allowance Act and Part XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act be amended to permit otherwise qualified veterans to apply for benefits from outside Canada;

5. THAT the Canadian government take immediate steps to negotiate an agreement with the United Kingdom to exempt [payments under the] War Veterans Allowance Act from British taxes;

6. THAT the rates of compensation provided for under the Prisoners of War Compensation Act be reviewed with the objective of taking into account the severity of the prisoner of war regime forced on veterans by the award of additional compensation for each month deemed extremely severe, and that two additional categories be added at appropriate rates of compensation for those veterans who served 30 months or more as prisoners of war;

7. THAT for the purposes of establishing entitlements to the Veterans Independence Program, receipt of prisoner-of-war compensation be treated as proof of undiagnosed medical disability;

8. THAT the Veterans Independence Program immediately be extended to civilians who served in support of the wartime armed forces, as enumerated in [the definition of "civilian" in] Part XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, and that these benefits be comparable to those offered to military veterans;

9. THAT the cuts to the heavy housekeeping components of the Veterans Independence Program be fully restored;

10. THAT the Veterans Allowance Act be amended:

(1) to establish a common age at which both men and women qualify for benefits and that this common age be 55;

(2) to make eligible for benefits all those Canada service veterans of World War I and World War II who volunteered for unrestricted active duty, who were assigned to serve within the boundaries of Canada, who served for no less than 365 days, and who are in need;

11. THAT the Pension Commission give careful consideration to the psychological problems that may arise when the stresses of retiring and aging are combined with those of blindness, and that these problems [be taken into consideration by the Commission when it assesses] applications for exceptional incapacity; and

12. THAT peacetime service personnel pensioned under the Special Duty Area Pension Order be eligible for benefits under the Veterans Independence Program.

MAY WE REMEMBER BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE, AND AS IN DUTY BOUND YOUR PETITIONERS WILL EVER PRAY.

Honourable senators, I want to table this last petition. I am most pleased that other senators appreciate our veterans and listen to their concerns, especially when they come from so many different branches across Canada. I am surprised that Senator Simard did not agree with them.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a number of petitions signed by 973 citizens who maintain their opposition to the goods and services tax and want to see this unfair and unpopular legislation repealed.

I have one signed by 28 petitioners from British Columbia. Here is another one from British Columbia, signed by 27 petitioners. Here is one more with 27 names from British Columbia.

I have another one here from Alberta, signed by 27 petitioners. Here is another one, with 27 names, from Saskatchewan and another one with 24 names, from Manitoba. I have another one with 24 names, from Manitoba as well.

Here we have 24 petitioners from New Brunswick, 16 from Nova Scotia, and 27, again from Nova Scotia. We also have 30 petitioners from Newfoundland.

Here we have 556 petitioners from Ontario and 136 from Quebec.

As you can see, opposition to this unfair and unpopular legislation is widespread.

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I missed my chance when questions of privilege were raised. I was going to introduce a question of privilege tomorrow, but I understand there may be some agreement to adjourn this evening, so I will do so when I get the first opportunity later this day.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have some petitions, and I am obliged to Senator Simard for pointing out that this might be a good opportunity to remind us of the importance of this right.

• (1440)

I remind honourable senators of the following sources of support for this right of petitions. I shall read a short excerpt from a couple of texts. Beauchesne's at page 209 Chapter 16 starts off with citation 666:

> The right of petitioning the Crown and Parliament for the redress of grievances is acknowledged as a fundamental principle of the constitution and has been exercised without interruption since 1867.

Erskine May gives us more of the history. They start off their chapter 32 on the subject with the subheading "Course of Development of the Form of Petitioning":

> The right of petitioning the Crown and Parliament for redress of grievances is acknowledged as a fundamental principle of the constitution. It has been uninterruptedly exercised from very early times, and has had a profound effect in determining the main forms of Parliamentry procedure . . . Public petitions may pray for an alteration of the general law or the re-consideration of the general administrative decision, and they may also pray for redress of local or personal grievances; they are to be distinguished from petitions relating directly to private business.
> The rights of petitioners and the power of the House to deal with petitions were laid down by two resolutions of the Commons in 1669.
> That it is the inherent right of every commoner in England to prepare and present petitions to the House of Commons in the case of grievance, and the House of Commons to receive the same.
> That it is an undoubted right and privilege of the Commons to judge and determine, touching the nature and matter of such petitions, how far they are fit and unfit to be received.

I suppose that is related to the procedure in the other place, to have them checked beforehand to see whether they are regular. Finally, I have a quotation from a book entitled "Constitutional and Legal History of England," which deals with petitions and refers to advances in the rights of the subjects. The heading on page 151 is "Their Influence Over Legislation," and it reads:

> The second advance was the winning of the right to petition the king as a body for redress of grievances, a right from which later legislative powers sprang. Wherever the king went in the Middle Ages he was besieged by suitors requesting justice or favours of one kind or another . . . Conciliar meetings held to consider these petitions were thus very important, and a special name of Parliament was first given to those held for such purposes.

It is interesting that the first time the word "Parliament" was used was in connection with this right to petition. It is not as if Parliament existed and then decided to give subjects the right. These conciliary meetings that the king arranged were really the beginnings of Parliament. So petitioners really created Parliament. It is hardly surprising that they still expect to speak to Parliament. Continuing on:

> Originally "colloquium," or "parliament" (talkfest, from the French parler, to speak), was considered merely another name for "council," and the technical significance of the term as applied to special sessions of this body developed but slowly.

Then I have some quotes on the procedures, and that brings me to the question of procedures. As Senator Simard said yesterday, I should not read the full petitions. I will simply say that I have two, addressed to me, that arrived today, one from Ontario fully signed with approximately 25 names, mostly from Kirkland Lake, and another from Montreal, Quebec. I was also asked to present a large number of petitions on behalf of Senator MacEachen's office. These are older petitions. There is a batch of about 12 with about 27 signatures per page. Then there are some with signatures on both sides amounting to 40 or more. There is also a bunch with around 26—it looks like about 50. So 50 by 25 comes to about 1,000 names; and then I have about 50 names from the two petitions I received today.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: What are the two you received today asking for?

Senator Frith: They are the same as the ones I mentioned earlier; namely:

> Wherefore . . . we humbly pray and call upon the Senators and the MPs . . . to do everything possible to abolish the new Goods and Services Tax, and we strongly demand a general election immediately.

That is the burden of the two petitions I received today. The others are all against the GST.

Senator Simard: They don't say that they will all vote Liberal.

Senator Frith: No. In fact, I did not present them for that purpose.

Senator Simard: So they are nonpartisan?

Senator Frith: I do not know, but I don't think they are from Liberal organizations. I think the two I presented came from a group, but I do not think it is a Liberal group. In fact, I am sure it is not, as it is not a party organization. Many of the others were from Peterborough. Senators will remember that there was a very active anti-GST group in Peterborough, but I do not think they had any particular party affiliation—not to my knowledge, anyway.

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: From what part of the country did that large bunch come?

Senator Frith: They were all from parts of Ontario. As I say, a very large proportion of them were from Peterborough, which is not far from Ottawa, just down No. 7 Highway, and from Lakefield, Apsley and communities in that area.

PRIVATE BILL

UNIVERSITY OF EMMANUEL COLLEGE—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, April 17, 1991

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

THIRTY-SEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-20, An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of the University of Emmanuel College, has in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, April 9, 1991, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Senator Buckwold is not here, but I notice that the order paper indicates that third reading will be at the next sitting of the Senate, so perhaps it might be appropriate to suggest the next sitting. I do not mind moving on behalf of Senator Buckwold that it be read at the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might move, on behalf of Senator Buckwold, that, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(b), the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Bonnell, for Senator Buckwold, bill read third time and passed.

QUESTION PERIOD

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

FIXED LINK—STATUS OF REPORT OF ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT AND REVIEW PANEL

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I read in The Ottawa Citizen of April 17 that the controversial fixed link to Prince Edward Island is to proceed, according to sources in Ottawa. The article says:

> The 13-kilometre, $1-billion bridge proposal has been stalled since last August by a federal environmental assessment and review panel decision that the bridge would block sea ice during spring break-up and damage the valuable inshore fishery.
> In response, the federal government appointed a so-called "ice panel" to look at the question again. A member of the panel says it will report Thursday that ice is no problem, giving the green light to the federal government to proceed.

Can the minister tell us if that is the case?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators, I cannot. The honourable senator knows it is not in order to ask ministers to comment on press reports. The situation is as I described it on an earlier occasion. We are awaiting the report of the so-called "ice experts." To my knowledge we have not yet received it. When we have received it, it will be a question of working with the consortium to see whether they can accommodate the recommendations of the ice experts in a way that will be economically feasible and environmentally sound.

Senator Bonnell: The minister is telling me, then, that this report from the ice experts has not been presented to the minister or the government at this time?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator asked me, in effect, whether the report had been received today. To the best of my knowledge, the answer to that question is no.

Senator Bonnell: I have a supplementary, honourable senators. The press release goes on further to state:

> Premier Joe Ghiz, who received the report last week, said Tuesday if the panel said ice was no problem, the fixed link should probably go ahead.

How is it that the Premier of Prince Edward Island says he received the report a week ago and yet the Government of Canada, which set up the panel, has not yet received a report? Can you tell me how that could be?

Senator Murray: Well, honourable senators, I do not exclude the possibility that the report has been received by one or other of my cabinet colleagues. What I have said is that, to the best of my knowledge, the report has not yet been received.

Senator Bonnell: By yourself, I suspect, but you do not know. There might be half a dozen of your cabinet colleagues who have the report. The cabinet may have it but you do not, probably because you are not there. As a result, we have to go by what you know, which apparently is nothing. The people of Prince Edward Island are waiting to find out if their fishery is going to be destroyed by ice, and the people of Canada want to know how much this billion dollar project is going to cost if the design is to be changed.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am sure the people of Prince Edward Island would like to know—and I would certainly like to know—where Senator Bonnell stands on this project. He has not yet come off the fence.

Senator Bonnell: You have to build it before you can stand on it.

Senator Barootes: Apparently he stands on both sides of the Northumberland Strait.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF ACROSS-THE-BORDER SHOPPING ON CANADIAN COMMUNITIES—REPORTS OF PROPOSED ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

An Hon. Senator: Louder!

Senator Perrault: Adjust your hearing aid. You should probably turn it down.

Senator Frith: And fasten your seat belts, too!

Senator Perrault: During the course of the committee hearings across the country regarding the GST, witness after witness, particularly those located in southern sections of Canada, warned that disaster was looming because many citizens living in southern Canadian communities such as southern Ontario, southern British Columbia and southern Alberta would go across the border to shop in nearby, adjacent American communities. Our fears were dismissed. We were accused of mindless and negative opposition to the GST, which was hailed as the great saviour of the country and a more equitable way to tax.

Last week it was reported that the government is now so concerned about the loss of sales to U.S. merchants that a very costly advertising and public relations campaign will be launched by the government in a propaganda campaign, an advertising initiative to persuade Canadian shoppers not to spend so much money—over a billion dollars a year from Ontario people alone—in shops across the line in the United States. If that does not indicate that the government is now seized with the same concern that we were seized with months ago, then I know nothing at all about politics or political strategy.

Senator Barootes: This is not a confessional!

Senator Perrault: My question for the Leader of the Government is this: Is a major advertising and promotion campaign being launched by the government to encourage people to buy Canadian? If so, I should also like to know whether the advertising agency has yet been appointed, the name of the agency that is about to embark upon this alleged political public relations safari, the name of the president of that agency, and what goals have been established by the government to stem the haemorrhage of dollars now going from southern Canada to the United States by people who want to evade the GST.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there being no plan for any such advertising campaign, the other questions put by the honourable senator are not applicable.

Senator Perrault: Then let me get this clear. Are we being told that the government has no plan to meet this emergency situation, as it has been described in the newspapers from coast to coast? Are these only rumours? Is the leader saying that the information which has appeared in the media is not factual?

Senator Murray: Once again, honourable senators, I do not know what media the honourable senator is talking about or what information he is referring to. What I have told him in answer to his question is that there is no plan for an advertising campaign such as he has just described.

Senator Perrault: Then I would ask the Leader of the Government to obtain information from his cabinet colleagues about the nature and gravity of this alleged situation. The reports, which appeared in journals from coast to coast and on television and radio, stated that Ontario alone is losing $1 billion in annual retail sales as a result of Ontario shoppers going to nearby American communities. The allegation is made that U.S. shopping centres are being established across the border from Vancouver, in Washington State, almost 90 per cent on the basis of Canadians spending their money there.

It is tough enough for business people to stay in business these days without having this terrible problem that we in the province of British Columbia and other provinces know only too well. As some members of the Senate will know, there is a small town of Blaine, just across the American border, where a huge, brand new shopping centre has been established. Recently, when the owner of the shopping centre was interviewed, he said that almost 100 per cent of his business is done with people from British Columbia. That is a terrible concern to our merchants there. It is beyond politics. What we are going to do about it is not a political issue. It is not a partisan issue at all. It is an economic fact of life which is driving some people in Southern Canada completely out of business.

• (1500)

We are all aware, honourable senators, of the "Going Out of Business" signs in shop windows all across the land—in Ontario, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Quebec, the Atlantic provinces, and British Columbia. That is why I find it very difficult to understand that the Leader of the Government has no knowledge even of any rumours, let alone reports, that this serious situation exists.

Again, will he undertake to obtain information about the situation if any information is available?

Senator Murray: Yes, honourable senators, I will attempt to obtain an up-to-date report from my colleagues, in particular Mr. Jelinek, the Minister of National Revenue, on this matter. My honourable friend says that he will treat the matter as a non-partisan one. I am glad to hear that. He will surely support the initiative which the government is taking to meet with other concerned governments at the provincial and municipal level to discuss this.

I would like to make one final point. Shopping decisions by Canadian citizens and others are influenced by many factors, not only by the imposition of the GST. There are also questions of productivity, competitiveness and taxes at the provincial level. There is the management and merchandising in the retail sector. There are many factors to be taken into consideration, and there will be ample opportunity to discuss these among the government representatives and with the private sector.

Finally, I should make the point that only three months into the implementation of the GST it is quite premature to draw any conclusions on its impact on our economy.

Senator Perrault: I appreciate the cooperative attitude of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but there is a troubling aspect of this concern being expressed by the merchants. Recently a spokesman for American retail business said that the fact that so many Canadians prefer to shop in the U.S., where gasoline prices are now alleged to be one-half to one-third of those in Canada, is the greatest bonanza that has ever occurred for the United States. People in the lower mainland of British Columbia go to Blaine, Washington, to fill up their tanks at for less than the cost of gasoline in Canada. Milk prices are said to be about 50 per cent less than the Canadian price. There are all sorts of reasons for these things; but for the Canadian merchant, trying to pay his taxes and stay in business, it is a real disaster. Many senators are aware of that.

[Senator Perrault.]

FOREST PRODUCTS INDUSTRY

CANADA-UNITED STATES MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT ON SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: I want to ask a second question which relates to the agreement that we concluded with the United States a few years ago to tack a special impost on Canadian lumber exports to the United States. I remember that Conservative members of Parliament and members of the Senate spoke in support of this measure. They said it was an amicable accommodation that would lead to cooperation between Canada and the United States. All of us remember the high-flown phrases. I am sorry my British Columbian colleague is not in her place, because she played a key role in bringing this agreement into force.

Simon Reisman was in British Columbia a few weeks ago and he said that in retrospect he does not think we should have signed the deal. He said that we felt we had to sign at the time, that, after all, "we had to give up something." Imagine, our most important export is our forest products, and Simon Reisman came to B.C. and said that in retrospect he does not think we should have signed the forestry deal after all, and that we should have "hung tougher"—exactly what we said in 1986. Some negotiation! The Americans were never able to prove that we were competing unfairly, but we accepted this deal. We are now having emergency meetings on the west coast involving labour and management, major forest companies and government officials truly concerned about the effect the draconian, unfair forestry deal is now having on the lumber industry.

Does the Leader of the Government in the Senate now agree with Simon Reisman that the deal should not have been signed? Reisman defends his actions by pleading that "we had to give up something." John Crosbie came out to B.C. recently. Imagine, the main supporter of this deal a few years ago was John Crosbie, and he stood up at a meeting in Vancouver and said that he does not think we should have signed the deal, that we are going to have to negotiate out of it. Another question is, then: Are active plans being made now to renegotiate this forest deal with the United States?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, first, I suspect that my friend is taking considerable liberties with the statements he is attributing to Mr. Simon Reisman. Although Mr. Reisman is no longer in the employ of the Government of Canada, I will undertake to do some research to verify the authenticity of the comments that the honourable senator has attributed to him indirectly and the context in which the comments may have been made.

With regard to the memorandum of agreement on softwood lumber, I can only tell the honourable senator that the government is of the view that conditions have changed since 1986. We believe that the memorandum of understanding has served its purpose but that, however, negotiations with the United States would not go forward until we had the agreement on this matter of at least all of the producing provinces.

Senator Perrault: Of course, that is one of the problems. At least one of the provinces has been exempted from this arrangement and is quite happy with the status quo. I think it is the province of New Brunswick; is that not correct?

Senator Murray: Correct.

Senator Perrault: I do not think we will ever have a unanimous position.

Senator Murray: I did not say unanimous.

Senator Perrault: The concern of British Columbians and others in western Canada lies in the fact that the Americans were never at any time able to make a case for the imposition of these extra charges on the Canadian lumber industry, and it is now beginning to hurt. At the time we said that the impact of this arrangement with the United States would not be apparent until we entered a time of economic recession and then its full impact would be felt, and that is what has happened.

Surely it has to be admitted, even by government supporters, that when the honourable minister responsible for industrial development in this country now states publicly that the lumber deal should be renegotiated, and that he will do everything in his power to do so, we have a serious problem on our hands. I am not asking the Leader of the Government to divulge cabinet secrets; I do not expect that at all. However, when we get the gloomy news from the forest industry, which is so important to the economic health of Canada, that the profit outlook is the worst in years, that earnings have dropped 40 to 50 per cent, we have to become concerned because all of us are being adversely affected.

I would at least like the assurance from the Leader of the Government in the Senate that the situation is being actively considered and investigated by cabinet and that we are not going to have to wait until there is a consensus involving all of the provinces before we act.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can tell Senator Perrault that the responsible minister, the honourable John Crosbie, has been consulting actively with the provinces and indeed with the industry in those provinces. We believe that the memorandum of understanding has served its purpose. We are prepared to embark on negotiations with the United States, but we do want to have the support of at least the main producing provinces.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

SALES OF PORK—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Is the Leader of the Government able to give us an update on the pork situation in Canada? It seems to me that the philosophy of some of our American friends is: "Heads we win, tails you lose." Every time we have a dispute within the ambit of the Free Trade Agreement the so-called dispute settling mechanisms never seem to operate as well as they were predicted to do in the heady days when the agreement was signed.

