House of Commons Debates

FOURTH SESSION—TENTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, January 28, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE—ITS USE IN CONNECTION WITH PUBLIC UTILITIES.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny.) (Translation.) Moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 85) to amend the Railway Act.

He said : Mr. Speaker, the object of the Bill I now introduce is to remedy a state of things that prevails especially in the province of Quebec. The principle of this amendment is now embodied in the Railway Act as regards railway crossings, delays of trains, &c. In short, I would like that in the province of Quebec the railway companies, the telegraph and telephone companies, together with every public utility company, should be compelled to use equally the French and English languages in their relations with the public. There are, of course, in the Railway Act two clauses compelling these companies, under a penalty of $5, to publish certain indications in both languages. What I am asking is that this principle be extended so as to meet the requirements of the public. For instance, when to-day a man in the province of Quebec who speaks French only ships goods by a freight train he has to sign a contract. The blank or form handed to him is printed in English only. This remark applies to telegraph, telephone and other companies. Their contract is printed in English only, and that contract which binds the individual is exceedingly harsh. Most of the time, if not in every instance, the man who signs it does not understand the very first word of it.

My amendment is altogether in the spirit of our constitution in the widest meaning of the word. For if there are Canadians who speak nothing but the English language, there are others, especially in the province of Quebec, whose only language is the French. So, hereafter in the province of Quebec every railway, telegraph or telephone company, or any other company being a public utility shall use jointly the English and French languages in all the public operations of their service, either for the publication of the arrival or departure of trains, for time-tables, transfer tickets, way-bills, baggage checks, employees' badges, car class indication, message or contract blanks, subscription books, or public notices or regulations in stations, cars, offices or workshops of such companies or public utilities.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—'LA PRESSE' AND MR. NORTHRUP'S MOTION.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny.) (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I wish to rise to a question of privilege. I read in 'La Presse' edition of the 25th inst., that when the question was put on Mr. Northrup's motion relating to the production of certain documents, Messrs. Robitaille and Armand Lavergne were absent, but that Mr. Lavergne was not far away from the House of Commons when the vote was taken. This tends to make it understood that I ran away in order not to vote. Indeed, I was not far from Ottawa, but I was on board of the train going to Quebec.

For the better information of the 150,000 readers of 'La Presse,' I may say that had I been in the House at that time I would have voted for Mr. Northrup's amendment, because I consider it the very essence of our representative government and of Canadian liberalism that members of parliament be allowed to examine all documents before being called upon to grant subsidies to His Majesty.

MAIL COMMUNICATION WITH THE YUKON.

Mr. A. THOMPSON (Yukon Territory). Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to complaints I have had from the Yukon regarding the transmission of mail, and to ask him what mails are allowed at this time to go to the Yukon.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). From the 1st of June until the beginning of October, perhaps a little later, according to the season of the year, mails are sent direct from any part of this country to the Yukon Territory and to Dawson. After about the 1st of October we send only a limited number of parcels and letters to the Yukon Territory, to Dawson and the surrounding posts. The following classes of mail matter are only sent onwards from White Horse to their destination in the Yukon :—

Letters (in their usual and ordinary form); post cards ; singly wrapped newspapers and periodicals from the office of publication, addressed to public libraries, to newspaper publishers and individual subscribers ; transient newspapers and third-class matter of all kinds except books, trade catalogues, circulars and patterns and samples of merchandise.

Mr. THOMPSON. Do all kinds of mail matter go as far as White Horse ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, all the year round.

Mr. THOMPSON. And have Canadian posmasters been notified of that fact ?

Mr. LEMIENX. They have been notified, but in view of the representations that have been made to the department by my hon. friend, I have issued a new circular that will be posted in all the post offices of the Yukon Territory.

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN OTTAWA AND WASHINGTON.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether any information is to be afforded to the House respecting negotiations which are said to be pending between Canada and the United States for the purpose of concluding a treaty respecting various important matters. A somewhat circumstantial account has appeared in some of the English journals, and allusion is made in our own press to a projected visit to Ottawa of the British ambassador at Washington. I thought it well to call the Prime Minister's attention to this, in case he might have any communication to make to the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Informal negotiations have been carried on by Mr. Bryce, the British ambassador, upon different subjects affecting the relations between Canada and the United States. One is about inland fisheries. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster remembers very well that when he was in office an attempt was made to have uniform regulations prevail on the great lakes, and to have a close season. That is under consideration at the present time. Then there is the question of the distribution of water power on the great lakes, which has been under consideration for some time. I understand Mr. Bryce is coming to Ottawa in a short time with a view of discussing these and any further questions with the Canadian government.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to draw attention to the return which was brought down in answer to an order of the House, dated 11th December last :

For a copy of all correspondence, petitions, statements, papers, orders in council and proclamations respecting the setting out of limits for prohibition of the sale of liquors along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific under the Public Works Construction Act.

Well, all I get is some correspondence between the Alberta Deputy Attorney General and the Railway Department, and an inquiry by the Railway Department from the Secretary of State, from which it appears that there is not anything to return. I must have been very much misled in reading the papers, as I had gathered that along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, east and west, there was a variety of moves made and communications took place, and orders given, and orders recalled, so far as the extension of the limits were concerned. I know it was a matter of much remark in the newspapers, and I am afraid that this return is not a full return. This is not what I wanted at all, and it is not such as I ought to get.

Mr. GRAHAM. I suppose the correspondence was brought down. If there is anything in my department which has not been brought down I will be glad to see that it is. There seems to be several departments involved, the Department of Justice, and possibly the Department of Railways and Canals. What department does the hon. gentleman think has been lax ?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Department of Justice, as usual, is lax in this case.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. No, everything that is on the files of the department has been returned.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When am I likely to receive a return asked for on the 11th of December, and also one on the 10th of December, one with regard to the Postmaster General's Department, and the other with regard to subsidies to steamships ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The return with regard to subsidies has been brought down to-day.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I desire to ask the Minister of Militia when the return asked for on December 11 will be brought down. The return asked for any further information regarding the Ross Rifle Company, and also correspondence respecting the drill shed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not quite sure about these, I will inquire and let the hon. gentleman know to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. There are some returns that I have inquired about half a dozen times, and have not got them yet. One was from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and the other from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BRODEUR. The return regarding my department is very voluminous, but it is being prepared.

SUPPLY—JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Before you leave the chair, I desire to address a few remarks to a subject that has already been discussed at considerable length in this House during the present session. My hon. friend the Postmaster General has lately returned from a mission to Japan, and he delivered in this House a week ago to-day a very eloquent speech, giving us an account of the result of his mission. My hon. friend always speaks gracefully and eloquently, and perhaps some of us might have entertained the wish that on that occasion there had been a little less eloquence and a little more information. He found himself constrained, no doubt for good reasons, to circumscribe considerably the information he gave on certain points which are of very material interest and importance to the people of this country at the present juncture. I do not, in the least, desire to be understood as reflecting upon the hon. gentleman in that regard, because, if one principle is to be more insisted upon than another in international dealings, it is that confidences of the character alluded to should be respected. I am alluding to this, however, for the reason that the action and attitude of the present government have brought our affairs in relation to Japan into such a condition that what would otherwise be necessary and desirable information was denied and necessarily denied, I presume, by my hon. friend the Postmaster General to this House on that occasion.

The hon. gentleman took great pains to justify the good faith and courteous attitude of the government and the people of Japan and so far as his remarks in that regard are concerned I entirely concur in what he says. The government of Japan negotiated this treaty with Canada at our instance. As I shall show later on they were not asked to accompany that treaty by any stipulation or proviso which should reserve to the parliament of Canada control of immigration from Japan into this country. This government went to Japan and asked Japan to permit Canada to accede to that treaty absolutely and without reserve and it was upon that application that the government of Japan entered into the convention of 1906 which accorded to the citizens of Japan absolute and full right and liberty to enter and travel and reside in this country. The hon. gentleman has referred to a so-called tacit understanding between the government of this country and the government of Japan. He has also alluded to assurances given on behalf of the government of Japan to the government of this country with respect to the restriction or even the prohibition of immigration from Japan to Canada; and he has declared to the House, speaking for the government in that regard, that this tacit understanding and these assurances have been absolutely and perfectly carried out in good faith by the government of Japan. In that regard he does absolutely justify the government of Japan, but it seems to me, that, having regard to the condition of affairs which has prevailed in this country during the past twelve months, when he justifies the government of Japan he condemns the government of which he, himself, is a member. That, it seems to me, necessarily follows, because, if these assurances were not made on behalf of the government of Japan and therefore indeed not to be respected on behalf of the government of Japan, that is one horn of the dilemma; or, on the other hand, if they have been made, kept and respected in perfect good faith it necessarily follows that these assurances could not, in the first instance, have been what the necessities of this country demanded. I think that absolutely and logically follows. When you justify the government of Japan with respect to the conditions which have prevailed in this country during the past twelve months, then you say in so many words that this government did not take the necessary safeguards and guarantees for the protection of this country and especially of the western provinces from that immigration as to which so many warnings have been uttered to this government during the past six or seven years.

There is one other aspect of my hon. friend's mission to which I desire to call attention before proceeding to deal with the general question. He has spoken of the very great aid and support afforded him, not only by the British Ambassador, but by the British government, and if there is one particular course in which my hon. friend especially showed very great wisdom and shrewdness it is the course which he took as soon as he arrived in Japan in placing himself under the ægis of the British Ambassador and in endeavouring to secure the whole weight of the empire behind him in his application to the Japanese government to exercise that control which the government of this country should itself have been able to exercise if the proper policy had been pursued and carried out. My hon. friend told us, not in so many words, but I think we could very well read between the lines that if it had not been for the efforts of the British ambassador, if it had not been for the whole hearted support of the British government, his mission to Japan would have probably resulted in an absolute and utter failure—I do not know whether it is much more than that as it is—but it would have resulted in an absolute and utter failure, he would have been dismissed from the Japanese government with a few polite expressions and he would have returned to this country no wiser than when he left. I think that would have been probably the result and it is rather an amusing commentary upon the recent declarations of hon. gentlemen who occupy the treasury benches as to the great revolution which has been wrought in the affairs of this empire, a revolution under which they now take charge of all treaties that specially concern Canada. The boasts made by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the boasts of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) have been heard in this country during the past five or six months, more especially in regard to the French treaty and not very much, I am bound to say, in regard to the treaty with Japan which they themselves negotiated and for which they are solely and absolutely responsible.

Well, the hon. Postmaster General took the right course. This government had got Canada into a very serious difficulty and the Postmaster knew that this government was rather powerless to extricate itself from that difficulty; therefore he had to invoke and did invoke the support of the British ambassador and of the British government as well. Whether or not everything could have been accomplished by $500 worth of telegrams from Ottawa to Tokio and from Ottawa to London I do not know, but I am prepared to assert that any success which my hon. friend achieved in Tokio, as he, himself, no doubt will be prepared to admit, and as he, himself, has, in fact, admitted, is largely due—practically altogether due—to the support of the British ambassador at Tokio.

Now, the question with which we are concerned to-day is a very important question. It is one fraught with momentous issues to this country and it is a question which probably will confront the people of this country when all those who are within the sound of my voice to-day have passed off the scene. It is the great question of world politics which must be worked out on the Pacific ocean in the years to come; it is the great question of the influence that the great nations of the orient, aroused to modern methods and organized as they have not been organized before, will exercise upon the destinies of the world and especially upon the Pacific. This question, while at the present moment it is one within a rather narrow compass, is, after all, a very great question and we are only upon the fringe of it to-day in discussing the question of the control of immigration from the great empire of Japan to the Dominion of Canada.

We all know that in 1894 treaties were negotiated by Japan with various countries. In 1894 a treaty was negotiated between Great Britain and Japan. That treaty did not bind the self-governing colonies of the empire but by article XIX of the treaty it was competent for any of these self-governing dependencies to accede to the treaty, to take advantage of it and to be bound by its terms. In the same year the United States negotiated a treaty with Japan and so far as this question of the control of immigration is concerned there was a marked difference between the terms of the British treaty and those of the United States treaty. The United States reserved to itself the right to control the immigration of labourers from Japan into the United States, as has been shown to this House in a very lucid and exhaustive manner by my hon. friend from Naniamo (Mr. Ralph Smith) in a debate which took place earlier this session. The British treaty with Japan made no such provision, because so far as Great Britain was concerned the possible danger which confronted the United States did not confront the British isles. The British isles, thickly populated and at a great distance from Japan were in no danger of any immigration from that country which could in any way affect the economic interests and the labouring population of the British isles. In the United States the reverse was the case. Japan had awakened; the Pacific had become merely a magnificent highway between the orient and this continent, and so the United States took the precaution, when they entered into a treaty with Japan in 1894, to insert a stipulation which is not to be found in the treaty negotiated between Great Britain and Japan that same year.

It is necessary for the purpose of what I desire to submit to the House, to review to some extent the negotiations between the government of Canada and the Colonial Office of Great Britain with respect to the terms of this treaty and with respect to the conditions upon which Canada was willing to accede to it. I have in my hand a copy of an order in council which was passed by the Conservative administration of the day, on August 3, 1895. The treaty, as the House will remember was negotiated in 1894, and shortly afterwards it was submitted to all the self-governing colonies of the empire. In 1895 it came under the consideration of the Canadian government, and on the 3rd of August, 1895, this order in council to which I refer was passed. I shall read it so that the House and the country may clearly and thoroughly understand what was the attitude of the Conservative government of the day with respect to the control of immigration from Japan to Canada. I may say by way of preface, that I am a little at a loss to state to the House the official status of Mr. Wilkinson who is referred to in this order in council. The despatch to which it is an answer has not been brought down by the government, for the reason as stated by the Prime Minister, that it is of a confidential character. It is clear, however, that Mr. Wilkinson was an official of either the colonial office or the foreign office, and that he had made representations to the government of Great Britain with regard to this matter which were considered of moment, and which were forwarded to the government of Canada in the year 1895. I may say that this order in council was not brought down with the papers which accompanied the Japanese treaty when that treaty was laid upon the table of the House last session. I looked over the files of that return; I found allusion to this order in council, and the Prime Minister was good enough to send me a copy on Saturday last when for the first time I had an opportunity of perusing it. The order in council is in the following terms :

ORDER IN COUNCIL.

August 3, 1895.

The committee of the Privy council have had under consideration a circular dispatch, hereto attached, dated May 7, 1895, from the Most Honourable the Marquess of Ripon, transmitting copies of two despatches from Her Majesty's minister at Tokio, Japan, on the subject of the emigration of Japanese labourers to the British Colonies ; and also an article from the 'Japan Daily Mail' newspaper, with reference to the trade between Japan and Australia.

The Minister of Interior to whom the despatch and its enclosures were referred, states that the only portion of the reference which is of vital consequence to Canada, is that which relates to the former mentioned subject.

The minister observes from the memorandum of Mr. Wilkinson of January 10, that in the treaty lately concluded between Japan and the United States, there is the following proviso: 'It is, however, understood that the stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, police and public security which are in force, or may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.' The corresponding clause in the treaty between Great Britain and Japan merely reads:—'Subject always to the laws, ordinances and regulations of each country.'

The minister agrees with Mr. Wilkinson's observations that this proviso 'could scarcely be appealed to as justifying either exclusion or restriction, without laying ourselves open to the charge of bad faith.'

The minister is further of the opinion that Mr. Wilkinson is justified in the conclusion that 'it might well happen that the government of the colonies would find themselves forced to take measures to restrict, suspend or even prohibit the immigration.'

The minister submits that, in the interests of the Dominion of Canada, there should be a proviso in the treaty of Great Britain with Japan similar to that contained in the treaty between that country and the United States, and he recommends that, when the adhesion of Canada is being given to the treaty, an express stipulation of this kind should be made, and that some further definition should be required of the term 'labourer' so that it will definitely include artisans.

The committee advise that Your Excellency be moved to forward a certified copy of this minute to the Right Honourable Her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the colonies.

All which is respectfully submitted for Your Excellency's approval.

JOHN J. McGEE,
Clerk of the Privy council.

Now, up to that time, so far as I have been able to understand by an examination of the reports of the debates of this parliament, there had been very little agitation indeed in the province of British Columbia or elsewhere in the Dominion of Canada with regard to the regulation, restriction, or prohibition of the entry of Japanese labourers into Canada, and it seems to me that the order in council which I have just read shows a very considerable degree of foresight on the part of the Conservative statesmen of that day in looking forward to the conditions which actually have prevailed in this country, to a greater or lesser extent, from 1900 up to the present time. On the 6th of August, 1895, that order in council was forwarded to His Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the Colonies by a despatch under the hand of the deputy Governor General, Sir Henry Strong.

The next step to which I desire to call attention is that on the 18th of October in the same year, 1895, the British ambassador at Tokio transmitted to the Japanese government the purport of that order in council, and declared to them in the memo. which he delivered :

The Canadian government in adhering to this treaty would desire a stipulation with respect to Japanese immigration similar to that inserted in the treaty between Japan and the United States, and that they desire a further definition of the word 'labourer' by adding thereto the words 'including artisans.'

And on the 7th of February, 1896, the Japanese government acceded to that request except so far as the word 'artisan' was concerned. I will read that portion which relates to this particular subject, of the despatch of the British ambassador at Tokio to the Marquis of Salisbury, then Foreign Minister for Great Britain. The despatch is under date February 7, 1906, at Tokio and it contains the following :—

His Excellency (that is, the Japanese Foreign Minister), produced a written memorandum, the terms of which were to the purpose that the Japanese government were willing to agree that Canada, in signifying her adhesion to the treaty, might do so with a proviso that the stipulations of the treaty shall not in any way affect the laws of either country in regard to the immigration of labourers, and further, that the treaty should cease to be binding six months after notice to terminate it had been given by either side.

So there was a complete agreement by the Japanese government to the demand of the Canadian government, except that at that time they did not consent that the word 'labourers' should be expanded by adding thereto the word 'artisans.'

The British ambassador, on February 10, 1896, following the suggestion of Canada in that regard, made an inquiry of the government of Japan as to whether or not that which had been demanded by Canada and consented to by the Japanese government would also be consented to by the Japanese government in respect to the adhesion of the other self-governing dependencies of the empire to the treaty of 1894. On the 19th of March, 1896, the Japanese government in reply to this demand of the British ambassador expressed its consent to the adhesion of all the other self-governing colonies on the same terms as Canada, but continued to object to the addition of the word artisans.

On the 15th of July, 1896, Mr. Chamberlain, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, sent a dispatch to the Governor General inquiring whether the government of Canada would adhere to the Japanese treaty. The Conservative government at that date had just gone out of power and my right hon. friend the Prime Minister had assumed the reins of office. On the 29th of July Sir Richard Cartwright then Minister of Trade and Commerce, submitted a report to the Privy Council. I will not read the whole of that report, but I will read a portion of it, because it is rather important as indicating the reasons upon which this government declined to accede to the treaty with Japan. The report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in its preamble, refers to the treaty and to various confidential communications which had taken place with regard thereto, and continues as follows :

The minister in reporting thereon has the honour to submit for the consideration of His Excellency the Governor General in Council, that while he fully approves of the general provisions of the treaty as modified, yet considering the interpretation put by Her Majesty's government as well as by those governments interested upon the intent and meaning of the 'most favoured nation clauses,' as they appear in treaties between Great Britain and foreign countries, which interpretation under existing circumstances would be held to be binding upon the Dominion of Canada, and in view of the provisions contained in article V. of the said treaty, and of questions arising as to the exact meaning of provisions contained in articles VIII., IX. and XV., and considering that apparently under the provisions of these several articles the Dominion would be further hampered in any effort that might be made in connection with the negotiation of arrangements under which any concession made for special equivalents granted by reason thereof to or with other countries, he does not deem it advisable that the Dominion should become a party to or be bound by the provisions of the treaty in question. He therefore respectfully recommends that if approved, His Excellency the Governor General be moved to communicate by cable to the Rt. Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies the substance of the minute of council founded hereon, in order that the Japanese government may be advised thereof with as little delay as possible and within the time limit as per article XIX. of the said treaty.

R. J. CARTWRIGHT.

The language of this recommendation is very confused. There seems to be an omission in one part, because one of the sentences is apparently incomplete; but the purport of it is easily to be understood. The government were oppressed by the fear that the adhesion of Canada to that treaty might hamper them in some way in connection with preferential trade, which was then under discussion. For my part, I do not see what possible effect it could have in the direction indicated by this report, because the Japanese treaty did not embody the provisions contained in the German and Belgian treaties. As every one acquainted with the subject knows, these treaties contained an express stipulation that any concession or advantage granted by Canada to the mother country must be granted also to Belgium and Germany. There was no such stipulation in the Japanese treaty, and for that reason it seems to me no such difficulty could have arisen. Indeed, in the following year the Canadian government itself passed an order in council declaring that Japan was entitled to the benefits of the reciprocal or preferential tariff. The Minister of Trade and Commerce in his report did not take into consideration the labour question at all, but did have regard to a consideration which seems to me altogether fallacious, and which should not have interfered in the slightest degree with the adhesion of Canada to this treaty.

On the 18th of September, 1896, Mr. Chamberlain notified Canada that Queensland has refused to accept the treaty unless given freedom of action in respect to the immigration of Japanese artisans. A further order in council was passed on the 15th of October, 1896, refusing to accede to the treaty for the reasons already stated. On the 21st of October, 1896, Mr. Chamberlain communicated to the Governor General the information that the time for adhering to the treaty had been extended for one year, that is to the 25th of August, 1897.

On the 8th of October, 1896, the British ambassador, in a report to Lord Salisbury, declared that the Japanese government had last come to an understanding with him respecting the exact terms of the protocol which reserved to the self-governing colonies acceding to this treaty a right of control over immigration. I will refer to that report and to the protocol itself, because they are of importance in coming to an understanding of the position which this government afterwards took. The dispatch is dated the 8th of October, 1896, and contains the following language :

I have the honour to inclose copy of a draft protocol which, in pursuance of an understanding arrived at with Count Okuma on the 2nd instant, I placed to-day in His Excellency's hands. It provides for the reservation of the right to legislate with regard to trade, immigration of labourers and artisans, police and public security to all the colonies and foreign possessions of the Crown mentioned in article XIX. of the new treaty, except Newfoundland and Natal which have already signified their unconditional adhesion and is reciprocal in form. It is framed on the model of the last paragraph of article II. of the new treaty between the United States and Japan.

The last sentence of the British ambassador's report in referring to his communication to the Foreign Minister of Japan is as follows :

As, however, no legislation seemed to be in immediate contemplation in either Canada or Australia, it would appear that what the governments of those colonies desired was to have the power of legislation in reserve so as to be able, in case of need, to satisfy public opinion.

And a draft protocol was then agreed upon between the British ambassador and the Japanese government as embodying the terms, provisions and stipulations to which the government of Japan would consent. That protocol is in the following terms, and is inclosure No. 1 in the despatch from which I have already read some extracts.

Draft protocol.

The undersigned duly authorized, &c., have agreed that the stipulations contained in the first and third articles of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Japan, signed in London on the 16th July, 1894, shall not in any way affect the laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, the immigration of labourers and artisans, police and public security which are in force or may hereafter be enacted in either of the colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty enumerated in article XIX. of the said treaty, with the exception of Newfoundland and Natal, or in Japan.

Done at Tokio, 1896.

It will be observed that by this protocol, the terms of which were thus settled and assented to by the British ambassador and the Japanese government, Japan formally consented not only to the restriction already embodied in the treaty between Japan and the United States, but also to the original demand of Canada made in August, 1895, that the word 'labourers,' used in the United States treaty should be broadened by adding thereto the words 'and artisans.'

On the 23rd January, 1897, the matter again came before the consideration of this government, and by an order in council of that date the government affirmed the same reasons as before for refusing to accede to the treaty. And it will be observed in this connection that up to the time the Conservative government went out of power Japan —although it had acceded to the stipulation embodied in the treaty with the United States—had not acceded to the additional words, 'and artisans,' required by the order in council of 1895. It is, however, apparent that the Japanese government, in October 1896, accepted in full the view put forward by the Canadian government in August, 1895, and therefore the treaty could have been acceded by Canada at that time upon the exact terms laid down by the Conservative administration in its order in council of the 3rd August, 1895.

On the 30th July, 1897, the question of Japanese immigration into British Columbia had apparently become a somewhat serious one, because on that date the British Columbia government and legislature sent a memorial to the Governor General in which they respectfully requested that if the Dominion government should decide to become a party to the treaty with Japan, they would secure such stipulations as would prevent the unrestricted immigration of Japanese into Canada. And in the year 1900, there was a petition of more than 2,000 residents of British Columbia to His Excellency the Governor General, in which it was set out that between the 1st January, 1900, and the 30th April, 1900, 4,669 Japanese had landed in Victoria and Vancouver and the province was being flooded with them.

So the matter stood until the 7th June, 1905, nearly ten years afterwards, when, by an order in council passed by the present administration, it was declared that the previous obstacles to the accession of Canada to the treaty had been removed and His Excellency the Governor General was moved to ascertain whether or not the Japanese government was prepared to admit Canada to participation in the treaty. The Colonial Secretary had before him the attitude of the Canadian government in 1895. He had before him the express declaration made by Canada in 1895 that Canada would not accede to this treaty except with stipulations which would enable

Canada to restrict Japanese immigration if necessary. And he had before him, no doubt, the consent of the Japanese government to the protocol which I have already read—the protocol containing an express proviso and stipulation with regard to the control of immigration. So he addressed to the Governor General of Canada the despatch which I have under my hand, and which is as follows :

London, July 14, 1905.

Referring to your confidential despatch of 7th June, should Japanese government be informed that your government wishes to adhere to treaty of 1894 and supplementary convention of 1895 under same terms and conditions as Queensland in 1897 which Japanese government then agreed to extend to any other colonies adhering within prescribed period, namely (1) that stipulations contained in first and third articles of treaty shall not in any way affect laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, artisans, police and public security, which are in force or hereafter may be enacted in Japan or in colony; (2) that treaty shall cease to be binding as between Japan and colony at expiration of twelve months after notice has been given on either side of desire to terminate same.

Or are your government prepared to adhere absolutely and without reserve as would appear to be the case from speech of Minister of Agriculture in Canadian parliament, June 22? Please telegraph reply.

LYTTLETON.

The speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) delivered in this House on the 22nd June, 1905, is to be found at page 7912 of 'Hansard.' It declares in effect that the government have absolutely abandoned an intention of discriminating in any way against Japanese labourers coming to Canada and that consequently Canada was prepared to accede absolutely to the treaty without reserving control of immigration from Japan. I am not giving the hon. gentleman's exact words but their effect, and the hon. gentleman will correct me if I am wrong.

Therefore, the government of this country had their attention directed by this despatch from the Colonial Secretary, Mr. Lyttleton, to the attitude which their predecessors, the Conservative government, had taken in 1895—an attitude which eventually had commanded the assent and approval of Japan. Thus, this government had before them the exact situation. They had before them, on the one hand, the question of absolute and unreserved adhesion, and on the other hand the question of acceding to that treaty upon the terms already consented to by Japan, which would enable the government of this country at all times to control the immigration of artisans and labourers from Japan into Canada. But hon. gentlemen opposite paid so little attention to the subject, they had this most important feature of the question so little in mind, that apparently they forgot all about the despatch of the Colonial Secretry. So that on the 5th September, 1905, nearly eight weeks afterwards, they sent a despatch through the Governor General to the Colonial Secretary to this effect :

My Prime Minister earnestly hopes that you will press the immediate entry of Canada into the Anglo-Japanese treaty.

Without deigning one word of reply to the warning addressed to them by the Colonial Secretary in respect of the attitude they should assume as to the control of immigration, they apparently forgot the subject absolutely, and some seven or eight weeks afterwards sent this further despatch through the Governor General requesting that the British government would press the immediate entry of Canada into the Anglo-Japanese treaty. Well, if they were forgetful, if they were mindful of Canada's interests, the Colonial Secretary had these matters in mind; for, the following day, September 6, he sent in reply the following telegram to the Governor General :

London, September 6, 1905.

In reply to your telegram received to-day please inform your Prime Minister that before taking steps as regards adhesion of your government to commercial treaty with Japan His Majesty's government awaiting reply to telegram of July 14.

LYTTLETON.

A great deal is said sometimes—I think, on occasion, even by the Prime Minister himself—as to the disregard by the imperial government of Canadian interests in the negotiation of treaties with foreign powers. Here was a case in which the British government were trying to preserve the interests of the Canadian people in the control of immigration, and these gentlemen upon the treasury benches had so little regard to this subject, of such transcendent importance, as it is that they even forgot within six or seven weeks the warning which had been addressed to them on the subject by the imperial government. They again called their cabinet together and took the subject into earnest consideration. And this is the result of their deliberations, as embodied in the order in council of September 25, 1905 :

Ottawa, September 25, 1905.

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has had under consideration the minute of council approved on June 7 last, advising, on the recommendation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that His Excellency be moved to ascertain whether the Japanese government would be prepared to admit Canada to a participation in the existing treaty between Great Britain and Japan, adopted in the year 1894 and supplementary convention 1895 and has had also under consideration the cable despatch from Mr. Lyttleton to Earl Grey of July 14 last inquiring whether the government of Canada was prepared to adhere absolutely and without reserve to the treaty of 1894 and 1895, or whether Canada desired to limit the terms of the treaty to the conditions made on behalf of Queensland when accepting the Japanese treaty, which provided that the stipulations contained in the 1st and 3rd articles of the treaty should not in any way affect the laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, artisans, police and public security which are in force or might hereafter be enacted in Japan or Queensland; (2) limiting the treaty to a period of 12 months after notice given on either side.

When the minute of council dated June 7, 1905, was approved the judgment of the Privy council as expressed in that minute was that Canada was willing to become a party to the Treaty of 1894 and supplementary convention of 1895 without any reserve. Since those dates Japan has enacted a law limiting immigration to foreign countries thus removing one of the objections that influenced the government of Canada in declining to become a party to the treaty with Japan in 1897. It is doubtful whether Japan would now agree to a treaty on any other basis than the proposals contained in the original treaty.

The undersigned therefore recommends that a cable despatch be sent to Mr. Lyttleton advising him that the government of Canada is prepared to adhere absolutely and without reserve to the treaty of commerce and navigation made between Great Britain and Japan in 1894 and supplementary convention signed at Tokio in July, 1895.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. W. SCOTT,
Secretary of State.

So, on the following day, September 26, 1905, the deputy of the Governor General, Hon. Mr. Taschereau, addressed the following dispatch to the Colonial Secretary:

Government House,
Ottawa, September 26, 1905.

The Right Honourable
Alfred Lyttleton, P.C., &c.

Sir,—The Governor General had the honour to send you to-day a telegraphic message in code of which the following is a translation:—

Referring to your telegram July 14, responsible ministers prepared to adhere to Japanese treaty 1894, and supplementary convention of 1895, absolutely and without reserve. Minute of council and despatch follow by mail.

I now have the honour to enclose herewith copy of the minute of council referred to, upon which that message was founded.

H. E. TASCHEREAU,
Deputy of the Governor General.

We observe an entire absence from this order in council of any mention of the assurances that have been referred to so copiously by my hon. friend the Postmaster General and Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux). There is no assurance referred to in this order in council which forms the basis upon which Canada acceded to this treaty of 1906. The reasons set forth in this order in council are two: First, that Japan has enacted a law limiting immigration to foreign countries. Now, Japan could enact a law one day and repeal it the next, just as the parliament of Canada is at liberty to repeal or alter or modify any enactment of this parliament, and the mere enactment of a provision by the parliament of Japan, subject to alteration or repeal the next day, surely was but insufficient ground for putting to one side all considerations of that protocol which had been assented to by Japan and which would have reserved to Canada control which Canada ought to have over immigration into our country. The second reason assigned is as follows:

It is doubtful whether Japan would now agree to a treaty on any other basis than the proposals contained in the original treaty.

What was the ground for that doubt? Japan had consented to a protocol in October, 1896, and this government had it open to them at all times between October, 1896, and September 25, 1907, to accede to that treaty with a stipulation ensuring to Canada the control over immigration. For what reason is it to be said that there was any doubt? At all events, assuming that there was doubt, would it not have been worth while before plunging into a treaty of that kind which deprives us of the control of immigration, to at least make an attempt and, after making an attempt and ascertaining what the conditions were, to come to parliament and have a discussion and find out whether or not the true voice and spirit of this country was in favour of giving up control of immigration from Japan in order to secure any commercial advantages which would accrue to us by adhesion to that treaty?

Now, we have heard a good deal about assurances, and we have been told a good deal by my hon. friend the Postmaster General as to the spirit in which these assurances have been carried out by Japan. I do not desire to controvert his statements in the slightest degree in that regard. But I am prompted to observe that these assurances, as I understand the matter, were conveyed to this government by the consul general of Japan, Mr. Nossé, who formerly resided in Montreal and afterwards resided here in Ottawa. I have yet to learn that a consul general has any diplomatic functions or status which could have justified our government in accepting his assurances on that point. Why the very first duty of a new ambassador—and an ambassador has a high diplomatic status—upon his arrival in the country to which he is accredited, is to present his credentials, sometimes with a further statement of his powers. These powers are narrowly and closely examined, and on engagement made by him outside of his powers is entertained by the country to which he is accredited.

So far as Mr. Nossé is concerned, any elementary book on international law, all the standard authorities on international law lay it down as beyond question that a consul has no diplomatic status, he has no apparent authority to enter into an engagement of this kind. I could not get an answer from the Postmaster General as to whether the Japanese government held itself bound by all the engagements made by Mr. Nossé on its behalf. My hon. friend contended that Japan was bound. He asserted that the official status of the consul general was sufficient to give credit to these assurances. He put forward, in one part of his speech at least, the reason that these assurances were given upon paper bearing the impress of the imperial government of Japan. Well, that would be a far reaching argument if it were carried to its legitimate conclusion, and I presume my hon. friend the Postmaster General would not be disposed to lay too much stress upon it. But if this government were entitled to accept the assurances of Mr. Nossé, as the Postmaster General declares, then in respect of the doubt which has been raised as to the adherence by the Japanese government to the consent which it gave in 1896, I would like to point out that Mr. Nossé, in 1903, made a very important statement to the government of this country, a statement which would have justified the government in concluding that the government of Japan would maintain that consent and would adhere to that treaty with the stipulation I have already quoted. On the 30th of March, 1903, Mr. Nossé addressed a communication to the Prime Minister. This communication was not brought down in the papers laid upon the table of the House in 1906; it is included however in the further return which has been laid upon the table of the House during the present session. The communication in question reads as follows :

March 30, 1903.

Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
Premier and President of the Council,
Ottawa.

In answer to my cablegram to the imperial Japanese government advising them to continue the policy of restricting their people immigrating in any large number into British Columbia, I have received a cable instruction to the effect that I have to give your government the renewed assurances that the Japanese government are not desirous of forcing their people into British Columbia against the wish of the province, and that they are willing to enter into an agreement with your government by which they may bind themselves, if their present policy of rigid restriction is not deemed satisfactory to your government.

T. NOSSE,
Consul General of Japan.

If that means any thing it means that the government of Japan, in March, 1903, would have been perfectly willing to have Canada accede to this treaty upon that proviso and stipulation to which Japan did give its assent in October, 1896. With a communication expressed in such forcible terms, and of so recent a date, it does seem remarkable that the government, in 1905, saw fit to plunge this country into the difficulty with which it is now confronted, and so to alter the condition of affairs that we cannot maintain over immigration to this country that control which is eminently necessary in the public interest.

Now I come more particularly to the results of the mission to Japan of my hon. friend the Postmaster General. The real object of his mission was to induce Japan to exercise that control over immigration into Canada which we should be able to exercise ourselves. It is one of the attributes of the sovereign power of any State to restrict, or even altogether prohibit, the entrance of aliens within its territory. If we had preserved that right by the stipulation insisted upon by the Conservative government in August, 1895, there would have been no difficulty. We did not reserve that right; therefore, having passed over to the Japanese government that control which should have been exercised by ourselves, it became necessary for my hon. friend the Postmaster General to go to the Japanese government and to ask them to exercise some control and some regulation. That in short is the actual position of affairs which confronted this government when the Postmaster General embarked on his mission to Japan. I am bound to say that the Japanese government seems to have exercised a perfect courtesy and a most wonderful forbearance in agreeing not to insist, for the time being, upon its full treaty rights, which undoubtedly had been granted to Japan by the treaty of 1896, bringing into force the treaty of 1894. What has my hon. friend the Postmaster General brought back ? He has brought back, outside the information which he is not at liberty to disclose to this House and to which I will not again refer, a letter from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Japan, Viscount Hayashi. That letter has been read to this House, and appears on the pages of 'Hansard.' It is a very polite letter, it is couched in the most courteous terms. Let us see what there really is in it so far as the interests of this country need safeguarding. In the first place let me read the letter, because it is well that the attention of the House should again be directed to its exact terms :

Tokio, December 23, 1907.

Monsieur le Ministre,—

In reply to your note of even date, I have the honour to state that although the existing treaty between Japan and Canada absolutely guarantees to Japanese subjects full liberty to enter, travel and reside in any part of the Dominion of Canada, yet it is not the intention of the imperial government to insist upon the complete enjoyment of the rights and privileges guaranteed by those stipulations when that would involve disregard of special conditions which may prevail in Canada from time to time.

Acting in this spirit and having particular regard to circumstances of recent occurrence in British Columbia, the imperial government have decided to take efficient means to restrict emigration to Canada. In carrying out this purpose, the imperial government, in pursuance of the policy above stated, will give careful consideration to local conditions prevailing in Canada, with a view to meeting the desires of the government of the Dominion as far as is compatible with the spirit of the treaty and the dignity of the state.

Although, as stated in the note under reply, it was not possible for me to acquiesce in all of the proposals made by you on behalf of the Canadian government, I trust that you will find in the statement herein made proof of the earnest desire of the imperial government to promote by every means within their power, the growth and stability of the cordial and mutually beneficial relations which exist between our countries. I venture to believe, also that this desirable result will be found to have been materially advanced by the full exchange of views which has taken place between us, and it gives me special pleasure to acknowledge the obligation under which I have been placed by your frank and considerate explanations regarding the attitude and wishes of your government.

I avail myself, &c., &c.,

(Sgd.) TADASU HAYASHI.

The Honourable Rodolphe Lemieux,
Postmaster General and Minister of Labour for Canada, Tokio.

Well, let us analyse this letter and see what there is in it.

First, there is the assertion of the full right and liberty of Japanese subjects to enter, travel and reside in Canada.

Second, there is the statement that it is not the intention of the Japanese government to insist upon the complete acknowledgment of its rights when that would involve a disregard of the special conditions prevailing in Canada from time to time. Who is to be the judge of these special conditions ? Is it the government of Canada or the government of Japan ? We are absolutely in the dark as to that. Why should special conditions in Canada, which ought to be the subject of regulation by the parliament and government of Canada, be a subject of appeal from this government to the government of Japan ? Yet, that is the condition to which the affairs of this country have been brought by the adoption of this treaty without proviso.

Thirdly, he declares that the Japanese government has decided to take efficient means to restrict emigration to Canada so far is compatible with the spirit of the treaty and the dignity of the state. Who is to be the judge of these matters ? Is it the government of Canada or the government of Japan, and what are the efficient means which are to be taken to restrict immigration ? Are they to be efficient in the judgment of the government of Canada, or, are they to be efficient in the judgment of the government of Japan ?

Fourthly, he declares that for this purpose the Japanese government will give careful consideration to local conditions in Canada. So that local conditions which should be the subject of observation, consideration and enactment by our own government and parliament have been transferred, by means of this treaty, to the Japanese government which graciously promises that it will, in future, for the purposes alluded to, give careful consideration to local conditions in Canada.

Now, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that, by the action of the government in this regard, Canada has handed over to Japan that control of immigration which Canada herself ought to exercise, that the regulations governing immigration in future are to be Japanese regulations, that the control and policy are to be Japanese and that in case of difficulty our remedy and our only remedy, outside of the abrogation of this treaty, is by appeal to the Japanese government from time to time. The government of Japan can change its policy to-morrow. A new government might come into power within three months in Japan and that government might repeal every law on the statute-book in Japan with respect to the restriction of immigration, it might abolish every limitation which has been enacted by the present administration and we could, in three or four months, be in exactly back the same position as we were before the hon. Postmaster General went to Japan.

Of what avail after all are these assurances ? Did we not have an abundance of assurances according to the view of this government, between 1900 and 1907 ? I have some of these in my hand. Let us look at them for a moment. In May, 1900, we were told that by an order of the Japanese government immigration to Canada had been limited to five per month for each emigration agent in cases of persons passing through the hands of emigration agents. and that the number of other immigrants had been limited to five per month for each prefecture. By a letter of the Japanese consul of the 7th August, 1900, it was declared that the Japanese government had entirely forbidden for the present emigration from Japan to Canada and also to the United States. It is perfectly obvious that that order must have been rescinded or otherwise we could not have had the immigration into this country which has prevailed during the past year. On the 3rd February, 1903, the Consul General for Japan, whose statements are regarded as official by this government declares in a letter to the Prime Minister that there is a total and absolute restriction of immigration from Japan to Canada by the Japanese government, that the only Japanese allowed to leave Japan for Canada are: (1) Those holding old passports and certificates of Japanese consuls certifying that they are residents of and returning to Canada; (2) families of Japanese residing in Canada and coming out to them, and (3) merchants and students duly qualified. And so on all through the piece. The assurances which my hon. friend the Postmaster General has brought back from Japan do not seem to be fuller or more conclusive or to offer any better security than those which have been given to us from time to time from 1900 to 1907. I do not say in this regard that we are to find any fault with the Japanese government. The Japanese government has a perfect right to deal with these matters as matter of internal regulation just as Canada ought to have an absolute right to deal with the restriction of immigration to her own shores from Japan. Both countries should be entitled to exercise these rights to the full. The situation at the present time is that Japan, in so far as immigration from that country to Canada is concerned may exercise control and that Canada may not exercise any control.

My hon. friend has asked for a fair trial of the new regulations. I would not object to giving the new regulations a fair trial and I trust that assurance which the Postmaster General has been able to secure from the government of Japan will answer all the expectations which he has announced to the House in his speech of a week ago. That, however, does not alter the situation, that does not affect the principle and the principle for which we must stand in this House is that Canada ought not to enter into any treaty engagement which would prevent the necessary and effective control of immigration into this country. It is a subject which may be of transcendent importance as far as oriental immigration is concerned, it is a question of vital importance not only to British Columbia but to the whole of the Dominion and it is fraught with the gravest consequences not only to us at the present day, not only to the great wage earning population of the country but to all the people of Canada and to those who will succeed us in the future in developing this country. So, I think it is only right, Mr. Speaker, in view of what has taken place from 1895 down to the present time, that the subject should be placed before the country upon a basis which we deem right and which is in the interest of Canada. Therefore I move:

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out and the following substitued therefor:

By order in council of 3rd August, 1895, the ministry then in office in Canada called attention to the dangers of unrestricted immigration and declared that Canada's adhesion to the treaty of 1894 with Japan should be accompanied by such a proviso or stipulation as would enable parliament to control the immigration of labourers and artisans;

That Japan in 1896 consented that such a proviso and stipulation should accompany the adhesion of Canada to the treaty;

That notwithstanding such consent the present government in 1905 deliberately abandoned any such proviso or stipulation, although its great importance was twice called to their attention by the British government during the course of the negotiations; and, having entered into the treaty of 1906 (which brought into force in Canada the treaty of 1894 absolutely and without reserve) the government secured its ratification by parliament in 1907.

That the ratification of the said treaty of 1906 was almost immediately followed by a great influx of Japanese labourers into Canada;

That in the opinion of this House Canada should not enter into or accede to any treaty which deprives parliament of the control of immigration into this country;

That this House, while expressing its profound appreciation of the friendly intentions and courteous assurances of the Japanese government, and while declaring its sincere desire for the most cordial relations with the Japanese people, desires nevertheless to record its strong protest against a policy under which our wage-earning population cannot be protected from destructive invading competition except by entreating the forbearance and aid of a foreign government.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Kootenay). Mr. Speaker, this question which we are now discussing has occupied the House for a considerable time, and there will no doubt be further discussion upon it. I am satisfied that the importance of the subject justifies all the time that this parliament may devote to its serious consideration. It is a question which is fraught with great importance to the province of British Columbia, and to my mind it is of equal importance to the rest of the Dominion. It is a question that is national in its character, and I am sure that the members of this House who have listened to the speeches delivered by the British Columbia representatives upon the motion of the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) have a good deal of light thrown upon the Oriental question in so far as it affects our province of British Columbia and all Canada. I am satisfied that these hon. gentlemen have a different view on that question now from that which they held before the facts were so ably presented. My hon. friend from Nanaimo and other hon. gentlemen have given various grounds upon which it was not in the interests of British Columbia or in the interests of Canada that there should be any large influx of Oriental immigration into British Columbia. It is not my purpose to cover all the reasons set forth by these hon. gentlemen, who have marshalled all the facts that it is possible to marshal in support of their contention. But, sir, I may add another ground upon which objection may be based to any great influx of Oriental immigration into British Columbia, and it is a ground which even a proud and sensitive nation like Japan can take no exception to. In the province of British Columbia we have a country which those of us who have the good fortune to live there take a great pride in. We have a country of unlimited resources in minerals, in timber, in fisheries, and in the near future I think we may say in agriculture also. We have a country of magnificent scenery, a country of unexcelled climate. We have a country that we believe should be preserved essentially as a white man's country. When I say this I do not mean to say that none other than a white man shall place his foot upon the soil of our province, because that would be carrying the principle to an extreme; but what I do mean by 'an essentially white man's country, is a country wherein not only those who are employers and who can live without doing actual manual labour are white, but a country where the white man who has to earn his livelihood by the sweat of his brow may call his home. I want not only the preponderance of commercial and industrial interests in British Columbia to be white, but I want the great preponderance of the labour interests to be white also. We British Columbians have our ideal of what British Columbia should be, and I do not know that I can better express that ideal than by reading the concluding sentences of a very instructive article written by R. E. Gosnell, published in a recent issue of the Vancouver magazine called 'Westward Ho.' The concluding sentences of this article read:

> This vast and in some respects still unknown country has possibilities in store for it not yet, perhaps, dreamed of. It has without peradventure great possibilities as a home for the British immigrant and as a field for the investor; possibilities as the point of convergence of trade and commerce along the all-red line to the utmost development of which the statesmen of the empire are pledged; possibilities as an educational centre as famous as any in Europe; possibilities of great industrial wealth; possibilities, in short, as a greater Britain on the Pacific, where British arts and institutions will expand under fresh impetus, where the British flag will for ever fly, where British laws and justice will be respected and enforced, and where British men and women will be bred equal to the best traditions of the race.

That is our ideal, and there is no reason why that ideal should not be attained in the province of British Columbia. But if it is to be attained it can only be by bringing to our province two classes of people—either those who are British born and have a love of British institutions inbred in them, or people of some other nation who are assimilable; people such as the Germans or the French, or other nations of that character, who leave their fatherland for one cause or another to seek a permanent home here and to grow up with this new country. Such people come to us for the purpose of adopting Canada as their nation; they become residents, they become citizens, their children and their children's children are born here, and although they always have a warm spot in their hearts for the land of their birth, they become in every sense of the word true British subjects, true citizens of Canada, imbued, as are the British born subjects themselves, with a preference for British institutions, a loyalty to the British flag, and a love for the reigning sovereign of Britain. These, sir, are the two classes of people by whom we can populate the province of British Columbia so as to reach the ideal enunciated in this magazine article which I have read. It may well be asked: Cannot the Japanese race help your province to attain the same ideal? But with all due respect to the Japanese race, I say no. We all know that the Jap is an excessively patriotic man; we know that love for the Mikado and that obedience to his will exists in the Jap from the cradle to the grave. And we know that no matter what country he may emigrate to, his emigration is not looked upon even by himself as a permanent departure from Nippon or as a permanent residence in the land he goes to. He comes there for a time. He may take the oath of allegiance of that country, but that oath, whatever it is, is not as binding upon him as the traditions which have been instilled into his mind from his early infancy. These will outweigh any advantages which he may obtain from taking the oath of allegiance and becoming a citizen of that country; and, instead of looking forward to his children and his children's children inhabiting it as subjects of its rulers, the Jap is always looking forward to the day when he can return to the land of the Rising Sun and end his life under the rule of his beloved Mikado. I say that citizens of that character, no matter how estimable they may be in other respects, are not the material with which we can preserve the Pacific province for a white race that will be true and loyal to the British flag. Japan herself, being a nation which instils into her people from infancy exalted ideas of patriotism should certainly be the last nation to cavil at the people of British Columbia or the people of Canada for desiring to have as citizens and builders of their nation people who will be as loyal to the flag we are born under, the British flag, as their people are to theirs.

Having said so much with regard to the unassimilable nature of the Japanese people as populators of our country, let me proceed to the consideration of the present treaty between Japan and Canada. That treaty was signed between Great Britain and Japan in the year 1894. It was followed by a protocol in 1895, by which self-governing colonies could obtain the benefits of that treaty and still retain control of their immigration. Contrast the position of Japan in 1894, when that treaty was signed, with her position in 1905 or 1906 or 1907. In 1894, Japan was a third-rate or a fourth-rate power, at the present time she is classed among the first-rate world powers. This position, it is true, has been won by a great struggle, in which she not only showed her great resources, but also the bravery and patriotism of her men. Therefore what Japan might have been willing to concede in 1894 or in 1897, at the time when my hon. friend the leader of the opposition says she was willing to treat with us on the basis of giving us control of our immigration regulations, she could not concede at the time this treaty between Canada and Japan was signed, that is, discrimination against her people.

Now, what was the object of Canada in entering this treaty with Japan? The object was that she might enlarge her commercial relations with that country. Canada, as a young and growing country, must constantly seek an outlet for her increasing productions and her expanding trade; and looking at Japan on our western border, we saw a promising market for Canadian goods. Our Minister of Agriculture went there some years ago, and returned with a favourable report to the government. So that our reasons for entering into a treaty with Japan were purely commercial reasons, having in view the benefit of both countries. When we come to consider the benefit to be derived from this commercial treaty with Japan, I for one will not minimize the importance of that consideration. Up to the time that treaty was entered into, there was very little to give an impetus to our trade with Japan. The possibilities all lay in the future. and those possibilities promised to be great. Now, I admit that we can pay too great a price for even the possible advantages of this treaty. That price would be to my mind the flooding of British Columbia or of Canada with Japanese immigrants. We from British Columbia have stood out against that, and we are still standing out against it. We want to have restricted the immigration of orientals of every description, and the closer and greater the restriction is the better pleased will be the people of British Columbia, and the better pleased shall we be as the representatives of those people.

That brings us to the question, whether the government of this country is liable to criticism for the manner in which it entered into this treaty with Japan. The hon. leader of the opposition has directed the greater part of his speech to a criticism of the acts of the government in that regard. Let us see if that criticism is merited. I believe the best way for us to judge of that would be to consider matters as they were before the treaty was entered into and to suppose that we had before us to-day the question whether or not we should enter into a treaty with Japan unrestricted in its terms as to immigration.

Let us for a moment divest ourselves of our political differences. Let us imagine ourselves a harmonious body, not divided into division of government and opposition, or Liberal and Conservative, but simply and purely discussing this question as a business proposition in order to decide whether or not it was in the interests of Canada to enter into a treaty with Japan. If we put ourselves in that position, we can best judge whether or not the government is open to the criticism which has been bestowed upon it by the leader of the opposition. Of course the hon. gentleman is quite within his right, in criticising the government on this or any other matter that comes before the House, and I am not at all questioning that right. But assuming the position of a body discussing this matter free from any political bias, what do we find? In about the year 1900, there was a good deal of agitation over the influx of Chinese into British Columbia and commissioners were appointed to investigate. I note that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) said that some fifteen or twenty years ago, Chinese immigrants were welcomed into British Columbia. I wish to correct him on that point. I have been in that province some twelve or thirteen years, and certainly during that period the Chinese were never welcome in our country. And if the hon. minister will turn to the 'Hansard' of 1884-5, he will find there a resolution moved by the then hon. member for Nanaimo, Mr. Gordon, regarding the undesirability of Chinese or oriental immigration into British Columbia. That was during the administration of the late Sir John Macdonald. This commission, which was appointed in the year 1900, went to British Columbia and took evidence, and recommended the imposition of a $500 poll tax upon Chinese. That recommendation afterwards became law. But in that same recommendation, the commissioners advised that a similar restriction should not be placed upon Japanese. Why did they so recommend? There must have been some reason. The reason was that the consul general of Japan in Vancouver talked this matter over with the commissioners and assured them that the Japanese government would restrict Japanese emigration, and did not desire that a similar restriction should be imposed upon their people as was to be imposed on the Chinese. The commissioners relied upon this assurance and so did the government. The result was that from 1901 until 1907, the number of Japanese coming into British Columbia did not exceed the number to which the consul general of Japan in Canada had promised they would be restricted. All the assurances of Japan, all the assurances given by the consul general of Japan and accepted by the government here, were carried out. Then we had a series of letters read by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux), making a connecting chain showing that these assurances were persisted in and would be carried out in the future as they had been in the past. These facts were all present in the minds of the government and the minister.

My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has referred to the message from the Colonial Secretary and has accused this government of having practically forgotten so important an issue in a treaty between Canada and Japan. I do not take that view at all. I do not believe that the government forgot or overlooked in any way that issue. But the question which this government had to face was this: If we are to enter into this treaty with Japan, we have to rely on the good faith of Japan that she will restrict emigration into British Columbia. If we ask for more, we shall not get it, and may as well abandon the idea of entering into a treaty with Japan at all. Of course we are all wiser after the event than before, but I would point out that, up to the time when they were in active negotiation over this treaty we find that Japan had kept her promise and restricted within the number she undertook to do through her consul general. Then it was a question, as it would be with us if we were considering it to-day, whether we were prepared to accept that treaty with Japan, relying on her good faith to carry out in the future, as she had in the past, the promises given us. Or should we refuse the treaty altogether. It was either the one or the other because the correspondence brought down and read by the Minister of Labour shows clearly that the Japanese government would not consent to a clause in the treaty which would practically discriminate against her people as compared with the people of other nations. Therefore the criticism of the hon. the leader of the opposition can only hold provided there was any reasonable doubt in the minds of the government of Canada as to whether or not Japan would continue to maintain her restriction of emigration to Canada. Let us then see how these assurances were carried out by her.

Until some time in the summer of 1907 there was no complaint that these regulations were not being carried out. At that time, suddenly there was a large influx of Orientals, both Japanese and Hindus. The people of British Columbia became alarmed, and very rightly so. They saw at once that there was something wrong; that either the Japanese government was deliberately disregarding the assurances it had given by its consul to the government of Canada, or there was an evasion in some way. And, naturally, the people of British Columbia became very much excited, and telegrams and resolutions were sent to the Prime Minister of this country, some asking him at once to cancel the treaty, others asking him to convene a special session of parliament to pass the Natal Act, and others of an equally direct nature. Now, in view of the feeling of the people of British Columbia, I do not blame any of the bodies or citizens that sent any of these telegrams or resolutions. At the same time I think it is well for Canada that we had a Prime Minister who, notwithstanding the pressure, notwithstanding the excitement that existed, could go about the remedying of the evil in a calm, though active, manner. Canada has assumed a position among the nations of the world, and we cannot act like a petulant child—she cannot enter into a treaty one day and cancel that treaty with a stroke of the pen the next day. We must have broader views of national matters than that. Our Prime Minister had those views. He took the only course he could take as Prime Minister of a great country—that of immediately going to the root of the trouble and applying the remedy there. In pursuance of that policy the Minister of Labour was sent on a mission to Japan. Before dealing with that part of the case, I may say that I do not consider the signing of that treaty between Canada and Japan is at all the reason for the great influx of orientals into Canada at that time. That influx was brought about by the commercial conditions of the country. We had very large railway enterprises in the western portion of Canada in course of carrying out, and I contend that had the conditions been the same at any previous time there would have been the same influx of Japanese into British Columbia then that there was in 1907. Had the conditions been the same before the signing of the treaty, there would have been the same influx that there was after the signing of the treaty.

Now, let us see how the Japanese carried out their restrictions, even after the treaty of 1907, as set out in the report of Mr. Mackenzie King, a report which, I am sure, not only every member of this House, but every person in the country, will recognize as one dealing fairly and impartially with the question, and, at the same time, one that is ably complied and very clear. At page 19 of that report, Mr. Mackenzie King, speaking of Japanese labour coming from Japan, says:

> On the other hand it is to be remembered that they were not without powerful Canadian interests behind them when they went to Japan, that they had in their possession documents which indicated the need and the desire for Japanese labour in this country, that they were able to afford assurances that for this labour employment would be immediately forthcoming, and that they were in a position to conjure with names which, to the statesmen of Japan, would not be without significance or weight. In justice to Japan and to the prejudice which has been aroused against her people in some quarters, in consequence of the sudden influx of her countrymen in large numbers to Canada, it is not to be forgotten that in the regulations, which were issued about April of the present year, the exception permitting emigration companies to send labourers to Canada was made conditional upon the production at the Foreign Office of Japan of the duplicates of bona fide agreements with responsible employers of labour in this country; the bona fides of which agreements the Japanese government required should be certified to by her consuls resident in Canada. If there was a change in the policy of Japan, it was not one which could adversely affect the interests of this country without a Canadian citizen, or a Canadian corporation, first placing upon it the seal of his or its approval.

Now, while Mr. Mackenzie King sets that forth as a--I will not say as an excuse—but rather as an amelioration of the offence, if any, committed by Japan in allowing more than the restricted number to come to Canada direct, still I take a little different view. I do not excuse the Japanese government for this at all. All the dealings that Japan had with us respecting immigration had been with the Dominion government, and notwithstanding the fact that corporations, which may be influential in the west, or any other interest or citizens of the west, had signed the contracts for imigrants for the purpose of supplying labour, I say that Japan is not wholly blameless in that she did not come to the fountain head, the Dominion government, before she granted passports to these people, for she must have known that the number that came—nine hundred—was in excess of the number to which immigration had been restricted.

Now, the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) sought to make a point out of the fact that as late as March, 1903, in answer to a telegram sent by Japanese Consul General Nossé to the government of Japan, the government of Japan expressed its willingness to enter into an agreement with the Canadian government with regard to immigration. The hon. gentleman's point was that, as late as March, 1903, the Japanese government was willing to make to Canada the same concession with regard to immigration as it made to the United States. He gives the broadest possible interpretation to that letter. In fact, I do not think it is susceptible of that interpretation. All it means is, in effect, this: You have verbal assurances from us that we would restrict immigration into British Columbia and into Canada to a certain number each year; if you are not satisfied with these verbal assurances we will enter into an agreement with you; we will put these verbal assurances into writing. That is all that letter can be construed to mean, no matter how broadly you interpret it.

Now, then, coming to the subject of the mission of the Minister of Labour to Japan, the Prime Minister of Canada, acting as a statesman should after, realizing the responsibility of his position, and in order that Canada might not be placed in the wrong by committing any hasty act, sent one of his ministers to negotiate with the government of Japan. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition partly attributed his success, because he did not say the mission was not a success—to the cloak of protection that was thrown around him by the British Ambassador at Tokio. Well, no doubt the British Ambassador was a great assistance to the Minister of Labour. Canada was entitled to all the assistance he could give our Minister of Labour, because, for Imperial reasons, on more than one occasion, Canada has taken an attitude which she might not have taken had those reasons not existed. This was one of those reasons, and therefore I say that the Canadian minister was entitled to all the aid, and prestige and co-operation that the British Ambassador in Tokio could give him. We all recognize that the mission of the Minister of Labour to Japan was one of great delicacy. We must all appreciate that a matter involving a semblance, at least, of possible discrimination between races, is one of great delicacy indeed. The Minister of Labour came back to this country, and in a very able speech stated to the House the results of his mission, and he also added that there were matters which, for diplomatic reasons, he was not in a position to disclose. Now I may say that, as a member from British Columbia, I would like very well to tell my constituents and the people of that province what was the exact nature of those restrictions that would warrant the minister in using the words I propose to quote later. In that respect I am almost as curious as my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Owen) was, when he asked a question of the Minister of Labour while he was delivering his speech. But I fully appreciate that in matters of this kind there may be conditions of settlement which it is not in the best interests of either Canada or Japan should be published. As a supporter of the present government I have to take one of two positions. I have either to say that I am not satisfied with this arrangement or I have to say that I am willing to trust the minister who negotiated it, and to place implicit faith in him when he says, as he did say in his speech last Tuesday, in effect, that with the avenue from Japan carefully regulated, and with the avenue from Hawaii absolutely closed we have eliminated from this issue ing that may give rise to fu ble with regard to Japanese on. Now the minister hi must e the importance of these words, he must know that he has made such an agreement, has entered into such conditions with the government of Japan, and which have been accepted by this government, as will ensure that there is no possibility of future trouble from an influx of Japanese immigrants. I have got to take his statement in good faith, and as a member from British Columbia, I am prepared to take it in good faith. I ask that time be given to prove the words of the minister true. I am satisfied he would not have made such a statement in this House had he not felt convinced that the Japanese government would maintatin with absolute good faith the engagements they had entered into, some particulars of which the Canadian minister was not at liberty to disclose to this House. I say, Mr. Speaker, that for my part I am willing to take the responsibility of placing implicit confidence in the Minister of Labour in that regard, and in the good faith of the British Ambassador who, as the Minister of Labour states, is cognizant of these conditions.

Now I am not going to detain the House any longer on this matter, there are others who will follow me. But I would like to make a word of reference to the amendment that has been proposed by the leader of the opposition. First, we have the recital of the attitude of the Conservative party in 1894 and 1895, and the attitude of the Japanese government at that time. I have already dealt with that subject, and I have said that what the Japanese government might have been willing to accept previous to 1897, they would not be willing to accept at the present time.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the Consul General say, in dealing with that condition, that they were willing to accept it ?

Mr. GALLIHER. No, I explained to the House, Mr. Speaker, that by the fullest interpretation that can be put on the letter of March, 1903, it could not be held to include the reservation of the right to pass immigration laws in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. What does my hon. friend make of this wording in the telegram of the Consul General of Japan :

The renewed assurances that the Japanese government are not desirous of forcing their people into British Columbia against the wish of the province, and that they are willing to enter into an agreement with your government by which they may bind themselves.

Mr. GALLIHER. If the assurances which have already been given to them are not sufficient—is that not there ?

Mr. SPROULE. If they are not sufficient ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, that should be there ; we had assurances from the consul of Japan and while the consul of Japan was having interviews with the ministers here, when this matter was brought before him, he cabled to Japan and the answer came back——

Mr. SPROULE. To that effect.

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, and what was that effect ?—if you are not satisfied with the verbal assurances I have given to you, we will enter into an agreement to carry out those assurances. That is the meaning of it if it means anything. Take the government of the United States to-day, who have this exception in their Act, and what do we find them doing ? They are going over and negotiating just the same as the Minister of Labour went over and negotiated and we have not yet heard whether they will meet with equal success, but even they, with that right reserved in their treaty, have the right to pass these immigration laws, they recognize the official standing of Japan to-day and they do not want to commit an act which will be considered as unfriendly to Japan.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the hon. gentleman aware that they have made a special regulation in regard to Corean and Japanese labourers ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not aware of the exact nature of it. I see some newspaper reports which may or may not be true and I am not going to pin my faith upon the strength of these, whether they are or are not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am speaking of regulations which are to be found in an official publication of the United States government.

Mr. GALLIHER. Now we will proceed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Pass that.

Mr. GALLIHER. There is nothing to it, as far as that is concerned. We found them negotiating to-day just the same as we had to go and negotiate. Now, the second last clause of the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition is :

That in the opinion of this House Canada should not enter into or accede to any treaty which deprives parliament of the control of immigration into this country.

Very good; that is a good sentiment, a very proper sentiment, but in this particular case what does it effect ? We have already entered into a treaty and to put that on paper does not alter the fact in regard to the Japanese treaty. It is there. As to the treaty it is too late. Then the hon. gentleman declares :

That this House, while expressing its profound appreciation of the friendly intentions and courteous assurances of the Japanese government, and while declaring its sincere desire for the most cordial relations with the Japanese people, desires nevertheless to record its strong protest against a policy under which our wage-earning population cannot be protected from destructive invading competition except by entreating the forbearance and aid of foreign government.

Now, we are all of one mind as regards this idea, both Liberals and Conservatives; we do not want to see any competition in labour in British Columbia that is not fair and is not warranted. We desire, where the labouring pople of British Columbia have to enter into competition with others, that that competition shall be fair and that it shall not be with people who can work for less wages, who can maintain themselves for less, or who will lower the standard of living of the labouring people of British Columbia or of Canada at large. But, what does this resolution mean? Supposing we all cast our votes for this resolution there is nothing in it which relieves the situation of our own people. If the hon. gentleman had gone farther and stated the proposition whether in view of these circumstances it is advisable to at once give notice to repeal the Japanese treaty he would have proposed something definite and substantial, but the hon. gentleman carefully avoided that. He puts forth an amendment here which sounds very well, reads very well and is very patriotic, but which accomplishes absolutely nothing and which means nothing.

Mr. SPROULE. It means a vote of censure on the government for their neglect to safeguard British Columbia's interest when they had an opportunity to do it.

Mr. GALLIHER. So long as it means—and I will accept the hon. gentleman's explanation of it—merely a vote of censure, I am prepared to drop the subject. I will not detain the House any longer. The subject is one on which I feel keenly and have felt keenly all along. I would like to mention, however, that some of the papers—I am satisfied that they have no authority for saying it—are making the statement that coolie immigration from Japan to Canada is limited to 1,000. I am satisfied that they have no authority for saying that because I am prepared to state to the Minister of Labour in this House that if I believed it was limited to 1,000, or to considerably less than 1,000, I would stand up in this House and object to such an arrangement.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am satisfied from the words of the hon. minister—and on this subject he must know the feelings of the people of British Columbia—that the number must be less than that stated because otherwise the members from British Columbia would not be satisfied. Now, I think I will conclude.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the limit?

Mr. GALLIHER. That is one of the features that, the Minister of Labour stated in this House for diplomatic reasons, he was unable to disclose.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The statement made by some of the papers that the limit is fixed at 1,000 is published without authority.

Mr. GALLIHER. I will hope so.

Mr. TAYLOR. If it should be correct, what then?

Mr. GALLIHER. If it is correct this House will find me on my feet protesting against it and asking for the cancellation of that treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. The limit is not large enough?

Mr. GALLIHER. The limit? I trust that both parties in politics and that the press who supports either party in politics will consider that the arrangement which has been made is entitled to a fair trial and that nothing will be done to inflame the public mind one way or the other. Let us give the matter time and prove whether the words of the Minister of Labour are true and whether the Japanese government are in earnest in dealing with the government of this country and whether they will maintain the arrangement they have made.

Mr. EDMUND BRISTOL (Centre Toronto). Mr. Speaker, it is an interesting spectacle to see our distinguished friends from British Columbia trying to square themselves with the people of that province and trying to justify the mistake which this government has made in sacrificing not merely the interests of the people of British Columbia but the interests of the people of Canada by limiting the right which the people as a whole have through this parliament to control immigration into this country. Now, my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Galliher), it seems to me, has evaded a good deal of what we might fairly consider in this resolution. The first matter brought to the attention of this House was an order in council as far back as 1895, wherein the administration of that day pointed out the danger that there would be to Canada from Japanese immigration unless it was restricted in some reasonable way and declining that Canada should enter into this treaty unless some restriction were put upon the immigration of Japanese labourers.

The present government came into power in 1896 and they had the opportunity of deciding this matter one way or the other in the interests of the people of Canada, and they had before them for good or for bad the opinion of the previous administration on the question. But what did this government do? Did they make any inquiry as to the volume of the trade of Canada with Japan before they acceded to this treaty ; was there any business investigation made by this business administration as a result of which they could announce to parliament that it would be a wise policy for Canada to come under this treaty? They did nothing of the kind. They sat down apparently until August, 1897, and then for reasons set forth in the memorandum which has been read, they refused to bring Canada under the treaty, mind you, they had an opportunity at that time of bringing Canada under a treaty by which Canada to-day would be restricting or not restricting Japanese or any other immigration if she chose to do so, and this government declined to avail itself of that opportunity. I ask hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House : What reason was there that existed in 1897 why they should not have approved of that treaty reserving to Canada the right to deal with the immigration of Japanese labourers and artisans ; what reason existed then that did not exist in 1907 when the treaty was signed ? If it was a good thing for Canada to increase its trade with Japan, what change has taken place ? What reason was there why it would not have been good business in the interests of the people of this country to have put this treaty in force ten years ago and obtained for Canada the benefit of that trade ? I have not heard from the other side of the House one solitary remark which would tend to disprove the charge that the government has been derelict in its duty in not having brought that treaty into force at a time when they could have put it into force without injury to the people of this country and which if they had put it into force then, would have given us for these intervening ten years the benefit of this trade with Japan, if there is benefit in it. We find the present government not merely careless of the rights of the people of this country in not restricting immigration, but we have them careless of the financial and business interests of the country in not putting into force ten years ago a treaty which if it is good for Canadian trade to-day was at least as good at that time. I venture the statement that the most serious mistake this government made was that when in 1897 they had an opportunity of clearing up this matter once and for all, they had not the good sense to follow the policy which had been laid down by the previous Conservative administration, and which if followed would have left us our self respect, our full power to deal with immigration, and would have benefited the trade of Canada.

Leaving the year 1897, when the matter could have been properly adjusted so as to satisfy every interest concerned, the treaty stood over. But while it stood over there was a warning addressed to this government by the government of British Columbia on the 30th of April, 1897. On that date the government of British Columbia memorialized this government and :

> Respectfully requested that should the Dominion government decide to become a party to the treaty with Japan they will make such stipulation as will prevent unrestricted immigration of Japanese into Canada.

Therefore, as far back as 1897 this government had before it the policy of the previous Conservative government ; it had before it the attitude of the people of British Columbia which has not changed ; it had before it the memorial from the government of British Columbia ; it had in fact the fullest possible warning that any government could have had, that if it entered into this treaty without reserving the right to restrict this immigration it was going to lead to trouble in Canada. Again in 1900 there was a petition of 2,167 residents of British Columbia to the Governor General which pointed out that between the 1st of January, 1900, and the 30th of April of that year, 4,669 Japanese landed in Victoria and Vancouver, and that the province seriously felt such an enormous immigration within such a short time.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman from Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) said there was no need for restriction up to the present time.

Mr. BRISTOL. I cannot agree with the hon. member (Mr. Galliher) in view of the facts before us. Of course, if you forget the facts you can argue any thing.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear hear.

Mr. BRISTOL. I dont wonder that the hon. members from British Columbia say 'hear, hear,' for if there ever was a case which they will have to forget the facts concerning this is it. But the people of British Columbia will not let them forget the facts and it is in the interest of the people of Canada that the facts should be placed before them.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Dont shed any tears about the British Columbia members.

Mr. BRISTOL. It must be objectionable to some of my friends opposite to have the facts brought out, and among these facts is a letter written on the 30th of March, 1903 by Mr. Nossé. Now, if I understood at all the argument of the Minister of Labour, it was, that the Canadian government had assurances both written and verbal that Japanese immigration would be restricted and kept within bounds. If I at all understood the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Galliher) it was that this letter which was read by the Minister of Labour and I think quite properly read by him, meant nothing of the kind. The House will have to judge between the interpretation put on this letter by the Minister of Labour and the interpretation put on it by the member for Kootenay, but in the meantime the letter might speak for itself. It says :

I have to give your government the renewed assurance that the Japanese government are not desirous of forcing their people into British Columbia against the wish of the province, and that they are willing to enter into an agreement with your government by which they may bind themselves if their present policy of rigid restriction is not deemed satisfactory to your government.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. BRISTOL. Delighted.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Is not that very letter protesting against legislation on the part of the legislature of British Columbia?

Mr. BRISTOL. I am not able to give my hon. friend the information because I am not conversant with the particular reasons why that letter was written.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. You should not discuss it then.

Mr. BRISTOL. Pardon me ; I am discussing that letter as a letter telling this government that the Japanese government were prepared to enter into a binding agreement and I am commenting on it in that light.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That is the very thing they have done under the Lemieux negotiations.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the binding there?

Mr. BRISTOL. Is my hon. friend (Mr. D. Ross) asking a question or making a speech ? The hon. gentleman says that is done under the Lemieux agreement, but I do not understand it so.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I refer to the agreement with the Postmaster General.

Mr. BRISTOL. I do not quite so understand it. I will read this letter again for fear my hon. friend (Mr. Ross) has forgotten it.

I have to give your government the renewed assurance that the Japanese government are not desirous of forcing their people into British Columbia against the wish of the province, and that they are willing to enter into an agreement with your government by which they may bind themselves if their present policy of rigid restriction is not deemed satisfactory to your government.

That letter was dated March 30, 1903, and is as I understand part of a series of written assurances which the government rely on to say, that having these assurances it was unnecessary for them to protect themselves in the Japanese treaty, My hon. friend from Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) also referred to the report of the Royal Commission on Chinese and Japanese immigration in 1890, and I trust I may be permitted to call the attention of the House to a part of that report which he omitted to read, and which I think is the most important part of the report and that which bears most materially on the matter under discussion. It is as follows :

Nothing further is needed to settle this most difficult question than some assurance that the action already taken by the government of Japan will not be revoked.

That, of course, is the essential thing. To say that such is the policy of a country is one thing ; it is another thing to say that that policy will not be changed. Hon. gentlemen opposite, from their experience of the past fifteen years, can give some evidence as to whether policies of governments are liable to be changed from time to time, even without any reason. We will not discuss that point at any length ; but it is an obvious absurdity to take from a government such a statement of policy when everybody knows that a government has a right to change its policy at any time on such an important matter as immigration or on any other matter. Therefore, the commission put the case properly by saying that if the Japanese government would agree not to revoke that policy, the interests of Canada would be protected.