Pork producers in Canada are now saying that they have been betrayed, that the Americans not only want to shift the goal posts but want to tilt the playing field itself.

Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether any progress is being made to protect the Canadian position as far as pork sales are concerned?

● (1510)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, for the moment all I can do is remind the honourable senator that two days ago the names of the members of the Extraordinary Challenge Committee, which will review the decision of the dispute settlement panel in this matter, were named by my colleague, the Minister of International Trade. The committee will be chaired by the Honourable Arlen M. Adams, formerly a judge of the US Court of Appeals. The other two members are the Honourable Mr. Justice Willard Z. Estey, formerly Chief Justice of Ontario and Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, and the Honourable Mr. Justice Gregory T. Evans, also a former Chief Justice of Ontario.

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Government has given us the names. They appear to be good names. However, there was one comment made last week that the chairmanship was of particularly vital importance to Canada and that it was felt to be very important to have a Canadian chairman of that committee.

Can the Leader of the Government tell us precisely how the chairman was selected? Does the chairman have any experience in pork production, or has he been mostly involved in judicial matters?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the committee members are selected from a ten-person roster comprised of retired Canadian and American judges. Each party selects a member and those two select a third, or, if necessary, the third is drawn by lot from the roster. The agreement requires that the Ministers of International Trade and Finance are by statute required to make the selection for Canada.

Honourable senators, my information is that the parties to the dispute will be filing briefs the day after tomorrow, Friday, April 19. I am also informed that the Extraordinary Challenge Committee should issue its decision within 30 days of the formation of the committee. However, I should note that it can extend the time limit in the interests of fairness. The committee can affirm the decision of the panel under review, vacate it or remand it back to the panel for reconsideration consistent with the committee's instructions.

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE INSTRUCTED TO REPORT

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, according to the agreement that was reached yesterday with respect to the division on the deferred vote, the bell must start to ring at 3:30 p.m. It is now 3:30 p.m. Please call in the senators.

• (1600)

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Let the doors to the chamber be locked.

Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be instructed to report no later than Friday, April 19, 1991, the motion respecting the appointment of the Privacy Commissioner.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in view of the fact that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will be meeting this afternoon, I recommend that the Senate do now adjourn until the call of the bell, which I suppose will be around 5.15 or 5.30. The committee will then report back to the Senate.

Senator Frith: We will see if the committee is ready to report.

Senator Corbin: I have one question for Senator Doody. Will he be tabling answers to written questions today?

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Delayed answers were not called.

Senator Corbin: That is why I asked the question. Will answers to written questions be tabled today?

Senator Doody: I do have two answers, honourable senators, although not in response to Senator Corbin. With leave, I will place them on the record now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable Senators, I have delayed answers to two questions and would ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.—STATUS OF SEARCH-AND-RESCUE OPERATION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by the Honourable Lorne Bonnell on April 9, 1991, regarding National Defence—Closure of CFB Summerside in PEI—Status of Search and Rescue Operation.

(The answer follows:)

The Department of National Defence remains on schedule in its plans for the closure of CFB Summerside. In the meantime, Canadian Forces personnel may be transferred to CFB Summerside in order to fill certain positions necessary to maintain operations while the base is being closed. To date, only one such replacement has been required.

The independent consultant's report in question fails to identify a myriad of other costs that would be incurred should 413 Transport and Rescue (T&R) Squadron remain at Summerside.

The equipment and personnel of 413 (T&R) Squadron represent less than half of the actual resources that would have to be committed to its operations at an isolated site. The airfield would have to be kept fully operational 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and this would in turn require a large complement of personnel for snow and ice removal, air traffic control and airport emergency services. This is assuredly more than the Slemon Park Corporation would require. Thus the additional costs would have to be met by the Department of National Defence. Furthermore, the unit would require aircraft maintenance, logistics, communications and personnel support, and several other base services.

The basing of 413 (T&R) Squadron at the existing CFB Greenwood airfield would not require any additional support resources for the established, fully operational facility. Other support functions would require only slight augmentation, a fraction of what would be needed at Summerside.

It should be pointed out that the Search and Rescue operation for the Maritime Region as a whole will not be downgraded by the relocation of 413 (T&R) Squadron from Summerside to CFB Greenwood.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SRI LANKA—CANADIAN AID TO VICTIMS OF CIVIL WAR

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 10, 1991 by the Honourable Lorna Marsden regarding Sri Lanka—Canadian Aid to Victims of Civil War.

(The answer follows:)

The Mothers' Front was established last July by the mothers of Sri Lankans who have been incarcerated or killed, or who have disappeared during the past eight years of ethnic and political conflict in Sri Lanka.

Its purpose is to encourage a greater accountability on the part of the Sri Lankan Government regarding the whereabouts of those who have been incarcerated or who have disappeared.

The Mothers' Front is at present operating under the auspices and sponsorship of the opposition parties. As yet, it does not receive any Canadian support. Once it establishes its political independence however, it will become eligible for support from the Development Assistance Program, which has been reoriented in the last year to assist self-help groups and organizations such as the Mothers' Front.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will be meeting this afternoon. I would recommend that the Senate adjourn to the call of the bell, and we will then report back to the Senate chamber.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5:20 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed. The Hon. the Acting Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVILEGE

Hon. Stan Waters: Honourable senators, in the previous vote, I do not believe the Speaker called for abstentions.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Yes, he did.

Senator Waters: I would like my vote to be recorded as an abstention and not as a "no" vote, which is how I believe it was recorded.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Senator Waters, I did call for abstentions in French, but with the noise it is possible that you did not hear me. However, your vote will be correctly recorded.

Senator Waters: Thank you.

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

THIRTY-EIGHTH REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, April 17, 1991

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

THIRTY-EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Resolution approving the appointment of Bruce Phillips as Privacy Commissioner, has in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, June 27, 1990, considered the said Resolution and now reports as follows:

A motion in the Committee that the Resolution be approved was defeated.

The Committee recommends that the Senate do not approve the Resolution.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Chairman

MOTION TO ADOPT THIRTY-EIGHTH REPORT NEGATIVED

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e), I move that the report be now adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not think there is any need for us to have a debate on this motion at this point. The position of the parties is getting fairly clear. I may have a very short word to say on the main motion itself, depending on what happens to this vote, but I wonder if the whips could agree on a five or ten minute bell?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Perhaps, in fairness to the senators in the Victoria Block, we could change that to a 15-minute bell. I do not think they could get over here in five minutes.

Senator Frith: All right. The bells will start now and the vote will take place at 5:45.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, there were five senators waiting in the Victoria Building as soon as the bells rang. The bus was across the street. The driver must have left from the Confederation Building and returned here rather than go around on the regular calls. That is why we were late—and wet—and it's stupid.

An Hon. Senator: That's nothing new!

Senator Phillips: Senator Marshall has confirmed the point that the bell should ring for 15 minutes. I think they can get over here on a 15-minute bell. I am sure the two whips will be making checks with the offices.

Senator MacEachen: Check the buses!

[Senator Nurgitz. .]

Senator Phillips: And the buses. The Black Rod previously assured me that the buses would be running at this time, so I think we should have a 15-minute bell.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed to vote at 5:45?

Senator Frith: We can then just have the record show that the "yeas" and "nays" have been called, that there has been an appeal under Rule 49(3), and that we are having a vote under Rule 49(3) on a 15-minute bell—the bell to start immediately and the vote to take place in 15 minutes.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: In my opinion the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Please call in the senators.

• (1740)

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Let the doors to the chamber be locked.

Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax) that this report be now adopted. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Waters—1

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Let the doors be opened.

MOTION RE APPOINTMENT ADOPTED

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): As Your Honour has just pointed out, the motion to adopt the report of the committee has been defeated. If I heard and understood the Deputy Leader of the Opposition correctly when he spoke earlier this afternoon, there would be a disposition to proceed, as we on this side wish to proceed, with a vote on the resolution to approve the appointment of Bruce Phillips as Privacy Commissioner. If that is the case, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(h):

> That, in accordance with Section 53 of the Privacy Act, Chapter P-21, R.S.C. 1985, this house approves the appointment of Bruce Phillips as Privacy Commissioner.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I want to take this occasion to put very clearly on the record our position, based not on differences of opinion—and there are differences of opinion about the effect and interpretation of the Privacy Act—but on the facts. As Senator MacEachen reminded me, Jean-Paul Sartre said that the facts speak for themselves, and I just want to make an intervention on those facts upon which we agree.

• (1750)

We agree that the Privacy Commissioner is an agent of Parliament. It is a fact that 106 members of the House of Commons voted in favour of Mr. Bruce Phillips as Privacy Commissioner. It is a fact that 60 representing the opposition parties unanimously voted against Mr. Phillips. In the Senate I assume we can have a vote without having a bell, but have a vote to give us a chance to register on this nomination.

Incidentally, looking at the House of Commons record, approximately 60 per cent more or less, all of them on the government side, voted in favour of Mr. Phillips and 40 per cent of the parliamentarians he is to represent voted against his nomination.

In the Senate, if we have the same vote, then the split will be a little over 50 per cent, something between 45 and 53 per cent that voted in favour, all of them on the government side, and some 48 per cent against. That is why we feel that Mr. Phillips should not be appointed Privacy Commissioner. Of the people he is to serve only a little over half want him to serve in that position.

Therefore, we ask the Prime Minister to remember the provisions of Section 53—I am not going to get into any question about qualifications, convention, custom, or anything else, but simply the facts, the vote of the people that this man is to represent. The provision of the act says that "the Governor in Council"—which means, of course, the Prime Minister and the cabinet—

> . . . shall by commission under the Great Seal appoint a Privacy Commissioner after approval of the appointment by resolution of the Senate and House of Commons.

I ask the Prime Minister and the cabinet to recognize the fact that although the resolution may have been passed in both places, the numbers speak for themselves, that almost half of the people whom he is to represent do not want him to take that position, for whatever reason. Therefore, we ask cabinet to not make the appointment.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not, and cannot, quarrel with the recitation of the facts that have been put forward by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. It is a fact that the opposition parties in the other place and here are opposed, as Senator Frith says, "for whatever reason," to this appointment. It is also a fact that the statute provides that the House of Commons and the Senate by simple majority shall approve of this appointment; but I say simply for the record that I regret very much that honourable senators opposite and their counterparts in the House of Commons could not, as Senator Frith puts it, "for whatever reason," support the nomination of Bruce Phillips. This is especially regrettable in view of the distinguished qualifications that Mr. Phillips—

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Murray: For the record, and very briefly at this time before we vote, let me state that Mr. Phillips had a long and distinguished 35-year career in journalism, including service with the Canadian Press, the Calgary Herald, and Southam News. He served the latter organization for three years in Washington as resident correspondent; but he capped his journalistic career with 16 years service as the Ottawa correspondent with the CTV network.

Honourable senators, I have about a page and a half to read, and if honourable senators would permit me to put some biographical notes on the record, we could then proceed.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh! Put the vote.

Senator Murray: During his time as a journalist Bruce Phillips was publicly and privately supportive of the efforts of various people outside Parliament, particularly Mr. Baldwin, MP, former member of the other place, to advance the cause of access to information. His efforts included written communications with the prime minister of the day, Mr. Trudeau.

Mr. Phillips also provided financial and editorial support to the access committee, a private sector advisory group. It was through efforts such as these in support of Mr. Baldwin, MP, and the access committee that eventually brought the Trudeau government to introduce the interrelated access to information and privacy legislation that we have today.

Senator MacEachen: More mythology.

Senator Murray: Soon after the present government took office the Prime Minister informed Mr. Phillips that the new government intended to take some major initiatives in Canada-U.S. relations and that Mr. Phillips' Washington media experience could be of value to Canada.

Senator Perrault: Violent partisan; that is what it is.

Senator Murray: The Prime Minister asked Mr. Phillips to serve as the senior official in charge of public affairs at the Canadian embassy in Washington. Mr. Phillips agreed to take this position with the Public Service of Canada. He subsequently served as a senior communications official in the Prime Minister's Office.

I again wish to state that I regret the opposition of honourable senators to this appointment, but, as I said yesterday, I believe Mr. Phillips has all the integrity, experience and ability that is required for this important position in the service of Parliament.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Murray: I would again commend this nomination to the support of all honourable senators.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Would honourable senators agree not to see the clock while we finish with this proceeding?

[Senator Murray.]

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I did not intend to participate in this debate, but when I heard—

Senator Murray: I think I have closed the debate.

Senator Bonnell: How did you close it?

Senator Murray: On a point of order, it was—

Senator Bonnell: The Hon. the Speaker never said you were to close the debate.

Senator Murray: That is correct, but I moved the motion, Senator Frith spoke and I rose. I believe I closed the debate.

Senator Bonnell: Well, you only believe you did, but the Hon. the Speaker would ordinarily stand up in his place and say that if Senator Murray speaks now, honourable senators will realize that the debate will be closed. The Hon. the Speaker did not do that. Therefore, the debate is not closed, and I want to say this—

Senator Phillips: Make it brief.

Senator Bonnell: I am surprised. I am—

Senator Cogger: Disturbed.

Senator Bonnell: —disturbed and upset.

Senator Hastings: Shocked.

Senator Bonnell: And I am shocked that Senator Murray—

Senator Carney: And you are mad.

Senator Bonnell: No, I am not mad at all. I do not get mad. I get even. I am surprised that Senator Murray felt he had to stand up and say all those nice things about Mr. Phillips. Nobody on this side of the house disagrees with those nice things. He did all those things. We are not here to say that we are against this appointment because of who Mr. Phillips is. We are here to say that we are against the appointment because of the way the government handled the situation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Bonnell: They did not consult the opposition. They did not consult any of the opposition parties in the other House. There was no consultation between the government and the opposition in this house. It could have been Senator Murray getting appointed. We have the same thing. We say no. The Government of Canada has to realize that this is a parliamentary appointment.

Consequently, honourable senators, I want the record to show that I am not against Mr. Phillips. Senator Murray has said a lot of things about his being great, but there are a lot of other things he does not know about. He did a lot of things and he is probably a fine gentleman. He probably has a lovely wife and family, but that is not the point. The point is that the Government of Canada is usurping power that Parliament did not give it. Parliament did not give it the power to make parliamentary appointments, and it should consult the opposition parties, whether the Reform Party, the Liberal Party or the NDP. This is a parliamentary appointment.

• (1800)

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall not prolong the debate. However, this is so clearly the kind of appointment that should have the concurrence of the other parties that I cannot understand why the government is so insistent on pushing this person on us.

When the Speaker of the House of Commons is elected there is an old tradition of gaining the support of both the opposition and the government. A short list could have been developed in this case. Perhaps the name of Mr. Phillips could have been on such a short list. An effort should have been made to reach agreement with respect to the appropriate nature of this appointment.

Secondly, I want to say that, as Leader of the Government in the Senate for a period of time, on three or four occasions I contacted Mr. Phillips about certain gross inaccuracies he had uttered about the Senate. He said, "I would be very delighted to meet with you." That is the last I heard of Mr. Phillips.

He is a violently partisan person who has always been an implacable foe of the Senate. His philosophy is: "Don't confuse me with the facts, my mind is made up." I speak only from my own experience of him.

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I too would like to say a word about this appointment, to remind honourable senators that by using this method of appointing officers of Parliament who do not have the general support of Parliament weakens their position and makes them subject to removal by the same process. Since, normally, officers of Parliament are in place for a term, if this process goes ahead, as I suspect it will, then they can be removed just as equally by another parliamentary majority. If I were one appointed under those circumstances, that would make me very uncertain about my position.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, PC, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(h), that in accordance with Section 53 of the Privacy Act, Chapter P-21, R.S.C. 1985, this house approves the appointment of Bruce Phillips as Privacy Commissioner.

Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: In my opinion the "yeas" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Please call in the senators.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I do not think there is much purpose to be served in ringing the bell. We can proceed with the vote now.

Senator Petten: I agree, honourable senators.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Let the doors to the chamber be locked.

Motion agreed to on the following division:

FORESTRY

PLIGHT OF FOREST PRODUCTS INDUSTRY—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Leave having been granted to revert to Notices of Inquiry:

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I give notice that at the next sitting of the Senate I will call the attention of the Senate to the plight of the forest products industry in British Columbia and in certain other provinces of Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave, I move that all remaining orders, motions and inquiries stand.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to speak briefly to the adjournment motion.

We have had some discussion about the adjournment motion. I propose to move that the Senate adjourn until Tuesday, May 21. The reason for this is that we have to come back to deal with one bill before a probable prorogation. I cannot be certain about the date; it may be earlier than May 21. The House of Commons has adjourned to the call of the Chair, which makes it all very uncertain from where we stand. In any event, if we have to come back earlier, we will see to it that ample notice is given to all senators in order that they have an opportunity to get here in time. I am sorry that I cannot be more definite than that. It is possible that we will be away until May 21. It is probable that we will be back the week before.

• (1810)

In any event, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance is now studying the bill to amend the Financial Administration Act. I understand that it will be meeting tomorrow and for however long it takes the committee to study the bill. We will deal with that bill in all remaining stages before prorogation. With these few caveats, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g):

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 21, 1991 at 9 a.m.

If there is any change in that, honourable senators, we will be so advised by the Chair.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 21, 1991, at 9 a.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 8, 1991

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

HUBERT D. GRIFFITH, ESQUIRE

EDITOR OF DEBATES AND CHIEF OF REPORTING SERVICES—TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT FROM THE SENATE

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, on April 2 of this year a long-time servant and officer of the Senate retired. I am referring to Hugh Griffith, the Editor of Debates. Hugh was born in England. I had always thought he had the distinction of being a Welshman until I saw his c.v., which states that he was born in Portsmouth, England. Therefore, he is deprived of that privilege.

After a period of service in the British army and the civil service, Mr. Griffith came to Canada in 1957, and became employed as a court reporter in the Supreme Court of Ontario. Then, in 1959, he came to the Hill. He made the mistake a lot of us make; he went to the House of Commons first. It did not take him very long to correct that mistake; he joined the Senate as a reporter in 1960. In 1972 he was appointed Associate Editor of Debates. In 1981 Hugh became assistant editor and in 1985 he became Editor of Debates.

He is retiring after serving the Senate for 30 years or one third of a century. My home in Ottawa is very close to Hugh's. My wife and I used to go for walks and we would meet Hugh and his charming wife, Mary ,and we would have a little chat. However, both of us have eased off on the walking and we do not see one another as much as we used to.

I mentioned the fact that he has served in this chamber for 30 years. He frequently sat over in the corner to the Speaker's left, always managing to the appear interested in and enjoying the debate. Not only that, he has managed to stay young looking.

Honourable senators, Hugh and his wife, Mary, his daughter Megan, and son-in-law John, are in the south gallery. We hope that he enjoys a long retirement and maintains his good health to enjoy it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I welcome the opportunity to support what Senator Phillips has said. I do so for the reasons he mentioned and also because I have liked and admired Hugh Griffith for a long time. There are some jobs where success can be measured in an inverse ratio to the evidence of success. Another way of putting it is that the art is in concealing the art. Hugh Griffith is first class, a gold medalist in his field. We in the Senate are lucky to have had 30 of his Parliamentary years. Not all of his career was with the Debates Branch of the Senate, but most of it was spent here, and I say we were lucky. I greatly admire anyone who is very good at his job and just does it. It's a rarity, and is valued because of that—just to do the job and do it well. By doing it well it goes, in a sense, unnoticed.

I also learned a lot from Hugh Griffith. We often had discussions about language, including syntax and the origin of words. I received a great deal of help from him, as I think many of us did.

So, I repeat, I am glad to join Senator Phillips as joint cheerleader in asking senators again to express their heartfelt appreciation to Mr. Griffith on this occasion, especially when he is here with his family. We sincerely and deeply appreciate his years of excellent service to the Canadian Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

GORDON OLMSTEAD, PRESIDENT, CANADIAN MERCHANT NAVY ASSOCIATION OF CANADA, AND PRISIONER OF WAR ASSOCIATION
DANNY BORDELEAU, VICE PRESIDENT AND GOVERNMENT LIAISON, CANADIAN MERCHANT NAVY ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, before the petitions, I would call the attention of the Senate to the presence in the gallery of Mr. Gordon Olmstead, president of Canadian Merchant Navy and Prisoners of War Association, and his good wife, Mrs. Olmstead.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Senator Marshall: I should also like to call attention to Mr. Danny Bordeleau, vice-president and government liaison to the Canadian Merchant Navy Association of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present 14,514 signatures on 678 petitions from veterans of Canada across the country to implement the 12 recommendations of the Senate subcommittee report entitled, "It's Almost Too Late."

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN MERCHANT NAVY—BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. Jack Marshall presented Bill S-21, to amend certain statutes of Canada to give fair and discreet recognition to the wartime service of the Canadian Merchant Navy.

He said: Honourable senators, as I have already indicated, Messrs. Olmstead and Bordeleau are in the gallery; they are two citizens who, on behalf of their comrades, have been fighting for the past 50 years to have the governments of Canada, past and present, recognize the Canadian Merchant Navy, which has served its country on a parallel with every other military force in Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Bill read first time.

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—POINT OF ORDER—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), it is moved by Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): On a point of order, honourable senators, all of us enormously admire the work that our colleague Senator Marshall has done over the years on behalf of the war veterans of this country.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Senator Murray: He has continued that work in the Senate that he undertook many years previously, and notably so during his years in the House of Commons.

Not only has he been a very effective spokesman in Parliament for the interests of veterans and others who served this country in whatever capacity during the wars, he has taken up the cause of many individual veterans and their families across this country. There are countless individual veterans and their families who can attest to Senator Marshall's keen interest and devotion to their welfare. They are materially better off because of his intervention on their behalf over the years.

Having said that, one of the responsibilities of a minister of the Crown is to protect the prerogatives of the Crown. One of those prerogatives is the royal recommendation which must attach to any money bill. As honourable senators know, money bills must originate in the House of Commons and they must have a royal recommendation attached to them. I want to invite the attention of honourable senators to section 53 of the Constitution Act of 1867, as well as to section 54 of the Constitution Act, to point out that a bill which appropriates funds must begin in the House of Commons and must receive a royal recommendation from the Governor General.

I also invite the attention of the Senate to rule 62 of our own chamber and to the ruling made on February 27, 1991 by His Honour the Speaker in which His Honour gave examples from the authorities of matters addressed in legislation which require royal recommendations.

With regard to Bill S-21, which Senator Marshall has presented to us today, I would draw your attention to clauses 1, 2 and 3 of that bill which would amend the Pension Act, to clauses 4 and 5 which would amend the War Veterans Allowance Act and to clauses 6 and 7 which would amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act. Those amendments clearly extend the purposes and objects of the currently authorized program expenditures under the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act. So it is quite obvious, to me at any rate, that Senator Marshall's bill, S-21, would have the effect of appropriating public revenues and would involve new charges upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

There have been many rulings, as I have indicated, on the subject of money bills. There is a ruling of June 6, 1980, in which the acting speaker of the Senate ruled on amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. There is also a Speaker's ruling of June 13, 1989 concerning two bills also introduced by our friend, Senator Marshall, which contained amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act which were intended to widen the scope of eligible recipients for veterans' benefits.

Honourable senators, my submission is that this bill infringes on the financial initiative of the Crown, that it requires a royal recommendation and cannot, therefore, be introduced in the Senate. I would ask Your Honour to reflect on these matters and, at your convenience, to let us have a ruling on this matter.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I did not think my bill would get such attention as it did from my leader. My purpose in introducing the bill is simply to recognize members of the Merchant Navy in the respect that they deserve as veterans. They are now deemed to be civilians. I always express the view that when the bullets and the bombs came after them they did not say, "Do not hit him, he is a civilian."

• (1410)

I am asking to have the benefits under Parts I and XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowance Act—and they are all entitled to every benefit that is contained therein—apply to the other section of the act, which is comparable and parallel, namely, the War Veterans Allowance Act. Any other benefits that a war veteran gets under the War Veterans Allowance Act—and the one that is highlighted is the Veterans Independence Program for aging veterans—can be done by Order in Council if the will is there and there is the government's determination that these merchant seamen did serve their country on the same basis as everyone else who served Canada in time of war. I am trying to transfer the merchant seamen from one phase of the act to the other—that is, from the Civilian War Pensions Allowances Act to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators I would like the opportunity to read both the bill and Senator Murray's comments. Therefore, I move the adjournment of the debate on the point of order so that I can do so.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, some will be pleased to hear—some perhaps not so pleased—that the petitions against the GST continue to roll in.

To remind honourable senators, the petitions all read as follows—and I will not read each petition unless encouraged to do so. Some of the petitions are in French and some are in English, but the wording is essentially the same. I will remind honourable senators that they read as follows:

> Whereas the new universal 7% Goods and Services Tax adopted by the Conservative government will create serious, unjust and inhuman difficulties to Canadians; whereas the implementation of this tax—

I always like to underline the fact that the impression abroad is accurate that, although it was adopted by Parliament, it was only adopted by supporters of the Conservative government because of majorities achieved in different ways in both houses. It goes on to read:

> —adopted by the Conservative government will create serious, unjust and inhuman difficulties to Canadians; whereas the implementation of this tax will constitute an unprecedented assault on the income of Canadians, not only by forcing them to pay higher taxes, but also by confronting them with a rise in inflation, interest rates and unemployment; whereas the methods used by the Government are unworthy of a democratic country. They are rather the work of lawmakers who want to implement a dictatorship, snapping their fingers at the general opposition of the population.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame.

Senator Frith: It goes on to state:

> Wherefore the undersigned, your Petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the Senators and the MPs, the true representatives of the people, to do everything possible to abolish the new Goods and Services Tax, and we strongly demand a general election immediately.

An Hon. Senator: That is right.

Senator Frith: It goes on to state:

> The Canadian producers are carrying out their jobs perfectly by flooding the market with products, but they cannot produce money. The government must therefore set up a National Credit Office to create the money required by the existence of new wealth and abundance.

You can imagine by the wording of that particular petition that it does have a familiar western ring, although these are not from the west.

Senator Olson: But the message is getting around.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the population referred to is exercising its ancient and undoubted right to directly petition members of Parliament, and of the Senate, to present, on their behalf, petitions asking for the action set out in the petitions.

In accordance with our rules I will simply tell honourable senators where these petitions are from and how many there are. The first batch numbers 14, each with about 25 names. I give that number so that the arithmetic can be done quickly.

There are 14 from Donnelly, Falher, Girouxville and Eaglesham, Alberta.

I have another 15 petitions from New Brunswick. They are from Bas Caraquet, Acadiaville, Saint John, Pokesudie, Le Goulet, Rogersville, Tracadie, Shippegan and Charlottetown—someone must have snuck one in here. I do not think there is a Charlottetown in New Brunswick. That one has slipped in with the ones from New Brunswick, I am sure to their honour. The others are from Collette, Chatham, Newcastle, Tide Head, Atholville and St. Quentin.

From Ontario I have 13 petitions, all of them fully signed. I say that so that the arithmetic can be worked out as we go along to give honourable senators an idea of the number of citizens involved in these petitions. They are from Sudbury, Lively, Spanish, Espanola, Hamilton, Virginiatown, Kirkland Lake, Moonbeam, Kapuskasing and Timmins.

I had a little difficulty with the next group because there is an RR number, which I think is in Ontario, but I am not clear. The address is given, but not the town.

I must say, since I think it was Senator Simard who was interested in the political origins of some of these that—

Senator Simard: Just table them.

Senator Frith: —this particular one identifies itself as coming from the Reform Party.

There is a large batch of signatures mostly from Quebec, although some are from Ontario, in one petition.

I then have a large batch of 117 petitions with, as I have said, 20 to 25 names on each from Noranda, Rouyn-Noranda, Evain, St. Modeste, Rimouski, Val d'Or, Montreal, St. Leonard, Ville d'Anjou, Matagami—

• (1420)

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: All change for Shawinigan!

Senator Frith: By the remark: "All change for Shawinigan," Senator Simard is obviously saying that the reciting of these names reminds him of the train schedule and the announcements about departures of the trains that used to cross the country in larger numbers than they do now. I can tell him that these petitions do continue and they do have all the force and momentum of the trains to which he has referred. These petitions keep coming in just as those trains kept running.

To continue, honourable senators, the petitions come from St. Odilon, St. Anges, Chicoutimi, Malartic, Shawinigan, St. Mathieu du Parc, Huntingdon, and Granby.

Honourable senators, today I have about 5,000 names of those who continue to be opposed to the GST; and let us remember the number of petitions that keep coming in, despite government assurance—particularly from the Minister of National Revenue—that Canadians are happily swallowing this GST. Honourable senators, the people are telling us that they are not!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

THIRD REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Dalia Wood: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the third report of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages concerning Standing Order 32(5) and section 85 of the Official Languages Act: Consideration of the document entitled: Draft of the proposed regulations respecting communications with and services to the public in either official language.

I ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and to the Debates of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix, p. 5678.)

On motion of Senator Wood, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND-TWENTY-THIRD REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Saurel), Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented the following report:

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

TWENTY-THIRD REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-91, An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, April 9, 1991, examined the said Bill and now reports the same with the following amendment:

Pages 3 to 5, clause 6: Strike out lines 42 to 46 on page 3, lines 1 to 47 on page 4, and lines 1 to 23 on page 5, and renumber the subsequent clauses and any cross-references thereto accordingly.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Leblanc (Saurel): With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be considered now.

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), it is moved by Senator Leblanc (Saurel), seconded by Senator Adams, that the report be now adopted.

Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

[English]

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Has the chairman of the committee any remarks to make at this time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He is moving the adoption.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I move that the report be not now adopted but that the bill, as amended by the committee, be referred to a Committee of the Whole presently.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doyle, that the report be not now adopted but that the bill, as amended by the committee, be referred to a Committee of the Whole presently.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopted the motion?

• (1430)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as you can imagine, our position is that the report of the committee ought to be adopted, thereby amending the bill as provided in the motion of adoption. However, we are content to have this motion carry on division so that we can obtain more evidence on the points raised in Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, on division.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Senator Ottenheimer in the Chair.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Mr. Chairman, in anticipation of this procedure I had asked my colleague, the Honourable Gilles Loiselle, the President of the Treasury Board, to appear before the Committee of the Whole this afternoon to make a brief statement and to answer questions from members of the committee with regard to the outstanding matters referred to in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. I must confess that I had suggested to my colleague that there was no need for him to be here much before 3 o'clock. He may not have arrived yet. I will see if he is here. If he has arrived, I will bring him into the chamber. If he has not arrived, I beg the indulgence of the members of the committee for a few moments.

Senator Frith: Agreed.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Gilles Loiselle, P.C., President of the Treasury Board, was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

[Translation]

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I believe everyone here knows my cabinet colleague, the Hon. Gilles Loiselle, President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Loiselle started his professional career as a journalist at the Ottawa newspaper Le Droit in 1953. Subsequently, he entered Quebec's diplomatic service as First Counsellor with the Quebec General Delegation in Paris, from 1967 until 1972. He was Director General of Communications from 1976 to 1977. He was Quebec's General Delegate in London from 1977 to 1982. He was Assistant Deputy Minister for Canadian Affairs and Quebec Cultural Affairs from 1982 to 1984. From 1984 to 1988, he was Quebec's General Delegate in Rome.

Mr. Loiselle was elected to the House of Commons for the first time in the 1988 federal election. He was sworn in as a member of the Privy Council and appointed Minister of State for Finance in January 1989. Subsequently, he was appointed President of the Treasury Board, and such, he will appear before us this afternoon to talk about Bill C-91.

Mr. Loiselle will make a short statement, after which honourable senators are invited to ask their questions concerning the many recommendations contained in the report of our Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Mr. Chairman, I invite my colleague, Mr. Loiselle, to take the floor.

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Chairman, with your leave, I would like to thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate for his kind words. I must say that to be in this august assembly today, where I see so many people whom I have met at some time in the course of my career, is a unique experience. I see Senator Hébert, whom I met in Africa in the Fifties. I see friends I met in London, Quebec City, Montreal and elsewhere in this country. To be among you is a very moving experience, indeed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): But not as a senator, not yet!

Mr. Loiselle: My misfortune, perhaps, honourable senators.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank honourable senators for giving me this opportunity to comment briefly on Bill C-91, which provides for about seventy amendments to the Financial Administration Act.

The main purpose of these amendments is to provide for better financing in the increasingly complex day-to-day management of public funds, in a world that is becoming increasingly competitive.

I would say that these amendments represent a very substantial part of the government's efforts to improve our administration's management and efficiency.

[English]

The bill contains provisions that will improve the collection of moneys due to the Crown and this will help reduce the deficit. The bill also opens opportunities for further improvements in cash management practices. It improves the accountability and control regime affecting crown corporations. It reduces red tape for suppliers and collectors of public money and reduces the paper burden on departments. It positions the government to take full advantage of modern technologies in its financial transactions.

● (1440)

It provides enhanced opportunities for better management of the public debt. Finally, it offers more flexibility in the funding and delivery of government services, thereby permitting departments to be more responsive to the needs of the public they serve. I think everyone will agree that the government must continue to reduce its operating costs and to provide its programs and services in the most efficient manner possible. This bill will help us achieve that objective.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that some honourable senators have raised three issues for which they seek additional clarification. I will try to address them clearly and directly in the next few minutes and my officials and I will be pleased to answer any questions.

[Senator Murray.]

First, some senators have questioned whether the provisions of clause 6 constitute a tax or a penalty. Honourable senators, I would say that the answer clearly and unequivocally is no.

A very lucid view was expressed on this issue by Mr. Justice La Forest in the allocation of taxing power under the Canadian constitution which was published by the Canadian Tax Foundation in 1981. His opinion focused directly on the distinction between a tax and a charge. In his view, one of the essential attributes of a tax is that it bear no relation to the value of the service received. The distinguishing feature of a charge is its closed relationship to the service provided. Clearly a fee or charge requires a linkage between the fee or charge and the cost of the service or function being provided.

Honourable senators, I believe that this linkage is clearly established in clause 6. Clause 6 has nothing to do with penalties, however, which carries with it the notion of a punishment as a consequence of a breach of contract for the commission of an offence. Clause 6 permits us to recover costs from the users and beneficiaries of services and facilities. It relates to the pay-as-you-go principal of good management and not punishment.

The second issue follows on the first. It relates to the delegation of taxing powers by Parliament. There are no taxing powers being delegated in clause 6. Clause 6 is about implementing user fees equitably, economically and efficiently. It is about implementing fees openly and after public input. Indeed with clause 6, prior to fees being set, consultations will be had with affected parties, and their full impact, both on affected groups and on federal programs, will be rigorously analyzed. The results of these consultations and analyses will have to be taken into account in fee setting decisions.

It is not therefore about delegation of parliamentary authority; it is about providing Canadians with the opportunity to voice their views and to have meaningful input in user fee decisions pertaining to services they use or benefit from directly. These changes should provide greater comfort and assurances to honourable senators, indeed to all Canadians.

The third and last issue, Mr. Speaker, relates to the use of the Governor General's special warrants. In my testimony to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on April 11, when questioned on this matter, I indicated that I fully agreed with honourable senators that the purpose of special warrants was certainly not to circumvent the power of Parliament to approve spending. We have looked at section 30 of the Financial Administration Act and have had extensive discussions. The general conclusion was that special warrants represent a safety valve which allows the administration of government to continue when Parliament is not sitting. Concerns were expressed to the effect that any change to clause 30 would limit the essential flexibility needed to conduct the day-to-day business of government when Parliament is not sitting.

Under the current mechanism, Mr. Chairman, there is some balance in that the Governor General is not compelled to agree to issue warrants. He or she can always refuse such warrants if it is felt that they would be used for purposes other than carrying out essential services until such time as the government can quickly go back to Parliament. In these circumstances, it was felt that an amendment to section 30 was not warranted at this time.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for having given me the opportunity to speak to this bill. I now ask honourable senators to support its quick passage. Thank you.

Senator Stewart: Thank you, Senator Ottenheimer. I thank Mr. Loiselle for his succinct statement and for addressing some of the reasons why some of us voted against the inclusion of clause 6.

I want to ask him two or three questions with regard to Governor General's special warrants. He already has traversed that terrain, so my questions are for greater certainty. First, is it the view of the government that the interpretation of section 30 of the Financial Administration Act followed by the government in 1989 was strictly in accordance with the intention of Parliament when it enacted that section of the Financial Administration Act? My second question I believe is answered by implication, but perhaps we had better have the implication spelled out. Is it the view of the government that it is desirable that section 30 of the Financial Administration Act be not amended? The third question is: Is it the view of the government that, while an attempt to abuse section 30 is possible, the right of the Governor General to refuse to accept the advice of the government that she or he sign a special warrant sought by the government is an adequate safeguard to prevent abuse?

In relation to the last question, I shall read for the benefit of the committee what the minister said when he appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on April 11. This appears in issue 52 at page 14. He mentioned the possibility of abuse; he then wen on to say:

● (1450)

> There is also balance in as much as if the Governor General feels this device is being used for purposes other than just carrying on until such time as we can quickly go back to Parliament, he can always refuse such warrants.

I gather from what he said then and from what he said earlier today that he regards the possibility of the Governor General saying no, of exercising a reserve power of the Crown, as an adequate safeguard to prevent any abuse of special warrants by a government.

Those are my three questions with regard to special warrants. Perhaps we can deal with them now. Then I shall go to another topic.

Mr. Loiselle: I thank the honourable senator for his very valid question. We are dealing here with a delicate matter which has been available to governments over many decades and obviously must be used with great care and only to allow the government to continue operating, not to try to do indirectly what one would not want to do directly. I would suggest to the honourable senator that in all instances, shortly after decisions are made to use Governor General's warrants, the government will be before the House of Commons and will have to answer for the use that has been made of them.