Then, coming down to 1905, we find the government negotiating another treaty with Japan, for reasons which have not yet been stated to this parliament. I assume that they must have been actuated by substantial trade reasons, or by some reason, in entering into such a treaty ; so that the country could compare the advantages of this treaty on the one side with the disadvantages of Japanese immigration on the other side. Assuming that the government had some reasons of a counterbalancing character in their minds, we find that on July 14, 1905, at the time the matter was under consideration, Secretary Lyttleton sent the following communication to the Governor General :

Referring to your confidential despatch of June 7, should Japanese government be informed that your government wishes to adhere to treaty of 1904 and supplementary convention 1895 under same terms and conditions as Queensland in 1897, which Japanese government then agreed to extend to any other colonies adhering within prescribed period, namely: (1) that stipulations contained in 1st and 3rd articles of treaty shall not in any way affect laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, artisans, police and public security, which are in force or hereafter may be enacted in Japan or in colony; (2) that treaty shall cease to be binding as between Japan and colony at expiration of twelve months after notice has been given on either side of desire to terminate same. Or are your government prepared to adhere absolutely and without reserve, as would appear to be the case from speech of Minister of Agriculture in Canadian parliament, June 22?

Now, it seems to me that the position of the matter was practically this. The government tell us that at that time and continuously since they have received assurances that Japanese emigration would be restricted. They certainly produce a letter from Mr. Nosse, written in March, 1903, which would indicate the truth of this statement, and which of course we cannot deny and do not wish to deny. But, Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to a memorandum of Mr. Scott, the Secretary of State, of September 25, 1905, in which he states that the government proposes without reserve to adhere to the treaty of 1894, and goes on to say :

Since those dates Japan has enacted a law limiting emigration to foreign countries, thus removing one of the objections that influenced the government of Canada in declining to become a party to the treaty with Japan in 1897.

I merely wish to say that whoever wrote this memorandum lost sight of the fact that in 1897 it did not matter what Japan did in regard to emigration, because this country had the absolute right, in becoming a party to that treaty, to reserve our rights with reference to the regulation of immigration ; so that the reason given is both fallacious and untrue. The memorandum of Mr. Scott goes on to say :

It is doubtful whether Japan would now agree to a treaty on any other basis than the proposals contained in the original treaty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what the people of this country have a right to complain of is this. The government say that they have assurances ample and clear from the Japanese government that emigration of Japanese labourers will be restricted. If they have those assurances, they have been warned that any laws restricting emigration from Japan could be revoked. If the Japanese law restricted emigration, I would like to ask why this government did not ask to have the restrictive clause put into the treaty, that being in exact line with the policy of the Japanese government, as embodied in its statutes, and the verbal declarations of its ministers and officials. Can it be alleged that Japan would not agree in 1905 to what was its declared policy? Had the Japanese one policy for the closet and another for the public ? No ; the conduct of Japan throughout this whole matter has been thoroughly honourable. If anybody is to blame, it is not the Japanese government, but this government, in failing to have inserted in the treaty the clause which the Japanese had agreed to in 1897, and which their assurances from that day to this have been fully in accord with. It was the duty of this government, in the interest of the labouring people and all the people of this country, to maintain the right of Canada to control its own immigration. They failed to ask for that very thing which the assurances they are now boasting of would undoubtedly have given them the right to ask for if those assurances were true in fact. This government, however, were willing to rush wildly into this treaty, not only without having reasons of a commercial character for doing so, but also without asking for those assurances which the government of Japan ever since 1897 had been willing to give. So if we have an unsatisfactory state of affairs in British Columbia to-day, it is due to that failure on the part of this administration. I do not believe my hon. friends from British Columbia were as fully apprised of the facts in relation to this matter in August, 1905, as they are to-day, or I venture to say that all of them would have been after the government to see that they did not overlook the interests of British Columbia in this matter. If the members from that province will examine the records of parliament they will be convinced that both in 1897 and in 1905 this government has been derelict in its duty not only to the people of British Columbia, but to people of the whole of Canada.

At six o'clock. House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 83) respecting the Owen Sound and Meaford Railway Company.—Mr. Telford.

Bill (No. 84) to incorporate the Dominion Transportation and Storage Company.—Mr. German.

SUPPLY—JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

House resumed debate on the motion for Supply and the amendment of Mr. R. L. Borden thereto.

Mr. BRISTOL. In commenting on the action of the government in 1905, when it rushed into this treaty with Japan, I do not lose sight of the fact that in September, 1905, the government, or some member of it, received a letter from Mr. Nossé telling them that while he gave every possible assurance that there would be no trouble over the immigration question, at the same time he thought the Japanese government would refuse to enter into the treaty in the way in which they had agreed to enter into it in 1897. I venture, however, to submit that in a matter of so much importance this government ought not to have taken what might be, in the language of the street, termed the bluff of Mr. Nossé, and have allowed themselves to be drawn into making an absolute treaty with Japan. On the contrary, the duty and obligation rested on this government, if they proposed to enter into this treaty, of negotiating directly with the Japanese government or the accredited representatives of that government empowered to sign a treaty. I venture to submit that if the Postmaster General and Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) had gone to Japan in August, 1905, instead of waiting until 1908, and made directly the same representations to the Japanese government in 1905 which he did in 1908, and which he was then equally entitled to make in view of the assurances that had been given to the present government from time to time by the Japanese Consul General at Montreal, the present administration would have given some evidence that they were keenly alive to Canadian interests, would have made a proper treaty, or possibly would have had to report that, despite all their efforts, they found it impossible to make any treaty with Japan which would include a restriction of Japanese immigration to Canada. No such effort however was made, and after the steed was stolen the stable door was securely locked, and my hon. friend went on his mission to Japan. The people of this country, and particularly the people of British Columbia, have a just grievance against this government for having, without the slightest effort or the slightest personal communication with the Japanese government, and solely on the personal assurances of the Japanese Consul General, entered into this treaty and brought this trouble on the Dominion in the shape of an immigration to which the people of British Columbia in particular are bitterly hostile.

But, Mr. Speaker, if there was one thing that seemed to give the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) and his immediate supporters from British Columbia great comfort, it was the statement made by that hon. gentleman that, notwithstanding any treaty, the Japanese would have come in all the same. I am not quite able to follow my hon. friend's line of reasoning, and I do not like to characterize it as a statement devised on the spur of the moment for his own personal comfort and to console his constituents ; but in another part of his speech he complained of the action of the Japanese government in having granted too many passports, and said that that was the real reason why so many Japanese came into this country. It was the right of the Japanese government to grant passports under the treaty which has caused all the trouble. Well, the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) that the Japanese would have come in despite any treaty, and his argument that their coming in was due to the exercise by the Japanese government of the right to grant passports given them by the treaty are directly contradictory.

But quite apart from that this government has again shown its aftersighted wisdom. On the 8th January of this year they passed an order in council as follows :

Therefore the Governor General in Council is pleased to order and it is hereby ordered that, whenever in the opinion of the Minister of the Interior, the condition of the labour market in Canada is such as to make the application of section 20 of the Immigration Act desirable or whenever in the opinion of the Minister of the Interior, other conditions exist which is a special degree render necessary the application of sections 26 to 30 inclusive of the said Act, immigrants may be prohibited from landing or coming into Canada unless they come from the country of their birth, or citizenship, by a continuous journey and on through tickets purchased before leaving the country of their birth or citizenship.

And I find in the 'Globe' of January 11th, in a special despatch from Ottawa, the following statement :

The new regulation applies equally to all countries, and is designed principally to prevent the influx of Japanese from Honolulu and Hindoos from Hong Kong. It will thus have a large effect in preventing the continuation of oriental immigration in the west which now comes via these two ports.

So that not merely had the government the power in 1897 to make this treaty in a form which would have prevented this immigration, not only had they the opportunity in 1905 to negotiate a similar treaty, which they did not even attempt to do, but they had the power under the Immigration Act to pass this same order in council to prevent immigration from Honolulu or the Sandwich Islands, or any other objectionable point. But they waited until after the damage was done before they passed this order in council. I submit, therefore, that our people have the right to complain of the action of the government in all these respects. If you go to British Columbia you will find it commonly said out there that the people of eastern Canada have no knowledge of the conditions existing in that province regarding this matter and take very little interest in it. Certainly, in view of the course taken by this government in the past few years in view of the neglect shown by this government of the interests of the people of British Columbia, the people of that province have the right to complain that during the past seven years the present administration has not given that attention to their interests which those interests demand.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. What about British Columbia before 1896?

Mr. BRISTOL. The first treaty was made in 1894, and in 1895 the Conservative administration advocated the policy of restricting Japanese immigration, but they had not the power to embody that policy in any treaty, and they were compelled to leave to the Liberal administration which succeeded them the obligation of carrying that into effect. But the Liberal administration did not do it. I am not here to-night to make any attack on the people of Japan.

No British subject can fail to admire the greatness, the intelligence, the industry and ability of that great people. But we have a right, on the floor of this House and before the people of this country, to arraign this government for any mal-administration, mistake or neglect of the interest of the Canadian people, and I submit that it is our duty, as members of parliament, to bring to the attention of the people those points on which the government has failed to maintain Canadian interests in this matter. This is a most important question as affecting the future interests of Canada. If we wish to have a national policy, if we claim the right to protect the manufacturing and commercial interests of our country, we should have the same right to protect our labouring men from the competition of any immigration that will be detrimental to their welfare. In that regard I attack this present administration in respect of the matters under discussion. The making of treaties is a thing of great and serious importance. There seems to be what might be called quite an epidemic of treaty making among hon. gentlemen opposite. As Canadians we desire to make our own treaties, but if the government wish to make treaties with credit and advantage to the people of this country they should carry on their work with due attention to the interests of the Canadian people that a business man would give to his own affairs. The hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) asks us: Why do you not move to denounce the treaty? I submit that it is open to us to denounce these inefficient and amateur treaty-makers, but there is no responsibility upon those on this side to denounce the treaty. That is a question that comes within the scope of the government's duty. Why? Because, as a government, they alone are in possession of all the facts; they alone have control of the machinery by which the matter is to be investigated. Therefore, they must take the responsibility of deciding whether the treaty should be denounced or not. That responsibility does not rest upon the opposition; we have not the information upon which to act. Our responsibility begins and ends when, in a fair and reasonable spirit, we present to the House and the people the facts of this very important matter. And so, in conclusion, I would say that when the government helped themselves so liberally as they did in 1896 to the various policies of the Conservative party, I think it would have been very much in the interest of the people of Canada if they had also helped themselves to the Conservative policy for the prevention of this undesirable immigration.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) has extended his sympathy to the members of British Columbia for what he is pleased to call their anxiety to square themselves. We appreciate the kindness of heart that prompted that sympathy; we appreciate also the sympathy itself. But I hasten to assure the hon. gentleman that we do not deserve it and we do not need it. We have no 'squaring' to do. The position which the members from British Columbia take at this time is exactly the position they took when this treaty was unanimously ratified by parliament about a year ago. If there is any 'squaring' to be done, it must be done by such gentlemen as the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and others who take the directly opposite position to that taken by the minister in January last when the treaty was ratified. So far as the leader of the opposition is concerned, he fully agreed to the ratification of this treaty with the correspondence in his possession—correspondence asked for by himself, laid on the table at his request, and available to him for six months before the treaty was ratified. That correspondence contained no assurance; it said nothing about the explanations which are now made by this government in reference to these assurances. The hon. gentleman agreed to the ratification of the treaty without any assurance regarding the restriction of Japanese immigration, and without the knowledge of the explanations since made by the government. If he could accept the treaty with out these assurances, how can he quarrel with the ratification of the treaty and with his own action in that connection, now that he has possession of these assurances? So, as I say, if there is any 'squaring' to be done it must be done by hon. gentlemen opposite who unanimously voted for the ratification of this treaty.

The hon. member for Centre Toronto speaks of a Japanese immigration into this country because of the ratification of this treaty. Surely he will not argue that if the treaty had not been ratified this immigration would not have taken place? Surely the Japanese were at least as free to come into this country before the treaty was ratified as they were afterwards. How, then, can the hon. gentleman say that because of the ratification of this treaty the immigration took place? I dealt with the merits of this question at some length in this House, and I do not wish to repeat the arguments I then made. But I wish to draw the attention of the House to some matters connected with the correspondence brought down and the explanations made by the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux).

This correspondence shows that this treaty was first passed in 1894—passed not by this parliament, or this government, but by the imperial government. The language of the treaty is not our language but the language of the imperial government. A good deal has been said in reference to the clause giving the subjects of Japan full right of residence in this country. But a similar clause is included in every commercial treaty made by Great Britain, and every commercial treaty made by the United States. Hon. gentlemen seem to argue that this Dominion of Canada could get a friendly treaty with Japan that would not include the ordinary clause included in every commercial treaty entered into between civilized nations. I shall not weary the House with citations, but I may say that you will find the same clause in the treaties in force between the United States and Austria-Hungary, between the United States and Hayti, between the United States and Honduras—between the United States and every country with which the United States has a commercial treaty. Is it arguable that any country will enter into a friendly commercial arrangement only to be met at the door with a hostile clause declaring in effect: Your nation can trade with us, but your people are not to have the ordinary rights that a citizen should have in a country with which you are going to carry on friendly trade. The proposition is not arguable. The treaty came to us as it was drafted and approved by the imperial government. The leader of the opposition refers to an order in council passed by the late Conservative government, pointing out the objections to the ratification by this country of the treaty. The objection was the natural one that we did not want to bind ourselves in connection with the immigration of the Japanese.

An order in council to that effect was passed, and I draw attention to the fact that it is apparent that no correspondence leading up to this order in council was left by the late government for its predecessors, because it was not filed and brought down. I am not quarreling with that at all because naturally it would be of a confidential character, and therefore was not left in the office. Then what happened? Queensland said, we will not agree to the ratification of this treaty unless there is a stipulation that this clause should not interfere with our right to regulate emigration. Japan said, We will agree to that. But they also said, If you are going to get a clause of that kind inserted, instead of this treaty continuing for twenty years, it should continue for only six months. It was distinctly stated that the reason Japan reduced the duration of the treaty from twelve years to six months was that if Queensland ever attempted to pass any emigration laws hostile to the Japanese, a notice would be immediately given for the abrogation of the treaty. But the authorities in Great Britain at that time were evidently extremely anxious to induce the various self-governing colonies to ratify the treaty, and arrangements were made under which Japan agreed to give the same exception to all self-governing colonies that signified their willingness to ratify this treaty, in other words, a protocol was added to the treaty.

Now the leader of the opposition says that that was the time to secure the ratification of this treaty. Well, let us see whether it was or not. As pointed out by the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce in a minute to council there were certain objections to the treaty because of the application of the favoured nation clause. At that time, as I understand it, this government had adopted a policy of a preferential tariff with Great Britain. Under the favoured nation clause, Germany, Belgium, Japan, and any other country having treaty arrangements with Great Britain, were entitled to the same preference that we were giving to Great Britain. As it was the policy of this government not to extend that preference to other than British countries, our government did not ratify this treaty, and asked for the denunciation of the Belgium and German treaties. That is the reason set forth in this minute to council. The other objection to the treaty was covered by the protocol which Japan voluntarily agreed to, so there was no necessity at that time of considering that objection to the treaty. Then what happened? On account of this barrier to the ratification of the treaty, the treaty was not ratified until the time expired in which it could be ratified. Then we come to the year 1903, I think, when there was considerable correspondence between this government and Mr. Nossé, the Japanese consul, in reference to legislation which this government contemplated enacting to restrict oriental immigration, in consequence of the report which this government had received from the commission appointed to investigate oriental immigration into the province of British Columbia. This commission reported in favour of a $500 poll tax on Chinese, and that policy was adopted. The commission also reported that in view of the fact that Japan had voluntarily agreed to restrict emigration to Canada, no legislation should be enacted against the Japanese, and the commission's report was adopted in that regard also. Now it is important to keep this in mind, because it shows that the position of the government then was identical with the position of the government when this treaty was ratified by the House, and the position of the government then was not criticised or objected to by hon. gentlemen opposite on the ground that it did not legislate against the Japanese.

In this connection I want to draw attention to a remark of the leader of the opposition and of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), in reference to a letter written by Mr. Nossé, in which he undertakes to bind the Japanese government. As this letter was written in connection with a protest from the Japanese government with regard to proposed legislation against its subjects, how can it be construed as an undertaking on the part of Mr. Nossé to agree to any legislation by this government to restrict such immigration when the very letter itself was in reference to the objectionable legislation ?

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me it makes no difference whatever in discussing that question. Did he not agree to enter into an agreement ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If the hon. member will carefully read Mr. Nossé's letter he will find that, though couched in very polite and diplomatic language, he is not writing with the same ease and accuracy that he would use in writing his mother tongue. I think it was scarcely fair on the part of the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for East Grey to put a meaning into the word 'blind' which all the surrounding circumstances show was never intended. Mr. Nossé has at all times assured this government that the government of Japan was willing voluntarily to restrict emigration to this country, and therefore he objected to any hostile legislation on the part of the British Columbia government or of this government. If that is the tenor of all his letters, how can you read the meaning into Mr. Nossé's letter that he is willing to bind his government ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have read it carefully, but I do not see how you can come to any other conclusion. It says :

I have received a cable instruction to the effect that I have to give your government the renewed assurance that the Japanese government are not desirous of forcing their people into British Columbia against the wish of the province, and that they are willing to enter into an agreement with your government by which they may bind themselves.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am sorry I cannot convince the hon. member for East Grey, I did not expect I would be able to do so. But at the risk of being tedious, I will repeat my argument. Mr. Nossé is writing to this government—I have not the correspondence before me, but I remember it well—in connection with the proposed legislation against the Japanese. He is also writing to this government protesting against the legislation proposed in the province of British Columbia. That is his reason for writing to the government, and he points out that Japan has voluntarily restricted immigration into this country, that it will continue this policy of voluntary restriction, and that therefore there is no necessity for any legislation of that kind being passed. If that is the reason for Mr. Nossé's letter how could any reasonable man read into that letter such a meaning as the hon. member for East Grey wants to convey unless he is anxious to take advantage of the peculiar wording of that letter written by a gentleman not using his own mother tongue ? Let us go a little further. Mr. Speaker, when this government took steps to secure the ratification of the Japanese treaty they did not do so without being urged by hon. gentlemen opposite to secure the ratification of this treaty. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. S. Barker) spoke in this House about the disadvantages under which people doing business in this country were placed by reason of the fact that this treaty had not been entered into. In May 29, 1905, he refers to difficulties that certain constituents of his had in getting goods into Japan. There was considerable discussion in the House at the time and the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) confirmed a statement which I recently made in reference to the causes which induced the government not to ratify the treaty. A question was asked by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) which is as follows :

Does my hon. friend recollect what was the chief factor in causing this action of the government, what possibilities they would have let themselves in for had they accepted the treaty and at about what time this occurred?

The hon. Minister of Finance replied :

Some years ago. It relates to the operation of the favoured nation clause, and also my recollection is that it affected our freedom of action on the labour question.

When the govenment decided to ratify this treaty as they were bound to do, they intimated to the imperial government that they were anxious to secure its ratification. The first thing the imperial government did, through its Secretary of State for the Colonies, was to ask this government if they wanted the treaty absolutely and without reserve or with the clause which had been granted to Queensland. Hon. gentlemen make a point of this ; as far as the correspondence originally brought down is concerned, it does show that such a suggestion had been made by Mr. Lyttelton, but the correspondence now shows that in the interval between the receipt of this telegram from Mr. Lyttelton and his reply, Mr. Nossé, the Japanese Consul, sent a letter to the government in which he said that he understands that the government is going to ask for this reservation, that he hopes they will not ask for it because Japan will not now grant it and that he is still willing to undertake on the part of his government to carry out the restrictions which have been satisfactorily working up to that time, and that notwithstanding the treaty these restrictions will be continued. In view of this letter to Mr. Nosse, in view of the statement that Japan could not agree to the reservation which had been offered to Queensland and in view of the fact that during all the intercourse with Japan, and when other legislation was introduced a similar undertaking had been given and carried out, I believe that the government were justified in accepting this assurance if they wanted the treaty ratified and if they wanted the benefits to be derived from the ratification of the treaty. I think I remember the dates; Mr. Nossé's letter was written on July 19 and the day following, or two days following, a telegram was sent to Mr. Lyttelton saying that they wanted the treaty absolutely without reserve having received assurances from Mr. Nossé. The treaty was ratified. The correspondence was brought down and laid on the table of this House in connection with the ratification of the treaty. As I said at the outset, it was brought down at the request of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Bordon). When the ratification of that treaty came up for discussion in this House that correspondence was passed over to the hon. leader of the opposition. Had he looked at the correspondence as the leader of the opposition should he would have found none of those assurances in that corespondence, but still he accepted it without any assurances at that time. He accepted that treaty without any assurances and without any explanation from the government excepting the explanation of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who, in response to a question from my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy), said that the restrictions which had hitherto been in force would be carried out notwithstanding the treaty. The hon. leader of the opposition was the first to urge upon this government—he is upon 'Hansard' and I have already quoted his speech at that time—the necessity of having this treaty ratified. When the treaty came up for ratification his only contribution to the debate, although he had the correspondence without the assurance in his possession, was to ask: What is the value of a yen? He has these assurances now and he has the explanation of the government now. If he could support the ratification of the treaty in 1907 without assurances and without explanations how can he oppose it in 1908 when he has these assurances and these explanations? Surely, if there is any squaring to be done it must be done by hon. gentlemen opposite. I am bound to say that my own position in the matter is the position of every member of this House. We knew the gravity of the immigration question as far as these oriental nations were concerned. We appreciated it. We knew something about the negotiations between Japan and this government in connection with the $500 Chinese tax. We knew that there was an understanding between this government and Japan, we accepted the word of the leader of the government that these assurances would be continued, and we made no protest against the ratification of the treaty. The leader of the opposition did exactly the same thing. I do not want to be condemned by the leader of the opposition for having done exactly what he did, although it places me in rather distinguished company, but I am bound to say that when he did accept the treaty in 1907, when he accepts the assurance of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) that the arrangements entered into with Japan will work out satisfactorily, and which we are bound to believe will work out satisfactorily in so far as the province of British Columbia is concerned, it would be more in keeping with his position, having once accepted the ratification of the treaty without assurances, to wait and see the results of the negotiations entered into by the hon. Postmaster General before introducing a motion of censure into this House, censuring not only the government but censuring also himself who was primarily responsible, because it was he who asked for the correspondence, in not giving to this House the nature of that correspondence and in having accepted that treaty without any assurance in reference to immigration. It seems to me, as I pointed out before, that in so far as the leader of the opposition is concerned, his criticism of the government would be far more effective if it did not come a year or two soon or a year or two late. He would be perfectly justified a year ago when the treaty was up for ratification to point out to this government—were there not these assurances—that no arrangement had been made to protect this country against the influx of Japanese labour, because the correspondence as brought down did not contain the Nossé letter. He would have been perfectly justified then in pointing this out to the House, and I am sure that if he had done so, that treaty would not have been ratified without the assurances which the government gave at a later date. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden), is also unfortunate that in his motion of censure he does not seem to have the support of these great newspapers which are pleased to support him in his ordinary political programme. The Montreal 'Star' of January 26, speaking of the settlement arranged for by the Postmaster General. has this to say:

> The statement of Hon. Mr. Lemieux, following the report of Mr. Mackenzie King, seems to put the Japanese question into about as satisfactory a position as the country could hope. The Japanese government did not break faith.
> We could hope for nothing more exclusive short of the right to put up the bars entirely against the Japanese, and this could never be attempted so long as Canada proposes to keep on friendly and trading terms with the most progressive people in the orient.

We must surely continue then to rely upon the word of our ally until that word be proven unreliable.

That is the position the Montreal 'Star' takes. The Toronto 'News,' which I believe is supposed to be independent but which is rather favourable to the leader of the opposition, has this to say:

Mr. Lemieux shows that from 1900 to October 1, 1907, the Japanese government's restriction of emigration had proved satisfactory even to British Columbia. Last year's influx was largely from Hawaii, a portion of the United States. Now that the Dominion government had shut this avenue of entrance, the situation would revert to that which existed prior to last autumn. For seven years the Tokio government had carried out its undertaking in good faith, and even the small influx direct from Japan was due to special representations made to the Japanese government by Canadian interests. Tokio agrees to suppress the emigration companies, and thus end the transfer of contract labourers to Canada.

The Toronto 'World,' a newspaper loyal to the leader of the opposition commends in very strong terms the satisfactory arrangement made by the Postmaster General. The Montreal 'Gazette,' a newspaper which is always orthodox Tory in its political views commends in the strongest possible terms the settlement made by the Postmaster General and asks that it be given a fair trial and that turmoil in connection with the question be discontinued. So that the leader of the opposition not only condemns himself for having agreed to the ratification of this treaty, but by the resolution he has introduced to-day he brings upon his head the condemnation of all the influential Conservative newspapers which have expressed their gratification and their pleasure at the satisfactory arrangement made by the Minister of Labour.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are two views to every question. We, in the province of British Columbia take one extreme view of this oriental question. The people of British Columbia are opposed to oriental immigration. The members from British Columbia have endeavoured in the House to impress these views upon the House; in their interviews with the government they have endeavoured to impress these views upon the government. On the other hand, the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Pacific Railway and other organizations which are known to be not unfriendly to hon. gentlemen opposite, take the other extreme view. They believe that it is in the best interests of this country that it should be flooded with cheap labour. Between these two extreme views, the government have taken, I believe, a course that will meet with the approval of the majority of the people of Canada, and will also meet the wishes of the people of British Columbia. In this connection I might be permitted to say that the right hon. leader of the government has, in his wise administration of public affairs always followed a course similar to that which he has adopted in connection with this question. His policy on other cognate questions has always resulted in the best interests of Canada. When we had to face questions that disturbed and aroused the passions and prejudices of the people; when we had to face questions of race and creed in this country, the right hon. gentleman always refused to accede to the extreme views of either one class or the other, and has wisely sought a middle course to bring about a settlement which would restore peace and harmony in the Dominion. In connection with this Japanese question, by diplomacy, by negotiations, by moderation, I believe he has succeeded in satisfactorily solving the difficulty, as he has succeeded in satisfactorily solving all other problems of a similar nature which have presented themselves since he has been head of the government. I believe, Sir, that a trial of the arrangement entered into will convince not only the people of British Columbia but the people of Canada, that it is the best and the happiest solution of this difficulty.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford). Mr. Speaker, the historical record of the negotiations between this country and Japan has been very fully placed before us this afternoon by the leader of the opposition. I believe, as others believe, that this question we are now discussing is not simply a provincial question; is not simply a matter for British Columbia, but is an economic question and a national question. It is a question which is certainly exercising the minds of the citizens of Canada generally. The records at our disposal (which I have only seen recently) contain some astounding information with regard to the negotiations up to the present time. The question is not a new one; it has been before this country since 1894. The negotiations that were entered into by the late Conservative government and the position, they took in the matter have been very fully dealt with to-day, so that it will be necessary to make but a brief allusion to them. In the order in council of the 3rd of August, 1895, we have a very full statement of the attitude of the Conservative government on the question of immigration from Japan and from the orient generally. That order in council is of great interest in the light of what has taken place since. When the present government came to power it had the advantage of all the information that had been gathered up to that time; it had the advantage of all the information that had been gathered after that date, and the government may be presumed to have known all the facts when they ratified the treaty. The treaty had been held up for several years after 1895. The Conservative ministry of 1895 deemed it of sufficient importance to not ratify the treaty because it contained what they considered to be a very dangerous clause with regard to these very immigrants from Japan. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Duncan Ross) has ignored the stand which the Conservative ministry took at that date, but if he will read the order in council of August 3, 1895, he will find that the Minister of the Interior took a very serious view of this immigration from Japan.

The order in council says.

> The Minister of the Interior to whom the despatch and its inclosures were referred, states that the only portion of the reference which is of vital consequence to Canada, is that which relates to the former mentioned subject.
> The minister observes from the memorandum of Mr. Wilkinson of January 10, that in the treaty lately concluded between Japan and the United States, there is the following proviso :—It is, however, understood that the stipulation contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, police and public security which are in force, or may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries. The corresponding clause in the treaty between Great Britain and Japan merely reads:—Subject always to the laws, ordinances and regulations of each country.
>
> The minister agrees with Mr. Wilkinson's observations that this proviso 'could scarcely be appealed to as justifying either exclusion or restriction, without laying ourselves open to the charge of bad faith.'
>
> The minister is further of the opinion that Mr. Wilkinson is justified in the conclusion that it might well happen that the governments of the colonies would find themselves forced to take measures to restrict, suspend or even prohibit the immigration.
>
> The minister submits that, in the interests of the Dominion of Canada, there should be a proviso in the treaty of Great Britain with Japan similar to that contained in the treaty between that country and the United States, and he recommends that, when the adhesion of Canada is being given to the treaty, an express stipulation of this kind should be made, and that some further definition should be required of the term 'labourer' so that it will definitely include artisans.
>
> The committee advise that Your Excellency be moved to forward a certified copy of this minute to the Right Honourable Her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the colonies.
>
> All which is respectfully submitted for Your Excellency's approval.
>
> JOHN J. McGEE,
> Clerk of the Privy council.

The government must have foreseen at that time that this very matter of immigration was one that was going to give trouble between Canada and Japan if it were not carefully guarded in the stipulation made at that time. In the light of that, and in the light of subsequent despatches, this government, in adopting the treaty last year, practically ignored all the representations which had been made and which they certainly had in their possession long before the hon. leader of the opposition saw the papers. If these papers were available, as the hon. member says, it was only for a very brief space of time, and the hon. leader of the opposition probably had not time to study them as they should have been studied before the treaty was ratified. It is now perhaps too late to cry over spilt milk, and we must make up our minds that for the present at least we are against a bad proposition that has been put through this House in an unguarded moment. I am not going to shirk any responsibility that may rest upon me in regard to the passage of that treaty. It is true I was in the House at the time and heard the remarks made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy); and I must say that if we all had done our duty on that occasion as well as that hon. member, I believe that treaty, so far as the immigration clause was concerned, would not have been ratified. The hon. member for New Westminister stood practically alone in the House in pointing out the danger that we were incurring in passing such a treaty with a wide open door to immigration. It was explained to the House by ministers at that time—and we took their word, believing that they knew whereof they spoke—that the immigration from Japan was going to be of a very limited character, that it would be confined, I think, to five from each province, which in itself would not have been a danger. But by ratifying that treaty we practically tied our hands, and our hands are tied so long as that treaty is in force. Now, I am willing to admit that the Minister of Labour, in his late mission to Japan, has probably made the best of a poor case. I could not see what he was likely to accomplish by going, seeing that our hands were tied by a treaty which had only been ratified by this House in 1907. But if we had not the full light at that time, we have now the full light, not only in the documents laid on the table, but in the facts as they exist to-day. We had not the facts at that time; but to-day we find that instead of a few hundreds or scores of Japanese coming in yearly, we have been treated in the last few months to a flood of Japanese and many thousands of other Orientals. Many of these people were perhaps wanted in British Columbia by certain interests; but in the general interest of Canada I do not think they were wanted, and are not to-day. I am not here to depreciate the Japanese nation. As a nation they have commended themselves to the world in a wonderful way. They have adopted civilization more rapidly perhaps than most nations of the world. Their power is felt throughout the world to-day. They have fought great battles and won great victories, and they are capable of achieving great things in industrial pursuits as well as in war. I do not deny their shrewdness, intelligence and high moral worth as a people. But we say that it is not desirable to admit a very large number of them into the Dominion of Canada in any one year, that we cannot absorb them satisfactorily, that they are not a people who will assimilate with the people already in the country who have built up the civilization we enjoy. The tendency of an influx of Orientals is to lower the standard of living. This is not saying anything in disrespect of those people. They are perhaps, according to their lights, as good people as our own, and have perhaps to a greater degree lived up to their opportunities. But they are a dangerous element in this respect, that they carry a keen competition into all the walks of life. They do not perhaps make money any faster than the ordinary white man, but they hold on better to what they make and send it to the country from which they have come. That is not what we want in this country. We want citizens who will spend their earnings in the country and become a part of it. We do not find the Orientals to be of this class or such as can be easily absorbed. I believe the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) delivered a notable speech in Victoria, British Columbia, last summer, which I read with a great deal of pleasure, and I would like to hear him repeat that speech in this House. If he was correctly reported, he took the same view of this question that I am taking, that the Japanese were not a desirable class of immigrants, that they could not be easily absorbed, and that therefore it was not in the interests of Canada to encourage an influx from Japan. We are told by hon. gentlemen opposite that there are other considerations which make this treaty valuable to Canada. They say that we will derive great profit from the increase of our trade with Japan. Well, I have been looking up the Department of Trade and Commerce report in order to see what has been the trade between Canada and Japan in the past few years. I find that our exports to and our imports from Japan were as follows :—

	Exports.	Imports.
1903..	$325,181	$1,487,451
1904..	342,116	1,998,801
1905..	510,925	1,914,787
1906..	494,102	1,662,929

And in the nine months of 1907, we exported $538,548 and imported $1,658,795.

In other words, our total exports, and that is really all that counts with me—although I know hon. gentlemen opposite count a dollar bought just as much as a dollar sold —our imports from Japan were about $3. to $1 we exported. In all we exported about a half a million dollars worth of goods in a year. That is not an immense business, and the years I have given will show that that trade has not developed in leaps and bounds. It is a very small trade, certainly not a trade, in order to obtain which, we should open doors to a flood of Japanese immigration. Is there any likelihood of our becoming, within the near future, large exporters to Japan ? I think not. They do not use much of our goods. We are told that our flour is of too high a quality and the price too high to suit Japan. In fact the trade between Canada and Japan is a very small item ; and to point to the possibilities of such a trade as an inducement for our admitting hap-hazard a large immigration from Japan is placing the matter on a commercial basis and a very poor commercial basis indeed. But this question is one of national importance. It is not confined to British Columbia. We in the east, who have been watching the trend of events, are as thoroughly alive to the danger as our compatriots in the west. Although we are not in as close contact with that influx of orientals at present as to realize what it means, still we are in sympathy with the people of British Columbia in their desire to make that province a white man's country. The first opportunity I had, after the trouble in Vancouver, of making a public address, I expressed my conviction that this country must, in the near future, restrict the immigration from Japan to a very small number or actually prohibit it, even should we have to abrogate the treaty. The abrogation of the treaty may be considered too drastic. Some of my own friends on this side will think perhaps that it is an extreme course to take, but I can see the peril to which this country will be exposed if we allow these people to come in by the tens of thousands. In saying this, I mean no disrespect to the Japanese nation. I have not the slightest thought of doing them the slightest harm, but our forefathers have been at the expense and trouble during centuries of building up a civilization of which we have every reason to be proud, and it would be a retrograde step if, in a moment of weakness, through a desire to increase our trade, we were to ignore all the dangers of the introduction of a large population, alien in sympathies and traditions, and whose presence in our midst would be a menace to the institutions we all desire to uphold.

This is not simply a matter which affects the labouring man. Of course it affects the labouring man first and for that reason ought to have the sympathy of every member of this House. But it is a matter affecting likewise the citizenship of this Dominion. It is a question for every one to consider whether or not, in the interests of the people, we should have an influx of this class of immigration to the destruction of the history, the constitution and the traditions we have all been taught to venerate. The question is indeed a national one. When I thus speak regarding this Japanese treaty, do not think that I would for a moment say anything detrimental to our present relations with Japan. We have entered into a treaty either with our eyes shut or open. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that their eyes were open, but I must confess that mine were closed to the possibilities of the question when that treaty went through the House. I am not at all shirking my share of responsibility. But having seen the evils it has brought upon the country, we should take the earliest opportunity of retracing our steps. I am not advocating that we should do anything dishonourable. As a business man I have always endeavoured to carry out every obligation, whether to my advantage or disadvantage, once it was fairly and honourably entered into. If this government has fairly and honestly entered into a treaty with Japan, there is only one thing to do and that is to carry out that treaty until it can be honourably ended. But I understand it can be honourably ended. We have not bound ourselves and posterity by this treaty, but are at liberty to abrogate it on giving six months notice. I am not saying that we should give notice immediately, but ultimately, if we cannot improve the conditions, we would be justified in taking that step. As to the danger of jeopardizing our commercial relations with Japan, these relations are not so very important that these need trouble us very much. The Japanese in fact have more to lose by the abrogation of the treaty than we. And although I am always desirous of extending our trade relations with foreign countries, I do not think that, for the sake of a few more dollars of trade, we should sacrifice what is in the best interests of the people of Canada as a whole.

It cannot be said that the government acted without full knowledge. The secretary of the home government, in a despatch, drew the attention of the government to this very question of immigration, and asked whether they were ready to accept that treaty and thus throw wide open the door to Japanese immigration. But this government apparently made no reply, and some weeks later they sent a despatch saying that they wished to accept the treaty just as it stood without any restriction regarding immigration. When I heard the explanation which was given last session, I understood that by this treaty we were simply extending to Japan the same courtesy that we expected to receive from Japan. That, I think, was the explanation given in this House. It was simply that a Canadian visiting Japan would receive in that country protection to his person and property and be free to come and go and to remain in Japan as long as he chose, and that he would be amenable to the laws of that country only in case he did something to contravene those laws.

That is as far as I thought it went. I thought we extended the same rights and privileges to the people from Japan to come and visit here their property and themselves, protected all the time they were in Canada. But I did not understand that we were taking in by the thousands, and it may be by the tens of thousands, immigrants from Japan to compete with us not only in labour, but in commercial enterprises, and, if the despatches we read in the press are correct, in agriculture as well. I have not heard this matter mentioned to-day, but there was a despatch in the newspapers a few days ago to the effect that a tract of land in the neighbourhood of Calgary was being obtained by Japanese, and that the owners had undertaken to place upon the property, in the near future, 250 families to follow agricultural pursuits. I think this land is in the irrigation belt. So, we shall find this not only a labour problem, but a problem affecting the settlement of our provinces in the Northwest. The Japanese are already in the foothills country, and they propose to come in in greater numbers. And we are told that we have taken this upon ourselves in exchange for the small trade that may be developed with Japan. I, for one, protest that, so far as I am concerned, I take no responsibility in that respect. The trade consideration did not weigh with me when the treaty was before the House. I think we should not be justified in exchange for the paltry trade with Japan, amounting to about $2,000,000 in the aggregate and about $500,000 of exports, in opening our gates and allowing them to send in any number of immigrants that they wish. If this is to be the situation, I think we are justified in viewing the question as one of great national importance. The government, having all these facts before them—and, I suppose, we must share the responsibility to a certain extent, we took part in it—and having discovered where we are, should arrange to limit the immigration that is coming in, whether it comes by way of Hawaii, or by passport direct from Japan, or otherwise. This matter was not explained to the House, and so cannot be fairly said to have been accepted by the House. I think we should take an early opportunity to relieve ourselves of a responsibility we have assumed when our eyes were not fully opened to the situation. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) has brought back a report. It is considered satisfactory by some, and may be considered the best that could be done under the circumstances. But that does not appear to be fully satisfactory. The minister representing Japan in this country, Mr. Nossé, whose correspondence is before the House and who, I understood, spoke for his government, gave written and verbal assurances that a large amount of immigration was not coming in. If this is not being fulfilled we may say that false pretenses were used to a small extent by those who entered into negotiations on the part of Japan. If that were the case, I think we should take a firm stand on the question and point out to the Japanese government exactly what we understood at the time; that we did not intend—and it was not so explained to us, or, if it was I for one certainly did not so understand it—that this country was to be made a dumping ground for a large number of Japanese to come in and engage in every walk of life. But if this may come upon us, it seems to me the question is to be viewed in an entirely new light. We have a mass of information leading up to the present situation, but showing no justification for the negotiations of the treaty as it was passed last year. The British government, perhaps, could safely enter into such a treaty, because there is no danger of Great Britain being flooded as we are likely to be. They especially drew our attention to this wide-open door, and asked our government if they were prepared to take the responsibility. Apparently, our government replied that they were prepared to take the responsibility, and to receive the immigration that would come in under the treaty. In the light of these facts, it has become a question for the country to deal with as a whole. It is a national problem, a problem that affects our citizenship to the very foundation. And anything we can do to relieve the situation, to mitigate the trouble that has come upon us and lessen the responsibility that we have taken upon our shoulders when we did not fully understand the situation, we should do to make clear to Japan the position we take, that we are not prepared to take unlimited immigration from that country, whether as labourers, commercial men, agriculturists or otherwise, and that when we extended the courtesies of that treaty to them we understood that it was to be exercised by them to a very limited extent.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo). Already, the members from British Columbia have placed their policy on this important question fully before the House. We are called upon again to say something upon the question as it arises out of the settlement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) as a representative of this government in Japan in contradistinction to the amendment proposed by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) on going into Supply. I desire to take only a few minutes to give my own personal reasons why, after all the anxiety that we have expressed on this question, I am prepared to support the proposals of the government and vote against the amendment offered by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. TAYLOR. We expected that.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) says he expected that, I am dealing with my own reasons on this question, and I think I have good ones. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) through the whole of his speech, assumed that in the treaty with Japan, the trade advantages were secured at the expense of having tens of thousands of orientals coming into British Columbia; that it was not well to maintain such a treaty, especially as it would involve this very serious problem of Japanese immigration. From all that we know about the settlement made with the representative of this government in Japan, we have every reason to believe that the benefit of any trade in connection with Japan, important or unimportant, can be obtained and yet a restriction placed upon the immigration of Japanese labourers into British Columbia. We propose to do two things ; In the speech I made to the House on this question on December 16, last, I said all I could in favour of trade relations with Japan. I repeat what I said on that occasion—that the commercial future of the Pacific coast depends very largely upon the extension of Canadian commercial markets in the orient.

No man who understands the geographical situation, or has thought at all of the actual conditions and the possibilities of the development of commerce between these two countries, will attempt to minimize the importance of that trade. Sir, we want to do two things. We want to maintain the trade and we want to keep out the labourer. Hon. gentlemen may not be able to see how those two things can be harmonized. For myself I would support any proposition to extend our trade with Japan, and at the same time I would use all my influence to prevent the importation of Japanese labour into Canada. The exportation of Canadian productions into Japan tends to make it more reasonable why Japanese labour should be retained in Japan in order to develop that country, and the importation of Japanese production into Canada, which do not come into competition with our own productions, raises the purchasing value of the wages of the labouring men of this country. We want the chief productions of Japan, articles that are desirable for our consumption, when those productions do not come into competition with our own productions. The ever increasing export trade of this country to Japan strengthens the reason why Japanese labour should remain at home. Therefore, I say the government had a double object in view, to maintain trade relations and to restrict Japanese immigration.

Hon. gentlemen opposite maintain that the representative of Japan agreed that his government would endeavour to keep out Japanese labour. I am free to state to this House that on the strength of that assurance, that Japanese labour would be restricted, as it had been previous to the ratification of the treaty, I voted for the treaty. We have now the further assurance of the responsible minister who has personally visited Japan and entered into direct negotiations with the responsible ministers of the Japanese government, and this is a further reason why I am prepared again to vote in favour of the arrangement that has been made by the Minister of Labour, which will prove a final, satisfactory settlement of the question.

Now, the amendment of the leader of the opposition sets out with the statement that in 1895 the Conservative government provided for the restriction of Japanese immigration into Canada, and that in 1897 the Japanese government voluntarily agreed to insert a provision in the treaty that they would regulate immigration to Canada. Now it must strike the House that there must have been some reason why the government refused such negotiations. If the Liberal government could have had the treaty in 1897 with all the provisions for regulation of immigration, why didn't they take it? Because Japanese trade in 1894, and the three or four years following, was not an important factor for this country, and was not considered by the government of so much importance as the exclusion of Japanese labour. I heard the correspondence that was read by the leader of the opposition to-day. What was the underlying principle of the refusal of this government to negotiate on this question? Because there were other international trade connections of so much more importance to us that it was not necessary to consider this question in relation to Japan. But the intervening years have entirely changed the status of that country and have increased the importance of our trade relations with that country. What was a good reason in 1894 is not a good reason in 1907; what might be considered reasonable in 1894 is not for many reasons nearly so important in 1907. Then the amendment goes on to say :

That in the opinion of this House we should not be deprived of the power to control immigration.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I will show that that is exactly what the government have done. The leader of the opposition referred to my explanation of the proviso in the American treaty. Let me say that the American government made reciprocal arrangements with Japan concerning immigration. How did they operate? In 1894, the same year the British treaty was agreed to, the American treaty was made. When was the proviso placed in the treaty? Twelve years afterwards. Why did they not take advantage of this proviso during the whole of those twelve years? How is it, if that proviso was of such importance as between the United States and Japan and Canada and Japan, that for twelve long years no application was made of it until exactly twelve months ago? There is only one answer, namely, that more Japanese came into the United States during the twelve years under the treaty which contained a proviso empowering them to make their own regulations, than in any twelve years previous, which proves that the United States did not enforce their law but negotiated voluntary settlements. I want to say this, with due regard to the safety and security of the provisions that they sought to enact in their treaties, there are ten times as many orientals coming into the United States, notwithstanding the restrictions against Chinese and the proviso in the treaty against Japanese, ten times more than are coming into Canada. The provision was good, but evidently could not be enforced or at any rate was not. They passed the regulation a year ago. Did they enforce the regulation? Did they apply it against Japanese immigration? No. The very same kind of negotiations that took place in Canada took place in the United States. Why did they not apply the regulation? The treaty provided for it. They passed a law in 1907, and they sent their representative to Japan, just as Canada has sent her representative to Japan, and to-day the United States are negotiating for a voluntary understanding on this question, just as Canada has done. For these reasons I am not prepared to vote for the amendment. I will give a few reasons why I will vote for the government.

An hon. MEMBER. We all know that.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Well, we are speaking to the country through this House. If hon. gentlemen dont want to be enlightened, the people do, and that is exactly what we are here for. I am going to support the position that the government has taken on this question because of the special trade arrangement with Japan, and because I believe their agreement with Japan will keep out these people for all time. I have already said that it is of great importance. I think that can be maintained, and yet I think the arrangement can be made effective in regulating immigration into this country. Now, hon. gentlemen opposite did a great deal to press the importance of this treaty upon this House some time ago. I could read from 'Hansard,' if I wanted to take up the time of the House, how just two years ago, the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), representing the demands of an industry located in that city, insisted upon the establishment of trade relations with Japan in the interest of his constituents. I could read from this same 'Hansard' how the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) and other leaders of the opposition party who are opposing this arrangement to-day, pressed on this side of the House the tremendous importance of these trade relations with Japan being immediately entered into. I could read from the speeches of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who, in 1905, who, again in 1906, and who again on frequent other occasions pressed upon this government the importance of making these negotiations complete in the interest of the commercial relations of this country with the empire of Japan. I noticed with some amusement some of my hon. friend's statements in Toronto a few months ago in criticising the treaty after the excitement had been created in Vancouver, but he did not say that in 1905 he had pressed upon this House and before the government the practical necessity of negotiating to bring about a settlement of the question. He did not say that in 1906, a little over a year ago, he had also given expression to his views on this subject. In 1906 he said :

A person who was not acquainted with the history of this matter might very well have supposed from the speech and from the remarks that were made that this was a brand new treaty made with the young and rising empire of Japan and for which the government might very well take to themselves special credit. Well, when one looks into it, it all simmers down to this, that it is but the late confession of a blunder——

What blunder?—that they had not negotiated the treaty earlier. The blunder, according to the hon. member for North Toronto, consisted not in entering into negotiations for a treaty in 1907, but that they had not entered with negotiations for a treaty some years before that.

The fact of the matter is that in 1894 a treaty was made with Japan by the British government. This government at that time, I suppose, carefully looked into the matter and they came to the conclusion that they would not be included in the treaty and consequently would not share in its benefits. And from 1896-7 up to the present time Great Britain and Germany and France and the United States of America have all had the benefit that flowed from the treaty or similar treaties, whilst Canada has been absolutely debarred from any of those benefits, Some two years ago, I think it was, we on this side of the House drew attention to the fact that there was still a possibility that Canada might be included within the provisions of that treaty. Then, and then only, this government woke up, then and then only it stirred around, and after the lapse of two years they come to us with what is called a treaty with Japan. Well, Sir, if there is one reason now why this treaty should be hailed and acclaimed with delight and with applause as I believe it should be.

As I believe it should be ! What was the treaty ! It was the British treaty. That British treaty did not contain a provision retaining power in Canada to regulate immigration. Not at all, but the hon. member for North Toronto accepted the British treaty when he said that. He accepted it just as fully as he could have accepted it and he complimented the government upon having secured its ratification :

Well, Sir, if there is one reason now why this treaty should be hailed and claimed with delight and with applause, as I believe it should be, there were ten reasons ten years ago why it should have been adopted and its provisions taken advantage of by this country, simply because ten years of added benefit over and above what this country can now obtain would have been obtained by intercourse with that country at a period of time when probably its demands upon such products as Canada could have afforded would have been even greater than they will be in the years to come.

But, I say I support the arrangement of the government because the leaders of the opposition party were constantly pressing upon the government the importance of negotiating this treaty and not the importance of negotiating a treaty with any special provision to regulate immigration, but the importance of negotiating the treaty passed in Great Britain in 1894 which contained no powers at all in regard to the regulation of immigration into this country. Now, the government have done three things that I think ought to be supported by the House. First, they have passed an order in council preventing Japanese coming from the insular possessions of the United States, and if any member of this House looks over the records he will find that 60 per cent of the Japanese that have come into Canada during the past two years have come from the American islands. If we remember also that combined with the Japanese trouble in Vancouver has been the Hindoo question we will see at once that the government, by the operation of this treaty, have closed out entirely the immigration of orientals from this source. Then again the government have provided against the making of contracts for bringing in Japanese immigrants into this country without the consent and authority of the government. I contend that if the Minister of Labour had done nothing more in Japan as the representative of this country than to place a check upon the private arrangements of contractors for oriental labour and to bring into operation the principle that these people cannot carry on their operations without the authority of the government he would have done sufficient to justify the support of this House. For these two reasons and for any other arrangements which have been made that will accomplish the object of keeping these people out of the country I am prepared to support with my vote the proposals made by the hon. Minister of Labour. If there is any risk about it then the risk is mine. I am willing to take that risk. I think this arrangement will have the effect of renewing and confirming confidence existing between this government and the government of Japan. I supported the treaty in 1907 on the understanding that this immigration was to be regulated within very reasonable limits, and I am prepared to say on the floor of this House that whilst I believe that six months will demonstrate that an influx of orientals into this country under this arrangement is impossible, if, this arrangement be entered into between the representatives of Canada and the representatives of Japan, is not maintained I will support the abrogation of the treaty which can be brought about by giving six months notice.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Vancouver). I do not wish to give a silent vote on this question, because after all, it is the most vital question affecting the province of British Columbia we have ever had before this parliament. In a few words I shall place my views before the House and before my constituents. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said that the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition is nothing more and nothing less than a motion of want of confidence in the government. Well, that being the case I cannot support the motion for the reason that the government have done exactly what I have been trying to get them to do for the last six months. They have carried on negotiations with Japan which have resulted in stopping for all time any further influx of Japanese coolies into our country.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you know ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I will tell my hon. friend how I know. The Minister of Labour has just come back from Japan and he has stated in parliament upon his responsibility as a minister of the Crown, that we need never fear any further immigration from Japan. That statement has been accepted by the House ; that statement has been accepted by the country.

Mr. SPROULE. No.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend says 'no.'

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says that statement is accepted by the House and the country. Had we not years ago a similar statement from the government that the Japanese would regulate immigration, and yet the Japanese government have not regulated immigration to the satisfaction of even the hon. member himself ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) mean to say on his responsibility as a member of this House, that the mission of the Postmaster General to Japan has been fruitless ? No matter how politically prejudiced the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) may be, I doubt if he will have the temerity to state on the floor of this House that the mission of the Minister of Labour to Japan has been fruitless, and that the statement made by that hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) on the floor of the House is entirely erroneous. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will not say that.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not desire to say that at all, but I want to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) what greater reason have we to believe that the arrangement now made will bring about the restriction desired, than we had to accept the statement of the Prime Minister when we entered into the treaty with Japan, that the Japanese would restrict immigration. The Japanese government did not restrict immigration.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) interrupts me to ask a question, which I do not mind, but I have some objection to being interrupted while he makes a long statement. However, the hon. gentleman has answered his own question. He tells us that he would not state that the mission to Japan has been fruitless. Therefore, I say that the people of this country are prepared to accept and must accept as a fact the declaration of our minister that the question is settled, and that he has entered into a satisfactory arrangement with Japan. In view of that declaration by a minister of the Crown I have confidence that the government will see that the arrangement is carried out. Let me quote a telegraphic despatch from Japan in to-day's newspaper, which reads :

> Replying to interpellations in the Lower House of the Diet this evening, Foreign Minister Viscount Hayashi spoke at length on the foreign policy of the government, including negotiations with the United States and Canada.
> He announced that the Canadian question has been definitely settled, and read the correspondence with Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, the Canadian Commissioner of Labour, wherein Japan has agreed to restrict emigration to Canada within reasonable limits.
> Viscount Hayashi, continuing, said it was the duty of the central government to conserve the interests of Japanese subjects resident in other countries by preventing a further exodus of their countrymen which might be prejudicial to those already residing abroad, and the restrictions therefore would be extremely rigid.

Now, Mr. Speaker, treaties have been entered into by all governments in all times and treaties have been lived up to by all nations. This arrangement is practically a treaty entered into between the two governments, and I say that so far as the present is concerned we have a settlement of this question that is bound to prove satisfactory. Of course, it may not be satisfactory to the man who wants to make political capital out of it because he will want to keep up strife, it may not be satisfactory to the prejudiced man who would desire to see the efforts of the government unsuccessful. But, to every right thinking man in Canada, to every man who desires to see this very dangerous question wiped off the slate, I say that the settlement is hailed with delight. The hon. gentleman from East Grey looks at me askance when I make that statement, but I reiterate. There is no man in this country who has held stronger views on this question than I, and I say, Sir, that I am as convinced as that I am standing here, that were I to live for many years to come I have seen for the last time any great oriental influx from any oriental country into Canada. My hon. good friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) has shown that a great majority of the Japanese have come to Canada from Honolulu, that the majority of the Hindoos have come from Hong Kong, and those two gateways are now closed to them for all time, so long as the Canadian government keeps the present regulations in force, and there is no reason to suppose for one minute that any government would dare to change these regulations. Therefore, the amendment of the leader of the opposition is entirely needless and useless so far as this question is to-day concerned. When the Japanese treaty was put through parliament; when we agreed to it here two years ago, there was not a man on either side of the House who was not prepared to hail with delight the idea that we should enter into that treaty. Every man who spoke upon that occasion impressed on the government that they should bring this treaty into operation; every man in this country who was at all anxious to see any trade developed between the orient and Canada hailed that treaty with delight, to use the words of the hon. member (Mr. Foster). It is not the first time that governments and people have found that they could not peer into the future. But if the government were blind in this matter, the whole country was blind, the opposition in this House was blind, nobody could foresee that there was a desire on the part of some people in British Columbia to bring into Canada these Asiatic immigrants. And let it be remembered that this immigration came from within ourselves. Had it not been for our own people in British Columbia we would not have had this influx of orientals, so that we ourselves are primarily responsible. To-day, according to the arrangements entered into, it is impossible for any company in Canada to contract for a supply of labourers from any Asiatic country. That is stopped for all time. It is just quite possible that our whole experience in this matter, disagreeable as it is, has been cheaply bought in the light that we have solved a question which was a most difficult question to solve. For all time in the future we need not fear this horde of Asiatics, so that the price we have paid during the last six months may not after all be without some return. No man need try to impress upon me that any vote I might give now is going to make it one particle easier or one particle harder for a Japanese, or a Chinaman, or a Hindoo to come into Canada.

I say I regard the question as settled, and settled for all time, and therefore I vote with the government and against the opposition in this matter. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) spoke to-night with a running sob in his voice about the horrible fate that was in store for the members from British Columbia who voted with the government on this question. I do not think our fate will be very horrible if we have accomplished what we believe to be a good thing. If I am defeated, what does that amount to? Is my political life so important that I should save it at all hazards? I am only an atom in the make-up of this country; I am only a unit in this House. If I am defeated, as it is said by my opponents that I shall be, what does that matter if we have succeeded in settling a question that has been for so many years unsettled? Greater misfortunes can happen to a man than to be defeated. I am told that I shall not get a nomination from my party in British Columbia. That does not cut any ice with me, Mr. Speaker. I am told that if I do get the nomination, I shall be defeated at the polls. Will that change the trend of events in the future? No, Sir. If I had accomplished nothing in this House for the sake of being re-elected, then I would say that my political life had been barren, that its only fruit had been Dead Sea fruit. But I have agitated this question in the country, and have been very much called to task for my agitation, both on the hustings and in the newspapers; but if I have succeeded, as I think I have to a certain extent, in turning the attention of the public and of the government to a live question in British Columbia, then, Sir, my defeat will have been well repaid, my sacrifice will have been well given, and I will yield it gladly. I care not a snap of my fingers for that, Mr. Speaker. It is the last thing I consider as a member of this House.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, though it must be my duty, in the few observations which I have to offer to this House, to take issue with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, both upon the speech with which he favoured the House and upon the resolution which he has placed in your hands, yet I am free to confess that I welcome altogether both the speech and the resolution of the hon. gentleman. I welcome both the speech and the resolution, because both present, in a clear line of cleavage, the policy of the government and the policy of the opposition upon this most important question. In the object which both parties pursue I see no difference whatever; all the difference is in the method. The policy of the hon. gentleman, the policy of his party, settled many years ago, re-affirmed on this occasion, is to obtain restriction of Japanese immigration to our shores by hostile legislation of this parliament, with all the consequences of hostile legislation upon a friendly power. The policy of this government is to obtain the restriction of Japanese immigration to our shores, not by hostile legislation, but by the voluntary, the friendly action of the Japanese authorities themselves. Sir, in a few words this is the line of cleavage between that side of the House and this side. And now it will be my duty to proceed to give to the House the motives, the reasons and the results of our policy; and when this is done I shall be content to leave the whole question to the judgment of the members of this House and of the people of this country. Sir, the central fact in this question, around which all other considerations revolve, is the fact that in all countries where the Caucasian race and the oriental races come together there is at once an antagonism. There is a sharp, well-marked antagonism on the part of all white races against the Mongolian race. Of this fact we have been well aware for a long time; but the fact has been still more clearly put before us in the admirable speech of my hon. friend and colleague the Postmaster General just a week ago today. My hon. friend, during the course of his observations, dilated at some length, though certainly not at too great a length, upon this aspect of the question. He gave us valuable information, until then unknown to us, though we have had on this point information from our colleagues from British Columbia. For my part, I had believed, as had many others, that there was at the bottom of this antagonism only a labour problem. I had thought, and many others had thought, that white labourers objected to associating themselves with oriental labourers on account of their different modes of living. But we know that there is another consideration which extends far beyond the labour problem. The population of British Columbia is a small population as yet. The flow of immigration from Europe has not yet crossed the Rocky Mountains and not yet reached the province by the Pacific ocean. The population of that province is small and sparse, and there is an apprehension, a well understood apprehension which we can all share, that if the current of immigration from Asia were to be allowed to flow in free and unchecked, the balance of power might pass from the one race to the other. This is a problem, Sir, which no government in this country can afford to ignore. This is a problem which has engrossed the attention of all governments from the early days of confederation—I may say from the day of British Columbia's admission into this union of provinces. This problem, difficult at all times and under all circumstances, has been made doubly difficult—nay, ten times more difficult—in so far as Japan is concerned by the fact that Japan has suddenly risen to the proportions of a first-class power. Sir, everybody will concede that no event during the last fifty years of the history of the human race has been more remarkable than the sudden revolution which has changed the institutions of Japan. Japan up to fifty years ago was an isolated community; it has suddenly become one of the world's greatest powers. When I say an isolated community, I do not use the expression offensively; but I want to draw attention to the marked difference between oriental civilization and occidental civilization. The nations of the orient have been, I might say for countless ages, certainly for thousands of years, in a condition of lethargic immobility. To-day their civilization is the same as it was two thousand years ago.

Their religious thought, their code of ethics, their methods of commerce, their modes of transportation, their system of education—all these are the same as they were 2,000 years ago. While the nations of the west have been in a constant state of transition and evolution, always striving towards improvement and progress, the nations of the east have been content to remain just where they were, and the result has been that in almost every walk of life they have been left steadily behind. But all at once, without any transition, Japan has risen from a condition of lethargy to a condition of actual activity and modern life. Japan has adopted our system of education, our methods of trade and industry, and in the art and science of war, both on land and sea, she has shown herself the peer of the most famous nations of the present day. It is to the credit of Lord Lansdowne that, of all the diplomatists of Europe, he was the first to recognize the possibilities of this change in the condition of Japan. Such was the importance that he attached, and rightly attached, to this changed condition that he, all of a sudden, broke loose from all the traditions of British policy. Hitherto it had been the rule and tradition of British diplomacy that Britain would not become entangled in any foreign alliance, that she would stand alone in her insular position, and be ready in all circumstances to take advantage of her opportunities without being shackled by weighty alliances. But Lord Lansdowne attached so much importance to the new condition Japan had attained that in 1902 he did what had not yet been done for us by any British statesman, and concluded a treaty of alliance, defensive and offensive, between Britain and Japan. What is the condition therefore which has existed since 1902? It is that, under the treaty negotiated by Lord Lansdowne, it is possible, if unfortunately the interests of Great Britain were to be jeopardized in the northern Pacific ocean, we might see, should unfortunately war break out, the fleet of Japan and the fleet of England riding the waves together for a common purpose and against a common enemy. It is possible that, under that treaty, we may see the fleet of Japan weighing anchor in the harbour of Vancouver for the protection of those British interests to which Canada attaches such vital importance. This is a condition which has escaped altogether the attention of my hon. friends opposite, but it is a condition that we have had all the time before our eyes. But though there may be treaties of defence, amity and peace, though on this occasion Japan and Great Britain proclaimed to the world that they were friends and prepared to fight, if need be, a common enemy, it is not to be expected that in the people, among all classes, high and low, the old feuds and antagonisms can disappear in a day. We know, by the experience of the world, that antagonisms, especially those which have race for basis, are slow to die, and we must reckon accordingly. And we had a tangible proof of this when, in this year of 1902, the year when the treaty was concluded between Lord Lansdowne and Viscount Aoki, the request came upon us, more pressing than ever, from British Columbia for a law of exclusion against the oriental races. The position we took on that occasion is well known. We had no hesitation in meeting the request of British Columbia with regard to certain races of the orient. But when it came to Japan we had to say that we could not comply with that request. We were pressed to introduce the Natal Act and we would not. Under the Natal Act no people would be admitted to British Columbia unless they could speak some of the languages of Europe. That would be a direct slap in the face of our allies in Japan. But we entered into negotiations with the Japanese authorities themselves, through the instrumentality of Mr. Nossé, the Japanese consul, then in Montreal and since in this city. We represented to the Japanese authorities that, although we were allies, they must know there were difficulties against their people coming to our country, where they could not expect to be received with favour, they must know that we could not prevent the clashing of race with race, and we asked the Japanese authorities themselves to restrict the immigration. And I am happy to say that we were successful in these efforts, and the Japanese authorities consented to restrict emigration from their country. We have been asked in the course of this debate what was the authority of Mr. Nossé. Was he a plenipotentiary? Had he any letters of credit to present? The answer is easy. We have no accredited diplomatic agents in this country. We have no power to have any ; but the fact that Mr. Nossé was authorized to give us the pledge he did, and the fact that in the years which followed this pledge—1902, 1903, 1904, 1905 and 1906—there was scarcely any immigration from Japan to British Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER. Nearly 2,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well, let us say 2,000. How many of these went to the United States?

Mr. FOSTER. Some did.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. More than one half of them went to the United States. 2,000 landed in British Columbia, but the 2,000 did not remain in British Columbia ; and if my hon. friend wants conclusive evidence, he has it in the fact that not a word of complaint came from British Columbia during those years. A moment ago I stated that Japan had become a highly civilized country, so civilized indeed, so much in sympathy with the methods of the west, that she adopted this last product of European civilization. Japan had a universal exposition in Tokio in 1903. Canada was represented at that exhibition. We asked an appropriation from parliament, which was voted cheerfully without a word of dissent. Canada's exhibit made a most creditable effect. All the words I have had regarding it have been words of praise. So successful indeed was our exhibition at Tokio that the business men, the merchants of Canada, not only the business men of Canada, but even those who are supposed to take an interest in the trade of Canada—and in those I would include even my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden)—all those pressed upon us the advisability of having a treaty of commerce with Japan. We thought that the time had come when we should endeavour to have such a treaty. For many years there had been a treaty of commerce between Japan and Great Britain—a treaty passed in 1894, which did not include Canada, but in which Canada might be included by her own will and consent. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has told us that the Conservative government had a policy, and it was that if Canada were to be included in that treaty Canada should reserve the power to legislate against Japanese immigration. He quoted the order in council passed in August, 1905, the conclusion of which is as follows :

The minister submits that in the interests of the Dominion there should be a proviso in the treaty of Great Britain with Japan similar to that contained in the treaty between that country and the United States.

Since the government of Canada, at that time, wanted to have a provision similar to that in the treaty between Japan and the United States, it is important to know what this provision was. It was in the following terms :

It is, however, understood that the stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, police and public security, which are in force, or may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.

Now, let me come back to the conclusion of the order in council, which I read, but which I must read again :

The minister submits that, in the interests of the Dominion of Canada, there should be a proviso in the treaty of Great Britain with Japan similar to that contained in the treaty between that country and the United States, and he recommends that, when the adhesion of Canada is being given to the treaty, an express stipulation of this kind should be made, and that some further definition should be required of the term 'labourer,' so that it will definitely include artisans.

The committee advise that Your Excellency be moved to forward a certified copy of this minute to the Right Honourable Her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the colonies.

This despatch, covering the minute of council, was sent to the colonial secretary and by him referred to the British ambassador at Tokio. We have the observations of that ambassador upon this minute of council. This is set out in the despatch of Sir Ernest Satow, of February 7, 1906. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) was extremely chary in his quotation of this document. He should have quoted more than he did in order to get the true meaning that we know was taken by the Canadian government of this despatch. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) told us that the Japanese government were agreeable to inserting a provision under which we should reserve to ourselves the right to legislate against Japanese immigration and asked why the government did not take advantage of this offer ? Because it was a qualified consent on the part of Japan to have this proviso inserted in the treaty. The despatch reads as follows :

At the request of the acting minister for Foreign Affairs, I called on His Excellency this afternoon for the purpose of receiving the reply of the Japanese government respecting the conditions on which Canada and other colonies might adhere to the treaty between Great Britain and Japan, in anticipation by some days of the date mentioned in my despatch No. 25, of the 5th instant.

And here comes the part quoted by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) :

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

His Excellency produced a written memorandum, the terms of which were to the purpose that the Japanese government were willing to agree that Canada in signifying her adhesion to the treaty might do so with a proviso that the stipulations of the treaty should not in any way affect the laws of either country with regard to the immigration of labourers, and further, that the treaty should cease to be binding six months after notice to terminate had been given by either side.

These last words of this quotation show the qualification of the consent by the Japanese government, 'that the treaty should cease to be binding six months after the notice to terminate had been given by either side.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not as I understand it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will show that that is the correct understanding of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I am referring to is that at that time Japan had not consented to the words covering artisans.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, but the question of artisans was a very incidental question. Japan consented to the insertion of these words in the treaty, provided that the treaty might be brought to an end at six months' notice by either party. The reason for that is given later by Sir Ernest Satow :

On my asking for an explanation of the reasons for proposing that either side should be enabled to terminate the treaty by giving six months' notice, His Excellency said that it had seemed to the Japanese government that neither party should be bound for a longer period than was desirable, and therefore the term of one year, named in the United States treaty, had been reduced to six months.

I observed to His Excellency that the United States treaty, as it was originally drafted, stipulated for a duration of twelve years, and the stipulation reducing this period to one year had been added afterwards as a sort of postscript, it being expressly stated that the amendment in question had been 'proposed by the government of the United States.' It would consequently appear that at the time of the negotiations with the United States the Japanese government were willing to concede a duration of twelve years in the case of a treaty containing a reservation of legislation upon labour, but that now as regards a colony of Great Britain they wished to reduce this to six months. I was desirous, I said, of being in a position to explain to Her Majesty's government the reason for this change in their views, as otherwise it might seem as if there was some unwillingness to accord to Great Britain what, on a previous occasion, had been readily conceded to the United States.

It is obvious what was the reason why Japan, in the treaty with the United States and in the treaty with Canada, desired to limit its duration to twelve months in one case and six months in the other. Were the United States or Canada to pass unfriendly legislation, immediately Japan would give notice of the termination of the treaty. And the reason is made all the more apparent by the very language of the despatch which my hon. friend read, but the effect of which apparently escaped his attention.

After some further conversation on this point, His Excellency said that although the memorandum had received the approval of the cabinet, he would give the matter further consideration, and that, for the present, he would retain the document in his possession. This is the explanation of my being unable to furnish Your Lordship with its exact wording.

Now, I call attention to what follows :

It seems obvious that the Japanese government, who have taken nearly four months to consider their reply, desire to be in a position to terminate the treaty whenever any of the colonies that might accede to it with this proviso proceeded to legislate against the free immigration of Japanese labour, and I could not conceal from His Excellency my feeling that this was not a very friendly attitude to take up.

I assured him, however, that as far as I could foresee, there would, in all probability, be no necessity for either Canada or the Australian colonies placing restrictions on Japanese, who usually lived on the same scale as Europeans in foreign countries, and that no disadvantage was likely to result to Japan from consenting to this proviso. As His Excellency was aware, no such legislation had even been resorted to in the past.

Now, let me give the concluding sentence, which gives the key to the whole situation, so far as Japan is concerned, in matters of this kind :

I think it is not difficult to understand why the Japanese government feeling that such provisions are calculated to place them in the eyes of the world on a level with the Chinese, should endeavour, while apparently consenting to them, to render them practically inoperative from the beginning.

We are told this afternoon—and it has been the burthen of my hon. friend's speech, as it is the burthen of his amendment—why did not you include in the treaty the provision inserted in the American treaty, allowing Canada to pass legislation restricting Japanese immigration if she chose ? The reason is given by Sir Ernest Satow—that the moment we did negotiate a treaty with such a provision, we should be forced, under this legislation to restrict immigration and, the very moment this was done, Japan would denounce the treaty. This policy extolled by my hon. friend would have meant a treaty that would not last more than six months. But I am sorry to say that, in the despatch of Sir Ernest Satow, there is one part with which nobody can agree, but which everybody knows to be mistaken :

There would, in all probability, be no necessity for either Canada or the Australian colonies placing restrictions on Japanese, who usually lived on the same scale as Europeans in foreign countries, and that no disadvantage was likely to result to Japan from consenting to this proviso.

Was that correct? Everybody knows that it was not correct. Everybody knows that if we had agreed to this treaty and taken the privilege to legislate against the Japanese immigration, we would have been forced to exercise that power. Is there anybody on either side of the House who does not know that if we had the power to exclude the Japanese under such a treaty, we would have been forced to exercise that power? Consequently we would have lost the treaty instead of having it, as we do now.

Mr. A. BRODEUR (Dundas). Suppose they failed to carry out the understanding you have with them now, what action will you take ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, my hon. friend must have been blind or asleep during the last few days. We have taken action upon this very point. Instead of taking power ourselves to restrict immigration by Act of Parliament, we have obtained from the Japanese authorities themselves an engagement that they will restrict it voluntarily.

Mr. BRODER. The hon. gentleman does not understand my question. Suppose they fail to carry out this understanding you have with them now, what will your action be in the future?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If they fail to carry out this understanding that we have with them, then we shall have the power ourselves to put an end to the treaty. But that will be done only in the last resort, only when every method of conciliation has been exhausted, only when every other means has been tried and failed. We want to preserve peace with Japan; we want to maintain our present good relations with her; we want to maintain a good understanding with her, and we do not wish to ask this parliament to submit Japan to the humiliation of restricting her people from coming to our shores unless we are absolutely forced to do so by her own course. Instead of choosing the method which the leader of the opposition has indicated by his motion, we take another course. We negotiated with Mr. Nossé ; we asked him if it were not possible to get the Japanese authorities to continue the understanding we had already with them, and this is the letter which we received from him, addressed to the Minister of Agriculture:

Ottawa, September 18, 1905.

Dear Mr. Fisher,—I am leaving this note with you as I will be absent for a few days from the city. I learnt this afternoon from Hon. Mr. Scott, the Secretary of State, that your government was going to exact from Japan a few special concessions on becoming a party to the Anglo-Japanese treaty. Your government, I understand, proposes to restrict the immigration, coastwise navigation, and some other items. It is rather surprising to me that your government, in spite of your statement, is going to ask for such restrictions.

The Japanese government will, I am afraid, never agree to such terms, and decline to entertain the question of allowing Canada into the party, if she will ask Japan to give her special concessions. Japan gives England the right of coastwise navigation, for instance, the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers at present call at the open ports in Japan, but Japan will never ask the same privilege, and the immigration will always be restricted voluntarily by Japan, and I do hope very much that Canada will depend upon our good faith and will not try to put any restrictions by right of treaty. The Queensland treaty is quoted, but this treaty does not now exist since her amalgamation into the Commonwealth, and there is not any treaty at present between the colony and Japan.

I hope you will do your best not to make any special proposal to the English government, else your endeavours will come to nothing.

I am yours sincerely,
T. NOSSE.

Now, we relied upon this assurance of Mr. Nossé, the same assurance we had before; we had the same ground for relying upon the assurance that the restriction of immigration would continue as it had during the past four years. But, unfortunately, this year there was an influx, all of a sudden, of Japanese immigration. We did not know how to account for it, but we do know now, because we have had an investigation upon the subject. We then took the only course we could take. We did not suppose that Japan had broken faith with us; we did not suppose that this influx had taken place with her consent; we had reason to believe that the good faith of Japan had been surprised, and that if we called her attention to it she would take the necessary steps to live up to the agreement which she had made with us. That was the reason of the mission to Japan of my hon. friend the Postmaster General. How far he has been successful, everybody knows at present. He has been entirely successful; he has brought us the assurance of the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Japanese government that this agreement will be lived up to, and that Japanese immigration will be restricted.