With regard to his first question about the use that the government made of special warrants in 1989, it is my very clear view that the use we made of special warrants while Parliament was in recess was perfectly in accordance with section 30.

The second question that the honourable senator put to me was whether it is the view of the government that it would be desirable to amend section 30. We can discuss this difficult problem. I think it was put there originally precisely for this purpose. People know that there are circumstances in which you need to continue paying salaries and pensions, and so on and so forth, and you would not want to disrupt the functioning of the government. On the other hand, you would not want government to make all kinds of decisions without checking with Parliament. So I agree with that. However, the examples we have had in the past are very much in line with what I have said and I repeat very clearly that the use of special warrant has to be very limited. We can always discuss whether there are other ways of doing that. I personally would certainly be open to a good discussion on this to see whether there are other ways of allowing government business to be carried on. Everyone understands that this is more or less a routine matter, and the fears which are in the back of the honourable senator's mind, and rightly so, are addressed.

With regard to the balance which is achieved through the very real power of the Governor General to refuse to sign these warrants, I think this is very real. If it were seen that the government was using the fact that Parliament was not sitting as an opportunity to try to do something that would not be desirable, it would certainly be fully within the Governor General's prerogative to do so. This occurred in the province of Saskatchewan, for example. The Lieutenant Governor there refused to issue warrants.

So it is a balance. In this country we try to have reasonable management of our affairs. We may not achieve perfection but we want things to continue to function, and this is a very pragmatic, practical approach that has not on any occasion, to my knowledge, been abused. However, as I have said, I would be prepared to discuss whether there are other ways of achieving the same room to manoeuvre.

Senator MacDonald: Mr. Minister, I would like to welcome you along with your associate, Mr. Mel Cappe, who is well known to us all. He is a very distinguished public servant.

The objectives which you mention are all very admirable—the modernization of the management and efficiency of our affairs, cash management practices, reduction of red tape and paperwork. Only a very imaginative soul would cast the level of light on those objectives. However, the amendment which is suggested by the Finance committee is against Chapter 6 which really says that it is an enhanced authority to levy user fees and to adjust the levels of such fees without further recourse to Parliament. In your opening remarks before the committee you said that although many of the measures in the bill are designed to modernize financial management, the underlying principles of parliamentary control that date back to confederation have not been tampered with. In addition you said that the fundamental principles of fairness are embodied throughout.

In your remarks today you said that there would be consultation with the affected parties before any fees are levied, and the fees, of course, would be levied by the Governor in Council, not by the Parliament of Canada. There would be no debate. Is that not rather a "trust us" attitude, your attitude toward fairness? All you are doing is consultation.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, the process of consultation will be a very precise process. Very clear rules will have to be respected so that the process is not just the appearance of a process. A very clear linkage will have to be made. I suggest that cost-recovery has been with us for a very long time. For example, our railway system was more or less government owned. We would provide general services, but for passengers, of course, there was a fee. Such decisions of good management, of increasing or decreasing the number of hours of opening, which have an effect on costs, are not taxes, they are just good management. But in this case, in order to be sure that the intent of our legislation is respected, there will have to be regulatory approval of the process that will have to be followed so that clear consultation is very publicly expressed and due process is followed. It is not something that can be done because you feel that you would like to get some money out of someone. It is a very rigorous process that we have followed in the past with great success and we intend, of course, to continue to follow in the future.

Senator MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, you could surmise that my questions are largely influenced by the presentations made by the shipping federation and the ship owners. Consultatively how do you answer the accusation that you are possibly tinkering with a national transportation system without public debate on the issue? They go into matters which are rather technical. It is true that Transport Canada has the authority to collect recovery fees at the present time, but in terms of class of users they maintain that it is virtually impossible to determine the terms of individual users—that is, the ship owners essentially, because many of the services made available by transport, navigational buoys, VTN services, are provided on a global basis with regard to the individual needs or requests of the ship owners. Will the determination of this, which is terribly important to the eastern ports and their competitive position vis-a-vis American ports, be the subject of public hearings? Is that what you mean by consultation?

Mr. Loiselle: The implementation of Transport Canada's cost-recovery proposal, to which the honourable senator is referring, is not related to the proposed amendments to the Financial Administration Act. It is proceeding under the existing act. Through our act we will restrict the amount that can be charged to the costs of providing the services or facilities.

[Senator MacDonald.]

Our amendment is an improvement on an existing situation. Of course, we will be very diligent in seeing that all departments, and in this particular case the Department of Transport, ensure that full consultation takes place before we decide to recommend the approval of the fees. This will be done, I can assure you, and we will increase, through the amendments that are before you, the proposed controls over the established fees. We will have more control. It is important to be consistent in our policy of linkage between the service provided and the fees that are being charged.

• (1500)

Bill C-91, the bill before us, ensures that user charges are levied. Classes of users will at most only have to pay for the services they receive. They will not be forced to subsidize services provided to other classes of users. In the case that you raised, that is an important point. It will ensure that classes of users are not averaged but that the service provided is clearly linked to the fees that are being implemented. This amendment allows us to deal with the concerns you have raised.

Senator Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I believe that I have the floor. Senator MacDonald arose to ask a supplementary question.

The Chairman: Yes; I recall that you had asked a question and then Senator MacDonald rose. Senator Stewart then asked a supplementary question but yielded to Senator MacDonald. Perhaps we could continue with the status quo at that time. I will recognize Senator Stewart and then the other senators whose names I have on the list, if that is agreeable to honourable senators.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Stewart: In his initial statement the minister made reference to a distinction between fees and charges on the one hand and taxes on the other hand. I want some help in clarifying my thinking on this distinction.

In the document entitled "Policy on External User Charges for Goods, Services, Rights and Privileges" promulgated by the Treasury Board under date of December 7, 1989, at page 25 in the guidelines set forth therein, the following instruction is given—this is an instruction to the various departments. It states:

> It should be recognized that existing authorities may be insufficient to impose the appropriate charges determined in accordance with this policy. In such cases, departments must accept the legal constraints, while seeking to establish an appropriate legislative framework at the earliest opportunity.

At page 30 of the guidelines we read that the amendment—that is, an amendment to give appropriate parliamentary authorization—should be drafted to provide explicit authority to establish user charges in accord with this policy.

Finally, on pages 10 and 11 of the guidelines we read:

> Where the link between the amount of the charge and the cost of the service to individual or particular groups of > users is unclear and the difference large, charges may amount to a form of taxation.

There would appear to be a point at which what ostensibly is a fee or a charge undergoes a qualitative change and becomes a tax.

In 1988, when the emergencies powers bill was being considered in a committee of this house, the Honourable Perrin Beatty dealt with the right to tax. I had asked whether the sweeping powers to be conferred by the measure on the Governor in Council in certain circumstances would permit the Governor in Council to impose taxes. Mr. Beatty was emphatic in his reply. He said—this is found in Senate Debates of May 31, 1988 at page 391:

> Finally, with regard to taxation, I am pleased to say that I can give a short, unequivocal answer. Taxes cannot be imposed by order in council. The Constitution sets out quite specific procedures for levying taxes and a bill is always required.

I am trying now to discover if it still is the government's view that a bill always is required for a tax. Is a bill which imposes the tax immediately always required in the case of taxes. Can the power of tax be delegated? I am raising this question to see if the interpretation of the Constitution set forth by Mr. Beatty gives assurance that the powers that the government is seeking in the present bill cannot be used for a change that in reality is a tax.

• (1510)

I want to ask the minister if the position taken by Mr. Beatty, when he spoke for the government in 1988, is the present position of the government.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, of course I cannot comment technically on the various points that have been raised by the honourable senator. I agree that, politically, there has to be a frontier somewhere at which point a tax is slipped into on the one side and a user fee on the other.

We have some definitions which may not be absolutely perfect but which may help us see where this particular frontier is. What is the difference between a tax and a user fee? We could say that government services such as those of the Department of National Defence which generate broad public benefits are and should be financed through general tax revenues. However, many services delivered by the government are provided primarily for the benefit of specific users and consumers of such products and services. In those circumstances a charge to such groups can be a more equitable financing mechanism than can general taxation. Charges for these services do not exceed costs and cannot be construed as a tax.

To understand the intent of the government, something which I think is well understood on the other side of the House, I must say that we cannot deny the fact that we are here looking at ways to improve the management of services with a policy that is based on the fact that those who benefit should pay. We want to reduce the burden on the general taxpayer for financing activities which benefit specific users. The advantage to that is that it brings in a market discipline to bear on government services. That can lead those who receive these benefits to a more realistic demand for them. If the money is just pumped from general revenue there is no equity and balance. When a group of well-identified users ask for a special service, if the discipline of market is brought in, that will cause them to ask certain questions and to help us to improve the discipline that is so needed.

Therefore, there is, in my mind, a very clear distinction, but I would not claim to be in a position to give the honourable senator legal advice on this. The advice I have is that there is clearly a difference between the two.

Senator Stewart: We all appreciate the minister's explaination of the government's good intentions. The problem is that we know about good intentions. What I was asking was if the conventional wisdom, as some have called it, pronounced by the minister's colleague, Mr. Beatty, can be relied upon as assurance that what the government is now asking this house to authorize cannot become a valid tax. The minister is accompanied by learned counsel. Is there the possibility that at some point an aggrieved person can say, "The charge that you are imposing has passed over that line between a charge and a tax; it has become a tax. Consequently, in accordance with the interpretation of the law given by Mr. Beatty, that charge is ultra vires the Governor in Council." May we have the minister's assurance that there is at least that limitation on the power to impose what the bill calls fees and charges?

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, I can certainly tell the honourable senator that our intent is very clear. There are quite a few ways for people who feel that we have gone overboard to raise the issue. Of course, all the money that we obtain from user fees, and so on, as well as the use which is made of it, is reported to Parliament and is open for discussion.

As far as going beyond the law, I would say that the courts are there for that very purpose. We could be challenged in the Federal Court. I have made our intention clear. I think that the honourable senator agrees with what we are trying to achieve in good management, but he is afraid that at one point it may go beyond and slowly remove from Parliament the capacity to make these very important decisions. That is not at all our intent.

Should at some point in time a particular decision be questioned, we could always discuss it at the time or go to court. The law is pretty clear in that respect, as is our position. It could be demonstrated easily that we have gone beyond user fees to what would appear to be a tax.

Senator Stewart: The implication of the last proposition is that if you have moved over into taxation, the order in council or regulation would be a nullity, be reason of being ultra vires. Is that correct?

Mr. Loiselle: I would be tempted to say yes because of the policy on which this is based. It is not at all our intention to try to remove the present taxation system on general services. Our efforts to have better management, something with which I know most senators agree, is something that has existed for decades in Canada. It is something which we think should be used more often to bring in more market discipline. It is not intended to try to do otherwise.

Senator Stewart: I do not think we will disagree much on the ends that you intend to accomplish, but I am uncertain about the means you propose to use.

You seem to be saying that if you slide over into taxation you will have acted ultra vires. I am looking at a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the agricultural products marketing case back in 1978 where this question of the constitutional limitation on Parliament to authorize taxes only by a bill was dealt with, albeit indirectly. Chief Justice Laskin, at page 1229 of the report in the Supreme Court of Canada Reports said:

● (1520)

> In the present case, I need not come to any definite conclusion as to whether ss. 53 and 54 lay down prescriptions which are cognizable in the Courts. In my opinion, for reasons that follow, I do not agree that the levies authorized by s. 2(2) can be characterized as taxes, having regard especially to the context in which authority to impose or exact them is given.

In other words, the Chief Justice did not decide that conventional wisdom with regard to sections 53 and 54 is correct. At the same time, he did not decide that it is not correct.

However, another distinguished member of that court went farther towards challenging the conventional wisdom. I quote now from Mr. Chief Justice Pigeon's comments at page 1290, where he said:

> It does not appear to me that appellants' attack based upon the alleged absence of a message from the Governor General recommending its enactment, comes within the scope of the question submitted. Nothing in the order of reference or in the material submitted therewith, raises any issue with respect to the regularity of the adoption of the Act as opposed to its intrinsic validity depending on Parliament's legislative authority.

He goes on to say that that is not a fully germane question. Then he said:

> However, it appears to me that the appellants are entitled to request that consideration be given to ss. 53 and 54 of the B.N.A. Act in the following manner. It may be contended that, in authorizing a board or agency to impose and to use levies or charges, Parliament is indirectly doing what it may not do directly, namely, having a tax levied and appropriated otherwise than by means of a bill voted in the House of Commons on the recommendation of the Governor General. In my view this attack fails for two reasons. I agree with the Chief Justice that adjustment levies, as well as levies for expenses, are not taxes.

Then, honourable senators, listen to what he said next. He said:

> Furthermore, ss. 53 and 54 are not entrenched provisions of the constitution, they are clearly within those parts which the Parliament of Canada is empowered to amend by s. 91(1). Absent of special requirement such as s. 2 of the Canadian Bill of Rights, nothing prevents Parliament from indirectly amending by ss. 53 and 54 by providing for the levy and appropriation of taxes in such manner as it sees fit, by delegation or otherwise.

The implication of Mr. Justice Pigeon's decision is that if Parliament, explicitly or by implication, conferred upon the Governor in Council a power—called a fee or a charge, but, in fact, a tax—to impose such a fee or charge which was a tax, there would be nothing in sections 53 and 54 by reason of which that order in council could be found invalid. Mr. Justice Pigeon was supported in his opinion—although not necessarily on this point—with regard to the questions before the court by several other judges.

Consequently, it seems to me that the argument that these are only fees and charges, and the argument, by implication, that there is a point beyond which they cannot be collected because they really are taxes, must fall. That is why I was seeking assurance from the minister that, regardless of what they are called, they can only be for the strictly defined purpose of a fee or a charge, and that if a Government, deliberately or otherwise, slips over into taxation, the regulations or orders will be struck down. However, it seems to me that the decision in the Agricultural Marketing case says that the conventional wisdom, is not valid. I have heard nothing from the minister this afternoon which gives any assurance that we are not delegating powers which are not limited by sections 53 and 54 as interpreted by conventional wisdom.

I do not know whether the minister has had time to take advice from his learned counsel. Certainly, if he has I, for one, would like to have assurance that the views expressed in the Agricultural Marketing case is wrong.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, I have listened very carefully to the very interesting points made by the honourable senator. In this respect the amendments to the bill are extremely useful inasmuch as they will help in defining, much more precisely, what is a user fee; in stating, for example, that in no case should they exceed the cost; and in setting out under which conditions and after what process they can be implemented.

I think we are progressing in the same direction in making sure that we move away from the confusion by defining more precisely, as we have in this bill, user fees and when they can be implemented, with what authority, and with what regulatory power. This will help us to make the distinction between the two.

Of course, I am aware of very rich jurisprudence which exists in this regard. However, I would repeat that I am not a lawyer and am not competent to pass judgment, particularly on Judge Pigeon, whom I knew and who always impressed me considerably.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I want to raise somewhat the same matter and also a matter that Senator MacDonald raised respecting some of the fees that may be charged in the future for shippers and shipping.

I will raise a couple of questions which have to do with agriculture. I am sure that almost any senator could look at a government service in any sector and have some great difficulty in determining the actual cost to the government for providing that particular service. I also agree with Senator MacDonald that all of the great objectives of modernizing, streamlining, helping with the debt, and so on, are desirable. If you want to do all these things, fine, but then ask Parliament for permission to do them.

Senator Simard: Read the bill!

Senator Olson: I have read the bill very carefully. I do not want to get into an argument with Senator Simard, because he is usually off in left field, but I want the minister to try to explain how the government is going to determine what are the costs to the government. I will give you some pretty complicated questions with respect to that—and, by the way, I sat on Treasury Board for quite a few years, so I know what kind of representation is made there. For example, there is a great deal of service that is provided by the federal government, through the research stations and through the Health of Animals Branch, to the producers of animals that go into our food chain. Is that a service only to the primary producers, who in this case would be the users of the service, or is it a service that is provided for the general welfare of the general public? That is a good question, but under this bill you are seeking to put all of that under the discretionary authority of the Governor in Council. We need an answer to that.

Another example I could give you is the matter of the agricultural research stations that have provided all the new seed that Canadian farmers have used for the last 60 years, or perhaps even longer than that. The government set up plant breeding stations. The main one that we have is in Winnipeg, and, just to give you one example, there are usually between 4,200 and 4,800 separate families of wheat growing in that research lab all the time, and whenever they find one that appears to be superior to what is then in general use, that particular genetic material is taken out and tested against all the diseases and other problems that a farmer or a primary producer could have with it, and then, after all that is done, it is licensed for sale and for use in Canada. Up until very recently it was against the law of Canada to produce a seed of wheat that does not meet all those tests and receive that licence. The reason is very simple. Canadian farmers—or the Canadian Wheat Board as their agent—have been able to sell wheat all over the world for the last 40 or 50 years on the basis of a grade submitted. Every other country in the world also has to provide a sample and has to guarantee that the sample is representative of what will be shipped. So, in that area, there are hundreds of millions of dollars spent by the federal government in these research stations to protect the health of animals and the quality of Canadian agricultural products.

I have given you only two specific examples, but the situation is the same for potatoes, for apples, and for all the rest of the products. How much of that are you going to consider as user fees for the primary producers, who are the first and most immediate direct customers of the service that is provided by those research stations? That is not spelled out in the bill, but what is said in the bill—and I know the government is looking for all the authority it can get—can be found on page 4 under the proposed section 19.2, which states that any charge cannot exceed the cost to Her Majesty in the right of Canada of providing the service. I understand that. However, there is almost no limit to how much you can put in there as the cost inputs that went into delivering the service, whether it is for some new variety of some seed or for some new service to dispose of, or deal with, a serious health problem in animals. So it seems to me that you need to tell us how you intend to arrive at that cost figure.

I can understand the shippers having some concern as to what you are going to charge for navigation services and the various other things that the federal government provides. It is also interesting to note that you can vary the service. You are asking for authority to have varied services; in other words, you do not need to charge everybody the same for exactly the same service. Is that right or not right? I think it is right. I think that you have provided, in clause 6 or 7, that you can charge a person in one part of the country a different fee or charge, however you define it, for exactly the same service as someone somewhere else. The bill says that. You can do it one of two ways, either by way of the charge in the first place or by way of remission. Then you have two or three ways of remitting the charges or setting up partial fees. On page 6, the bill says that you can grant a partial remission.

The authority that you are seeking under this bill is enormous, and when Senator Stewart complains that you are really taking unto the cabinet, and, unfortunately, unto the bureaucrats in the various departments, the right to set down certain charges and be discriminatory in laying down those charges, we find it is provided in this bill.

Senator Simard: Read the bill!

Senator Olson: I have read the bill and I probably understand it better than you do, Senator Simard.

Senator Simard: That seems to be your problem.