Now, in face of all this we are told, But why did you not do as the Americans did, insert a clause in your treaty reserving to yourself the power to restrict Japanese immigration? Well, Sir, the answer is this:

I claim that we are to-day in a better position than are the Americans. The American government reserved to themselves the power to restrict Japanese immigration, and, as I understand, they have availed themselves of that power, and because they have availed themselves of that power, they have had some trouble. We do not have any such trouble, but we know something about it. Last spring, I think it was in April or May, Japanese children were not allowed the privilege of the public schools in San Francisco, and the Japanese government remonstrated with the American government, and considered it an unfriendly act. Of course I may say that the American authorities were acting altogether in their right in so doing, they could exclude Japanese from attending their schools; they could restrict Japanese from going into their country. They have done so. But if they do so, they do it at their peril, and that peril is the cancellation of their treaty with Japan. At this moment they are having trouble for that reason. Does anybody in this House suppose that the Japanese people will allow American goods to enter their country freely at the preferred rate, while at the same time their own people are slapped in the face and rejected from American territory? Does any one believe that if we had passed a treaty with such a proviso as there is in the American treaty, and if we were to exercise that power so provided for by an Act of this parliament, and exclude Japanese immigrants from coming into this country—does anybody suppose that the Japanese government would endure such a humiliation or that they would allow our goods to continue to go into their country under the benefit of the treaty? Why, Sir, the thing is so clear that it is not necessary to discuss it. Japan is a proud country; she is willing to do voluntarily what we ask her to do, but she will not do it by compulsion in a treaty. So I say that at this moment we stand in a better position than do the Americans. We see to-day in the 'Evening Journal' of this city a very suggestive telegram from Tokio. It was quoted a moment ago by my hon. friend from Vancouver, but I will quote it again:

Tokio, January 28.—Replying to interpellations in the Lower House of the Diet this evening, Foreign Minister Viscount Hayashi spoke at length on the foreign policy of the government, including negotiations with the United States and Canada.

He announced that the Canadian question has been definitely settled, and read the correspondence with Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, the Canadian Commissioner of Labour, wherein Japan has agreed to restrict emigration to Canada within reasonable limits.

Viscount Hayashi, continuing, said it was the duty of the central government to conserve the interests of Japanese subjects resident in other countries by preventing a further exodus of their countrymen which might be prejudicial to those already residing abroad, and the restrictions therefore would be extremely rigid.

So there is a difficulty between Japan and the United States, notwithstanding that the United States have power to restrict immigration, showing conclusively that, put any restrictions you please in a treaty, you must always come back to diplomatic action to settle questions of this kind. This is a policy which we have pursued. Now, we are in this position and it is very plain; we all desire in Canada to restrict Japanese immigration. All sides are agreed to that. I have stated more than once that I regret the condition of things which exists in British Columbia, but it is a condition of things which we are bound to respect and which we must give heed to. We are prepared to do so. We are prepared on both sides of the House—at all events on this side of the House—to give reasonable and generous heed to the views of British Columbia upon this question. There are two ways of doing that. One way is the method suggested by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition this afternoon and which is embodied in his amendment. One way is to legislate against the Japanese and by an Act of this parliament, by the will of the Commons, of the Senate and of the representative of the King, make provision that no Japanese shall come into this country. Another way is the method of conciliation, to ask the Japanese government to recognize the difficulties of such a question and to do what we will not do ourselves, to do voluntarily what we will not compel them to do against their wishes. I have no hesitation in saying that upon this question we place ourselves with absolute confidence in the judgment not only of the people of Canada entirely but also in the judgment of the people of British Columbia. Shall it be said in this parliament, are hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to vote to-day that we shall admit Japanese into this country only when they come with a man-of-war in company with the British fleet in order to protect our shores, and that there shall be an enactment of parliament to prevent them coming in times of peace? Is that the position which is taken by these hon. gentlemen? I have only this to say that I feel sure that when our action is known in British Columbia, when it is properly understood, when they know of the effort which we have made in order to bring about the result which they want to have brought about, they will be satisfied that this result has been brought about not by hostile legislation but by friendly conciliation.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think, Mr. Speaker, that on more than one occasion I have prefaced my remarks after the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) by saying that I was obliged to reply to an astonishing speech. I do not think I could ever do that more truthfully than I can to-night and that for very many reasons. Not only the speeches of my hon. friends from British Columbia but more especially the speech of the right hon. gentlemen have been astonishing speeches. I commend the concluding sentence of my right hon. friend's speech to these good gentlemen from the province of British Columbia who are always willing to bow to what the government say, who are always willing to vote confidence in their government whether they are slashed or whether they are solaced, it makes no difference. Just before I take up the main argument I want to have a word or two with two or three of my friends from British Columbia. The hon. gentleman from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) was most inclusive in his assertions. All these questions, according to him, had been settled for all time. Standing up in the plenitude of his years and thinking may be nothing of the uncertainty of human life, he was in a position to tell not only the people of British Columbia but the people of this country, the people of the whole of Canada, that all these questions, severally and in the aggregate, were settled for all time. The rather disturbing question was put to him by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule): How do you know, what is your reason? but the answer came with convincing power, and I am sure, no one must have felt this more than my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux). How do I know?—because the Postmaster General has been over to Tokio, he has come back and he has told me that it was settled for all time. Therefore, it is settled for all time. How can you argue against statements of that kind? Well, but he did not rest exactly there. He had another reason. It was not only settled for all time because the Postmaster General came back and told him that it was, but it was settled for all time because my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) had made the remark that he had, and my hon. friend from Grey had made a remark which he interpreted in the very same direction. Hawaii has closed out its emigration for all time! How does he know? We may know what is going on to-day, we may have a very good knowledge of what went on yesterday, we may make a very shrewd guess as to what will go on to-morrow or the day after, but when a man comes out, even though it be from the province of British Columbia and from the great city of Vancouver and tries to crowd down our mouths the assertion that this thing is settled for all time and sets himself up as an unimpeachable authority on that subject I beg leave to make my dissent, very mildly, very calmly, but still I propose to make it. The Hindoos are kept out of this country for all time to come, says my hon. friend. Ah, who told my hon.

friend that the Hindoos are kept out of this country ? The right hon. Prime Minister will not assert it; neither will any other man who knows. There is no power so far and no power has been attempted to be exerted so far to keep a Hindoo British subject out of this country. Will my hon. friend from Vancouver tell me on what he founded that assertion that the Hindoos are kept out of this country for all time to come ? I believe there has been a regulation made by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), mighty powerful sometimes in his own estimation, but not quite so powerful when he comes to be submitted to the judgment of the House and later to the judgment of the country, but I think that the only regulation that has been made in so far as the Hindoos are affected is that by the Minister of the Interior and it is simply a regulation not in reference to the Hindoo but in reference to all manners of people wheresoever they may dwell, that in order to come as immigrants into Canada they must come in directly. Suppose that a Hindoo, one, a dozen, or a thousand come to Vancouver or the ports of British Columbia and come direct from the place where they were born or where they were domiciled, is there any power in this country to keep them out ? The assertion is on a par with the assertions which have been bandied about this room on many occasions and which have been made by the right hon. gentleman as I shall endeavor to show you by and by. But, the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) amused me. He was not nearly so pugnacious as I have heard him at other times and on other occasions. When he was kicking the Bowsers and the McBrides around this room the other day he was a power—such a power and he spoke with such a virility of language and such an appositeness of expression that the papers outside congratulated him on being —well, a little above the ordinary, but to-night he was very much under the ordinary, if I may venture the criticism. He was trying to square himself and trying to square himself on a very small and insecure footing, and I noticed that he lacked that robustness of speech and that vigour of tone that characterized him the other day. Then, we have another member from that beautiful and large country, British Columbia, and that is the member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith). I always like to hear him speak but I never admired him in his speaking less than I did to-night not because I do not believe he has the power within him and is just as good a man to-night as he is at any time, but he felt the difficulty, it weighed upon him and he unwittingly ambled into ground, which, if he had had a little better memory of what transpired not long ago, he would scarcely have ventured into.

My hon. friend (Mr. Ralph Smith) declares to-night that the immigration clause in the United States treaty is a very useless thing ; that they have had it there for ten years or more and yet during the last five or six years more Japanese have come into the United States than have come to Canada ; and he says we are better without it in Canada. And yet, lo and behold, only a few short weeks ago that same hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) spoke in this House with great virility and great force, and one of his strongest points was with reference to the immigration law which was passed by the United States in 1907, and mark you, the United States had the power to pass that immigration law because of that clause in the treaty of 1894 which gave them power over their immigration. No one will deny that. A few short weeks ago he could find no words too strong, none too warm in their colours to describe the beneficial effects of that United States immigration law of 1907. Listen to what he said :

Now, Sir, I want to say that we have here a provision that directly affects the Japanese immigration into the United States, because in spite of the operation of that peaceful treaty between Japan and the United States, the Japanese cannot be taken into the United States under contract.

Ha, Ha! those were the words of my hon. friend then. Further he said :

That, to my mind, is a most important provision. Suppose we had had that provision in this country (as I have suggested to the government we should have), what would have happened of the oriental immigration to British Columbia? We have demonstrated to the House that the thousands of orientals that have been brought to British Columbia——

Thousands have come in, my right hon. friend, according to the authority of your very firm and very warm supporter from the city of Nanaimo.

Suppose we had that provision in this country (as I have suggested to the government we should have), what would have happened——

Ah.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, my hon. friend over there is not quite fair to a young and inexperienced speaker when he endeavours to put him out by an interruption like that. My hon. friend (Mr. Smith) continued :

We have demonstrated to the House that the thousands of orientals that have been brought to British Columbia have been brought under contract and under the influence of Canadian companies and of the Japanese authorities. If we had a provision in our immigration laws similar to that enacted in the United States in 1907, such contracts would be made illegal and it would be impossible for these immigrants to come here.

And so on for half a column is to be found that kind of laudation of that clause of the United States legislation of 1907, and which legislation was made possible because the United States had a treaty with a clause in it which gave them complete power over their own immigration.

I ask the British Columbia members what they will think when they calmly, after the heat of this discussion, read in 'Hansard' what the Prime Minister said, and ponder upon it. He said :

> Is it to be said that a Japanese subject who could come in company of a British man of war into the port of British Columbia or of Vancouver shall be allowed to do so, and that a Japanese who comes in peace shall not be allowed to come into this country——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. By an Act of Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. By an Act of parliament. Now what do my hon. friends from British Columbia think of that. That is an abrogation of all power, all right, of British Columbia or this country to put an Act of Parliament on the statute-books to regulate its own immigration.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Might I ask : what does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) think of it ?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I have been trying to tell my hon. friend (Mr. Ross) what I think of it. I have been fairly distinct in my utterance and I have tried to put my language in intelligible form, and I am surprised that after ten or fifteen minutes of such honest endeavour on my part the hon. gentleman does not yet understand the truth. And, Sir, that is the reason why since 1900 my right hon. friend and his government have set themselves against every wish of British Columbia and every enactment of British Columbia in this matter, in, that he has year after year disallowed the Acts that have been passed by British Columbia. And now at this latest date his latest utterance is : So long as I am Prime Minister there shall be no legislation in Canada to prevent Japanese coming into this country in time of peace, unless it might happen that the alliance between Great Britain and Japan should be broken, and then no Japanese subject could come in a British man of war or in company of a British man of war and sail up into the harbour of Vancouver or the harbour of Victoria. My right hon. friend has talked a great deal with reference to the United States in connection with this matter, and he has endeavoured to show that the United States is in a worse position than Canada is because the United States has a treaty and really enacts laws while Canada has a treaty and does not enact laws. But the right hon. gentleman is absolutely confusing two questions. There is no question in the United States to-day, of any importance, with reference to immigration from Japan. It is not that question at all that has made the trouble between the United States and Japan. It is an entirely different question ; it is a question which arises out of the supposed violation by the people of the United States of a treaty right that Japan has secured with reference to the equal treatment of her subjects when once they have a place of residence in the United States of America. What did the whole trouble between the United States and Japan arise about ? It was because, under state sovereignty, a local body in the state of California proposed to discriminate between the citizens of Japan and the citizens of the United States and other countries, with reference to the grouping of their children in schools, and Japan, according to her treaty which provided that her subjects should have equal treatment with the citizens of the United States inside of the United States, protested strongly and protested rightly against the discrimination which was made against her citizens. But it is not a question of immigration at all. Does my right hon. friend say it is ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend asks me the question I tell him that if he says that the trouble to-day between the United States and Japan is what he stated, he is mistaken. There is the other question of immigration also.

Mr. FOSTER. What I mean to say is this : That from 1894 up to the time that this difficulty took place in San Francisco with reference to the school children, there had been no trouble between the United States and Japan. Now, let my right hon. friend bring a case and show us proof to the contrary. He is very fond of making assertions, and very many of his assertions fall to the ground when they are questioned. He has now made this assertion, and I put him to the proof. In 1894 that treaty went into effect ; from 1894 until 1906 that treaty was in effect ; and from 1894 until 1906 let him point out the cases of difference that arose between Japan and the United States with reference to immigration into the United States.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is my hon. friend aware that there is to-day before Congress a Bill for the excluding of the Japanese?

Mr. FOSTER. I may know it or I may not know it, but that does not affect this question in the least.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is that not an immigration question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but the point of the question I put to my right hon. friend is this, that from 1894 to 1906 you cannot point to cases in which discrimination has arisen involving international complications between Japan and the United States with reference to the immigration of Japanese into the United States. That was settled in 1894. Does my right hon. friend say it was not? Did the Japanese sign that treaty? Are the Japanese an honourable people? Do they keep the treaties they sign? The whole basis of my right hon. friend's appeal to parliament and to this country is that Japan is an honourable country and keeps its promises when they are not put into a treaty. If the Japanese people keep their promises when not in a treaty, they may be relied on to keep their promises when in a treaty. Was that a part of the treaty between Japan and the United States? They have kept that treaty from 1894, and the article of that treaty to which they assented, and to which they have never objected since, is that the United States has an absolute right to control its own immigration. The difficulty that took place was when the San Francisco school trustees denied to the Japanese people residing there equal rights of citizenship with citizens of the United States. Why the same thing would take place now.

Mr. GALLIHER. If my hon. friend will allow me. While agreeing with him that the San Francisco trouble was the first that arose and that it was with regard to the school children, let me point out that the negotiations now going on between Japan and the representative of the United States are in regard to immigration.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend may be quite right in that. There are numerous questions, which, when negotiations come up, slip in and form part of the general negotiations. But the statement I made is true. Nobody believes that between any countries there are perfect relationships. All of them may be made better, and it is the design of nations which wish to have friendly relations and to extend commerce with one another, to make more complete and more workable the relations which exist between them, by treaty or otherwise. It may be quite true, I am not going to deny it, that under the stress of the diplomatic efforts which are being made, and which arose because of the incident with regard to the school children, when that question comes up, immigration matters are talked over as well, and there may be many things which may be made better between the two countries. But my assertion still holds good.

Now, let me ask my right hon. friend another question. You have not the United States clause. You could have had it; it was offered to you; you refused to take it. But you have adopted the treaty, and one article of that treaty is that Japanese subjects residing in Canada shall have equal rights and treatment with Canadian subjects. Is not that right?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I am right in that. Suppose that to-day we had school trustees in the city of Vancouver who undertook to do just what the school trustees in San Francisco undertook to do—discriminate against the Japanese children—would my right hon. friend be held by the treaty? Would Canada be held by the treaty? There is no doubt, I think, about that. My right hon. friend does not dissent from that. But if in one case you say, No treaties, but let us rather depend on the good will and voluntary action of the contracting power, the argument would go so far with reference to the rights of citizenship, that if it is as good for one as for the other, Japan ought not to have treaty rights, but ought to rely upon the good will and voluntary action of the people of Canada; and we ought not to have in that treaty a clause peremptorily affirming the rights of Canadians in Japan to equal treatment with Japanese subjects—that ought to be a matter of voluntary good will towards our people in Japan. The argument of my right hon. friend goes so far that it is sufficient to state it to show its absolute absurdity. I tell my right hon. friend that on his doctrine the world has been mightly amiss in all these thousand years that nations have been growing and fading and growing again. I do not think there has been any time in history when treaties have not existed between different powers. But my right hon. friend takes a position which if it is carried to its logical conclusion goes against having any treaty, but would leave nations to the good will and voluntary action of the one to the other. There is no escape from that argument. Is this the new diplomacy which my right hon. friend has been crying for, and now that he has got it in a certain degree in respect to this one case, is going to put into operation? No more treaties. He draws the line between this side of the House and that side of the House. On this side of the House, he says, we do not believe in coercion; on that side of the House you do; we want no treaties; you want things laid down in black and white, in the shape of a treaty; there is the difference between the two parties, there is the differece between the two policies. Well, Sir, I am ready, if my right hon. friend is, to submit that doctrine to the cool common sense of public men and sensible men generally in this country or any other. What is the reason that treaties are better than voluntary arrangements? Here is one instance that shows it. Not more than ten days ago the Japanese government were supported in their parliament on a vote of want of confidence by less than ten votes. What does that illustrate? The transitory nature of promises made by public men for the time being in office. To-day my right hon. friend who leads this government might just as well say to the people of Canada who are asking for a law in regard to certain matters: No, we do not want laws; I am in favour of voluntary good will. I say to you that I will do just what you want a law to be enacted to compel to be done, but I will not go to the extent of putting it into an arbitrary law. If the people were foolish enough to accept my right hon. friend's dictum in that respect, they might do so and he might be in power to-day and carry it out, but he might be out of power to-morrow—and who then would carry it out? So it is with treaties and promises. Treaties are things which bind a nation ; promises are things which bind the individual who, for the time being is in a position to make and implement them. If Viscount Hayashi were to go out of power to-morrow and an adverse party came in with a different policy on immigration, what then would become of Viscount Hayashi's promise? Of what use would it be?

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend has just stated that there is a treaty between Japan and the United States to give Japanese subjects, resident in that country, the same rights as American citizens. Is that what the hon. gentleman did say ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CONMEE. Does that treaty bind the United States, and did the United States carry out that treaty ? What then has the hon. gentleman to say about the value of treaties ?

Mr. CONMEE. Does that treaty bind the out, before he is very much older, that he is up against a little difficulty to which the United States is subject under its federal and state constitutions. President Roosevelt will answer my hon. friend and tell him that the United States is bound to carry out in good faith that treaty.

Mr. CONMEE. I think it knocks the bottom out of your theory.

Mr. FOSTER. If the bottom of my theory is knocked out so easily as that, let it go. But I do not think it is, with all due deference to my hon. friend. Let me ask the Prime Minister this question. Suppose that to-day, in this country, the rights of a Japanese resident were discriminated against, would he feel that it was his duty to vindicate these rights ? That is the question. We are not taking into account the difference between our constitution and that of the United States. Let me give another instance which is more apt. Great Britain and Japan have a treaty between them since 1894, which guarantees equal treatment to the citizens of each country. Let a Japanese citizen be deprived in England of equal rigts with the British citizens, and let the Japanese authorities make their protest, has my right hon. friend any doubt as to what the answer of England would be ? England is not a federation but has absolute centralized power. Treaties are sacred things, meant to bind nations, whereas the sayings or promises of a consul or Prime Minister, for the time being, are not things that are sacred or permanent but merely transitory ; and no great country would dream of putting any of its great interests at the haphazard of the simple statement of a man who, for the time being, might be in office and who might be out of office at any day. Has France or Germany or Great Britain subserved their great interests in that way ? Is there a country in the world which has ever adopted the insane policy enunciated by my right hon. friend to-night, which would make the rights and privileges of his citizens depend on the word of mouth of some foreign representative instead of being guaranteed by a solemn treaty ? My hon. friend knows that there was a treaty passed in 1818 between the United States and Great Britain. He knows that we have appealed to and sheltered ourselves behind the treaty of 1818 for the vindication of some of our dearest rights. He knows that Great Britain has stood by us when we appealed to that treaty. Would he extend his doctrine so far as to say that it would have been much better if in 1818 Great Britain had simply taken the friendly word of a United States senator or representative as to the unassailable rights and privileges of the people of Canada to the fishing on our coasts ? There is a country called Alaska and a boundary between Alaska and Canada. Why did not my right hon. friend carry out this new theory of his with regard to that boundary ? Why did he ask that a treaty should be framed between Great Britain and the United States with reference to the boundary of the territory of Alaska ? The United States are a proud people and a great country. United States has not simply been fifty years but two hundred years and more in the progress of its evolution. Its people are mighty and proud, but we have never heard that they felt themselves demeaned because they were asked to put in the shape of a solemn treaty the boundary line between Alaska and Canada. I never heard my right hon. friend advocate that it would have been better if that had not been put in the form of a treaty, and if instead Mr. Elihu Root had made a certain promise as representing the United States. I have never heard that my right hon. friend would have been better satisfied with his word. There is not a dear interest of Canada to-day which is not buttressed around by solemn treaty; and had my right hon. friend been sufficiently wide awake to avail himself in 1896 of an instrument then ready framed, there would have been no trouble over this immigration business and we would have had the same defence and protection which the United States enjoys to-day. Why it is simply the most astonishing political argument, contrary to all history, and there is no other statesman in the wide world who would advance a doctrine of that kind. My hon. friend had something to say with reference to Satow's despatch.

Mr. DEVLIN. Does the hon. gentleman advocate the exclusion of the Japanese from Canada ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is wonderful what a thirst for information my hon. friend has suddenly developed.

Mr. DEVLIN. I would ask the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an old saying that any fool can ask a question which no man, however wise, can answer.

Mr. DEVLIN. Will the hon. gentleman tell me in what part of the resolution now before the House there is anything which deals with the exclusion of the Japanese or any expression asking this government to exclude the Japanese ?

Mr. FOSTER. If my right hon. friend—I mean my hon. friend, he is not a right hon. yet, but I suppose that is in prospect—if my hon. friend will read the resolution, he is quite as good an interpreter of the English language as I am.

Mr. DEVLIN. Will the hon. gentleman point it out ? I have read it.

Mr. FOSTER. I have more important work on hand just now than undertaking the tuition of my hon. friend. I would be quite willing to give him free tuition as far as I possibly can; but when it comes to instructing him in the English language, I shall have to take him outside and administer schoolmaster's tuition to him and require a fee therefor.

Mr. DEVLIN. I take it that the hon. gentleman refuses to answer.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I have no objection to my hon. friend taking it that way. My right hon. friend in taking up Satow's despatch advanced this idea, and gathered that the ambassador's view was that the aim of Japan in cutting down the time required for denunciation of the treaty to six months was that, should this country pass legislation adverse to the Japanese coming without restriction into this country, they would at once give notice of the denunciation of the treaty, and so we should lose the benefit of the treaty. But he took occasion to entirely dissent from the ambassador's opinion upon another subject mentioned in the same despatch. So my right hon. friend is an eclectric. He has the same despatch written by the same man ten or twelve years ago, and he undertakes to say that one part of it is all right and another part all wrong. At the very most, it is not stated, except as an inference of Sir Ernest Satow's, that this was the prime object Japan had in view. But it is not unusual for short terms for denunciation to be included in treaties. The right hon. gentleman says that if that clause had been there we should have been obliged to legislate for the exclusion of the Japanese. Why so? In the period from 1900 to 1906 my hon. friend was restricted by no treaty, no pledge, yet during these six years he disallowed five separate Acts of the British Columbia legislature calculated to restrict Japanese immigration; yet he argues that the moment that clause was put into the treaty, he would have been impelled, of necessity, to legislate in restraint of this immigration and so we would have offended a proud people. Suppose he were pressed for legislation of this kind by the hon. members for British Columbia—the same delegation that is here—does he say that he would have been obliged to legislate restricting Japanese immigration? He certainly need not be afraid on that score. He has not legislated to this effect for the last eight years and these hon. gentlemen have supported him during the whole time. These hon. gentlemen are here to support my right hon. friend, and whether that clause is in the treaty or not, if he did not wish to legislate he would not be obliged to do so by any consistent and uniform pressure brought upon him by members representing British Columbia now in this House. My right hon. friend started out as though he was going to traverse the whole of history. I could not follow him, but there are one or two points to which I shall refer in passing. In the first place, he laid down the principle to which I have adverted, that the policy of the government was not restriction by hostile legislation, but restriction by voluntary and friendly action by the power with whom we are dealing. To-day, under that policy, where are we in this country? We have absolutely handed over to the Japanese authorities for the time being our own rights to legislate restricting immigration into our country. Under that arrangement, Canada no longer stands at her gateway on the Pacific with the power that every nation has as a basic right to say who shall enter her doors and upon what conditions; she stands there, hat in hand, and asks the Mikado and his government if they will please keep out this one, if they will restrict this class or that class and so on. My right hon. friend once discovered a nation—he discovered Canada. He has alluded to that before. He has been crying out for the power to regulate our own affairs. To-day he declares that this country is a nation, and the very first step he takes in semi-independent diplomacy is to take from this new nation the basic power which every nation must have to be a nation, the power to control her own internal affairs as regards immigration.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. What about Great Britain?

Mr. FOSTER. In what respect?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That provision of the treaty applies no more against Canada than against Great Britain.

Mr. FOSTER. But I have not heard—has my hon. friend (Mr. Duncan Ross) ? he has sources of information that I may not have at the present time—that there is any question of Great Britain having a secret arrangement with Japan as to what immigration should come from Japan into Great Britain ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. No, but she has a public arrangement with Japan.

Mr. FOSTER. What public arrangement has she with Japan with reference to immigration?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The arrangement is such that to-day Great Britain could not legislate against Japanese immigration into Great Britain. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will surely admit that?

Mr. FOSTER. What of it?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The hon. gentleman (Mr Foster) made the statement a moment ago that this was a very extraordinary power to give another nation so far as Canada was concerned

Mr. FOSTER. I make the statement—and the hon. gentleman knows it is true—that the question of immigration as between Japan and Great Britain is not a question of any importance. Hon. gentlemen on that side have made the very same statement over and over again. It is Canada that has to face this problem of immigration from Japan. It is Canada that has to bear the brunt of whatever there is contrary to the best interests of the country in that unrestricted immigration. It is not Great Brtiain, but Canada that comes to that point where she has to decide as the threatened party—if there be any threatened party—whether she shall depend upon a treaty stipulation or shall rely entirely upon the good-will and promises of consuls general of Japan and Prime Ministers of Japan. If you take all these assurances which have been given by the consul general there is not one that stands the test of permanency. How was the consul general to bind the Japanese government? Has there been a single document of any kind presented by the government here or passed between the government of Japan and this country which puts to the test the promises or statements of the consul general of Japan as being binding upon the Japanese government?

Mr. PATERSON. How long does the treaty bind?

Mr. FOSTER. For the term that it is in existence. If the treaty is in existence to-day it binds. Is my hon. friend adopting the same doctrine as my right hon. friend, and arguing against all treaties and against the protection of a country's rights, by treaty, but by voluntary and fleeting and temporary promises of parties who, for the time being, happen to be in power? His question would indicate that that is the trend of his thought, and I warn him off from that, because it is a dangerous trend, and I think that in his heart he does not believe that kind of doctrine. The existence of Canada to-day is the best proof that we live in the exercise of most of our dearest rights and privileges by virtue of treaties, so far as those are held in reference to other nations.

Mr. PATERSON. Are we not under a treaty now with Japan?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, we are under a treaty in some respects. But in the main object of our interest we are not under a treaty, and we rely, as I have said, simply upon the good will of the people of Japan.

Mr. CONMEE. Have we not a good and sufficient remedy, if we choose to take it?

Mr. FOSTER. What is the remedy?

Mr. CONMEE. The treaty can be put an end to.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the very thing the right hon. gentleman does not want done.

Mr. CONMEE. The time has not come.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the very thing that he says he does not want put into the treaty, otherwise he might lose the benefit of the treaty. Now, suppose that these promises are not carried out, that after six months we find they are not carried out, what will be the result? Will the right hon. gentleman give notice for denouncing the treaty with Japan? If so, then he will lose the benefit of that treaty and pay the penalty that he does not want to pay. Or will he continue to temporize, and to draw his followers from British Columbia obediently behind him in his temporizing policy of giving up the rights of this country?

Now, let me ask another question. I want to discuss the question of the success or otherwise of my hon. friend's mission to Japan. We have heard a good deal of that, we have heard it called a very successful mission, my right hon. friend has paid tribute to it to-night. Hon. gentlemen from British Columbia have designated it as very successful. Will the House think over with me for a moment just what my hon. friend went to do, and just what he has done? Sum it all up, what has he brought back? Has he brought back anything more than the assurances which my right hon. friend has had for the last five years, and upon which he has relied in all this business with Japan? If he has brought back anything more, let him state it now. As I understood him, and he will correct me if I am wrong, he enumerated three things, one of which he brought back from Japan, and the other two he did not. He says he has a letter from Count Hayashi, and that letter is the extent of the pledge that the Japanese have made; that there are certain secret arrangements which carry out that general statement and the documents are deposited with the British ambassador. He has been good enough to give us a little inkling of how far they go, that is, that labourers and artisans shall not be allowed to come into Canada unless with the consent of Canada. That, he says, is all that he can divulge of these regulations. Now, is that anything more than the pledges and assurances that the right hon. gentleman has had from the consul general during the last five years, any more embracing, any more inclusive, any more extensive? I do not understand that it is. My hon. friend has gone to Tokia, has conducted himself with great propriety, he has had his conferences with the British minister and, through the British minister, with the Japanese authorities; and he comes back and is able to say to this parliament: I have brought renewed assurances from Tokio that what has been promised to the first minister will be carried out. Is there anything more than that? If there is, let us have it. Oh, yes, says my hon. friend, there is another thing. What is that? There can be no further immigration from Hawaii of Japanese who have gone to Hawaii, and therefore are in an alien country. Why? Because he persuaded the Mikado that that should no longer take place. Because he prevailed upon Viscount Hayashi to make that arrangement? No, he has told us himself; because the Alien law covers that class of immigration, and the Alien law was in force before my hon. friend went to Japan, and will be in force for many years after.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will my hon. friend allow me? I went further that that; I said that not only did the Canadian Act concerning alien labour apply against Hawaii, because Hawaii was an American possession, but that I had received the assurance from the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Japan that as long as Canada did not discriminate against the Japanese they would not object to the Japanese being kept out of the country, whether they came from Hawaii or whether they came from Europe. I also said that the avenue of Hawaii being barred and the avenue from Japan being regulated by the Japanese government, the two sources from which the Japanese influx had come in were thus barred for the future.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend mentions two avenues that are closed. One was closed by the Japanese themselves and the other was closed by the Alien Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not completely by the Alien Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Because article 1 of the treaty mentions the fact that Japanese can enter, reside and travel in the Dominion, and we might not perhaps be able to apply the Alien Labour law against Japanese coming from Hawaii, because they might say that the treaty supersedes the Canadian Act. But the Japanese government themselves do not object to our applying the Canadian Act as against the treaty in that respect.

Mr. FOSTER. Cannot my hon. friend go a little further? He says that the Japanese government does not object to our applying the Alien Act. If I understood him aright, he said that the Japanese government admit that the Alien law applies. Very well, if they admit that the Alien law applies, it is not by grace of the Japanese government, it is by virtue of the Alien law. There is no doubt about that. The Japanese are not so unstable as my right hon. friend. What they say they stand by. What they declare they believe they really believe.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite willing to say that; I have never said anything else. The Japanese, who are students of jurisprudence, who have great acumen in these respects, look over the law and they say, as has been said by my hon. friend, the alien law governs in any case, they say it because the law does so and not because of our granting a favour or that they are giving something to my hon. friend. So that, I think the only avenue which has been absolutely closed by the Japanese is the avenue of emigration out of Japan itself and as my right hon. friend says and has said for years in this House we have already had the assurance of the Japanese government and in that we have absolutely confided. Another thing I will say and it is that I believe the Japanese have kept honourable faith with this country.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. After reading the correspondence, after seeing all the circumstances detailed I do not blame the Japanese government one iota. I could not do it. We gave them the treaty without putting any restrictions about it, they took it as being the honourable gift of Canada and they have performed their part. Every government is liable to have its regulations go a little awry. Its instructions might be disregarded and the most that can be said against the Japanese government, if anything can be said, is that, having given instructions, they were not as careful as they might have been to see that their prefects and others under them carried out these instructions to the letter. But Japan herself has honourably done what she has agreed to do. So that is the only thing which my hon. friend has brought back and that is a thing that the right hon. First Minister has declared from 1900 up we had. Just here I wish to remind my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) that he has not yet laid on the table of the House that written assurance which he said he had.

I had the assurance of government there personally and in writing, that that policy would be maintained.

He made that statement the other day when this matter was being discussed, he was asked for the written assurance and he said that he had it and would bring it down.

Mr. FISHER. As regards the last quotation of the hon. gentleman, 'Hansard' is wrong. I said that I never had it; I did not say that I had it. The occasion referred to where I made the statement that I had the assurance in writing was in the year 1903, and the statement is contained in the 'Hansard' of that year. It is quite true that at page 4634 I said that I had an assurance from the government there personally and in writing that that policy would be maintained. I do not know what was in my mind when I made that statement but I suppose I thought that I had such a writing. Since the reference to this question in the early part of this session I have had a careful search made among the papers which I brought back with me from Japan and I have not been able to find any document which would justify the statement that I had that assurance in writing. I wish to make that statement and I would have made it before if I had had the search made to which I now refer.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that only after the matter was called to his attention he came to the conclusion that he never had that written statement?

Mr. FISHER. I could not find anything that would show that I had that written statement. I have no such document. I cannot find any such document amongst the papers I brought back from Japan. I do not know whether what I said on that occasion—it is now more than four years since I made the statement—was a slip of the tongue. whether I was misrepresented, or whether I believed at the time that I had such a document. But, I have not that document. I have searched carefully through the papers that I brought from Japan and no such document has been found.

Mr. FOSTER. It is rather a grave statement for a minister to make. In 1903 there were no ifs and buts about it. It was rather a grave crisis and in 1906 it was the same. We were called upon as a parliament to vote a treaty, and we were asked to vote that treaty on certain assurances. We had two assurances, one by the right hon. leader of the government that there would be no emigration except a very limited one, so many from each province and that we might rely upon that. The other was one which we equally regarded—a statement by the Minister of Agriculture that he had a personal assurance and that he had an assurance in writing. Consequently, parliament was led by these two statements, I myself was led by these two statements and I think members of parliament on both sides were led by these two statements to cease their criticisms of the treaty very much and to rely upon these as being true. Now, I do not want to say that my hon. friend designed to mislead the House but it only shows how careful a minister ought to be in making statements upon which great questions hinge that those statements are founded on fact. Now my hon. friend has made, after the whole business is over, what is really a retraction of the statement that any such authority was placed in his hands. I cannot blame my hon. friend too much, but I do say that it is rather a grave matter where a minister of the government so unhesitatingly makes these promises and then, when a certain course has been laid out and followed on the faith of these promises, we are told in the House that it was a mistake and that this assurance never was given to him. One other thing which my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) is said to have brought back is an order of the Immigration Department that only direct passage should entitle an immigrant from any country to come into Canada. That was made much of by the hon. member for Vancouver to-night but my hon. friend will be the first to agree with me that it is a mere regulation of the Department of the Interior and does not depend in any way upon his mission to Japan. Why could not that have been done before? Why could not the alien law have been enforced before? Why could not the assurances of the Japanese government have been enforced before they were enforced? Then, I ask again. what really has my hon. friend brought home from Tokio? He has gained knowledge by going there. He has become acquainted with the public men of Japan and the public men of Japan have become acquainted with the representative from Canada. In that respect good feeling between the two countries has been helped by that mission and I have no doubt that the explanation given by my hon. friend has done much to give fuller information to the Japanese authorities than they otherwise would have had. I give him the full credit for all of this, but as to his having succeeded in bringing anything new or permanent back, anything fresh from Tokio, my opinion is that he has not been successful in doing that, and I do not see very well how he ever could have hoped to have done so under the present circumstances.

Now, I have taken up time with a cursory discussion of this matter. One thing further I wish to bring to the attention of the House and that is to point out the part British diplomacy has played in this matter. British diplomacy and the good sense of the Liberal Conservative government in 1895 blocked out for these hon. gentlemen a path, which, if they had taken it, we never would have had this trouble in British Columbia during this last year. The Liberal-Conservative cabinet in 1895, although they had not passed into the troublous times with Japan and Japanese immigration, had some knowledge of the Chinese difficulty and they looked forward to the same from Japan, and they absolutely named the requisitions which were necessary to protect this country. The British government aided the Canadian government in that, and it went so far as to the preparation of a protocol which they had agreed to by Japan, and if that had been made part of the treaty it would have absolutely protected Canada in all this trouble which has come since. More than that, on two occasions Mr. Chamberlain himself, in 1888 and in 1889, brought to the attention of this Canadian government the advisability of passing something like a Natal Act for the protection of this country, something like a general Natal Act, so that it would have the authority of the Dominion parliament and would not be a constantly recurrent source of trouble in legislation from the province of British Columbia, which felt the brunt of this immigration. My right hon. friend is conversant with these despatches. On two occasions Mr. Chamberlain brought that way of escape to the mind of the Canadian government. More than that, after they had decided that they would ask the British government to find out from Japan whether they would be allowed to adhere to that treaty, Lord Lyttelton again gave a warning, and offered a chance for protection to this government. He said in effect: you have an opportunity to have the same conditions as were in the Natal Act; do you wish to take that or do you wish to unreservedly and absolutely adhere to the treaty. And not content with bringing that once to the attention of this government, after two months had passed and they had not answered that telegram, an inquiry is again made as to whether the Canadian government would take that method or whether it would take the method outlined by Mr. Fisher who made a speech in the Canadian House of Commons on the lines of unreserved and absolute adherence to the treaty. So that in the first place, by making a treaty which did not include Canada unless Canada wished to be included, by Mr. Chamberlain's two suggestions as to the protection that Canada should make as against Britain's ally, Japan; two attempts made by Lord Lyttelton to lead this government as it were into the lines of that same protection; after all that had been done and pointed out by the British government, the Canadian government instead of carrying out that line of policy and protecting the country in that way, chose to unreservedly and absolutely adhere to that treaty. British diplomacy did not make any mistakes in that respect. My right hon. friend says: but we could not go against an ally. Who are the allies? They are Great Britain and Japan. And here was the British government forming the very channel and method of escape and of protection; the British government who was co-ally with Japan. Does my right hon. friend think that the chief ally of Japan, the ally mainly interested, the ally upon whom the brunt of the treaty obligations absolutely fall, does my right hon. friend think that what she suggested might be done, was an affront to the people of Japan. It seems to me that the principal ally of Japan should be the best judge of that. I believe firmly that my right hon. friend at this late date is trying to cover his retreat under this new doctrine, for the delay and the negligence which prevented him in some way or other from carrying out the straight line of policy which was laid down in 1896 and which was fathered by the British government itself.

Mr. PATERSON. Were you in favour of the treaty as it was passed?

Mr. FOSTER. Another man thirsting for information; I will have quite a class after a time. My right hon. friend ventured a disquisition as to the Caucasian and the Mongolian races. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) believed, according to his speech, that the difficulty arises in the settled and eternal antagonism there is between the Mongolian and the Caucasian races. I do not subscribe to that doctrine in its entirety. I know that races differentiate themselves in ideals, standards of life, methods of civilization and methods of government, so that there is a distinct channel between the two which it is more or less difficult to cross. But I do not believe all that there is an eternal and irradicable antagonism between the Caucasian and Mongolian races, nor do I believe that this question which we are discussing arises from that cause chiefly or in its entirety. I believe that the question is an economic one, and I believe that the economic question comes to be a serious question the moment competition touches a class which is jealous of its rights, and which is powerful, or thinks it is powerful, to enforce its rights. The Japanese students circulated throughout the United States and Canada in greater or lesser number and we heard no voice raised against them. The race was there, the antagonism should have been to the front but we heard no indication of it. The Japanese merchant came over into Victoria and Vancouver and he set up the sale of his wares alongside and in competition with the Canadian merchant, but we heard nothing of riots and the antagonism of race. The competition was not such that it made itself felt, and the economic question did not come to the front, and so Japanese doctors, and lawyers, and travellers, and students, and scholars in numbers may have come and circulated throughout this country and you would not have heard much about the antagonism of race. As they took part in our affairs the ideals of the two and the ideas of the two would be contrasted, but the difficulty took place when the economic factor entered in a clean straight-away competition, where standards of life, rates of wages, and ideas of family are the impelling causes and the basic reasons for that difference of opinion and that class of interests, it is really a clash of interests. My own belief is that primarily it is an economic question, and I think prudence must be exercised and great care must be taken in order that that economic question should be properly solved. It is a large question. It is not merely a local competition between the Mongolian and the Caucasian on the streets of Victoria or Vancouver. The question is a wider one and it is daily broadening. Our front door may now be said to be almost on the Pacific. Right across our waters are our neighbours, and the fluent passage between the two is a bond that unites rather that a chasm which separates them. And so there is looming up in the awakening races on the other side of the Pacific, our next-door neighbour, our front door neighbour—there is looming up in these awakening millions a promise of a contest on competitive economic lines first and foremost, which some time or other may be very apt to emerge and expand into a clash on other than economic grounds—on grounds of nationality and the balance of power. There are the great factors in the future of the world. I believe that Europe has played her greatest comparative part in the history of the world. I believe that the future of this world and its most vexing questions lie in that dense mass of population awakening to life—now awakened to life in one nation, more than half awakened in another nation of three or four hundred millions, with inexhaustible resources, with a population hardy, born to labour, with at the present time not a high scale of living by any means or a high ideal of life in respect to social or family requirements. Within a decade or two decades that four hundred millions of people will be all alive; today every indication shows it. When they become alive, with their immense labouring power, with their low wage, with their adaptability to any employment, with their strong inventive or imitative genius, whichever you have a mind to call it, there is preparing a problem which we Canadians, as having a strip of coast on the Pacific are vitally interested in, and in which either we or our descendants will have to play a prominent part. When that contest comes on it will test the power. By and by I believe that the contest and the clash, if it does not get beyond economic questions, will largely by the flux and change, equalize the conditions of the east and the west, and therefore do away with the great cause of the trouble. The Japanese are not going to be satisfied long with a few small coins per day for their labour; they are not going to be satisfied very long with a low scale of living, the ideals and ideas will expand, and a few decades of this pervading, enterprising civilization and adaptation of their wonderful resources, will change the base of their competition with other countries, and will put them more on an equality. But that is a good while in the future maybe—not so long as some of us may think, but yet a good while; and during the time that equalization is being made there will be strenuous times. There is more than that in it, and therein lies another grave question not only for Canadians but for the American people as well and maybe also the British people. Australia and New Zealand lie exposed; the shores of Canada lie exposed. When that four hundred millions of people wake to life, their own country will not contain them; their populizing, emigrating hordes will spread out somewhere, and whether will they spread? Will they crawl over those immense table lands which divide them from Europe, and attempt the conquest of European countries, or will they glide easily across the waters on which float navies which will compete with the greatest navies of the world thirty or forty years from now, and colonize on the easily-accessible shores of America, of Australia, of New Zealand? These possibilities, which loom up in the future, may seem to be a long way ahead. But Canada is said to be becoming a nation; if she is, she must take long looks forward and seriously study her policy towards what she may think lies in the future. The Japanese race is a dominating race; it is a powerful race; to-day its army and its navy bear comparison with the best army and the best navy in the civilized world. Its population is enormous. Its soil is poor in part and restricted greatly. Formosa it has, Saghalien it has subdued with population, Korea it is filling up, parts of Mongolia it will take to itself; but when Japan and China together become emigrating countries, then we may look out for other things than the economic question; and there is where I draw one lesson at least—that it is arrant folly for us in Canada to take the least step which would disintegrate us from the mighty power of Britain which must be our great protector. Without a navy, without an army, with no prospects of a near navy or a near army, we must not, by veiled allusions and ill-meant criticism and childish strainings after power that we cannot carry out, disintegrate the bond that holds Britain and ourselves together; and further, we must do what we can to strengthen the bonds between the great British people on this continent and the people of the United States. I am glad my hon. friends cheer that sentiment. I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will cheer it. I hope it is a sentiment that all my hon. friends on that side will always cheer. But I thought I observed a litttle derision in the cheer; why was the derisive note ? I cannot think why, except that they look upon this statement as being a prop to the policy of my right hon. friend, who is cultivating good will with the Japanese and sacrificing the rights of Canada to be the arbiter of her own immigration policy. If Great Britain bears the brunt, then Great Britain's advice may well be followed, and Great Britain's advice was in the line of the protection of this country in the matter of immigration by a clause in the treaty the same as Queensland had and particularly the same as the United States had.

I cannot help but think that in this first essay of this new diplomacy—if it be the first—a mis-step has been made, and that mis-step consists in putting our trust in ephemeral promises and fleeting assurances rather than in the guarantee of a solemn treaty. All nations have at all times used this means of guaranteeing their respective rights. No nation would dream of rejecting the form of a sacred contract, backed by the influence and the power of the parties to it and trusting its rights and interests to the mere promise of any personality, who may disappear at any moment and whose word is not binding on those who succeed him. Yet this latter course is the one which my right hon. friend has chosen to follow, and the evil consequences of which this country has already begun to experience.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). It is gratifying to find that after my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has spent over an hour in showing wherein he and his party differ from the government on this question, he was forced, in his peroration, to endorse the position taken by the right hon. the leader of the government. He was forced, I will not say by his own eloquence or his own arguments, but by stress of circumstance, by the facts of the case, to come to that conclusion. The hon. gentleman says that we must hold together the bonds of the British empire and that, for the safety of Canada we must keep close, to the mother land. Well, I venture to say, that in no way can we better keep under the aegis of her protection and the wings of her fleet than by having respect for and confidence in the greatest ally which the mother country has to-day in all the world.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the gloss you put upon my speech ?

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman express that opinion. I am glad to find that the whole trend of his argument, his whole attack upon the government, leads him directly to a goal opposite the one he wished to reach. Neither the hon. gentleman nor his leader has been able to rise to the occasion and set aside their desire for party advantage or personal advancement ; but I am sorry to find that, in their zeal for party and personal advantage, regardless of the public interest, they should have given expression to their resentment in the form of an amendment to the motion to go into supply. These hon. gentlemen spoke of their friendliness for Japan, they admitted that Japan was a country which lived up to its obligation, and yet in the very body of this resolution is the implication that Japan has broken faith with our country. But the facts, Sir, prove the very reverse. What is the complaint of hon. gentlemen opposite ? They complain that the ratification of the treaty by Canada in 1906 was almost immediately followed by a great influx of Japanese labourers into British Columbia. That is true, but what has that to do with this motion unless hon. gentlemen opposite mean that Japan was particeps criminis in that immigration. The implication is however both disingenuous and unfair when we consider the report made by the deputy Minister of Labour after the investigation he held at Vancouver into that very Japanese influx. What was the agreement entered into by Japan through her consul general ? It was that only a limited number of labourers from each province or prefecture of that empire should be allowed to leave it for Canada in each month of the year. Take the numbers which were allowed to come in each year. They have been variously estimated at 500 or 600. Well, what were the facts? In the ten months of 1907 —the statement is to be found on page 11 of the report of Mr. Mackenzie King—there was a total arrival of 8,125. Of these 77 were rejected, 3,619 were admitted to the United States after passing through Canada, and 4,429 remained in Canada. Of these 2,779 came from Hawaii, 9 from Mexico and 1,641 from Japan direct. If we analyse these 1,641, we find that 900 came in under agreement with the Tokio Immigration Company. One hundred and fifty-one were immigrants to the United States who were rejected by the United States officers and allowed to remain in Canada; about 300 were formerly resident in Canada, and of the remainder, 290, 100 were merchants, students and travellers, and 190 were friends of the Japanese in Canada, admitted on certificates of the Japanese consul.

Let me first say a word with regard to the 900 who came in under agreement with the Tokio Immigration Company. It is improper and unfair for any Canadian to accuse the Japanese government of being responsible for these, because every one of them came to Canada, at the request of prominent Canadians, under a contract given to a Japanese company—a company incorporated under the laws of British Columbia, a company authorized by Canada to do this very work and which entered into contracts with gentlemen of the highest position in Canada to bring these Japanese into our Dominion. To accuse the Japanese government of allowing these people to come improperly into Canada, under their arrangement with Canada, is a most disingenuous statement of the case.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the alien labour law ?

Mr. FISHER. That only applies to a country which has an alien labour law against us. It does not apply to Japan, but it applies to the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. And Hawaii belongs to the United States.

Mr. FISHER. I will come to that in a few minutes. The contract labourers did not come from Hawaii. The 900 contract labourers came from Japan and it was the Canadian Nippon Company which brought them. This leaves us with only 190 Japanese who came into Canada during the ten months of that year under the arrangement made between the right hon. leader of the government and the consul-general of Japan. During that time and under that arrangement, the Japanese would have been perfectly justified in granting passports to as many as 600 Japanese coming into Canada. I say again that the accusation that the Japanese broke faith in 1907 and departed from the arrangement made with us is not a fair accusation against the Japanese, and no Canadian is on good ground who makes that accusation.

Now, a word as to the case of Hawaii, from which my hon. friend says, a large number of Japanese come. It is true a large number have come from Hawaii. The alien labour law would apply in such cases if Japanese came under contract ; otherwise, they had the right to come. Under the old arrangement, we have no right to deal with the Japanese that come into this country who are not under control of the Japanese government. Now, the whole country know that, just lately, the Americans have begun to plead with the Japanese to give them an arrangement. My hon. friend says that the Americans have a treaty under which they have the right to restrict Japanese immigration into the United States. If the Americans believe they have that right under the treaty, a right so highly extolled by hon. gentlemen opposite, as one that we ought to seek to obtain, why is it that, to-day, the representatives of the American government are doing their best in Tokio to obtain an arrangement exactly similar to what my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) has obtained for us ? It has been stated in recent telegraphic reports that the Japanese have absolutely prohibited emigration from Japan to Hawaii by arrangement entered into with the United States. We know that the regulation of immigration into Hawaii was a voluntary arrangement of the Japanese government regardless of the treaty. And the American government, with that clause, are pleading with the Japanese government to give them something which they have not yet given them, but which they have given to Canada, as represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux). My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) speaks of Hawaii as a danger spot. We know that as far as Hawaii is concerned, the Canadian government is free, under the arrangement with Japan, to deal with Japanese from Hawaii the same as they deal with other people who come from the United States. And the Alien Labour law, and more than the Alien Labour law, applies in regard to Japanese coming from Hawaii, because the Japanese government, under the arrangement made with my hon. friend, is giving us a free hand to deal with the Japanese from Hawaii, and exclude them if we wish.

My hon. friend expressed, at the beginning of his remarks, astonishment at the course and the speech of my right hon. friend the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not quite know the cause of that astonishment ; I can only conceive it to be the astonishment of a man who cannot understand a greater man, the astonishment of a man who keeps on the low plane of party politics and cannot rise to the higher plane of a national obligation. But if those hon. gentlemen would learn from experience, if they would watch his course, they would understand that the head of the government of Canada is able to deal with international matters and able to maintain the dignity and credit of Canada in a way that perhaps they cannot understand, and that astonishes them, but in a way of which the people of Canada are proud. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden), in his motion, gives evidence that he cannot understand these things. He speaks in a laudatory manner of the Japanese. These gentlemen profess friendship for Japan at the time when they throw insult in her face. By this resolution they seek to declare a policy here in favour of the advantages of a commercial treaty with Japan, while they throw insults in the face of a sensitive and proud people. Is that the way to deal with international obligations? Sir, if this Canada of ours is to assume a position amongst the nations of the world, if we are to play the role of a nation, we must see to it that we assume the responsibilities of a nation, and that we act in accordance with the necessities and practices of international negotiations between great nations, and not try to drive a hard bargain, or seek to make conditions unworthy of a great nation. Hon. gentlemen opposite apparently cannot rise to this position. But it is a happy thing for the people of Canada that we have at the head of affairs a man who can, and does, and will.

Hon. gentlemen opposite consider that assurances from such a people as the Japanese are not worthy of confidence. That is the whole tenor of their amendment. If they do not hold that view, they may as well give up argument upon that question. But we have not only had the assurances, we have had the practice. The leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) obtained by arrangement with Mr. Nossé, in 1902 or 1903, an arrangement restricting immigration. That restriction has continued from that day to this. It is true that during a few months last summer, under circumstances very exceptional—circumstances for which, as shown by the investigation of Mr. Mackenzie King, if any people were to blame they were Canadians and not Japanese—there was an increase in immigration. Under these circumstances, it is unworthy of the opposition, and would be unworthy of the government or people of Canada, to say that the assurances of the Japanese are not worthy of confidence, for they have lived up to their assurances during all this time. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has spoken about treaties and about foreign policies, and has stated—and, if I remember right, the leader of the opposition stated practically the same thing—that if a change of government were to take place in Japan, the pledges given to-day by Viscount Hayashi might easily be gone back upon.

My hon. friend read a few minutes ago a statement of some high official in Japan, which would indicate that the government of which Count Hayashi is a member has not a very large majority in the Diet; and I can only conclude that he thinks it is possible that a new government may arrive in Japan shortly which might not continue to fulfil the pledges of Viscount Hayashi. Well, Sir, I regret to think that a gentleman holding the position of leader of the opposition in the Canadian parliament, or his first lieutenant, should take such a low view of the obligations of the constitutional government of a self-governing people, as to suppose that international obligations only last as long as the government which has assumed them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not speak of it in that way, but from a very different consideration.

Mr. FISHER. I understand him fully, my hon. friend spoke of assurances.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not. I spoke of forbearance, and insisting upon their rights, which is a very different thing.

Mr. FISHER. A letter of Viscount Hayashi contains an expression on that point which I will read in a few minutes. But it augurs badly indeed for the future of Canada if, by any misfortune, these hon. gentlemen ever get to the treasury benches and attempt to carry out the principles which they now say would be quite proper and right for the Japanese people to carry out. I think the people of Canada will consider long before they allow these gentlemen to cross the floor and come to this side of the Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. That is high politics.

Mr. FISHER. Well, I am trying hard to get down to the hon. gentleman's level. This is another reason amongst the many I have heard why, before the opposition can succeed in obtaining the confidence of the people of Canada, they will have to change their leaders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We will not make statements about written documents and have to take them back.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend says that one government in Japan may not fulfil the pledges made by another government. Does the hon. gentleman know that the government which, through Consul General Nossé, gave to Sir Wilfrid Laurier those pledges, is not the present government of Japan, but one of the opposite party, and that to-day Viscount Hayashi is fulfilling the pledges ,and more than fulfilling the pledges. which were given through Consul General Nossé by the government of Count Katzura who is head of the opposite party in Japanese politics. The present government in Japan have proved that they do realize their international obligations, and are determined to carry them out, even if the opposition in Canada does think that it is not incumbent on them to do so. Sir, a moment ago the hon. gentleman spoke about Sir Ernest Satow's despatch, and said that the right hon. leader of this government was quite willing to take his opinion on one question and ignore it on another. It is true that Sir Ernest Satow did make a statement in regard to the colonies of Great Britain which my right hon. friend did not consider as carrying much weight. Sir Ernest Satow did say this :

I assured him, however, that so far as I could foresee there would, in all probability, be no necessity for either Canada or the Australian colonies placing restrictions on the Japanese.

That is quite right. And again, in the same paragraph, but a little before, he says :

It seems obvious that the Japanese government, who have taken nearly four months to consider their reply, desire to be in a position to terminate the treaty whenever any of the colonies that might accede to it with this proviso proceeded to legislate against the free immigration of Japanese labour, and I could not conceal from His Excellency my feeling that this was not a very friendly attitude to take up.

My hon. friend says, yes that is perfectly true, but there is this difference. Sir Ernest Satow had been British ambassador in Japan for over a decade. He thoroughly knew the Japanese character and Japanese thought, and he is to-day the greatest living authority on Japanese traditions and Japanese literature. Even amongst the Japanese themselves he is accepted as the best authority upon their legends, their history and their literature. And surely after living for nearly twenty years in Japan, having had no social relations during that time with the British people and the self-govern ing colonies, his opinion of what Canada and Australia may desire to do with regard to oriental immigration is of no value at all. He knew nothing of the sentiments and feelings of the British self-governing colonies. But he was the greatest authority upon purely Japanese questions that there was at that time, and this is the reason why the Prime Minister was quite justified in accepting Sir Ernest Satow's opinion in the one case, and rejecting it in the other.

My hon. friend a few minutes ago spoke about our wishing to deny to the people of Canada the right to legislate in regard to immigration. We do not desire to deny them that right, but we find that we can accomplish the desired object in a different way, in a better way. If we were to undertake to legislate as they would have us do, we would immediately find that treaty denounced, and the commercial classes and the labouring classes in Canada would lose the advantage which they now possess in that treaty with Japan under the most favoured nation terms. I want here to say a word with regard to the interest of the labouring classes with regard to the Japanese question. Most people in Canada seem to think that the labouring classes must necessarily be opposed to oriental immigration. I will not discuss that question in detail, but I want to point out that if, in the near future, the glorious picture painted by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) of the progress and advancement of oriental nations comes true, there is no other market on the face of this earth that will be so valuable to Canadian industry and Canadian labour as this oriental market, and it is only by a treaty of this kind that we can obtain the advantages of that market. Sir, the labouring men of Canada are perhaps more interested than anybody else in getting access on favoured terms to the Japanese market. They are going to reap the benefit of sending Canadian products to that market. The labourers who work in our mills, in our factories, on our farms, in our mines, these are the men who are going to reap the profit arising from access to the markets of Japan, and it is only by a treaty of this kind that this market can be opened to our products. It is true that men whose capital is invested in Canadian industries will reap an advantage ; but on the whole it is the labouring men of Canada, through whose toil and intelligence Canadian industries are developed, who will reap the greatest advantage of a commercial treaty with Japan. And if, by conciliatory methods by taking care not to offend the sensibilities and affront the feelings of the Japanese people, we can maintain a good understanding with them and preserve their market for our products, surely we ought to take the conciliatory course, and oppose every proposition in this parliament that would tend to deprive us of that advantage.

Sir, I will not deal further with the points at issue, but I do want having studied this Japanese question and the people of Japan, to say a word or two in reference to what the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said at the end of his speech. There is nobody in Canada who has a higher opinion of the Japanese people than I have. I have had the opportunity of studying them in their homes, I have had the opportunity of enjoying their hospitality. I have had the opportunity of intercourse with their leading men and of mixing with a large number of their men who have gone abroad, who have studied European and American civilization, and who have introduced the methods of that civilization in a highly successful form into the empire of Japan. I know that to-day the whole world is standing admiring the Japanese. I am one of those who do that. I appreciate that the Japanese, for long centuries, were a highly cultivated people and a people with the highest civilization—not the same civilization as ours, quite different in its development, quite different in many of its characteristics, but a civilization enduring through the centuries and based on study, science, art, and literature. Suddenly they threw open their doors to the world, rather by the coercion of the outside world and they came into contact with the western civilization, a civilization which in some respects had made in certain lines greater progress than they had, a civilization which in mechanical development, in industrial development, in the manufacture and in the use of arms, had gone far ahead of them. They, at first, when they came into contact with that civilization, tried to see how they could adapt it to their own conditions. The outside world went to Japan, people travelled in Japan, and the Japanese were talked about and written about as barbarians. A few, like Sir Ernest Satow, studied their literature and art and gave them full credit for the splendid development which they had achieved in these branches of human knowledge, but they were at this time held of little account amongst the nations of the world. They went to work, adopted the methods of warfare of the western nations. they adapted them to their own conditions and they did that work so well that in a few years, after a few struggles of a minor kind, they suddenly showed that they were able to grapple with and defeat one of the greatest empires on the earth. Then, for the first time the Christian world began to admire the Japanese because they know how to fight, not because they had excelled in art, not because they had a literature of a thousand years, not because, when our forefathers were barbarians their forefathers were highly civilized, not because they had a scientific training, not because they had a history, traditions and inspirations of patriotism that western nations cannot emulate and cannot equal, but when they were able to show that in the barbarism of war they were equal and superior to the western nations the western nations bowed down and worshipped them. It is a commentary on western civilization and on Christianity but it is the truth.

Now, Sir, I say these things as a preface. My hon. friend the member for North Toronto who is a fine word painter is the spokesman of a great many people in the western world when he expresses the views which he has presented as to the Japanese. I do not share those views. To-day there is no doubt that in so far as war is concerned, in so far as national force is concerned, the Japanese are amongst the greatest nations of the world, but, Sir, as they go on changing their civilization, as they go on adapting themselves more and more to our kind of progress and advance in that direction I believe that they will become weaker and weaker. I believe, Sir, that the evils which have sapped the manhood and the vital force of many of our western nations will spoil the Japanese in the present strong vigour of their newly adapted military regime, and I have still confidence that whether it be on the Pacific coast, whether it be on the continent of America, whether it be on the broad Pacific or whether it be on the Asiatic continent itself, the Anglo-Saxon will come out on top and will be able to hold his own against Chinese, Japanese or anybody else. It may be that at times we will falter, that we will be behind, but I have no doubt that as has often been said of the Briton he will blunder through and we will come out the victors in the end. I am not afraid on this continent of America of the inroads of these people or that hundreds and thousands of Japanese may come to Canada and rule this continent—not a bit of it. Many of them may come in. I am not so much afraid as some people that many of them will come in. There was an allusion made this afternoon to a proposal to take 10,000 acres of land in the Northwest and cultivate it as a Japanese farm. I do not know that it will be any great injury to the people of Canada to take 10,000 acres of the Northwest which is not highly cultivated and which is not highly productive and place it under Japanese methods of cultivating. I do not know that it would hurt, and I have confidence that if a few thousands, or a few tens of thousands, or I do not hesitate to say, if a few hundreds of thousands of Japanese came into Canada the present Canadian people will still rule this land and our ideas of constitutional and representative government will be maintained and the Japanese will have to come to our ideas and our views if they are going to become citizens of Canada and we not to theirs. For these reasons I am not so very much afraid of Japanese immigration as some people are, but at the same time I appreciate and I know, as has been so well said by my right hon. leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that there are times for all things and that with the prejudice in the minds of many we cannot force these things against prejudice. If, Sir, by reason of the arrangement, by reason of the understanding, which is no uncommon thing amongst the nations of the world, apart from and outside of the treaty obligations, we can reach a point where all the prejudices and fears of those who have prejudices and fears in Canada are cared for and not trodden upon or interfered with, and at the same time we can reap the advantage of the best treatment in the Japanese market for our industrial and commercial wares I think we have solved the question. I know that the line of argument and thought of this amendment will fail of the object and that it would bring about a condition of affairs which would be disastrous to Canada, disastrous to the entente cordiale between the motherland and Japan and also of that cohesion in the British empire, which we on this side of the House, desire so much to uphold. But, Sir, we wish so much to uphold it that we work for it instead of working against it as he and his friends do. Sir, I leave this matter in the hands of the House and the country and I am satisfied that this amendment will be voted down by the majority which will only increase through the length and breadth of Canada the better is understood the policy of my right hon. friend the leader of the government and the policy of the hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I do not think the Minister of Agriculture will deny that the policy of the Conservative party on this question is in harmony with the wise suggestions which were made to Canada by the mother country, and that the policy of the Liberal party is antagonistic to the course recommended by the British statesmen who advised this government to take precautions which they foolishly neglected. The Minister of Agriculture, as did his leader, argued in this way. That we cannot afford to treat Japan now as we did years ago, because Japan has recently proved herself a first-class fighting power and demonstrated her ability to defend her rights. Well, that reminds me of the little boy who says: I cant hold my own against that big boy, he is too much for me and I am afraid to assert my rights. That is just the kind of argument that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture have addressed to this House. It is just in line with the statement of the Prime Minister to the people of British Columbia when he said: When I telegraphed to British Columbia that I was prepared to take the advice of her representatives with regard to Chinese immigration I did not intend to take their advice with regard to Japanese immigration, because Japan has suddenly become a first-class fighting power and we would have to treat them differently from the Chinese who are insignificant and can be treated just as we wish to treat them. The Minister of Agriculture tells us that we should rely upon the assurances that have been given by the Japanese authorities to Canada, and I take it that these are verbal, because we have no knowledge that there are any written assurances. Let me remind the Minister of Agriculture that several years ago he stated in this House that he had certain written documents in his possession that justified the course of policy then taken, but to-night, although we have relied upon that statement for years, he tells us to-day he does not think he ever had these documents. May we not find ourselves in the same position a few years hence with regard to the assurances said to have been given by Viscount Hayashi to the Postmaster General. We may find, as in the case of the solemn statement made by the Minister of Agriculture upon his honour as a member of this House and on his responsibility as a minister of the Crown, that these assurances amount to nothing at all. The whole trend of human affairs, in national matters, or in commercial matters, or in relation between individuals, points to committing all agreements to paper, because the human memory is deceptive and treacherous and the written instrument is necessary to fall back on if there is a difference of opinion as to a bargain. International agreements are always committed to paper; treaties are preserved in writing, and even conferences between the representatives of nations are set forth in protocols. But in the case which we are now discussing, which is a matter of the greatest international moment, we are told by the government that we have nothing to depend upon except the promises made between individuals, every one of whom may be dead within a few years. The Minister of Agriculture was rather annoyed because the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) pointed out that recent events seemed to show that the present government of Japan may cease to hold power within a short time, and because the hon. member (Mr. Foster) asked: What then is to become of these verbal agreements? Well, the obligation upon Japan to perpetuate these agreements is merely founded on the policy announced by an existing government, and what is to prevent the successors of that government saying: This was the policy of Viscount Hayashi and his colleagues, but it is not our policy. Then the Minister of Agriculture endeavoured to make the people of Canada believe that it would be a great advantage to Canadian labouring men and artisans if the markets of Japan were open to Canada. But every member from British Columbia has pointed out that even on this Canadian soil the Canadian labourer, familiar with the conditions and working in his own land, is unable to compete with Japanese labour here. If that be so in Canada, how much more would it not be the fact in the markets of Japan. It is, therefore, not such a wonderful thing that the artisans and the labourers and manufacturers of Canada should have the Japanese market thrown open to them. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been boasting for many years past of what the Liberal government has done, and the Minister of Agriculture is reported in the 'Globe' newspaper as having said at a banquet tendered him in Montreal :

> One of the greatest advances made by the Liberals was that Canada achieved the right to make her own treaties.

This he claimed was achieved by the Liberals since they came to power They had either the power to negotiate that treaty or to come in under a wise treaty made by England. But they ignored the advice of England and entrusted the rights of Canada to verbal negotiation. England drew attention to the matter twice. Here is the despatch that was sent to the Governor General on the 14th of July, 1905 :

> Referring to your confidential despatch of June 7 should Japanese government be informed that your government wishes to adhere to treaty of 1894 and supplementary convention of 1895 under same terms and conditions as Queensland in 1897 which Japanese government then agreed to extend to any other colonies adhering within prescribed period namely (1) that stipulation contained in 1st and 3rd articles of treaty shall not in any way affect laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of labourers, artisans, police and public security which are in force or hereafter may be enacted in Japan or in colony.

When the mother country said that according to her judgment it would be wise to have this provision put in the treaty, they entirely ignored her advice. They had become a great power and achieved the right to make a treaty themselves, and they decided to go on and make a verbal treaty. And they have done in this case as they have done over and over and again before —given away the rights of Canada ; and we will live to learn of the folly they have perpetrated. The hon. Minister of Agriculture went on to say :

I have here at my right hand our worthy Postmaster General, who has but recently returned from Japan after having completed a most satisfactory arrangement with that empire.

Satisfactory to whom ? To himself and his colleagues, but to nobody else in Canada that I know of. His supporters from British Columbia say : We accept it in the absence of anything better ; we are inclined to rely on it rather than support a motion of want of confidence in the government for not looking properly after the interests of Canada ; it may be that we will be enlightened in the future that our judgment was wrong in relying upon it ; but at any rate we cannot do better, and we will run the risk and accept it. Then he went on to speak of the treaty they had made with France—what a wonderful thing they had accomplished ; how Canada had been elevated to the status of a nation since the right hon. gentleman and his friends had got charge of the government. And yet go over the history of that government from 1897 to the present, and I say, and say it advisedly, that you will find that they never undertook to negotiate anything with any nation of the world that they did not make a bungle of or give away Canada's rights. They did it in connection with their first tariff, when they gave England a preference in our market. Sir Charles Tupper warned them that they were taking a great risk upon themselves. The Minister of Finance said he had no fear whatever that they were incurring any danger. What happened ? Later on we found that Germany made her protest against the action of this government, and the result has been that we have been deprived of the advantages of the German market from that day to the present time. This was done by people who claim to be elevated to the dignity of a nation, to have acquired the right by their tariff arrangements to negotiate with other nations as they saw fit. I say that was a bungle, and they have been endeavouring year after year to recover what was then lost, and they have not recovered it yet. The next step they took was to settle our disputes with the United States. They went to Washington, and spent a lot of time and wasted a lot of money, and then came back and admitted that they could not accomplish anything. What became of their boasted power as a nation, of their prescience, their sagacity, their diplomacy ? It all came to naught, and they found in the end that they were obliged to ask England to do what they could not do. Their next boast was that they were going to settle the Alaskan boundary question, and that England, in obedience to our request, appointed two Canadian plenipotentiaries to look after Canada's interests so that her rights would not be sacrificed as they had been when England undertook to settle our disputes with other countries. What was the result in that case ? The present Minister of Justice was one of the great and able men who went to look after Canada's interests. What happened ? A give-away of a large portion of our territory; we got nothing at all ; and they came back humiliated like whipped children and refused to sign the agreement. They admitted that they had absolutely no power, that they were entirely unfit for the business in which they were engaged. There was never in history a greater example of incapacity of men to represent a nation than we had on that occasion. It has been the same with everything they have touched in the line of international agreements, whether it is a treaty with Japan or a treaty with France or a treaty with Germany. Whatever they touch seems to be stamped with a want of business acumen, a want of intelligence, a want of knowledge, a want of diplomacy, a want of statesmanship. This sinks them lower than the level of the ordinary politician, if we judge them by their acts. It is to be hoped that after this we shall hear no more boasting of what they have accomplished. I venture to predict that before many years pass they will be obliged to come to this House and admit that in the present instance they were not equal to the task that they had undertaken, that they did not safeguard Canada's rights, that they had nothing to fall back upon to indicate what Japan was to do or what Canada was to expect from her. We have accepted a mere verbal agreement. Either of the contracting parties may recede from the position it has taken ; there is nothing to indicate that both parties were to be bound by anything. Is that creditable to the present government ? I think it is not Should it be satisfactory to the people of British Columbia ? I think it should not. A few weeks ago the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) came through Canada talking about what would result if the government did not control the importation of Japanese. He threatened that if they did not, there might be another Boston tea party. But what a change has come over the hon gentleman. His fighting vigour has all vanished into thin air and he roars about as loud as a sucking dove. He admits that this verbal agreement may not bind the Japanese government, but he is willing to trust them. The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) takes exactly the same ground and talks in exactly the same strain. This may not bind the Japanese government, he says, but we will trust them. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) is equally confiding. He even goes so far as to say that the agreement which the United States entered into would not have been of any value to Canada at all. Yet in his last speech on this question, the hon. gentleman regarded the government as improvident because they did not embody a similar provision in our treaty. Had they done that, he said, we would have had something to fall back upon, whereas now we have nothing. To-night however he performs the swallowing act and recants all he previously said.

We have heard a great deal to-night about that treaty and what it is going to accomplish. Well, we have heard many similar boastings in the past, and I have no doubt that time will demonstrate the unwisdom of what the government has done. Time will demonstrate the folly of our relying upon a verbal agreement with any other nation instead of having the stipulations embodied in a treaty. And the Canadian people will then realize the folly of this government in having refused to accept the advice of the mother country, and insert in the treaty a provision restricting immigration.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). I must apologize to the House for detaining it at this late hour, but I do not think I ought to give a silent vote on this question, the more especially as my views on immigration in the past have been what many hon. gentlemen would describe as rather narrow. In fact, had my views been followed, the immigration, not only from Japan, but from all other countries, would have been more than restricted. But, unfortunately for the country, in my opinion, they did not prevail, and to-day we find ourselves confronting the problem of dealing with an influx of people from a country entirely foreign to ours in every respect, and between whom and us there is not the sympathy common to all Caucasian races. Two reasons have been given for our having acceded to the treaty under which this immigration from Japan has been permitted. The first plea is the commercial interests of Canada, and the second is the political interests of the empire. Japan, it is argued, will furnish a market for Canadian manufactured goods, and in addition the interests of the empire demand that we should have more intimate relations with her great ally. But if I may quote the language used by Mr. McBride, in a letter dated Victoria, January, 1900, to the First Minister, not only imperial interests, but also local interests, should be taken into account. That is the position I take to-night. In my opinion, not only imperial interest should have been discussed in this House when the treaty was passed, but more particulary Canadian interests. The treaty, however, was passed by the unanimous consent of the House, because it was thought important for Canada and the empire. I do not think we had all the information which should have been given, but the House agreed to the treaty, and we have now to take the consequences.

We are told that this is simply a labour question and the outcome of labour agitation. I take a different view. In my opinion, it is a national question. It is not only important that the labouring element coming from Japan should be prevented entering this country and coming into competition with white labour, but it is still more important that this immigration should be restricted from a national point of view. I think it is far more dangerous perhaps that we should allow Japanese settlements on farm lands. It is a current report that the Japanese will come in and settle in the Northwest. If that be the case, we will not only have to deal with the labour question, but with the more important question of having in Canada settlements of people of an entirely different civilization from our own, with different ideals, and who consider everything from a different point of view. To-day in British Columbia there are 75,000 white people and 25,000 people of oriental extraction. According to those figures, the problem is still greater than we thought it, and I take issue with the hon. gentleman for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) when he says the question is only an economic one. I think it is more than that. If I quote rightly the words of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), the question is whether British Columbia is to be a white man's country or not. It is even more than that. The question is whether Canada will be a white man's country or not.

On one hand is the material progress of our country. We all know that, under the Japanese treaty, we have received material favours, which we should not have received if that treaty had not been made or if it had been denounced. But there is not alone the material progress of our country to consider—there is the moral and intellectual progress as well. It seems to me that we have been sacrificing the moral and intellectual to the material progress. But I suppose that what is done is done, and that remedies are only for an evil that we have brought upon ourselves, and that each side of the House can accept a share of the responsibility in bringing to our country an influx of oriental immigration. The gravity of the situation increased up to what has been called the crisis which took place in Vancouver last autumn, when there were riots and the populace of Vancouver raged against what was called an influx of oriental or yellow immigrants. To make a long story short; the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) was sent to Japan to negotiate, not a treaty—there was already a treaty passed by unanimous consent of this House—but what I think may be called a modus vivendi. What has been the result of the hon. gentleman's trip? I think I can say it in two words: The treaty is maintained. The Postmaster General has brought us from Japan assurances. He has brought what he calls two remedies for Japanese immigration—first, the route by Hawaii is barred, and, second, the Japanese authorities themselves agree to restrict emigration to Canada. The Postmaster General has read here the letter from the Foreign Minister of Japan, Count Hayashi, giving assurance that the Japanese government could restrict emigration of Japanese to this country. State reasons, we are told, prevent the Postmaster General from telling us exactly what were the assurances other than those given in the letter of the Japanese minister. It is too bad that state reasons have closed the eloquent mouth of the Postmaster General. I am sure the country would have been grateful to our Canadian plenipotentiary if he could have given us some details about the assurances which he has received verbally from Count Hayashi. I understand that it was impossible; and I perhaps guess right when I venture the thought that the reasons of the Canadian minister's secrecy are to be found in the negotiations by which the United States are trying to make a treaty with Japan. But we may well discuss the result of the trip of the Postmaster General and what he has brought back to remedy the evil of which the people of British Columbia complain. If we read the correspondence, we learn that, before the treaty was accepted by the Canadian government, Mr. Chamberlain, acting in the name of the imperial government, asserts—I think in a letter written in 1900—that Japan would not be opposed to the enactment by the Canadian parliament of the Natal Act. The Postmaster General tells us also that Japan was opposed to emigration to Canada. That being so, one would suppose that Japan would not be opposed to the enactment by Canada of the Natal Act; but the Postmaster General has told us also that Japan is a very proud and sensitive nation, and that discrimination by our country against Japanese subjects would have been most annoying to the imperial government of Japan. I think the Postmaster General has not made quite clear why Japan accepted the Natal Act from Queensland, but would have been much annoyed by an Act of that kind if passed by Canada. I think we can find the explanation in the correspondence. It is to be seen there that Mr. Nossé, offered every guarantee and every assurance, that he (if I may put it) used every caress and every blandishment, to cause the Canadian government to acquiesce in the treaty which had been made between Great Britain and Japan. It looked as if Japan would do anything in relation to emigration to Canada if this country would acquiesce in that treaty. I would not, I hope, insult the Japanese nation, but I must say that I think the compliments paid to Japan in this House are only half deserved. In this treaty the Japanese government seems to have played a double part. I may be told that I am a barbarian in diplomacy; I may appear to be treading on dangerous ground; but it seems to me that the part played by Japan in the negotiations or correspondence which preceded the treaty was not quite fair, and that the assurances we have now received from the Japanese Minister of Foreign Affairs may be taken with a grain of salt. We cannot be too sure that we have not received a Greeks' gift, and, by taking the word of the Japanese minister, have brought within our walls the wooden horse within which are concealed the forces of a hostile army. But we must take the correspondence as it is. We find ourselves faced with what the hon. member for North Toronto would call the imperial home policy on the one side and Canadian interests on the other side. It seems to me that we have been sacrificing Canadian interests for the imperial policy of Great Britain for the sake of an ally of Great Britain, which ally may appear in the near future as a most dangerous enemy, a nation which has its eyes upon Australia as well as a great desire to colonize British Columbia. However, we must take the situation as it is. The treaty is passed; it has been accepted with the unanimous consent of this House. Now, under the resolution of the leader of the opposition, we find ourselves face to face with a choice of three courses—one, to keep the treaty as it is; two, keep the treaty and have the Lemieux agreement; or, three, denounce the treaty. The leader of the opposition does not go so far as this latter, if I read his resolution aright. I may call the resolution not over-sweeping—it is a very tame resolution. I think it is admitted by everybody that in the interests of British Columbia the treaty cannot be kept as it is.

At the same time the resolution of the leader of the opposition does not go so far as to denounce the treaty; if it did, I would have no hestitation in supporting it. I would support it on this principle, that commercial relations and material interests are secondary to the intellectual, moral and national prosperity of our country. I cannot see that the resolution of the leader of the opposition has any other purpose than to blame the government for passing this treaty. The blame may be well deserved, but if it is deserved, it is deserved by both sides of the House, and by myself as well as by the leader of the opposition and the Prime Minister. Then I find myself face to face with this position, either keep the treaty under the Lemieux agreement, a treaty which brings material advantages to this country, or without the agreement. Now, if we keep the treaty we must necessarily keep it with the agreement which has been entered into between my hon. friend the Postmaster General and the Japanese government. If I understand rightly the letter read by the Postmaster General, it seems to me that no Minister of Foreign Affairs in any country could have given more satisfactory assurances of good will than those given by Count Hayashi to the Postmaster General. As I have said, if the leader of the opposition had moved for the denunciation of the treaty I would gladly have voted with him, because my policy—and in that respect I go beyond the leader of the opposition—is British Columbia for the British Columbians, Canada for the Canadians and Canada to remain a white man's country. I do not accept the agreement of the Postmaster General as being perfect, but I accept it as the only solution offered us at the present time. I agree with one of my hon. friends from British Columbia, that we might give the agreement a fair trial for a few months, and if we find it does not work satisfactorily we can denounce the treaty. It has been said during this debate that Japan is a growing power, a great nation, and that we can rely upon her word. Sir, I will not go that far. I will not look at Canadian interests from a Japanese point of view, nor from a foreign point of view at all; I look at Canadian interests from the narrowest point of view I can find. If my views could prevail in regard to immigration, I would restrict it from all countries to the narrowest possible proportions, so as to keep Canada for the Canadians. But this is not the point of view of the leader of the opposition, his resolution is practically only one of censure of the agreement of the Postmaster General. As I consider that is entitled to a fair trial, I shall vote against the resolution.

Mr. JOHN HERRON (Alberta). Owing to the lateness of the hour I shall speak but a few minutes. I listened with great interest to the Minister of Labour when he presented his report to this House. I give him credit for making an honest effort to extricate the government from the very unpleasant position in which they find themselves in regard to this Japanese question. It is only another case among many of this government locking the stable door after the horse has been stolen. In my opinion the government has made a bad bargain in the negotiations they have been carrying on with Japan. They have had years in which to consider this important question, and have made a very poor job of it. In the discussion on this question on the 16th of December last it was stated, I think by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith), that this Asiatic question began to be a serious one for British Columbia in 1884, at the time the Canadian Pacific was built, thereby connecting the Conservative government with the trouble in his province. Later it was stated, I think by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy) that it was a live question in 1877. I can say that it was a live question in 1875, for I was in British Columbia at that time in a mining camp where there were over 500 Chinamen at work. Of course I rank the Chinamen and the Japanese together when considering this question from a labour point of view. The question has been a live question ever since among the labouring classes in British Columbia. The Minister of Labour stated in his report that there were 75,000 white people in British Columbia and 25,000 Asiatics. He also stated that from the 1st of January last year to some time in October there came 8,125 Japanese into the province of British Columbia. Now at that rate of increase in population and adding to that the Chinese and Hindoo population, I suppose you could safely say that there would be——

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to make a statement that is not warranted by the facts.

Mr. HERRON. No.

Mr. LEMIEUX. When he says that I stated to the House the other day that 8,000 or about that number arrived in British Columbia, he forgets that I went on to say that 8,000 Japanese landed in British Columbia, 4,000 of whom, I hazarded, went to the United States, so that only 4,000 remained in British Columbia ; and I explained at the same time how many of the 4,000 came from the Hawaiian islands and how many from Japan direct.

Mr. HERRON. Of course, that makes a slight difference in the calculation ; but nevertheless we may not have a full account of all the Asiatics who have landed in British Columbia. There are several ways by which they can get into that country, and I have no doubt that they do get in in several ways besides landing at the seaports. So that my statement may not be very far out. But even taking it at half that number, within seven or eight years the Asiatic population would predominate in British Columbia, which I think any reasonable man will admit would be a very serious problem, not only for Canada, but for the empire as a whole. Good wages in British Columbia and plenty of work have always been a great attraction to Asiatics. That province is easy of access, they have come from the earliest days in great numbers, and they have invariably driven out the white labouring classes wherever they have come into contact with each other. That makes it a very serious problem. I am sorry there are not more hon. members in this House who at some time in their lives have had to earn their living by the work of their hands or by the sweat of their brows. If they had they probably would be able to appreciate this question more than they do at the present time. They would know what it is to earn a dollar, and they would therefore have more sympathy with the labouring man. The principle of protection is one which predominates in the legislation of this House. We give protection, in the form of bounties, on iron, steel, lead, coal oil and binder twine, and in the form of duties to manufacturers and also to farmers to some extent. I do not think it is right that the labourer, who does the bulk of the work, should be left entirely unprotected. I do not think that he should have to compete against Asiatic labour in any portion of this fair Dominion of ours. I cannot say so much about the Japanese immigrant, but it is a well known fact that although the Chinese is always ready to work for lower wages than the white man, he will get the best wages he can, and when he has earned a certain amount of money which enables him to go home and live in his own country in affluence he leaves our country. He is not in that regard like the white man. It is estimated that a Jap can live on one-fifth of a Canadian's wages. The better the wages earned by the white labouring man the more money he has to spend and the better he provides for his family. It is not so with the Asiatic, and that is one reason why I think it is wrong that our labouring classes should come into direct competition with the Chinaman, the Jap or the Hindo.

Now, I am only going to add one word more and then I am done. I would like to refer to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) here to-night in regard to a settlement of Japanese in Alberta. He would seem to welcome a large influx of Japanese into that province. I take issue with the minister right there. I never did and never will favour any class of people coming into our country and settling in bulk or as a colony. I do not think that is a good principle. I think it is wrong, but particularly to bring in a class of Asiatics and place them in our fair province of Alberta would be something that I for one am prepared to vote against. I understand that it is proposed that they shall enter into the manufacture of beet sugar. In case of that being done we may get cheaper sugar in the province of Alberta and in other parts of Canada perhaps, but we will certainly be at the loss occasioned by the probable closing up of our other sugar factories and the driving out of our white population. The Japanese, by the force of competition, will drive the white labour out as snow is driven back by an Alberta chinook wind.

Mr. J. B. KENNEDY (New Westminster). Mr. Speaker, I only wish to detain the House for a very few minutes. There is one consolation that the British Columbia members have, and that is that we have got both sides of the House at last to understand this question to a great extent, and to understand that we have always had a grievance in this line. All agree with us now that this is an evil that should be cured. We have heard some strange things from the other side of the House to-night. Some hon. members have told us that we must not suggest that they did not know all about this thing, while others have displayed their ignorance of the whole matter. But judging from the speeches which have been delivered, I think the opposition must be credited with possessing a fair amount of knowledge of the whole situation, and how they can reconcile this knowledge with their silent vote when the treaty was passed through the House less than a year ago is what I cannot understand. Let us suppose that there is a stranger sitting in the gallery here to-night listening to this debate, and let us suppose that he compares the statements which have come from the other side of the House with the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite when they allowed this treaty to go through the House without a dissenting voice; what will his conclusion be? His conclusion would be that either there was dense ignorance on the other side of the House on this whole question when the treaty passed the House, or that these hon. gentlemen are not sincere in what they say to-night. I think the government is making a fair attempt at a solution of this question, and I think that they should be allowed to put it into execution for a time at least without throwing any cold water upon it. For that reason, I mean to vote against this amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). I said at the beginning that I would not take up much of the time of the House, and I simply wish to make this explanation as to why I shall vote against the amendment, and why I want to see this matter get the fair trial that I think it is entitled to.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I do not think that at this late hour or, I should say, at this early hour in the morning, I should detain the House at any length after this long and protracted debate. Yet, as this amendment has been presented by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) after I have made a statement to the House, it is my duty to give a few reasons why it should not be adopted. I believe that the amendment drafted—I may say ably drafted—by the hon. leader of the opposition is nothing less than a subterfuge. I can find no other word in polite language to properly qualify it. There are only two policies discussed to-day in this country by the political parties with reference to oriental immigration. One policy advocates the exclusion of the orientals, and the other pronounces for the restriction of oriental immigration within reasonable limits. The policy expressed by the leader of the opposition during his campaign in western Canada, last fall, was a policy of complete exclusion. He argued before the British Columbians that if he were in power he would have a white British Columbia, which I understand to mean the exclusion of oriental labour, and which applied to the case in hand, means the exclusion of the Japanese.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the hon. minister whether his policy is not for a white British Columbia?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, sir.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not.

Mr. LEMIEUX My policy is to respect the treaty to which we have adhered unconditionally and unreservedly, relying, as regards immigration, on the assurances which have been given by the Japanese government. It is very easy for the hon. gentleman to provoke an answer, yea or nay, on the question whether there should be a white British Columbia or a yellow one, but the fact is staring us in the face that not only since this government has been in power but during the time of the previous Conservative government a large influx of yellow labour has gradually settled in that province. The policy of this government is for the restriction of oriental labour into British Columbia. The amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition may mean exclusion or it may not. In fact, my hon. friend can select any audience in any part of Canada, and according to the necessities of the case, he can argue that the amendment means exclusion or that it means restriction. Hence it is that I describe the amendment as a subterfuge, and as one drafted solely for the purpose of attacking the policy of the government. There is one other thing which I do not understand in the policy of the leader of the Conservative party in this instance. He has attacked this government because, forsooth, we have adhered unconditionally and unreservedly to the treaty with Japan, thus refusing to discriminate against the ally of Great Britain. For generations it has been said that the Conservative party was par excellence the party of imperialism. In the Conservative press and elsewhere time and again the Liberals have been accused of being the associates of those who in England are called 'Little Englanders.' The Conservative party in Canada was lauded as being the exponent of imperial ideas, but after what I have heard that day seems to have passed. Here is an occasion, if ever there was one, when the two political parties in this Dominion could sink petty political advantages and take sides with the mother country. Here is a question which should unite all Canadians, and yet the very party which for so many years has advocated an imperial policy takes quite a different line of action on the question of the Anglo-Japanese treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what respect?

Mr. LEMIEUX The hon. gentleman has advocated the exclusion of the Japanese from Canada, and the exclusion of the Japanese from Canada means a serious breach in the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Will my hon. friend deny that if the Dominion government should denounce the existing treaty it would mean a serious breach in the Anglo-Japanese alliance? The hon. gentleman knows fully well that it would bring to an end that Anglo-Japanese alliance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. To what words of mine does the hon. gentleman allude ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Take the speeches delivered by the hon. gentleman in British Columbia last fall ; take this very amendment drafted so ably by the hon. gentleman. Take the last paragraph ; I do not say it is an insult to the Japanese government, but it is an insinuation of bad faith against the Japanese government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what words ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In that the amendment says :

> That this House while expressing its profound appreciation of the friendly intentions and courteous assurances of the Japanese government, and while declaring its sincere desire for the most cordial relations with the Japanese people, desires nevertheless to record its strong protest against a policy under which our wage earning population cannot be protected from destructive invading competition except by entreating the forbearance and aid of a foreign government.

What is the meaning of this ? First of all the hon gentleman does not speak of the formal and candid assurance given by the Japanese government ; he speaks of the friendly intentions and courteous assurances of the Japanese government; then he refers to the danger to which our wage earning population is exposed, when he knows that it is part of the arrangement with the Japanese government that no contract labour can enter this Dominion coming from Japan, unless that contract labour is requested by the Dominion government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is the insinuation of bad faith ; that is what I want to know.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. gentleman in his amendment says : 'That this House while expressing its profound appreciation of the friendly intentions of the Japanese government desires nevertheless to record its strong protest against a policy under which our wage earning population cannot be protected.' It is all the other way ; the wage earning population of this country is specifically protected by the new arrangement, and the hon. gentleman seems to ignore that.

Mr. R. L BORDEN. Let us assume that is so; where is the charge of bad faith ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend knows that no contract labour—and that includes artisans—can in future enter this Dominion without the consent of the Dominion government. Yet by his amendment he wishes to record his protest against the policy under which our wage-earning population cannot be protected from destructive invading competition. Will he still ask me where is the insinuation of bad faith?

Mr. LENNOX. You have not shown it yet.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, I think I have made it very clear. I will show it again. My hon. friend states in his amendment that he wishes this House 'to record its strong protest against the policy under which our wage-earning population cannot be protected from destructive invading competition.' Besides, Sir, he speaks of the forbearance of a foreign government when, as a matter of fact, I have a straight agreement with the Japanese government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Where is the agreement ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That no contract labour can come into this Dominion without the consent or permission of the Dominion government ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Does not that letter say that the Japanese government has a perfect right to insist on free entry, but does not for the present insist ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will read the letter. of Count Hayashi. Really my hon. friend is not in earnest, or he would not treat with such levity the assurance given by the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Japan.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am treating the hon. gentleman's statements with levity, not those of the foreign minister—a very different thing.

Mr. Lemieux reading :

In reply to your note of even date, I have the honour to state that although the existing treaty between Japan and Canada absolutely guarantees to Japanese subjects full liberty to enter, travel and reside in any part of the Dominion of Canada, yet it is not the intention of the imperial government to insist upon the complete enjoyment of the rights and privileges guaranted by those stipulations when that would involve disregard of special conditions which may prevail in Canada from time to time.

My hon. friend is a constitutional lawyer of great ability, he will tell me it is possible for the foreign nation with the population and the status of Japan in the world, to speak more generously than she has spoken by the mouth of her Minister of Foreign Affairs ? Japan, under that treaty, has secured full rights for her subjects to enter, to travel, to reside in the Dominion ; yet, Sir, through her minister, she declares that she does not intend to insist upon the complete enjoyment of these rights and privileges. How can my hon. friend speak lightly of that letter and insinuate that there is nothing in it ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Nothing in it except the statement that they will forbear to insist completely on their rights.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Sir, the attitude of the Conservative party on this question is all against the traditions of its former leaders. Without imputing motives to the hon. gentleman, without belittling him in the least, I dare say that if Sir John Macdonald, Sir John Abbott or Sir John Thompson were occupying the seat of my hon. friend we would not have had this debate, but the House would have been unanimous in ratifying the agreement which we obtained at Tokio. Sir, this is not a party question; it is a national question before which party differences should sink. What is the question from the Canadian point of view ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the hon. gentleman leaves that, might I ask him one question ? If he considers that an insistence upon the reservation to Canada of a right to control immigration is against imperial interests, will he explain how it was that Great Britain, apparently without any suggestion from the other self-governing colonies, asked for them precisely the same thing ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. First of all, my hon. friend is probably not aware that it was after difficulties had been experienced in Australia and New Zealand that Mr. Chamberlain himself suggested the Natal Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not talking about the Natal Act ; the hon. gentleman misunderstands me. I have already read of the attitude taken by the Canadian government in August, 1895, when they desired the imperial government to inform Japan that Canada desired a certain proviso which would retain in her own parliament the control over immigration from Japan. The hon. gentleman thinks insistence upon that is against imperial interests. I ask him then how it was that Great Britain, without any suggestion from the other self-governing colonies of the empire, made on their behalf precisely the same request of Japan? Why should Great Britain do this if it were against imperial interests ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The circumstances in 1895 and those of to-day are quite different, both as regards Canada and Great Britain. We adhered to the treaty after Great Britain had made an offensive and defensive alliance with Japan. In 1895 there was no such alliance between Japan and Great Britain, so that the circumstances were totally different.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is on account of the changed circumstances. Why was it that the imperial government, on the 14th of July, 1905, and again on the 6th of September, 1905, called the attention of Canada to exactly the same stipulation ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend refers to the Queensland protocol. If he were as conversant with that correspondence as I happen to be, he would not make that statement. In 1905, when Mr. Lyttelton was colonial secretary and when Canada manifested a desire to adhere to the treaty, Mr Lyttelton, without committing himself to anything, simply asked the Canadian government if we desired to adhere to the treaty, with the Queensland protocol, or without it. That question was asked by Mr. Lyttelton for his own information, but my hon. friend infers that if we had replied to Mr. Lyttelton that we would adhere to the treaty subject to the Queensland conditions, we would have obtained them. Sir, during the negotiations at Tokio, we inquired from the Queensland government if that arrangement had ever been enforced and we were answered most categorically and emphatically that the arrangement only existed on paper and was simply a dead letter on the statute-book. We also know that the Queensland arrangement was agreed to by Japan under the circumstances explained by the right hon. gentleman in his speech last evening.

Let me recall again a few dates and a few facts. In 1894, Japan revised her treaty. Great Britain was the first power to accede to the new treaty. By clause 19 of that treaty Canada had an option of two years in which to accede or not to the treaty. In 1905, under totally different circumstances from those suggested by the hon. gentleman, we decided to adhere to the treaty unreservedly and unconditionally. And why, Sir ? Because in 1900 we had obtained from the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Japan the formal assurance that there would be no influx of Japanese immigration to Canada. I read the other day the letter of instructions sent by Viscount Akoi to the several prefectures of Japan. In that letter he states positively that in future no passports will be issued to Japanese emigrating to Canada. From 1900 until 1907, the year when parliament sanctioned the treaty, we had a perfect chain of assurances given by the representative of Japan in Canada that there would be no influx of labour immigration into British Columbia. We have the evidence in the report of the deputy Minister of Labour that these assurances were kept. But we are told : Why did you accept the assurances of a consular agent ? Why did you consent to treat with a man who had no authority to speak for the Japanese government? The hon. gentleman has read the correspondence which was laid the other day on the table of the House. I have not seen that correspondence of late, but I know that amongst Mr. Nossé's correspondence there are letters from the Japanese government and the Japanese ambassador in London to His Excellency the Governor General and the Prime Minister of Canada bearing on this most important question. The other day I stated to the House that in one of those letters the government of Japan instructed Mr. Nossé to hand His Excellency the Governor General and the Prime Minister of Canada the memo. of Japan, in which she gave her reasons why war was declared against Russia. Sir, if Mr. Nossé was allowed to be the channel of communication between his government and the Canadian cabinet on such an important question, had he not the right to speak on behalf of his government on a less important question, namely, the immigration question? We had that chain of assurances from 1900 to 1907. Suddenly, during the last months of 1907, we had an influx of Japanese immigration. About 4,000 settled in the province of British Columbia. I indicated the other day the source whence these came. They came, through the agency of the Nippon Supply Company, from Japan direct, and about 3,000 came from the island of Hawaii. It was under those circumstances that I was delegated to make such an arrangement with Japan as would in future prevent any such influx. What has been the result of that mission ? The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) declared that it was a failure and the hon. gentleman who leads the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) said practically the same thing. I do not wish to bore the House with the details of the agreement. But let me recall to you its general features. First of all, I have obtained from the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Viscount Hayashi—the same gentleman who negotiated with Lord Lansdowne the articles of the alliance between Great Britain and Japan in 1902—I obtained from him a formal written assurance that in future Japan will not take advantage of the letter of the treaty but will restrict immigration and will see that the local conditions in British Columbia are taken into consideration and the desires of the Canadian government met. This is a written assurance. It is not a mere conversation. It is a written assurance given by one nation to another.

Mr. LENNOX. The letter does not in any one sentence say it will restrict emigration.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have read the first paragraph. Let us see the second paragraph :

Acting in this spirit, and having particular regard to circumstances of recent occurrence in British Columbia, the imperial government have decided to take efficient means to restrict emigration to Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read on.

Mr. LENNOX. That is not the end of it.

Mr. LEMIEUX Well, I will read it:

In carrying out this purpose, the imperial government, in pursuance of the policy above stated, will give careful consideration to local conditions prevailing in Canada, with a view to meeting the desires of the government of the Dominion as far as is compatible with the spirit of the treaty and the dignity of the state.

Some hon. MEMBERS Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) cheering the last sentence? If that is the case, let me say to him that if a minister of Japan did not safeguard the dignity of his country in giving such an assurance to another nation I should pity Japan. Should any hon. member of this House happen to be Secretary of State or Prime Minister of Canada and being called upon to give an assurance of this nature to another nation on behalf of his country would not take care to safeguard our national dignity, he would not be worthy of public support.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to ask——

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. gentleman can speak after I am finished Now this assurance is one feature of the agreement. If this were the whole agreement I would say it was amply sufficient. My hon. friend may criticise——

Mr. LENNOX. You won't allow me to.

Mr. LEMIEUX. —he may quibble, he may twist the assurance as much as he pleases, but I can tell him that public opinion in Canada, public opinion even in British Columbia, accepts in good faith the assurances given by the Japanese government. But, Sir, that is not all. We have this written assurance from the Minister of Foreign Affairs. It is the more binding because it is given of Japan's own free will. We also have the declaration that we may stop any immigration of Japanese originating from the islands of Hawaii, whence this great influx of labour came. Still more than that, we have the formal declaration that no contract labour will come to Canada from Japan or Hawaii or any other place where Japanese are colonized. The only limitation is that this contract labour shall not be allowed unless the Canadian government agrees to it. Of course, the Canadian government will not agree to it—I can say that, as Minister of Labour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. minister (Mr. Lemieux), but perhaps he will allow me to ask a question regarding the interpretation of the letter. What is meant by the words 'spirit of the treaty?'

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is not worthy of himself. He is not serious in asking that question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, the hon. gentleman is quibbling on three words in the letter, a letter which has been duly appreciated and endorsed by sound public opinion as reflected in the independent press of Canada. I will come back to the objections of the hon. gentleman in a minute. I declared to the House on Tuesday last, that as an evidence of the good faith of the Japanese government, they had suppressed the immigration companies which were the chief cause of evil. Moreover, Count Hayashi has declared to parliament a few days ago that he had prohibited the three remaining immigration companies from carrying on any propaganda of immigration to Canada or the United States. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) says that this is a fraud ? That we must not trust the Japanese government ? That, forsooth, another government may come in office in ten days' time and upset that policy ? Then, Sir, my hon. friend does not know the parliamentary system of Japan. And he has a very poor opinion of Japanese statesmanship of either political party if he believes that, in matters of foreign relations, a new government would ignore a policy adopted by its predecessors. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that, in matters of foreign policy—yes, and in anything which shows the civilizing influence in Japan—the Japanese have as keen a sense of honour as the citizens of any other part of the world.

I have shown that this arrangement stops the immigration from Hawaii, excludes and suppresses the immigration companies. This I am authorized to state publicly. But why I particularly take issue with the hon. gentleman, and why I regret to differ with him is because he knows pretty well there is more than that in the agreement. Far be it from my mind to belittle him, but I say that, if Sir John Macdonald were standing in his place, both parties would be united in ratifying this treaty. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who does not know all there is in the agreement, yet should suspect that there are such things in national affairs as secret agreements. And what is the policy of a British statesman in matters relating to secret treaties? Ah, though I was not brought up in Britain, yet a knowledge of British parliamentary institutions came early to me. I gained that knowledge during the last eleven years reading the books on parliamentary government and following the debates here and in the House of Commons in England. Men like D'Israeli, men like Gladstone, Russell, Balfour, Lansdowne, even though in opposition, and even though they might see an opportunity to gain political advantage out of an acute foreign situation, would not call in question the good faith of a minister or of a government where the interest of the Crown would be involved. Sir, shall I be required to quote authorities? It is not necessary. I may, however, remind the hon. gentleman that Todd, on intercourse with foreign powers, volume 1, page 357, says:

> While it is necessary that parliament should be informed on all matters which are essential to explain or define the policy of the government it is equally necessary that a minister should be able, upon his own responsibility to withhold from the public such information as he may judge could not be afforded without detriment to the public service.

Again, Todd, vol. 1, page 359,

> Any attempt to coerce a government into producing to parliament all the papers they may possess upon a matter of foreign policy, without regard to their being confidential or unsuitable for general publication could only result in compelling the agents of the government to have recourse to 'private correspondence' for the communication of everything but mere ordinary information. This would occasion not only much public loss but also permanent injury to the state, for when one administration succeeded another it would be unable to discover among the official papers of the public departments the real grounds of action and motive for decisions upon great public questions.

Again on page 375, Todd discusses the internal concerns of foreign nations in connection with the right of either House of parliament.

> It is obvious that if any diplomatic negotiations are called for they can only be exercised through the recognized official channels of international communications, direct interference by either house of parliament, in the domestic or municipal concerns of a foreign country would be highly irregular and unconstitutional.
> He points out that while the House is entitled to information under certain circumstances that 'such proceedings, however, must be restrained within the limits of political expediency and should not be persevered in if opposed on this ground by the responsible advisers of the Crown.'

Again, on page 440, vol. 1, we quote the following:

> Consideration of public policy and a due regard to the interests of the State occasionally demand, however, that information so called for by members of the legislature should be withheld at the discretion, and upon the responsibility of the ministers.

This very question of the Anglo-Japanese agreement, in 1902, which had been recently signed, was a matter of discussion in the imperial House, and a reference to the British 'Hansard' will show that the government took the position that only such matters as should be made public would be published. Now let me give the answer of Lord Cranbourne to Mr. Labouchère, in volume 114 of the British 'Hansard' page 1350. He wanted to know the nature of some secret arrangements between the government of Great Britain and the government of Japan. Mr. Labouchère asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs:

> Whether His Majesty's government has given any pledges or entered into any reciprocal agreements with any foreign power in regard to China or Japan, to which this House has not been made cognizant.

The answer of Lord Cranbourne was as follows:

> I venture to hope that the hon. gentleman will forgive me if I am only able to reply that I have no statement to make upon the inquiry which he has addressed to me. Any other reply he would allow me to say would be contrary to public interest.

Enough, Mr. Speaker, there is a wealth of authorities on the subject in the British House of Commons. I am really astounded to see the hon. leader of the opposition speaking of this assurance with so much levity as he exhibited this evening, insinuating that the Japanese government had written a very nice letter, indeed, but that they meant to cling to the spirit of the treaty because these three words 'spirit of the treaty' were part of the phraseology. Sir, the hon. gentleman has not shown himself worthy of his high reputation in taking advantage of three words in the magnificent assurance, yes, in the noble assurance, given by the Minister of Foreign Affairs for Japan to the government of Canada. We are told that this is a promise of a transitory nature. Sir, let us suppose that the provision of the hon. member for North Toronto is correct, let us suppose that in a few days, because the present Japanese government has gone too far with us, suffer defeat under the assaults of the opposite party. That would only show that we have obtained so much from them that they are defeated by their opponents in the Diet.

Mr. FOSTER. The division might be upon some other question.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, but if the hon. gentleman takes as much stock in the present despatches from Tokio as he took at first from the same correspondence coming from Tokio, representing my mission as a huge failure, he cannot fail to realize that on this very question the Japanese government is in danger. Let us suppose that Japan fails to abide by the assurances she has given, and that in a few months we are invaded by another influx of Japanese immigrants. My hon. friends know that even we have always a remedy for a contingency such as that. The last clause of the special convention embodying the treaty between Japan and Canada is to the effect that either of the high contracting parties can at any time denounce the treaty by giving six months' notice. Mr. Speaker, this agreement having been given in good faith by the Japanese government, is it not worth while for us to give it a trial during six months ? Let us wait until the expiration of six months, and if they fail to carry out their assurance it will be time enough for Canada to give notice.

Mr. FOSTER. In that letter of Viscount Hayashi there is an allusion to certain demands that were made by the Postmaster General. Would the Postmaster General have any objection to telling us what these demands were that he made and were not acceded to?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend then would like the Postmatser General to break the promise which he has made to the Minister of Foreign Affairs ?

Mr. FOSTER. What promise?

Mr. LEMIEUX. To make to the Canadian parliament the statement I made the other day and nothing else. Would my hon. friend think well of me if I would not stand or live up to the promise I made? Conferences were held and there were documents exchanged. I have promised that I would do certain things. I have done them; and no invitation, graceful as it is, charming as it is, would deter me from deviating from the code of honour.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think my hon. friend quite took that question fairly. In every negotiation that is carried on there are certain things which are asked and a sort of statement is made—a protocol, as we call it in a regular conference. Surely my hon. friend made no promise that is binding, or that Count Hayashi would consider he ought to regard himself as being honoured in reference to the demands which he made or the requests which he preferred outside of the seat of agreement. No one has asked my hon. friend to violate the secret agreement. He has read a lot of constitutional authorities. What had the authorities to do with it. I have never and no one else has, asked that the secret agreement should be divulged. We have scrupulously avoided that, but there were certain demands made that Count Hayashi could not conform to. Is there any objection that these should be sacred? Is there any binding promise that the minister shall not divulge what these are?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If I could read more of the documents or the memoranda that were exchanged at Tokio, or if I could divulge what took place during the several interviews, I would certainly answer the question of my hon. friend, but I have stated very carefully, in fact I read that part of my statement the other day to the House, what it was agreed I should state before the House of Commons and before the country. My hon. friend knows full well that I cannot say more. Otherwise I would not be what I esteem I am—a gentleman—and I would not have been a worthy representative of the Dominion in the negotiations which lasted for nearly two months. I have made publicly what I could public. But as to the documents, that I cannot publish, I should not even allude to them, but I have been drawn this evening by the remarks which have been made and by the amendment which has been offered to the House by the hon. leader of the opposition. No, Mr. Speaker, I believe that, as I stated a moment ago, the hon. gentleman does not wish to announce to the country that he favours exclusion. He does not wish to say either that he is in favour of restriction. He has an amendment which might serve his purpose in any part of the country. He has not stated a policy in that amendment except that of condemning the government. The hon. gentleman stated in so many words this afternoon that the mission to Japan had been a failure. I quite understood that that was the assertion of the hon. gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I think that my hon. friend was bound to say that it was a failure ; in fact, I believe that the word was given from the moment I left Tokio on the 26th December last that the mission to Japan was a failure. I was startled when I landed at Victoria to read the 'Mail and Empire,' the organ of the Conservative party in Canada, the ultra loyal organ. My mission was characterized as a huge fiasco and a huge failure, because forsooth, I had shown so much inexperience, that I had forgotten, in dealing with this very important question to knock at the door of the American ambassador at Tokio.

Yes, Sir, I was expected to unite with the American ambassador in handling this question. I am not exaggerating ; the hon. gentleman can read that statement in the Toronto 'Mail and Empire.' Yes, the mission was a failure because the Canadian representative did not solicit advice from a foreign embassy. Of course, if under such tutelage the mission had been a success I am sure that the hon. gentleman and those who support him would have said that the success was due to the foreign ambassador, and if it had been a failure how would the Canadian representative have been received on his return ? No, Mr. Speaker, I simply did my duty. I went to the British ambassador, I solicited and accepted his advice, and I may say that I not only received his advice but also the full support of the British government, and I claim that if I have succeeded in settling this vexed question, it is because I received the support of Great Britain and the help of her ambassador at Tokio. When I am told that the mission has been a failure I am amazed, because, knowing Sir Claud Macdonald, the British ambassador, as I know him, knowing what his reputation is in the far east, occupying the high and exalted position that he does occupy, I am amazed, I say it again, at the assertion made. Sir, I not only had his help but I also received, after the negotiations were completed, his sincerest congratulations. I know that Sir Claude Macdonald has commended the agreement that was arrived at as the best that could be obtained under the circumstances, an agreement which did credit to the Dominion government and the Japanese government as well. With the authority of Sir Claude Macdonald I may very well let these insinuations of the Toronto 'Mail' pass. Sir, with the British ambassador at my elbow and knowing what I know of all the features of this agreement, I can announce to the country that the question of Japanese immigration is finally settled. We have restored order, peace and harmony in the province of British Columbia, and we have succeeded in removing from our national parliament a vexed question which if discussed and disposed of in the spirit that hon. gentlemen opposite would deal with it, might perhaps in a day which is not far distant draw not only Canada but Great Britain herself into international entanglements. We know that such is not the wish of the fair-minded Canadian people, and, Sir, I believe I am not mistaken when I say that my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has let the golden opportunity pass in not taking on this great issue the imperial stand taken by his predecessors, Sir John Macdonald, Sir John Abbott, Sir John Thompson and Sir Charles Tupper with regard to other international questions of a like nature.

House divided on the amendment.—(Mr. R. L. Borden).

Amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden), negatived, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 3.05 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, January 29, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. CLARKE moved that the third report of the Public Accounts Committee be concurred in.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I would suggest, although it is not in accordance with the usual practice, that when the Public Accounts Committee are in session, and have not concluded the matter in hand at the hour of adjournment in the morning, they have the discretion, on the vote of the majority of the committee and with the concurrence of the chairman, to sit in the afternoon while this House is in session, without being obliged to ask permission of the House on each occasion for one day only as is done in this report. Witnesses are obliged to appear before that committee, sometimes at great trouble and expense to themselves, and they may be obliged to wait here for several days, or perhaps having almost completed their evidence, owing to succeeding meetings of the committee being assigned to other subjects they may be obliged to return to Ottawa ten days or two weeks later.

Mr. FIELDING. Is it not generally expedient that committees should sit while the House is in session ? To make a general rule contemplating such sittings might be open to objection. The present system is that the permission of the House should be obtained.

Mr. BENNETT. This would be only arranged in the morning with the consent of the chairman.

Mr. FIELDING. It is generally considered not good practice.

Mr. BENNETT. I may have to bring in a motion on it.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS—FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 86) to incorporate the Northern Empire Railway Company.—Mr. Caron.

Bill (No. 87) to incorporate the Vancouver Island and Eastern Railway Company. —Mr. Sloan.

QUESTIONS.

CUSTOMS DUES ON FRENCH BOOKS.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE asked : (Translation.)

1. What are the customs dues on French books imported into Canada ?
2. Will the new French treaty cause a reduction in the duty on books ?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1. The customs duty on books in the French language, under item 171 of the tariff of 1907, when imported from France into Canada, is 10 per cent ad valorem.
2. The duty on these books, as specified in schedule 'C' of the new convention with France, is 5 per cent ad valorem.

BEAR RIVER DWELLING HOUSE.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN—by Mr. Lefurgey—asked :

1. Who were the tenderers for the dwelling house for the station master at Bear River, Prince Edward Island, and what was the amount of each tender?
2. Whose tender was accepted?
3. What is the total expenditure to date?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

F. S. MacDonald, Souris.. .. ..$1,295
James G. McLellan, Hermanville.... 1,373
McLean Brothers, North Wiltshire.. 1,440

2. F. S. MacDonald.
3. $1,507.99.

Note.—The difference between the amount expended for dwelling for station master, and the amount of contract is for land purchased, legal expenses, advertising and miscellaneous expenses.

HOME GUARDS AND SCRIPS.

Mr. BARR asked :

Have the Home Guards, who did service in the Northwest Territorier in 1885, the right to scrip for said services?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). No. Section 1 (a) of the Act of June 2, 1886, makes provision for the issue of scrip to 'every officer, non-commissioned officer and man of any irregular force raised by authority and actively engaged and bearing arms in the suppression of the said outbreak, other than a home guard for the protection of property at or near their place of residence.'

MARCONI STATION, GLACE BAY.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE asked :

1. Is the Marconi wireless telegraph station at Glace Bay at present in operation? If so, since when?
2. How many messages have been sent and received at that station?
3. How many messages have been received from and sent to Europe?
4. Has there been an interruption of service since the establishment of the station at Glace Bay?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). As the government has no official knowledge that the wireless station in Glace Bay is in operation other than that appearing in the press, the following questions were submitted to the Marconi Company, to which they have replied as follows :

1. Yes. The Marconi wireless telegraph station at Glace Bay is at present in operation. Wireless messages have been exchanged between Glace Bay and the company's station in England for a long time past, but work of a commercial nature was established on October 17 last and has continued since that date. The service has so far been confined to the exchange of press despatches and messages on both sides of the Atlantic. It is expected that the scope of service will shortly be extended to the transmission of ordinary commercial messages as well as press despatches.

2. The number of messages daily sometimes contain several thousand words a day, sometimes less, according to the business transacted.

3. Same answer as to No. 2.

4. The land wire connections have, in one or two occasions, been interrupted by storms, and the service at such times was slightly delayed. Except for delays of this nature, however, there have been no interruptions in the service.

JAPANESE SYNDICATE—PURCHASE OF LAND IN ALBERTA.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE asked : (Translation.)

1. Is the government aware that a Japanese syndicate intends acquiring land in Alberta in order to settle colonists there ?
2. If so, what stand does the government propose taking in regard to such syndicate ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Members of the government have seen in the press a report to the effect mentioned, but the government has no other knowledge of the alleged syndicate.
2. In default of other information the government has no announcement to make.

MR. J. E. MARIER AND THE TRANSCONTINENTAL COMMISSION.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE asked : (Translation.)

1. Is Mr. J. E. Marier in the employ of the Transcontinental Commission ?
2. If so, since when and at what salary ?
3. On whose recommendation was he appointed ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

1. Yes.
2. January 8, 1908. Salary, $45 a month.
3. On the responsibility of the Commission.

BUTTER AND CHEESE EXPORTS.

Mr. MORIN asked :

1. How many pounds of butter and cheese each of the product of the province of Quebec were exported in 1907?
2. What prices did it realize?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I regret that the department is unable to answer this question. The Trade and Navigations tables do not show the place of origin of Canadian products exported nor the prices realized for such products.

NIAGARA CAMP, 1907.

Mr. NORTHRUP asked :

1. How many troops were transported for annual drill in 1907, to and from Niagara camp?
2. What were the various starting points, and the number of troops in each case?
3. What was the amount paid to each transportation company, by land or water, for such transportation, and the date of payment in each case?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. 5,418 officers, non-commissioned officers and men.

TREATY OF WASHINGTON—BEHRING SEA COMMISSION.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What was the time occupied by the negotiations at Washington in 1887?

2. What was the duration of the Behring Sea Commission at Paris and London in 1892-1893?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. From 22nd of November, 1887, to 15th of February, 1888.

2. The duration of the Behring Sea Commission was from 23rd of February to the 15th of August, 1893.

MILITIA—BOARD OF OFFICERS.

Mr. MACDONELL asked :

1. Has the board of officers appointed by the Minister of Militia on July 16, 1907, to consider and report upon certain questions in regard to pay and allowance of the permanent force and active militia, held any sittings? If so, when, and where, and was any opportunity given to the members of the permanent force and militia to attend and state their case?

2. Is it the intention of the said board to hold sittings throughout the country?

3. Is it the intention of the board to afford members of the two forces above mentioned an opportunity to attend such sittings and be heard?

4. What is the general scope, object and purport of the said inquiry?

5. Is the question of an increase of pay and a more equitable adjustment of the present pay system to be considered and reported upon?

6. Will the report when made be laid on the table of the House, and distributed?

Hon. Sir F. W. BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. Yes, on 9th and 10th August, 1907, at Petawawa camp. All ranks, officers, non-commissioned officers and men of units in camp were notified that the board would be pleased to hear their views, and a large number of officers, non-commissioned officers and men attended and were given every opportunity of stating their views. In addition to this, officers commanding commands were notified by letter on 19th July, 1907, that this board would meet, and requested to bring the matter to the notice of the officers commanding units of the permanent force, in order that a comprehensive expression of opinion on the subject of pay and allowances might be presented to the board. In addition to the above several informal meetings have been held at the department.

2. If found desirable, further meetings may be held at militia centres.

3. Has already been done. If further meetings are held every opportunity will be given.

4. (a) To consider all questions of pay and allowances of permanent force.

(b) Removal of anomalies in certain cases existing rates of pay.

(c) Consideration of allowance in consequence of increased cost of living.

(d) General consideration of any needed revision of present regulations.

5. Not necessarily any increase of pay ; possible reductions in some cases.

6. Report will be submitted to the minister, and any changes decided upon will be submitted for the approval of His Excellency in council before promulgation in Militia Orders.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—FRUIT AND DAIRY DIVISIONS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Is the government aware that the fruit men of Canada are in favour of having the fruit division of the Department of Agriculture separated from the dairy division?

2. Has the government any intention of separating these two named divisions?

3. What reason, if any, does the government give for not separating the above named divisions?

4. Has a government weigher been appointed at Montreal?

5. If not, is it the intention of this government to appoint such an official?

6. If it is not the intention to appoint such an officer, what reason, if any, does the government give for not making such an appointment?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. The fruit division and the dairy division are separate and distinct, stand in exactly the same relation to each other, and with the markets division and the cold storage division compose a branch of the department of Agriculture under the administration of the dairy cold storage commissioner. Some time ago the Minister of Agriculture was requested by some fruit men to alter the status of the fruit division to that of a branch of the department but the government is of the opinion that the fruit men of Canada as a whole are satisfied with the present arrangement.

2. The two divisions are separate now. The government does not contemplate any change in the present arrangement.

3. The work of the four divisions above named is so closely related and overlaps to such an extent that the present arrangement promotes efficiency and economy and is generally satisfactory.

4. A weighmaster has been appointed under the Inspection and Sale Act but his powers are confined to grain. No weigher of dairy products has been appointed by the government.

5. It is not the intention of the government to appoint a weigher of dairy products unless there is a greater need for the appointment than there appears at present.

6. The government does not consider that the conditions of the dairy produce trade are such as to warrant it in causing the necessary legislation to be passed to enable it to make such an appointment.

HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

Mr. LAKE asked :

1. When and to whom was homestead entry for the southwest quarter-section, 16-28-1, west 3rd meridian, granted?

2. Has patent been issued for this land? If so, what were the dates of the recommendation for issue of the patent and of the patent itself?

3. What duties had been performed at the date of the recommendation?

4. Were there any considerations of any kind other than the performance of homestead duties for the issue of the patent?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Homesteaded on the 25th April, 1905. To William B. F. Whitesides.

2. Patent has not yet been issued. No recommendation for patent issued.

3. The following improvements are claimed :—15½ acres broken and cropped ; a house, 14 by 16 ; a stable, 14 by 16 ; a well; also six months residence from the first of June, 1905, to the first of December following. Some losses were sustained from prairie fire, and on the 19th July, 1906, the homestead inspector reported : a lumber house 12 by 12, $40. 10 acres cropped.

4. On representations that after a long illness the health of the homesteader was such as to require his removal to a milder climate he was permitted to purchase at $3 an acre.

CATTLE EMBARGO IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What action, if any, has been taken by this government since 1896 which would have for its object the removal of the cattle embargo placed upon Canadian cattle entering Great Britain?

2. Is the government aware that a resolution was passed some years ago by the Committee on Agriculture, which requested that the Minister of Agriculture of the Dominion should invite the ministers of the different provinces in the Dominion to form themselves into a committee, whose object was to lay before the government of Great Britain the importance of removing the cattle embargo?

3. If any efforts have been made by the Minister of Agriculture to comply with the wishes of the above-named committee so expressed, when will a report of the same be given to the House, and if no efforts have been so made, what reason, if any, does the government assign for not taking action in the matter?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The answer to this must be in the form of a return. The correspondence and papers to be brought down by a return will answer this question, but I wish to state that already such correspondence and papers have been laid on the table of the House up to the 19th of March, 1903. I would therefore ask that the hon. gentleman put his question in the form of a notice of motion for a return, amended so as to include only correspondence and papers since the 19th of March, 1903. I will then be very glad to facilitate the bringing down of the return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion, as amended for a return.

APPLICATIONS TO CUT TIMBER.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette) asked :

Who were the twenty-one applicants who were refused permission as granted by order in council, passed on May 16, 1906, for sawmill owners to cut timber?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

Northwest Lumber Company, William D. Dutton, Blain & McKelvey, L. S. Caverly, M. Otterbine, Wm. C. Caverly, James W. Kelly, Murdock McKinley, Honoré Therien, James A. Powell, Jean Couture, James Larose, W. H. Bell, E. R. Brill, John McDonald, Alex. Bernier, Joseph Peter, Francis De Rocher, Guilbault Brothers, Henry Clemes, Wm. O. Bates.

MINISTERIAL TRAVELLING EXPENSES.

Mr. URIAH WILSON asked :

1. Who accompanied Sir William Mulock to Australia in the year 1901, to be present at the opening of the Australian parliament?

2. What was the amount of travelling, living and other expenses in connection with his mission?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. The only persons who accompanied him officially were his private secretary and a messenger.

2. $6,900.

LAND PATENT OF JOSEPH LITTLE.

Mr. HERRON asked :

1. Has the patent been issued for the south-east quarter of section 2, township 8, range 4, west of the fifth meridian?
2. If so, what was the date of the issue of said patent?
3. What was the date of the recommendation of patent, and to whom?
4. Is the government aware that a portion of the said quarter-section has been used as a graveyard for upwards of three years?
5. In the issue of the said patent, what reservations, if any, were made?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Patent has been issued for the E. ½ of the S. E. ¼ of Section 2, Township 8, Range 4, west 5th meridian ; no patent has been issued for the W. ½ of this quarter-section.
2. 23rd October, 1907.
3. 30th September, 1907, Joseph Little.
4. The government had been informed that a portion of the said quarter-section had been used as a graveyard and was prepared to withhold this area from patent to Little on receipt of description from the interested parties. In default of such description the patent was issued without such reservation, but on the department learning that the reserve was still desired a caveat was filed against the patent, and steps are now being taken to adjust the matter so as to provide the desired reservation.
5. The usual reservations,—navigable waters, mines and minerals, the rights of fishery and fishing, and proviso under the Irrigation Act.

IMMIGRATION AGENTS IN THE BRITISH ISLANDS.

Mr. URIAH WILSON asked :

1. Has the government of Canada any special immigration agent or agents in the British islands?
2. If so, what are their respective names, and from what parts of Canada do they come?
3. What arrangements were made by the government with the said agent or agents as to salary and expenses?
4. What is the date of their respective appointments, and at what time did they leave this country to take up their work?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I would ask the hon. gentleman to let this stand as a motion for a return, as the information is quite voluminous.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Once before this session the Minister of the Interior answered a question put by myself as to the agents in Great Britain, giving their names, salaries and expenses, and the answer to this question would not I think be as long as that was.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all orders in council, correspondence, evidence, memoranda and other documents and papers of every description relating to or touching the conduct of all persons who have acted as public administrator in the Yukon Territory, or who have had charge or control by reason of their official position, of the estate of deceased persons in the Yukon Territory. And a copy of all such documents and papers aforesaid as set forth and describe the action, if any, of the government in respect of any claims, charges or proposed proceedings against any such official in respect of his duties, acts or dealings as public administrator.—Mr. Lennox.

For a copy of all correpondence, telegrams, memoranda and reports, between the government and its officers and solicitors and the provincial or territorial governments, in regard to the cases taken to test the liability for taxation of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the cases Rural Municipality of North Cypress vs. Canadian Pacific Railway; Rural Municipality of Argyle vs. Canadian Pacific Railway; Springdale School District vs. Canadian Pacific Railway; together with copies of all judgments of the courts before whom the cases were tried, and of the refusal of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of the application for leave to appeal to that court.—Mr. Lake.

For a return showing (a) a statement of all public buildings or other public works built or initiated by the present government since 1896, (b) the original estimated cost of thereof, and (c) the actual cost of same.—Mr. Boyce.

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, or reports, respecting the refusal of the Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia to give his assent to a Bill passed by the legislature of that province in 1907, respecting immigration and commonly referred to as the Natal Act.—Mr. Ralph Smith.

For a return showing the expenditure directly and indirectly for dredging in the St. Lawrence river and Montreal harbour from 1896 to 1907; the expenditure by the government from 1896 to 1907 in building docks at the harbour of Montreal; and the expenditure by the government in building elevators at the harbour of Montreal from 1896 to 1907.—Mr. Schaffner.

For a copy of all applications, tenders, correspondence, telegrams, or written communications of any kind, in connection with the sale of certain lands in the Ocean Man, Pheasat Rump, and Chasastapasin Indian reserves, on November 15, 1901; together with a copy of advertisements of sales, the names of the newspapers in which they were inserted, and the dates of insertion.—Mr. Lake.

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and petitions, in possession of the government, or any member or official thereof, respecting the dismissal of Mrs. Mary Finlay as postmistress at the head of St. Peter's bay, and the appointment of her successor.—Mr. A. Martin (Queens).

For a copy of all reports, plans, specifications, tenders, correspondence, telegrams, and all other papers, documents, and other information in connection with the construction of the Hillsborough bridge and approaches, including land purchases necessary therefor.—Mr. Lefurgey.

For a copy of all orders in council now in force with respect to immigration from every country from which immigrants come to Canada. Also a copy of all circulars issued at the present time with reference to immigration—Mr. Uriah Wilson.

For a copy of all correspondence, applications, recommendations for patent, and all papers in any way relating to the disposal of or granting of privileges in connection with the southeast quarter of section 2, township 8, range 4, west of the fifth meridian—Mr. Herron.

For a return showing to whom, and when, the National Transcontinental Railway Commission awarded contracts for the transportation of supplies on district 'E,' between the following points, namely:—(a) Grassett to Cache 9, (b) Montizambert to New Cache 9a on Negogami river, (c) Jackfish to Caches 10, 11a and 12, (d) Nipigon to Caches 12a, 13, 14, 15, Ombabika and Wabinosh warehouses and Cache 16, on district 'F'; the distances in each contract, the contract rate and terms; the amounts that have been paid to date on each contract; who erected the cache and dwelling house at the line crossing on Kebinakagami river, also the new buildings at line crossing of Negogami river, and the warehouse at Jackfish; the cost of these buildings respectively; and if tenders were invited for above transportation and building contracts.—Mr. Boyce.

PUBLIC WORKS—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince, P.E.I.) moved for:

A return showing the total expenditure by the Department of Public Works in Prince Edward Island over the following periods: 1873 to 1878; 1878 to 1896; 1896 to 1907; and the total expenditure by the Public Works Department in Prince county over periods 1873 to 1878; 1878 to 1882; 1882 to 1887; 1887 to 1891; 1891 to 1896; 1896 to 1900; 1900 to 1907, respectively.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.) moved in amendment that the following words be added thereto:

And the expenditures by the Public Works Department in the counties of Queens and Kings for the years and the periods of years above mentioned.

Also the total expenditures in said province by the Post Office Department, the Department of Railways and Canals, and the Department of Militia and Defence. And further, the total expenditure by the Department of Marine and Fisheries including the development, propagation and preservation of the fisheries, and in the maintenance of winter communication across the Northumberland straits, for the years and periods of years above referred to.

Mr. U. WILSON.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I would call the attention of the First Minister and the leader of the opposition to the number of returns called for, involving a good deal of useless labour. This return simply calls for the total expenditure by the Department of Public Works in Prince Edward Island during certain years. There is nothing to prevent any hon. gentleman from going through the report and adding up the figures for himself. I have just had placed in my hand a return in response to a motion made by the leader of the opposition last session, asking for many things in connection with the St. Andrews rapids. This return covers a thousand type written pages, and I can assure my hon. friend that we have not in the department a staff to prepare the returns in any thing like the time in which the hon. gentleman would be likely to find them of much use during the present session.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It has been the practice with a number of ministers to communicate with any member, who has moved for a return which might seem to involve an oppressive amount of work in any particular department. The right hon. the First Minister this session called my attention to a return which I moved for from the Department of Railways and Canals, and in reply to his communication I at once eliminated a very considerable portion of it and asked that the balance might be brought down, leaving the rest an open question. I am quite sure that any hon. member would be prepared to take a similar course in any particular case. Over and over again in returns brought down, there have been a number of formal documents absolutely of no use whatever. In connection with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, there is in the return some one hundred to a hundred and fifty pages taken up with notices of absolutely the same character sent out to individual settlers. Of course in framing these motions for returns, it is necessary to make them comprehensive in order that they may cover all the documents required in the public interest, and they must necessarily include a number of documents of no possible service. In any case of that kind, I shall be most happy to take the matter into consideration and endeavour as much as possible to facilitate the work of the department. Our object is to obtain information and not impose unnecessary work. As regards the return respecting the St. Andrew's rapids, I have no doubt that if my attention had been called to it, I would have been able, without any detriment to the public interest, to lighten considerably the work of the clerks in the department. As regards the return now ordered, it is for the purpose of obtaining an efficient and authoritative computation of certain expenditure covering a series of years. The accuracy of such a computation cannot be questioned, but the accuracy might be questioned of a computation made by the proper officials. Therefore it has been the practice to ask for these computations, which cannot be obtained by any hon. member from the public returns without considerable labour. I am inclined to think that the practice, while it is open to abuse, is of some service, as many of us owing to the long hours devoted to the session and the work of the committees, are unable to make these computations ourselves. But in the present instance, the amendment calling for additional information is moved by one of the hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection whatever to the motion passing, but I wish to impress upon the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite that the chief accountant has informed me that it is utterly impossible within a reasonable time to prepare and have submitted to the House the large number of very voluminous returns called for.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) will notice that this very considerable amendment comes from his own side of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I observe that. That is the difficulty about it.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR THE REMOVAL OF CROPS.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). moved :

For copies of all papers, representations, memorials, and correspondence had with the Minister of Finance or any other member of the government in reference to the proposed action of the government through or in conjunction with the banks, to facilitate in a financial way the movements of grain from western provinces of Canada.

He said : This motion has stood on the Order Paper for a long time. After some communication with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) at various times, and again to-day, I think that probably it will be well to get the matter out of the way. Before, or about, the time the House met in November, there had been rumours, some appearing in the public press, of an abnormal condition of things in the west in the movement of the grain ; and more or less definite statements were made concerning the inability of the ordinary banking and financial machinery to move the grain speedily, to prevent as much as possible of loss. Other considerations, of course, came into the case. The year was an abnormal one in respect of the quality of the crop, and consequently a good deal of the grain graded below what may be called the commercial standards. If I remember well, it was chiefly with regard to the marketing of these lower grades of grain that this assistance by the government had been proposed. The banks seemed quite able to make arrangements for the transport of the commercial grades of grain, as these commanded a ready sale, and when deposited in elevators, were subject to bills of lading and other negotiable instruments and the delay between the shipment and the return was not very great. But as to the lower qualities of grain, these did not command a ready sale, there being some question as to whether they would keep for a sufficient length of time to render an investment in them reasonably safe. Rumours gained circulation that deputations had come down from the west and that there had been pourparlers with the Minister of Finance or the government, and that, in some way, the government would come to the rescue with reference to these low-grade grain products particularly. A question immediately arose as to the real efficiency of this aid if granted—that is, would it reach its objective point and relieve the primary seller of the article ? The danger was recognized that the advantage might inure mainly to the middleman. Of course, the sympathy of the country was with the farmer who produced the article, and so it became a matter of some moment, that, if any relief were granted, the benefit should inure to the farmer primarily and chiefly. The returns of the banks and the government, which are given regularly to the country, did not show that any surplus money remained with the government to be devoted to this object, nor did they show that any extraordinary means had been taken by the government by which the necessary amount of money—said to be $3,000,000 or $4,000,000—had been raised or could be made available. Later, however, it did transpire, I think through the returns, that there has been some changes in some items of these returns which indicated a method by which the government might have made some provision for this object. Numerous inquiries were made across the floor of the House, and the Minister of Finance, as he had a perfect right to do, asked, from time to time, that explanations might be deferred. I acceded to these requests, and so did other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, out of regard for the interests involved. However, in view of the inference to which the returns point, I think the matter assumes a somewhat grave aspect. It is a serious thing for the government to interfere in the general financial and banking arrangements of the country. Certainly, such a step should not be taken except for the very strongest reasons. The grave consequences which may result from such interference has been not inaptly shown in the United States of America. We remember that, at the time of the banking crisis, some few weeks ago extraordinary measures of relief were devised by the United States Treasury by the sale of Panama canal bonds and the distribution of the government surplus amongst the banks. For the time being, that may have had its effect ; but it is an open question, so far as I have followed the controversy, whether, in the end, there was a noticeable balance of good from the temporary and artificial remedy which the United States sought to apply. I know that this matter has been very keenly canvassed, and that some of the best opinion in the United States is expressed in favour of the view that the situation would not have been made worse even if this extraordinary fillip had not been given by the United States treasury.

However, that is a matter which I think is most delicate and involves great responsibility for the government as a government to interpose itself at all between the business of the country and the recognized, and official, and systematic machinery which it has for carrying on those affairs. Now, the Finance Minister evidently has interfered, and if it proves in the end that he has interfered in this matter, it will be incumbent upon him to show that the crisis was a sufficiently grave one to authorize him to intrude in the matter, and if it transpires that the minister has had to act contrary to the laws of the country and thereby has put himself in the position of being obliged to this parliament for indemnification, so to speak, then I think that as parliament has been here present during the whole of this crisis and during nearly the whole of these negotiations, it was the part of the Finance Minister to have taken parliament into his confidence in that respect, and thrown himself, as he will after this have to throw himself, upon the good will and support of parliament in the way of indemnification. So, if that has been done, and if that were the only method by which it could have been done, the minister could have gone that far and taken parliament into his confidence without at the same time making any revelation which would necessarily have interfered with the carrying out of his project; only there would have been an entente cordiale, which is now a very favourite term, between the Finance Minister and the representatives of the people, instead of the reticence, which I do not think was altogether necessary, although the Finance Minister may be able to give reasons therefor.

One of the difficulties that obtruded itself early was the difficulty to which I have adverted, that is, the channel that was to be chosen for the distribution of this relief, and the point of the relief. It had been rumoured in the papers that certain influential friends of the government from the Northwest and certain friends who had large interests in the transport of grain, or the purchase of grain in the Northwest, were especially prominent in pressing upon the government the queston of aiding transportation, and there were indications of their having been, as they thought, partially or altogether successful in winning the government to their side of the case, and there were indications that it was noised abroad in a way which would ennure to the benefit of the government and of the party which supports the government. Now, of course, if that was done, it was an improper thing, in a financial crisis of this kind. The government can only be justified in coming to the aid of interests which are menaced on the ground of public benefit, and above all things the party consideration and colouring should be entirely left off. So the matter having gone on until this time, and by the statement of the minister himself the fact having been ascertained that the aid has been given, and the added fact that there was a certain way in which that aid might have been given, I think the time has come when I had better move this motion and press for the correspondence and these papers. If the minister thinks that it is not yet quite time to have these brought down, he can state his reason, and if the reasons commend themselves to the House, I am sure this side of the House will be reasonable as to the time in which they should make their appearance. But I do not think it is premature now to move the motion and get whatever statement we may get from the Minister of Finance, with the assurance that I hope he will be prepared to make, that the papers will be brought down at an early period.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). There is no objection to passing the motion at the present time. I have intimated to my hon. friend that though the motion may pass to-day, there may be a few days delay in bringing down the papers. There is very little in his remarks to-day to which I can take exception. Indeed the only thing I would care to object to is his allusion to some party advantage that was thought possible by some individuals in this matter. Of course it is not possible to discuss this matter fully in the absence of the information. But I hasten to give my hon. friend the assurance that from beginning to end there was no party interest and no party consideration involved in any shape or form. Whatever was done was done under the belief that there was a very serious condition of affairs in the country, and the aid was given in the way that seemed to be the most convenient and desirable. I did feel, at a time of considerable financial stringency when all our financial institutions were strained to the utmost, that it would have been unwise to precipitate a discussion of this matter which would have led almost unavoidably to a discussion of the financial position generally. At an early stage of the session I suggested to my hon. friend opposite that I thought it might be well to delay his motion for a little while, and I am glad to see that, although here and there there was some general reference to the financial situation, that particular matter was held aside, for which I desire to express my appreciation. I will endeavour to bring down the papers at an early date; I trust they will soon be down, and very likely a measure will have to be submitted to the House dealing with the subject, as I have already intimated. I will see that with the least possible delay the information is brought down, and in the meantime I do not think it would be wise to make any further remarks.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish to make a few observations on this subject, because I think it a proper time to do so. We have been passing through a somewhat stringent financial era in Canada, from the effects of which most individuals and corporations have suffered considerably, and it naturally suggests to one's mind the relationship of government to banks, and especially to the Department of Finance, which above all others is more intimately connected with the finances of the country. It suggests as well the question: What accounts for the financial stringency through which we are passing, and in addition to that the other question, what are banks for? What are their duties to the people, what are their functions, are they properly discharging their duties to the people, and are they carrying out the legitimate functions of banking in a way to promote the interests of the people and of the state? What is the relation of governments to the banks? What should be the relationship as between the banks and the toiler and earner? They have a duty to the one and a duty to the other. What position are they holding with regard to both? Now, in the first place, I ask the question: What are the banks for? We incorprate banks and give them important and extensive rights and powers. Is that not done in order that they may provide a medium of exchange to enable the people to carry on the trade and commerce of the country, and that they may afford a place of safe-keeping for the accumulated earnings of the people where those who are able to make and save money, but who are not financiers and therefore cannot invest it so as to be sure of a fair rate of interest and the preservation of their capital, may deposit their savings and receive a fair return in interest upon them? One function which the banks should in my judgment perform has been sadly neglected by them. Where a branch of a chartered bank is started in a community it receives deposits, the accumulated savings of the people in the district. Surely this capital should be available for the use of the people in the district who are engaged in industrial enterprises, to enable the carrying on of industry and the employment of labour. But, that is not usually done; instead of that we see that a demand is made upon the branches by the head office, to send these deposits to the head office at Toronto or Montreal or Winnipeg. Then where does the money go? There is a demand for call loans on Wall street and as there is a tempting offer of a high rate of interest on these call loans the accumulated earnings of the people of that locality are transferred to Wall street and placed out on call. Thus there is not sufficient money available for the wants of the people in the small locality, and the banks that should be charged with the responsibility of providing the circulating medium, although they have received the accumulated earnings of the people, cannot provide funds to pay the wages of workmen and to carry on the industry of the locality. We are accustomed to say that our banking system is superior to that of the United States, that it is more stable and safer; and possibly it may be, but in this respect the banks of the United States are superior to ours and endeavour as far as possible to meet the demands of industry in their localities.

The chartered banks ought to be prepared to furnish a circulating medium on fair and reasonable security. They should not at all times demand and accept nothing but the very highest and most gilt edged security. There is much which represents security which is not composed of lands or stocks or mortgages; there is the integrity, industry and economy of the individual, his reputation in a locality, as an honest and faithful man who desires to pay his debts; and these assets of the individual should be available in the way of security to the banks and on them they should be prepared to supply him to a reasonable extent with the medium of exchange in the hour of need. Why is it that to-day the private banks of our country are found to be of much more service in many localities than the chartered banks? It is because any honest man within a radius of several miles of a private bank, who desires from $25 to $100—and it is seldom more than that—can obtain it from the private banks upon his own security; whereas in a chartered bank he would be required to obtain an endorser or to give gilt-edged security of some other kind. The ordinary farmer does not want to get any one to endorse a note. I have in mind the case of a man who owned a farm of 200 acres with good buildings and not a dollar against it; he was practically out of debt, he did not owe $200; he was known to always pay his way promptly and yet a chartered bank refused him a loan of $25 unless he got an endorser.

Are the chartered banks of the country discharging the proper functions of banks? Was it for such purposes as this that we gave them the rights which they enjoy under their charters and their power to issue paper money under which, by placing their stamp on a piece of paper which is not worth the one-hundredth part of a cent, they can sell it for $100 and earn interest on it for every day the money is in circulation? They should provide a medium of exchange upon fair and reasonable security.

The effect of the difference in method between the chartered and private banks is shown by the figures, and I am speaking of what I have frequently observed for the last five years or more. We find that in the rural districts for forty-seven to forty-nine per cent of the applicants for small loans are accommodated by private banks and would be refused by the chartered banks. Why? Because the borrower will not get an endorser and his security is not sufficiently stable to satisfy the chartered bank. The farmer does not offer sufficient security for the banks; the transaction is small and requires a great deal of bookkeeping; the banks will not give the accommodation, and therefore the farmer has to go to a private bank. I am within the mark when I say that forty-seven out of every fifty people in the rural districts and villages who are obliged to seek accommodation in this way go to the private banks instead of to the chartered banks, and although they have to pay a higher rate of interest they believe that it is the best thing for them to do. I therefore say that the chartered banks of the country are not fulfilling the conditions for which we have given them the extensive powers they possess. Now, the ordinary procedure of these chartered banks is to gather up the accumulated savings of the people in the local banks, then transfer them to the head office, and thence to Wall street or somewhere else where they can get high interest. What was the condition during the worst times of the recent financial stringency? It was not that there was not money enough in the banks, because the banks had all that was necessary to handle the grain in the Northwest five times over; but the fact is that the Canadian banks had over $63,000,000 invested in Wall street on call loans or otherwise. Suppose a crisis had taken place similar to that during the McKinley presidency when 450 of the American banks went down in a few months, what would have been the condition of the Canadian banks and what would it mean to Canada? And yet, such a crisis might have occurred and it undoubtedly would have occurred were it not for the action of President Roosevelt, and that Morgan and Rockefeller and other moneyed men come to their assistance and enabled the banks to tide over the emergency. But for that there would have been a financial crisis in the States that would have tried the financial standing of that country to an extent unparalleled in its history. And where would the $63,000,000 belonging to the Canadian banks be? Why did they call upon the Finance Minister, as was stated in the newspapers, to come to their aid and to provide some circulating medium to enable the grain dealers in the west to buy the grain and send it to the markets of the world. The very fact that $63,000,000 of the money of the people of Canada was not available at that time and was outside of the country, is an evidence that there is something wrong in our banking system. It indicates that parliament, and especially the government through its Finance Minister, should devise some means of controlling these banks so that we may not be confronted with a similar condition at any time in the future.

Mr. SCHELL (Glengarry). Has the hon. gentleman any basis for saying that $63,000,000 were invested outside the country? I understand that statement is entirely wrong.

Mr. SPROULE. I have taken my information from the Canada 'Gazette' and the daily papers of Montreal and Toronto and I believe it to be absolutely correct. If you ask a banker why he sends Canadian money out of the country he will tell you: We can lend our money in this way in larger amounts and have it available at any time; these are call loans and we are getting a larger rate of interest than we can at home; that is a legitimate part of our business and why should we not have the right to do it? But during the recent financial stringency were the New York banks ready to pay this money back to the Canadian banks if it was demanded? Not at all. They issued clearing house receipts instead of cash, and Canada could not get one dollar of that money at the time. This of course produced a stringency in Canada and that is why I say that the present system is improper. Now, let me ask what relationship there is between the banks and the Minister of Finance and his department. It is the duty of the Finance Minister to have supervision over these banks, to keep an eye on how they carry on their transactions, sometimes to come to their aid by distributing the money of the government amongst them so as to enable them to handle the cash of the government and profit by it. The Minister of Finance has a further important relationship to the banks, and it is to see that they provide a safe place for receiving the accumulated earnings of the people and give the people a fair interest in return. Let us inquire into how far the government has fulfilled this duty. Shortly after the Minister of Finance came to power in 1897 he reduced the rate of interest in the Post Office savings bank and the government savings banks from three and a half to three per cent, and he gave it as a reason that this money should go into the coffers of the banks of the country, that as the government banks paid a higher rate of interest than the others the money was deposited in them, and I think he said he had done this at the request of the banks. Well, to my mind, the poor people of this country are entitled to the very greatest consideration in a matter of this kind. To induce them to deposit their savings it is the duty of the government to put a premium on their industry, frugality and economies, by paying them the very highest rate of interest. The Post Office and government savings banks afford them a safe deposit for their money. The people are not financiers and if they are induced to take risky investments there is a great danger of their losing their savings. Hence it is that the government should encourage them to frugality and thrift. I have before me a record which shows the deposits put in the government banking institution since 1897, when the Minister of Finance reduced the rate of interest.

In 1897 there was $32,000,000 in the Post Office Savings Bank and $16,554,000 in the government savings banks, making together $48,934,000 of the savings of the poor people of this country in the coffers under the control of the Finance Minister; because it is only those who have small amounts to invest who will avail themselves of the post office and government savings banks. The hon. Minister of Finance, by reducing the rate of interest, compelled these people to invest their money in the banks of the country, because he said we should teach the people to invest their money in the banks. I say that it is not a good or commendable system. Let us look at another phase of the question. Having regard to the accumulated interest not paid out, that sum of $48,934,000 has only been swelled by the sum of $13,606,000 in ten years. Why? Because of the reduction in the rate of interest from 3½ to 3 per cent. Had the deposits gone on at the same rate as before—and they would have gone on at a greater rate because of the good times we have had from 1897—instead of the addition to the deposits being only $13,000,000 it would have been over $60,000,000. Had the government that $60,000,000 in their possession to-day, would there have been need for the Finance Minister to peddle our credit all over Europe to raise money which he can only get by paying an exorbitant rate of interest. On $1,500,000 which he has overdrawn from the Bank of England he is paying 7 per cent, while he denies the right of the poor labourers of this country to greater interest than 3 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend; but a correct statement of that would be that by an engagement made many years ago overdrafts in the banks in London were to bear the current Bank of England rate, whatever it might be. The Bank of England rate was 7 per cent for a few weeks; but I am glad to say that we did not pay 7 per cent, though the contract with the bank would have justified it in claiming that rate; but we entered into negotiations, and the rate we paid was not 7 per cent, but only 6 per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. I took it from the public press that the Finance Minister stated in the House that he was paying 7 per cent, the Bank of England rate of interest.

Mr. FIELDING. That was the engagement.

Mr. SPROULE. Then he is paying the bank rate of interest now?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but the bank rate to-day is not 6 per cent. I do not complain of the statement of my hon. friend. He was justified in making it, in view of my statement that the Bank of England rate was the rate that the bank was entitled to charge the government, but I said that regarding that as an excessive rate we entered into negotiations, and the rate agreed upon at the highest point was 6 per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. And 6 per cent is the rate now?

Mr. FIELDING. No. The Bank of England rate is 4 per cent, and that is the rate we now pay on any overdraft in England.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The rate for some time was 7 per cent, then it was reduced to 6, then to 5, then to 4.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I think it stood for about six weeks at 7 per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When was the arrangement made to which the hon. minister refers?