Senator Olson: Yes, that is my problem; I understand it too well. We need to understand why you are seeking all this authority, but you come along with these explanations in law, citing some jurisprudence as to what is a charge, what is a fee and what is a tax. Well, I know one thing for certain: For every one of those, someone has to pay something. You do lay some limits on one of those items, where a fee or a charge other than a tax cannot cost more than it cost the federal government to provide the service. Well, I want to tell you there is so much room in most of the government services that that is absolutely ineffective and irrelevant. That is particularly so with regard to the research stations. Everything will depend on the amount of research you are going to throw into that cost. We do not know that. It does not say that in the bill.

There is a simple solution to all of this. When you want to charge the user fees or charges, or whatever you want to call them, just ask Parliament, as has been done in this country ever since Confederation.

You came along with a bill a few weeks ago regarding plant breeders' rights. I objected to it then and I object to it now. We were told that the market would decide how much these plant breeders and other would charge for their services. That is really just some kind of market-oriented baloney because there is no one doing that in Canada, and anyone who wants to bring any seed into Canada has to subject it to all of the tests for health and so on to ensure that there will be no contamination of the plants that are already growing in Canada, whether it is a grain, a legume or anything else. Those charges are paid, by and large, by the federal government's Department of Agriculture. So how are you going to sort that out? Under this bill you are seeking to give the Governor in Council the authority to transfer that authority from Parliament to the Governor in Council, and what we have seen them do lately cannot give Canadians any confidence that they will be competent and reasonable in doing it.

That is why I am concerned. That is why people in my riding are concerned, that the government would transfer the authority to invoke charges on the Canadian people without asking Parliament. It is the same thing for shipping. I think it will involve trucking. It will certainly involve agriculture. So far the minister has only said, "Trust us". The Conservatives know why they are at 14 per cent, because people do not trust them, that is why. They do not trust anything that you do anymore. They do not even believe what you say. So we need some assurance before we give you this kind of authority, because the right to tax has always been asked of Parliament first, not in a little room where you have cabinet meetings once in a while and sometimes only with a few of the ministers. If we ever get to Question Period, there are a few things I would like to sort out there as well, but that is another argument.

All I ask of the minister is that he give us some assurance that he is not simply transferring the authority to charge fees and taxes, all of which are the same thing, except that by your definition they really do not have a lot of validity to a lot of services provided by the federal government anyway. We would like to know where the limits will be.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, I think I can give you all the assurance that we are not inventing anything. I think it was in 1957 that a bill was passed in which it was written:

> Where a service or the use of a facility is provided by Her Majesty to any person and the Governor in Council is of opinion that whole or part of the cost of providing the service or the use of the facility should be borne by the person to whom it is provided, the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of Treasury Board, may

Et cetera. This is not my bill. This is a bill that Canada has been living under for decades. What we are doing to address the problems you have raised is putting in more precise definitions to avoid potential abuse of these user fees and to be sure that we all know what is meant.

[Senator Olson.]

So, with respect, I would say to the points the honourable senator has raised that we are trying to obtain an authority to use discretionary power. We are restricting the authority that has lain with the government for more than 50 years.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is reassuring. I have to ask, then, why are you bringing in clause 6? Why are you asking for it today? Clause 6 reads in part:

> The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board,
> (a) by regulation prescribe the fees or charges to be paid for a service or a use of a facility provided by or on behalf of Her Majesty in the right of Canada, . . .
> (b) authorize the appropriate Minister . . .

I suspect that that refers to the Minister of Agriculture in some cases. If you have that authority, why are you asking for it in this bill?

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, clearly we have this authority. We are saying, first, that we will do it by regulation so that the situation is clear and accessible to the public. If you read proposed section 19.3 below, you will see that in effect it says "without respect to other acts." We are saying now that we will continue to do what has been available to governments for decades, but we will make it subject to other acts. We are restricting, sir, with respect, "subject to the provisions of any Act of Parliament." We are, I would say, being much more respectful of government than has been the case in the past. The authority to implement user fees has been there. We are restricting it, defining it, making sure that it is used for the purpose intended and not something else. So all these measures are more restrictive ways of doing what has been within the authority of government since 1957.

Senator Olson: I will accept that, but I am not voting for the bill because I am suspicious. However, I accept that those intentions are there.

Senator Simard: Sit down.

Senator Olson: Pardon me. Why do you want my to sit down? Can't you stand any criticism? It is our job to look at these kinds of bills and to pick out the weaknesses and abuses that this government has wrought on the people of Canada over the past few years. I intend to do that with all the vigor at my disposal, whether you like it or not.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if I may, I do not contest for a second the right of my honourable friend to make his points as he puts it with all the vigor at his disposal. We look forward to his presentation, but I think we have now gone beyond the point where members of the committee have questions to put to the minister and that he has answers to provide. We are now into a debate on the matter. I would be very pleased to hear my honourable friend.

With the indulgence of the committee, I thank the President of the Treasury Board for having appeared here this afternoon. He has been here for an hour and a quarter and has answered the questions that have been put to him quite thoroughly. So I would invite him to depart so we may continue the debate.

Senator Barootes: Surely you understand.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I understand very well. I want to close by saying that I wanted to raise these reservations. I do not see any purpose in coming to Parliament for authority the government already has. The government already has the authority by a bill that was passed in 1975 or 1976. Why are we messing around with it now? It does not make any sense.

Senator Simard: Read the bill.

Senator Olson: If I read a bill I understand it. Apparently you have read it and you still do not understand it. Anyway, I don't want Senator Simard to divert me from my very logical argument. I am satisfied that I have raised the questions. I did not get a satisfactory answer except to say, "Trust us." The people of Canada do not trust you, but we will see what happens when you start setting fees that appear to be unreasonable to a lot of people.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I move that the clause deleted from the bill by the National Finance committee be reinstated in the bill.

The Chairman: It has been moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips that the clause deleted from the bill by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be reinstated in the bill. Are honourable senators ready for the question ?

Some Hon. Senators: Question.

The Chairman: Those in favour?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Chairman: Those contrary?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Chairman: In my opinion the "yeas" have it.

Senator Frith: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I move that the committee report the bill without amendment.

Motion agreed to, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Gerald R. Ottenheimer: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-91, to amend the Financial Administration Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: With leave now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No. Debate, please.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, when defending the use made by the Mulroney government of Governor General's special warrants in 1989, Senator Murray told the Senate that it should not pay too much attention to what deputy ministers, or even ministers, say when they ask the Senate or the House of Commons to approve a clause in a bill. What senators should focus on are not their words, but the words in their bill. Senator Murray told us, on May 17, 1989, in Debates of the Senate, at page 243, that it would be more relevant to square the actions of the government in 1989, not with what Mr. W. C. Clark, the Deputy Minister of Finance, said when the Financial Administration Act was being amended in 1951, or with what Mr. Donald Fleming, the Minister of Finance, said when the Financial Administration Act was being amended in 1958, but with the words of the act.

We should heed Senator Murray's advice today as we examine Bill C-91, yet another bill to amend the Financial Administration Act. In Committee of the Whole this afternoon, again and again the minister told us that his intentions were all good, that the intentions of the present government were all good. Of course, Senator Murray was smiling as he listened to the minister, because he remembered how insignificant are the intentions and words of ministers when they urge the Senate or the House of Commons to adopt a clause. It is the words in the clause that count, said Senator Murray. Forget the salesmanship of the deputy minister or indeed of the minister. They may change their minds; indeed they themselves may be changed. There will be successors whose intentions may not be the same as those of the minister of the day.

Clause 6 of the proposed bill, the clause that the committee on National Finance set aside, would amend section 19 of the Financial Administration Act. The government just now revived clause 6. Presently section 19 of the Financial Administration Act reads as follows:

> Where a service or the use of a facility is provided by Her Majesty to any person and the Governor in Council is of opinion that the whole or part of the cost of providing the service or the use of a facility should be borne by the person to whom it is provided, the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Treasury Board may
> (a), subject to provisions of any Act relating to that service or the use of that facility, by regulation prescribe the fee or charge to be paid by the person to whom the service or the use of the facility is provided; or

(b), notwithstanding the provisions of any act relating to that service or the use of that facility, but subject to and in accordance with such terms and conditions as may be specified by the Governor in Council, authorize the appropriate Minister to prescribe the fee or charge to be paid by the person to whom the service or the use of the facility is provided.

What the government wants the Senate to agree to today is to drop the condition in the present act, namely "where the Governor in Council is of opinion that the whole or part of the cost of providing the service or the use of the facility should be borne by the person to whom it is provided." Under clause 6 we are to move from a situation in which fees and charges are thought of as exceptional to a situation in which they are to be regarded as the norm.

At present section 19 provides that the Governor in Council is to decide whether the whole or a part of the cost is to be recovered by a fee or charge. Clause 6 makes no direct mention of recovering part of the cost. What it does say is that the fee or charge may not exceed the cost to Her Majesty in right of Canada of providing the service or the use of a facility to the users or class of users.

The clear implication is that full cost is to be recovered unless the government decides for its own reasons not to recover the full cost. That full cost is to be the base, and is shown by the Treasury Board paper to which I made reference in the committee earlier today, the paper entitled "Policy on External User Charges for Goods, Services, Rights and Privileges". The principle stated therein is that

Charges for using public facilities (other than by sale, lease, license or loan) and for services provided by the government must be for the full cost, subject to the exceptions in Appendix A.

How is full cost to be determined? Here again we have the guidance of the Treasury Board policy statement.

"Full cost is the sum of all costs (direct, indirect, cash and non-cash) the government incurs supplying a good, service, property, or limited right of privilege. These include goods or services that other departments provide without charge (e.g., legal services, accommodation, issuing cheques, employer contributions to insurance plans); costs financed by separate authorities (e.g., some employee benefits, termination pay); the financing costs of inventories and annualized capital costs including finances."

Indirect costs—to be included in determining full cost—include administrative overhead, accommodation, shared capital and shared inventories. Conceivably even a part of the deputy minister's salary is to be included in full costs.

Nor are benefits to the public at large to modify the meaning of the expression "full costs." I quote again from the Treasury Board policy statement.

[Senator Stewart.]

Full costs means the full cost of providing the service regardless of any broader public benefits over and above the specific benefits to users or other direct beneficiaries.

• (1600)

According to the Treasury Board recovery less than full cost is justified in certain cases. These are specified in the appendix, Appendix A, to which I made reference. Less than full cost is to be recovered, for example, where full recovery would reduce consumption of the good, service, right or privilege sufficient to compromise achieving program or other important government objectives. Again, recovery may be less than full cost where full recovery would have a serious unintended—that is, presumably unintended by the Treasury Board—detrimental impact on the financial position of particular groups or classes of users. So it is possible for the Treasury Board or a department to back off from full cost, to abate the fee or charge.

Not only does the Treasury Board urge the departments of the government to adhere firmly to its policy with regard to user fees, but it offers incentives to the departments. They are told in Appendix C, page 14, of the policy paper that:

..increased revenues user charges for goods and services will generally be used to reduce dependence on appropriations to finance the supply of these goods and services.

"Bring in more money for fees and charges and we will reduce your need to go to Parliament for appropriations." Among the specific rewards offered to departments, the Treasury Board states that it will:

Provide a performance bonus calculated in proportion to the increased revenues from user charge initiatives (i.e. increases in proportion of costs recovered through charge increases or improved collections). This bonus would reward revenue-raising effort and would be applied to the cost of justified departmental needs for which funds would not otherwise be available.

In other words, the department is being told to go out and squeeze your users as much as you can.

Senator Simard: No, no, no.

Senator Stewart: That is exactly what the policy says. "Raise as much money as you can, and we will reward you, and not only that, somehow or other we will make money available to your without you having to go to Parliament for appropriation."

Senator Simard: Are you guys collecting government taxes?

Senator Stewart: I am sorry, I did not hear the honourable senator.

Senator Simard: I have a question. Are you telling us that your policy would be to favour the bad taxpayers, people who are late and refuse to pay, that the government should not do anything about it? Is this what you are telling us?

Senator Stewart: No. I am interested in Senator Simard's view that what we are talking about here is taxes.

Senator Simard: That is right, collecting taxes. You say we shouldn't do anything about it.

Senator Stewart: I thought the Government's position is that we are talking about collecting revenue, ostensibly at least in the form of fees and charges.

Senator Simard: Come on, we are talking about taxes and user fees and everything else.

Senator Stewart: The government policy statement, which I commend to Senator Simard's attention, says that if a department brings in a lot of money, squeezes its users, it will be rewarded. Somehow or other this is to be done by allowing them to have money, perhaps without appropriation. Or perhaps they are saying that when departmental estimates are being prepared the Board will allow departments that have been good revenue raisers to inflate their votes somewhat. Is that what is being said?

Senator Simard: No.

Senator Stewart: If it is not, I should like to know what is being said.

Under the present section 19 any fee or charge is to be paid by the person to whom the service or the use of the facility is provided. The Treasury Board now wants the Senate to authorize the imposition of fees on classes of users of a service or facility—not on persons, but on classes of users. Those are the words to notice. The declared intention of the Treasury Board is to charge each member of a class of users an average fee or charge.

This approach is alarming to those of us who try to represent what I will call the warm water areas of the country, the areas of the country where transportation and fisheries are very active. It is generally agreed that those areas of the country rely more on federal government activity than many inland and urban areas. We have fisheries; we have marine transportation; we have the coast guard; we have navigation aids. All these are under federal jurisdiction. Now the Treasury Board is saying that it wants to be able to set up classes of users and to fix a fee or charge that will be imposed equally upon each member of the class.

In the committee of the other house the Government explained how beneficial this would be. They said that a class conceivably will include people in the north, where costs are high, and also people in the south, perhaps in Halifax, Yarmouth, Sydney, Vancouver, and "we will impose an average fee or charge on all those within the class."

In other words, they propose to shift the cost of providing extra support for the people in the north from the general taxpayer to those in the same class of users in the south, perhaps to shipping interests, perhaps to fishermen, in Nova Scotia and British Columbia. That is the declared intention of the government.

The Treasury Board wants the Senate to agree to give it—that is, the Treasury Board—the right to define each and every one of these classes of users. The classes of users are not to be established by Parliament. The definition of a class of users is to be created by the Treasury Board—that is, by the Governor in Council on the advice of the Treasury Board.

Under clause 6, which the government asks us to vote for this afternoon, the fee or charge to be paid by a user or to be averaged within a class of users is not to exceed the cost to the government of providing the service or the use of the facility to the user or the class of users. However, in no place whatsoever in the bill is "cost" defined. We are told in the Treasury Board policy paper—and policy papers come and go, of course—that cost includes everything that they can possibly tie, directly or indirectly, to the cost of the service or the facility.

As I said earlier, the factors to be considered by departments when fixing charges below full cost are set forth in that Appendix A. At first glance at least, these seem reasonable grounds for abatement, but the question for us to ask this afternoon is whether the grounds of abatement ought to be established by the Treasury Board or by Parliament. Assuming for a moment that we are prepared to say that full-cost recovery ordinarily is desirable, are we prepared to leave the important matter of establishing the grounds of abatement to the Treasury Board—that is, to those whom in eastern Nova Scotia are called Rideau Canal fishermen and the like?

Senator Simard: Come on.

Senator Stewart: You should listen to fishermen, real fishermen, when they talk about the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Senator Simard, if you wish to make an address on this point—

Senator Simard: I will, after.

Senator Stewart: You were an active participant in the work of the committee. You pretend to understand the bill; I invite you to rebut what I am saying.

Senator Simard: When you sit down, then I will.

Senator Stewart: I will sit down soon. I had hoped to be able to give these few comments without having to contend with filibustering, but, if Senator Simard persists, I can only try to rebut the nonsense that he is trying to put on the record of the Senate. And now we have Senator Barootes trying to assist Senator Simard in his filibustering efforts—Senator Barootes, who did not even deign to come near the committee.

Senator Barootes: We will take it as read.

An Hon. Senator: He was on holidays.

Senator Stewart: Cost recovery no longer is of little importance either in financial or constitutional terms. This is shown by the Estimates for the current fiscal year. How much do you suppose it amounts to? Part I of the Estimates, pages 72-73, shows that user fee revenues in 1991-92 are expected to be upwards of $3.5 billion and climbing.

I doubt that when Parliament enacted the present section 19 of the Financial Administration Act it ever anticipated that the power to impose fees and charges, however delegated by Parliament, would be used as extensively as they have been used. Clause 6 today asks us to give a nod of approval to what has been done. It also asks us to enlarge the power of the Treasury Board, acting through the Governor in Council, to raise revenue by what Bill C-91 calls fees and charges.

We should be told what the government will do under the proposed new section 19 and under comparable sections of other statutes. We should be told, first, in the case of each department, the full costs of each service and each facility. Second, in the case of each service and facility we should be told what abatements from real cost have been allowed by reasons of the exceptions set forth in Appendix A. The Treasury Board has this information.

The Treasury Board paper, on page IV, states:

> Where not already included in the External User Fee Revenue Plan, departments must be in a position to supply the TB with a list of their activities that provide specific benefits to external users. These lists must identify: the full cost of the activities, and, in the case of property, its value; the current charging policy and its rationale; appropriate charges, if not already in place, conforming to this policy, and plans and a timetable for implementing them; and progress towards setting appropriate charges and attaining any user fee revenue targets the TB has approved. Where appropriate charges are less than amounts in accordance with requirements 2 to 4 (i.e. full cost recovery or market rates), departments must document, and be in a position to provide, the rationale based on the provisions governing exceptions in Appendix A.

In other words, we should know what the costs of the various goods and facilities provided to users are, and we should know what abatements from the full costs have been made.

I want to move now to that part of clause 6 that should add a new section, section 19(1), to the Financial Administration Act. In that part of the clause we are asked to give the Governor in Council the power to fix the fee or charge to be paid for a right as well as for a privilege. However, if we look at the Treasury Board paper we find that it does not refer to rights but, rather, to "limited rights."

A question I wanted to ask the minister, before Senator Murray imposed closure by whisking the minister away, was why a change is being made in language, away from "limited rights"—the language used in the Treasury Board paper—to the all-inclusive term "rights" in this bill. In the proposed part of the section the Governor in Council is to have power to fix the fee or charge to be paid for a right.

What does that mean? What is the distinction that is intended between right, on the one hand, and privilege on the other? Moreover, honourable senators will notice that these rights or privileges may be conferred by any form of authorization, written or oral. License permit or other authorization—what does "other authorization" mean?

● (1620)

What does "other authorization" mean? Does that mean the nod of a customs officer indicating that you have the right to proceed into Canada with the goods you wish to import? Could a fee or charge be imposed for that right conferred in that way?

[Senator Stewart.]

In explaining proposed section 19.1 to the legislative committee of the House of Commons, Mr. Barry Lalonde of the Treasury Board secretariat said, "We are trying through these changes to introduce the notion of rights and privileges, and that is simply to reflect intellectual property, drilling rights and those kinds of things where in fact the government is providing someone the right to do something and there should be an appropriate charge for that".

Honourable senators will notice that, unlike the earlier part of the new section, section 91 will not set a limit beyond which the fee or charge for a right—a drilling right, for example—may not go. Neither does it state how the amount of the fee or charge for such a right is to be established. All that is to be left to the good intentions of the people who work for the Treasury Board or in various other departments.

What is the point of the proposed new section 19.3 at lines 15 to 19 of the original draft of the bill? It states:

> "Regulations and orders under section 19 and 19.1 are subject to the provision of any Act of Parliament relating to the service or the use of the facility, or to the right or privilege . . .

This seems innocuous in that it merely makes statutory a principle of common law. However, if at some time in the future section 19.3 is repealed, the effect of the repeal will be to obliterate a major tenet of common law.

Then we have the second part of proposed 19.3. It seems odious. It states that a fee or charge may be required even though Parliament has required the government to provide a service or a facility, or where Parliament has required the government that a right or privilege must be conferred. There may be a charge for a right that has been conferred by Parliament. It sounds very strange.

Again and again we hear the minister say, "Our intentions are good, trust us."

Senator Corbin: You better not believe them.

Senator Stewart: The fishermen in the Atlantic provinces would not heed those words today because right now they are protesting against the new dockside monitoring policy introduced by the government. I wonder if honourable senators realize what the government is doing. It is saying to the fishermen, "You come to us for a licence to fish, a licence to carry on your livelihood. Well, we say to you, you have to join an association, which association will hire a dockside monitor. Of course, the association will pay that dockside monitor. As a condition of your licence you must make a contribution to the association equivalent to your share of the cost of paying the monitor. Otherwise, you do not get a licence."

When we asked the Department of Fisheries and Oceans what authority it has for imposing this requirement we are told that under the Fisheries Act the minister has absolute authority. But that is not what the Treasury Board paper says. It says in the parts I read out earlier today, "Be careful because when you amend your act to permit charges you must ask Parliament for specific authority to impose a fee or a charge. Vague, general language is not enough." But that is not what the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is doing. It is saying, "The minister has absolute authority. He can do whatever he likes. Parliament has spoken in global language and that includes fees, charges, and payments such as these to be made to pay for dockside monitoring."

That the fishermen of Atlantic Canada have good reason to be sceptical when they are asked by Treasury Board, "Trust us." What did we hear this afternoon? We heard, "Our intentions are good, trust us. Trust us to decide for what services, facilities, rights and privileges a fee or a charge will be imposed". That is what the minister is asking for in this bill. He is saying, "Trust us to decide what the full cost for a service or a facility is to be." He is saying, "Trust us to decide what, if any, abatements, from the full cost for a service or facility will be allowed. Trust us to decide what users are to be included in a class of users to which an average fee or charge is to be applied. Trust us to decide what users of a facility, a wharf, a navigation aid, a breakwater are to be charged and 'who' are not to be charged. Trust us. Trust us and all our unknown successors." That is what we are being asked to vote for—

Senator Simard: Amen.

Senator Stewart: Senator Simard says, "Amen" to the Government; and I do not.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I know that some are wondering why we are making such a fuss about this matter. I also know that I might not convince some of those same people or others that there is good reason to put some fuss on the record about it.

The comments of the minister were candid and appreciated, as was noted by Senator MacDonald from Halifax, and do provide a background for putting something further on the record about it when he enumerates a long list of advantages and conveniences to the government and the Crown with regard to the collection of money.

What I want to put on the record are two perspectives on principle from the point of view of the people. The first is the historical enshrinement of the people's point of view. I then want to put something on the record from a less historical point of view as to effects and application of the same principle in contemporary or present times.

I think the most useful way I can do this on the first branch—that is, on the historical point of view—is to refer to the leading case on the principles that are raised in this legislation, in the report of the committee on the legislation and, of course, the report that ensued from the deliberations of the Committee of the Whole.

• (1630)

I will not bore you with the details of the case, because I think you will quickly see that the facts of that case raised the same issues we are concerned with here today and stimulated some useful comments by Lord Justice Atkin, one of the common law's most eminent jurists. The case is called: Attorney General v. Wilts United Dairies.

I am referring to a case book by D. L. Kier, Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and F. H. Lawson, M.A. and Doctor of Common Law of Gray's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. The title of this book is Cases in Constitutional Law.

Briefly, this was a wartime case and the analogy is that a food administrator thought he was permitted, by statute, to levy what was argued to be a tax by way of a licence fee. Because of what he thought was statutory authority, he issued orders providing, among other things, that excepting under certain licensing no milk could either be purchased within an area comprising the counties of Somerset, Devon, Dorset and Cornwall, or bought outside that area for distribution. This case was before the Court of Appeal in England. An appellant company which dealt with milk got a licence, but only on condition that it agreed to pay twopence for every gallon of milk purchased.

The other aspect relevant to our consideration is that he had certain powers to use the money to defer costs, which is exactly the same principle we have before us.

Lord Justice Atkin said:

> The question of law that arises is whether the Food Controller had any legal authority for requiring the defendants to agree to pay the sums in questions as a condition of the licence required.

I do not want to go too deeply into the facts, but I do want to elaborate sufficiently so that you will know what raised the principles to which Lord Atkin referred that I think are engaged by the legislation before the Senate today. Lord Atkin goes back quite deeply in history and into some very important traditions and principles of constitutional law. At page 164 of the case book he said:

> The present charge is in respect of money claimed on behalf of the Crown by the Food Controller as a condition of a grant of a licence. It could not be disputed that the Food Controller could only acquire the right to make such a charge by statutory authority. No power to make a charge upon the subject for the use of the Crown could arise except by virtue of the prerogative or by statute, and the alleged right under the prerogative was disposed of finally by the Bill of Rights (1 W. and M., sess. 2, c.2). It may be convenient at this stage to remind ourselves of this statute, an act for declaring the rights and liberties of the subject. After reciting that the late King, by the assistance of divers evil counsellors, judges, and ministers, employed by him, did endeavour to subvert and extirpate . . . the laws and liberties of this kingdom . . . by levying money for and to the use of the Crown—

I might just mention that those are the same words used by the minister. Lord Justice Atkin went on to say:

> —by pretence of prerogative for other time and in other manner than the same was granted by Parliament . . . all of which are utterly and directly contrary to the known laws and statutes and freedom of this realm, the lords and > commons declare that levying money for or to the use of the Crown [as above] is illegal: and pray that it may be declared and enacted that all and singular the rights and liberties asserted and claimed in the above declaration are the true ancient and indubitable rights and liberties of the people of this kingdom and shall be strictly holden and observed . . . and all officers and ministers whatsoever shall serve their Majesties and their successors according to the same in all times to come, all which their Majesties are contented and pleased shall be declared and enacted and established by authority of this present Parliament and shall stand, remain and be the law of this realm for ever, and the same are by their said Majesties by and with the advice and consent, &c., declared, enacted and established accordingly.

All that does is to say that prerogative is gone. The two ways to levy were by prerogative and by statute. What Lord Atkin was saying was that the prerogative, the right to levy taxes, was disposed of by the Bill of Rights. What does that leave? He goes on to say:

> Though the attention of our ancestors was directed especially to abuses of the prerogative, there can be no doubt that this statute declares the law that no money shall be levied for or to the use of the Crown except by grant of Parliament.

It is not by prerogative, it is but by grant of Parliament. He goes on to say:

> We know how strictly Parliament has maintained this right—and, in particular, how jealously the House of Commons has asserted it predominance in the power of raising money.

That was raised earlier today.

He then goes on at that point to discuss the question of the rights of the lords on which we have some difference of opinion. I am not sure to what extent Senator Beaudoin and I differ on this, but I think we agree that there is no question that the House of Lords either accepts or rejects money bills. We argue that here there is the possibility of also amending money bills.

He went on to say:

> In these circumstances, if an officer of the executive seeks to justify a charge upon the subject made for the use of the Crown (which includes all the purposes of the public revenue), he must show, in clear terms, that Parliament has authorized the particular charge.

Of course, this is background because this statute does, in fact, attempt to do that.

Further on that page, he said:

> I am clearly of opinion that no such powers, and indeed no powers at all, of imposing any such charge are given to the Minister of Food by the statutory provisions on which he relies.

[Senator Frith.]

• (1640)

> I will express no opinion upon the Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act, 1914, itself, whether the provisions of the statute should be construed as authorizing regulations to be made giving the executive power to impose charges upon the subject. But I am satisfied that the powers given by regulation 2F include no such powers.

To be fair, that is why I said I am not drawing these comments of Lord Atkin to your attention, honourable senators, in the same way that I would be trying to use a case in a court, because this case, as far as the statute was concerned, only said that the particular regulation did not give the Food Controller that right there. Here, there is a different issue. Here, the issue is the background. At this stage, I am simply saying why we are making a fuss about it. It is because it is so clear, and we in the Senate should always be very conscious of these principles of constitutional law that impose very strict obligations, duties and rights on Parliament when it comes to levying taxes—or anything that is like levying taxes, though by another name.

Now, Senator Stewart has covered the specific situation very well. However, I do want to put on the record one citation that is relevant to the issue discussed by Senator Stewart, the minister and, I believe, Senator Olson, as to when such a levy or imposition is a tax. There was an interesting and informative exchange, I found, between the minister and Senator Stewart about when does an imposition or a provision go over onto the tax side of the border or, you might say, over the precipice. I remember, and I am sure Senator Beaudoin and others may remember, the fairly famous precipice theory of Mr. Justice Brandeis in the United States.

Before he became a judge he was one of the leading lawyers in America, particularly on anti-trust cases. He gave much guidance, not only to his clients but to those of us who were practising law—and at one time I was on the Attorney General's side prosecuting combines cases. He would say to his clients, on the question of conspiracies or agreements in restraint of trade, "I can tell you roughly where the edge of the precipice is, where your conduct might lead to an inference, for example, of actions in restraint of trade, but I will always advise you to stay well back from the precipice because I can never be sure that, if you get too close to it, you might not trip on a root and fall over." The question then, as Senator Stewart underlined, is: When will we know that such an imposition is a tax and, if he understands the government's position correctly, therefore ultra vires? I can give you one of the many tests, I think a well known one—and we are on quite an international front here because this was an appeal from the Supreme Court of Cyprus which went to England. The name of the case is Constanfinides—which sounds like a Greek name, Senator Barootes—versus Electricity Authority of Cyprus.

Senator Barootes: The year?

Senator Frith: 1982.

Senator Barootes: Was your first one from World War I or World War II?

Senator Frith: The first one was from World War I. Do you like them newer?

Senator Barootes: At least you are doing them in chronological order.

Senator Frith: I am glad you appreciate this thoughtful, chronological development. Anyway, although Senator Barootes and I may not agree on some of these principles, which seem to appear to him to be a bit ancient because they go back some years—

Senator Barootes: That is not fair. You do not know what I mean and you do not know what my principles are. You do not know how far back my history goes. Mine goes back a lot farther than yours.

Senator Frith: Exactly, and that is why I am glad I gave you the opportunity to deny that you did not have the same deep respect that I have for ancient tradition.

Senator Barootes: Thank you.

Senator Frith: The quotation from the case is as follows:

> that an imposition is a tax if it is found—

Senator Simard: Are you on scene one, part three now?

Senator Frith: Does it matter? You can read about which scene it is. Just enjoy the play.

Senator Simard: We don't enjoy your plays.

Senator Frith: Are you the kind of person who—

Senator Simard: I knew you would take the bait.

Senator Frith: —goes to a play or to see Shakespeare and cannot enjoy it unless someone tells you what is happening? Do you expect the people to stop every once in awhile and tell you if it is Act I, page three, line six? Is that what you want?

Senator Simard: Go ahead. I just wanted to remind you that you were not at the playhouse. This is the Senate here, and I will pick my own show.

Senator Frith: In fairness, honourable senators, the metaphor of the stage, and of act and scene, was raised by Senator Simard, not by me. I thought he was the one who wanted to put on a performance. I did not mention those things; he was the one who mentioned them.

Senator Simard: Thank you.

Senator Frith: So are you relaxing to enjoy this, then?

Senator Simard: Oh, yes.

Senator Frith: The quotation says:

> that an imposition is a tax if it is found to fulfil certain characteristics, namely, (a) it is compulsory and not optional,

Does that apply to the case before us? I say yes.

> (b) it is imposed or executed by the competent authority,

Does that apply here? Yes.

> (c) it must be enforceable by law,

Does that apply here? Yes.

> (d) it is imposed for the public benefit and for public purposes,

Does that apply here? Yes.

> and (e) it must not be for a service for specific individuals but for a service to the public as a whole, a service in the public interest;

There is perhaps something debatable about that. It continues:

> that it does not matter that those who pay the tax do not receive the benefit which others paying the same tax receive, the purpose of the imposition being to help or finance an essential public service which constitutes in the words of Article 24.1 of the Constitution a public burden

The constitution being referred to there, I take it, is the Constitution of Cypress.

So that gives the background, the traditions, and the constitutional principles that are engaged by what is before us.

As to the peoples' perspective versus the Crown's and government's perspectives in the present day, I refer to a letter I received from the Shipping Federation of Canada. This does not deal with the First World War or Cypress or 1914 or 1982, but with May of 1991, our present instant month. It is from the Shipping Federation of Canada. It is addressed to me and it reads:

● (1650)

> We have had the opportunity to review the testimony of the Treasury Board and Transport Canada witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee on National Finance on April 18, 1991.
> The testimony of the witnesses was to the effect that Transport Canada's cost recovery policy could be implemented under section 19 of the Financial Administration Act as it now stands just as easily as it could under the Amendments to the Act contained in clause 6 of Bill C-91.
> We do not think so. There is no doubt that the present wording of section 19 gives broad powers to the Governor in Council with respect to cost recovery but it does, by its own terms, require determination of "the cost of providing the service or the use of the facility" to "the person to whom it is provided". Clause 6 of Bill C-91, . . .

Which is the clause objected to.

> . . . on the other hand, would permit the collection of fees or charges to be paid for a service or use of a facility "by the users or classes of users of the service or facility".

That is the exact words that we have heard. The letter goes on:

> The point we wish to make is that the word "person" in the present Act, while it may include more than one individual or corporation having a joint interest in a service or use of a facility, does not include "classes" of persons.
> The practical effect of this, insofar as concerns the services dealt with in Transport Canada's cost recovery policy, is that while the costs may be identifiable in terms > of "classes of users", they are virtually impossible to determine in terms of individual users, i.e., the shipowners. This is essentially because many of the services made available by Transport Canada, e.g. navigation buoys and VTS, are provided on a global basis, without regard to the individual needs or requests of the shipowners.

> Bill C-91, if passed with clause 6, will permit this Government or any subsequent Government to levy charges on groups or classes of users without the necessity and protection of parliamentary debate. At the stroke of a pen . . .

Incidentally, these words are from the Shipping Federation of Canada, someone presently directly involved in the application of this legislation.

Senator Simard: Do you agree with everything they say?

Senator Frith: No, I don't. Why would you say that? I am presenting to the Senate what they say. I do not know what that has to do with my agreeing with anything that they say. What the devil does that have to do with it?

Senator Olson: He just wants to know if we have read the bill.

Senator Frith: He doesn't; he is just making a silly intervention. It has nothing to do with what they say. I am reading a letter the shipping federation sent about the bill that is before us, and it is before every senator including Senator Simard.

Senator Simard: So why are you reading it if we have it? It is on the record of the committee?

Senator Stewart: Why don't we adjourn so they can cool down?

Senator Simard: That is up to you.

Senator Hébert: He never cools down.

Senator Frith: Anyway I was trying to put forward to honourable senators the position taken by the shipping federation. As I have said, I wanted to put on the record the historical perspective and the actual present day perspective. This is a Canadian group that has some views they want us to take into account. I am not talking about believing everything they say. I do not know what Senator Simard is talking about. That is all I am trying to do. This deals specifically with the legislation before us. So where was I?

> At the stroke of a pen, commercial shipping, pleasure boaters and fishermen each could be liable for a substantial portion of the $500 milion that Transport Canada intends to recover for navigation services provided. The fact that some of these users may hardly use these services at all need not enter the picture.
> We hope this will help to explain the message our witnesses intended to convey when they appeared before the committee on April 16.
> In conclusion, we do appreciate the Government's need to pass Bill C-91 and we are not unsympathetic in this respect. However, in view of the impact on the maritime transportation sector at large, we respectfully request that the Bill be allowed to proceed as reported by the committee, that is without clause 6.

[Senator Frith.]

So for those 2 reasons—the historical context and the very important practical present day context of the principles engaged by clause 6—I will be voting against third reading of the bill. Of course, I would vote for third reading of the bill with clause 6 deleted.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I would like to take five minutes because I think any parliamentary system worthy of the name should give both sides a chance to be heard.

Besides being the sponsor of Bill C-91, I also have the privilege of representing one of the Atlantic Provinces. I know Senator Stewart was anxious to take us over this terrain a little earlier this afternoon.

He gave us the impression, as he did in committee, that the people of New Brunswick and the Maritimes generally did not want to pay their share of external user fees or simply did not want to pay their fair share of taxes, while my colleagues and I know perfectly well that the people in my region are Canadian citizens with all that entails, and that when they receive a legitimate request to pay their share of taxes, they do their duty.

Don't let anyone tell us this bill is going to force more fees on fishermen who don't have the ability to pay.

After my colleagues and I made sure that all the documents available at the department and Treasury Board were available to us, and after answering questions by honourable senators of the Opposition during three of four committee meetings, I am amazed today that Senator Stewart and Senator Frith are still raising issues that have already been explained satisfactorily. I think the people at Treasury Board are to be commended for their receptiveness and their generosity in making all this information available.

Senator Finlay MacDonald, who was not on the committee, asked some legitimate questions that deserved a reply. The President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Gilles Loiselle, answered a number of questions as he and his officials had done in committee. I am sick and tired of all this rhetoric about public servants or Rideau Canal fishermen determining the needs and solving the problems of Atlantic fishermen. I think we have officials who are well informed, experienced and sensitive, and who do not, always receive their due with their minister. That is where the minister comes in. Generally speaking, officials are sensitive to the needs of fishermen and other sectors. It is sheer nonsense to say that by a stroke of the pen, marine shippers, owners of ships on the Atlantic or the Pacific coast, will have to pay enormous user fees that are not based on their ability to pay.

The fact remains that the regulatory review process will be applied. I repeat, it is absolutely false and reeks of political rhetoric to say or to imply that a government or an official can, out of the blue, prescribe regulations imposing horrendous fees on anyone at all.

Senator Olson, you are such a great talker. You tried to convince us that this process was something new. As a former minister and a member of the Privy Council, you ought to know that at the time, during the halcyon years of the Liberal government, the formula existed. Regulations were prescribed. If I am not mistaken, the regulatory process has not been changed but improved, to make it more open and subject to debate by members of Parliament, for instance.