Mr. FIELDING. I am not quite sure that it was covered by a written engagement. It was the understanding that prevailed in the Finance Department before I came in.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I was justified in basing my argument on the statement of the Finance Minister, which I took to be correct. He admits that that is the agreement, if the bank saw fit to enforce it.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, I ask what justification is there for the government borrowing money at 4½ per cent only a short time ago to renew a loan of $2,500,000 when they could have got that same money from the poor people of Canada at 3½ per cent? I do not think there was any justification for it. I think it was their duty to allow the poor people of this country to take advantage of the situation and lend their money at the rate of interest the government is paying in England. It seems to me that would be a policy that would be very acceptable to the labouring man and it would be a good policy from a commercial point of view. It would be a profitable transaction carried out by a sharp and shrewd financier. I want to make another observation in regard to the action of the Finance Minister in reducing the rate of interest from 3½ to 3 per cent. I said he did it in order to induce the poor people to invest their savings in the banks of the country. If one of these people goes to a bank for some accommodation, what is he obliged to pay for it? According to the accounts of the annual meetings of the banks this winter, which I have gone over very carefully, these banks have paid dividends, some 10, some 11, some 12, some 13, some 15 and some 16 per cent for the year, upon the amount of money invested in their stock. In other words, we incorporate banks and give them great powers to handle money, to issue paper which is stamped as money and for which they get money in return, and loan it out at interest the next day after they get it if they have the opportunity, and give to these banks which ought to be for the benefit and use of the country, the power to force down the rate of interest allowed to the poor man to 3 per cent while they pay to their stockholders dividends of fifteen and sixteen per cent. Is that just to the poor man, or is it not discrimination in favour of the rich as against the poor? It may be due to custom that has prevailed from time immemorial; but I think that human ingenuity ought to be equal to devising some means for overcoming that discrimination and bringing about greater equality between the rich and the poor. While the poor man who puts his money into the bank is allowed only 3 per cent interest on it, these same banks charge him 7 or 8 per cent for any accommodation he gets. Our boasted banking system, while I admit that it is very good in many respects, is in other respects very defective. The Finance Minister has had to renew one loan for which he paid 4½ per cent interest. The loan was for $9,276,000. For the renewal or extension of that loan for three years, he has given to the holder the right to take permanent 3 per cent government bonds at the rate of $105 for every $100 loaned. That means that for the renewal of this loan, the government had to pay, over the amount of money they got, $868,000 as a bonus. They had to pay that amount for the renewal of this loan for the short space of three years. Not only are we paying the 3 per cent, but a bonus of $5 on every $100 besides. I have one other observation to make in this connection. We have been frequently told that the present government have brought good times to Canada, that Canada has gone on improving in wealth and industrial pursuits by leaps and bounds, that she is immensely richer than she was eleven years ago, and that her people are earning money at a rate they never did before.

Mr. PATERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs says, hear, hear. Then I would ask him to explain this fact. In 1897, the first year the present government came to power, they had to renew a loan, and the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) was able to borrow the money at 2½ per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. No, the hon. gentleman is too kind. The rate of interest on our bonds is 2½ per cent, but they did not go at par. The rate is equivalent to 2·83 per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. At any rate it was under 3 per cent. But how is it that the government have not been able, during the last three or four years, to borrow at the same rate? Our wealth has gone on increasing steadily, according to these hon. gentlemen, yet we have to pay more interest when we want to borrow. That is exactly the reverse of what happens in the case of an individual. According as an individual becomes wealthier, his credit stands better, and he can borrow on more favourable terms. It may be said that we are passing through a period of financial stringency. That stringency has not lasted however three or four years, and yet we have been compelled to pay higher rates of interest when we borrowed money than we did in 1897. How does the Minister of Finance account for this? Owing to his improvident business management, the credit of Canada is not what it should be, if it be true that the country is much wealthier than it was ten years ago. One cannot account for our lessened credit in any other way. Why is it that this government cannot borrow money as cheaply to-day as it could when it succeeded to office? Can we ascribe that fact to any other cause than the extravagant expenditure of this administration—an expenditure which cannot fail to arouse the anxiety of capitalists? Every year the hon. gentleman has asked us for immense sums and we have generously voted them. Then he has devised the ways and means of raising the revenue to meet these expenditures. And during the last eleven years, the revenue of the country has been $93,000,000 more than the Finance Minister declared he needed. That has been the total of the surpluses over the revenue he expected to receive from the taxation he imposed. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), when in opposition, laid down the doctrine, to which hon. gentlemen opposite heartily subscribed, that every dollar a Finance Minister took out of the people more than he absolutely required was a dollar improvidently taken from them. What defence then has our present Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) for having taken during the past eleven years from the people of Canada over $93,000,000 more money than he required for the administration of the country ? What has become of all that money ? If an individual finds his revenue increasing every year, what does he do ? The first thing he does is to pay off his debts. If he has any improvements to make, he spends on these what money they require, and the balance he puts aside where it will be earning interest for him. Should not the same business methods apply to a government ? Here is a government which finds its revenue each year larger than it anticipated, and here is a Finance Minister who finds himself in the receipt of $93,000,000 more of the people's money than he expected to receive from the taxation he imposed, should he not have applied that surplus to paying off our country's debt ? That is what a wise and provident administrator would have done, but that is exactly what the present Finance Minister did not do. What became of that money ? He spent it. And as people become extravagant and profligate, the financial institutions of the world take a note of their extravagance and their credit goes down in proportion. Is it to be wondered at then that the credit of Canada does not stand as high to-day as it did in 1896, when these gentlemen took office, notwithstanding our increased earnings and wealth and industrial progress ?

A few years ago the Minister of Finance boasted that he had succeeded in getting Canadian government securities put on the English list for the investment of trust funds. He had succeeded in doing this because our securities were considered the very best of any colonial dependency, and he expected that we should be able to borrow, on that account, cheaper than we ever did before. Have we been able to do this ? Notwithstanding this fact, our credit stands lower to-day than it did then, judging by the fact that we have to pay more in order to borrow money. Is it not only fair to assume that this is due to the extravagance and improvidence of the present government ?

But not only did the Finance Minister receive $93,000,000 in surpluses but the Canadian Pacific Railway paid him back a loan of $15,000,000, which they had borrowed many years ago on the credit of Canada. Did he deposit this money as a sinking fund to pay off that loan ? No ; he spent this also. All this money is gone, and the public debt of Canada stands $5,000,000 higher than at the time when the present government came into power. Will he tell me that that is good financing? I leave it to the business men of Canada to judge for themselves. I venture to say that any shrewd financial critic will come to the conclusion that somewhere there have been extravagance and improvidence, that the government have not shown the best business management or they would not find themselves in the financial straits in which they are at the present time. Were the money that the poor people have been obliged to pay into the banks at three per cent in the hands of the Finance Minister it would be very useful. He could put it into the banks, or he could use it to handle the crops in the Northwest. It is clear that the banks have failed in their duty to the public, and I criticise them as I criticise the Minister of Finance. In that western country, a few years ago, the banks were offering loans in every direction for people to use in speculating in real estate and mining stock. But, suddenly, when the banks saw danger ahead, they not only cut off the credits for speculative purposes, but they denied the people money even to carry on legitimate operations. I say that the banks helped to educate the people in extravagance and speculation, and then denied them the facilities for regular business. I have been told that there were not less than 3,000 people in the real estate business in Winnipeg only a year ago. This gives us an idea of the magnitude of these speculative transactions. But all this is stopped, suddenly stopped, and the people who require circulating medium have a right to complain when the banks deny them the use of it for proper business operations. These banks were chartered by the public for the very purpose of providing the circulating medium when fair security is offered and that circulating medium should be available for the legitimate needs of the country.

There are other points in relation to this matter which I shall take another occasion to discuss. Meantime, I merely say that, when we are amending the banking laws, we should consider the desirability of making more radical amendments than we have done in past years, in order to bring the banks more into harmony with the real needs of the country and compel them to discharge the proper functions for which they are established, and for which important powers are given them by the people of Canada. When the people look over the situation, I think they will feel obliged to hold the Finance Minister responsible for much of the stringency which exists to-day, and that many of the people feel so keenly.

Now, I saw it stated in the newspapers yesterday that, in connection with the distribution of seed grain in the Northwest, it was in contemplation by the government to carry on the works through the banks. And I think the Minister of Finance said that the government's plan would be to let the banks decide as to the necessary security.

Mr. FIELDING. I made no such statement with reference to the seed grain question, but only as to the aid given to the banks to move the grain. My statement did not relate to the seed grain question.

Mr. SPROULE. Evidently, I misunderstood the hon minister. But, for fear that something of this kind may be in contemplation, perhaps I may be permitted to make a few observations. I have information as to the situation from people in the west who tell me that there are certain things that should not be lost sight of. One thing these people tell me is that the supply of seed grain is absolutely necessary. Another is that this seed must be available on giving the security that the farmers have to offer, and at not too high a rate of interest. And a third point is that the seed must be provided early, so that it may be ready to put in the ground as soon as the spring opens. I am afraid that if these operations are carried out by the banks, these banks will follow their present course of demanding gilt-edged security. Many may be unable to satisfy the banks in this respect. Moreover, there will be many poor people, who, knowing how the banks have acted in the past, simply will never go to the banks for the necessary money to buy the seed grain. This assistance so necessary in the interest of the whole country, should be available to the poorest man as well as to the richest. The grain should be of the proper quality for seed. And also it should be furnished in time to enable the sowing to be done so as to give the crop the best chance of escaping the frost in the fall. It is represented to me also that payments should be spread over several years, because many of those who need this assistance will not be able to repay the money in one year. Another point is, that it is desirable to have this grain laid down in the elevators of the several places to be supplied. Where there are no elevators, then storehouses should be used. Above everything, the grain should not be put in the hands of one person in any locality, so that it can be made a monopoly or doled out in such a way as to exclude the poorer people from getting the benefit of it. And, finally, it is incumbent upon the government to have all the seed grain supplied thoroughly tested, with a certificate accompanying it, showing just what percentage will grow. If the farmer buys seed grain, seventy-five per cent of which will germinate, he need only sow twenty-five per cent more in order to get a full crop, should the conditions of growth be favourable. This is done quite frequently and with good results. The farmer who puts his labour to the sowing of this grain should be given every opportunity to secure a reasonable return. I offer these suggestions, as I have said, because they are given to me by people in the west who have the best means of understanding the conditions and judging what is required. I believe these suggestions are wise and timely, and I hope the government will act upon them.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL (Glengarry). I desire to say a few words in reference to the matter brought up by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Sproule). I put a question to him in order to get a direct statement, because I noticed that all through his speech he has laid down a hypothetical basis, he has argued upon a sort of negative basis nearly all through his speech. But while I take no objection to the statements he made about loans outside of Canada, I do take objection to the statement he made that the banks of Canada are loaning large amounts of the deposits of the Canadian people outside of the Dominion of Canada. For that reason I put that question to my hon. friend, with a desire to have a definite statement. Now let us go back to the time when the papers of this country were full of the idea that the Canadian banks were loaning Canadian deposits outside of Canada, I mean the month of October last. I will give you the position of the banks of Canada at that time. It is just as well to remember in this connection that our chartered banks have agencies in the old country, and they have agencies in the United States, where they take large amounts of deposits, they are carrying a foreign exchange, they are handling the business of the immense amount of traffic that the Dominion of Canada is doing, they require a large amount of money, and they have that money invested there. Now I will read the hon. gentleman a statement compiled from the Bankers' Association. I will only read the bulk sums, and it shows precisely the condition of affairs at that time. I take the bank statement of the month of October, and I am sure that these figures will be a surprise, not only to my hon. friend but to a lot of newspapers throughout the country who have been circulating rumours as gospel facts. The chartered banks of Canada, according to the October statement, had loaned to the Canadian public $630,261,000; the Canadian public had deposits in the chartered banks at that time of about $587,287,000, that sum is about $27,000,000 less to-day. I am not sure about the last bank statement. Consequently the loans to the Canadian public exceed deposits in the Canadian banks, all Canadian deposits, to the extent of $42,974,000. These are figures well worth remembering.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the hon. member is touching at all the question I raised.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I am coming to it now. The amount of loans to people outside of Canada, as shown by the October statement of the chartered banks, is $73,301,000; so I am going him $10,000,000 better. The amount of deposits held by the chartered banks of Canada from foreign depositors, money deposited in their branches outside of Canada, and other foreign liabilities of those banks, according to the statement, is $69,727,000.

Mr. LALOR. Of this $73,000,000 that is loaned to foreign countries, is the hon. gentleman able to state whether that amount all went to the United States, or is some of it in Great Britain?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. It is loaned to both, about $45,000,000 of it at that time was in the United States. The amount of deposits held by the chartered banks of Canada from foreign depositors, had in their branches outside of Canada, is $69,727,000. Now the total loans outside of Canada, or the total amounts due from banks outside of Canada, more than their deposits outside of Canada, are but the sum of $3,600,000, instead of $63,000,000 as my hon. friend stated.

Mr. SPROULE. This does not disprove the statement I made. I took the Canada 'Gazette,' the amount of money belonging to Canadian banks that was in the banks of New York on call, call loans.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. The Canada 'Gazette' does not state that the loans are all in New York, or any such place, the Canada 'Gazette' simply states the loans held outside of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. In that respect I am not going to contradict the hon. gentleman, because I may have confused what I took from the newspapers and what I took from the 'Gazette,' for I looked over both. The statement was made by one or the other, if not by both, that there was at that time over $64,000,000 of Canadian money invested in call loans in New York.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. That is just the reason I am making this statement. The papers all over the country, large and small, and people of all sorts, have imbibed that idea so completely that I desired to make this positive statement. I put the question to the hon. gentleman because he has dilated upon it time and again, talking about the savings of the poor farmers and the poor people of this country that the banks have loaned outside of Canada. The facts are that the banks are not loaning Canadian money outside of Canada, but they are loaning outside of Canada the deposits they have got in their banks outside of Canada.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would the hon. gentleman tell us what proportion of this is loaned in Great Britain and what proportion in New York?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I cannot tell that, and it does not make any difference. But the amount that is loaned in these places I have stated.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman know that from the returns of the bankers who are interested in it?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I took the precaution to get this information direct from the parties who know.

Mr. BARR. Would the hon. gentleman tell me who these parties were?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I got it from one of the representatives of the Bankers' Association of Canada, and I wished to correct the idea that this is Canadian money loaned outside of Canada. I am sure the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) could tell the equivalent of the sum. But without getting the exact information, I can only say that this country has a great deal to be thankful for that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is not Finance Minister.

Mr. LANCASTER. What does the hon. gentleman say is the exact information as to where the money is?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I have given it to you two or three times.

Mr. LANCASTER. I may be dense, but I have asked him to tell us how much of this money is loaned in England and how much is loaned in New York. Now if he knows that it is not loaned in New York, how much is loaned in England?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I said outside, loaned outside of Canada, including all over.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where is it loaned, what is the proportion?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. The Canadian money is not loaned out of Canada.

Mr. LANCASTER. To what extent is my hon. friend from Grey Mr. Sproule), right, after all.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. He is entirely wrong.

Mr. SPROULE. My information is direct from a banker who has been in the business for nearly a quarter of a century, and he should know as well as the member who is speaking.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. He does not, he certainly does not.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Is it a fact that Canadian banks have advanced to the Canadian people more money than the Canadian people have put into the Canadian banks?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. Yes.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. To what extent?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. The chartered banks had loaned to the Canadian public $630,261,000; the Canadian public had deposited in the Canadian banks $570,000,000. The Canadian banks have loaned to the Canadian people $42,974,000 more than the Canadian people had deposited in the Canadian banks at that time.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the money they issued, that we gave them power to issue ?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. That is their own capital.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is promissory notes.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). Mr. Speaker, it is certainly refreshing to see the government, after proclaiming for ten years from the housetops that the great progress and good times of the country were due entirely to the action of this government seek to evade responsibility for the present financial stringency. They gave Providence no credit whatever for the good times, Providence had nothing to do with them ; but now that bad times have struck us who is responsible for them ? Is it not the same government who claimed credit for the good times ? They had no right to claim credit for the good times, but surely they are responsible for the bad times that have struck us lately.

Mr. EMMERSON. Times are good now.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who says that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I say so.

Mr. TAYLOR. Gentlemen who are feeding at the public crib may say it but the people of the country do not say it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not feeding at the public crib.

Mr. TAYLOR. But you were until a short time ago and I think you have some pensions coming in. Those land deals down in New Brunswick may be bringing in returns.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would ask my hon. friend to take that back.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will take it back of course ; I was only in fun.

Mr. EMMERSON. Things said in fun and so lightly may be more offensive than if said otherwise. You promise not to do it again ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I knew that the business men of the country are feeling the pinch of hard times. There are good times with the farmers but they are not buying on account of the cry of hard times ; business men and working men know that there are hard times on us now, brought about by the action of this government.

We heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) on December 4, saying that this bugaboo of imports and exports was exploded. Year before last we imported about $53,000,000 more than we exported, including all our grain, butter, cheese, pork, bacon, lumber, all the produce of this country. We bought $53,000,000 more than that and had to send out $53,000,000 of money in addition to our exports of goods. This year we imported $12,000,000 more than all the produce that we sent out of this country. Yet the Minister of Agriculture says that the bugaboo is exploded. Let him go to a farmer and ask him what was the production of his farm for a year. The farmer may say : After paying all my wages, taxes and expenses, I have $1,000 of a surplus, but I shall ask my wife how much the household expenses were. The wife turns up the figures and says : The accounts are all here, they all have to be paid and come to $1,500. The farmer has a surplus of $1,000. Then is not the farmer $500 in debt ? So it is with the country. We brought in $120,000,000 more goods than we sent out and the country is $120,000,000 worse off to-day.

We have in this country the best banking system in the world, and the people of this country have faith in it. The banks under that system have done everything possible to carry on the business of the country and a great deal of credit, in my opinion, is due to the banking system. I do not think that the country is any better off for the announcement of the Minister of Finance that he was going to spoon-feed the banks, that he was going to give them money to move the crops. The banks have plenty of capital and money and do not want to be spoon-fed. There was a cry from the west that the banks would not give money and the minister said he would go to them and give them aid. I understand the banks did not ask for aid, but to gain a little political capital the minister said he would give help. What could the government do ? Have they any money ? Where is the $60,000,000 that the people deposited with the government ? Have they that to throw into the banks ? No, it is every bit of it spent in carrying on the affairs of the country, notwithstanding the great taxes they have collected. If the people called for that $63,000,000 to-morrow, if they asked for the return of their deposits, the government would have to say :

We are bankrupt, we have not the money to pay you. The American government has money in the treasury with which they can come to the aid of the banks, but this government has no money. They borrowed $63,000,000 of the people's money through the government savings bank and spent it—sepnt it on what ? Buying trash at double and treble the proper price like the soup tureen on the boat on the St. Lawrence. After having collected through the customs and inland revenue twice as much as was collected by the late government, it is all spent as well as the $63,000,000 of the people's money which was borrowed at 3 per cent. Why do they not have this money to lend to the banks to tide them over ?

Let me show the figures of what the banks have done. It is true that the banks have some money out on call loans outside of Canada. I have here the bank statement for the first of December in which it is stated that they have on call and short loans elsewhere than in Canada (no doubt a good portion of this is in United States) $43,509,000. Then they have current loans elsewhere than in Canada $22,928,000, a total of $66,437,000 of thet banks' capital that is loaned outside of Canada. Against that they have deposits elsewhere than in Canada (that is deposits brought in from people outside of Canada and deposited in the banks in Canada) $53,407,203, and they have balances due to agencies of the banks or to other banks or agencies in the United Kingdom $10,330,000. They have that due to other banks on hand and one of our largest banks has a loan in England of $9,757,000. Thus they have money from parties outside of Canada amounting to $73,523,000 as against tee $66,000,000 that they have out on short loans outside of Canada. Thus they have a balance of foreign money in their coffers of over $7,000,000, to put against the money they have on loan in New York.

Now we will take the other side of it. The banks have deposits by the public payable on demand in Canada of $157,-185,000, and they have deposits by the public payable after notice, or on a fixed date, amounting to $402,626,000, making a total of $560,000,000 that the banks owe the people of Canada on deposits. What have the banks done with this deposit ? They have on current loans in Canada, which is the money lent to the manufacturers and merchants of the country to carry on their business, $556,000,000, and they have on call and short loans on stocks and bonds in Canada $44,000,000, making a total of $601,-000,000, or about $41,000,000 more lent out in Canada than they have deposited of the money of the people. There is no trouble with the banks of this country in that respect. If the government had that $60,-000,000 they borrowed from the people of the country and were able to turn it over to the banks there would be no trouble at all, but the government squandered that money as they are sqnandering the taxes wrung from the people by the Minister of Customs, which are nearly three times more than when the Conservatives were in power. I have a good deal to do with the banks of Canada, and I know that if it were not for the help they are rendering the business of Canada, it would be in a mighty bad way. This government has no money to come to the rescue of the banks. The government can pledge the credit of the country as they are doing every day, but they have no money to help the banks should any stringency arise.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. You are destroying the argument of the member for East Grey.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not. Owing to the fact that this government sent out of the country last year $150,000,000 to buy imports, the banks were not able to lend to the farmers of the country, and so they had to curtail, and they informed the manufacturers of Canada that they must contract their business, that they must not allow it to expand this year because they could not give them as much credit as last year. That was due to the fact that the government sent out of the country $150,000,000 to buy goods in foreign countries.

Mr. MILLER. When the banks sent out this notice to manufacturers, did they indicate that as the reason why they were unable to supply the money?

Mr. TAYLOR. The banks don't give the public their reasons. They saw the way the government was trotting at a break-neck pace ; the banks are shrewd ; they knew there were bad times coming ; they saw the cloud, and they commenced to haul in sail. The banks saw that Canada was sending out $150,000,000 more for imports than it received for its exports, and they notified the manufacturers that they would have to curtail their business, and they asked the farmers to pay their indebtedness, because the farmers had good crops and they were living economically, and the banks thought they were able to pay. The farmers saw there was going to be a stringency and so they curtailed their purchases, and the manufacturers and the merchants felt it. When the Minister of Finance makes his next budget speech he will not have as rosy a statement as he had last year.

Mr. DYMENT. Would you like to see it that way?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I would not. I am very sorry to see the bad times. But these bad times have been brought about by this government, which my hon. friend (Mr. Dyment) supports. If we had this $153,-000,000 that we had to pay for imports more than we exported, we would be well off.

Mr. DYMENT. How do you account for the stringency in the money market in the United States, where the conditions in that respect are reversed ?

Mr. TAYLOR. They were gambling and trotting too fast in the United States. There is plenty of money in the United States, but the millionaires are jobbing in stocks, and they can cause a flurry any day they like. The United States banking institutions are not to be compared with our Canadian banking institutions. We have the best banking institutions in the world in Canada.

Mr. GORDON. How does the hon. gentleman account for the stringency in Germany, where they are manufacturing so much ?

Mr. FOSTER. That is too far off.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the speech of His Excellency at the opening of the session the government put into his mounth the statement that the financial stringency was world-wide, and therefore it included Germany, Now, there are some parts of the world that are experiencing good times, but the Governor General said that there were bad times all over the world.

Mr. EMMERSON. He must have been mistaken then.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was the advisers of His Excellency that made the mistake in putting these words into his mouth. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have convinced you and the House that the banks of Canada have done everything they could to carry on the affairs of the country, and that they are doing their best to-day. There is no censure to be cast upon the banks of Canada. The censure should be put upon the Minister of Finance, who attempted to spoon-feed them and told them he would give them some money when he didn't have a dollar in his pants to give to anybody. He has to pay 7 per cent in England to renew his temporary loans ; he is conducting his business the same as a merchant who has to renew his paper every thirty or sixty days and pay the regular bank rate. That is the way the affairs of this country are being carried on now. The figures I have quoted show that up to the first of December the banks of Canada have lent out every dollar they have received from the people of Canada and $41,000,000 to carry on the business of the country. There is no fault to be found with the banks. The fault is to be found with the Fininace Minister, who said the banks had no money to move out the grain. There is my friend from Kingston (Mr. Harty) who is looking at me, and he knows a grain buyer in Kingston who has one million dollars credit.

Mr. HARTY. Yes, three of them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, three of them if he wants it, and he is moving all the grain he requires and the banks run no risk. He buys a carload of wheat in the Northwest, puts it in an elevator, gives a warehouse receipt, ships it, and when it is sold in England the bank gets the money. The government need not come to that man's rescue or any other good grain buyer's rescue because the bank holds the grain as security, and he pays interest on the 90 per cent or whatever they advance. That is the way the grain business of this country is done, and it needs no guarantee from the Finance Minister or the government to the banks of this country to enable them to lend Tom, Dick and Harry money to move the grain of the Northwest, because it will move itself through the grain buyers. As soon as they put it into a car they get a warehouse receipt for it, on which they can realize on delivery at the selling point, and that is put through the banks, so that a grain buyer need not have a very large amount of his own capital, the banks furnish it all, and are glad to do so. I do not think it is a good advertisement for the banking system of this country to say that the government had to come to their assistance and spoon-feed them to help them to move the crop of this year. If such a proposition was made, I do not think any of the banks accepted it. We have not yet heard from the Finance Minister what it was. The government said they were going to assist the banks to move the grain crop, although they had not a dollar in their treasury. They had spent all the money they had, as they are doing at the rate of $100,000,000 a year to run the country, whereas the Conservative government before 1896 did it better for $40,000,000. When the farmers of this country find this out I do not think that they will say to these fellows that they will be glad to keep them there longer ; but they will put them out and put in their places men who will manage the affairs of the country in a more satisfactory manner.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I do not wish to enter into the general discussion, but I would like to make our good-natured friend a little happier than he seems to be at present. I wish just to refer to one point in illustration to show that it is not wise to come to the conclusion that the country is so many millions better off if our exports exceed our imports, or so many millions poorer if our imports exceed our exports, as shown in the trade and navigation returns. My hon. friend said that in the year 1906 $53,000,000 more came into the country than was exported ; but you must analyse the figures before you can come to any general conclusion. For instance, if a farmer earning $1,000 in a year had spent $1,500 in perishable products, it would be easy to see that he would be in a worse position at the end of the year than at the beginning; but suppose he had spent $900 and had bought another farm for $1,500 which was going to be productive, you would not say that he was worse off. In the $53,000,000 of excess of imports over exports there are to be included $9,000,000 worth of settlers' effects which came into this country free of duty. There is no doubt that there were other millions that came in with the 200,000 immigrants; but that $9,000,000 of settlers' effects goes to swell the adverse balance of trade which the hon. gentleman says is against us. Is the country poorer because that $9,000,000 appears against it on the face of the trade returns? Why, that was $9,000,000 worth of wealth, acquired by people in other countries and transplanted to this country, leaving those other countries $9,000,000 poorer and this country $9,000,000 richer. Suppose we had said to the men who brought in these settlers' effects, at the time the entry was made, take this back out of the country, and suppose we had said to another 200,000 of our people, go to the United States and take your household effects with you, and as you go out there will be an export entry made showing that you have increased our exports by $9,000,000. If you shut out the $9,000,000 which came in and took into account the $9,000,000 which went out, the adverse balance of trade would be reduced by $18,000,000. Would anybody say that the country was wealthier by that amount than before? No, you would say that it was that amount poorer than before. You have to analyse the trade returns, and see what the imports and exports consist of.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose that $9,000,000 comes in, and suppose it is invested, as my hon. friend says it is, does that help to wipe off the balance of trade for that year?

Mr. PATERSON. Not as far as the returns are concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. But the balance of the trade has to be made every year. It does not run on and wait until the investment pays the money back.

Mr. PATERSON. But the hon. gentleman will not say that there must be an export to equal that, because these people have brought in wealth acquired in other countries and have not sent produce back to pay for it. It is acquired wealth.

Mr. FOSTER. But if it has gone into an investment?

Mr. PATERSON. Then there will be a profitable return by and by; but in the meantime the returns show an adverse balance of trade. But in the case of the settlers' effects brought in there is $9,000,000 more wealth in the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. I suppose that $20 soup tureen for the 'Montcalm' was included in that.

Mr. PATERSON. I am discussing the large principle involved. If money is wasted by buying something that is not needed, that is another matter; but I am giving this case to illustrate the idea that if you merely take the trade returns and build an argument on them without analysing them, you will arrive at a fallacious conclusion.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the hon. gentleman sat on this side of the House and the Consevative government had a small adverse balance of trade, did he not 'whoop her up' and say that that was the reason the country was going to the dogs?

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot remember all that I did. On a great many occasions, I know, I said things that were necessary to be said, sometimes in subdued tones, sometimes in tones not so subdued, according to the enormity of the offence. I do not remember arguing that because there was a balance of trade against the country therefore it was going to ruin.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will try and refresh his memory some of these days by reading one of Sir Richard Cartwright's speeches and one of his own on this very subject.

Mr. J. BARR (Dufferin). No doubt the House has been very much enlightened by the lucid explanation given by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). He told us that there were $9,000 000 brought into the country by settlers—$9,000,000 more wealth. Well, if our duties were properly adjusted there is nothing in connection with the necessaries of life which could not be manufactured in this country. No doubt there are luxuries which we cannot manufacture and have to bring from abroad, but I submit that we ought to be in a position, and would be had a Conservative government continued in office, to furnish all the necessaries of life we require. My hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) has pinned his faith to the theory that when the balance of trade is against us, it shows that we are that much better off. I would like to know how that theory works out in connection with our immigrants who are coming into this country and bringing in supplies with them. It has ever been held by the Conservative party that the more we manufactured in this country and the less we imported, the better for this country, and it seems to me that that is a point on which now all are agreed whether Reform or Conservative. For our part, we believe that the only reason why Canada to-day has to import $57,000,000 worth more than she exports, is because sufficient encouragement is not given to our manufacturers and they are not in the position in which they ought to be and in which they would be had the Conservative government remained in power. In that case we would have seen the balance of trade in our favour and our own manufacturers supplying the majority of goods we now import.

To-day we occupy a position unique in the history of the Dominion, a position we never occupied before and which I hope we shall never occupy again. As far as our banking system is concerned while the general principles of our banking law have worked fairly well, there have been occurrences in the past few months which show that the system has many defects. The developments in connection with the closing of the Sovereign bank prove beyond doubt that, so far as our banking arrangements are concerned, they occupy a most unsound position. And in connection with the Ontario bank it has been proved that, as in the case of all the banks that have gone down, the directors were mere figureheads. According to law, it is doubtful whether the directors of a bank have the right to go in at any time and examine its books and securities. True the law provides that no large loan shall be made without the consent of the directors, but very often that law is a dead letter, and we have had the admission from the largest bank that it is not unusual for the managers to invest the funds of the bank in large enterprises without calling together the board of directors. It is only after the investment has been made and everything is settled, that the consent of the directors is asked to what may be rather a wild scheme. Just look at the state of affairs to-day in connection with the Sovereign bank. That bank had over a million loaned to the Chicago and Milwaukee Electric railway, which is to-day in liquidation. Look at the financial speculations it went into in Alaska and elsewhere. If our banking system were all we desire it should be, if we had all the safeguards around it we ought to have, it would be utterly impossible for the president or manager to make large loans without consulting the board of directors. Under the circumstances, the time has come when the government should take up the question and bring in a Bill to remove these evils and renew public confidence. If we destroy public confidence in the banks their stock will become unsaleable, and we shall have a financial state of affairs worse if possible than the conditions now existing.

In connection with this motion, what are the circumstances? We have the government proposing to assist the banks to a large amount in removing grain from the great west. But if the banks were not in a most stringent position, they would not require that assistance. If the banks were not in a tighter position than they have ever been before, it would not be necessary for the government to come to their assistance, in this way.

We find it stated in the newspapers that the government is to advance $4,000,000 to distribute seed grain in Saskatchewan and Alberta. Having spent some time in that country, I believe that this is a wise step on the part of the government. It would be one of the greatest calamities that could befall this country, if, next spring, the farmers were without seed for their fields, or were compelled to use inferior seed which probably would not yield a good return. But, while this action is to be commended, the government should see to it that it is carried out in the most effective way. It will not do to have seed grain given only to the wealthy, to those who can give security; for it is only by a wide distribution of this seed grain among those who need it and can use it, that the benefits desired will accrue to the country at large.

But it is fair to ask: What has brought about this state of affairs? We know that in the west the crops were not altogether a failure. In Manitoba the yield has been almost, if not quite, up to the average, and the increased price of grain assure the farmers of Manitoba of a better return, probably, than in any former year. And, while mentioning that, I may point out that a great deal of this grain in Manitoba, both wheat and oats, is of excellent quality for seed. Why should it be sent here to the east, and then returned to Saskatchewan and Alberta for distribution to those requiring seed, with all the charges added, to be paid either by the settlers, or by the country as a whole? I say that it is the duty of the government to send experts to Manitoba to find out grain that can be used for seed, and have it shipped to the west for the purposes of this proposed distribution. But wherever this seed grain comes from, it must be provided in the meantime, at the expense of the country, and I hope the government will see to it that the fears expressed by some of the newspapers are not realized; I hope they will see to it that this seed grain does not get into the hands of tricksters or grafters who will make the distribution of it result to their own benefit, or to the benefit of a political party, instead of to the benefit of the farmers in whose interest this distribution is supposed to be undertaken. And I may go so far as to warn the government, that, while we are willing that they should carry on this work, we will hold them responsible for the manner in which the work is done.

I was about to deal with the real cause of the present state of affairs. It is true that, in many cases, the soil did not produce as in other years. But it must not be forgotten that, on the whole, the higher prices will go far towards making up that loss. I submit that one great cause of the difficulty is the class of immigrants brought into that country. It is a well known fact that hundreds of thousands of immigrants went into that country last year not only without means but utterly unacquainted with our methods of life and unfit to engage in farm work. It is not unnatural that the methods used to bring immigrants to the Northwest should result in the influx of many who should never be brought here. The immigration agents are paid $5 a head for these immigrants when they leave the country from which they come, and $5 when they arrive here. Of course, under these circumstances, the agents consider quantity rather than quality and send immigrants among whom are a very large proportion of an undesirable class. We need only look at our criminal records to see that an undesirable class of people has been brought among us. Many of the most flagitious crimes have been perpetrated by these new arrivals. The time has come, and more than come, when the government should exercise a more careful selection in our immigration. Better far that we have a much smaller number than that we have even a small percentage of this undesirable class. Who are the people who, in the Northwest to-day, are seeking the shelter and food as a matter of charity? They are largely the immigrants of whom I have spoken. Even orientals are being brought in and efforts are made to settle them in the west. I contend that not only should we have this as a white man's country, but we should have it peopled by immigrants who will help to build up Canada instead of proving an interference with the work of upbuilding that is now going on. If these unfit and criminal people are brought into Canada, what will be the result? They will lower the standard of moral life and be an injury to the country in every way.

Under these circumstances I submit that this government are not doing their duty in failing to take care of the immigrants that are brought to this country. Whilst that is the state of affairs in the west, I think a similar condition prevails in every province. From one end of the province of Ontario to the other we find soup kitchens are being opened everywhere. We find that charitable institutions are taxed to the utmost to look after the needy, and that is in the month of January when we have nearly four months more of cold weather to look forward to. The charitable institutions are utterly unable to care for these destitute people. What is the condition of our workingmen to-day in this country? Factories one after another are shutting down, or running on half time, many of them only run for a few hours a day. They are reducing wages, and the conditions of the labouring man is such as to demand our sincere sympathy. We know that there never was a time in this country when a dollar had as little purchasing power of the necessaries of life as it has now. Look at the price of bread to-day, at the price of eggs, at the price of meat. I say to-day that while the workingman is only getting from one-half to two-thirds of what he earned a year ago, his money will not buy nearly as much as it would a year ago. Under these circumstances we have the greatest sympathy for them, and we have the greatest sympathy for those charitable people who are endeavouring to carry them over this hard winter. In order to prove what I say, I will ask the House to hear what the Toronto 'Globe' of January 28 says. Of course, whatever hon. gentlemen opposite find in the 'Globe' they will accept without question, and when they find the 'Globe' telling about hard times they will accept it. But the Finance Minister and others have told us that we are flourishing to-day as we never did before. It may be that their friends and heelers are flourishing, and do not feel the hard times. But I want to tell him that throughout the length and breadth of this country the poor people feel the hard times as they never did before. Now here is what the 'Globe' of yesterday has to say. The heading is Shacktown folk hard hit; St. George's Society will probably distribute food and fuel. Lack of work is now general. Special need for aid all over the city. The position of the Shacktown people is worse than that of the unemployed in the city, because they do not share in the city's official relief.

I suppose some hon. gentlemen do not know what Shacktown is. I was going to say that Toronto was a suburb of Shacktown. It is one of the most thriving places, and its population is daily increasing. Of course we know that there are a great many unemployed in the city. They are there by the hundreds and thousands, and while the charitable people are taxed to the utmost to keep the unemployed from the pangs of hunger in the city proper, the condition of the Shacktown unemployed is much worse.

The position of the Shacktown people is worse than that of the unemployed in the city, because they do not share in the city's official relief.

That is, they are a special people by themselves.

Two newly painted signs in Little Piccadilly—one of the shack communities where hard times are reigning—serve to indicate the nature of the people who are out of work in this city. One of them is hung from the lowest limbs of an oak tree, whereunder is a shack as big as a back kitchen. It reads 'Ladies' and Gents.' pressing, cleaning, mending, sewing and darning done here, cheap.' The other depends from a twelve by fourteen dwelling: 'Bricklaying done by job or contract, cheap.' There is grim irony about those signs. Nobody in Little Piccadilly could pay to have his clothes mended; it would be ridiculous. Nobody could think of hiring a bricklayer; that would be madness. But the notices swing in the wind, marking a forlorn hope, pathetic in the hopelessness of their solicitation.

There is scarcely any money in these districts. Two men stood talking on a corner; one had an overcoat, the other was shivering. 'Sell ye my coat for half a dollar,' the former offered, spurred by an inspiration.

The other laughed, 'Half a dollar! Cheap enough, but I hv'nt seen twenty-five cents these six weeks.'

The woman's burden.—In a little two-roomed home under a thin cluster of pine trees, the reporter found a woman whose husband was sick, and who, by great good luck, was able to get a few days washing occasionally. There were two children, and by the woman's work food was supplied the little household. For fuel the children were sawing up an old pine tree with a borrowed saw. But the woman was wearing her husband's boots, with cardboard inserted to replace the soles.

Now that is the condition of affairs to be found in the suburbs of probably the wealthiest city in this fair Dominion. When these hon. gentlemen tell us about the flourishing times we are having, I ask you to think of the starving thousands upon thousands that are scattered all over this fair Dominion of ours. Now returning to the financial condition of this country, think of the amounts deposited in the savings banks. You are well aware that if we have $60,000,000 less in the savings banks to-day, it is not very creditable to this government, and will not raise them in the esteem of the people when they remember that only four years ago this government reduced the rate of interest from three and a half to three per cent, whilst at that very time they were paying larger interest than they were giving to these depositors.

They were making money out of them. What induced the Minister of Finance to take that extraordinary course? He tells us that it was done at the request of the bankers; the bankers wanted all the money. That is very true, the bankers wanted it at a very low rate and whilst they are lending it out at a large profit, from 6 per cent to 8 per cent, we find that they induced the Minister of Finance to grind down the poor people and to reduce the rate of interest paid on their savings one half per cent to 3 per cent. It does seem to me that that is another instance of the oppression of the weak to increase the wealth of the mighty, of adding to the burdens of the poor people for the purpose of increasing the wealth of those who are already very wealthy. Under these circumstances the government to-day should give a rate of interest on the savings of the people equal to what they would have to give if they were borrowing money in England or elsewhere, and in this way encourage the people of the country to accumulate savings. I believe that a rate of 3½ or 4 per cent would bring this about. There are other reasons why they should have a rate of interest such as would induce the people to deposit their money in the government savings banks. We know that the $60,000,000 of deposits in the government savings banks consist mostly of small amounts deposited by men and women, sometimes children, who are not accustomed to business; and the result is that when the interest gets down to 3 per cent instead of 4 per cent these people are often induced to put their money into stocks of wild cat schemes so that in many cases they lose their money. I submit that it is the duty of the government to give every encouragement to the people, particularly the poor, to become depositors in the government savings banks, and to do this they should grant as high a rate of interest as can be granted without loss to the government. In this way they would be doing a great service to the country and the result would be that whilst the government would not lose anything they would save money to the people and prevent them from putting their savings into schemes in which they would run the risk of losing not only the interest but the principal as well.

We are facing to-day a conditioin of hard times such as we never did before, and it is absolutely necessary for this government to devise ways and means to save the country from threatened ruin. We must look carefully to our immigrants and see that they are the class we desire to have in this country, and we should amend our banking laws in order that they may command the confidence of the people. Whilst our banking laws are good they are not perfect. As they stand now we know that the bankers are taking advantage of hard times and have raised the interests on loans from 6 per cent to 10 per cent, a rate which our manufacturers cannot pay and carry on their manufacturing, so that they may be obliged to close. We have a usury law preventing the ordinary man from charging more than a certain rate of interest, but the banks are exempt from the operation of that law and can charge what they wish. We should undoubtedly have a much better banking law than we have at the present time.

Mr. ROBERT PRINGLE (Stormont). This motion, Mr. Speaker, is a very important one. When it was stated in the press that the banks of our country had to ask the government for assistance in moving the crops in the west, it certainly was a shock to thousands of people throughout Canada who knew the situation in regard to our banks. It was a shock to learn that the banks had to seek aid from the government for this purpose. If you spoke to a banker you would receive the reply that they had never asked the government for any assistance, that they had ample resources to take care of the crops in the west. I asked a question in this House as to the arrangements made at the early part of the session, as did other members, and we were told that at a later date we would get that information; but up to the present we have had no information as to the arrangement which this government had made with the banks to assist in the removal of the western crops. There are in the western country to-day very serious complaints as to the position in which the producers find themselves in handling their crops of last season. I was informed by the general manager of one of the banks who attended a meeting of the Canadian Bankers' Association, at which the question came up, that when he asked what the arrangements were for assisting the banks in the removal of the crop from the west, he was quietly told: You people have nothing whatever to do with it, this arrangement is only made with the large banks who are doing business in that western country. We are entitled to the fullest information in regard to the arrangement that has been made by the government with the banks to assist them in the removal of the western crops.

I would not like to say one word which might be construed as in any way disparaging our banks; we all know that we have in this country many banks which are strong and in which the people may have the most implicit confidence. In no year have the banks of this country made greater progress than in 1907. The statistics giving the returns earned by the banks on their paid-up capital show that these returns ran all the way from 7 per cent to 20 per cent. The Bank of Nova Scotia, probably the strongest financial institution in Canada, with a rest of 180 per cent of its capital, earned on its paid-up capital last year 20 per cent; the Bank of Montreal earned on its paid-up capital last year something over 13 per cent, almost 14 per cent. Some of the other banks earned 17, some 16, some 14; but all our stronger banks earned a very large percentage on their paid up capital and I believe that to-day the banks are in a stronger position and that the people of this country should have implicit confidence in them.

But, we are finding a tremendous shrinkage in deposits. One bank alone had a shrinkage of $10,000,000 in its deposits last year. Why is that ? It is not because the Canadian Bankers' Association absolutely control the rate of interest payable to the depositors ? And I make that statement for the reason that we have in our banking law a provision which gives to the bankers of Canada the right to pay such a rate of interest to depositors as they may deem advisable. Supply and demand will regulate the interest rate, but the government of this country can regulate the rate of interest payable on deposits in its own banking institutions, and when tight money period comes, when the government has to go to foreign markets, as this government has had to do, and pay four or five per cent for money brought into Canada, I say that the government of Canada should say to Canadian artisans and to Canadian farmers who have money to deposit : the time has come when we will allow you a reasonable rate of interest upon your deposits in the government savings banks. This government could have said during the last year that the time had come when they would allow 3½ or 4 per cent upon such deposits, and the Canadian Bankers' Association would have been compelled to get together and declare that they must raise their rate on deposits to meet the government rate. But what transpired a short time ago at a meeting of the Canadian Bankers' Association at Montreal? The question came up as to whether the government was going to raise the rate to 3½ per cent and the gentleman at the head of that association said : I have arranged that matter with the government, you need have no fear that the government dare raise the rate to the depositors in the government banks. There is only one way in which we can regulate the rate of interest to depositors and that way is by government action, and the government of Canada has got to act and not the Canadian Bankers' Association. Had the government of this country taken a proper and reasonable position and said : We have a period of tight money, we have a period of high interest, we will raise the rate of interest on money deposited with us, then the Canadian Bankers' Association would have to follow suit. And, Sir, I believe it is the very best thing that could happen to Canadian banks. They have been losing their deposits by millions. Take the Canadian Bank of Commerce which has a loss of deposits of $10,000,000 within the last few months. If the government had raised their rate the banks would have done likewise and the depositors would undoubtedly have left their money in the banks. This is not the time for me to discuss certain proposed amendments which I have given notice of in respect to the banking Act, but it is proper for me to say now that we have no limitation in regard to the contractual rate of interest that a bank can contract for in the Dominion of Canada. In connection with my professional duties this year, I became engaged in a case in which one of our leading banks had made a customer pay an exorbitant rate of interest for years. I was under the impression that under the Bank Act the bankers of this country were limited to a rate of 7 per cent. I was under the impression that under this section of the Bank Act of 1906 which is practically the same as the section of the Act of 1900, the banks were limited to 7 per cent. The section reads :

> The bank may stipulate for, take, preserve, or exact any rate of interest or discount not exceeding seven per centum per annum and may receive and take in advance any such rate, but no higher rate of interest shall be recoverable by the bank.

But when I came to look into the authorities I found that if a man voluntarily pays a bank 10 per cent, or 12 per cent, or 18 per cent he cannot recover that money back. The money goes to the coffers of the bank and he has no redress. Some time ago I granted an interview to a certain paper in regard to the banking business and I want to now put myself right as to that interview. It was construed that I was condemning the banks for having call loans in foreign countries. I did no such thing. What I stated was this : That we have granted to the banks of this country a very large monopoly, that we have given them enormous powers, that we have given them the right to contract for any rate of interest they may see fit, and that these banks if they choose could create a stringency in this country by which they could compel the people to pay exorbitant rates. I pointed out that at that date the banks of this country had over $120,000,000 in foreign countries, that they had sent that money out of the country and that consequently there was to a certain extent a stringency in the Dominion which enabled the banks to charge a very high rate. My hon. friend from one of the Montreal constituencies replied in an interview in another newspaper and he stated that if I could show him that any bank in this country charged as high as 18 per cent he himself would be favourable to a law restricting the banks in that respect. Well, in order to show that the Canadian Bank of Commerce in western Canada has charged 18 per cent and 20 per cent to the borrowers of that country, all we have got to do is to look at the records of the courts. We need not look further than the case of the Bank of Commerce vs. Macdonald, or the Bank of British North America vs. Bosworth where 24 per cent was charged. It is unnecessary for me to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the banks in this country which are without any limitation as to the rate of interest they can contract for, have taken advantage of the condition of the people in western Canada and have charged as high as 24 per cent. Therefore I say that if banks are going to charge 18 per cent, and 24 per cent, and if banks are going to earn 17 per cent and 20 per cent upon their capital, the time has come for the government to say to the people : We will allow you a higher rate of interest for the money which you may deposit with us. If the government does that, then the Canadian Bankers' Association will very quickly raise the interest rate on bank deposits. I do not wish to say one word detrimental to the banks of this country. To my mind they are the greatest public utility we have. The people of this country have given them a great franchise and our banking laws are more generous to the banks than the laws of any other country under the sun. What other country in the world says to its banks : Pay up $1,000,000 capital and the moment you do you can have another million dollars upon which to do business, without any charge and without any security ; the only thing we require of you is a deposit of 5 per cent which remains with the government as security for note holders. I say that is a great privilege. It is a privilege which the banks have certainly made the best of and it is a privilege from which the banks have been able to reap large rewards. Therefore, when one proposes some amendments to the Bank Act, and some restrictions, and some regulations which he deems in the interests of the public, he is doing a public service.

What has occurred during the last three or four years justifies the position taken by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) in 1890 when introducing the Bank Act of that year, that there should be an independent audit of our banks, a position in which he was supported by some of the best minds in this country, but a position which the bankers fought until they got the provision eliminated from the Bill. If that had become law at that time and if, as was stated by Mr. McLeod, the general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia the the other day at the annual meeting, there had been an independent audit of the banks during the past two or three years we would not have had the failures which have occurred in this country. If we had in this country, as they have in the United States, a controller who would have the right to step into the head office of any one of our banks, open the vault doors and look into the securities, do you mean to tell me that for sixty consecutive months the general manager of the Ontario bank would have been able to hoodwink and deceive the government and the people of this country ? The day has come when, in the interests of depositors—and they have large interests, having about $570,000,000 of their savings in the banks of this country—we must throw around those banks greater safeguards. We have seen only the other day what occurred in regard to the Sovereign bank. A few months ago an effort was made to bring that bank into a fairly strong position. My own personal belief is that if the banks of this country had chosen to stand underneath the Sovereign bank, they could have brought it through and enabled it to pay its shareholders a reasonable amount on the money they invested in it; but it was not the policy of the Canadian Bankers' Association to assist the Sovereign bank to get on its feet and become a strong bank, but it was their policy to put that bank into liquidation and take from it the deposits which it had accumulated during the past few years. Go into the office in this city of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, which has appropriated to itself the business of the Sovereign bank. It has the deposits, and the customers can look after themselves, that is the position that is taken. I only mention this incidentally, because later on I am going to urge that the time has come—because Canada is getting to be a large country—when we have to stop the incorporation of small banks with small capital. I do not know whether I am stating what is absolutely correct or not when I state that one bank was incorporated, and its deposit of $250,000, was simply borrowed temporarily for a few days until it could get its certificate to do business; and once it got the certificate, the way in which it got its paid-up capital was by sending notes out to its branches, which were getting deposits, instructing the managers of those branches to put the notes to the credit of capital account and send the money to the head office; and in that way it got capital marked paid-up, so that it could issue for every dollar of paid-up capital a dollar of notes. We have to put some restrictions upon this business. How many of these banks have gone down in the last few years, and have been absorbed by the larger banks. The day has come when we should amend our banking law to make it more stringent in regard to the granting of charters. It may be said, you will create a monopoly. Suppose we do. Suppose we leave the business of banking largely in the hands of ten or twelve or fifteen of the large, strong banks of this country, are we not able as a parliament to regulate and control those banks in the interest of the public? In that way we will bring about confidence, and confidence is absolutely necessary in the business of banking; because, after all, our banks cannot do business on their own paid-up capital alone. They are only a medium for the investment of the savings of the small and large depositors; and unless the public have absolute confidence in them, they will not get the funds to assist in the development and the growing business of this country. I do not at this time desire to say anything in regard to some proposed amendments which I intend introducing later this session; but I consider it most important that these papers be brought down, that the people of this country may fully understand why it is that the banks have to come to the government to get money for the purpose of moving the crops from the west. Our banks have over $100,000,000 yet invested outside of Canada. They have curtailed their call loans, it is true, by $25,000,000 or $30,000,000; but they have got invested in American bonds, American stocks and other securities, millions and millions of dollars. If you find fault with that, they will tell you: 'You do not understand anything about banking; we have to have liquid assets.' What more liquid assets can they have than by lending money to the farmers on the products of this country? They are always talking about the importance of having these liquid assets. But we find one bank, the Bank of Commerce, to-day putting up a building which is estimated to cost a million and a half dollars. In the city of Toronto, on nearly every important corner, you will find large and expensive buildings in which the banks have tied up money for the purpose of getting liquid assets. For instance, the Sovereign bank has in Montreal one of the finest buildings in the city. In the report of the government, the banks state that the amount they have invested in bank premises and other real estate is $17,304,000, which does not begin to represent the money they have invested in buildings throughout the Dominion.

Take the Bank of Montreal. In its annual statement, the value of its bank's premises is given at $600,000. Why, that bank spent $1,500,000 a few yars ago on improvements in connection with its premises, and I am told that to-day the very ground upon which the bank building in Montreal stands is worth very much more than $600,000. I am not finding any fault with the banks for having good bank premises throughout the country; but when they come to the government and ask the government to furnish the money to assist them in moving the crops, let them not talk about liquid assets. They themselves are not investing their money where it will be used for the development of Canadian industries, but the moment they get their charters many of them put their money into railway bonds and stocks and other securities. Here are great public utilities to which we give charters for the purpose of enabling them to use the money of their depositors and stockholders in the development of this country, using it in other ways. I do not want to be understood as in any way attacking the credit and the standing of our banks. I believe that in Canada we have passed through this last financial crisis in an eminently satisfactory manner, and we have ben enabled to do that because we have had at the head of our financial institutions men of ability and prudence and foresight—men who saw a year ago that a storm was coming and began to take in sail. I believe that financial conditions are going to improve in the very near future, but that has nothing whatever to do with the question as to the necessity of amending and improving our banking laws. We have now six applications for bank charters which will come up this session, and I take the stand that before we grant any of these charters, we should seriously consider, not in the interests of the bankers alone, but more particularly of the people, what amendments should be made to our banking laws.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. I did not care to interrupt the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, but he made a statement with regard to the interest charged by banks in the west, and I would like to ask him if there were any special circumstances surrounding the cases he mentioned, or are we fairly to infer that these are the rates charged by banks to their ordinary customers ?

Mr. PRINGLE. I cannot tell my hon. friend the special circumstances. In a new country I quite agree that the contractual rate of interest should be fairly high and that the banks should be given the privilege of charging a fairly high rate, but the point I desire to make is that there is no limitation what ever on the rate a bank may charge. Now there is no country under the sun which has not such a limitation. The state of New York has a limitation of 6 per cent and the other states 6 per cent to 7 per cent. In the newly established territories of the United States, the contractual limitation is 12 per cent, and in this country there should be some limitation. I am not advocating that our banks should be narrowed down to a hard and fast rate of 7 per cent or 8 per cent.

Mr. McINTYRE. I am not disputing my hon. friend's argument but simply asking for information.

Mr. PRINGLE. If the hon. gentleman will go to the library and take the Supreme Court reports, he will find there the cases fully reported. In the case of Bossuth the bank charged for some years 24 per cent, then reduced the rate to 18 per cent. Then Mr. Bossuth paid off the loan and came to the conclusion that the bank had exceeded its power under that section of the Act which limits the rate to 7 per cent and tried to recover the excess. All the courts however held that as he had voluntarily paid that excessive rate, he cannot recover any of it back. The same decision was given in the case of the Bank of Commerce vs. Macdonald and in a score of other cases, which is why I think there should be some limitation. But to the credit of some of the banks in the east, let me say that they do not charge these excessive rates. Take the Bank of Ottawa in this city, I do not believe that it ever charged a rate in excess of 8 per cent. The Bank of Nova Scotia, from what I have learned, never charged in excess of 8 per cent. Neither did the Royal Bank. I am not satisfied that the Bank of Montreal has ever charged an excessive rate, because I have my own personal knowledge to the contrary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very often in New York we see that what are termed call loans are charged from 15 per cent to 30 per cent. What is the meaning of that?

Mr. PRINGLE. On call money over $5,000, the banks are entitled to charge any rate they see fit. That is a question entirely of supply and demand. If the money market is tight, then the call money brings a larger rate. But people are not obliged to borrow call money. That is borrowed largely for the purpose of speculation. Take the Bank of England, they try to keep a reserve of 50 per cent. If the reserve drops under that, they raise the rate. When it gets above that, down goes the rate. In the last few months, for example, the reserve went down steadily, and the bank rate rose ; but now that the reserve is going up, the rate is lower. There is no state in the Union which has not a usury law. We had a usury law in this country in our Banking Act, but the Bankers' Association attacked that law until they got it eliminated. Mr. Falconbridge says, in that able work of his, in which he refers to the banking laws of this country, that the Bankers' Association directed and controlled the laws passed by this parliament, but the time has come when these laws should be framed in the interests of the people.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman has made a very extraordinary statement. He says that in one instance a bank of Canada, in order to obtain the capital, required to enable it to issue notes, sent promissory notes out to its branches to be discounted, and put the amount to the credit of the head office capital stock account, and on that amount the bank issued bills and went on doing business. Did I understand him rightly?

Mr. PRINGLE. If the hon. member will permit me, I will put it more clearly. Of course, I do not wish to give the name of my authority, nor do I wish to give the name of the bank. I am advocating amendments to the banking law. My correspondent tells me of a certain general manager who forwarded to him, who was a manager, notes to the amount of $111,000—notes of farmers and others who had subscribed to the stock of the bank. These notes he made him discount, and these were credited at the head office to capital account. Now, mark this : A bank is entitled to issue notes, dollar for dollar, to the amount of its paid up capital. The only thing necessary is that they shall deposit five per cent as a security to note holders. Now, this kind of thing is going on in this country. But I say we can frame laws that will prevent this. We can frame a law under which it will be possible for an officer of the government to step into the head office of any bank and find out what these securities are that are returned in their annual or quarterly statements, and also where those securities are.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman's statement then is that, instead of cash, the stockholders put in promissory notes, which notes were discounted by the bank and that was counted as the capital of the bank. Is that the statement?

Mr. PRINGLE. I do not know that I can make it any clearer. I am speaking from information given me by one who knows, and I could give more information if I desired to do so. Of course, this is a very delicate subject, and one that we should discuss carefully. I do not wish to lessen confidence in any of our banking institutions. I can only state that what I have indicated has occurred, and the return, no doubt, has been made as paid up capital, and that is the way paid up capital has been provided in a certain bank. Of course I think that our banks, taken as a whole, are in a very strong position. I was only trying to show that the time has come when we should be more careful in regard to the banking charters. We have six applications for charters before this House this session. One of them, I believe, is backed by men who are actually ready to establish a bank, and do not care whether this government calls on them for a deposit of $500,000 or of $1,000,000. The rest of them, I understand, are not in that position. I say that the time has come when we should carefully consider our banking law, and we should do it before we grant further charters to banks.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. All I have to say is that I think the statement was made without due consideration. I think it was an unwise statement. I do not think it would be possible to establish a bank in that way.

Mr. PRINGLE. I did not say they established the bank in that way. If the hon. gentleman wants to know how they established it, I will tell him. They got $250,000 and they came here, and, as required by the Act, they deposited that money and got their certificate, and started operations. I do not say that that money was raised for the purpose of establishing a bank. After they once made a start, they got their $250,000 back. According to the by-laws of the Bankers' Association, they are required to show how much paid up capital they have in order to get circulation. If they could show $500,000 of paid up capital, they could circulate that amount of bills, and that is what they are after—to get circulation. Now, under the laxity of our laws, what actually occurred in one case? La Banque Ville Marie had $300,000 of excess circulation. I am told that it is impracticable for the government to control the circulation. Well every other country under the sun controls its circulation. But, we, in our generosity, leave it absolutely to the banker to say whether he should issue $300,000 excess circulation or not. You may tell me: Oh, but Mr. Wier went to the penitentiary for it. Well, what good did that do the hundred and odd depositors in my constituency, who waited two years, and, in the end, got 17½ cents on the dollar? But, if one seeks to discuss the banking question, he is told that he is socialistic and——

An hon. MEMBER. And that his credit will be stopped.

Mr. PRINGLE. Yes, that his credit will be stopped. It is good not to have any credit, and then it cannot be stopped.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The French treaty and then the resolution of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works about the sale to the Grand Trunk. Then we shall go into Supply, taking up the estimates of the Minister of Public Works.

At six o'clock, the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, January 30, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 88) to incorporate the Institute of Architects of Canada.—Mr. J. C. Walsh.

QUESTIONS.

POSTAL SERVICE AND COMPLAINTS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

1. Is the government aware of the report that large numbers of mutilated envelopes, containing important mail matter, have been received at different points in Canada? If so, what action has the government taken to remedy the grievance?

2. Has the government received complaints from business firms, calling attention to the carelessness of postmasters in forwarding mail matter? If so, what is the nature of these complaints, and has the government taken any action to remedy said grievances?

3. Has the government any agents or officials whose duty it is to cover all mail routes, investigate the receiving and transmission of mail matter at each post office, and the methods employed by postmasters in receiving and distributing mail? If so, how many officials are employed in this part of the service, what are their duties, and to whom do they report?

4. What is the total number of post offices in the Dominion?

5. Does the government make any examination into the means of carrying mail on mail routes throughout the country districts?

6. Has the government taken any action towards such a rearrangement of the postal service as would bring the correspondence of other districts into closer touch with the business requirements of the departmental, sessional and other correspondents at Ottawa?

7. Does the government compel postmasters to make a report of damaged letters received by them? If so, how many of such reports have been received during the past year?

8. Is there any reason why mail delivered at Kingston and Brockville, or nearby points, should not reach Ottawa earlier than letters posted at Toronto?

9. Has the government made any improvement during the past few months in the carrying to and from of mails touching the nearby towns? If so, what is the nature of the improvement?

10. Has the government ascertained that any person or persons have been guilty of mutilating His Majesty's mail during the past year? If so, what is the number of said persons, and are they still in the employ of the government?

11. How many complaints, if any, has the government received during the past six months referring to the needs of better mail service, mutilating mail, and carelessness in general, in the handling and delivery of mail?

12. What amount of money was paid during the past year by this government to satisfy claims for losses through the handling of mail matter?

13. What is the total amount of claims for losses through the handling of mail matter?

14. Is the government aware that mail formerly delivered to the city of Hull at 8.30 a.m. is now usually delivered after 9 a.m., and often 9.30 a.m.? If so, what is the cause of this delay, and has the government taken any action to remedy this delay?

15. Is the government aware that the mail arriving at the Union Station for delivery at Hull, Quebec, is needlessly held and should be sent direct to Hull?

16. Is the government aware that the mail bag made up in Ottawa for Hull is sent on the mail car to the Union Station, Ottawa, and is held there until the western train arrives in the morning?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. No.

2. Complaints of delay in the transmission of letters and other articles of mail matter are occasionally received. Careful investigation is always made into each complaint, and, when it is ascertained that the irregularities complained of could properly be charged against the postal service, steps are taken to prevent their recurrence.

3. Yes. Forty-six. Their duties are to report upon the establishment of new post offices, the inauguration of new mail routes, increased frequencies of service, upon the management of all post offices, to instruct postmasters in their duties generally, and to keep a careful supervision over the transmission of mail matter, so that its delivery may be effected with the least possible delay.

4. On 31st March last there were 11,377 post offices in the Dominion.

5. Yes.

6. As the department is at present using all possible facilities to give the very best and earliest service, it is not aware of any re-arrangement that could possibly be made that would improve the service now in existence. All trains and the earliest trains are used for the purpose of making connections between Ottawa and outside points.

7. Postmasters and other employees are required to note the condition of letters when in transit, and, in the event of the person to whom such mail matter is directed making complaint, such complaint is carefully investigated in order, if possible, to fix responsibility. A return to an order of the House is now in course of preparation by the department, dealing with the number of such cases.

8. Yes, because the train arriving at Ottawa via the Grand Trunk Railway from Kingston and Brockville is due at a later hour in the morning than the Toronto train.

9. Unless the names of the towns to which this question is supposed to refer is given, the department is not in a position to answer the inquiry.

10. No.

11. This information cannot at present be given, but a return is now in course of preparation in compliance with an order of the House, which when presented, will give the particulars asked for.

12 and 13. $830.14.

14. No change has been made by the department in the delivery of mail for the city of Hull, but since the 25th of November last, the Canadian Pacific Railway Toronto train, formerly due at the Union Station, Ottawa, at 6.25 a.m., does not now reach Ottawa until 7 a.m., in consequence of which mails must necessarily be delivered at the Hull post office at a later hour. Any delay in the arrival of the mails at Hull other than that occasioned by this change in the time of the arrival of the trains mentioned above must be caused by the trains not arriving on schedule time.

15. No.

16. A bag is despatched from the Ottawa post office, which is handed to the Hull contractor at the Union Station, Ottawa, to be delivered at Hull with the Toronto mails. When the Toronto train is on time, such mails should reach Hull considerably before 8 o'clock. When the train is late in reaching the Union Station, the contractor instead of awaiting the arrival of such train makes a special trip to Hull, returning in time to connect with the Toronto train.

LIABILITY OF DOMINION TO PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

Why are there no liabilities shown on page 32 of the Public Accounts, 1907, as due from Canada to the province of New Brunswick for the following years: 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883 and 1884?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). No sums were due by the Dominion of Canada to the province of New Brunswick on what is known as 'Debt Account' for the years 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882 and 1883, the sums previously at the credit of the province having been withdrawn for railway and other public purposes. For the year 1884 (I think the hon. gentleman made a mistake in including this year in his question) the liability of the Dominion to the province of New Brunswick on 'Debt Account' was $563,449.29, as shown by the Public Accounts of 1907, Part I., page 32.

ST. PETER'S INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked :

1. Has the attention of the government been called to the fact that the Indians are disposing of their rights to lands under the settlement of the St. Peter's reserve effected last fall?

2. Has the government instructed the Indian agent at Selkirk regarding the rights of the purchasers of these lands? If so, what are the instructions?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Yes.

2. Yes. The local Indian agent at Selkirk was instructed on the 21st instant, in connection with Indians disposing of, or pledging their holdings, that no transfer or pledge by any Indian would be in any way recognized by the department, and that when it had been determined what land each Indian was entitled to receive a patent for the same would be issued to such Indian without regard to any claims by white men or others. The agent was further instructed to make the position of the department clear and as widely known as possible, as any recognition of rights by transfer would cause endless complications, and in order to prevent same it was incumbent upon the department to issue grants only to the Indians found entitled to receive same.

TRESPASS ON BADGLEY ISLAND.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Has the Department of Justice a claim for collection against T. H. Jackman for $613.48, in respect of a claim made by the Department of Indian Affairs for trespass by said Jackson on Badgley island in the winter of 1905?

2. Has the claim been sued, or in what position does it stand?

3. If suit has been commenced, has said Jackman entered a defence thereto? If so, what are his grounds of defence?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) :

1. Yes.

2 and 3. Instructions have been given to a local solicitor, as agent of the Minister of Justice, to collect the amount, but the department is not aware whether any writ has yet been issued.

SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL'S MISSION TO AUSTRALIA.

Mr. URIAH WILSON asked :

1. Who accompanied Sir Mackenzie Bowell upon his trip to Australia in the year 1893-4 in connection with the Pacific cable and the consideration of trade relations between Australia and Canada?

2. What was the amount paid in connection with travelling, living and other expenses in conection with his mission?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. J. L. Payne, secretary ; John Carleton, messenger.

2. $2,137.64.

MR. JUSTICE CIMON.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE asked :

1. Who is the Superior court judge for the district of Kamouraska?

2. Is he obliged by law to reside in his district?

3. If so, does he reside in his district?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) :

1. The Honourable M. H. E. Cimon.

2. Yes.

3. The government is not able to say.

THE DOUKHOBORS.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the attention of the Minister of the Interior to some news which has been current in the papers, and which appears in the Montreal 'Gazette' of January the 29th, with reference to the situation amongst the Doukhobors. It is rather a long article, and I do not wish to read it for 'Hansard,' but it goes to show, if it be true, that there is a very abnormal and very regrettable condition of things prevailing amongst the Doukhobors. I presume the Minister of the Interior has read it ; if he has not——

Mr. SPEAKER. Unless the hon. gentleman——

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I will read the article and ask a question upon it. The article reads :

Winnipeg, January 28.—(Special.)—Some extraordinary tyrannical decrees are being published by the Doukhobor leaders, that bid fair to drive the whole of the Northwest communities out on a vast pilgrimage next spring, as soon as the weather moderates. The situation in the Doukhobor villages here is unparalled in the world. They have been ordered to sell their cattle by their leaders. They have done so, and now their children die for want of sustenance. Last fall they were ordered to sell their sheep, to the number of 15,000, making a mockery of the benevolence of the quakers, who gave them to them. The Doukhobors gave the whole of the products to their leaders, and the people are now paupers. A special order was also sent out at the commencement of the winter to sell all chickens, and this was accordingly done, at a tremendous sacrifice. Recently agents have gone around to abolish 'time,' and as much as $6,600 worth of watches and clocks have been taken away from the people. Mirrors have been forbidden, and an agent of Peter Veregin has been around and collected all looking glasses. Tea, sugar, coffee, also pancakes, have been forbidden, and their food is now narrowed down to raw potatoes, onions, carrots, turnips, &c. The women have been noted for their skill in embroidery, but this the leaders have forbidden. All wheat is handled by a committee. Sometimes a thousand men go to work on a railway, but the money they earn is given to the committee, and no receipts are given them. Similarly, so with those young men who work in the community brickyard. All have to give receipts for what meagre portion of food allowance they get, but they get no receipts for what they hand in to the common fund. Five hundred people live in two houses. Every man and woman has a width of four feet, and they have to get into beds from the foot. All eat at big tables in the centre. The younger men of the party sleep like sardines in the garret. A new rule is that a Doukhobor must not own more than one shirt. On account of the indigestible food they eat many Doukhobors are suffering from diseases of the skin and stomach. They defy the registration laws, and births, marriages and deaths are not recorded, and instances of bigamy are not uncommon.

Next spring to the Doukhobors inured to the hardships of 'home' life, the fatigue of a pilgrimage will come as a luxury, and it is anticipated that 7,000 Doukhobors will make the long trek on the trail on the exasperated seventy that fled to Fort William last year, and who occasionally walk the streets of the twin cities naked to show that they are used to hardships and can bear still more. Their leaders are assured of the hardihood of the people of the communities, and a big pilgrimage is confidently expected this spring.

I give it for what it is worth; it appears in a reputable newspaper. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior if he has taken or proposes to take any action to inquire into the truth or otherwise of the statements therein made?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I have not read the article referred to, and I have no direct knowledge as to the allegations in it. I am not aware that it comes within the purview of my duties to acquaint myself with these matters as stated. As I understand it, the Doukhobor people came to Canada some seven or eight years ago and settled upon the land, and the administration of the land settled upon has been necessarily a matter for the consideration of the Interior Department. As long as these people could reasonably be considered immigrants I presume they were fairly to be considered to be under the supervision, to some extent, or the cognizance of, the Immigration Department. But I think it is fair to say that after they have been in the country some seven years they can scarcely be considered to be immigrants; they are under the same conditions as any other people who may have been residing in the country for that length of time.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved second reading of Bill (No. 57) respecting a certain convention between His Majesty and the President of the French Republic.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not understand this was to be taken up before the information which has been asked for and promised was brought down. I have not received it yet.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is mistaken; the information in almost every respect has been on the table of the House for several days. I am sorry he has not seen it.

Mr. FOSTER. I have never seen it, and I have inquired for it.

Mr. FIELDING. It was sent to the distribution office, and I assumed the hon. gentleman would get it. I will be happy to send my hon. friend a copy at once, but I realize that will not suit his purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. I make the statement in good faith.

Mr. FIELDING. I know.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been looking for it every day, and I am certain it has not been distributed.

Mr. FIELDING. The practice is to send these papers to the distribution office, and I do not see what more I could do. The information brought down some days ago covers, I think, almost everything that was asked for. There was one point covered by the motion of my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) which we could not reach, but otherwise all the information is contained in the paper my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) now has in his hand. I am sorry it did not reach him earlier, but I am certainly not responsible for that.

Mr. MONK. Is this measure going through now ?

Mr. FIELDING. I should be very glad to have it through unless there be reason to the contrary.

Mr. MONK. I wish to make one or two observations before it goes through.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know if I would be going too far in asking the Finance Minister to leave this over to another day. I do not like to go into it without having the opportunity of making some little investigation.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no desire other than that the House should have the fullest opportunity to investigate and discuss the measure, and shall therefore assent to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman and withdraw the motion. I shall renew it again the first government day.

Mr. MONK. Does that mean to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I shall renew the motion to-morrow.

Motion withdrawn.

GRAND TRUNK HOTEL SITE, OTTAWA.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, that it is expedient to confirm the sale and transfer to the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada of part of Major's Hill Park, in the city of Ottawa, for the sum of $100,000, and to authorize an agreement to be made with the said company in the terms of an order in council under date of September 26, 1907, and further to authorize payment of the proceeds of such sale, viz.:—the said sum of $100,000 to the Ottawa Improvement Commission, to be applied by them for the purposes of the commission under the instructions and directions of the Governor in Council.—Mr. Pugsley.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the hon. gentleman not going to make any statement before the House goes into Committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought perhaps I would make it in committee, but have no objection to making it now. Before I became Minister of Public Works certain negotiations were entered upon and were concluded, so far as they could be without governmental action, between my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, for the sale and transfer to the Grand Trunk Railway of a portion of Major's Hill Park, for the purpose of erecting thereon a large modern and thoroughly up to date hotel. My right hon. friend will no doubt inform the House of the negotiations, and all that I shall deem it necessary to do is to state the agreement arrived at. That agreement will be found embodied in an order in council which was passed the 26th September last. Under that agreement, there is to be conveyed to the Grand Trunk Railway a portion of Major's Hill Park, which is shown upon the plan attached to a copy of the order in council, already laid on the table, and that portion consists of an area of 25,328 square feet. That area faces, for a portion of the distance, upon the railway tracks near the Rideau canal.

Mr. FOSTER. Just what are the distances ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The distance upon the canal is 1,140 feet, facing upon the railway. Upon Rideau street the distance is 135 feet.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it go right out to the street ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be from the bank of the canal at the other side of the bridge. It is quite a little distance back from the street.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is the land fenced off now with a nice fence painted green ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it goes at right angles a distance of eighty feet.

Mr. FOSTER. Along Mackenzie avenue ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Parallel to Mackenzie avenue. Then it goes again at right angles to the last mentioned line a distance of 88 feet 6 inches and then a distance of 205 feet, 3 inches, parallel to the railway track, and thence a distance of 60 feet after connecting with the first line I have mentioned, containing an area altogether of 25,328 square feet.

The price at which this land is to be sold to the Grand Trunk Railway is the sum of $100,000, and the government has decided that that amount shall be handed over to the Ottawa Improvement Commission to be applied in improvements by the commission, subject to the direction and with the concurrence of the Governor in Council.

Mr. LANCASTER. How was the price arrived at ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By negotiations.

Mr. DANIEL. How many superficial feet altogether ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 25,328.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to go up there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A large modern thoroughly up to date hotel.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be the height ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not gone into the plans in detail, but it is to be several storeys in height and is to cost about $1,500,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to have the number of storeys and the height from the ground.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will be able to give that information, if not, I can get it. There are some details in the agreement which perhaps it would be well to read. In the first place, it is provided that the department shall define by stakes the limit of ground to be used. Then that the company shall erect a fence around the area so defined. Also that no materials of any kind shall be piled on the ground on the park outside the inclosure fenced in. Also that the stone cutting and the preparation of all material shall be done altogether away from the grounds of the park. Also that great care shall be taken not to damage any of the walls or grass plots outside the inclosure, and that none of the trees outside are to be used by the company for any purpose. Should any trees be in the way of the construction of the building, they are not to be cut down, but are to be carefully uprooted and transplanted in another part of the park. Great care must be taken not to injure any portion of the park outside, any damage to the grass plots, trees or walks shall be made good by the contractors, and any portion of the park so injured shall be restored to the condition in which it was before the structure was begun. The company is to enter into an agreement before the land is conveyed, embodying the above conditions. And it is to be a condition of the grant that the railway company shall complete the hotel with in two years, according to plans to be approved of by the government, and that should the construction not be completed within two years, the grant to the company shall become void.

Mr. HAGGART. Two years from the date of agreement ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was understood that it should be two years from the date of the agreement, 20th December, 1907. But, as there has been some delay in obtaining the deed, by reason of it having been found necessary to come to parliament for authority to make the conveyance, it is possible that it would be reasonable to make the delay run to two years from the date of the deed.

Mr. FOSTER. They have not been delayed by that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Possibly not. But I merely suggest that possibly, a claim of that kind might be made, and it might not be unreasonable to allow two years from the time mentioned for the construction of the hotel.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the distance between the line of the hotel and Mackenzie avenue ; and what is the height of the proposed new building on Mackenzie avenue ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The distance is not given in feet, but judging from the plan, I should say it was about eighty feet.

Mr. FOSTER.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have had more to do with this transaction than my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley), and perhaps I should say a word. Members of the House are aware that, for a long time, the city of Ottawa has been in need of a modern hotel and that all classes of citizens of Ottawa have been giving their attention to this matter. They are aware, also, of course, that the city council of Ottawa has been in negotiation with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, since that company acquired its present interest in the Canada Atlantic Railway, for the construction of a station on the site of the present temporary Canada Atlantic station. The plan of the company at first, was to have a hotel and station on the same ground. But, after giving the matter the best consideration possible, they thought there was not more than enough room to afford proper accommodation for the station alone, and so they had to look elsewhere for a site for the hotel. They approached the government and asked for a site.

Mr. FOSTER. Who approached the government ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The authorities of the Grand Trunk. The government offered to give them a site on Nepean Point, and to give it gratuitously, the only condition being that they should erect a hotel. But the authorities of the Grand Trunk came to the conclusion that Nepean Point was too far from the business centre for a hotel in a city of the population of Ottawa, and so they asked the privilege of building in Major's Hill Park. After giving our best attention to the matter, we came to the conclusion that might be done. But, instead of giving a site free of charge, we exacted what we thought might be fair compensation, fixing the price at $100,000. It is proposed to build the hotel at the corner of the park, where one embankment faces the canal and the other Wellington street. Hon. gentlemen are aware that a roadway runs parallel with Wellington street from the higher ground down to the canal. The hotel will have a frontage of about 100 feet on Wellington street and about 1,000 feet along the canal. Between the hotel and the west side of Mackenzie avenue, there is a distance of 80 feet. Mackenzie avenue itself has a width of 40 feet. Thus, between the hotel and the eastern side of Mackenzie avenue where the proposed new government buildings are to stand, there will be a distance of 120 feet. Hon. members know that there is a monument in Major's Hill Park, to the memory of those who fell at Cut Knife in the rebellion of 1885. The ground upon which that monument stands is not to be included in the site of the hotel, but will remain part of the park. So, even after the hotel is built, there will be ample entrance to the park 120 feet wide. It is proposed that the loss of the part of the park to be alienated shall be more than made up by taking in land on Nepean Point, extending the park to the waters' edge on the Ottawa river. That is, it is proposed that the $100,000 which the Grand Trunk Company is to pay the government for this land shall be handed over to the Ottawa Improvement Commission with a view to extending the park as proposed, thus making a very large park instead of the small one which we now have. The Ottawa Improvement Commission has in contemplation also the making of a driveway from Wellington street through the park and thence along the bank of the Ottawa river. Of course, I am sorry that we are to lose even an inch of the ground of the park, but on the other hand, we shall be more than compensated I think, by the extension of the park as proposed. On the whole, I think the proposition is a good one. A question was asked as to the height of the building. I am sorry, but the architect of the hotel has not yet completed a model which he has in preparation, and which when completed, will be placed in the lobby of the House to illustrate what is proposed. It is provided that the hotel is to be of the same style of architecture as these buildings on Parliament Hill. There will be some difference as to height. The plan, as first prepared, showed a building of seven storeys and roof. But we have required of the architect that he shall take off at least two storeys, making it not more than five storeys and roof. It may be thought that even five storeys will hardly be in harmony with the style of buildings that we have here, but I would remind hon. members that there is quite a difference in the levels, Parliament Hill being considerably higher than Major's Hill Park. For this reason, I think that the hotel will be in harmony with the style of buildings on Parliament Hill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is to be the length of the hotel building ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The width of the building facing Wellington street is a little more than 100 feet ; that is my recollection.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. To what extent will the hotel a thousand feet long overlap the new departmental buildings on Mackenzie avenue ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think it will overlap them at all. I think the buildings we contemplate will cover all the ground from the Lindsay building to St. Patrick street. The hotel building will not be of the same length at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will not the new departmental building go as far south as the northern most end of the hotel ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I was mistaken—I am told that the length of the building on the bank of the canal will be only 250 feet. Now with regard to another condition of the hotel, it has been suggested to us that a hotel on the park would necessarily encumber the park with material and various other accessories of a hotel. But I may explain to the House that the plan of the building which is proposed is to have an underground passage from the station to the hotel, and on the level of Wellington Street to the hotel it is proposed to put up a large station and platform which will give the public admission to the hill, while the accessories of a hotel and the working of the hotel, will be carried on on the lower level.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me it would have been far better if the government had adopted what I would regard as the constitutional course, that is, come to parliament and get authority at first, instead of acting first and coming to parliament afterwards. Every one who has sojourned in Ottawa realizes that it is very desirable, in the interests of the city and of the country, to have a good modern hotel, and I do not propose to say a word against that. But there are other sites in the city of Ottawa which could be obtained and which would be much more suitable, I think, than this ; and I am sorry indeed that the government have arrived at the conclusion that it is necessary to take a portion of this park for that purpose. So far as I am concerned—and I say it without a desire to be offensive in any way—in my estimation it is a piece of vandalism to take a portion of this park for that purpose. What will be the result ? You have buildings here in Ottawa at the present time, parliamentary buildings, departmental buildings, which are a credit to the country, which are the admiration of people who come to this city. They were constructed before confederation, but they were constructed upon a scale which made them worthy of the confederation which was afterwards formed, and I am sure we are all proud of them. In addition to that the Langevin Block has been built on Wellington Street. It is a matter of regret that in early days further sites on Wellington Street were not acquired, as it is commonly said that Sir John A. Macdonald desired they should be acquired. That perhaps cannot be remedied now, and you are proposing to erect the necessary departmental buildings on Mackenzie avenue. Then you propose to locate between these buildings and the parliament buildings this large modern hotel, which may be seven or eight storeys in height. It will be absolutely incongruous, it will be altogether out of place, and you might almost as well erect a large hotel alongside the Library here, or on this lawn in front of the parliament buildings. I regret that the government have thought it necessary to do this; and I especially regret that they should have found themselves obliged to do it without consulting parliament in the first instance. Was this a matter of such extreme haste that the government could not have waited the then approaching session, and have listened to a discussion from the members of parliament, who surely on behalf of their constituents have some right to be consulted in respect to a matter of that kind; and after hearing the discussion and the deliberation from the representatives of the country, come to a conclusion as to whether this would be desirable in the public interest? A hotel of that kind towering among departmental buildings, a building with all the incidents of a large modern hotel, will do much to destroy the beauty and symmetry of the whole scheme of parliamentary buildings as they ought to be designed and erected. I am very sorry indeed that the government have seen fit to take this course. I do not think it is a course which they needed to take. If there was any pressing necessity about it, I would not blame them. But we have been getting on in the city of Ottawa without a large modern hotel for a good many years, ever since confederation; and to spring a scheme of this kind upon the country without taking from parliament the consent which was necessary, without giving to parliament an opportunity to put forward a suggestion or to give a word of advice, seems to be treating parliament with that contempt which is so characteristic of a great many of the administrative acts of this government. I am sorry for a great many reasons that they have done so in this case. I have no doubt the Grand Trunk Railway Company will build a hotel there which will be a fine modern building, and will supply what the city needs in that respect. I am not objecting to it on the ground that the hotel is not necessary, the hotel is necessary; I am not objecting to it because the Grand Trunk Railway proposes to build it, because I have no doubt they will put up a good hotel, and run it in a creditable manner. But I object to it because that hotel will be intruded into the ground of this park, and as I have said, you might as well place it on one of the lawns in front of this parliament building. There are other good sites not very far away from where that station will be located, as to which suggestions might have been made. I think the government in this case has acted with great unwisdom and unnecessary precipitancy, and I believe it will be a matter of regret to us and to those who come after us that the government have seen fit to adopt this course.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not want to see this pass without entering my protest against it. There are several things that I think the House might very well think of. In the first place two of these have been mentioned by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. R. L. Borden). The representatives of the people who are to a certain extent the custodians of the property of the people, left Ottawa last year after the session, feeling that their grounds in Ottawa, their public grounds on which they set great store, were intact and were the inheritance of the people. My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) smiles. Perhaps he does not adhere to the doctrine that these grounds are the property of the government, that they were last year in possession of the people of Canada. Well, being in the possession of the people of Canada, and particularly right here at the seat of government, a part of the great park site that we own, a portion of the property which we were fortunate enough to get at first and to have held for the country, now when we are obliged to add thereto, when therefore it would seem to be wisdom not to sell therefrom, we come to parliament on the last of November, and find that the government, a few days before we came here, have alienated from the country against law, a portion of one of its parks, the valuable property that Canada owns. I want to emphasize what my hon. friend said: it would have seemed to me to have been more fitting that the people's representatives, already on the point of assembling, should have had some opportunity to say whether or not they believed in alienating the property of the country for that purpose and more especially this very property. But, more than that the government have gone to work and bound themselves by making an appropriation of the money of this country when parliament was not in session, an appropriation of $100,000 to the Improvement Commission of the City of Ottawa. What is the use of parliament being called together if the appropriations are to be made while parliament is just on the eve of assembling? It would have been at least, graceful if the right hon. gentleman, when he did sell a portion of that property, had let the people's representatives say how that should be applied, whether it should be put into the treasury, or whether it should be given for this or that purpose. I know the reply of my right hon. friend. It will be that they take the responsibility and they lay themselves upon the grace and under the commands of parliament. We all know what that means.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company as to the disposal of the $100,000. That is entirely subject to the approval of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. Entirely subject? So is this. I was just going to anticipate my hon. friend. I said I knew what the reply would be, that the government would say: We have taken the responsibility and we will submit it to parliament. But, my hon. friend knows quite well, as every one sitting here does, that means that parliament has to accept the proposal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not as to the $100,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It means that parliament will have to accept it or this government will go out of power.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend misunderstood me. The agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway as to selling them land is one thing, the disposition of the $100,000 is quite another thing, and if my hon. friend will look at the terms he will see that there is no agreement whatever which is binding as to the $100,000 either as to the Improvement Commission or the railway company.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend knows that until parliament passes on this nothing has been absolutely decided, but his leader has said to the Improvement Commission, to the people of Ottawa, to the public and to us to-day, and it has been common property in this country, that the $100,000 goes to the Ottawa Improvement Commission. Is it in the resolution ?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it is in the resolution itself. I am protesting against both of these things; I am protesting against the government alienating the property of the people for a purpose that is not a public purpose at all. If they alienated it and devoted it to a public purpose in some way there might be a reason given which would partly sustain such a position, but it is not to be so used ; it is for a private company and for a private hotel. The right hon. First Minister stated the consideration; he wanted to see Ottawa have a hotel. So we all do, but is it the business of the government to provide hotels for the city of Ottawa? Is it the business of the government to provide hotels for the city of Ottawa any more than for the city of Montreal, or the city of Toronto, or for any other city? This government has alienated a part of a valuable property, of a park property of the people of this country in Ottawa. When we come back to another session we may find that during the interval they have alienated other parks in this country in other cities for the purpose of aiding private companies to build hotels.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We may find that they have sold all these parliament buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. They might do that, and if they go on doing these things they have a majority behind them that will sustain them in doing them. The principle of the appropriation of public money means the public appropriation of money by a free parliament. This is not put before a free parliament; it is put before a parliament which is bound hand and foot. It has been done by the government. The government do it on the ground that their followers will see them through, and their followers will see them through. The only alternative is for a man on that side to object to it. What answer would be given him ? Well, what are you going to do about it ? We are here ; do your worst ! What is the worst he can do? If he can get a sufficient number to join with him in a proper protest he can turn the government out. But the government is not afraid of any contingency of that kind. The exhibitions which have taken place repeatedly in this House have given them a well-grounded conviction that they need not fear contingencies of that kind. What reason in the world was there why this appropriation of public lands—for it is that and nothing more, given for a mere nominal sum and that sum given away before it reaches the hands of the government—what reason in the world was there that they should make that kind of a subvention to a private company? If we had land to provide for the building of a hotel what reason was there that it should not be open to fair competition between any parties or corporations who wished to build a hotel? Why was it done secretly on behalf of one single, private corporation, and if so, has the right hon. gentleman put himself in this position, that, if another great corporation comes and says it wants to build a hotel in the city of Montreal, or the city of Quebec or in any other city where there are government parks and asks you to treat it the same as you treated this favoured company, it means making another appropriation of land for hotel purposes? Has the government embarked on the plan of alienating public property for the sake of subsidizing a corporation that it is friendly to in carrying out their operations, building hotels and carrying them through? That is one phase of the question and the other phase of the question I want to emphasize again. What kind of commentary is it upon Liberal doctrines that the right hon. gentleman who leads this government and who administers it on the old policy and on Liberal principles, as he will declare, makes these appropriations and flaunts them before the public, before the members of parliament, who are coming from their homes, have a chance to say anything about the matter at all? Is that Liberalism? It is as far removed from it as can be. It is as far removed from constitutional government as properly understood as it can be. The only thing which the right hon. gentleman can say is that we have done it; we have taken the responsibility and we will see whether parliament will back us up or not. In that state of things you can do anything you please. You can appropriate $10,000,000 if you please; you can bind the country hand and foot if you like, if you can get a majority behind you which will carry out your proposals for the sake of clinging to office, and they are pretty sure to do that for this parliament.

But, there is another feature which has its ridiculous side. The right hon. gentleman has told us of the Washington of the North. He has asked this parliament, forced this parliament—any way he has asked this parliament—to vote hundreds of thousands of dollars and credit towards beautifying the capital in which the parliament buildings and the government parks are a very outstanding feature, and while he is giving hundreds of thousands of dollars of the people's money to beautify this Ottawa—this Washington of the North—he goes to work, singles out one of its most prominent parks and puts a deformity there to last for all time or until it is pulled down. That is one way of beautifying the city of Ottawa, destroying with one stroke of the pen, what with the taxes of the people to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars he is trying to build up. I make this prophecy —I may not live to see its fulfilment but I believe that I will—that the time will come when the people of this country will vote to pull down that hotel, to restore that park to the public properties of this Dominion and to remove the deformity. What is the deformity ? Does my hon. friend conceive, can he conceive that the government at Berlin would take one of its splendid parks or avenues and deform it by permitting the building of a hotel there ? Does he think that Washington, governed as it is by the people of the nation, would commit the barbarous act of allowing a busy, bustling hotel to be put up in one of their great parks there ? Can he conceive of any country which is beautifying its capital deforming it by putting a private business in the shape of a hotel, with all its bustle and eternal hurry, into the very midst of what is its beautification and its pride ? We can not conceive of it in others. What madness was it that seized my right hon. friend when he made this contract and acceded to this idea? It is to be called the Laurier hotel, I am told. Is he so anxious for everlasting fame that he gives away the public property of the country in order to have his name put on a sign board in gilt letters on a deformity to our public park ? I do not care how beautiful a hotel you put up there, you cannot make any congenial union between a modern hotel and the rest and quiet and space and sky-line of these beautiful parks and gardens in Ottawa. To-day there is no more beautiful view in this country than the view from that street out towards the sky-line. If a hotel of five or seven stories is put there that view is absolutely blotted out from your sight and the whole natural beauty, which to my mind is not paralleled by any other spot in this country, is hidden and mangled and deformed by a bit of bustling, working hotel property in which coming and going is the feature from morn till night and night till morn. Here are the public grounds and public buildings well set up, beautiful in their proportions and kingly in the site they occupy. You are about to build a line of government buildings in proper style, not too high, an immense mass of government buildings and between the two parts of your property, between your two masses of buildings you will place a great hotel building which will absolutely hide them from view.

You say it is to be only five storeys high, but I see nothing in your agreement which gives you the power to stop them going into the air.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans are to be subject to the approval of the government.

Mr. FOSTER. They may be subject to the approval of the government——

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would include the number of storeys.

Mr. FOSTER. But if this government remains in power, this government which has alienated the property of this country to favour a company to which they are under very great obligations and to which they look for a great deal more in the near future, the hotel will be permitted to go up into the sky line just as far as they want it to go. We are absolutely at the mercy of the same government that alienates property in the teeth of parliament assembling, without asking the consent or the advice of parliament.

It does seem to me that the word 'vandalism' used by my hon. friend was a mild phrase with which to characterize this. I look at the faces of those who constitute the council and I fail to understand how these gentlemen came to be a unit on that question. I know that members of the cabinet have some ideas about such things and that they realize the incongruous thing which is being injected into the very midst of our park system. To-day every city is trying not to get rid of its parks, but to extend its park system. Here the government is trying to restrict and limit it.

Then comes the argument. It matters little for although we are cutting off this front door we are extending the back door. You are taking the money towards making the back a little more beautiful than it is to-day, but the fact remains that you have alienated the front part, the scenic part, and given it to a paltry hotel business. The government might have better asked us to vote $100,000 or $200,000 as a subvention to the hotel, than to have alienated what was the patrimony of this country, which, once alienated, is very difficult to get back. It will be a repetition of what is taking place on the Plains of Abraham, but in a different way. At Quebec the government first forced a company to put a factory on these historic plains and now the people are compelled from sheer good humour and good taste and the wish to get rid of deformities, to buy the factory out. in this case you have given a site for this hotel and the time will come when the people assembled in this parliament, will say : Out upon that hideous deformity, we will buy it out, raze it to the ground, restore our park to its original position and save its beauty from being further marred.

I am sorry from the bottom of my heart that this thing was done, and although I would hate to subsidize railway companies or hotel companies, I would infinitely rather have voted for that than to have this thing put down there. You may make its face as beauteous as you like and have all possible adornments about it, but it is there, foreign and alien completely to the idea of a park and to the idea of a stately ground that a country like Canada would have been proud to have owned.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). This is not the most disgraceful act of this government but it is the maddest act that they have yet committed. The leader of the government can make his explanations as ample as he thinks fit as regards the opportunities of still obtaining an entry to the park, but he cannot do away with the fact that we will have a building standing there, cutting us off from the park, which will be a lasting disgrace to the administration which sanctioned it.

What is the position ? For years the policy of this government has been to place our new departmental buildings between Mackenzie avenue and Sussex street. What determined the government to place the departmental buildings to the east of Mackenzie avenue ? It was that we had Major's hill park there and that these buildings would look out upon the park. The government, knowing as it did, that it was going to build the new departmental buildings on Mackenzie avenue, the first great folly the government was guilty of was that it allowed a great commercial building, the Lindsay block, to be erected on the corner of that avenue.

Mr. FOSTER. They will buy that out.

Mr. LENNOX. If the Prime Minister had been prudent he would have taken measures to prevent the southern approach to the departmental buildings being blocked by the unsightly commercial structure which stands there now. The day is not far distant (and in view of what has been done rational men cannot oppose it) when the government will have to expropriate that property and cause another wasteful expenditure of public money. But it is not enough for the Prime Minister to have the Lindsay block there ; he must encourage another large commercial structure to be built across the narrow front of that beautiful little park. The entrance to the park is unfortunately very narrow. The right hon. gentleman tells us, with an excuse in his voice which may well be found there, that there will be 80 feet of space between the back door of this hotel and Mackenzie avenue, and that you can add to that the 40 feet width of the street. Well, you cannot add the width of Mackenzie avenue, because it is a public highway and a dirty highway at that, and so all you have is 80 feet of an entrance to that park, and in that 80 feet we have a monument erected to Canadian heroes, and which the First Minister is gracious enough to say shall not be removed. I have felt very keenly some of the ill-advised acts perpetrated by this government, but I never felt so strongly as I felt when I heard that a Liberal ministry could perpetrate such a thing as this. I echo the sentiment that it is a special disgrace to a ministry calling itself Liberal, that they should, after they have alienated the public property, come to this parliament for sanction to that alienation. Time and time again we have had this government commit the country and parliament to such schemes as this, and then we have them coming blandly to the House and asking their followers to vote in support of their action. Only two years ago, after the matter had dangled for months, just on the eve of the session they apointed a Railway Commission instead of waiting to lay the matter before parliament. A few years ago this same government pledged the country to build a railway to the Yukon on the eve of the assembling of parliament and so committed themselves to the scheme that the country had to pay for their blundering. But these are mere matters of money and not comparable in their unfortunate significance to this giving away of the property of the people of Canada. I am not prepared to say that the government did wisely in proposing to erect departmental buildings on Mackenzie avenue. I have always thought that the magnificent site on Wellington and Vittoria streets overlooking the Ottawa river, was the best place for these buildings. But the reason they gave for selecting Mackenzie avenue was that this beautiful little park in front, and now they propose to disfigure the park with an unsightly commercial building, unsightly in the sense that any commercial building is out of place in such a spot. I have no objection to the Grand Trunk Railway company; I have no objection to their obtaining a beautiful site for their hotel, but I have great objection to this government sacrificing the public property to the interests of this railway company. The Prime Minister tells us that he will appropriate this $100,000 for the purpose of extending the park down to the Ottawa river. But there again we have the unsightly building of the Printing Bureau right in the middle of the proposed extension which he speaks of. I have no doubt the next proposal will be—and it was mooted before the new extension was put on the Printing Bureau—to call upon us to vote money to pull down the Printing Bureau and so extend the view from one end of the park to the other. But you can expend your $500,000 or more to extend that park, and you will still never get rid of this unsightly building at its entrance which will be there as a lasting monument to the folly of this government and the disgrace of the representatives of the people. I protest as strongly as it is in my power to protest against the action of the government and their system of entering into these bargains without the consent of parliament. This resolution says :

Resolved, that it is expedient to confirm the sale and transfer to the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada of part of Major's Hill Park, in the city of Ottawa, for the sum of $100,000, and to authorize an agreement to be made with the said company in the terms of an order in council under date of September 26, 1907, and further to authorize payment of the proceeds of such sale, viz.:—the said sum of $100,000 to the Ottawa Improvement Commission, to be applied by them for the purposes of the commission under the instructions and directions of the Governor in Council.

It is a mere quibble to tell us that this is not forestalling the action of parliament, and that it is not appropriating the moneys of this country without the sanction of parliament. The policy as set out in this resolution is not only to sell the entrance to Major's Hill Park but it includes also the appropriation of moneys without the consent of parliament. The right hon. gentleman has not failed to let his subservient followers know that if they vote against that resolution they vote for the defeat of his administration, a thing they are not likely to do. This administration proclaims it from one end of the country to the other that it is a Liberal administration, and it is this Liberal administration which commits parliament to the appropriation of money before parliament has appropriated one dollar of it. And we are told that this parliament is free. Nothing of the kind. It has the kind of freedom the Minister of Finance spoke about the other night ; freedom which is granted to the minority by the grace of the majority. And we may say what we like and we can be as right as you please about every question and our views can be as broad and as patriotic as you can imagine and yet the subservient followers of Prime Minister will stand up behind him one after another and vote for anything he proposes because they know that a vote against it would be a vote of want of confidence in the government, and would turn them out of power.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Before this resolution is adopted, I desire to enter the very strongest protest against the action of the government in this matter. I have been coming to Ottawa yearly for the past twenty years. On many occasions I have gone through Major's Hill park. I have taken visitors there and pointed it out as the beauty spot of Ottawa, and I have always claimed that it was the property of the people of Canada. Never until I saw this resolution in print did I suppose for one moment that any government would be insane enough to attempt to appropriate that property for any other purpose than that of a pleasure ground for the people. Does the government really imagine that this park is their own property and not that of the people of Canada? Otherwise on what title do they claim the right to part with it for the purpose mentioned in this resolution? By what title do the people of Canada own that park? Is the government sure that they have the right to appropriate it for the purposes of a hotel? How did we get possession of it? Were there any conditions attached to its acquisition by us which practically would prohibit its being used for the purposes of a hotel or any other purpose than that of a public park or a beauty spot for the city of Ottawa?

Mr. FOSTER. For public purposes.

Mr. HENDERSON. For public purposes. I am under the impression that we are perhaps going a little too far. I doubt very much if even the parliament of Canada have the right to appropriate that property for the purposes of a hotel—not even if it is to bear and perpetuate the name of the Prime Minister. Even if parliament should sustain the government in this matter, I do not think that the people of this country will endorse our action. I believe that such action will be one of those that the people of this country, from one end to the other, will always condemn. Before we go further, I should like to have some member of the government enlighten the House as to what title we have to take the action we are now asked to approve. How did we acquire that property? Has it always been in the possession of the Crown? I am informed that it has not. I am informed that the Crown parted with that property, and that afterwards the property came back to the Crown subject to certain conditions. Are you sure that those conditions are such as would permit us to hand the property over to the Grand Trunk Railway for $100,000? Are you sure that by so doing the government would not be liable for very large damages should it be found, after the hotel is erected, that the property cannot be used for hotel purposes? I shall expect some member of the government to make that point very clear before we part with this property. I am surprised beyond measure that the Major's Hill park should be broken into for any purpose whatever, much less for the purpose now contemplated. See what a terrible fight they are making in the city of Toronto to-day against the construction of a railway from Hamilton to that city—simply because it is to pass along one side of one of the city parks, The strongest possible objection is made against the construction of a railway along the south side of the park near the city of Toronto, even although it will adjoin another railway, and even although its construction will not destroy, to any great extent, the beauty of the park or take away any very large portion of the park. The people of Toronto are jealous of their park and desire that it should be maintained for the use of the public. But here, right in the heart of the city of Ottawa, we find the government disposing of what I have no hesitation in saying is the most beautiful spot in the city and which belongs, not only to the people of Ottawa alone, but to the people of this country. The people have the right to use it for recreation and for beautifying purposes, but any other purpose is contrary to the design and intention which led us to devote this ground for the people's use and comfort. Possibly we are too late in entering our protest, but I for one did not wish this resolution to pass——

Mr. FOSTER. Our opinion has not been asked.

Mr. HENDERSON. It has not. Had the government come to parliament in the first instance and asked our opinion before committing themselves to this policy, I do not believe that even the servile supporters behind this administration would have given their consent to our parting with this property in the manner indicated in this resolution. If the government had not committed itself to this proposition, and if its supporters were free to speak and vote as they thought fit on the question, I cannot for one moment believe that they would allow any part of Major's Hill park to be given for the purposes of a hotel.

Look at the thing from any other standpoint. Look at the miserable price obtained. One hundred dollars a foot for property right in the centre of Ottawa. Talk about competition ; do you suppose that that property would not realize more than $100,000 if opportunity were given for free competition? I am confident it would bring a great deal more. But I do not look at this matter from a money point of view. I would oppose the construction of this building there or our parting with that property for any purpose whatever, even if the Dominion obtained five times as much for it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How does the hon. gentleman make it $100 a foot?

Mr. TAYLOR. He is speaking of the frontage.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is 420 feet frontage. There is only 135 feet frontage on Rideau street. The other 285 feet is the frontage upon the canal.

Mr. BERGERON. How can you build a hotel with a thousand feet frontage on 420 feet?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Prime Minister corrected that.

Mr. BERGERON. Then it is not 1,000 feet?

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that it is 1,000 feet along the canal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that was a mistake. The figures are given here as 1,140 square feet at one particular part along the canal. But the number of lineal feet along the canal is 285.

Mr. HAGGART. How can it be square feet along the length of a canal ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is an area along the canal the number of square feet in which is figured out by the engineer.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the correct figure ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There have been four versions. Now, let us have the correct one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) will take the trouble to look at the plan—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I haven't it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But he has had access to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was laid on the table several days ago.

Mr. HAGGART. But it is now in possession of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But the hon. gentleman can have it any time he desires.

Mr. BERGERON. Evidently, the departments are not all alike.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will give the figures, if hon. gentlemen will take them down : 285 feet on the canal and 135 on Rideau street.

Mr. FOSTER. And the total area ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total area is 25,329 square feet. But hon. gentlemen will remember that there is a jog in it, and——

Mr. FOSTER. What is the last letter of that word ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The one next to 'f.'

Mr. FOSTER. I thought it might be 'b.'

Mr. SPROULE. Is the property square ? Are the sides of the property of equal length ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. I certainly understood the minister to state that the property which the government was to sell to the Grand Trunk was 1,000 feet in length. I think there is no doubt the minister made that statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) is right. The figures given here by the surveyor is 1,140, and it is right on the line of the canal. It is a little blurred, and the hon. gentleman will admit that the mistake is a natural one. But, on looking at it more carefully I see that the frontage on the canal is 285 feet. The figure that I gave 1,140 is really square feet. But, if the hon. gentleman had figured even for a moment, he would have seen that there was an error on my part in the figure giving the lineal feet. I corrected this and gave the true distance on the canal frontage—285 feet.

Mr. HENDERSON. It only shows that it is necessary for us to get the original instead of a copy. I hope and trust that we now have the correct statement of the matter. I am glad at last that the government is giving away less property than I at first believed. Now, I have made my protest against the disposition of property for this or any other purpose outside of that for which it has been used. It seems to me that there are hon. gentlemen behind the government who will regret that they are obliged to support this proposition. I believe that when they try to explain to their constituents the transfer of public property in Ottawa for the purpose of erecting a hotel, they will find it difficult to satisfy the public. Important questions may arise in connection with this bargain. I do not know what guarantee the government is giving to the Grand Trunk Railway Company that it will be permitted to use this property for the purposes of a hotel. Suppose that local option is adopted in Ottawa, will the Grand Trunk have an action against the government or against the parliament of Canada for disposing of the property for a use for which it cannot be legally used ?

Mr. PATERSON. That is based on the assumption that a hotel must neecssarily sell liquor.

Mr. HENDERSON. That question may be raised. Again, so far as I know it may be possible for the Grand Trunk, having acquired this property for one purpose, to dispose of it to be used for some other purpose equally objectionable. I do not know but that, if they do not want to use it for a hotel, they might cut it up into smaller lots and sell it for other purposes. Before the resolution is voted on, I hope the government will make it clear to us that the tenure of the property is such that the government can deal with it in the manner proposed under the resolution.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford). I desire to add a word or two in criticism of the proposition before the House. I think it is universally agreed that the situation of the parliament buildings is unequalled in Canada for such a purpose. It is a matter of pride and satisfaction to all that the fathers of confederation selected such a magnificent site for these federal public buildings. As you enter this building, you find the date 1867 recorded in the floor of the vestibule. This tells every one who enters here that it is more than forty years since this site was chosen. We cannot but agree that the fathers of confederation showed great foresight, not only in choosing the place for these buildings but the style of buildings which they left for posterity. And, now that we have come into this inheritance, and having control of these buildings for the brief course of our lives, it is our duty to remember that this is not a matter for our day alone; that these buildings are here for all time, so far as this country is concerned, and that we should not lightly alienate land which is part of a public property regarded with such pride and satisfaction by Canadians everywhere. I think this proposition is very much to be regretted, on the grounds urged by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and others who have spoken. The building of a hotel in Major's Hill park is certainly not a desirable thing. I understood the minister to say that the large and beautiful trees in the park are to be uprooted and planted somewhere else. The hon. gentleman may be an authority in arboriculture, but my confident belief is that, if he has the opportunity to see these trees a few years after their removal, he will find them nothing but withered stalks. Those trees cannot be transplanted now to any advantage. It seems to me the height of folly to attempt to transplant trees of that size, and remove them over to Nepean Point. I was wondering when I heard the hon. gentleman say these trees were to be removed, if history was going to repeat itself. Many of us who have read Shakespeare will remember how the witch told Macbeth that he should not die until Birnam Wood was removed to Dunsinane. I was thinking that if the witch at Ottawa had told this ministry ten or twelve years ago that they should not die until the trees on Major's Hill park were removed to Nepean Point, if that prophecy is about to be fulfilled, and their career may be near at an end. But whether that is true or not, the fact remains that they are destroying this beauty spot in the city of Ottawa, a spot that belongs to the people of Canada, and doing it without having consulted this House or at least this side of it. It may be that hon. gentlemen opposite consider we are a small factor, but even if we are a small factor, we have some say about the property which belongs to the public. Any gentleman who has a wife and endeavours to hand his property over to anybody else, has got to get the consent of his wife, and I want to say that we have not yet barred our dower in that respect, and we propose now to enter our protest against the transferring of this public property, without the will of this parliament having been heard, or the members of this House having had an opportunity to present their views.

This park is one of the beauty spots of Ottawa, so much so that it has been well said that the public interest requires that it should be maintained as it is. Now there are many other sites that might have been obtained for that hotel, and that would have served the purpose equally well. I believe His Excellency the Governor General made the suggestion, or it was so reported, that the hotel should be built on Nepean Point, and not Major's Hill park. That seems to me to have been a very good idea ; place the hotel on Nepean Point or somewhere more remote. But why should this country subsidize any hotel at all ? That is a principle that ought to be looked into. Is it a fair proposition to the hotel interests of Ottawa who have some right to consideration, that this government should select one of the most beautiful sites in the city and hand it over to another hotel competing with these interests that have been established here and have had to fight their way ? Is that a business proposition ? I think not. Therefore I think the government have taken three or four steps in this matter that are not commendable. They have overridden, so to speak, the will of parliament ; they have taken the matter into their own hands and assigned this large part of the park to a hotel company for $100,000. All these matters are in direct conflict with the powers of parliament, and show the tendency of this government, manifested on many previous occasions, to usurp for the Privy Council powers that are supposed to be vested in parliament alone. I for one therefore, on these grounds, desire to enter my protest against what is being done by this government, and I think that when the country is fully seized of the facts, it will also be of the opinion that the move is not wise, that it is not proper, that it is not in the interest of the people of Canada as a whole who own and should control, this property.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). When I came to Ottawa 28 or 29 years ago, what is now the beautiful Major's Hill park was practically in its primeval state. A portion of it was used as a dumping ground for the refuse of Ottawa, it was very unsightly. As years went on and the parliament buildings became more attractive, many made suggestions that this unsightly spot should be taken up by the government and improved. In course of time the government decided to take it over from the city, under whose control it was at first, and asked parliament to vote a sum of money from year to year for the purpose of beautifying it. We built a stone wall around part of it, we levelled it up, planted trees upon it, set our flowers, and made of it the beautiful park that we find there at present. We did that at great expense to the country. We have continued from year to year to keep it up, with the idea of making it a perpetual beauty spot adjoining the parliamentary grounds, and an object of admiration for all who visit Ottawa from every quarter of the world. We were told that it was most desirable to do so because it was just opposite the parliamentary buildings, that it was the property of the people of Canada and parliament should take care of it. Now we have done that and kept it up during all these years at great expense. Later on, when we required more ground for new departmental buildings, the question was raised where we could get that ground. Some suggested that we should take a portion of Major's Hill park for that purpose, because it belonged to the government and would cost the country nothing. But a strong protest was entered by the people of Ottawa, and many members of parliament, against that project, they contended that it would destroy this beauty spot which ought to be kept for ever free. The result was that the government decided not to build upon it, and as they required more ground, they decided to buy all the land along Sussex street, which they did at great cost, rather than take any portion of Major's Hill park. We voted more money for the purpose of buying out large blocks that were erected for commercial and other purposes, paying a very extravagant price in many instances rather than take a foot of that park which we intended to keep for ever. Not only did we pay a large price for this property, but we paid very heavy commissions to the men who purchased it for the government. But after all we have done we find now that the government have presumed, by order in council, to sell a portion of it to the Grand Trunk company, and for what purpose ? For the purpose of erecting a hotel. Do you think the people of Canada will endorse that ? I do not think so. Do you think the people of Canada will consider that the government were doing their proper and legitimate duty ? I do not think so. I think the people will come to the conclusion that the government have gone very far beyond their duty, and have assumed an authority that it was always supposed parliament alone could exercise. The government have a right to expend money on a Governor General's warrant when some great emergency arises which makes it absolutely necessary to spend the money not voted by parliament. But there is no such necessity in this case. There was no need of hurry in pushing through this undertaking, therefore I say there was no justification for the order in council that was passed selling this property.

Now there is another thing that attracts my attention. Why should we give a subsidy to a railway company to build a hotel? —because that is practically what we are doing. I am told—if my information be correct or approximately correct—that if this property were sold in open market it would realize four times the money that we receive for it. If that be so what is the situation ?—that we are giving $300,000 of a subsidy to the Grand Trunk Railway company to build an hotel. Well, the morale will not appeal with very great force to the temperance people of this country, I imagine. What have they done in addition to that ? For fear that there will be a protest from the city council or the citizens of Ottawa the government say : We will take the money which we receive for the sale of Canada's property and, because it is within the limits of your city and you might protest against it, we will buy you up by agreeing to spend that money in other directions for the beautification of Ottawa. Is that not absolutely and corruptly buying the silence of the people of Ottawa ? It seems to me that it is. I do not know any other explanation that can be given of it. By what parity of reasoning can you explain to the people of Canada that you have the right to take Canada's property and sell it for the purpose of raising money and then hand that money over to the people of Ottawa to expend for the beautification of the city or for the construction of roadways ? I do not think it is justifiable, I do not think that the people of Canada will justify it, nor do I think that the government have done right in doing it.

There is another feature I wish to draw attention to. A few years ago we were told that the people of Ottawa had applied to parliament to give them a larger subsidy to be expended in Ottawa because the Dominion government got water supply, fire protection, police protection and everything else for these grounds from the city of Ottawa, and it was contended that we should give something in lieu of these services to the city. We did agree from time to time to give an amount which was to be expended for the particular purpose of beautifying Ottawa. We agreed to pave the whole of Wellington street and we agreed to do more than that ; we agreed that if they would appoint a commission or allow us to join with them in the appointment of a commission we would give them a definite sum to be expended each year for the purpose of beautifying Ottawa and of making it the Washington of the North. The government take very great credit to themselves for what they have done in that regard. Parliament assented to it. I forget the exact amount that we agreed to give them, but I think it was $60,000 a year. The right hon. Prime Minister nods assent to that ; therefore, I am correct in that regard. In lieu of what we were getting from the people of Ottawa it was regarded as a proper thing to give them $60,000 a year to be expended by the Improvment Commission within the limits of the city of Ottawa or closely around the city on the Driveway. That was regarded as fair and ample compensation for what we received from the city. If that be so what justification can the government give for taking an additional $100,000 of the people's money and handing it over to the city of Ottawa to be spent by that commission ? Why this additional subsidy when we were told before that we were making them a fair compensation for what we receive ? What compensation are we getting for the additional subsidy of $100,000 which is to be expended within the limits of Ottawa ?—none whatever as far as I know. But, as I say the other feature of it is that it is taking money belonging to the people of Canada to bribe the people of Ottawa into acquiescence or into silence upon this question so that they will not raise any serious objection to it. I think that is radically wrong. Since we have gone so far, since we have subsidized the erection of hotels by railway companies are we sure that other railway corporations in Canada will not demand similar consideration at the hands of the government ? It is the Grand Trunk Railway company to-day. With equal propriety could not the Canadian Pacific Railway company come to the government to-morrow and demand the same consideration ? You have given to the Grand Trunk Railway company at least $300,000 by way of subsidy to build a large hotel in the city of Ottawa ; why should you not give us $300,000 more for which we will erect another hotel ? And following that, could not the Canadian Northern Railway company do the same thing ? They might with equal propriety make such a demand and they are as much entitled to consideration at the hands of the government as the Grand Trunk Railway is. For these reasons I think the government have done wrong. They have started on a career that, they know not where it will lead them, and they may find it difficult in future to restrain themselves when they are confronted with similar applications from other railway corporations ? In addition to that there seems to be no guarantee that the Grand Trunk Railway company will for ever use the property for this purpose. I am not very much concerned about that because they might use it for some other purpose to-morrow or next year or twenty years hence, and if they did I do not think the people of Canada would object to it very much. But, it is objectionable for the reasons I have stated, and another objection I find to it is this: I do not understand, according to the usages of parliament, that the government are justified in selling the property of Canada by order in council to raise money and then spending that money before parliament has assented to it, or agreeing to spend it, because it is practically equivalent to spending it if they agree to spend it, and counting on the loyality of their following in this House to vote them through. They are taking the property of Canada, selling it to raise money and then devoting that money to a purpose which perhaps parliament would never devote it to, if it were asked to determine what should be done with the money. That I say is radically wrong. This is on a par with the scheme carried out by the government when, under the colour of a grazing lease to a corporation of men who are proposing to put cattle on the land in the Northwest, they sell 35,000 acres of land for one dollar an acre. They would not sell to the settler or homesteader going into that country land at $1, or $3 or $5 an acre, but they would sell to a corporation which goes in there to take up grazing lands on which to pasture cattle. This is on a par with that transaction. It is taking the eminent domain of the people of Canada and alienating it from the purpose for which it is held by the people of Canada selling it to some friends of their own at a mere fraction of its value and then using the money for any purpose they like. It is taking the property of Canada, not in this case to give it to a few friends, but for the purpose of giving a subsidy to a railway corporation for a purpose that the people will not justify, for the purpose of erecting a great hotel here in the city of Ottawa. Then as I said before, to square themselves, to corruptly buy the silence of the people of Ottawa, the money which is received in return for it they agree to hand over to the commission here to spend within the limits of the city so that the people may be estopped in their desire to object to such a transaction.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). I wish to ask the Prime Minister one question? This resolution says that it is expedient to confirm the sale and transfer of this property. I would like to inquire if the government have passed the title to the Grand Trunk?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that the title has not been transferred.

Mr. TAYLOR. Have the Grand Trunk been put in possession of the property?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think all they have done is to build a fence.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well they are in possession of the property, the actual title may not have passed into their hands but before you come to parliament you have practically given them a title to the property.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln, Niagara). I wish to enter my protest against the principle or want of principle involved in the proposed resolution. Not only is the matter unique in the merit or demerit of the particular case presented but also in the manner in which it has been dealt with by the government. The proposal of the government is:

House in Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—Resolved, that it is expedient to confirm the sale and transfer to the Grand Trunk Railway, &c.

Upon the matter coming before the House and the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) speaking on it, he was told by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) that he had intended explaining it in committee but could explain now instead of in committee. I listened intently and all the information I could get from the minister was that they had gone into the contract, but there was not one word to show the wisdom or folly of the course or the reason that induced the government to go into this contract. The Prime Minister was obliged to supplement what he had said and he vouchsated an explanation of why it was done. The Minister of Public Works had said nothing except that the transaction had taken place, thereby implying what we are accustomed to see in this House that the supporters of the government are expected to vote for anything that a member of the cabinet says he is going to do. Not only does this show want of respect to the members of the opposition and to the people of this country but equally so to the hundred or more hon. gentlemen who support the government and who are apparently ready as he thinks to vote for the resolution. Nothing could better emphasize the evil mentioned by opposition speakers in the government entering into a contract before consulting parliament, than the fact that not a private member supporting the government undertakes to say one word as to whether he is in favour of or against the resolution. If the government had not made this practically a want of confidence vote, if they had pursued a constitutional course and consulted parliament, we would have had some advice, propositions and probably counter propositions and suggested amendments in this House from those supporting the government; we would have had the benefit of their knowledge and opinion, but they have none of them discussed it from the standpoint of whether it is right or wrong. The Prime Minister gave us a reason and only one. If he was the mayor or city solicitor of Ottawa, I could understand him giving such a reason, but I cannot understand him giving it as the Prime Minister of Canada representing the whole people. His only reason was that the city of Ottawa needs a large new up-to-date hotel. Suppose it does ; suppose it needs a stove factory, a suite of law offices, an institution for the blind, or something else, are we to understand that because Ottawa needs it, this parliament is to alienate the public domain to serve the wants of Ottawa as a municipality ? The government owns property all over Canada and are we to understand that, if a deputation comes here from any city with a representation that the city will benefit by the sale of a part of the public domain within it, it shall be done ? We know that this is not done in other cities, why is it done in this case ? It is because the Grand Trunk wants the government to do it, or says they must do it, whichever way you want to put it.

The Prime Minister spoke about a monument erected to the memory of some of our volunteers. Was that built to be put into the back yard of a hotel ?

Mr. BERGERON. It may be near the bar room.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the Prime Minister believe that any one of those who had to do with the erection of that monument contemplated that a hotel would be put in front of it, so that from two sides it could not be seen, so that it would be practically at the back door of a commercial hotel, run by the railway ? The Prime Minister was unfortunate in his reference to that monument, for if there was ever a reason why the property should not be sold, even if as he says, the monument is to remain, it is the existence of that monument at that place.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) apparently did not understand the plan when he first spoke nor did he until he had received the assistance of hon. gentlemen who spoke on this side. When he did begin to understand the plan he practically proved to this House nothing more nor less than that what is left of the park is to be the garden of the hotel, simply a nice garden for the use of the guests, for which the hotel pays nothing. It is just as if a fine residence was to be built in a city in a public park, with a stipulation that nothing was to be built in front of it. Here we have a commercial hotel placed in the most desirable part of the whole park, and the whole benefit of the park accrues to that hotel. They do not own it but they get all the benefit from it that any one else does, with the special benefit that it surrounds their own property.

Mr. LANCASTER.

I shall not repeat the objections which have been urged to the details of the transaction, but I wish to point out to the Prime Minister that the principle involved is most dangerous and one which he would not contemplate in regard to any other institution than the Grand Trunk Pacific. We must assume that when the Grand Trunk Pacific want anything they can get it from the government, and get it by negotiation, without tenders, or competition ; they probably have only to ask in order to receive it.

Mr. BENNETT. The Grand Trunk can't wait.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Grand Trunk can't wait, and the government rushes the transaction through, and it asks parliament to sanction it afterwards.

Mr. BENNETT. What about that fence?

Mr. LANCASTER. I am told the Minister of Public Works is a lawyer, and he ought to know whether the Grand Trunk are in possession or not. But he did not give my hon. friend a direct answer when he asked if they could build a fence without being in possession.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) being a lawyer ought to know.

Mr. LANCASTER. It was my hon. friend from Leeds, who is not a lawyer, who asked the question, and it was a proper question to ask, and instead of the Minister of Public Works answering candidly, all he said was that he believed a fence had been built there. I can tell the Minister of Public Works that he will not facilitate business going through this House if he does not give more appropriate answers to the questions which are put him. The Grand Trunk are evidently in possession, and why were they put in possession before parliament gave its sanction? It is because the government take it for granted, and the Grand Trunk take it for granted, that it is only a farce to submit the matter to the consideration of parliament, because they know once the government does a thing it will be voted through any way. If it were not for my responsibility as a member of this House, I would say to the opposition : Leave the chamber and let the government and their followers put this resolution through. What is the use of insulting us by bringing before us for consideration a matter which has already been passed upon by the government, and which every one knows will be voted through by their supporters whether it is right or wrong and whether we consider it or not? My time is worth something both to my constituents and myself, and I could be doing work for my country in other places than in Ottawa, and if it is to be understood that resolutions are to be brought into this House cut and dried, knowing that the majority in this House is going to vote for them, it would be courtesy and it would be charity even not to drag us to Ottawa to waste our time here. I appeal to the charity even of the Prime Minister that he should say so, and leave us to attend to our other business. It is a farce to submit for our consideration a thing that has already been done by the government, and that they know will go through irrespective of all other considerations when the party whip is cracked. I do not pretend to know one-quarter as much constitutional law as the Prime Minister, but what I do know I can apply better than he can. I respectfully submit that this manner of conducting public business is not constitutional. It is no more constitutional than the statement of the Finance Minister that I had no rights in this House except such as he and his supporters choose to give me. Is it common sense to submit this resolution for the consideration of the House, after we have drawn the reluctant statement from the Minister of Public Works that the other partners to the contract are now in possession of the property, that the contract is completed, and that parliament has to vote the resolution? I agree with the contention made on this side that we have no right to take $100,000 of the money of the people and give it to the city of Ottawa to improve its streets. And even if we had the right to do so, in an exceptional case we certainly should be consulted first to ascertain what parliament thinks about it. I assert unhesitatingly that this action of the government is unconstitutional from beginning to end, and if the people of Canada want the constitution of this country lived up to, it is their duty at the next opportunity to vote this government out of power.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) should not take it for granted that there is no use in his coming to parliament, because, devoted as the supporters of the government are to the general policy of the government, who knows but that his speech may have converted some of them to his views.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am afraid they will swallow anything.

Mr. PATERSON. Under the powerful argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) who knows but that the government may be defeated on this question, an occurrence which would bring about a condition of things that the hon. gentleman so earnestly desires.

Mr. LANCASTER. But you have already given away the property to the Grand Trunk.

Mr. PATERSON. Let us look at the matter a little dispassionately. No one expected that there would be unanimity on this question. In the city of Ottawa there was a divided opinion, and it did not run on political lines at all. It has been charged by the member for East Grey, who did not weigh his words, that this is nothing but a great bribe to the people of Ottawa, in giving $100,000 to the commission to expend for the benefit of the city. Well, that is a matter upon which every member of this House is free to speak and free to act as he chooses. It is quite within the power of this House to say whether that money will be given to the commission or not.

Mr. LANCASTER. We don't want the money, we want the land.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman has taken fresh ground now; he does not want to sell the land at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. That has been my contention all along.

Mr. PATERSON. The idea in the mind of the First Minister is that the erection of this building will not at all interfere with the beauty of the park. There is a large frontage left, and probably not anything like nineteen-twentieths of the park will be used. And still we find hon. gentlemen opposite declaring that we have given away the whole of that park to the Grand Trunk. Well, that is like other extravagant statements hon. gentlemen opposite are constantly making in the House and in the country. One would think they would have learned by this time that if ever they expect to be entrusted with the conduct of the affairs of this country, they must discuss questions upon their merits, and cease to indulge in extravagant expressions and foundationless statements. They have, not one or two, but more than two score examples of what the people of the country think about all these extravagant charges which the opposition make in this House and on the public platform and through their press. Time and again since the last general elections, three and a half years ago, the people of Canada have expressed confidence in the government. Surely if the people were to believe the tales the opposition have told they would not have supported the government as they have done; and yet after all the foundationless assertions made by the opposition, and their irrelevant arguments and their extravagant statements, the government is two votes stronger on a division than it was after the last general election. Here is a small portion of this park which is being alienated for a purpose which is recommended by the representatives of Ottawa and its citizens generally and which will supply a long felt want, without at all detracting from the utility and advantage of the park as a public pleasure ground. On the contrary, it will have the effect, in the opinion of the vast majority of the people more particularly interested—the people of this city—of adding to its attractiveness from a public point of view. And we are getting in return from the Grand Trunk Railway for this small piece of ground the sum of $100,000, besides the erection of a magnificent building which will be a great additional attraction to the city. With that $100,000 from the sale of property belonging to the people of Ottawa——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. PATERSON. Practically.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, the people of Canada.

Mr. PATERSON. Well, put it that way if you like. All the public grounds in this city of Ottawa are the property of the people of Canada. Every patriotic citizen takes a pride in the capital of his country. He boasts of it. When he travels, he expresses to those he meets the desire that they should visit the capital of Canada and see what a young nation can do in making its capital city a place well worth a visit and which would do credit to a much older and more numerous people. The people of Ottawa, the members of this city who represent the people, know, that although there are very fair hotels here, still there is a great lack of such a hotel as would be an inducement to people to come here and pass some time in the city—people who have the means to pay for the very best accommodation that can be had and who will not be satisfied with anything less. Both from the point of view of the city itself and from a national standpoint, it is desirable that our capital should be made a centre of attraction for visitors from all parts of the world, and one of the essential requisites is the providing them with accommodation equal to the best they can obtain in the capitals of other countries. Then, as to the fairness of the proposition, if you want to apply that $100,000 to any other purpose than that indicated by the leader of the government, you are quite at liberty to do so. But let me point out that we are parting with only a very small portion of Major's Hill Park, that the park itself will not be injured in the slightest degree by the erection of this building, and that with that $100,000 we can secure for the people an extension of that park as large again as the park itself.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why not put another hotel there ?

Mr. PATERSON. I should think that the hon. gentleman ought to be satisfied with his own convincing eloquence and with the effect his eloquence has had on the House and not feel called upon to interrupt me. He should rest content in the victory he has had, and no doubt he can anticipate all the members of the opposition rising with him to vote against this proposition of the government. But we have had the constitutional question raised. Several hon. gentlemen have argued that what we have done is unconstitutional. If that be the case, I presume our title to the Grand Trunk Railway will not be valid and the property will not belong to them. But if that be the case, why the whole Canadian Pacific Railway system will have to be given up by that company for they have no better title. The grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway is not any more constitutional. My hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was in the House and a supporter of the government which gave the Canadian Pacific Railway its franchise and its public grants. Does he not remember that contract which Sir Charles Tupper, a member of the government of Sir John Macdonald, made with Mr. George Stephen and certain other gentlemen, by which the government agreed to give these gentlemen $25,000,000 in cash and 25,000,000 acres of the domain of this country ? That was not a question of parting with a quarter of an acre but of 25,000,000 of acres of the people's domain, and that was done within a few weeks of the meeting of parliament, unknown to parliament and unknown to the people. The contract was made and signed by Sir Charles Tupper and brought down to this House, and I remember the blank amazement on the faces of many of the supporters of Sir John Macdonald when they first read that contract. And in addition to the 25,000,000 acres of land and the $25,000,000, there was given an exemption from taxation for twenty years, and a prohibition against the building of any other road which could in any way be a competitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway, besides the admission of materials free of duty and relief from taxation of all kinds. I need not enumerate all that was given, but that contract tied up Manitoba for years until that province was on the verge of rebellion. That was a contract made without the sanction of parliament, signed by Sir Charles Tupper representing the King, and when it was brought down to the House it cast dismay among many of the government supporters. As we talked to them and asked them : Are you prepared to support that ? No, they said. Oh, they said, this exemption from taxation can be altered. But when the contract was laid on the table they were told that that contract had to go through as it was, without the crossing of a 't' or the dotting of an 'i,' and when they were told this, there were serious faces among the supporters of the government.

Mr. LANCASTER. They were Tories and did not like to swallow everything without understanding it.

Mr. PATERSON. If the hon. gentleman chooses to insult the supporters of this government by saying they are forced to swallow this quarter of an acre of ground, was it not a pretty big gulp to ask the supporters of Sir John Macdonald to swallow 25,000,000 acres of land ? But they did swallow it. If the argument of the legal luminary from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) be well founded, if this be unconstitutional and therefore null and void, then the whole Canadian Pacific Railway contract, being unconstitutional, must be null and void, and we must get our $25,000,000 and our 25,000,000 acres of land back. Is the hon. gentleman not rather ashamed of his argument now ? Will he tell the House that what I am saying is not true ? If he does not believe it, let him read 'Hansard.'

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman think anybody could be ashamed of opposing anything this government does?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, why should they be ashamed of anything this government has done? But would the hon. gentleman think it necessary to put any such question as that concerning the acts of preceding governments?

Mr. LANCASTER. I am talking of this government.

Mr. PATERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) seems very uneasy. What surprises me is that he cannot rest upon his case but must get up so often to interrupt

Mr. LANCASTER. We got the hon. minister (Mr. Paterson) up anyway.

Mr. PATERSON. Surely, the hon. gentleman has confidence in his own powerful argument and need not constantly attempt to improve it. Now, whether wise or not, this is a bargain that has been made. Considered on its own merits, it seems to be a bargain in the public interest. Why did the Canadian Pacific Railway, with an enterprise which will admire, build a magnificent hotel in Quebec and another, lately finished, in Victoria? Because they desire traffic. And the result is that they are bringing people to the country. Now, we are interested in having people come here to the capital. And if a great railway corporation, having hundreds of miles of its system in the United States, sees fit to invest $1,000,000 in Ottawa to provide for the comfort and convenience of travellers and then use that as an advertisement to bring people to Ottawa, is that not a thing which will be of advantage to Canada as a whole? This great company will use every means to make it known that this capital of Canada is one of the beauty spots of the earth, a place that people who travel should visit, not merely as a beauty spot, but as the capital of a strong and growing nation. And these people coming here will learn what Canada has done and what a glorious future awaits her, and the knowledge of these things they will spread throughou the world. So, there is a national aspect to this question. And here is a clear cut proposition—that Canada shall receive $100,000 for what, after all, is a small piece of ground, and shall use that money to greatly enlarge the existing parks and add another beauty spot to this already beautiful city. Can any supporter of this government feel that he will have any trouble in explaining to his constituents his support of such a proposition?

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I assume that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is making one of those exhibitions—I say it in no disrespectful way—that he seems to feel it incumbent upon him to make every session. He knows that, sitting behind him, are conspirators against his standing in the cabinet. He knows that the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant), for instance, only a short year ago, not in excitement, but in cold blood, went to a newspaper and told an interviewer there that the Minister of Customs was a marked man, that he must go, because of his increasing years and because his usefulness was gone. So, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) seems to feel it necessary to make one of these spasmodic appeals in order to convince hon. gentlemen on his own side that he is still in the fight. The Minister of Customs is very brave here. But he can be far from brave at other times. He is a minister from the province of Ontario and represents one of the strongest Liberal ridings in that province. He knows so well that popular feeling is strong against the government that in the last two elections he has not dared to run in the constituency which he represented in this House for so many years. And so he seeks a seat in the Liberal hive of North Brant.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not seem to me that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) is dealing with the question before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Certainly the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) is not in order.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, will you allow me to point out that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) spent some time in trying to make the point that the government had carried by-elections in this province or in that, and I was endeavouring to deal with the issue that he raised. If it is decided that the Minister of Customs was in order in speaking and that I am not in order in replying to him, I will bow to your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Bennett) is not discussing the question before the House, but is making a personal attack on the Minister of Customs, and that is certainly irrelevant.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did the Minister of Customs stick to the point under discussion?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is hardly fair for the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) to make that criticism. If any hon. member had called attention to anything that the minister said that was not relevant, the minister would have been checked in the same way. The Speaker cannot attempt, on all occasions, to call members to order.

Mr. TAYLOR. We are very generous on this side and allowed him to go on.

Mr. PATERSON. I am not prepared to admit that anything I said was out of order. I made no attack on anybody. I used the results of the elections to show that followers of the government had confidence in the government.

Mr. BENNETT. If it is conceded that the minister was in order may I be permitted——

Mr. SPEAKER. The question whether the remarks of the Minister of Customs would have been held to be in order if attention had been called to them does not arise. If the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) has further remarks to make that are in order he has the floor.

Mr. BENNETT. If I was out of order, I certainly was not as much out of order as the supporters of the government in London when there was an election there. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) has referred to a contract made with the Canadian Pacific Railway. But that contract was made contingent on the will of parliament, while in the present case parliament is simply called upon to confirm a deal already made and not to deal with the whole question. More than that, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was not given its privileges until after the proposed arrangement had been sanctioned by parliament, but the government has actually put these men in possession of the property. There is one thing noteworthy in the address of the Minister of Customs, and that is that he stands up for more hotels for the city of Ottawa. I had always thought that the hon. gentleman was a strong temperance man, and on this point differed from some other hon. members on his own side of the House. But now he seems to be desirous, mainly, of having increased hotel accommodation in Ottawa. I suppose he will carry the same idea into his own city of Brantford. The reasons that the hon. minister assigns in support of this transaction are no reasons at all. They do not tell us why part of a national park belonging to this country should be alienated before consulting parliament. It is idle to say that a portion of the citizens of Ottawa desired the construction of this hotel. I think it very likely that many people in Ottawa were stampeded at the time by the Grand Trunk with the threat that they would in all probability not only not construct a hotel or the station either unless this land was granted, and probably the city council also was stampeded on that occasion. Well, that is all I have to say about it, and some time again when the Minister of Customs recurs to elections in the province of Ontario I promise him that if I am in the House I shall give him a rejoinder on that score, as well as in regard to Nova Scotia.

Mr. GEO. H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). As an old resident of the city of Ottawa I would like to say a few words on this subject. I have listened attentively to this debate to hear some good reason why this hotel should be put in this particular spot. When the Minister of Customs got on his feet I expected he would try and give us some reasons why they chose this place, and I want to congratulate the Minister of Customs on the reasons that he did not give. Instead of attempting to justify the choice of this spot, he started off on a stump speech, and told us about the great beauties of the city of Ottawa, which we all very much appreciate, and said that we wanted to get travellers to come here from all over the world. He told us about the Canadian Pacific Railway, and a lot of old time matters that we have heard in this House many times ; but he never attempted to give us a single reason why the hotel should be put in this particular place. There is no doubt that the people of Ottawa desire and need a first-class modern hotel, that is conceded on all hands ; and no doubt the city would be thankful to the government for arranging to get them a hotel if it was put in the proper place. However, I venture to assert here that if a vote of the people of Ottawa were taken to-morrow on this subject, there would be an immense majority that would prefer putting the hotel in some other place than where it is proposed to put it. Surely there are many other places in Ottawa offering quite as good a location as this. I believe firmly that the people of Ottawa would prefer to have the park left as it is, if they could get a hotel somewhere else. Why, Sir, a hotel built where it is proposed will split the land of this government in two. Instead of having an unbroken front to our land we are going to have this immense hotel right in the middle of it. A few years ago we heard about the new government buildings that are to be put up on Mackenzie Avenue. I am not going to discuss here the wisdom or unwisdom of choosing that site for public buildings ; but the site has been determined upon, the land has been purchased, and now they propose to put up a hotel in a place which will obstruct the view of the new buildings, so that a person walking on either Wellington Street or Sparks Street down across the canal will have no view of the new buildings at all.

The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) said something that I wish to refer to, and that is that the result of this scheme will be that Major's Hill park will become a garden for this new hotel. Those of us who have seen hotels in Europe remember many places where the hotel has a garden of its own; but I know no place where the hotel has the use of a garden given to them by the government, which they pay nothing for. But to my mind the greatest pity of it all is that there was no need of choosing this particular site for the hotel. I think the government could have ararnged with the Grand Trunk Company to put the hotel in some other place, and I am very sorry that was not done. It has been said that the Grand Trunk wished to put it there because it was near the station. Now this hotel, I understand, is intended to be a first-class modern hotel for the purpose of attracting travellers and visitors from the United States and other parts of the world, that it is not intended to be a hotel for the use of transient visitors and commercial business men. Now I will ask the Minister of Customs, or any other gentleman who has travelled, if he ever chose a hotel in any city because it was near the station, unless he only wished to remain in it over night. A hotel will attract just as much custom, and just as good custom, if it is ten or fifteen minutes drive from the station, as if it were just across the street. Personally I would prefer to go to a hotel situated down below the Supreme Court on the bank of the river, rather than to a hotel where it is proposed to put this one. I do not believe any hon. gentlemen in this House can point to a case in any city where a first-class hotel has suffered at all from lack of custom because it was a few minutes drive away from the station. It looks to me as if the Grand Trunk wanted it put near the station for the purpose of catching commercial and transient trade, rather than to attract travellers and visitors from abroad.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman allow me a word ? He stated that the government could have induced the Grand Trunk Railway Company to put this hotel somewhere else. Will the hon. gentleman suggest how the government could have done it ?

Mr. PERLEY. I hardly think it necessary for me to give advice to the hon. gentleman who asked that question, that was the business of the government. The government have come down here, and have given us no reason why this hotel should be put in that particular place. The transactions of the government with the Grand Trunk Railway Company are something with which I have nothing to do. But I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works to give us one good reason why that hotel should be put in that particular place. Was there no other good land in the city of Ottawa ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will say to my hon. friend, what is already well known, because it became public in the proceedings of the city council, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company said: We believe this is an excellent site for a hotel, the best site, and unless we can get that site we won't build anywhere in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. PERLEY. Does the Minister of Public Works think there was no other site in the city of Ottawa good enough for this hotel ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not say that, the government was not building the hotel, the Minister of Public Works was not building it. It was going to be built by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, they were proposing to expend a million or a million and a half, and they said—it was publicly reported—they said : Uuless we can get this site, which we think is by all means the best site for a hotel, we wont build a hotel in the city of Ottawa, at the present time at all events.

Mr. PERLEY. Well, I have only to repeat that I regret very much this hotel is going to be put in that particular place, I think it is a mistake from every point of view. I am very glad that we are going to have a new, modern hotel in the city of Ottawa, but I would like to have seen it put in some other place. I would again say that no reason has been given by the government for the location of this hotel in Major's Hill park in preference to another place. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) has disappointed me exceedingly in getting up and talking about this question and every thing else without giving any reason why the government allowed it to be put there.

Motion agreed to and House went into committee on resolution.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not suppose we are going to carry this resolution before six o'clock. There were some questions put to the government when we were discussing the resolution which were not answered. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) tried to compare the giving out of lands in the Northwest with the giving by the government of this property in the park, but I do not think he is quite right. The lands in the Northwest belonged to the government entirely. There was no doubt about that. I do not know whether Major's Hill park belongs to the government, or how it came into the possession of the government, or whether we can take it for hotel purposes or anything else.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Department of Justice has informed me that this land was part of the ordinance lands of Canada. The title is vested in the Dominion government not subject to any trust. The land, under the law now on the statute-book, can be leased and if any improvement is made upon it they can be sold without putting it up to public competition.

Mr. BERGERON. Would it be asking too much to ask whether these papers could not be put on the table of the House ? If I am right in my recollection there was some condition in the granting of that land. I am not sure what it was as it is a long time since we came into possession of the property.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What papers does the hon. gentleman refer to ?

Mr. BERGERON. Papers showing how we came into possession of the park.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is ordinance land and under the Act relating to ordinance land, without coming to parliament, the government can put it up and sell it at public auction, or the government can lease it without putting it up to public competition, and, if any improvements are made by the lessee, the government has power to dispose of the land to the lessee. That is the law which has been upon the statute-book for many years, but we thought it better to come directly to parliament for the purpose of getting authority to make the sale.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like the hon. gentleman to furnish all the information in his possession with reference to these lands. They were originally got from Mr. Sparks by the Imperial government for the purpose of building the canal and they were transferred from the Imperial to the Dominion. The parties who originally gave the lands—that is the Sparks estate—contended that once the property was used for other than canal purposes it reverted to them. I understand that there was a suit in progress between the heirs and the Crown in reference to the ownership of the property. I want to know if that case has been decided or whether there has been an agreement come to or a settlement made in reference to the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When was that suit instituted ? I never heard of it.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Justice will know, it has been before the courts a long time.

Mr. J. D. REID. If you do not intend to call it six o'clock, I want to enter my protest with reference to this matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no objection, in so far as I am personally concerned, to allowing this resolution to go through with the understanding that we can have the matter debated again upon the second reading of the Bill and in Committee of the Whole House. It can be resumed then and perhaps it will save the duplicating of some portions of the debate at least. There is to be a Bill founded upon this resolution as I understand ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which will afford ample opportunity for discussion. We will let the resolution go through pro forma without holding ourselves bound in any way by its passage so that we can keep the matter perfectly open until the Bill comes up for discussion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will be understood.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no objection to that, I understand. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works would be good enough to send me a little memorandum in regard to the title in the meantime as I have no doubt that his doing so would save time when we come to discuss that particular feature in Committee of the Whole on the Bill. With that understanding I would be prepared to let the resolution go through pro forma.

Resolution reported, read a second time and agreed to.

Mr. PUGSLEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 89) to authorize the sale to the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada of a portion of Major's Hill park in the city of Ottawa as a hotel site.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time..

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY—DISPOSAL OF NORTHWEST TIMBER LIMITS.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Mr. Speaker, the lumber supply of the prairie provinces of the Northwest to which I wish to draw the attention of the House this evening, is a matter of vital importance to the people of those provinces. In the immense areas of treeless country constituting a large portion of those provinces, lumber may be said to be one of the necessities of existence. After his food, practically the first thing which faces a new settler in that country is the question of obtaining lumber wherewith to build his house and farm buildings. Its importance has been recognized by various long and animated discussions in this House, and even at the last session we had a long and searching inquiry into the question whether a combine existed in connection with the lumber industry of the Northwest. Anything which tends to raise the price of lumber is a serious menace to the future settlement of the prairie provinces. For these reasons as well as others I propose to ask that an inquiry should be held into the whole question of the alienation of the timber areas of those provinces, such alienation being a matter that I believe will add most seriously to the price which the settlers of that country will have to pay for that commodity. It is popularly supposed that the Northwest provinces are composed mainly of open prairies. There is a mistaken idea of that kind among many of the settlers of those provinces themselves. As a matter of fact the whole of the northern portions of the prairie provinces from Lake Winnipeg to the Rockies, contain great stretches of timber capable of supplying the people of the prairies for very many years to come. This timber lies chiefly around the many lakes which we find distributed through the northern part of the country and also along the rivers. We find magnificent lumber especially near the sources of those rivers which take their origin on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Stewart who was superintendent of forestry until quite recently, a gentleman who from his high position is competent to speak with authority upon the matter, at the forestry convention held in Ottawa in 1903, said :

It is generally thought that the Northwest is all prairie—not generally thought by those who know—but the general public has no idea of the enormous area of timber in the west, extending along the foothills of the Rocky Mountains, and away to the north and to the north of this province as well. Manitoba is considered a prairie country, but over half of it is wooded. I do not say that it is wooded the same as the Ottawa valley, but west of Lake Winnipegosis, between there and the boundary, there is larger spruce than I ever saw anywhere else except in British Columbia.

I myself have seen photographs showing a stretch one and a half miles in extent covered with close spruce averaging forty-five feet to the tree and fifteen inches on the stump, by actual measurement.

Perhaps the reason why the settlers in the prairie country have not up to the present time realized the immense extent of the timber resources which exist in their province has been the diffculty of communication between the northern and southern portions of those provinces. In the early years the railways ran almost entirely eastward and westward and it became necessary for the settlers to obtain their lumber supplies chiefly from Western Ontario or British Columbia. This had a most serious influence upon the price as the freight rates were extremely high ; I have known cases where the freight actually doubled the price of the lumber. The extension of railway facilities which has been taking place in the immediate past is now rendering intercommunication between the northern and southern portions of the provinces very much more easy, therefore the price to the southern settlers of lumber should be much lower in the near future than it has been in the past. The shorter haul and the greater competition, if there is competition among the northern lumbermen, should bring down the price to the prairie settlers.

The value of the timber areas is more or less a question of accessibility. When we have railway facilities and means of transportation there will be an unlimited market for the timber of the northern section and, given a short haul and effective competition, we should get low prices—and we should get them in the very near future. What will the settlers of those prairie provinces say when they learn that practically all the timber accessible for many years to come has passed from government control into the hands of private parties for a mere song. Yet, Sir, that is actually the case. I have always held that the public domain of any province, of right belongs to the people of that province. I will go further and say that in the case of lumber and coal, especially as regards the prairie provinces, it is of vital importance to keep the control and administration in the hands of the government so that those resources may be used in the interest of the settlers themselves.

I am not dealing with the question of coal at present. The government, in the case of the prairie provinces, should not look on the timber resources of these provinces as a source of revenue, but these timber resources should be so administered as to supply the people of that country with the cheapest possible lumber. This was the view taken by both the Mackenzie and the Macdonald governments. Their administration aimed at having the timber resources of the Northwest developed for the very purpose of furnishing the people of the prairie provinces with cheap lumber. In the carrying out of that policy they granted vast areas to parties applying for timber limits, but under such conditions regarding the operating of mills and producing lumber and paying rent, which practically made it necessary for any one taking up these limits to manufacture lumber on them without delay. These conditions, together with the transportation difficulties, choked off all but a very few of those who applied for those limits, so that out of 699 licenses granted between 1880 and 1896, 615 were allowed to lapse or were cancelled, owing to the failure of the lessees to conform to the obligations imposed on them. No doubt during the course of the debate likely to be had upon my amendment, we shall have the usual list of licenses which were issued by the late government; but let me say that whether we consider the policy of the Mackenzie and the Macdonald administrations as likely or not likely to bring about a supply of cheap lumber to the settlers, if the Conservative party should be returned to power, such lands and timber limits as still remain in the possession of the Dominion government will be handed over into possession of the people of those provinces to use them for the benefit of the people of the provinces themselves. Let me point out to hon. gentlemen who may use the argument that we have been accustomed to, that five-sixths of the timber areas which are now alienated have been alienated since the present administration came into power in 1896. In recent years great changes have come over the situation owing to the railway development which has taken place, and great changes may be expected in the future owing to the additional railways for the building of which provision has been made, so that we may expect a great future for the lumber industries of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. With careful and provident administration the advantage of cheap lumber should have been very close to the people of those provinces, but what do we find? This government came into power with the definite promise that they would keep the land for the settler only and that nothing should be done for the speculator. But, as has been the case with our grazing areas, irrigable areas and mineral resources, so it has been with our timber areas. From the returns brought down we find that, not only timber areas which are at present capable of being worked, but those which are remote from settlement, and for which there has been no public demand whatever and which will have value only as settlement and transportation facilities extend, are in the hands of persons who are holding them for purely speculative purposes. Not only this, but these areas have been acquired for next to nothing, and are being hawked about for sale at very large prices by those into whose hands the government has allowed them to fall. Well, all the fortunes which will assuredly be made by these lucky holders must ultimately come out of the pockets of the people of those western provinces. Of that there can be no doubt whatever. Since the year 1898 the government has been making changes in the regulations which govern the timber areas of the Northwest, and those changes have been such as to result in an enormous demand for timber limits. This is due to the fact that the facilities for holding limits and making profit out of them have been greatly increased since the present government has come into office. Let me give you an idea of the procedure which is at the present time being carried out in the granting of timber limits, as given by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) himself on the 17th May, 1906. In answer to a question put to him from this side, he made use of the following language:

> The person who desires to acquire a timber berth notifies the department and describes it. The application is considered in the department, and, if it does not conflict with some other berth and some other interest, and is approved of, notice is given by advertisement in what is supposed to be the nearest newspaper, and printed slips containing the same information as in the advertisement are distributed as widely as may be to persons interested in tendering for timber limits. The advertisements run on an average, I think, about six weeks before the tenders are opened.

Is it not sixty days, asked Mr. Ingram. And the minister replied:

> It may run for sixty days and may be as long as six weeks, but I think it is never less than six weeks.

But in many of the advertisements the time given is considerably less than six weeks. At this point the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) was asked what procedure was adopted in the opening of tenders. He said that the Commissioner of Dominion Lands opened them. Mr. Ingram asked if he opened them alone, and the minister replied:

> He may be alone or he may be in company, but he is the official who opens the tenders, and the person offering the highest bonus is awarded the limit.

Naturally attention was called to the fact that there had been complaints of the abuse of this privilege given one man of opening alone such tenders, and the Minister of the Interior himself admitted that he had heard of such complaints, for, in answer to a suggestion along those lines, he said:

> I also have heard of complaints as to abuses of this privilege, but on inquiry I have found that those complaints were absolutely groundless and that the tenders were let to the highest bidder.