It is absolutely false to say that our government is making a mockery of democracy, that it can prescribe a tax or user fee on the spur of the moment, and that as a result, taxpayers will suffer.

• (1700)

[English]

Senator Olson: It didn't get better. It got worse.

Senator Simard: Senator Stewart, I have something for you. You said that civil servants, the poor taxpayers, would now be, to use your word, squeezed, whether in the maritimes or elsewhere, because this bill provides for the supply of money to the departments to encourage them to collect; not new user fees, not to surcharge people or invent new user fees because user fees will be implemented and changed, but once user fees have been approved by Parliament or through legislation—

Senator Olson: Where does it say that in the bill?

Senator Simard: I will come back to clause 6. In fact, I will take more than five minutes because you seem to be enjoying this. I am enjoying it, too.

Senator Frith: Which act is this and which scene is this?

Senator Simard: It must be assured that the departments do their work and collect even if it means more money to collect. The department will be encouraged—yes, the word is right—to go and collect the outstanding accounts so that bad taxpayers, late taxpayers, are not subsidized at the expense of good taxpayers who pay their taxes on time.

You have had your say. You have had two weeks. Do not use up my five minutes, or my extended five minutes. I am glad that as we finish this session we can deal with another major piece of the legislative agenda of this government.

We have debated over the last two years the UI legislation, the GST legislation, and this one is in the same category. It will not hurt anyone. It will bring sanity to the fiscal finances of the federal government. It will reduce the deficit.

Senator Olson: You are going to collect.

Senator Simard: It will still provide enough flexibility to protect people who are in need.

I am going to close on clause 6 because obviously you have an interest, and, as a Maritime senator, I too have an interest. I want to be able to go back to my people and say that I stood up in the Senate and tried to counteract what these people have told us. Not only did they get all the information that the department provided to you people over there, but you keep repeating what you said at second reading without taking into account what information you were given.

I am going to deal with section 6, because I am surprised and disappointed that the Liberal senators are still trying to make a case for the deletion of clause 6. Clause 6 has been misconstrued by some as conferring a broader authority to impose user fees. I was concerned, but I got my answer.

Senator Olson: We did not get it here.

Senator Simard: But you have been getting it today from me, as Senator Stewart got it in various committee meetings that he attended. Honourable senators on the Senate committee for National Finance were apprised by senior officials from Transport Canada and Fisheries and Oceans that cost recovery—if you would only listen—

Senator Frith: Is this what is called filibustering your own bill?

Senator Simard: You have had your time. You have had your slot.

Senator Frith: Filibuster away. It is your bill.

Senator Simard: I am going to leave my text here for a while. I want to deal with this. I hope in the new Parliament that the rules will provide for both sides of the house to have time allotted to them so that both sides can be heard. You have tried for the last two or three years, as a matter of fact for the last six years, ever since you lost your majority in the Senate, to determine the length of debate.

Senator Frith: No, far from it.

Senator Simard: Now, having determined the length of debate, you have used all of it.

Senator Frith: You have got the wrong side.

Senator Simard: I am telling you that I am not interested in that. Sometime we will deal with that.

Senator Frith: No time indication in the Senate.

Senator Simard: I hope the time when the Liberals decide everything in this house and the other place is over.

Senator Frith: No closure.

Senator Simard: Honourable senators, we were all apprised by senior officials from Transport Canada and Fisheries and Oceans that cost recovery plans are being pursued on the basis of existing authorities including, but not exclusively, the Financial Administration Act as it currently stands. Further assurance was given that clause 6 was required for all the good reasons I will elaborate on in a moment, but it is not intended to confer broader powers.

I want to turn to the reason why it is important that clause 6 be retained and why we voted for its retention. These amendments are intended to facilitate the consistent and equitable application of the government's cost recovery policy to strengthen the safeguards in the policy and to clarify the language of the act.

• (1710)

With clause 6 Canadians will be better served and protected when the user fee policy is applied.

Let me briefly go over the area of improvement. I dealt with the items other than section 6 in the first speech and the minister has certainly supplied all the answers that were required of him. Clause 6 will ensure that the Financial Administration Act can no longer be used to override the provisions of any other act of Parliament. It does not matter how often Senator Stewart says it is otherwise, the legal experts say, and any reasonable person would agree, that this act does not get new powers, it cannot override other legislation. It will make the setting of fees under the Financial Administration Act subject to the provision of any act rather than "notwithstanding the provisions of any act." That is the key. You will agree, Senator Frith, that this is far from the broadening of authority.

I guess I will skip the rest. I could table it and consider it as read if you would allow me. I know this is not done. You can read it next week, I will have it in the Saint John Telegraph. Thank you, sir, I hope you support the bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the honourable Senator David, that this bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed, on division.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL

May 8, 1991

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable John Sopinka, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 8th day of May, 1991, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a bill.

Yours sincerely,

JUDITH A. LAROCQUE
Secretary to the Governor General

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Orville J. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday next, May 13, 1991, at three-thirty o'clock in the afternoon.

[Senator Simard.]

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Mr. Speaker, if I may on the motion, I should confirm for the information of honourable senators that it is the intention of the Prime Minister to advise prorogation of this Second Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament very shortly and that when honourable senators return here on Monday next it will be for the official formal opening of the Third Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament which will take place in this chamber with a Speech from the Throne by his Excellency the Governor General.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Orville J. Phillips: Honourable senators, I move that all remaining orders, inquiries and motions stand.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Before you make that motion, we are down to notice of motions and then there is item six under routine orders call Question Period. Are we going to get there?

Senator Phillips: I think the honourable senator is well aware of the routine normally followed in this chamber, which is that Royal Assent follows third reading.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): We have 20 minutes before Royal Assent.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, according to the clock on the wall it is 5.20. The Governor General is going to arrive, I believe, at 5.45. If you have some useful thing to do with these next 25 minutes I will withdraw from that, otherwise I should like some explanation of how Question Period is going to be handled, because there have been some changes in the government since we were last here. We need some explanation of that.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do adjourn during pleasure to await the arrival of the Honourable the Deputy to his Excellency the Governor General at approximately 5.35.

Senator Frith: I guess the question, honourable senators, is whether the government is asking us not to proceed to Question Period at the moment but to await the representative of the Governor General. Is the Deputy Governor General here right now?

Senator Phillips: Yes.

Senator Frith: Then we can proceed with that and have Question Period after Royal Assent. There is no problem with that, is there?

Senator Olson: I particularly did not want to disappoint Senator Kenny, because he looks forward to Question Period every day.

Senator Phillips: I would point out that the Deputy to His Excellency was waiting throughout Senator Simard's remarks.

Senator Frith: I hope those remarks were piped into his chambers for his edification and entertainment. I think I should reverse that, entertainment and edification.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure to adjourn until 5.45?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

• (1720)

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable John Sopinka, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act and other Acts in consequence thereof (Bill C-91, Chapter 24, 1991)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, May 13, 1991, at 3.30 p.m.

INTRODUCTION

The Official Languages Act which replaces the 1969 legislation, was passed in July 1988.

On November 8, 1990, the President of Treasury Board, the Honourable Gilles Loiselle, laid before Parliament the document entitled Draft of the proposed Regulations respecting communications with and services to the public in either official language. Pursuant to Standing Order 32(5) and section 85 of the Official Languages Act (RCS 1985, 4th Supp., chapter 31), your Committee proceeded with consideration of this document.

Starting on December 4, 1990, your Committee heard from a large number of witnesses in the course of 16 public hearings. It also received letters and briefs which it took into consideration during its deliberations. (A list of the witnesses who appeared before the Committee is appended.)

The first chapter of this Report situates the Draft of the proposed Regulations in its context and reviews its broad outlines. The second presents an overview of the testimony given during the public hearings and the opinions expressed in the briefs submitted to us. In the final chapter your Committee makes its recommendations.

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE DRAFT PROPOSED REGULATIONS

A. The context

The public's right to communicate with federal institutions in either official language is entrenched in the 1982 Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (sec.20(1)). Part IV of the 1988 Official Languages Act makes it a duty of federal institutions (which comprise government departments and agencies, Crown corporations, and Air Canada by virtue of its divestiture legislation) to ensure that this right is respected.

The Act stipulates that federal institutions must ensure that the public can obtain services in French and English at the following offices: their head or central offices (sec. 22); all offices located in the National Capital Region (sec. 22); and all offices of any federal institution that reports direct to Parliament (sec. 24(2) and (3)).

The Act imposes the same obligation on offices where there is significant demand for service in both official languages (sec. 22(b)) and on offices where the nature of the office makes it reasonable that services be available in both official languages (sec. 24(1)). It empowers the government to make regulations on these two matters (sec. 32).

The Act also gives it the power to regulate services provided to travellers by a third party under contract to a federal institution (sec. 23(2)).

B. The broad outlines of the Draft proposed Regulations

The regulatory proposals cover three areas: significant demand, nature of the office and services for travellers provided under contract. The proposals regarding significant demand fall into two groups: general rules based for the most part on census data about the numbers and proportion of official-language minority communities, and specific rules about particular services, based mainly on volume of demand since the use of census figures is not appropriate in these cases.

For purposes of the proposed regulations, a linguistic minority population is defined as the official-language minority population in a given province as determined by Statistics Canada using a method that weighs the knowledge of the Official Languages, the mother tongue and the language used in the home. The populations in question are thus francophones outside Quebec and anglophones inside Quebec.

1. Significant demand

a. General rules

The draft regulations propose six general rules that can be summarized as follows:

RULE 1—Minority in a census metropolitan area is at least 5,000: at least one office of each department or agency would provide services in both official languages.

RULE 2—Minority in a census metropolitan area is less than 5,000: at least one office of certain departments or agencies would provide services in both official languages.

RULE 3—Minority is at least 500 and 5% of total population: at least one office of each department or agency would provide services in both official languages.

RULE 4—Minority is at least 500 but less than 5% of total population: one office of certain departments or agencies would provide services in both official languages.

RULE 5—Minority is between 200 and 500 and at least 5% of total population: one office of certain departments or agencies would provide services in both official languages.

RULE 6—Minority is less than 200 and at least 5% of total population: offices would provide service in both official languagaes where the measured volume of demand in the minority language is at least 5% of total demand.

The draft regulations distinguish between major urban centres, on the one hand, and small localities and rural areas, on the other. Census metropolitan areas (CMAs) refer to large urban centres with at least 100,000 inhabitants. A number of the rules pertain to census subdivisions (CSDs) which form the cornerstone of the census and may refer to a municipality, a small town or a rural area.

A sliding scale of services is provided for depending on the relative and/or absolute size of the minority and its distribution. In CMAs with an official-language minority of at least 5,000, each federal agency would have to provide services in both official languages in at least one office; if it has several offices, it would have to provide such services in a proportion of offices at least equal to the proportion of the minority population in the CMA. Where fewer than 5,000 inhabitants of the CMA belong to the minority, certain key services (income security, post offices, employment centres, income tax, Secretary of State) would have to be available in the minority language at one or more offices, based on the same rule of proportionality.

In CSDs with a minority population of at least 500, representing at least 5 per cent of the population as a whole, all federal institutions would have to offer bilingual services in at least one office, or according to the proportionality rule if an institution has more than one office. In CSDs with a minority population of at least 500 and representing less than 5 per cent of the total population, and in CSDs with a minority population of at least 200 and less than 500 people but which corresponds to at least 5 per cent of the total population, the key services listed above would have to be available in both official languages, as would those of the RCMP. In census subdivisions (CSDs) where the minority is a very small part of the population, federal offices would have to offer services in the minority language as well if demand for them represented at least 5 per cent of the total according to customer preference studies.

This part of the proposed regulations also includes a provision regarding services offered to the provincial language majority, which is explicitly guaranteed service in its own language in all federal offices in that province that offer services to the public.

b. Specific rules

These rules apply to particular services where demographic parameters would not be relevant. A large number of them are in the transportation sector. Bilingual services to the travelling public would be guaranteed where demand represents at least 5 per cent of the annual total. Services would also be available in both official languages where weight of numbers suggests significant demand: airports handling at least 1,000,000 passengers a year, border crossings in Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick handling at least 500,000 people, and the main border post in each of the other provinces (other than airports). Air Canada flights departing from or arriving in the National Capital Region, Montreal or Moncton, or entirely within Ontario, Quebec or New Brunswick, would have to offer bilingual services, as would certain rail and ferry links.

The specific rules also cover some other special cases where demographic data are not applicable, and where services are being specifically provided for a restricted, fully identifiable clientele: one example is inspection of food-processing establishments. Services would have to be available in the other official language as well where at least 5 per cent of the clientele have expressed a preference for it.

2. Nature of the office

The regulatory proposals on nature of the office define services that must be offered in both official languages whatever the demand. These cover the four areas set out in the Act: health, safety and security of the public; location of an office or facility; national or international mandate of an office; and any other circumstances considered appropriate.

3. Contracts for services to the travelling public

This part of the draft regulations deals with services offered in airports, railway stations and federal ferry terminals as well as on board federal trains and ferries where there is significant demand for service in both languages. Among the services in question are concessions such as restaurants, car-rental agencies and self-service equipment, as well as services provided by carriers (ticket sales, boarding procedures, public announcements). The draft regulations provide that these services could be guaranteed in both official languages by face-to-face communication, in writing, by telephone or any other suitable means.

OVERVIEW OF EVIDENCE

A. The President of the Treasury Board

The President of the Treasury Board, the Honourable Gilles Loiselle, pointed out to members of the Committee that the proposals were designed to set out in precise regulatory terms the scope of the right to be served by federal institutions in one's official language and, at the same time the limits to that right. He stressed that, with regard to significant demand, the demographic rules respond to differences in the distribution and density of the anglophone and francophone minority populations. He noted that the two rules that apply to the largest urban areas in Canada—those with a population of more than 100,000—would ensure services to the 63 per cent of Canada's linguistic minorities who live in these twenty-five major cities. He emphasized the fact that the regulations on areas outside the major cities are particularly important for French-speakers: 58 per cent of the francophones outside Quebec live in smaller cities, towns and rural areas. Moreover, to deal with the different types of concentration of minority populations, closely related rules are being proposed based on census subdivisions, the basic building blocks of the census.

In connection with the impact of the strictly demographic rules for cities and rural areas, the Minister mentioned that 94 per cent of the minority population of Canada would receive at least the key services, if not all services, from federal offices in their locality under these proposals. The proposals would cover 92 per cent of French-speaking persons outside Quebec and 96 per cent of English-speaking persons in Quebec. Mr. Loiselle pointed out that these demographic rules would not have the effect of imposing bilingual federal services from coast to coast. He stated:

> There is a remarkable fact about the 94 per cent of the minority population covered by the demographic rules. Aside from those living in the major urban centres, they live in only 441 out of 5,507 census subdivisions. The regulatory proposals identify those concentrations and provide for an appropriate level of service. This is not wall-to-wall bilingualism by any means.
> I should add that in an office required to offer services in both languages only some employees would need to be bilingual—enough to serve the minority language clientele.* (17:9)

*The first number refers to the issue number and the second to the page number of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages.

With regard to the issue of cost, the President of the Treasury Board remarked that the adoption of the proposals would not radically alter the way federal services are now offered by federal institutions. He mentioned that it was estimated that between 1,500 and 3,000 existing positions would have to become bilingual. This represents less that 1 per cent of the roughly 400,000 federal employees and would cost between $15 and $20 million across 150 institutions. The overall level of possible cost is considered to be low enough to be absorbed in existing budgets, with very few exceptions.

In conclusion, the President of the Treasury Board reassured those who might be concerned about the possibility of job losses because of the increase in the number of bilingual positions resulting from the adoption of the draft regulations, saying:

> No one will lose his or her job as a result of official languages requirements. Generous access to language training at government expense will be maintained and the special measures to protect public servants when, for example, unilingual positions are declared bilingual, will continue in place.(17:10)

B. The Commissioner, national federations and provincial associations

The Commissioner of Official Languages, the Fédération des Francophones Hors Québec (FFHQ), Alliance Québec (AQ), the Société des Acadiens et des Acadiennes du Nouveau-Brunswick (SAANB), the Société Franco-Manitobaine (SFM) and the Canadian Parents for French, suggested amendments aimed at widening the scope of the draft regulations.

In his overall assessment of the draft regulations, the Commissioner observed that:

> It should be said from the start that the regulations are based largely on demographic data that by themselves can serve only as a general basis for the evaluation of demand. In our view, these proposals represent an improvement in the status quo for most institutions. But generally speaking, these draft regulations do not go beyond the existing situation. They do, however, recognize a significant demand in offices in a number of large urban centres and cities of lesser size, and this should improve the quality of services by consolidating them for increased administrative efficiency and for the greater convenience of the minority community. In addition, the regulations take account of minorities in rural areas and certain specific service areas.
> As for the travelling public, the proposals may perhaps be needlessly complex. The draft regulations seem to have been devised more in terms of the current capability of some departments and corporations to offer services in both official languages than in terms of the rights of the travelling public.(18A:6)

The Commissioner felt that the regulations are equitable and reasonable. Equitable, because they provide identical treatment for both majorities, and because the two minority communities will benefit from the same services under the same circumstances. Reasonable, because, considering the criterion of significant demand recognized in the Charter and in the Act, it guarantees fundamental language rights through a variable scale of services, according to criteria that appear to be realistic. The Commissioner ended his assessment by saying:

> The new criteria set out in the regulations should provide a more coherent and realistic framework for a methodical application of the provisions of the Act, provided that active offer is applied on a continuing and consistent basis; without it, the user would have much difficulty relating to the services offered.(18A:7)

The Commissioner made seven main recommendations and a number of other suggestions and observations. Two of the recommendations substantially modify the draft regulations, namely:

- the recommendation calling for the deletion of the 5 per cent standard for census subdivisions and for the retention only of the criterion of absolute numbers (500 or 200, as the case may be).
- the recommendation proposing that, in census metropolitan areas (CMA) with fewer than 5,000 persons of the minority official language, the range of key services be broadened to include some agencies of particular interest to minority communities.

Associations representing minority official language groups also sought to improve the draft regulations, notably by recommending that the population criteria be expressed in absolute numbers, without reference to a percentage of the population. They also proposed that the volume of demand for services criterion be eliminated. In fact, these two recommendations produced the broadest consensus among minority groups.

The Commissioner, the FFHQ, Alliance Québec and Canadian Parents for French asked that it be clearly specified in the draft regulations that the organization of services (location of offices and conditions of service) must be carried out in close consultation with the minority clientele. The above-mentioned and certain groups representing small minority language communities stressed the importance of issuing clear guidelines and directives on the active offer of service in both official languages.