Let us for a moment examine this procedure as stated by the Minister of the Interior. Some prospector sets out to look for timber limits. After many difficulties and hardships, perhaps he finds some fine timber around some unexplored lake or little known river valley. Then he applies to the department; and if no one has entered a claim, an advertisement is issued offering forty or fifty miles to be chosen out of a very much larger area—three times the area or possibly even more than that—and six weeks after the issuing of the advertisement a tender, accompanied by a cheque for the whole amount, has to be in the office. The advertisement, so the Minister of the Interior said, is sent to the nearest local paper, which may be published 150 or 200 miles away from the location of the timber limit. That advertisement takes some days to travel from Ottawa to where the local paper is published ; it has to wait until the issue of that paper appears, and then should any one chance to see the advertisement he may fit out and undertake a journey of 100 miles or more over a difficult and trackless country, hunt over the large area described in the advertisement, and possibly he may find the timber that has been advertised. He can then examine it ; and that done, he has to get back in time to make his tender and to send the deposit to Ottawa before the tenders are opened. In a very great number of cases it is absolutely a physical impossibility, to do that. Even were the tenders asked for during the summer (the very best time of the year), it, in many cases, would be a physical impossibility for any man to accomplish what it would be necessary for him to do. But when the tenders are called for, as they frequently are, in the early winter or early spring, it is practically impossible for any man to go over the limits. Under those circumstances, it is no wonder that very few venture to go to the trouble and expense of competing for these limits. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that in putting up these timber areas for tender in this fashion, the Department of the Interior is acting absolutely in the dark ; they have absolutely no information themselves as to what is the value of the areas they are offering for sale, and they place no reserve price upon the limit to be sold.

Now, Sir, with regard to the practice of having the tenders opened by an official of the Dominion Lands Department sitting alone in his office, I submit that this is one of the very worst features of the whole system which has prevailed in the Department of the Interior. It is a practice which is utterly opposed to all proper ideas of good administration, and it is absolutely certain to lead to suspicion of collusion between the official and those persons who are tendering. No time should be lost in doing way with this most objectionable practice. It is in the interest of the officials themselves that this should be put a stop to so that they may be relieved of any suspicion on their conduct. It happens that I have some very slight knowledge of the procedure that takes place in the opening of tenders and awarding of contracts in some of the great spending departments of the mother country, and I know that the very greatest precautions are taken. Tenders are sealed and guarded with the most jealous care by the officials, and a certain number of officials are always present when the tenders are opened and the contracts awarded. In some cases the clerks are changed periodically so that they may not stay too long in the contract branch and be liable to the slightest breath of suspicion that they could be in any collusion with those who tender for government contracts. Such an example set to us by the great public departments in England is one which we would do well to imitate. Its adoption here would result in far greater competition and in better values being received for the property of the people.

Now, let us see what is the value of these timber limits which are being put up for public tender. I am informed that where spruce is found in merchantable quantities it is as a rule of a very even quality and it runs from 1,500,000 to 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 feet per square mile. I have estimates of the amount of timber to be found on several different limits, taken at random, and on one of these limits an estimate is given of 3,200,000 feet per square mile ; in fact 2½ miles have already been cut on this limit which has yielded this result. Another limit gives 2,400,000 feet per square mile, another 3,100,000 feet, another 3,300,000 feet per square mile, and so on. This timber has a value on the stump of probably $2 per thousand, and I am informed that the Hudson Bay Company have a fixed price of $2.50 per thousand feet from which they never deviate in the sales of the timber lands which they themselves own. Of course they do not charge any stumpage fee, while the government charges 50 cents. Accessible limits where the logs can be easily floated to the mill and the product shipped by rail or boat direct to the market, are worth at a fairly low estimate from $2,000 up to as high as $5,000 per mile. Let us say that $3,000 or $4,000 per mile represents a fair average price for such limits to-day in western Manitoba, Northern Saskatchewan, and Northern Alberta. I have seen a number of offers of sale of limits, and some of the prospectuses show the value which the lucky holders place upon these limits when they are offering them for sale. I may say, without going into detail, that the value placed on them is from $3,000 up to $7,000 per square mile. The Minister of Agriculture recently made a speech in the province of Quebec and he made boast that the present administration had sold their timber limits at a very much higher figure than did the Conservative administration, and he seemed to rejoice that the government had obtained for this 6,456 square miles which they had placed in the hands of private parties, a price of $81 per square mile, and this in face of the fact, that the private owners are offering these limits for from $3,000 to $7,500 per square mile.

Then I may say that this estimate includes those tracts which have been purchased by mill owners, who have purchased them for the supply of their own mills, and have paid in many cases prices which were fairly well up to their value.

But if you consider the average prices which have been given by those persons who have acquired the limits for purely speculative purposes, you will find the average sum per square mile falls very far below this figure. I have in mind a case where a man bought a berth just about eighteen months ago for the sum of $100, and who is now offering that berth for the sum of $72,500; he says he has already refused an offer of $52,000 for it. I think the offer which was made to him was made a considerable time ago. It must always be borne in mind that these enormous profits which are to accrue to speculative holders must come out of the pockets of the settlers in that country, who will in consequence have to pay higher prices for their lumber. I would estimate from what has taken place up to the present time that every man who has to purchase lumber in that country will have to pay $2 to $3 per thousand more for it than he would have to pay if this land were kept in the hands of the government and properly administered, to be leased only to those persons who intend to produce lumber. Let me lay it down as a matter of common sense that any limits not situated conveniently for shipment by railway or water, and whose development will have to wait for a railway, will only be purchased for speculative purposes. Consequently no person purchasing such a berth will pay more than a small proportion of the value which it will eventually be worth when that region has been developed by a railway system.

After a long fight in this House for the production of original documents in regard to certain of these timber limits, they were brought down a short time ago and laid upon the table of the House. There are many other original documents which have been repeatedly moved for from time to time, and have been refused us. But in three cases original documents were brought down, and it happens curiously enough that one of these documents presents some extraordinary features that call for general remark. There are certain remarkable circumstances in connection with these papers which must be apparent to anybody who makes even the most cursory examination of them. I do not myself intend to go into the details this evening. There are other hon. gentlemen to follow who will elaborate the various reasons for which I intend to ask that further inquiry be made into the matter of these timber areas. I will content myself for the present with presenting the reasons for which I intend to ask for this inquiry, before I move my resolution:

1. That the order in council of the 14th April, 1903, which provided for a renewal of all licenses from year to year while merchantable timber remains upon the area licensed enormously increased the values of timber limits and encouraged speculative applications for berths for the purpose of holding for future increase in values.

2. That nevertheless the Department of the Interior continued to put up for public tender large areas of the timber lands upon which the prairie provinces of the Northwest would naturally rely for their lumber supply in the future, and this was done without any inquiry as to the value of such areas and without any reserve bid or upset price—a policy which has largely resulted in timber limits falling into the hands of speculators to the detriment and loss of the consumer.

3. That such areas have in a large number of cases been situated far remote from settlement where the products could not for some time to come be made available for the public owing to lack of transportation facilities, a fact which gave them entirely a speculative value realizable only on the future development of the country through the extension of railways and settlement.

4. That the selection was permitted of small blocks out of much larger areas, rendering the unselected portions of the belt of little value to any but the original lessees to whom they would ultimately fall at their own price.

5. That the manner in which tenders were called for prevented any effective competition, in as much as the limits were not sufficiently advertised; that in some cases the time allowed between the publishing of the advertisement and the opening of the tenders was too short to allow of inspection by others than the original applicants; that in other instances tenders were called for at seasons of the year when examination of the properties by would-be purchasers was an impossibility—all of which combined to prevent any effective competition, so that as a result these valuable reserves were alienated for a tithe of their real value.

6. That in some instances tracts of timber situated at considerable distances from each other had to be included in a single tender, thus rendering still more difficult any real competition with those who possessed previously acquired information.

7. That the practice by which tenders when received by the department were opened and contracts awarded by a single official in his private office, has been highly detrimental to the public interest, has created distrust among intending bidders and has tended to discourage legitimate competition.

8. That in the case of the tenders for timber limit No. 1108 in which the original files have been recently laid by the government on the table of the House, the presence of two tenders in the same handwriting for widely different amounts, the figures in the higher of the two having apparently been added after the remainder of the document had been drawn up, together with other features apparent in the documents themselves, render an investigation highly desirable in the public interest.

9. That the returns brought down by the department show so many remarkable coincidences in the matter of close bidding and other circumstances as to lead to the conclusion that the amount of the tenders must in some cases have leaked out, and thus led to the undue advantage of one or other of the persons competing and that a thorough investigation is necessary to set at rest any suspicion that may have arisen. For these reasons I beg to move in amendment:

That all the words after the word 'that' to the end of the proposed motion be omitted and the following substituted therefor:

In the opinion of this House a committee of nine members should be appointed to investigate, inquire into and consider all matters connected with or relating to the alienation, granting, rental, leasing or other disposal by lease, license or otherwise, since the first day of July, 1898, of any timber lands or timber berths forming part of the public lands of Canada, or of rights to the same or to the timber thereon, and to report upon the matters aforesaid to this House; with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the House ready for the question? All those in favour of the amendment will please say——

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine, Montreal). Mr. Speaker, I thought it was the intention of members of the government to reply to the statements that have just been made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake). But, inasmuch as they appear to have nothing to say on this subject, either concluding that the matter is not of sufficient importance to deserve their attention or else reserving what they have to say until some future time—I find it necessary, if this debate is to be continued, that it should be continued by some hon. member on our side of the House. So, I propose to say a few words in support of the motion so ably presented by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

A great deal has been said, not only in the press but on the public platform, with reference to the manner in which this government has disposed of timber areas in the Northwest. Whenever members of the government or their supporters are criticised on account of these transactions, they invariably seek refuge in one declaration. They always say: These timber limits were put up at public competition; and, since that was the case, what possible objection or criticism can there be? I think the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has pretty well exploded that defence; for any one who has followed his remarks can see that, so far as the shibboleth of public competition is concerned, it is a mere play upon words, and that the public competition, so called, under which thousands of acres of our timber lands in the west have passed from the hands of the people has been but a deception and a travesty. Thousands of square miles of our timber lands have been prematurely offered, long before there was any demand for them, long before there was any necessity for their being offered, timber lands in outlying sections which no one but the speculator had explored, and put up under conditions under which bona fide competition was absolutely impossible. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle has shown how utterly impossible it was to have competition under the circumstances under which these outlying limits have been offered, and I do not intend to further amplify that phase of the situation.

The results of this system of tendering, however, I wish to bring to the attention of this House. In the first place, I wish to point out that the conditions, under which this government has permitted those who acquired these limits to hold them, have in every way tended to make the life of the speculator as easy as possible. In the advertisements, as a rule, there is no mention of any date for selection and survey. The result has been that the government have been exceedingly lenient to most of those acquiring outlying limits. Year after year has been allowed to go by and the limits have not been selected. The government have complaisantly, in many cases, notified the happy holders that they should make their selections—three, four, five, even six times; and yet the holders have not completed their selections, and whole areas have been locked up for a term of years until it should be deemed fitting by the happy possessor to make his selection of blocks. In the meantime, values have increased, and the lucky holders have been able to keep others out of the region, sometimes for years. Nor has the so much vaunted saw mill clause been of any real effect. It is not a deterrent to speculative holding to any great extent. It can be put in force only if the minister demands; and it is interpreted to mean that, unless the timber is needed for the settlers in that neighbourhood, there will be no insistence upon the erection of a saw mill. And as these are outlying limits, far from civilization and in sections where there are no settlers, the holders of them are never troubled with the saw mill clause. And these limits, held under practically perpetual lease, renewable from year to year so long as merchantable timber stands upon them, have acquired a very great value, and this value has been given them largely by the very fact that the leases are perpetual. See what it means, and how easy it is to hold one of these timber limits. Take, for example, a limit of fifty square miles.

The ground rent is $5 a year, or $250 a year for the limit. The lucky lessee can hold it for ten years for $2,500, and, during that time the limit may have come to have an actual value of half a million dollars or more. Everything about the methods, at present prevailing in the department, goes to encourage the speculator not only in the acquisition but also in the holding of his limits. By putting up these inaccessible limits prematurely, by permitting them to fall into the hands of people who wish to speculate in them, the great unearned increment passes from our hands and is enjoyed by others. These limits should have been retained until the timber was needed; then they should have been put up under conditions which would have ensured genuine competition among men who wish to cut, not to hold. Then the country would get an adequate return. The limits would then cost the man who acquired them so much that it would be necessary to cut the timber thereon, and so we should have genuine competition.

Now, I propose to spend a few minutes in dealing with the very interesting question: Who has profited by this system? It has not been the consumer. Oh, no. It has not been the settler. Oh, no. It has been the man who has secured limits in the outlying districts, holds them and sell them at an enormous profit. Out of 365 licenses which are in force at the present time, covering an area of 6,402 square miles, five-sixths were given out under the present government. If there is any blame to be attached the present government must bear five-sixths of it. Practically every license, or nineteenth-twentieths of the licenses given out prior to 1896 have lapsed owing to the onerous conditions which could not be fulfilled by the persons holding the licenses. Out of all the timber to-day under lease in the Northwest five-sixths has passed into the hands of the present holders under this administration. These limits are held by three classes of people. They are held, in the first place by the genuine operator and for the genuine timber operator we have every respect. We welcome him to the country and we should make our regulations so that we may give him an opportunity to acquire the timber and to make it available for the benefit of the settler and of the consumer. We welcome him and every man who comes into this country to manufacture and to sell lumber should be given every opportunity to do so. There is a second class which we are also not here to criticise; and that is represented by those genuine manufacturers of lumber, who, looking far into the future and realizing they are making a capital outlay, are desirous that they should have reserve supplies upon which they may draw in the time to come. We have no quarrel with the Red Deer Lumber Company, the Prince Albert Lumber Company, the Edmonton Lumber Company and others where large capital is invested and where great interests are involved, who, looking five, ten, or twenty years ahead, acquire a supply of timber that they may keep their mills running. We are not criticising aimlessly. We are criticising a certain portion of these timber leases that have been given and that is the section that I propose to speak about. There is a third class and that third-class is represented by the speculator, the man who has no mill, the man who has no intention of putting up a mill, the man who has no intention of supplying lumber in the west, but the man who is on the look out for a bargain, the man who having captured a limit for next to nothing, is prepared to hold it until the unearned increment makes it worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, when he is prepared to sell and to squeeze the last cent out of the person who operates the limit. Where does the speculator reside, and who is he? We do not have to go very far even from parliament hill to find him. We have him in Ottawa, we have him in Montreal, we have him in Toronto, we have him in Winnipeg—lawyers, real estate owners, second hand machinery dealers, hide dealers, members of the Senate and members of this House. They are all among the speculation in timber. Headless, unknown companies that serve as cloaks for people who do not dare tell where their interests lie are speculating in timber as well. These people acquire these limits, they hold them and then they sell them. They levy a tax not only on ourselves but on those who come afterwards—on posterity. We have squandered our patrimony and those who come after us will execrate our memory in so far as we have done so. The system which has promoted, which promotes and which is so well adapted to serve the ends of the speculator is certainly deserving of the condemnation of this House. Let us make an estimate if we can as to the extent of the area of these timber limits which is in the hands of speculators. I have endeavoured to do that with great care. I have endeavoured to ascertain who might be classified as speculators, and I find that at least forty per cent and probably fifty per cent of the timber under lease is in the hands of speculators. I find that on three-quarters of the area under lease there has never been a stick of timber cut, that it is not held by operators and that all the timber which is now going into the west to supply the needs of the people goes from about one-quarter of the holdings which are in the hands of real timber operators, and that fully half of the areas that are at present under lease in the Canadian Northwest were put up before there had been a legitimate demand for the timber, were put up while the regions were absolutely inaccessible, were put up before there had been any exploration or any valuation of them, before there had been any attempt made to find out on the part of this government what these great uninventoried assets were worth. There was no real competition on the part of timber interests. When you find that a limit was located near the timber operators and they looked after it you got a good price for it, but if you had a limit in a remote district, which only had a speculative value, you got a mere bagatelle. That is the history of limit after limit; they fell into the hands of favoured individuals who will hold them until they acquire immense value and who will thus levy tribute on the consumer. By way of illustration I could perhaps offer to this House no better example than that which is presented by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows). The hon. member for Dauphin in this respect occupies a threefold capacity. In the first place, he is a sawmill owner. As a legitimate sawmill owner established at Grand View, Manitoba, he has an area of 94 square miles, located available to his mill which he operates, and I would have it understood that I have not one word of criticism to offer regarding the hon. member for Dauphin with respect to his operations as a genuine sawmill owner and a general supplier of timber for the west. The hon. member for Dauphin, with an eye on the future and realizing that the time may come when he will require to establish other mills, while he was a commissioner of the Canadian Northern Railway, enjoying excellent opportunities of advance knowledge of the Porcupine Hills country, acquired in that region 141 square miles. hat hon. gentleman has reserve miles. That hon. gentleman has reserve him as inheritors, will some day cut into lumber, and yet I think the hon. member for Dauphin would not be unwilling to sell those limits and if rumour is correct he would not take half a million dollars for the timber lands that he holds on the slopes of the Porcupine Hills. If he is holding those with the intention of cutting and selling the timber then I have no word of criticism to offer again on his behalf. But, the hon. member for Dauphin appears in a third capacity. In this case he appears, as near as I can judge, in the capacity of the speculator profiting by this iniquitous system. He has acquired, on the Pembina and MacLeod rivers, lying north and west of Edmonton, 228 square miles of timber limits. I understand that these limits are even now—he may correct me if I am making a misstatement—under option for sale at a large amount.

Mr. BURROWS. That is entirely incorrect.

Mr. AMES. That is entirely incorrect? I am very glad that the hon. gentleman has called my attention to it. I then make the statement that I understand that the limits have a very great value and that when the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is built to the Yellow Head Pass and the Canadian Northern Railway reaches Athabaska Landing those 228 square miles, owned by the hon. member for Dauphin, west and northwest of Edmonton, will have a very much greater value than they have to-day. He will not deny that. He will not deny also that this government put up these limits long in advance of the demand, that they put up these limits before they had been surveyed or valued, that they put up these limits when there was no competition, that they put up these limits when the region was inaccessible and that the time between the date on which the advertisement left Ottawa and the time when the bid required to be back in Ottawa was not sufficient to allow any competition or examination to be made of these limits.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the hon. gentleman assert that I got those limits put up to public competition?

Mr. AMES. I say that the hon. member secured those limits under a form known as public competition which in reality was no real public competition at all.

Mr. BURROWS. I asked him if he tried to assume that I applied to have those limits put up to pubilc competition?

Mr. AMES. I cannot see that that has anything to do with the case. My proposition—and the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) will pardon me if I press it, I have no grudge against the hon member in any way—but I am asserting that a pernicious system exists in this department and that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) is one of those who have immensely profited by that system.

It is not difficult to distinguish between the operator and the speculator; the operators are well known, the speculators are less well known. A careful analysis of those 6,400 square miles of which I spoke leads me to conclude that at least 2,400 miles, and most of this in outlying districts, are in the hands of recognized speculators, and that these 2,400 miles to-day are worth about $5,000,000. How this will affect the future timber supply of the west I propose to study for a moment by taking up consecutively the several districts and pointing out to this House what this ruinous policy has meant and will mean to the people of the Northwest. Take for example the Winnipeg situation. The city of Winnipeg is largely dependent for its timber supply largely upon limits situated on Lake Winnipeg and the Winnipeg river. Nearly all of these limits have been taken up for some time, and most of them have been cut over so that the people at Winnipeg are beginning to realize that the quantity of timber in their reserve supply is very limited. We are spending a large sum of money to make the river at St. Andrews rapids navigable and to make it possible for boats to come up from Lake Winnipeg right to the very quays at the city of Winnipeg. When the people of Winnipeg wake up to the situation that practically all the timber on Lake Winnipeg and the Winnipeg river has been cut over, and when they go further afield to see where they can secure a reserve supply, what will they find? Their natural reserve supply will be up the Saskatchewan river which flows into Lake Winnipeg from the west. They will find that all the timber between Lake Winnipeg and the Pas Mission, all the timber on Moose lake, Cedar lake, and Cormorant lake, all the timber which should really be the reserve supply of Winnipeg, is in the hands of A. W. Fraser, of Ottawa, of W. H. Nolan (or the people for whom he stands), of Montreal, and the Macdonalds of this city. All these limits are for sale, and it will be necessary for the genuine timber dealers of Winnipeg to buy from these speculators before they can have a reserve supply.

Take the situation on the Saskatchewan river, from Fort à la Corne to the Pas Mission. The Canadian Northern Railway, on the way to Hudson bay, has constructed a line as far as the Pas Mission. The line is not in very good order yet, but still, in the winter at any rate, some freight can be carried over it; it will, however, soon be graded and ballasted and will be able to handle freight to better advantage. That line, it is expected, will bring timber from the north down into the farming section of Saskatchewan. If a sawmill was established at the Pas Mission, all the timber of the Carrot river and the Saskatchewan between the Pas Mission and Fort à la Corne could be floated down to the Mission, milled there and be shipped down 100 miles south and come into the Saskatchewan market; so that the moment the railway is hauling freight from the Pas Mission these limits become of value. If you examine the limits you will find that all the timber in that section, 200 miles long, has been appropriated by the Prince Rupert Lumber Company, the Macdonalds, of Ottawa, C. R. Smith, of Wisconsin, and H. Finger, of Port Arthur; they have all that timber. Not one of them has a mill, not one of them has cut a stick on any of these limits and many of these limits are to-day in the market for sale. The people who have obtained them in many instances secured them for no other purpose but to sell them. They were put up when absolutely inaccessible, they were put up in advance of the demand, they were put up before the Department of the Interior had any knowledge of their value, and they were given away for a bagatelle. They are in the hands of people who intend to sell and not to cut, and the people of the west will pay in additional prices for sawn lumber, every cent the speculator makes out of them.

Take the Prince Albert situation and what do we find? Lumbering has been carried on in Prince Albert for 20 years. It is the main supply for sawn timber in the middle west. The timber does not lie so much along the main river as on the tributaries to the north, the Little Red river, the Sturgeon river and the Big river. All the limits for about 50 miles north and west and northwest, of Prince Albert are in the hands of operating companies and you will find four large mills there all doing good business. We have not the slightest objection to that timber being in the hands of these people and to their cutting it and sending it to the market. But what has been done? Beyond that 50 miles radius there is an immense reserve area. This government put up that whole immense area at one time; this government put up 50 blocks of 10 miles each to be selected within an area of 6,000 square miles at one time. Anybody can see that it was absolutely impossible to have any competition in that respect. In the three or four weeks allowed it was absolutely impossible for a man to cruise over a section as large as the whole of the eastern townships and pick out in 50 blocks timber equal in combined area to the county of Stanstead. How could that be done within three or four weeks? What is the result? That this whole timber supply has fallen into the hands of the Big River Lumber Company and of a Winnipeg lawyer. I may be misinformed, but I understand it is on sale in whole or in part at the present time, or has been until very recently.

Take the situation at Fort à la Corne east of Prince Albert, which up to the present time has not been available. There you will find the hon. member for Humbolt and Mr. A. E. Hitchcock, of Hitchcock & McGregor fame. There you will find 100 square miles which have been put up before they were accessible and which I understand are at present on sale.

Take the Edmonton situation, and what do we find?

Mr. ADAMSON. Does the hon. member state that that limit is in my hands, and that I am not operating a sawmill. I am in the sawmill business.

Mr. AMES. I have a return showing that the limit was acquired by a Mr. A. J. Adamson and made over to the Sturgeon River Lumber Company. Possibly the hon. member will say if there is any difference between Mr. A. J. Adamson and the Sturgeon River Lumber Company.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is a very decided difference. I did not get one dollar advance on my timber when turning it over to the Sturgeon River Company; there was no profit made and the timber limit is being operated as the gentleman says it should be done, it is being sawn now.

Mr. AMES. If I were selling from myself, H. B. Ames, to myself, the H. B. Ames Company, Limited, of which I held most of the stock, I would not expect to get much profit. Well, to come back to the Edmonton situation, what do we find there ? The city of Edmonton and the city of Strathcona depend for their timber supply upon that which comes down the North Saskatchewan river. Edmonton is a large town, it is growing very rapidly, large quantities of timber are required——

Mr. FOSTER. It is a big city.

Mr. AMES. It is a big city ; it will be larger. For 100 miles up from Edmonton you will find the timber berths mainly in the hands of operating companies who have their saw mills in Edmonton. That is as it should be. They compete, and together they keep the price of lumber fairly well down. But when you get beyond the 100 mile zone what do you find ? You find that the Imperial Pulp Company, which our friend Nolan and our friend Fraser of original document fame, have very much to do with ; the Imperial Pulp Company, which has no office as far as can be found, no saw mill, has a post office box in Winnipeg as its only known asset, the Imperial Pulp Company owns 300 square miles, which is practically all the reserve supply at the head of the North Saskatchewan, and the Brazeau river and the other tributaries of the North Saskatchewan; practically all the timber from where you get beyond the 100 mile limit above Edmonton. And when it is necessary for the present saw mill owners to negotiate for fresh timber limits they will have to go to the Imperial Pulp company, or shut down. Now let us consider for a moment what will be the eventuality when the Canadian Northern reaches Athabaska Landing. The railway is now being constructed in that direction and probably in a few years the Athabaska river will be tapped, and from that point all the products from up stream can be readily brought down to Edmonton. At present the road to Athabaska Landing is a long and difficult journey ; at present to explore the head waters of the Athabaska river is a very difficult undertaking, but when that river is reached by the railways and when it becomes possible to establish a saw mill proposition at Athabaska Landing and there cut the timber from the head waters of that river and its tributaries, and ship it out by railway and find a market in Edmonton and elsewhere, then it will be found that the speculator has got in ahead. In this hitherto inaccessible region the speculator has gone in in advance of the railroads, and the government have already granted limits exceeding 400 square miles in that comparatively inaccessible area. Before there was any knowledge of the value, before there was any survey, before there was any attempt made to find what the timber was worth, it was given to those who asked for it through this form of pseudo competition. And the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) again was one of the lucky ones. And the hon. senator from Prince Albert was a lucky one. And the Imperial Pulp Company again figures, and fifty per cent of the timber that has been alienated in these regions will be found with these gentlemen. They have anticipated the railway by about four years. I presume they will be prepared to sell. They have again profited by this pernicious system in as much as they have acquired these limits, through the grace of the government, long before the time had arrived when they should have been put up to public auction. By the premature disposal of these limits they have gone for a bagatelle, and their present owners will some day reap an immense benefit.

Now, take the case on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. It was supposed in the first place in 1903, that the Grand Trunk Pacific would pass by way of Dunvegan and you will find a clause in the Bill to that effect. And while we were here legislating—or while some of us were here for I had not then a seat in the House—while we were here legislating and while most people were asking where Dunvegan was, the speculator was up in that country getting busy. And all the best timber on the Peace river and on the Wapiti and the Smoky rivers which flow into the Peace river, the timber that the future settler in the Peace river valley will require to depend upon, all that timber 330 miles in extent passed into the hands of J. W. Stewart, of Larsen Brothers, the contractors, for a mere pittance, a mere bagatelle.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any left ?

Mr. AMES. Precious little. Now it is perfectly plain that there could be no competition when these limits were put up. They lie 200 miles out from Edmonton in a region practically untraversed and unsettled. How was it possible for any competitive bid to come in ? The only man that could bid was some one who would take a chance shot at it, with the idea that he would risk a few hundred dollars and could not go very far wrong. But the Grand Trunk Pacific is not going by way of Dunvegan now. It is going by the Yellow Head Pass, and to reach the Yellow Head Pass it will go along the McLeod and Athabaska rivers, and here again a little advance knowledge was very valuable. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) took a long shot in advance and acquired two-thirds of the timber on the McLeod river. And the Imperial Pulp Company, which bobs up on every occasion, the Imperial Pulp Company acquired all the timber on the Pembina river south of the railroad, so that they have practically a cinch on everything there is in that section of the country. And to these the bona fide operator has to go and with these people the bona fide operator must make terms, and when the people of Edmonton need the reserve supply from Athabaska Landing or from the west or from the head waters of their own river, —the three sections which should naturally supply them—they will find the reserve limits in every one of these sections held by people whom I would term speculators.

Let me recapitulate—you will find that the Winnipeg reserve supply of about 200 square miles ; the Carrot river country supply of 500 square miles ; northwest of Prince Albert comprising 500 square miles ; the head waters of the North Saskatchewan 300 square miles ; the Athabaska river above the landing 400 square miles ; the Peace river country where J. W. Stewart and others are interested 350 square miles ; and lying along the line of the Canadian Northern 150 square miles, or all told 2,400 square miles out of the 6,400 square miles, is practically in the hands of speculators. This whole area, or rather this series of areas, comprising 40 per cent of all the timber at present under lease in the Northwest was put up while it was absolutely inaccessible, was put up prematurely, was put up in advance of any actual demand. The competition for it was a perfect farce, the bonus was wholly inadequate, and it has fallen into the hands of speculators who will levy their tax upon the consumer in the days to come. Had these limits been retained until the railroad reached these sections, until there was a competitive demand by operators, until there was a real necessity for putting them in the market, the unearned increment which now goes into the hands of the speculator would have gone into the coffers of this country and into the pockets of the people of this country where it rightly belongs. The government have unnecessarily thrown away for the benefit of others the unearned increment which accessibility would give in value to these limits.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to give by way of illustration three instances, and those who will follow me will give other instances—we will give this House a great many instances which will bear out exactly what I have been saying. I propose only to deal with the reserve supply of Winnipeg, viz., limits 1107, 1108 and 1171, just one section, just 200 square miles of the 2,400 square miles of which I have been speaking. Just north of Lake Winnipegosis there lies a lake called Cedar lake. Through this lake runs the Saskatchewan river, and where the Saskatchewan connects with Lake Winnipeg, there is a magnificent water-power which can be used for milling purposes. This lake is about the size of Lake Simcoe, and the location for a sawmill is at the outlet. On the 30th September, 1903, Messrs. Perkins, Fraser & Gibson, a firm which includes our friend A. W. Fraser, 'on behalf of a client,' name undisclosed, applied for 60 square miles, to be selected on Cedar lake, around the lake and on the islands in the lake. The department responded to the demand with the usual alacrity with which it answers to demands from its friends. The application was made on the 30th September, 1903, and within twelve days—and I ask you to mark this because there will be instances shown where the department did not move with anything like the same speed—it got out the advertisements and issued the notices that bids would be received on the 2nd December. These notices had to be sent to Winnipeg. They were notices three inches long by two inches wide. They were inserted just once in the 'Manitoba Free Press' and just once in the 'Dauphin Press.' Notices were sent to the Superintendent of Forestry and to the Crown Timber agents at Winnipeg and Prince Albert and to three postmasters—a poster three inches long by two inches wide. The advertising was not extensive.

Mr. FOSTER. That was an instance of the government's economy.

Mr. AMES. Yes, but it can hardly be said to have encouraged competition. Just see what happened. Those advertisements left Ottawa about the 12th October. It was at least a week later before they could appear in the Winnipeg and Dauphin papers, so that nobody in the region affected would be likely to see these advertisements much before the 20th October. Supposing a man in Winnipeg saw the advertisement on the 20th October, saying that a timber berth would be put up to auction on Cedar lake, which is about 60 miles north from the railway. Of course it takes some time to fit out a cruising expedition. You have to find the men, you have to get canoes and supplies, and it would be ten days at least before the party could leave Winnipeg to go out and explore those limits. There would be no use applying at the Winnipeg office because the Crown timber agent could give no information. The only thing he could say would be : There is the advertisement, go and look at the limit yourself. But by the time the cruising party reached Lake Winnipegosis — about the 1st November — the steamer would have been taken off the lake, so that the usual method of getting to Cedar lake would have been taken away. About the 8th or 10th November, the lake begins to freeze over and the ice is not strong enough to drive across and yet too sharp for a canoe expedition, so that there was no possibility of any competitor from Winnipeg going to Cedar lake and seeing the limits. Even under the best of circumstances it would have required a fortnight or more to get to the lake and go around it, as it has a shore line of 150 miles, and that is where the timber is located. Yet it was expected that in four weeks a man could go to Lake Winnipeg, cross to Cedar lake and then get back to Winnipeg, and have time to finance a big bonus proposition and be prepared to put in his bid to the department by the 2nd December. What happened ? Exactly what was expected and what was intended. When the 2nd December arrived, there was only one tender, that of the original applicant, A. W. Fraser, and for a 60 mile limit, friend Fraser ventured the enormous bid of $500 and got the limit. That was the original bid, and there was no necessity to fill in the figures $500 with other pen and ink. For that paltry sum, that magnificent timber limit passed from the hands of the government into the hands of Mr. A. W. Fraser, or of the undisclosed client whom he represented. Friend Fraser has always been a job lot buyer. When you look through the bids, you will find that his bid is usually about one-tenth of what others think the berth is worth. If anything is going on the bargain counter, you will find friend Fraser on hand to buy it. At all events, this bid of $500 at the usual ratio of what the government might be expected to get from Fraser, meant at least $5,000 as an average bid of another. After friend Fraser got the limit he began negotiations with the Land Commissioner at that time, the present hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), and he had no difficulty in persuading the Land Commissioner to enlarge the area of the limit from 60 to 90 miles. No new tenders were called for, additional bouns was asked, but friend Fraser got the chance of selecting 90 square miles on Cedar lake, the limits he required for the sum of $500, or $5.56 per square mile, or a little less than one cent an acre. You might have thought a land commissioner, who was really anxious to see that value was obtained for the limits of the country, would have said that this bid was insufficient and have called for tenders again. Not so. That one tender was accepted, and the limit went at that price. And since then, although the government then found it necesary to act with such alacrity that they could not allow any reasonable time to other parties desirous of tendering to visit the country, the Department of the Interior found no difficulty in permitting friend Fraser to take more than three years in finding out where the timber lay around Cedar lake which he had obtained. It was four years after he got his limit before he filed his plan of survey. In the meantime all others were excluded and verybody was told that until friend Fraser selected his limit, no one else could locate. Well, it took friend Fraser four years to go over the district and select his scattered lots around that lake, 90 square miles in all, where spruce timber could be found.

Mr. FOSTER. Out of what area ?

Mr. AMES. The entire coast line of the lake is about 150 miles and the islands have about forty miles area. If any hon. gentleman is under the impression that the timber is not of much use, I should be glad to show photographs taken this summer by a friend of mine who visited the limit. That limit was acquired by Mr. Fraser, not with the intention of putting up a sawmill because he is not in that business. He can make more money in Ottawa from his office. He has a partner, so I am told, Mr. D. B. Macdonald, of Winnipeg. Mr. Macdonald looks after the selling end and the limit has been already offered by him for sale. I have here the prospectus issued by J. Heffner & Son, real estate agents, 367 Main street, Winnipeg, giving a description and stating a price. And you might allow me to read that, Mr. Speaker :

Cedar lake, which is situated on Saskatchewan waters is comprised of something over 100 square miles and is estimated at 250,000,000 feet. The timber on this berth would work to advantage in connection with the former berth. As you will notice by the accompanying plan there is one short portage to land the logs from Cedar lake to Lake Winnipeg, a distance of from two and half to three miles. The waters in both lakes are of the same level and the country lying in between the two lakes is of a low flat nature. The timber is immediately surrounding the shores of the lake stated, for sixty square miles, together with the islands or portions of the islands that have been selected. The survey has been made, but up to the present I am not in possession of the plans. The timber is of good quality and fairly clean, more so than the timber in the Erwood and Red Deer districts, but not quite so large. The price for this block is $500,000.

Pretty good as a speculation, is it not? The government parted with it for $500. It has cost Mr. Fraser $450 a year ground rent, a small sum for fire-guarding and a couple of thousand dollars for surveys—and it is on the market for $500,000. It was also offered in the market by the Knoblunch Land Company of Minneapolis, who quoted the same price. It is not a bad speculation when a man can sell for about a thousand times what he has paid. Or, even if he had to pay ground rent for five years and then can sell for a hundred times what he paid, it would seem to be a fairly good transaction.

Now, I say that the department played right into the hands of Mr. Fraser in giving out that limit. I say that the evidence shows that apparently, there was collusion between the department and Fraser in obtaining that limit, or it would never have been put up under such conditions. Mr. Fraser says he acquired it for an undisclosed client. Who is this undisclosed client ? Is the House entitled to know that? Is Fraser to be used as a cover for some one to acquire this limit for $500——

Mr. FOSTER. Who was minister at that time?

Mr. AMES. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) was Minister of the Interior at that time, and the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) was land commissioner.

Mr. FOSTER. Worth while to go to Stanstead to defend land deals, eh?

Mr. AMES. On January 23, 1908—not very long ago, you see—this limit was assigned to the Spruce Lumber Company.

Mr. J. D. REID. This month?

Mr. AMES. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Who are they?

Mr. AMES. The same people under another name apparently. The president of the Spruce Lumber Company is W. C. Perkins and the secretary H. H. Williams. The probability is that the limit has not changed ownership to any great extent.

Now, let us take up another limit that, on the application of this same Fraser, was put up at the same time. This is north of Cedar lake, and is known as the Moose lake limit. Moose lake also is drained by a side river from the Saskatchewan, and all the product of timber on Moose lake is easily floated into Cedar lake and so to the sawmill. Moose lake is about as large as Lake Nipissing; so you can see that to have all the timber on Moose lake is no small privilege. The timber can be easily milled at Grand Rapids and floated down to Lake Winnipeg in barges, and when the channel is improved it can be laid on the wharf at Winnipeg at a very low figure. Fraser applied for this limit, and again he asked for it 'for a client.' He asked for sixty miles and the conditions were the same as in the matter of Cedar lake. There was the same insufficiency of notice, the same impossibility of examination, and the result was very much the same, except that Cedar lake is a little further and more difficult to get at than Moose lake. There was no question of competition. What little competition there was for this limit came from Ottawa here. Mr. Fraser put in a nominal bid of $1,000. It is evident that he expected no competition. But there was a surprise in store for him, for one named James Currie, who, I understand, is connected with the McDonalds, who are thoroughly responsible people, put in a tender of $6,420. Then a tender was put in signed W. H. Nolan for $7,000. And the $7,000 tender captured the limit.

Now, we had the opportunity a day or two ago of seeing the originals in connection with that deal. The government spent two weeks in trying to persuade us that we did not want the originals, and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is credited with not being over-anxious that we should see them. However, these originals have been in possession of the House. And on examining them what have we found? We have found that Fraser's tender and Nolan's tender are in exactly the same handwriting. Copies gave us to understand that they were put in by two different men. Typewritten copies would lead us to believe that there was genuine competition in that case. But the originals have shown us that from the same lawyer's office came both tenders, and, while one was signed by the applicant in his own name, to the other he affixed a name that was not his—we do not know whether with or without the consent of the party whose name was used.

Now, I want to ask one pertinent question. How did Fraser know that it was necessary to put in a second bid just seven times the amount of his first bid? All three tenders are dated the same day—December 2. Suddenly Fraser found himself called upon to offer $7,000 for the limit, and he offered it in the name of another man. How did he know that it was necessary to go up to $7,000 in order to secure this limit? There is another thing that the original proves, and that is that the Nolan tender, written by Fraser, was originally written without any price at all; the price was filled in with another pen and was blotted immediately after it was filled in. Who filled it in? Was it filled in after or before it reached the department. If it was filled in before it reached the department, how did Fraser know that it was necessary to put in $7,000? If it was filled in after it reached the department, who was Fraser's good friend on the inside to put it in ? Another consideration. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) was at that time land commissioner. The hon. member is a very astute gentleman ; I do not think he could be readily imposed upon. I cannot imagine how he could be unaware of the fact that the two tenders were in exactly the same handwriting; I cannot imagine how he could fail to see that the tendering in this case had something about it which needed to be looked into. Did he protect the department over which he presided? Did he make any investigation ? Did he accept the two tenders coming from the same party, the man who had signed two names to two different tenders? There is something to be explained there.

Mr. MACDONALD. What should he have done ?

Mr. AMES. Call for new tenders.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was it right to accept a blank tender ?

Mr. MACDONALD. Accept the highest tender, as every man should.

Mr. AMES. Does not the Prime Minister think that the matter should be investigated ? Does he not think an opportunity should be given for an explanation on the part of Mr. Fraser and Mr. Nolan ? We are quite willing to do our share if he will allow us an investigation. We will endeavour to bring out the actual facts of the case if an opportunity is afforded. Will the right hon. gentleman give us that opportunity ?

Well, let us continue the history of that letter. The return shows that Mr. Nolan was only a prête nom for Mr. Fraser, because Nolan was apparently unaware of the fact that the limit had come his way until he was notified of it. Well, what was the next step in the game ? Five days after Mr. Nolan got the limit he transferred it to the Imperial Pulp Company. Who are the Imperial Pulp Company ? We would like to know who are the shareholders of the Imperial Pulp Company, what interests the Imperial Pulp Company have, where is their place of business, and who are profiting by all the transactions that the Imperial Pulp Company have ? That assignment was made, I say, five days after Mr. Nolan got the limit. Who asked Mr. Nolan to make the assignment, at whose instance was the assignment made ? Can the then land commissioner tell us under what circumstances Mr. Nolan made that assignment, and why he made it ? There is something to be explained there. We know that Mr. Nolan and the then land commissioner are very closely connected, we know that they have common financial interests. There is a good deal to explain between the then land commissioner of that department and Mr. Nolan. May we have an opportunity in a committee to investigate and find out what that relationship is ?

Well, now we will continue the story of the limit. Although the limit was transferred, as I say, to the Imperial Pulp Company in five days, the transfer was not registered for three years. Meantime the department had notified Nolan and Fraser, and Fraser paid the dues generally in the name of Nolan. I have grave doubts whether Nolan ever paid a dollar of his own money on that limit. We would like to find out, and I think a court of inquiry would enable us to find out, if Nolan did not keep up the limit, who did ? Who do Fraser and Nolan stand for, anyway ? Who are Fraser and Nolan and the Imperial Pulp Company standing for ? We are dealing with large values, we want to know who are profiting by these transactions. Well, there was no difficulty in that case in enlarging the area from 60 to 70 miles, there was no difficulty in giving these successful tenderers opportunities for selection. Only on the 31st of December last was the final selection made, or at least that was the last extension granted, and the Minister of the Interior will tell us if a still further extension has been given. Here they have had four years to select their limit, during which time no one else could enter into that area, during which time no one else had a right to make application to cut a stick of timber in that whole area. For four years Fraser, Nolan and the Imperial Pulp Company have been sitting on everything of value in sight all about Moose lake.

Now, what is the value of that limit? That limit has been visited, and an expert report has been prepared. We find that this limit contains a large quantity of white spruce, that this white spruce is larger in size than it is at Moose lake. I shall be able to show the Prime Minister, or the Minister of the Interior, or anybody else in this House, a series of photographs of the timber on that limit.

An hon. MEMBER. You ought to have lantern slides.

Mr. AMES. I have lantern slides of this, and I shall use them, too. It is timber where a grown man standing against a spruce tree will have wood on both sides of his shoulders, timber which, on an average, for over a mile, will cut sticks over forty-five feet long. That limit is also on sale, or was a short time ago. Regarding that limit I have also a prospectus from the same firm of gentlemen, J. Haffner & Sons, 367 Main street, Winnipeg; and this is how they describe it :

> The party purchasing this has the right to select sixty square miles on the shores of the said lake, together with the islands or portions of the islands that they may deem advisable. The survey of this berth has not yet been made, so that the exact area cannot be definitely stated. Like Cedar lake, the timber is conveniently situated to water and can be floated in booms directly to Cedar lake and can be towed to the point of manufacture on Lake Winnipegosis. The estimate of this limit is between 250 and 300 million feet, and the price asked for same is $2 per thousand. To be determined in bulk or established by arbitration. Terms, 50 cents cash, and the balance to be arranged.

If there are 250,000,000 feet, that means $500,000 ; if there are 300,000,000 feet, that means $600,000. Does it not seem that if this limit, worth $500,000 or $600,000, has been obtained under the suspicious circumstances which the original documents show, that the government ought to permit an investigation, and if the government admits an investigation of this, should they not allow an investigation of every transaction which Fraser, or Nolan, or the Imperial Pulp Company, has had anything to do with? On the 18th of December, 1906, this limit also went the way of the rest, and was assigned to the Imperial Pulp Company, and a new lease dated January 20, 1908, was made with them. Who compose the Imperial Pulp Company? We do not know. We only know that D. H. McMillan is president, and R. R. Pattinson is the secretary; and this Mr. McMillan, I belive, is the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba. But what we would like to know is how much stock Mr. McMillan owns, and who owns the rest of the stock; who has owned stock from the beginning, and who really stands to profit by it, because the Imperial Pulp Company owns 475 miles of the best selected timber that can be found in the whole west, and every portion of timber that the Imperial Pulp Company acquired they acquired in outlying sections before there was any demand for the timber, before the regions were explored or accessible; the limits went for a bagatelle; they were knocked down for a mere pittance, and they fell into the hands of this company and those who act on their behalf.

I have just a word to say in reference to the third of these limits and with this I will be very brief. The third was on Cormorant lake, No. 1171, and the report and photos in my possession shows that superior timber grows upon this lake and that the quality is excellent. It will cut in some places by actual measurement from six to seven million feet to the mile. The Hudson Bay Railway is already planned to go right through that property, and when extended northward will give a great value. Mr. A. W. Fraser was the applicant for that limit also. He asked for it; he asked for fifty square miles to be selected out of 200 square miles. It was also insufficiently advertised; only 47 days were allowed in winter from the time the advertisement left Ottawa until the bids should be back in Ottawa. So, you will see that to advertise this in the west and to permit of a journey of 100 miles up through that north country in the dead of winter was absolutely impossible. Although Mr. A. W. Fraser asked for the limit he did not bid for it. Who did bid for it and who got the limit? The limit was knocked down to the only bidders, the McDonalds for $1,845. The McDonalds were interested with Curry in the limit on the lake just below.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Are these the same McDonalds who put in a second bid in connection with that timber limit?

Mr. AMES. Yes, I am going to show that if you will allow me.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a good question.

Mr. AMES. The correspondence seems to show that Mr. Fraser was very anxious to get limit 1171, but Mr. Fraser's ardour for the limit seems to have cooled and he did not bid for it, and the limit fell to the only bidders, the Macdonalds, here in Ottawa.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If these are the same McDonalds how can the hon. gentleman suggest that it was necessary for Mr. Fraser to put in a second bid as against these McDonalds?

Mr. AMES. I see that it will be necessary for me to explain that Mr. Fraser and the McDonalds have no connection whatsoever and are usually active competitors. In the case of 1108 there was the James Currie and the Fraser-Nolan second bid. It is reasonable to suppose that the McDonalds were displeased at losing the 1108 limit and it is reasonable to assume that Mr. Fraser withdrew from 1171 in order to satisfy the McDonalds when they bid for the limit. At all events if an investigation were allowed we might be prepared to ask a few pertinent questions which might illumine the matter: No. 1171 is estimated as containing about 75,000,000 feet. I should be very glad to show photographs of that as well if any one wishes to see them. That limit, therefore, at $2 a thousand feet would be worth $150,000. That enables us to make some comparisons to see what the government gets as its percentage out of these outlying limits. Cedar lake, 90 square miles containing, it is claimed, 250,000,000 feet went for $500 bonus; Moose lake, 70 square miles, said to contain 250,000,000 feet went for $7,000; Cormorant lake, 50 square miles, said to contain 75,000,000 feet went for $1,845. These three limits went for the gigantic sum of $9,345, for 210 square miles, or for all the reserve supply of the great city of Winnipeg about $45 per square mile. These limits are considered to be worth $1,150,000. They are considered to be worth $5,500 per square mile, and there are said to be on them 575,000,000 feet of standing spruce timber. All that the government have got for that timber is $9,345.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How much per square mile?

Mr. AMES. Forty-five dollars is what the government get by way of bonus, and $5,500 per square mile is what the people hold them at.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman suggest that $5,500 per square mile is the value of ordinary timber limits in this country?

Mr. AMES. Five thousand dollars per square mile is not unreasonable at all at least where there is plenty of timber.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is at least 500 per cent more than the very best crown timber lands are worth in the province I come from at all events.

Mr. AMES. I may say that is what the prospectus calls for and that is the price that the people themselves place upon these lands. The Hudson's Bay Company have a fixed price at $2.50 per thousand feet for all the timber standing on their limits. It is not an unusual thing for a timber limit in the west to have two, three or four million feet per square mile.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that that same Hudson's Bay Company got its timber from a Conservative government without paying anything ?

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I have but a few words to say before taking my seat. These illustrations that I have given, I think, strengthen the contention with which I prefaced my remarks at the outset. I claim that this government put up these limits in advance of the demand, that they put them up before they had any idea of the value of them, that they disposed of them under circumstances, at least in the case of one limit, that may be characterized as suspicious, that they were put up under circumstances which made competition impossible, that property worth over a million of dollars has gone with a return to this country of less than $10,000 and that the series of transactions with A. W. Fraser, Nolan and the Imperial Pulp Company should be carefully investigated by a committee of this House. Throughout the whole Canadian west there is a feeling of deep distrust that has grown from year to year with respect to the administration of the Department of the Interior. If you hear it once you hear it over and over again ; responsible men will tell you that there has been no use in tendering for timber limits except through some one who is a favourite of the government. If you want those limits to bring a right price you must restore confidence ; you cannot allow the people of the west, the legitimate operators of the west, to feel that they cannot get justice or that there is any thing about this tendering which will not bear investigation ; and that is why I am claiming that this investigation should take place.

I sometimes think that this House and this country do not realize the dual position in which parliament stands. We are here not only to spend the revenues; we are here as custodians of the great uninventoried assets of this Dominion. We do not realize the great value of the land, of the coal, of the grazing areas and of the timber which is under the control of this parliament. In most of the provinces that sort of wealth is under the immediate control of the province, but the wealth of the great Northwest is under the control of this Ottawa government. It is a long cry from here to the timber limits which have been spoken of to-night, and it is hardly to be expected that there will be that close supervision which is desirable, but I claim that in the administration of our great national assets this government has acted in a manner that can only be characterized as improvident. I admit that the alienation of these limits is necessary for their development, but I claim that the government should retain possession of them until such time as they are actually needed to be converted into products which the country demands. The unearned increment, the increment that comes from settlement, the increment that comes from improved transportation facilities, the increment that comes from the hundreds of thousands of dollars that we are expending in opening up these areas, should belong to us as representatives of the people of Canada. And when the government deliberately allows these immense areas to be put up to pseudo public competition, under circumstances which can only attract a few speculators hanging about the corridors at Ottawa, I say they are recreant to their trust. I cannot but feel this when I realize that from Lake Winnipeg to the Rocky Mountains every timbered area has been picked over and every good belt taken up so that there is hardly a good timber limit left for the man who wants it. This government has lost a great opportunity in being negligent in their custodianship of the assets of the people.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (East Assiniboia). As my name has been mentioned by the two gentlemen who have spoken before me, I shall take up the attention of the House in dealing with this matter. Mr. Ames asked for certain returns; he got the returns and then he asked for the original papers; he has got the original papers; having these original papers before him he is making reflections on the department in connection with them and I stand here representing the department at that time. If there was anything wrong in the action of the department I am the man who was responsible, and if he thinks there has been anything wrong on my part or on the part of the department in connection with these tenders, I declare in the most emphatic and flat-footed manner possible that it is absolutely false, and I now challenge the hon. gentleman or any other hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House to take the manly course for once, to stop insinuating and to rise in his place and to make a charge. If he does that——

Mr. AVERY. Will you vote for an investigation?

Mr. TURRIFF. I will be the first man to ask the Prime Minister to grant him his committee and give him an opportunity of making good his charges; then perhaps either he or I will take a back seat, and we will see who it will be.

I now wish for a few moments to discuss as my hon. friends before me have discussed, the policy and the administration of the timber lands of the west, and when we have discussed that for a little while and thrown a little more light perhaps on the subject than has been thrown on it so far, possibly this House and this country may be in a better position to judge as to which government has maladministered the timber lands of this country. Every word that has been said by the two hon. gentlemen who have spoken before me in condemnation of this administration is ten times as great a condemnation of the party now in opposition when they were in power.

Mr. FOSTER. That settles it all.

Mr. TURRIFF. It does not settle it all. For some time back my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who now says 'that settles it all' made such just statements throughout the country as Mr. Ames has made to-night and he thought it was going to settle it all, but it did not. He and his friends went down to Stanstead and made the same broad, sweeping statements and it did not settle it there. I stood on the same platform with some speakers who sit on the other side of the House and although they had been very free and ready with their denunciations of the timber administration in the Northwest the night before and at every other meeting in Stanstead, when I was on the same platform and issued a challenge to any one of them to discuss the matter with me——

Mr. FOSTER. Who's afraid!

Mr. TURRIFF—not one of them had a word to say. The photographs, the magic lantern and all had been taken through that constituency, but some way or other they had not the faculty of making the people believe that the present government was not administering the lands and timber limits of the west properly; nor were they able to convince any one down there that if they had another opportunity to try to administer the affairs of the west or any other affairs they would be able to do it as well as the present government. Mr. Ames to-night has said a good deal about the government not ascertaining anything about the values of limits before they were put up for competition. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) could throw some light on that subject, because, when he was a minister of the Crown, they undertook on one or two occasions to state when advertising limits that there was so much timber on them; they sold them on these conditions, and what was the result? They were forced afterwards to refund the money. Because between the time that they made the report as to what was on the limits and the time the limits were sold, either the inspectors they had sent out did not know their business or they gave false reports or the timber was destroyed by fire, as very often happens. And when the government sold limits and the timber which they said was on the limits did not exist, they were forced to refund the money in several cases. In all those cases, where they had sold limits, claiming there was timber on them, and no timber was found there, they had to refund the money.

The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) also reported that on these limits there were from 2,000,000 to 7,000,000 feet of lumber to the mile. No doubt you can go into certain parts of the Northwest and find patches of spruce that will run at the rate of 5,000,000 feet per square mile; but I venture the assertion, and leave it to any man who knows anything at all about spruce timber in the west, that you cannot get a timber limit in that country that runs 5,000,000 or 6,000,0000 or 7,000,000 feet to the square mile. I say further that, in most cases, when you secure a limit of 50 square miles of timber, you will not have 10 miles or more than one-half of 10 miles of actual timber.

As to the question whether the policy was a good one or not, that is a matter for this House to decide and which I have not to answer in any shape or form. The hon. member for Qu'appelle (Mr. Lake) comes forward now with a resolution asking to change these regulations and the system of disposing of timber. He is just a little bit slow because, as I understand, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) changed these regulations over a month ago, and the timber limits are being administered under new regulations altogether at present.

Mr. LAKE. Is the hon. gentleman referring to the resolutions before the House If he has read it, he has not understood it.

Mr. TURRIFF. I am referring to the resolution before the House and also to the speeches made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and the hon. member for St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames). The latter hon. gentleman spoke about speculative limits. He said that the price received for those limits was less than the price received for limits that are now being operated. Well, I do not think he understands very much about the timber business out in the west. The sawmill men are the men who know more about the timber in that country than anybody else. As a matter of fact, any sawmill owner out there or in any part of the country makes it his duty to ascertain where the stretches of timber are in all parts of the country, so that when timber is put up for competition, he has an idea what to bid, if he wants to buy. If these large limits, which the hon. gentleman calls speculative, have gone at a small price, do not imagine that the sawmill men of that country did not know all about it. And if they did not bid high, it was because the limits were not worth much money and because the cost of handling them and the risk from fire are such that it did not pay to bid a high price.

Mr. PERLEY. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? Was the time between the publishing of the advertisement and the time for putting in tenders sufficient to allow parties interested to examine these limits ?

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes.

Mr. PERLEY. In six weeks ?

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, I would consider so.

Mr. PERLEY. Abundance of time ?

Mr. TURRIFF. There are some men over there who would be too slow to do it in that time. The hon. member is perhaps one of them.

An hon. MEMBER. The hon. gentleman is evidently not one.

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. member for St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames) had a good deal to say about the values of these limits. Well, the value that men, making a prospectus, put on an article is one thing and the actual value another. It would be much more to the point if the hon. gentleman had given an instance, and I venture the assertion that there is not one man in the lumber business—or if there is one it will be an exception—there is not one man who has been in the lumber business for the last ten years who could sell out and square off his bank account. I question if there is one man. I have heard a good many say they wished they could hand over their whole business and wipe out their liabilities. There has not been any profit made, so far as I have heard, in the sawing of timber in any part of the Northwest, up to the present at all events.

A good deal has been said also about the conditions and about the easy terms given to the holders of limits. But I want to point out that in every one of these licenses, the government has the right to insist on a mill being erected and on the lumber cut, and the assertions that have been made to-night, and all over the country for months past that the government, in disposing of these timber limits, had disposed of the land irrevocably, is absolutely incorrect. There is not one acre of timber which has been disposed of that carries the land with it. It is only the timber that is sold, and the land reverts to the government. And in every license there is a clause providing that whenever the timber is cut on any portion of a limit, that portion of the limit may be withdrawn, and also providing that the government may say to the limit holder : We will give you so long to take off the timber or whatever timber remains on your limit, and we intend to withdraw your limit and have it available for homestead entry or for disposal in any other manner.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there not a provision that the limit holders shall hold them as long as there is merchantable timber ?

Mr. TURRIFF. There is a provision that they may renew their lease from year to year, but there is a clause in the license which provides that whenever a portion of the limit is exhausted, or a portion of the timber taken off any limit, the government may at any time say to the limit holder : You must cut the balance of the timber ; and they can withdraw the land, according as the timber is cut. A good deal has been said by the hon. member for St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames) about the amount of timber which this government has alienated. Let me just show how much was alienated when my hon. friends opposite were in power.

Mr. AMES. May I ask the hon. gentleman if he will also kindly state how much of the timber that was alienated by the Conservative government was retained and held by them ?

Mr. TURRIFF. I will be most happy to tell my hon. friend why his friends did not retain it ; that is what I will tell him.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. They all went broke under the Conservative administration.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not a fault that can be urged against your people.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Every one is more prosperous now.

Mr. TURRIFF. It may possibly be urged that when the gentlemen on the other side of the House were in power, timber was not worth so much. If there is any argument in that, then to carry it to its logical conclusion it would follow that when the Mackenzie administration was in power the timber would be of still less value than it was after Sir John Macdonald came to power in 1878, because there were fewer people in the country at that time. But what do we find ? During the Mackenzie administration there were some people in that part of the country, and the Mackenzie government disposed of a small amount of timber between the years 1873 and 1878. They disposed of 310 square miles and they disposed of it practically under the same conditions that timber has been dealt with ever since. The Mackenzie government received a bonus of $7,150 for the timber they sold, or an average of a little over $23 per square mile. Now that is a long time ago, but in those days of the Mackenzie government when the timber of the west was properly administered, was put up for competition, was sold to the people who wanted it, was sold to the highest bidder, was handled in a proper manner and not given away for nothing, as it was to the pets and favourites of the late Conservative government, it shows that the Mackenzie government got a reasonably fair price for the timber. But what happened as soon as there was a change of government and the hon. gentlemen opposite came into power.

Mr. BRODER. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Who changed the law? The law was changed under the Mackenzie government so that it should not be put up to public auction. If you look at the statute you will see they changed the law.

Mr. TURRIFF. If it was, as soon as your friends came into power they rechanged it, because it was not put up for competition under the Conservative government.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask the hon gentleman in what condition it would be when it was 'unchanged.'

Mr. TURRIFF. I cannot tell my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Foster) much about it, because he knows probably as much about the timber regulations in the Northwest as I do.

An hon. MEMBER. He applied for a limit.

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, he applied for a limit, and talking about original papers, if any one wants to see the original papers in that case they can see the hon. gentleman's application in his own handwriting.

Mr. AMES. May I ask if it was necessary for my hon. friend (Mr. Turriff) to secure the permission of the House to see the original documents.

Mr. TURRIFF. When my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) applied for a timber limit it happened there were two or three other applications for it, but he did not want to pay anything for the timber limit; he wanted to get it for nothing. And later on my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) put in an application for somebody else and the order in council went through and that party got the limit.

Mr. FOSTER. I must look these up.

An hon. MEMBER. Was he a member of parliament then?

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, he was a member of parliament then. During the Mackenzie administration, from 1873 to 1878, they disposed of 310 square miles, but let us see what our Conservative friends disposed of between 1878 and 1896. If there is any point to the remark made by the hon. member (Mr. Ames) that during late years the timber of the western country has been put up before it was required, before there were people in the country needing it, before there was proper competition, surely that would apply with greater force to the years the Conservative government was in power. But the present Liberal government have disposed of 6,000 square miles in eleven years, and what are you to think of the Conservative administration which, when there were not nearly so many people in the western country as there are at the present time, disposed of not 6,000 square miles, but 29,322 square miles. Was that keeping the timber until there was competition; was that keeping the timber till it was needed by the settlers? Was that disposing of it before it was needed? My hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) had something to say about members of this House and senators getting timber under this government. I want to make the statement here and now, that from the time this government came into power until the present moment, not one single acre, not one single stick of timber has been disposed of to anybody, friend or opponent, member or senator, or anybody else in any shape or form except by public competition after properly advertising it, and to the highest bidder.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. That's a good joke.

Mr. PATERSON. No 'easiest terms' about that.

Mr. TURRIFF. As I have said, the Conservative administration disposed of 29,322 square miles of timber and that amounts in acres to a good deal more land than the hon. member (Mr. Ames) stated in this House a year or two ago remained of land fit for settlement in that whole western country. It amounted to 18,666,196 acres, and out of that amount 23,987 square miles or 15,351,744 acres were given away absolutely for nothing. And, in practically every case it was given to members and senators and politicians and friends of the Tory administration of the day. That is the record of our friends opposite. And that is the reason they are not able to make the people of any part of this country believe their statements about the present administration of the timber and the lands in the west. That is the reason they are not trusted, because the people know what took place when these same gentlemen had the power of administering the lands and the timber of the west. The people of this country know that after the elections of 1882 or 1883, hundreds of limits of fifty miles each were given to every Tory politician almost in Canada. I do not know why it was given away so freely then, but possibly it was in view of the elections that were about to take place, and after they had taken place, in order, I suppose to enable the friends of the government to recoup themselves somewhat.

An hon. MEMBER. What was paid for these limits?

Mr. TURRIFF. For this whole 29,322 square miles, or 18,766,196 acres, the Conservative government received a bouns at the rate of $4.13 per square mile on the average, or less than one-fifth what had been received by the Mackenzie administration for timber limits many years before. And during the time the present government has been in power they have disposed of 6,456 square miles for a total bouns of $528,878.80, or an average of $81.92 per square mile. In addition to that, there is the ground rent; and on this account the government is receiving $30,000 a year besides the bonus. And then, of course, as the timber is cut, stumpage at the rate of 50 cents per thousand feet must be paid. Should the hon. member for St. Antoine be right, and should there be 5,000,000 feet to the square mile, the government will receive $2,500 a square mile. If the hon. gentleman is not right, if, for instance, there should be only half that, the government will still take in a large revenue for the country. But there is this to be borne in mind—that the man who puts his money into timber in that country, or any other country (and lumbermen on the other side of the House understand this perfectly well), takes a certain amount of risk. He is liable to have the whole value of his property destroyed by a single fire.

Now, I want to give you the names of some of the men who got timber berths for nothing under the Conservative government. I will not take time to go through all the years, but I would like to show those who got these prize packages in one year. Timber limits were given to Conservative members of parliament, senators and politicians and their friends. You go through the list and you will scarcely find the name of a single Liberal. And where such a name appears, it is probable that of a clerk working for a prominent Conservative. I confine myself to the year 1883, during which year there was given away, without competition, by hon. gentlemen opposite, timber limits covering an area of 10,326 square miles, or almost double what has been disposed of by this Liberal administration during its whole stay in office, since June, 1896. I say that this immense area was given away for absolutely nothing—the whole area did not bring in enough to buy a postage stamp. It was given away to the friends of the government of that day in a single year.

The first name is that of T. O. Allan, who got 32 miles.

James Apted got 50 miles.

Frank Arnoldi—I think he is a well-known Conservative here—got 50 miles.

J. S. Atkins, Conservative politician in Winnipeg, got 50 miles.

Stewart Atchison got 50 miles.

H. H. Bailey must have done a good deal for the government of that day. He got 50 miles on January 5. Then by August 11 he had got hungry again, and on that day he was given another 50 miles. On November 6 he got an additional 50 miles; and on November 29 he got a fourth limit of 50 miles—a total of 200 miles, or 128,000 acres, given away in one year to one man for nothing.

John Bain—not our John—got 50 miles. Apparently this John wanted more, so Bain & Patterson got another 50 miles.

The hon. member for St. Antoine talks about there not being time enough for competition or inspection. In those days they did not even publish an advertisement. Anybody could go in and make application for a timber limit. But, of course, not everybody could get a limit—only those who were regarded as 'right' were considered as having any claim. Many a man applied for a timber limit and did not get it.

The next fortunate man whose name I find on this list is Mr. W. J. Baskerville, 50 miles.

E. A. Bates 50 miles.

Walter Beatty—he was at one time member of provincial parliament for Toronto got 50 miles.

J. H. Beaty got 48 miles in June; then John H. Beaty got 50 miles in December. He was a Toronto man.

Alexander Begg got 50 miles.

Robert Bell got 50 miles.

Bellemare and Lefebre got 50 miles.

J. G. H. Bergeron got 50 miles.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, Horace!

Mr. TURRIFF. E. B. Black got 50 miles and E. F. B. Black got 50 miles.

T. G. Blackstock, a Toronto politician, got 50 miles.

David Blain got 50 miles.

Mr. BLAIN. He is a Liberal.

Mr. HARTY. He went over to you afterwards.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Why does not the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) read out the name of the hon member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows).

Mr. TURRIFF. The name of the hon. member for Dauphin will be read out in its proper year and place. He got three limits of fifty miles each, he and his partner—because his partner was a very prominent Tory worker.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) makes a mistake. The hon. member for Dauphin also was, at that time, a Tory.

Mr. T. A. BURROWS (Dauphin). On the occasion, two years ago, when I had the privilege of addressing the House on this question, I stated that during the Conservative administration I had received a timber limit and had received it for nothing: I was in the lumber business—I was not taking the limit merely for speculation like the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). I cut the timber off the limits trying to make some money—and I did not make very much at that time. I was not like Mr. Bergeron, buying for speculation.

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) says that at that time the hon. member for Dauphin was a Conservative also. Well, contrary to the hon. member for Marquette, he has seen light since and has amended his ways. Yes, 15,351,000 acres were given away by my hon. friend from North Toronto to his friends. The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) tried to explain why these timber limits were not now held by these parties, and he stated that it was because of the onerous conditions and regulations of the late government which compelled them to give up the timber limits. I venture the statement, Mr. Speaker, that you may go through the limits that were given in those days, and of all the hundreds that were given away for nothing you cannot find three that were cancelled for that reason. I will tell you why they were cancelled, not because there was not good timber on the limits, but because, under the administration of my hon. friends opposite, the timber was not worth anything they scarcely got any people into the country, and the people they did get in there did not stay, with the result that they could not afford to go on paying $5 per square mile ground rent, and they did not pay the ground rent, and after a good many years many of the timber limits that had been given away and that were valuable, were cancelled for non-payment of the ground rent. That is the same timber that in many cases, has been disposed of by this government at good prices, for which we got in over half a million dollars in bonuses, in addition to the ground rent and dues. Now then let me go on with the names.

Mr. Rochester is an ex-Tory member of this House.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And uncle of W. T. R. Preston, too.

Mr. TURRIFF. I think that possibly if the hon. member for St. Antoine would look back in his history he might possibly be able to throw some light on this Rochester limit. Mr. Scarth was at one time a member of parliament. Mr. Robert Skead was an Ottawa politician at one time. Mr. Tisdale is at present a member of the House.

Mr. BRODER. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that the licenses were issued for these limits?

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, the licenses were issued in each case by order in council under the late administration.

Mr. BRODER. That is not so; it is absolutely not the fact; I can vouch for that.

Mr. TURRIFF. I want to state that what I am saying is absolutely the fact and if hon. gentlemen wish I will go over the list from beginning to end and give the date at which each order in council was issued, because I have it here.

Mr. WARD. I want to say that it is absolutely not the fact, and that I never received a license from the government in any shape or form.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. One of your friends swiped it, I guess.

Mr. WARD. No, I will explain more fully afterwards.

Mr. TURRIFF. An order in council was passed in each and every case. In order to save time I did not give the date of the order in council, but I have the date of the order in council in the middle column and I can give it if hon. gentlemen want it. There is the list of timber limits that were given away by hon. gentlemen opposite in one year without any competition, without any bonus, without any price whatever in any shape or form, and the men who supported them at that time are the men who come forward and state that the administration of the timber resources by this government has not been in the interest of the country and who are endeavouring, by a resolution, to condemn that administration. The total number of acres given away during one year was 6,608,960.

Mr. LAKE. How many licenses does the hon. gentleman say were issued and how many orders in council passed?

Mr. TURRIFF. There were 212 in that year.

Mr. LAKE. 212 licenses?

Mr. TURRIFF. Orders in council passed.

Mr. LAKE. Does the hon. gentleman say that 212 orders in council were passed granting that number of licenses?

Mr. TURRIFF. The number of berths granted that year was 212, that is 10,326 square miles, and order in council was passed for each of them and the license was issued in every case, as soon as the applicant paid his year's ground rent.

Mr. WARD. That does not answer the question, how many licenses were issued.

Mr. PERLEY. Why do you not answer that ?

Mr. TURRIFF. To every man who paid his ground rent the license was given and in every case an order in council was passed preparatory to giving that.

Mr. WARD. Then you refuse to answer that question ?

Mr. TURRIFF. I have not the information here.

Mr. BRODER.

Mr. WARD. I guess you have not.

Mr. LAKE. You do not want to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the hon. member, talking about orders in council or licenses ?

Mr. TURRIFF. I have stated two or three times already that in every case where an application was made an order in council was passed giving the 50 miles.

Mr. LAKE. Without competition ?

Mr. TURRIFF. I sat still when you were making all sorts of misstatements and now the least you can do is to allow me to speak. That is what existed under the old administration and these men come forward to-day and try to censure the government on the way they have administered the affairs of the west in connection with timber. I wish to repeat what I have said that the hon. gentlemen opposite having the papers before them, if any gentleman opposite has a charge to make against me as a member of parliament or as an officer of the government in this or any other matter let him make this charge and get his committee and he will get it right away and then we will find out whether the insinuations made are correct or not.

Mr. LAKE. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question now, when I will not be interrupting him ? I would have answered questions when I was speaking, if he had chosen to ask them. Does he state that all these orders in council were issued granting licenses without competition ?

Mr. TURRIFF. I said that in the case of every name that I read out to-night, embracing that 6,000,000 acres of land, in every case these orders in council were passed giving those to the applicants without competition in any shape, form or manner.

On motion of Mr. Perley, the debate was adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT — INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES AND MUNICIPAL POLITICS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Railways. I hold in my hand a circular which was distributed, I understand, last fall, reading :

Circular No. 381.

To employees.

The Minister of Railways, having been requested to allow employees of the railway to offer themselves as candidates for and to accept municipal offices, has carefully considered the matter, and his conclusion is, that, generally, it is not in the interest of the railway that this should be allowed and that only in such very exceptional cases as the minister may determine, the public interest can be served without the interest of the railway being prejudicially affected, shall employees be permitted to offer and accept such offices. This decision is based upon the usual policy of railways in such matters, such policy being considered on the whole as best adapted to serve the respective interests most concerned.

D. POTTINGER,
General Manager.

Is the minister aware that two Intercolonial employees, Mr. Blain and Mr. Munro are candidates for the position of town councillor in Stellarton and are those cases exceptional and for what reason does the minister so consider them ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to inform my hon. friend that the hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) is confined to his room by a serious indisposition. I shall take pains that this matter is brought to his attention as soon as he can attend to business.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This debate will go on to-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, January 31, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRODUCTION OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask a question of the ministry. It was stated that all original documents might be left with the clerk of the Public Accounts Committee. A most important file was there this morning. I went up just now to inspect the file and I find it is not there. The clerk says he does not know who has it or where it has gone. I am sorry the Minister of Public Works is not present because the matter is in his department.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will see that that is not a question.

Mr. BENNETT. And I will now ask the question whether any minister of the Crown knows where the files are.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must call the attention of thet House to a habit that is growing up of introducing subjects for discussion and then asking questions, which would obviously annul the rule we introduced in this respect.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this not a question of privilege ? Has not a member the right to rise at any time.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is another matter. If it is put on that score it is entirely different. A question of privilege may be raised at any time ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Public Works the moment he comes in.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—NEWSPAPER REPORTS.

Mr. R. A. PRINGLE (Stormont). I wish to bring up a question of privilege. In the press comments on some statements which I made in the House on Wednesday in connection with a certain resolution to bring down papers in regard to the arrangement that had been made to assist the banks in financing the crops of the western country, some of the papers have seen fit to say :

Then came Mr. Pringle with a denunciation of the banks and the banking system of the country.

Others have seen fit to say that—

Mr. Pringle made a sensational attack upon the banks.

While I am a believer in the press and have found the press usually very fair with members of this House, I do find fault with the press on this occasion accusing me of making an attack upon the banks of this country. It is only necessary for me to say, Sir, that in my remarks I thought I handled the banks with kid gloves and treated them absolutely fairly. I said :

I would not like to say one word which might be construed as in any way disparaging our banks; we all know that we have in this country many banks which are strong and in which the people may have the most implicit confidence.

Surely these remarks of mine were not an attack upon the banks of this country. I said again :

I believe that to-day the banks are in a strong position, and that the people of this country should have implicit confidence in them.

Again I said :

I do not want to be understood as in any way attacking the credit and the standing of our banks. I believe that in Canada we have passed through this last financial crisis in an eminently satisfactory manner, and we have been enabled to do that because we have had at the head of our financial institutions men of ability and prudence and foresight—men who saw a year ago that a storm was coming and began to take in sail.