Certain briefs also called for changes to the rules on specific circumstances surrounding significant demand. The Commissioner suggested that the criteria respecting services for the travelling public be revised to take into account local significant demand and the presence of foreign travellers, particularly at border crossings. The Commissioner, the FFHQ and the SAANB expressed the view that with respect to airports, the draft regulations constituted a step backward from the present situation. They objected to the fact that services to the travelling public at airports were subject to the criterion of 5 per cent of overall demand over a year, except in the case of large airports that handle one million passengers per year and where services in both languages would be guaranteed.

The Commissioner, the FFHQ and ACFO expressed concern about the reference to "a province in which the English or French linguistic minority population is equal to at least 5 per cent of the total population in the province" in the rules on places of entry into Canada handling at least 500,000 travellers per year, on services on board certain Air Canada flights and on services on VIA Rail routes as justification for providing services in both languages. These witnesses argued that an eventual decline in the relative number of francophones in Ontario following a massive influx of immigrants could result in the province's exclusion from the above-mentioned provisions. They recommended that New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario be specifically identified to ensure that a modest gap in future census results would not have a completely disproportionate effect on the situation.

The Committee studied with particular sympathy the briefs and letters from organizations representing small, isolated or fragmented minority language communities such as the Committee for Anglophone Social Action (Gaspé, Quebec), la Fédération franco-ténoise (N.W.T.), la Société Saint-Thomas d'Aquin (P.E.I.), the Townshippers Association (Que.), the Association francophone de Campbell River (B.C.), etc. To assure the survival of small communities, these groups argued that the regulations had to take into account the vitality of small linguistic minorities—that is, their size and determination to retain their language and culture by enrolling their children in minority language schools and classes, by supporting their own churches, newspapers, festivals, cultural events, etc. Reliance on percentages of the local population and percentages of demand in their opinion offered their communities no hope of improved services and might lead to an actual reduction in the availability of federal services in their language. Testimony before the Committee also established that federal policy and the regulations might influence the financial viability of the weekly and monthly newspapers which serve minority language communities.

The Association de la presse francophone and the Association of Quebec Regional English Media (AQREM) of their members testified about the importance of their members to the vitality of minority language communities and particularly to small communities that could not support a local daily newspaper. Whether English or French these weekly and monthly newspapers felt that their survival was prejudiced by the failure of the government to include regulations under Article 30 of the Official Languages Act (dealing with communications with the public by federal institutions) that would ensure a fair distribution of federal commercial advertising expenditures between majority language dailies and minority language weekly/monthly newspapers. So far this issue has arisen only in relation to the commercial advertising policy of Air Canada, a Crown Corporation that was "privatised", but nevertheless remains subject to the Official Languages Act for some purposes. The interpretation of Article 30 is now before the courts, and, legal opinion is that it is questionable whether the government could regulate under the Article in any event.

Two groups which appeared before the Committee opposed the regulations as being too generous toward the minority language communities. Fearing the costs involved in providing bilingual service and the possibility that the threat of these costs would lead to closing small rural post offices, RCMP detachments, etc., the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties asked that the 5% of the general population standard be raised to a much higher figure. The Alliance for the Preservation of English in Canada appeared before the Committee to oppose any extension of the official use of the French language beyond the provisions of the Canada Act 1867 and in particular, to protest federal official languages policy over the past 30 years or so.

C. Public service unions

The Professional Institute of the Public Service and the Public Service Alliance of Canada shared with the Committee their concerns about the implementation of the official languages policy within the federal public service. Union representatives also discussed the impact of the adoption of the regulations on their membership, in particular an increase in the number of positions designated bilingual, greater use of imperative staffing to fill these positions, and even more restricted access to language training at government expense.

D. Departments and Other Federal Institutions

To determine how much difficulty and additional costs federal departments and other institutions anticipated in implementation of the regulations on communications with and service to the public as tabled, the Committee heard testimony from senior officials of nine departments and institutions responsible for providing services to the Canadian public across the country. On balance this testimony was reassuring and made it clear that the regulations as drafted could be implemented without major difficulties or major additional costs. The most frequently anticipated problems related to long waiting periods for second language training and to the potential loss of acquired second language proficiency by officials serving in isolated posts where the opportunity to use the second language is occasional rather than frequent. Among specific problems raised, Transport Canada referred to the areas of search and rescue, maritime communications and vessel traffic services which required very high levels of technical skills and were very safety-sensitive. Canada Post testified that it already provided bilingual service in 95% of the localities with significant demand, but that providing bilingual service in the 5% of isolated post offices within one year would prove costly and disruptive.

RECOMMENDATIONS

In framing its recommendations for changes to the Draft Regulations, the Committee has kept in mind a number of realities.

First these regulations must help give effect to the constitutional guarantees, as stated in the preamble of the Act itself, "relating to the right of any member of the public to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in either official language. . ."

Secondly, many of the concerns raised and proposals made by our witnesses cannot be addressed in the regulations themselves.

Finally, the issue of incurring large additional costs must be a major concern in an era of large federal deficits and taxation saturation.

The proposal to make the number of bilingual offices be in the same proportion to the total as the minority-language community is to the community at large struck us as perfectly reasonable, since the effect would be to focus the demand, which should encourage greater administrative efficiency and improve the quality of service. However, application of the proportionality rule to metropolitan census areas containing sizeable minority-language communities could lead to a reduction in the number of offices offering services in the minority language. To rectify this shortcoming,

RECOMMENDATION NO. 1

The Committee recommends that the Treasury Board review the application of paragraph 5(1)(b) of the proposed regulations to census metropolitan areas that have at least 5,000 persons of the English or French linguistic minority population on a case-by-case basis to ensure that this provision is consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the spirit of the Official Languages Act.

The Committee recognizes the validity of the concerns expressed by certain witnesses who argued that a slight difference in the results of future censuses could bring about a province's exclusion from the application of the regulatory provisions referring to a "province in which the English or French linguistic minority population is equal to at least 5 per cent of the total population in the province". Therefore,

RECOMMENDATION NO. 2

The Committee recommends that paragraph 6(2)(c) and subparagraphs 7(4)(c)(ii) and (iii) and 7(4)(d)(i) and (ii) be modified by adding, immediately after the phrase "to at least 5 per cent of the total population in the province", the following words: "before or after the date of registration of these Regulations by the Clerk of the Privy Council".

The intelligent use of modern technology can not only extend bilingual service into areas with relatively small minority language communities, it can also reduce the need for bilingual counter staffing and help to reduce costs.

Facsimile machines and 800 lines can give rapid access to personal service in the client's preferred language and bilingual automated information systems with video display can guide the client to the service or information required. Consequently,

RECOMMENDATION NO. 3

The Committee recommends the use of new technology to provide services in both official languages in areas where local bilingual human resources are limited.

Minority language communities across the country are very concerned about those sections of the regulations which tie the delivery of services in the minority language to circumstances where demand for them represents at least 5% of total demand. The elimination of this criteria, however, would be prohibitively expensive and would require the withdrawal and rewriting of the regulations. Much of the concern also related to the process of measuring this demand and the fear that these customer preference studies will be carried out by departmental officials without the knowledge of the local minority language community.

RECOMMENDATION NO. 4

The Committee recommends that in any case where the implementation of the regulations will require the percentage of the demand for services in either official language to be ascertained, the methods to be used be determined after consultation with the local linguistic minority population and that, to the extent feasible, the actual determination of the level of demand be carried out by a person or entity other than the federal institution concerned.

Successful implementation of the regulations will depend on the quality of the "active offer" of service in the minority language made by federal institutions to members of the public.

RECOMMENDATION NO. 5

The Committee recommends that the Treasury Board issue directives under paragraph 46(2)(c) of the Official Languages Act respecting the active offer of services in either official language by federal institutions, pursuant to section 28 of the Act.

Weekly and monthly minority language newspapers are very important to the vitality of minority language communities and particularly to small communities that cannot support a local daily newspaper. Their economic survival may depend to a significant degree on a fair distribution of federal commercial advertising expenditures between majority language dailies and themselves.

RECOMMENDATION NO. 6

The Committee recommends that in complying with section 30 of the Official Languages Act federal institutions make use of media of communication of the linguistic minority population in a manner consistent with the purpose of the Act.

Many federal institutions organize their service delivery on the basis of service areas that do not coincide with census boundaries. The service area of one office, for example, might include one or more towns as well as the surrounding region. Changes to the boundaries of these service areas are of critical importance to members of the local minority language community. Consequently,

RECOMMENDATION NO. 7

The Committee recommends that the local linguistic minority population be consulted before the service area of an office or facility referred to in paragraph 5(1)(d) and (g) are modified.

CONCLUSION

The task of formulating regulations governing the provision of federal services to the public in either official language was obviously very complex. The regulatory provisions had to spell out clearly and in detail the scope of the public's right to receive federal government services in the language of its choice, and the limits to this right had to be defined. The provisions also had to take into account the differences in distribution and density between francophone and anglophone minority populations. The proposed Regulations would cover 92 per cent of francophones outside Quebec and 96 per cent of anglophones inside Quebec, which strikes us as an acceptable outcome given the dispersion of the francophone minorities outside Quebec.

The Committee wishes to stress that the results will depend on the spirit in which the Act and its Regulations are implemented. The draft proposed Regulations establish a set of standards that could, in certain special circumstances, be prejudicial or inconvenient to minority groups. The Committee urges the competent authorities to display generosity toward minority official-language groups and more especially toward the less numerous and more isolated groups.

APPENDIX A

LIBERAL PARTY DISSENTING OPINION WARREN ALLMAND, M.P. AND BOB KILGER, M.P.

Re: Proposed Regulations Respecting Communications with and Service to the Public in either Official Language

Despite many recommendations by the Commissioner of Official Languages and the minority language associations (as witnesses before the Committee) to change the Draft Regulations, the Committee agreed to only 2 changes. Since the purpose and spirit of the Official Languages Act of 1988 is to improve the rights of the Official Language minorities, then the Regulations should be an extension of this same spirit—and the Committee should have been more sensitive to the Recommendations made by the Commissioner and the minority language associations.

We accordingly urge the Minister and the Government, despite the majority report, to seriously consider the following recommendations made by the witnesses:

1. Five Percent of Population—The Commissioner pointed out that there was unanimous dissatisfaction with the use of a general criterion of 5% of population. He said that a criterion based on the proportion of the population bears no relation to absolute numbers and establishes unwarranted distinctions between minoirity official language groups of equivalent size. As an example he referred to the situation that 960 francophones in Riverview, N.B. would constitute "significant demand" because they were 6.2% of the population—but 910 anglophones in Valleyfield, Québec would not constitute "significant demand" because they were only 3.3% of the population.

There was an overwhelming consensus among the witness-groups that the criteria for "significant demand" be based on absolute numbers without reference to a percentage of population.

This position was supported by the Fédération des Francophones Hors Québec (FFHQ), Alliance Québec (AQ), Fédération acadienne de la Nouvelle-Écosse (FANE), Société franco-manitobaine (SFM), Société des Acadiens et Acadiennes du Nouveau-Brunswick (SAANB), Canadian Parents for French (CPF), and others.

The alternative would be to base the criterion on absolute numbers or a percentage of population whichever was the lesser.

2. Five Percent Demand—There was similar support for the elimination of the "5% of demand" rule as a criterion for "significant demand" since this would be difficult to measure in a fair way and would put a lot of pressure on the minority population to continually use their language in opposition to contrary community pressures.

3. Urban Areas—There was also concern that the rule for large urban areas (CMAs) with a minority population of at least 5,000 might substantially reduce the bilingual services now available because the rule requires only "at least one office" to provide such services. Even if more than one office was provided they may not be sufficient to provide bilingual services in all the distinct and separate communities within the CMA. For example the Montréal CMA includes the cities of Brossard and Châteauguay which are on the south shore of the St. Lawrence and which have minority populations of 14,970 and 12,370 respectively. There are other examples. The witnesses were concerned that these communities might not continue to be served in both languages.

4. Consultation—These groups also suggested that the draft regulations specify that the organization of services (the location of office and the conditions of service) be carried out in close consultation with the minority clientele.

5. Key Services—The Commissioner and other witnesses recommended that in urban areas (CMAs) with less than a 5,000 minority population, the key services to be provided in both languages be broadened to include additional agencies—such as the Federal Business Development Bank, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp., and the CBC/Radio Canada. This would depend on the interests and needs of the minority language community.

6. Acquired Rights—Several witnesses recommended that a clause be added guaranteeing acquired rights so that second language services presently available will not be reduced when it comes time to implement the regulations because the minority population might temporarily or marginally fall below criteria levels.

7. Airports—The FFHQ and the Voice of English Québec (VEQ) both recommended that airports in urban areas (CMAs) with a minority population of at least 5,000 should automatically provide bilingual services in the same way as airports with 1 million passengers per year. This would add St. John, Québec City, Sudbury and Hamilton to Toronto, Vancouver, Montréal, Ottawa, Calgary, Winnipeg, Edmonton, and Halifax which are already covered in the 1 million rule. The Government had proposed that in all airports with less than 1 million passengers, the minority language must demonstrate a 5% demand which is not easy to measure.

8. Provincial Capitals—Five minority language associations recommended that all provincial and territorial capitals should be designated as regions in which the federal government must provide its services in both languages. We think this is reasonable since many public and private conferences take place in provincial capitals and there is an important issue of national symbolism.

9. Interpretation—The Commissioner and Canadian Parents for French recommended that the rules of interpretation in the Regulations provide for the most generous rule rather than the most specific rule. We support this recommendation.

10. Interim Directives—The Official Languages Act was passed in July 1988 but the Government did not table the draft regulations for Service to the Public until November 8, 1990 (2 1/2 years later). Due to the legal process it will still take another year before these Regulations become law. As a result we support the Commissioner in suggesting that the Government issue without delay the directives for ensuring immediate compliance with the Act in all cases where the circumstances already allow.

11. Other Regulations—We also support the Commissioner and previous Reports of this Committee that the Government table the Regulations to implement Part V (Language of Work) and Part VI (Equitable Participation) of the Official Languages Act of 1988. It is almost 3 years since the Act was passed and there is still no sign of these Regulations.

APPENDIX B

DISSENTING OPINION PHIL EDMONSTON, NDP OFFICIAL LANGUAGES CRITIC

"Let Truth and Falsehood grapple, whoever knew Truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter?"

John Milton
Areopagitica

Canada's official languages policy has become the scapegoat for much of the Post-Meech polarization between French and English speaking Canadians. Former Air Canada President Pierre Jeanniot sees bilingual cereal boxes as the main villain creating Canadian disunity. And Spicer Commission Chairman, Keith Spicer concludes, "Our telephone callers dislike official bilingualism. . . there is virtually no endorsement of existing official language policy."

Hogwash!

There is no massive popular resistance to the federal government's official language policy. Polls tell us that 75 percent of Canadian parents want their children to be bilingual. Throughout Canada, enrolment by English-speaking students in French immersion schools increased by 8 percent last September.

Spicer's finding was based upon an insignificant 6.9 percent of calls the commission received that referred in any way to bilingualism. This fact casts considerable doubt upon the chairman's intellectual honesty and judgment. As far as Jeanniot and his cereal boxes are concerned, his comments show even corporate executives can say dumb things.

This Committee's Report

I regret this committee completed its work during in-camera sessions. Secret meetings are neither necessary nor appropriate.

I agree with this committee's report. We have ameliorated some of the consequences of new regulations, while being mindful of the financial constraints placed upon the government.

Nevertheless, I believe that we have failed to respond to several serious potential problems with the regulations that were raised by our witnesses.

The 5 percent rule: The requirement that minority-language communities must make up 5 percent of local demand before having the right to full services in their own language may produce anomalies in access to services.

The President of the Treasury Board has argued before this committee that basic services are guaranteed to all regardless of their percentage of the population, but that is surely not an adequate answer, since there will be some denial of service or there would be no need for the rule.

Treasury Board has also represented that deleting the 5 percent rule would produce approximately $20 million in extra costs to the government for a relatively marginal increase in the number of people served in their own language.

I am prepared to give the government the benefit of the doubt on this issue for the time being, but as these regulations are implemented, this committee must carefully monitor the quality of essential services provided by Transport Canada, the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and Canada Post, three departments sharply criticized by a number of witnesses. If the 5 percent rule has the effect predicted by the many minority-language groups who appeared before us during our work on this report, the rule will have to go.

New Brunswick: I regret that we did not find a way to recognize the special status of New Brunswick. The requests by Acadians to keep federal practice in line with the spirit of full equality between the two linguistic communities in that province were convincing and deserved our support.

Unequal treatment within the public service: The essence of bilingualism involves retooling the federal public service to ensure it can provide essential services in both languages where numbers warrant. One of the instruments used to achieve this end are bilingualism bonuses.

In the case of Gingras vs the Queen, an RCMP officer was able to prove last year before the Federal Court of Canada that in at least one important federal service—the RCMP—federal government employees have been callously denied equal treatment under this bonus program since 1976.

The Treasury Board failed to provide this committee with a plausible explanation for why it has refused to pay the bonuses to RCMP officers, nor why it has chosen to appeal the Gingras ruling. This arbitrary, provocative action has created a serious morale problem within the RCMP acerbating tensions along linguistic lines. Furthermore, it flies in the face of the spirit of official bilingualism.

Since this issue directly affects the application of bilingualism as a practical proposition within the public service, I regret no relief was available in the Official Languages Act's new regulations. I will ensure this committee continues to visit this issue until RCMP officers eligible for bilingualism bonuses receive them.

1-800 lines: Much has been made during our discussions of "technological solutions" designed to provide bilingual services to Canadians. I hope that the Ministry of Transport and other government departments will retain the suggestion that 1-800 numbers be used to enable members of minority-language communities to communicate with the government in their own language for access to services and information not locally available.

The Future of Bilingual Government Services

As a Quebecer, I'm proud that my province has an exemplary record in the provision of services in English to its English-speaking minority. Furthermore, I'm mindful of the fact that it is in Quebec where the majority of Canada's bilingual citizens reside (30 percent of the French population and 60 percent of the English residents are bilingual).

This said, I regret that my province passed Bill 178 forbidding the use of English on outdoor signs in the province. Bill 101 was working fine and the outdoor sign law was both unnecessary and offensive. For some, Bill 178 was a betrayal of the spirit of bilingualism and served as both a catalyst and justification for dumping bilingualism altogether.

Fortunately, most Canadians recognize it's only common sense that taxpayers be served by their government in the language of their choice. That's why federal and provincial government services in both official languages will continue to expand.

APPENDIX C

DISSENTING OPINION
MRS. LOUISE FELTHAM, M.P. FOR WILD ROSE

In the Draft of the Proposed Regulations Respecting Communications with and services to the Public in either official language I do not agree with rule 6 of the general rules of significant demand.

It is my opinion that Rule 6 should be deleted. The rule states that when a minority is less than 200 and at least 5% of total population: offices would provide service in both official languages where the measured volume of demand in the minority language is at least 5% of total demand. It is my feeling that this is not only impractical but very costly. In the case of a town whose population is 100 people it would mean that only 5 people would create the need for services in both official languages. This type of excess expenditure is very difficult to justify.