I repeat that I have not in any way attacked the banks of this country; but because a humble member of this House rises to advocate certain amendments that he thinks would be in the interest of the people of this country, the papers turn around and say he is attacking the banks. I was prepared for this because I was advised some time ago: There is not a particle of use in your bringing up proposed amendments to the Bank Act, you will have the large majority of the House against you, you will have the press of the country against you, you will have the Canadian Bankers' Association against you, and it will be impossible for you; it has been tried before and it cannot be accomplished. Mr. Speaker, just a moment, I am not going to discuss the banking system but I have a right to discuss what I did say. I said that the day had come in Canada when we should have legislation restricting the contractual rate of interest to borrowers. I said that in practically every other country under the sun, there was such a law, that we in Canada had no such law, and consequently our banks which are becoming a great monopoly were in a position to contract for any rate of interest they might see fit. I pointed out on that afternoon that in the different States of the United States——

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that is a discussion on the general question. The hon. gentleman is quite within his right on a question of privilege to point out wherein he was misrepresented by the press in order to rectify that; but to enter upon a general discussion of the topic now would not be a question of privilege but would be bringing up the whole discussion again.

Mr. PRINGLE. I have no desire at the present time to enter upon a general discussion, but I have a desire to place myself absolutely right in so far as I am concerned, and to say that I was not attacking the banks and I was not attacking the financial institutions of this country. I was simply suggesting some proposed amendments, and stating that at a later date when the resolution which stands in my name comes up I would bring the matter fully before the House. I did say, in order to back up my assertion, that H. C. McLeod, the general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia had only a few days ago put on record his most emphatic approval of government inspection. I am not now going to quote Mr. McLeod's statement at the annual meeting of the Bank of Nova Scotia but I do say that he took very strong ground on that point. That is all I have to say at the present time. I have not attacked the banks in any way, but surely a member of this House has a perfect right to get up in this House, if he thinks it wise to do so, and advocate any amendment to the law which he considers necessary in the interest of the people of Canada.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I just wish to say as a question of privilege also, that since my observations in this House on this question have been criticised by several of the newspapers of the country as an improper attack upon the banks of Canada, I had not that object in view nor did I in my judgment make any attack on our banks. In addition to that I want to say that I will always avail myself of what I conceive to be the proper rights and privileges of a member of parliament to criticise banks or any thing else in this House in a legitimate and fair way. That is what I did the other day and it is what I shall do in the future whether it meets with the approval of the press or the banks or not.

PRODUCTION OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS IN COMMONS.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). As the Minister of Public Works is now in his place I call his attention to the fact that the original papers which this morning were produced in the Public Accounts Committee, namely the dredging tenders, are not now there. As I and others wish to see them between now and the next meeting of the committee I would ask the minister if he knows of their whereabouts and if he does will he order their return to the committee at once.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I do not know where the tenders are. I may say that right after it was understood that the documents in my department should be left with the clerk of the committee I gave instructions to the official who had them in charge to return such papers and leave them with the clerk of the committee. If my hon. friend will give me a memorandum of what particular documents there are, I shall have inquiries made and if they are on file in my department I shall have them sent to the clerk of the committee without delay.

Mr. BENNETT. I may tell the minister that the clerk of the committee informs me that he has not handed the papers over to any official of the Public Works Department. What I want is the whole file of the tenders that were before the committee this morning. The clerk of the committee has not handed them to any official of the Public Works Department, and, who has taken them is entirely unknown to him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As to that I have no knowledge at all. This is the first time I have heard the papers are not there.

DISPOSAL OF NORTHWEST TIMBER LIMITS—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine, Montreal). I rise to a question of privilege with regard to a matter which came up in yesterday's debate. While I was absent from the Chamber I understand that the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) said :

I think that possibly if the hon. member for Montreal (St. Antoine) would look back in his history he must possibly be able to throw some light on this Rochester limit.

I would like to ask if the hon. member (Mr. Turriff) may be permitted to say what that allusion refers to. I have spoken already and cannot speak again in the debate, but I may say from my seat in the House that this is an absolute mystery as I have absolutely no knowledge of anything in connection with the Rochester limit.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the government orders are called I want to direct attention again to some returns which I think should have been down. On December the 11th I called for returns with reference to the cold storage in the city of St. John, N. B. These have not been brought down and they are not voluminous. It seems to me they might be here before this time. On the same date I called for returns in connection with the 'All-Red Route,' so called. On January the 13th I called for a number of returns with reference to the Yukon election conspiracy case : The so called Wiley papers, the Pringle, and the Beddoe report. I would like very much to know when they will be brought down ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The papers in the Interior Department are in preparation, but at present there is such a mass of orders for papers in the department that we are not able to get them out faster than we do.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice the Minister of Railways and Canals in his place and I would like to know if he can give any information in reference to the matter I mentioned on the adjournment last night.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Railways and Canals is not in his place.

Mr. SPROULE. I see the hon. Mr. Pugsley there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the question ?

Mr. SPROULE. I refer to notices which were sent out with reference to employees of the Intercolonial running for positions in municipal councils and referred to the fact that two of the employees are candidates now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not undertake to answer a question for the Department of Railways.

Mr. SPROULE. I had forgotten that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) was not the head of the Department of Railways Department ?

SUPPLY—DISPOSAL OF NORTHWEST TIMBER LIMITS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Fielding that the House go into Committee of Supply and the motion of Mr. Lake in amendment thereto.

Mr. GEORGE H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) brought to the attention of this House a question which it seems to me is as important in the public interest as any that has been brought to the attention of the House since I have been a member. Let me at the outset express my surprise that neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of the Interior have seen fit to rise in this House and to make any explanation in regard to the matter. I always understood it was the duty of the ministers of the Crown to give an explanation when any question was raised by an hon. member on a matter affecting the administration of the government, and I have been wondering what the cause of this unusual reticence is. As to the Minister of the Interior it is of course possible that on account of the extraordinary way in which he handled the case of the original papers, it is thought best that he should not come to the assistance of the government in this particular matter. On the other hand it may be that the hon. Minister (Mr. Oliver) knows that this is an exceedingly bad case for him and he wishes to wait and find out whether we know all about it before he makes his reply. As for the Prime Minister, when it seemed to us there was occasion for a committee of inquiry to look into matters that were suspicious the Prime Minister has always asked his supporters to vote it down. I fancy it is possible that he may have had so many of these cases brought to his attention that he begins to think they are of no importance whatever.

Now with reference to timber limits in the Northwest, I wish to say that I congratulate the Minister of the Interior on having followed the advice given him from this side from time to time regarding this matter. I think if he keeps on following our advice a while longer, he will begin to think that he ought to be on the Conservative side of the House. The limit regulations were discussed in this House on the 17th May, 1906. At that time it was stated that an order in council passed on the 1st of July, 1898, was in practically the same terms as those that were in force previous to that time. But on the 14th of April, 1903, this government passed an extraordinary order in council purporting to give to the limit owners the right of renewal as long as any timber was on the land, without the government having any right to increase the dues or to change the regulations. This was the subject matter of a discussion on the 17th of May, 1906. We took exception to that order in council as being wrong and improvident, and I am proud to say that the government saw the matter in the light that we did, and took our advice on that subject, as they have on many other occasions. The result was that on the 23rd of July, 1906, the government passed another order in council changing the regulations in this regard. I quote from this order in council of July 23, 1906 :

And whereas there is some uncertainty as to the effect of this section.

That is referring to the section which we claimed was wrong, and the uncertainty existed because the Conservatives pointed it out to the administration.

Therefore, the Governor General in Council, in order to make the intention clear, is pleased to order that the said section 3 shall be and the same is hereby amended, by adding to the first sentence thereof, immediately after the words 'area licensed' the following:

Provided, however, that such renewal shall be granted subject to any changes which may have been made in the regulations, increasing or altering the rental or dues to be paid, or otherwise varying the terms and conditions under which the licenses are granted.

This last order in council was in force until this month, and I find in the licenses of the current year there is a clause to a similar effect as follows:

So long as the licensee complies with the conditions of this license, and of the regulations, he shall be entitled to a renewal of his license from year to year while merchantable timber remains upon the area licensed, provided, however, that such renewal shall be granted subject to any change which may have been made in the regulations, increasing or altering the rental or dues to be paid, or otherwise varying the terms or conditions under which the licenses are granted.

That was a distinct victory for the party on this side of the House, and I infer that the Minister of the Interior would never have seen fit to alter this obnoxious regulation if the Conservatives had not called his attention to it in the forcible manner they did. On the 14th of March last, further comments were made from this side of the House on the regulations in force at that time, and we urged on the government that they should make further changes in these regulations which would inure to the public benefit. We claimed, amongst other things, that more notice should be given for the sale of any timber limits, as it seemed manifest to us that six weeks notice was really ridiculous. We also claimed that the government should know something about the value of the timber limits they were selling. That seemed to be an ordinary common sense thing for the governent to do. What was the result of this protest of ours last year ? The government, during the last Christmas holidays, put forth new regulations altogether which were contained in the Canada 'Gazette' of January 11, 1908. These new regulations I may say are a great improvement on the old ones. The latter have been changed in several ways that will be for the benefit of the public, and I am glad to see that the government have at last seen reason to consider the public interest in the matter of these timber limits.

In passing I wish to say that even these new regulations do not seem to be perfect, and I wish to call the attention of the minister to one or two items in them which I think might be improved. Paragraph 3 is as follows :

No license shall be disposed of until notice of the sale has been given for a period of not less than sixty days in a newspaper published in the district in which the berth is located, and also in a newspaper having a general circulation in the province.

Now I say advisedly that sixty days notice is not sufficient for a sale of this kind. When the government are selling timber limits, it is necessary to give sufficient notice to enable prospective buyers to go and examine the limits and make up their minds as to their value. Those things are not done in a moment. Men interested in the lumber business have not always proper men at their command, and may not be able to start out immediately to take advantage of a notice of that kind. There can be no reason why the government should not give more notice. Besides, I take exception to this advertisement being published only in one newspaper in the district and one newspaper in general circulation in the province. Those advertisements ought to be put in more than one newspaper in the province, they ought to be put in newspapers in the centres of population in other provinces, so that men who are interested in the lumber business and do not live in the province where the limits are situated, may have a chance of making a bid. Section 5 of these new conditions provides :

The notice of sale shall give the distinguishing number, the description and area of the berth, the upset price, the place, day and hour in which such sale is to be held.

I for one think that having an upset price is not the best way for the government to act. They should have what is called a reserve bid. That is the system in Ontario where it works exceedingly well. I have known many times when limits were sold by the government for very much more than their reserve bid, but if there is an upset price, it is not at all likely that a limit will bring much more.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The reserve bid is not disclosed.

Mr. PERLEY. No. It is usual to put it in an envelope—one reserve bid for each limit. When the auctioneer finds he has as much bid as he can get, he opens the envelope, and if a sufficient amount is not bid, the limit is withdrawn from sale.

Mr. MILLER. Is the upset price announced at the sale during the bidding ?

Mr. PERLEY. This government provides that the notice of sale shall give the distinguishing number, the description, the area of the berth and the upset price placed upon it. I take exception to that. Then the government ought to determine before hand the sections which are covered with timber, so that they would not put up for sale land which is not valuable for timber purposes. They should have all the limits carefully explored and estimated before putting any up for sale. Further it seems to me that they should only sell a limit when there is any real demand for it from the public—that is when the lumber to be cut on it is needed for the settlers. Another thing that the government should do, which is not now provided for, is to sell these limits in definite areas. Let them state beforehand the exact description of the timber limits to be sold, so that they would sell the good areas with the bad, and in no case allow the purchaser the option of selecting from large blocks. The government should advertise these sales in the official gazette as well as in the papers as I have mentioned before, and if they advertise these limits in the way I have designated and give ample time to explore them, they should give at least three or four months before proceeding to a sale of this description. These are all the comments I have to make at the moment on these new orders in council. If the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) keeps on following the advice given him from this side of the House, we may hope that eventually he may be able to put before the country regulations which are really in first-class shape. This old system has been in force for a long time, and it is unfortunate that an effort was not made long ago to put a new system into effect. Unfortunately the new regulations have been postponed until practically all the good timber areas of the Northwest have been alienated into private hands.

In order that the House may not suppose that the examples given by my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) yesterday are the only glaring examples of this kind, I wish to refer to two other special sales of timber limits. North of the Pas Mission there lie three large lakes. These lakes drain into the Saskatchewan river via Cumberland lake. When the Canadian Northern Railway reaches the main Saskatchewan river at the Pas, logs can be floated down from these lakes to the Pas at a small cost and be sawn into lumber for the Saskatchewan market. These lakes are called Goose, Namew and Amiak lakes. Until the railway reaches the Pas, this region is practically inaccessible ; and when these limits were sold, they were more than 100 miles from the nearest railway point. All the timber around these three lakes was put up by this government at the same time, and the notices of tender stated that they were for a license to cut timber on berth No. 1,050, comprising 125 square miles. These tenders were asked for in the dead of the winter. The advertisement was dated 28th January, 1903 and the tenders had to be in the department here on the 7th March 1903, so that only thirty-eight days altogether were allowed by this wise government to examine these limits. This made it practically an impossibility for any one to really examine them. This berth 1,050 fell into the hands of the Saskatchewan Lumber Company. I do not know who comprise that company, but I am informed that they have offered their limits at $3,000 a mile, which would make the price of this one berth $375,000. I am passing no comment on the value of that berth as I have no means of knowing it, but these limits cost by the way of bonus $13,125, or $105 per square mile, and I infer that the company which bought it for $13,125 must have some reason for now asking $375,000 for it.

The other special case to which I wish to refer seems to me the most glaring I have yet heard of. I refer to limits 1,048 and 1,049 known as the Big river limits. We all know that at Prince Albert lumbering operations have been carried on a great many years—in fact ever since the railway first reached there, and that lumber is manufactured at Prince Albert for distribution all over the Northwest. These mills at Prince Albert have been doing good work for the Northwest Territories in supplying them with lumber, and these mills, I understand, naturally protected themselves by buying what available timber there was within a reasonable distance, say fifty miles of Prince Albert. After all the practical needs of the mills at Prince Albert had been supplied this government put on the market an omnibus proposition that to all intents and purposes included all the remaining available timber within the vast unexplored region tributary to Prince Albert and also a lot of timber which does not come down that river. This was done in January, 1903, when no less than 500 square miles were put up to tender in one advertisement. In order to explain this matter more fully I wish to read the advertisement calling for tenders. It is dated January 28, 1903, the same day as the case which I have previously referred to on those three lakes north of the Pas.

Tenders for a license to cut timber on Dominion lands in the district of Saskatchewan, Northwest Territories, first choice.

Sealed tenders, addressed to the Timber and Mines Branch, Department of the Interior, marked on the envelope 'Tenders for timber berth Nos. 1048 and 1049' will be received at this department until noon on Saturday, the 7th day of March, 1903, for a license to cut timber on berth Nos. 1048 and 1049, comprising the following described tracts:—timber berth No. 1048, situate in the district of Saskatchewan, and comprising 250 square miles to be selected in not more than twenty-five blocks within the following described tract.

Then it goes on to give the names of the ranges and townships, a long list of them, which, I believe, covers between 6,000 and 7,000 square miles. The advertisement proceeds :

Second choice,—Timber berth No. 1049, in the district of Saskatchewan, comprising 250 square miles to be selected in not more than twenty-five blocks within the same tract as, and subject to, timber berth No. 1048. The length of each block must not exceed three times the breadth thereof, and the blocks must not be nearer to one another than one-half a mile.

Further on, in order to clinch the matter and make sure that nobody could possibly examine the limits in time, this last paragraph is added :

No tender by telegraph will be entertained.

The plain meaning of this advertisement was that out of this vast area of 6,000 or 7,000 square miles this government put up for tender two limits, one first choice of 250 miles and the other the second choice of another 250 miles. Whoever had this matter in hand knew quite well what he was about. He must have had knowledge of this timber previously to having asked to have it put up for sale. The advertisement was published on the 28th January and the tenders had to be in by the 7th March. To have gone from Ottawa in the dead of winter, to have traversed these 175 townships, because that is what is shown on the map as being comprised in this area, and to have made an estimate which would form the basis for a bid would have been impossible inside of months ; yet this government allowed only 38 days for that purpose. The mere publication of such an advertisement would create the suspicion in any fair man's mind that there was something wrong about this transaction. It could not be otherwise. I am told that it is from 150 to 170 miles from the railway at Prince Albert to the end of the territory which was offered for sale, and I can say without fear of contradiction that I believe that if a man had started from Ottawa on the day the advertisement was published he would have found it impossible to have proceeded from here to the end of that region and to have returned again before the tenders had to be in even if he made no examination of the country. In connection with this matter there was a rumour around Ottawa that other parties here in Ottawa had besought the department to extend the time for tendering for these limits in order that they might have a chance to go and examine them and make an intelligent bid upon them. I cannot vouch for the truth of that, but I would like the hon. Minister of the Interior to tell us whether that is so or not. Naturally, Sir, there was no competition worth mentioning for this great tract of timber. How could there be ? There were two tenders for 1048 and only one for 1049. The result of it was that the first choice went for the magnificent sum of $5,000 and the second choice for $1,000. In other words 500 square miles of the best timber out of that 6,000 square miles of territory, because both had their choice; 500 square miles of selected timber limits were sold by this government for a bonus of $6,000, or $12 per square mile or something less than two cents an acre for a lease which is virtually perpetual so long as there is any timber left on the area selected. This did not happen long years ago. This happened in the year 1903. It is notable that many transactions of this kind happened in the year 1903. Why that was I will leave the House to judge, but this happened when every one knew the vast growth that was going on in the Northwest and that these limits would before long become of great value. This limit, 1048, is to-day held by a company without any actual business, without any sawmills, without an office or a domicile, known as the Big River Lumber Company. Inquiries were made regarding this company of a mercantile agency and I will read an extract from a report dated January 13, 1908 :

It is learned that a firm, using this style, contemplate commencing operations here in the near future, but so far nothing has been done, and no definite information can be obtained, until the organization is completed. The company's principal assets consist of some 250 miles of timber, known as timber berth 1048, situated about fifty miles west of this place. This timber is said to be very valuable, and estimated worth, by some, as high as $500,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What place?

Mr. PERLEY. Prince Albert. This timber limit, which was acquired for $5,000, is stated in this report to be held at $500,000. Again I say I have no means of knowing whether it is worth such a figure, but I presume that the owners must have some reason for valuing it at that price. Under the terms of the sale to these people, they were given the right to select their areas. No definite time was named within which that selection must be made. They were asked by the department several times to make their selection and survey, but they kept putting it off from time to time; and I am informed that it has just been completed. In other words, this company has taken nearly five years to make its selection of these blocks and its survey. It is surely an unreasonable thing for the government to allow such a length of time. It is a manifest advantage to these people to postpone their selection as long as possible. For, until the selection is made, the whole territory is blanketed and nobody else can by any chance get any part of it. Even the people having the second choice cannot exercise that choice until the first choice is made. And if the people holding this second blanket title get five years more, this will make ten years from the time of the original sale.

Mr. SPROULE. And all that time the whole locality is tied up?

Mr. PERLEY. Yes.

Mr. LALOR. Did the same parties get the first choice and second choice, too?

Mr. PERLEY. Not so far as we know. But it is impossible for us to know really who own these limits. They seem to want to keep it a secret from the public. The second choice stands in the name of a lawyer in Winnipeg. Whether he has anything to do with the Big River Lumber Company or not I cannot say. But I would like to ask hon. members whether they believe that concessions of such magnitude could have been granted by this government and by the Department of the Interior unless sinister influences were at work somewhere? It surely is not common sense to suppose that the men in control of this government—and who are credited with a certain amount of good common sense—would have put up these limits for sale on these conditions unless there was some sinister reason for it. So, I ask: Who could have been profiting by this extraordinary concession? And I say that, if there were no other reason, this consideration alone would make it the duty of the government to grant the committee asked for by my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) to probe this matter to the bottom. There is no other means by which it can be done except by committee of this House with power to call witnesses and examine them under oath.

With reference to the methods practised by this government in selling timber limits, I wish to say, in the first place, that they should not have sold the timber of that region until it was actually needed. The people of the Northwest are going to need timber very badly indeed. There will be millions of people living on the prairie, where there is little or no wood, and lumber is going to be for these people an absolute necessity and very hard to obtain.

Mr. BERGERON. To obtain it will be a luxury.

Mr. PERLEY. Yes, with these companies in possession of all the sources of supply, it will be a great luxury. Why should the government have sold these areas before they were needed? It surely was not because of the price obtained, for that price was a bagatelle. This government may be hard up, but $6,000 could hardly help it out of its difficulty. Again, the selling of these limits was not going to provide work for any men. No mills could be put there. I know that there is a clause in the regulation providing for the building of sawmills, but, as a matter of fact, nobody could have put up a mill in that section and sawn lumber and made it pay. That would be impossible. Therefore, this government did not sell the country for the purpose of providing work for the people of the Northwest. Nor had this sale for its object the providing of lumber for the people of the Northwest; for this timber was not available at the time and the mills at Prince Albert had all the timber supply they needed for years to come. I fail to see any possible reason why these limits should have been sold at that time. I have waited to hear the Minister of the Interior give us some valid reason. And, as none has been given us, I say there must have been something underhand about this matter or the timber would not have been sold in this way.

Mr. DYMENT. Why was the timber of Georgian bay sold thirty-five years ago—practically the whole of it?

Mr. PERLEY. Well, my hon. friend (Mr. Dyment) knows that we gain by experience. I am coming to that——

Mr. SPROULE. It was the Reform government under Sir Oliver Mowat that sold it.

Mr. DYMENT. Oh, no; it was before Mowat.

Mr. NORTHRUP. They sold it because they needed the money.

Mr. PERLEY. I propose to say a few words with regard to the general question of our custom of selling timber limits, before I sit down. I wish to take exception to the method of selling berths to be selected afterwards. That privilege is of great value to the purchaser, but it is not so clear why it should be given by the government. We all know that, in the Northwest, the timber grows in clumps, chiefly along the banks of rivers, creeks and lakes. These people were given the privilege of selecting 250 miles out of this vast region, and were allowed five years in which to do it. That condition enabled the purchaser to take his time, to carefully survey the region and to pick out all the good timber there was. Now, when timber limits are sold in Ontario or Quebec, they are of fixed areas and the purchaser must take the lean timber with the good. Another feature of these sales to which I would object is the selling of such large blocks in one limit. Why should they put up 500 miles in one advertisement, 250 miles first choice and 250 miles second. Even if there were time to get proper bids for the sale, there would be very few people who could undertake the expense and trouble to make the examination which would be absolutely necessary before buying such a vast area. In other words, the selling of such large limits precludes the small operator and the poor man from bidding on them. Then there is the advertisement made of these limit sales. Six weeks was as a rule the amount of notice given. The sale was practically not advertised at all. Let me read the statement of the Minister of the Interior with reference with the manner of dealing with these limits, to be found in 'Hansard,' 1906, at page 3577.

Mr. OLIVER. The person who desires to acquire a timber berth notifies the department and describes it. There is no sale or disposition of timber berths except by competition. The application is considered in the department, and if it does not conflict with some other berth and some other interests and is approved of, notice is given by advertisement in what is supposed to be the nearest newspaper, and printed slips containing the same information as in the advertisement are distributed as widely as may be to persons interested in tendering for timber limits. The advertisement runs on an average, I think, about six weeks before the tenders are opened.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it not sixty days?

Mr. OLIVER. It may run for sixty days and it may be as low as six weeks, but I think it is never less than six weeks. The advertisement announces that the tenders will be opened at noon of a certain day at the department here, and the commissioner of Dominion lands opens the tenders.

Mr. INGRAM. Alone?

Mr. OLIVER. He may be alone or he may be in company, but he is the official who opens the tenders, and the person offering the highest bonus is awarded the limit.

That statement alone is sufficient ground for us to demand an inquiry regarding these transactions.

Mr. LALOR. Who was the commissioner of Dominion lands at that time?

Mr. PERLEY. I believe the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). I consider that it is impossible to explain satisfactorily to any reasonable person why limits should have been sold on the basis set forth there by the Minister of the Interior. No one can say that six weeks is sufficient notice to be given of the sale of these limits. They are advertised in the newspaper nearest to the limit (one insertion only) and in small printed slips which are distributed as widely as may be to persons interested. Who is to know who the persons are? Are these slips sent only to those interested in this particular sale? Sent to those whom the Minister of the Interior would like to see get these limits? Why does he not give public advertisement in the 'Canada Gazette,' why not in all the great newspapers of the country? Were they in such a hurry for a few thousand dollars that they could not wait a reasonable time to let people look at these limits? The result of this system was that any person desirous of obtaining a timber limit in the Northwest could go beforehand and examine it, could see whether he would like to have it, could make a thorough examination of it and then could get the department to put it up for sale and he could have it done in such a way that there could practically be no competition because no one else was allowed time to examine the country. Some members of this House at least know something of the difficulties in connection with the examination of timber limits before purchase. It is not like examining a building, the examination of timber limits requires great preparation. We do not always have men available who have the special knowledge necessary to examine and report on timber limits. Such men are not always at hand and they are usually hard men to get. Then there are arrangements to be made with regard to supplies, provisions, help, &c., for such an examination. More than that most people have to make financial arrangements before they can think of buying a timber limit and carrying on a great business. Our custom in Ontario and Quebec has been to give ample notice of the sale of these limits to enable every one interested to examine them carefully.

Further this government had no right to sell these timber limits without knowing something of their value and having a reserve price on them. Is that the way we act in our ordinary everyday business? Here we have 500 miles of timber limits disposed of in one sale, the government do not know their value or what timber is on them, in fact they apparently do not want to know, they were prepared to let them go for a song to the people who had taken advantage of this extraordinary system to get possession of them. I notice that an order in council of February 28, 1898, provided a minimum bonus of $250 a mile for timber limits in the Yukon. Why have a minimum bonus of $250 in the Yukon and allow these great timber limits to be sold for $12 a mile when they are nearer settlement and in a place where timber must be more valuable?

I now come to what seems to be the most indefensible and suspicious circumstance of all. Tenders for these limits, according to the statement of the Minister of the Interior, were not opened in the presence of interested parties but were placed entirely in the hands of one person; I have just read the minister's statement to that effect. Yesterday the commissioner of Dominion lands of that day (Mr. Turriff) asserted that nothing wrong was done in connection with these transactions. If that is so it seems evident that the commissioner of Dominion lands was most unwise to place himself in that awkward and ambiguous position; most unwise to allow himself to open the tenders alone, thereby giving people cause for suspicion. This gentleman, now the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), has been going up and down with regard to the transactions of this government in the Northwest, and I find that he was reported in the Toronto 'Globe' of December 21, 1907, as saying that the Liberals had disposed of the Northwest limits by open competition.

Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

Mr. PERLEY. I call the attention of the government to these words 'open competition.' Public competition or open competition has a good sound, an honest sound, but that expression cannot be applied to these limit sales with a hole in the corner advertisement and such absolutely short notices that no one could possibly examine them.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) said yesterday, in answer to a question of mine, that there was time to examine these limits. Surely he did not really mean that. I say again that it would be well nigh impossible for any person to have started from here on the day the advertisement was published for limit 1048 and to have gone to the other end of that territory and got back here again by the day when tenders had to be put in. He certainly could not have examined any of the territory except what he actually passed through and a good deal of it must have been passed by night or he never could get back in time. Such conditions are farcical, and it is an abuse of the English language to describe this method as open competition.

Yesterday I listened attentively to what the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) said in reply to my hon. friend from St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames), and I cannot say that I was surprised when he gave no justification whatever for the transactions in question. He did not attempt to justify the short notice given of the sale of these vast territories. He did not attempt to justify the improvident terms on which they were sold, and he did not attempt to justify the opening of the tenders by any one man. What then did he say ? He used the old 'tu quoque' argument we have heard so often and which really has nothing to do with the matter. Surely all of us should gain something by experience, even the Liberals in charge of this government.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) referred to the election in Stanstead and said that the Liberals won that election. But what has that to do with this case ?

Mr. BERGERON. How much did it cost them ? How many barrels of whisky ?

Mr. PERLEY. I do not know. The hon. gentleman said that some one had got into trouble once by making an estimate of the timber on a limit. But we are not arguing that the government should make an estimate of these limits for intending purchasers. The government certainly should not do so, and that has never been done to my knowledge. Then he twitted my hon. friend from St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames) with regard to the number of million feet on a mile in that country. What has that to do with the question? It does not matter whether the best mile has 5,000,000 or 2,000,000 feet. The transaction is just as bad in the one case as in the other. The hon. member asserted that only a small percentage would be timber land. Surely he did not mean that ? You can take 250 miles of timber limits in small blocks out of 6,000 miles and get practically all good timber.

The hon. gentleman referred also to the prospectus values given by my hon. friend from St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames). I have also quoted some to-day. The amounts these people are asking for their holdings simply show that they consider their property worth a lot of money. It matters not whether they are asking more than it is worth or not. That has nothing to do with the argument.

The hon. gentleman read a long list of people who applied for timber limits in the year 1883. This list we have seen and heard of many times before, but most of the people who applied for limits at that time never took them up as the conditions were too onerous. They could not comply with the conditions for sawmills, and so on. My name was mentioned a couple of years ago in that connection. True it is that in the days of my youth I did apply for a timber limit in the Northwest intending to manufacture lumber there, but I soon found it was of no value at that time and I relinquished it. To show that the Conservative government did not actually alienate any great portion of the timber limits, let me quote an answer which I received on January 13 last from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) in reply to a question I put him. I asked :

1. How many timber licenses are in force now in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta?

He answered 367. Then I asked :

How many of the current licenses are renewals of licenses issued originally prior to July, 1896 ?

He answered 56.

Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

Mr. PERLEY. In other words, of the licenses in force to-day only 56 were granted by the Conservatives and 311 have been granted by this government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PERLEY. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) would have done better not to have spoken at all last night. When he did get up to speak, he should have attempted to justify in some way the transactions criticised in this motion ; and I would say further that, under the circumstances, the hon. gentleman himself ought to be the first man to get up and vote for the committee which my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) asked for.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PERLEY. I wish for a few moments to compare the policy of this government during the last few years with the policy in force in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I hold in my hand an advertisement for an auction sale of timber berths by the Department of Crown Lands, dated Toronto, August 1, 1903, when the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite were still in office in Ontario. Here are some of the conditions of sale :—

Each berth to be adjudged to the person bidding the highest amount of bonus therefor per square mile.

The berths sold to be subject to the Crown Timber Regulations, except in so far as the said regulations may be inconsistent with any conditions herein specified, and to such acts or orders in council as now exist, or may hereafter be passed affecting timber or territory under timber license from the Crown.

The department reserves the right to one bid on each berth.

No reduction of the area sold to be allowed for water.

This advertisement is dated 1st August, 1903, and the auction sale was to be held at 1 o'clock p.m. on Wednesday, the 9th December. That is to say, four months' notice was given of this sale. And not only that, but the notice was published in many newspapers throughout the province, in order to give everybody a chance to examine the limits. And where were these limits that were thus advertised for sale? Were they in inaccessible places? No. These limits were in Nipissing, Algoma and Rainy River districts. I venture to say that there was not one of them that a man could not reach from here in two or three days. Still the government adopted the wise policy of giving proper notice, because in this way they made sure of obtaining for the people of Ontario the actual value of the property disposed of. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that there is a reserve bid in these cases. Each bid is put in a sealed envelope which bears the number of the limit. When the auctioneer has received all the bids he can get on a particular limit he opens the envelope, and if the reserve bid is found to be greater than the highest bid publicly given the limit is withdrawn. Moreover, there is no reduction for water. But this government, in its sales of timber limits, allows selection to be made. The purchaser can take the timber along the streams and has neither water nor untimbered land to pay for—he takes the best only. Another point is that in these Ontario sales the limits were put up in small blocks. The old system in Ontario was to sell in blocks of fifty miles—sometimes twenty-five miles. A good deal of complaint was made that only wealthy men could bid on areas of that size, and therefore the government decided to sell in small blocks. In this advertisement of Ontario sales to which I have referred, eighty-eight parcels are covered. They run in size from three miles to fifty miles ; and in the whole eighty-eight there are only six that are over eleven square miles in size. Of course, this is mostly a pine country, and the prices to be obtained are beyond all comparison greater than would naturally be obtained for the limits now in question. Still, I may say that one six-mile limit not far from the Sault was lately sold by the government of Ontario for $10.52 per thousand feet board measure. There were also stumpage dues of $2 per thousand feet, making a revenue of $12.52 per thousand feet for the timber on that berth.

An argument that has already been used by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) refers to the limits disposed of by the Conservatives and in that connection I may say that the history of the lumber trade all over Canada is rather interesting. Years ago limits in the very neighbourhood of the city of Ottawa were of almost no value. At one time one could obtain a timber license by merely applying for it—there was nothing to be paid.

Mr. FOSTER. How long ago was that?

Mr. PERLEY. Fifty odd years ago. There was so much timber in this part of Canada that it was thought to be inexhaustible ; and, naturally, the effort of the government of that time was to encourage in every way the manufacture of lumber, in order to give work to the people. One way they took of doing this was to give away timber licenses without charge. There was no money in the business then, and a person wishing to carry it on could not afford to pay anything for the license. This went on until the timber began to be valuable. But, I am glad to say, the people governing these provinces learned by experience. They ceased to issue licenses free. Events ran about the same course in the Georgian bay country, to which my hon. friend from East Algoma (Mr. Dyment) referred a few moments ago—timber limits there were sold for small sums in order to encourage work and settlement in that part of Ontario and in the Northwest the Conservative government adopted the same course twenty five years ago. But were these limits 1048-9-50 sold years ago? No, Sir, they were sold in 1903, at a time when everybody who knew anything knew that there was going to be an immense growth of population in the Northwest. This government apparently either did not know this or they ignored it on purpose. How they could have done so I cannot imagine. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway charter was put through, I think, in 1903, so that the government knew that they were going to have a line of railway running through the northern part of the Northwest. They were spending vast sums to bring immigrants into this country, and were constantly boasting about the number who were coming in. Therefore, they knew—or ought to have known—that this timber would soon become of much greater value, and that if they kept it the people of this country, whose heritage it was, would reap the benefit of that increase of value, and not a few speculators who chose to take advantage of these absurd regulations. I ask: Was the Prime Minister the last man to know that the Northwest was advancing by leaps and bounds, and that the value of this property was sure to grow greater and greater? Or was this another case like that of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, where the officials or a few inside men found out that the property was of great value before the government did, so that the government were induced to alienate these valuable limits just as they were becoming valuable? I wonder what comment future generations will make on the way in which the people of this time alienated the country's resources?

Now, Mr. Speaker, is there any remedy for this condition of affairs? The best remedy, of course, would be for the people of this country to rise in their might and put out men who would dispose of the public property on such terms. And I venture to say that the people of the Northwest, when they lealize what was done, will feel that way about it. But is there any remedy that can be applied now? In the first place, I would say that the immediate selection of all timber berths should be insisted upon. A reasonable time should be given the purchasers to make their selections, and, if those selections are not made, the sales should be cancelled. The government has that power and they would be doing no harm to any one, because the people who bought these limits undertook to have them surveyed.

Then there is another remedy which I think ought to be applied. I refer to the sawmill clause, or the lumber cutting clause. I know it has not been the habit to enforce this clause, but these cases to which I have referred, and many others, of the alienation of timber limits in inaccessible sections, are so flagrant that I think this government would be justified in enforcing that cutting clause, clause 12. It is as follows:

> The licensee shall have in operation within one year from the date when he is notified by the proper officer of the Department of the Interior that the Minister of the Interior regards such a step necessary or expedient in the public interest, and keep in operation, for at least six months of each year of his holding, a sawmill in connection with the berth herein described, capable of cutting in twenty-four hours a thousand feet, board measure, for every two and a half square miles of the area licensed.

If that clause were enforced, many of these timber licensees in inaccessible regions would have to give them up, because it would be impossible for them to comply with that condition for the reason that if they had sufficient means to put a sawmill into operation they would have no customers for their lumber. Therefore, I would advocate a reconsideration of the most flagrant of these timber licenses and the enforcement of this clause. I may say that the enforcement of that clause would work no hardship to the real lumber manufacturers, because they would be able to comply with it.

Great harm has been done under these regulations which have just been cancelled. Repentance has come to the government on account of the advice given to them from this side of the House, although it has come very late in the day. I say that an investigation into the transactions of the last ten years with regard to these extraordinary regulations is imperative, as proposed by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake).

In a few words I wish to recapitulate the reasons why this House should support the amendment of my hon. friend. No private owner would have acted in regard to his own property as this government has acted during the last few years, that is if he wished to get what his timber was worth. I think it admits of no contradiction that the minister who allowed these transactions to go through in 1903 would not have acted in that way if he had been dealing with his private property. Now this government is trustee for the people of Canada, and I have always been taught that trustees should be more careful of the property which they are handling for others than they would be if it were their own.

But this government has been clearly improvident in their method of handling the public property in this regard. I claim that the practice of this government in the last ten years shows either gross incompetence or a deliberate design to allow private individuals to grow rich out of the public domain. It seems to me that the government must take their choice of one of these two conclusions. In either case, an investigation is needed into these transactions. I ask in what other way they can explain their course in selling for a bagatelle these limits which were not needed by the public at the time; in selling large areas in one license and allowing a selection of 500 miles out of a vast territory of 6,000; giving this ridiculously short notice in their advertisement of sale, and allowing the tenders to be opened by one man alone. All these things are suspicious. Moreover, within the last few days we have had something more. After discussing the matter for three or four days we obtained from the government the original papers in connection with one of these timber limits. We had a long and hard struggle, but we managed to get what we wanted, and when we saw these papers we no longer wondered that the Minister of the Interior had attempted to be arbitrary in the matter. These papers on their face certainly point to something crooked in the department in connection with timber limits. I do not say they are proof in themselves, but they certainly point to crookedness, and I believe the officials of the department should have a chance of clearing their good name in connection with this matter. The Prime Minister of this country is the official guardian of the public interest, and I submit that on account of the facts which we have given he is bound to grant the committee demanded by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle. I shall, therefore, take great pleasure in supporting the amendment.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE (Strathcona). The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) could have selected no subject the discussion of which would show more clearly how superior have been the methods of this government in dealing with timber lands in the Northwest over those that were followed by the Conservative government. I think our hon. friends opposite have been unfortunate in their selection of a subject, because a discussion will naturally turn upon the methods of administration which were pursued by the previous government. In discussing this subject we can only base it upon the statistics which we have in hand, not upon insinuations or suspicions, not upon hypothetical cases, but upon the actual documents that remain on file. The whole complaint of the hon. member who moved this amendment was that there was no competition for these timber lands, and especially that they were put up prematurely.

If the excuse be valid, Sir, if it be any argument, with how much more force would the same argument be applied to the late administration when the very same territories that they are complaining of having been pilfered away by this government were pilfered to a much greater extent by the late administration? We read that these limits have become valuable. Well if they have become valuable they have become valuable by the lapse of time; they have become valuable up to a certain extent and what is the suspicion or the argument that the hon. gentleman would put forward? His whole speech is eptomized practically in the reasons which he gave for moving this motion. Three of these refer to the increased value of these limits which is an argument decidedly in favour of the present government. The fourth one refers to the lack of competition, the eighth one refers to the difficulty in securing original documents, of which we will say something later and particularly, to what these documents contained when they were brought down, and the ninth refers to the fact that when the original tenders are examined in many instances the bidding is close, that the third tender is almost the same, as the second. I say that any man who thinks that that is a valid reason for casting suspicion upon these transactions does not know what he is talking about. If two companies send competent cruisers over the ground and both of these cruisers do their business properly is it not a natural inference that the bidding will be close? It simply goes to show that their argument as to the lack of competition is invalid. You can make any action in this world suspicious if you choose. You can cast suspicion upon anything in private or public life or elsewhere and you can draw from it any inference you choose. Search through the speeches of the hon. gentlemen who spoke on the debate and you find no manly utterance to the effect that such and such is so, but you find that a competent, or a practical man told me that such and such was so—inference after inference, innuendo after innuendo, but where is the bold, bald statement that anything actually was wrong? They say that my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) did not stand up and defend himself. He did a more manly thing; he said: I take all these statements and suspicions, I put them in this category, I say to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house that if these suspicions are valid say so, make these suspicions charges and I will be prepared to say that you will have your committee and I will be able to assist you to investigate such charges in every possible way. Now, as regards the remarks of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, (Mr. Ames) I would like to make a few comments. He stated that certain timber limits were sold, and he gave certain fanciful estimates of the amount of timber on them. It would have been actual information to this House, Sir, had he told us the source of his information. He supposes—supposition is at the foundation of the whole complaint—that there are 5,000,000 feet per square mile of timber on these limits. But his supposition is far away from what actual experience in that country would teach one. He produces photographs to show that there is timber on these areas. It may be confined necessarily to a small area. It is evident to everybody that the camera can only take in a small area and if in a few isolated spots by the riverside there is good timber is it any proof whatever that the whole of an area of 100 miles is a dense mass of timber? Let me recite an instance that came to my own knowledge. A certain lumberman in my district applied by tender in the regular way to secure a timber berth. He paid, if my memory serves me, $3,100 for this berth. The area, if I remember correctly, was six miles. He was supposed to have sent a man over to cruise this limit. The man followed the river valleys and the coolies and he gave an estimate on which this lumberman submitted his tender. But after he had properly traversed the whole limit he came to Ottawa here and told the government that the limit for which he had paid $3,100 was not worth $3.10.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How long did the examination take?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I am unable to answer the hon. gentleman on that particular. I am stating that the cruise was made in the ordinary way. He followed what he thought was the proper method of cruising and then he came back and asked the government if they would not refund the $3,100 which he had paid for the limit and which the government very properly refused to do. There is an instance of where one could have taken a camera and taken photographs along the rivers which would show, I venture to say, as good timber as the hon. gentleman will show in the Cedar lake district and yet for operating purposes a practical lumberman told us that he would not give $3.10 for the limit. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) made use of the argument throughout his whole speech that there was no competition. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, also made the statement that there was no proper competition for these limits. He practically endorses the argument of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in that particular and yet on a question being asked of him he makes this admission which will be found at page 2359 of 'Hansard':

I see that it will be necessary for me to explain that Mr. Fraser and the McDonalds have no connection whatever and are usually active competitors.

There was no competition in these timber limits and yet as he looks over the file he finds that there are two lumber companies that are invariably active competitors. There is an instance in which an hon gentleman takes back his own statement.

As regards the original documents, as I remember the story which was brought forward by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, it was that for berth 1108 there were three tenders. Two of these tenders were in the same handwriting. The first was for $1,000, the second, by a man named Currie, was for $6,400 and the final tender was for $7,000. The final tender and the first tender were in the same handwriting. The figures in the third tender were said to have been made in different ink and it was a different style of figure as far as he was able to judge. From that they deduced a wonderful scandal and they had it published in the newspapers before they waited to bring it up in the House. The fact that two of the tenders were in the same handwriting was very astonishing to them. But is there anything in the statute, is there anything in the regulations that will prevent a man putting in half a dozen tenders so long as he is overbidding himself?——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Would there be anything to prevent a man from putting in two tenders? It is said that this tender is put in in a different name.

An hon. MEMBER. The same date.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The same date. Is there anything to prevent a gentleman who is an attorney by profession from putting in a tender for himself and putting in another for his client?

Mr. LENNOX. A good deal I should think if he wants to be honest.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman mean to state that it is not objectionable for the same person to put in two tenders?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Not when he is a solicitor.

Mr. HAGGART. I think you went further than that; I think you said there was no objection to a party putting in two or three tenders one over bidding the other.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes he did.

Mr. HAGGART. That is new morals.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. If an attorney is acting as an advocate for five others he can put in half a dozen tenders——

Mr. HAGGART. That is not what you said.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. That is what I meant to say and if I did not express myself clearly I don't think the hon. gentleman has any right to hold me to a misinterpretation of my meaning. Taking this particular case and dealing with what is called by the other side a suspicious circumstance, I say that if a man were acting as an advocate and tendering for his client and a line of credit had been wired him in a bank, he would make out his tender before he went to the bank and in the bank he would fill in the tender and it would necessarily be in different ink and in somewhat different writting.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think I am twisting the argument, but I can assure them that I do not twist the spirit of fairness as they distort these facts into suspicion.

An hon. MEMBER. That is a joke.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. It may appear to be a joke to some gentlemen on the other side because they have thought about this thing with such suspicion in their minds that all conception of fair play has departed from them. Another point in regard to this matter is that hon. gentlemen opposite have laid great stress upon the bonus paid as being the whole price for the limit. Well, the bonus is not the whole price paid for the limit. There is no limit bought, that there is not an annual rental of $5 per square mile as well as a charge of 50 cents per thousand at the time the limit is cut. Now, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) be an authority on the question, that 50 cents per thousand will yield $2,500 per square mile to the government. That is the real price that is paid for the limit; that is what the person who secures the limit and operates it must necessarily pay the government if the figures quoted by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) are correct. The hon. gentleman from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) wanted to know why the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) had not answered the arguments from the other side, but I should think the hon. member (Mr. Perley) would at least permit the Minister of the Interior to speak on this or any other question when he deems it his own sweet will to do so. One objection raised by the hon. member for Argenteuil was that all tenders by telegraph were cut off. Well, there is good reason for that. The regulations read that all tenders must be accompanied by a certified cheque and how could you send a certified cheque by telegraph? It must naturally follow that a tender must be put in and sealed in the regular way or else there would be a disclosure of the amount stated in the tender. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Perley) speaking of tender 1049 stated that the berth was given away for $100, and I understood him to say there were 500 square miles in the limit. Now, if there were 500 square miles in this limit and each square mile yielded 5,000,000 feet of timber which is the estimate of the hon. member (Mr. Ames) the dues on that lumber would yield to the government $1,250,000, and that would be a fairly good price, and every year such a limit was held the rental would be $2,500. I want to impress the fact upon the House that although gentlemen on the other side have tried to emphasize that the bonus is all that is paid for a limit, as a matter of fact the bonus is an unimportant part of the price paid for the alienation of the timber of this country.

Mr. HAGGART. Was not the same amount per 1,000 feet paid under the Conservative government?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman is correct. The same amount was paid under the old regulations as regards dues, but not until 1889. Previous to that time it was 5 per cent. Now, since the hon. gentleman has suggested that, let us run over the history of these timber regulations. Until 1881 we had no timber regulations to follow, and previous to that year the government gave away the timber limits by order in council whether a bonus was charged or not.

Mr. BERGERON. That was not the law in 1872.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Up to 1881 the timber limits were given away by order in council.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a mistake. There was a law passed by parliament in 1872 under which that could not be done, but in 1874 when the Mackenzie government came into power that law was repealed and limits could be given by order in council. But when the Conservative government came into power they changed that and went back to the old system.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. How did you get the 50 square miles?

Mr. BERGERON. I will explain that to you later. You can have a share in them for nothing if you want it.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I am not aware of the matter to which my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is referring.

Mr. BERGERON. I can show the statute to my hon. friend.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. My information is that in 1881 the first regulations were made and these regulations provided for a rental of $5 per square mile with 5 per cent royalty. There was apparently no change in that system under the Conservative government until the year 1889, when a competitive system was inaugurated and this continued practically until the year 1898 when the present government was in power. In that year practically the only difference that was made was in the dues charged on the timber. In 1898 a regulation was passed which has given rise to a good deal of criticism regarding the alienation of berths adjoining operating berths.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member says that previous to 1889 there was no competitive system. Is it not a fact that where two or more applied for a limit in the same territory it was given to the party offering the highest tender for it ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman is correct, where competition occurred. They talk about a hole and corner matter, but in this it was absolutely secret, between the government and the people seeking the limit. In 1889 two changes were made in the regulations. One provided for competition throughout the railway belt and the other for the granting of licenses that might be made transferrable. In 1892 it was provided that a mill had to be erected on the timber limit after one year's notice. In 1895 certain small changes were made in the regulations governing the railway belt, but they were not material. In 1896 a return was made to the old rate of 5 per cent of the dues on manufactured lumber in British Columbia, the Northwest Territories and Manitoba, with a refund of 40 cents per thousand feet on exports. In 1898 it was provided that by order in council operators on berths might be permitted to take up adjoining berths by paying double dues and double rents.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says there was no provision in the license or lease for the erection of a mill before 1889.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. There was a provision before 1889, but the regulations were ignored, practically speaking, as I understand it.

In 1899 the only change made was the granting of free timber to homesteaders in the railway belt. In 1901 the licensee was required to pay one half the cost of fireguarding. This is another item of expense to the man purchasing a timber limit, for as is well known the greatest enemy to our timber is fire. Fire guarding is one of the enormous items of cost in the effort to preserve our timber.

There has been no material change in the regulations made from 1898 until the last year. On December 17, 1907, the regulations have been changed to practically this : All timber areas put up for sale are first inspected by the government cruiser, and surveyed by the government surveyor. An upset price is then placed on them and this price is kept secret by the government. The auction takes place at the land office nearest to the berth. The governmnet assume the right to reserve any timber from sale but when a limit is put up at auction if the price bid does not exceed the upset price the area is not sold. This is exactly on a par with the way in which the Dominion school lands are sold to-day.

Mr. AMES. When will the regulations of which the hon. gentleman speaks come into force ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I am not administering the department, but if the hon. member asks the date of the regulations I can give it; December 19, 1907.

Mr. AMES. Are they in force at the present time ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I think that no timber is being alienated at the present time; it is all held in reserve for cruising purposes.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have been fighting here for the last two days practically for a principle that has been granted. None of them have put forward so good a proposition as the Minister of the Interior has put in his regulations, and comparing provincial regulations with Dominion regulations, there is no province in Canada to-day that safeguards its timber as the present regulations will safeguard the timber of our Dominion. We have in force to-day the best regulations to preserve our public domain that can be found anywhere, in so far as I am acquainted with the facts. Hon. gentlemen have seen fit to attack the administration of this government in this particular. Let me refer to the manner in which timber areas were preserved by our friends. They tell us that it is no criterion to refer back to what happened 26 or 27 years ago, that that is not a fair comparison, and in the next breath say that to put up timber limits 25 years later is a mistake. But the same timber limits were put up by our predecessors 25 years before and if it is bad policy for this government it was exceedingly bad policy for the other. During the first Liberal administration the government received for public lands alienated an average bonus of $23 per square mile. The Conservative government alienated the territory under their care at an average price per square mile of $4.13.

Mr. FOSTER. On what basis is that calculated ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. On the number of square miles alienated by order in council and the amount of money received in bonus.

Mr. FOSTER. Not the number of square miles they were actually given licenses for ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman must admit this fact, that the government had gone as far as it could on its side and if the receiver did not consider it worth while certainly the administration is as much to blame as if the recipient had held on to it. We are not discussing what actually took place but the way in which our Conservative friends preserved our rights. The Liberal administration previous to the Conservative administration alienated land at $23 per square mile, while the Conservative administration alienated the timber limits at the rate of $4,13 per square mile. The present administration has alienated timber at the rate of $81.92 per square mile. This is a comparative statement. You say it is unfair to compare the Conservative administration with the present administration. It stands at a much greater disadvantage when compared with the previous administration.

Mr. HAGGART. Do you base the amount per square mile upon the area that was alienated or given by the Conservative government or upon the area that was retained by the parties to whom it was given. And how much was charged from 1878 until 1896 under the Conservative government ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. $4.13.

Mr. HAGGART. Where does the hon. gentleman get his figures or his authority for that statement?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman can question these figures if he likes, but if he will look up the records he will find that they are correct.

Mr. HAGGART. I have seen no record to that effect.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I can well understand that the hon. gentleman does not like these figures and does not like the way these limits are administrated to-day.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to have the correct figures.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I notice that the hon. gentleman himself received certain timber limits in 1882 and 1883 for which he did not pay one cent.

Mr. HAGGART. I shall take an opportunity of correcting that misstatement.

An hon. MEMBER. Better do it now.

Mr. HAGGART. I will do it immediately after the hon. gentleman is through.

Mr. CONMEE. Two of the hon. gentleman's partners got a lot more.

Mr. W. McINTYRE.

Mr. HAGGART. Who is making this speech?

Mr. CONMEE. They got 150,000 square miles. The hon. gentleman is giving us a little information; let me give him some, too. And there are others over there.

Mr. WARD. What about the dredging? Would the hon. gentleman tell me one thing while he is on that point? What ground rent was charged in the time he speaks of?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I have no record of that.

Mr. LALOR. Might I put the hon. gentleman a question? Does he base the amount per mile upon the quantity that was alienated by the Conservative government or the amount retained by the party to whom it was given?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I have already explained my point in that particular, but probably the hon. gentleman would like to have it explained again. I am contrasting the two administrations, and I ask if it was any fault of the Conservative administration if all these lands which they gave away by order in council were not retained.

Mr. LALOR. That is not an answer to the question I put. The government received a certain amount of money for timber limits——

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman will have to content himself with the answer given.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. When speaking about the alienation of certain properties at that time, I notice that the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) made the statement that he himself had obtained a certain portion by order in council without competition, and I find that in 1882 he received 50 square miles personally. In addition I find that the firm of Perley & Pattee received also 50 square miles. There is just a little interesting circumstance in this connection that I wish to bring to the attention of the House. The hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) told us many touching stories, among others a story about certain limits in the neighbourhood of Cedar lake. I would like to take up the time of the House to read that little description as given by the hon. gentleman. It will be found on page 2351 of yesterday's 'Hansard':

> I propose only to deal with the reserve supply of Winnipeg, namely, limits 1107, 1108 and 1171, just one small section, just 200 square miles of the 2,400 square miles of which I have been speaking.

Now note the description :

> Just north of Lake Winnipegosis there lies a lake called Cedar lake. Through this lake runs the Saskatchewan river, and where the Saskatchewan connects with Lake Winnipeg, there is a magnificent water-power which can be used for milling purposes. This lake is about the size of Lake Simcoe, and the location for a sawmill is at the outlet. On the 20th of September, 1903, Messrs. Perkins, Fraser & Gisbon, a firm which includes our friend A. W. Fraser, on behalf of a client, name undisclosed, applied for sixty square miles, to be selected on Cedar lake, around the lake, and on the islands in the lake.

Now, I find that on the 16th of November, 1882, Mr. G. H. Perley applied for 50 square miles, and I have here the order in council giving a description of these 50 square miles. That description is as follows :

Commencing at the discharge of the North Saskatchewan river into Cedar lake, thence to extend up the river to a point on it eight and one-third miles in direct distance from the point of beginning; the western boundary to be at right angles to the general bearing of the river within said distance; the eastern boundary to be the shore of Cedar lake; the southern boundary to be parallel to the general course of the river, and back therefrom a sufficient distance to make the required area.

Practically the hon. gentleman from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) received the same territory as is described by the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal, as having been given to Mr. Fraser, and the hon member for Argenteuil paid absolutely nothing for it.

Mr. WARD. He never got it.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. We are now told by these hon. gentlemen that these limits, thus described, had no value in early days. To-day, however, the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames), speaking of this limit, says :

The government parted with it for $500. It has cost Mr. Fraser $450 a year ground rent, a small sum for fire guarding, and a couple of $2,000 for surveys—and it is on the market for $500,000.

Thus they tell us that these territories were valueless when they gave them away, and then they come back and try to make us believe that they are of enormous value to-day. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) paid for this limit one year's rent on the 17th December, 1883, $250, and, to use his own words, he concluded it was valueless. But we have the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) coming here to-day and citing a prospectus and trying to convince us that this timber is worth a very great sum of money.

Mr. AMES. Was there any railway in 1883 anywhere within 150 miles of that limit?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. There was no railway close to it at that time, but I would ask the hon. gentleman to remark this fact, namely, that it was then just as close to Lake Winnipeg and the waterways as it is to-day. Let him remark this also, that the timber limits given away were some 4,600 square miles in 1882 and some 11,000 square miles in 1883. And why? They were given away because the Canadian Pacific Railway would make timber limits valuable in that country. And they tell us that it has no value—that it was of no use. But to-day they tell us that the same timber limits, with practically no better market facilities, are worth half a million.

The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) are to be congratulated upon having brought out the comparison of the administration of the two governments, that is, they are to congratulated by this side of the House, for the comparison is all in our favour. The hon. member for St. Antoine is a gentleman for whom every right thinking member of this House must have great respect, because of the industry he shows in rendering what he believes to be good service to his country. Therefore, in any remarks that I make about the hon. gentleman, I would have it understood that personally, I have the greatest respect for him. But it does seem to be that this hon. gentleman harbours suspicion of everything he sees. Living himself, if you will, a faultless life, he cannot imagine anybody who does not follow exactly his course as having any virtue whatever. He does not seem to think it possible for any hon. member on this side of the House to have a mission here except to pilfer from the public purse or grab the public lands. I say that it is a lamentable thing for a man to stand up in this House, and, with no better facts than those the hon. gentleman has put before us, to seek to cover all with a suspicion of having dealt with the public resources in an unfair way.

Mr. AMES. May I be allowed to except the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The hon. member (Mr. Ames) is very kind in excepting me. But the same motive should carry him very much further indeed. He seems to think that no officer of the department feels the responsibility resting upon him, that not one of them would fearlessly do his duty. He seems to think that if even the slightest opportunity were given to any man, that man would betray his trust. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) has asked him to take the usual and established course of making a definite charge in order that he may have an opportunity of showing that he has not betrayed his trust, and I think it is up to the hon. member for St. Antoine to give my hon. friend that opportunity. But do not give us any fishing committee, a committee that will go into the department and inquire generally about it—practically investigate the policy of the department. The policy of the department must be decided on the responsibility of the government. Instead of making insinuations, instead of throwing suspicion upon unnamed individuals, would it not be more manly for these hon. gentlemen to declare : we believe that such and such wrong has been done and will prove it if given the opportunity to do so ? That is the position that we on this side of the House would like to see hon. gentlemen opposite maintain. For myself, I wish to say that, if there is crooked work going on in the Department of the Interior, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) shall have my sympathy and my earnest support in cleaning that department. I shall be pleased to see any wrongdoer brought to punishment. I believe in fair administration. Also, I believe in manly treatment of every man ; and I do not think that for hon. members to stand up in this House and make these general accusations is exactly the manly thing to do.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this debate. I had not the opportunity of hearing what was said yesterday. But I have listened with a good deal of pleasure to the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. W. McIntyre) with his new moral doctrines and his advice so freely given to this side of the House, and I would like to deal with one or two of the things he said. Let us consider squarely the motion before the House. It is not a motion attacking any member of parliament. It is a motion proposing an inquiry. Tenders were put in for two timber limits. After a great deal of trouble, we succeeded in getting the government to bring the original papers before the House. On examining these papers we find that, in the case of one timber limit there are three tenders, and, of these tenders two are in the same handwriting.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. May I ask the hon. member a question? Does the resolution say anything about investigating these particular tenders?

Mr. HAGGART. Certainly——

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Is it not general in its statement ?

Mr. HAGGART. —these as well as others. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) has made some new additions to the moral code. He stated—though, I must say, he took it back to a certain extent—that it was all right for a person tendering for a contract or for the lease of a timber limit to send in one, two, perhaps a dozen, tenders. I always thought that was wrong; that it was a violation of the principle of good tendering. And, if I found two parties tendering in the same handwriting, I would reject the tenders of both of them. The hon. gentleman seeks to correct us by telling us that the gentleman who tendered was a solicitor, and asks, why should not a solicitor put in a tender for more than one client? Fancy, Mr. Speaker, a solicitor being retained by one party to make a tender on a particular job and then accepting fees from others to put in tenders on the same job. What kind of a solicitor would he be? What principles of honour would he follow—accepting compensation from several individuals and becoming the confidant of each in relation to a tender for a contract on public work? But that upon which the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) mainly depended was the 'tu quoque' argument. When you find a man driven to use the 'tu quoque' argument, you may know that he has resorted to it in sheer desperation and that he has the very worst kind of a case. Fancy a logician using such an argument. Or, fancy a man accused of theft not able to defend himself better than by saying that his accusers, or the near friends of his accuser, had been thieving also. Fancy an argument of that kind being addressed to this House.

Now, since the question of timber limits disposed of by previous governments and of members of parliaments being interested in the same have been brought up, I may say that I am thoroughly acquainted with all the circumstances. This is not new matter in this House. The whole list read by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) has been read in this House several times. It was read a couple of times by Mr. John Charlton when he had a seat in this House. The erroneous nature of these charges has been shown again and again, and still these old misrepresentations are retailed. As my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) has just told us, some years ago timber limits in Ontario and Quebec were quite ordinarily given for the asking. If you wanted a timber limit, you went to the government, filed your plan and were given your limit. There was ground rent to pay, but no bonus. But, as the timber grew less plentiful, these limits became valuable assets of the provinces, and then they were put up at public auction and sold to the highest bidder. In 1872, when I first entered this House, and until 1874, limits were sold to the highest bidder by the Conservative government of that time. But in 1874, when the friends of the right hon. leader of this House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) came into power under the leadership of Mr. Alexander Mackenzie, they changed all this. The Mackenzie government took the power to grant timber limits by order in council and without competition.

There was the law up to 1878. I do not say it was a bad law, I cannot say it was wrong then. It was the most difficult thing for the party administering that department to get people to invest capital in that country and develop it by putting up sawmills to furnish sawed lumber to the people in that country. Again and again efforts were made, parties were asked to take up limits for that purpose. What was the result? Hundreds and hundreds of application were made and they were given out with this condition attached to it, attached both by the government of Mr. Mackenzie and by the subsequent government, that the parties were to survey the property, they were to erect upon it a mill of a certain capacity, according to the number of miles they got. Lots of orders in council were passed granting limits to lumbermen. How many licenses have been issued, and how many of those that were issued have been cancelled? The hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) told us about the immense tracks of country which had been alienated to favourites by the Conservative government. Out of 300 licenses issued by this government only thirty-nine have been cancelled. That is what their charges amount to. You do not know who their friends were that made application for timber licenses. I do not know whether the right hon. gentleman who leads the government was one of the applicants, but certainly his leader in the old Liberal government was one. Mr. Mackenzie was granted by order in council a certain number of townships, seven or eight townships, on the same terms as any other applicant. We were anxious to settle the country, we were anxious to induce capital to go in, the privilege was open to any one to make application. Was Mr. Mackenzie's name in the list that the hon. gentleman read? Lots of them received grants of townships and timber licenses, but not one of the names was read by either of the hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken on this question. But my name is on the list. I have explained that matter in this House again and again, I explained in answer to Mr. Charlton how I became acquainted with it, and you will find it in the 'Hansard.' I explained everything with regard to that limit, but the same old falsehood is brought forward time and again. Notwithstanding my denial it is still repeated. I became interested because I purchased an interest in the limits from two parties who had them. We got to quarreling and had a lawsuit, and the limits were sold by the court at public auction. I and several others bought them from the court, we had a right to purchase and we purchased them at a public auction in Brantford. One of the conditions was that we were to erect a mill. We erected a mill, and it was burned. The concern went into bankruptcy and was sold out. But after we purchased that limit there was a change in the administration of affairs, a stranger filled Mr. Stewart's throne at that time, and insisted upon a re-erection of the mill, which we were not in a position to do. Orders went forth that if the mill was not erected within a certain time the license would be cancelled. We explained that we had built the mill and it had been burned. We were obliged to sell it for anything we could get, not for the hundreds of thousands of dollars that these gentlemen are getting for their limits at the present time. The only purchasers we could get were gentlemen who are friends of the ministers who are administering this government. The property passed into their hands and afterwards new regulations were made that did not require mills to be erected. I feel a little sore about the manner in which I was treated in this matter, because the property was something which might have been a valuable asset to me in my old age. I was compelled by the gentlemen opposite to part with it and pass it into the hands of parties whom I would sooner not see in possession of it Those are the facts as regards my connection with the timber limit.

Mr. CONMEE. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? If I understood him aright he stated that the Mackenzie government had changed the regulations so that competition was not required, but after the government of Sir John A. Macdonald came in no such regulations obtained.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not say anything of the kind. I said that from 1872 to 1874 the law required competition in the purchase of limits.

Mr. CONMEE. What about the law in 1884-5-6?

Mr. HAGGART. I will repeat the whole of it. In 1874 the regulations were changed by the Mackenzie government, which took away competition or tendering for limits, and gave power to the Governor in Council to dispose of them by order in council. That state of affairs continued I think until about 1889.

Mr. CONMEE. I would remind my hon. friend that he is a little incorrect. That state of affairs did not continue except in certain sections. When the hon. gentleman's government was administering the territory in Ontario in 1885, people got limits there without competition.

Mr. HAGGART. That was explained. Certain portions along the Canadian Pacific Railway, certain sections, were removed from the order in council which was passed in 1874. That was the effect.

Mr. CONMEE. These limits were not along the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) has no right to interrupt without permission of the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member reminds me of a conversation I once read of that occurred between Archbishop Whately and the gentleman who was afterwards Bishop Newman, when both were at Trinity College, Dublin. Archbishop Whately was a great authority on logic, as we all know. Our boyhood knowledge of logic is drawn from the books written by Archbishop Whately. He was lecturing one day in Dublin, and this Professor Newman had a habit of constantly interrupting him. Archbishop Whately stood it as long as he could, and at last he was obliged to apply the logic to his interruptor, and told him that a fool can ask more questions in five minutes than a wise man can answer in a year. I do not apply the argument to the hon. gentleman nor did Archbishop Whately say that the party who interrupted him and who perhaps was one of the ablest of the professors in Trinity College is nothing but a fool. I do not mean to personally apply it; I only mean to apply the principle. In reference to the particular motion that we have made, have there not been sound reasons given by my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine in support of it? I have heard no defence? The defence of the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) is: We get so much more for the limits now than you did then; the dues are fifty cents per thousand feet board measure when the lumber is manufactured and the ground rent is also greater. The hon. gentleman must know that there is no difference in these two items from 1879 to the present moment, that you pay the same amount per thousand feet in all the licenses, that in these scandalous transactions which the hon. member for Strathcona depicts here you had to pay the same amount that you have to pay at the present moment when every one knows that the value of timber has increased so much.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Does the hon. gentleman say that the same dues have been paid from 1872 up to the present time?

Mr. HAGGART. I asked the hon. gentleman particularly what was the amount of the dues that you had to pay on every thousand feet of lumber cut. I understood the hon. gentleman to answer that it was the same in 1878 as at the present moment. I am giving the information that the hon. gentleman gave me.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman will remember that I said that up to the year 1889 the dues were 5 per cent on the value of the manufactured product.

Mr. HAGGART. What about the ground rent?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. The ground rent is the same. There is a difference in the dues.

Mr. HAGGART. Ten per cent is the amount you had to pay then?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Five per cent was the stumpage charge or dues up to the year 1889, and the ground rent has been the same throughout.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the amount you had to pay on lumber manufactured?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Five per cent on the value of the lumber.

Mr. HAGGART. When I was manufacturing it at that time I think it was more. I do not remember at the present moment, but I know that we had to pay a large sum every year to the government for manufactured lumber. I asked the hon. gentleman a question, and I made my statement upon his answer. The hon. gentleman may have forgotten that what he told me was that the dues were the same, and I was basing my argument upon that. However, the principle which at present obtains in every part of the Dominion of Canada is that all licenses to cut timber are put up to public auction. Sufficient time is given for the purpose of making an examination of the limits. The government are possessed of information as to the quantity that is on the particular area offered for sale, and they have an upset price which they have to get before they award the timber to any person tendering for the same. It ought to be the rule of this government that this same principle should apply as to one of the most valuable assets of the Dominion, and we have been urging upon them to adopt that system. It is no use to say that in the past you did so and so; it is no use to talk about times which were entirely different. Times have changed and we have changed with them. If we did wrong, it is not a justification in the slightest degree for the hon. gentlemen to do the same. What ought to be applied are business principles, and these principles, as I have laid them down, should not be embodied only in departmental regulations to be carried out at the will and pleasure of the minister, but the people of this country should embody them in the law and make it imperative that no matter who is in the government of the country the people shall receive the highest possible price for the valuable assets that they have, instead of having them handed over to political favourites. The most contemptible being that ever lived on the face of the earth is the political flesh fly feeding on the sores of the body politic. For these reasons, I hope that the government will introduce a Bill which will relieve the Minister of the Interior of a great deal of trouble and difficulty in reference to these matters. It will keep him from a lot of parasites who are hanging around him and give the country a good return for the valuable assets which it possesses.

Mr. JAMES CONMEE (Thunder Bay and Rainy River). Mr. Speaker, I want to correct a wrong impression which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) endeavoured to convey, or at all events which he left upon my mind. The impression that he left upon the House is that it was the Liberal government, under Mr. Mackenzie, that put the public lands back in the position where they could be obtained without competition, and that under that regime, and while that particular measure was in force, he obtained the limit which he speaks about in the Northwest. I want to remind the hon. gentleman that he has forgotten something. After the Conservative government came into office in 1878, and during the years 1884, 1885 and 1886, they parcelled out over 3,000,000 acres of land in western Ontario, which they thought they controlled. They were dealing with the territory which was known as the disputed territory. They parcelled it out into lots of fifty and one hundred square miles each, and they charged $5 for a permit. The hon. gentleman got one himself.

Mr. HAGGART. No, no.

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, he did. The hon. gentleman's name is on the list and he got one of the 50 square mile limits. His partner J. J. Macdonald got another, and John Shields got another.

Mr. HAGGART. I can state to the hon. gentleman—I do not know whether my name is on the list or not—that I never got one and never applied for one.

Mr. CONMEE. I will tell the hon. gentleman why he did not get it. Every Conservative there got one. Mr. Plummer of the Sault, Mr. Squires, the president of our association at Port Arthur, J. J. Macdonald who was a member of this House, not at that time but afterwards, each got 50 square miles and all they had to pay was $5.

Mr. HAGGART. Was not that a large price to pay for something we did not even have a tax title to ?

Mr. CONMEE. It is not the hon. gentleman's fault that he did not get it, and it is not his fault that he has not got it now. it was because the Premier of Ontario stepped in and drove my hon. friend and his gang out of it. They have not got it because they could not hold it. It was taken away from them not with their good will but in spite of them. I am not going to detain the House ; I can afford to give my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) the pleasure of telling his little story about questions and all that sort of thing, because he is a long time on the floor of this House and he wakes up once in a while like old Rip Van Winkle and he tells us he knows all about it and of course when he makes a statement about anything that settles it. I am just reminding him now of a few little slips he made on this occasion.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 8) respecting the Tobique Manufacturing Company, and to change its name to 'Fraser Lumber Company, Limited.'—Mr. Carvell.

Bill (No. 52) respecting a patent of Eugène François Giraud.—Mr. Gordon.

Bill (No. 36) respecting the Boundary, Kamloops and Cariboo Central Railway Company.—Mr. Duncan Ross.

Bill (No. 38) respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company.—Mr. Duncan Ross.

Bill (No. 33) respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Mr. Galliher.

Bill (No. 44) to incorporate the Alberta Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Talbot.

Bill (No. 48) respecting the Niagara Grand Island Bridge Company.—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 58) respecting the Ashcroft, Barkerville and Fort George Railway Company.—Mr. Duncan Ross.

Bill (No. 46) respecting the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company.—Mr. Monk.

Bill (No. 45) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Wilbert McIntyre.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 87) to incorporate the Vancouver Island and Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Sloan.

SUPPLY—DISPOSAL OF NORTHWEST TIMBER LIMITS.

House resumed debate on the motion for Committee of Supply and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lake.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY (Calgary). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the case made out by the member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) in support of his resolution, and also to the able statements of the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley). I have waited expecting to hear some answer from the other side of the House. And, considering the complete and lucid way in which the facts have been laid before the House, there is little left for me to say. I desire principally to refer to the circumstances under which timber limits were acquired in the province of Alberta during 1902, 1903 and 1904—which period, I think, may properly be termed the 'Reign of the Timber Barons.' The lumber question in the west has been a very live question indeed. Last session hon. members of this House listened to a discussion here as to whether there was or was not a lumber combine in the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. The House granted a committee to investigate whether or not such a combine existed in that country, this step being taken on the motion of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron). A great deal of evidence was taken and a great deal of time occupied in listening to the testimony of the several witnesses subpœnaed before that committee. The result was a finding on the part of the committee that a lumber combine did exist in the province of Alberta. As to the province of British Columbia, the committee were not so certain—they desired to hear additional evidence. Seven sagacious politicians from British Columbia seemed to be able to persuade that committee that no combine existed in their province. But in the province of Alberta, where the Retail Lumbermen's Association existed—which is practically only a subsidiary concern of that existing in British Columbia—a combine was found to exist. The result was that after a delay of six months from the report of this committee the local administration in the province of Alberta preferred an indictment to prosecute the men who, they thought, were guilty of an infringement of the laws of this country against illegal combines. They entered upon that prosecution under certain alleged disadvantages. After the investigation took place at Ottawa most of the documentary evidence disappeared, it was burnt, in fact a great deal of it was admitted to have been burnt by the officers of this association. But the local government at Edmonton, in spite of themselves, after a long delay, secured a conviction. A test case which was brought in the courts of Alberta resulted in the gentleman who was a defendant in that prosecution being fined $500. Although the question was first brought up by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, after the delay to which I refer the local administration took the matter up and secured, I may say in spite of themselves, a conviction.

Now the situation we occupy in the province of Alberta is this, that heretofore we have been practically dependent on British Columbia for our lumber supply; we are practically at the mercy of lumber dealers in the province of British Columbia. We are living alongside of what is perhaps the best lumber country in the world. Yet we have to pay increased prices for our lumber. During the last year prices continued rising until they got as high as $28 per thousand for rough lumber. Naturally we were then looking forward to the time when we would get free from the control of the lumber dealers in British Columbia by means of the railways which would be constructed into the source of the lumber supply in Alberta. So I can assure you that it is a matter of some surprise to me, and it will be a matter of a great deal of surprise to the people of Alberta, a matter in which they will be keenly disappointed, when they learn that in the years 1902-3-4 practically all the limits that will shortly be accessible by railways in that country have been placed in the hands of three or four gentlemen principally residing in the city of Ottawa, one of them a machine agent in Montreal, another a barrister in Ottawa, and another a mysterious company of whom we can receive practically no information, known as the Imperial Pulp Comapny. So then we in Alberta again find ourselves up against the proposition of having to go to people who can dictate terms to us. Instead of now being at the mercy of British Columbia dealers, we find ourselves at the mercy of a lumber ring with headquarters in the city of Ottawa or Toronto or Winnipeg. I say that instead of having to deal with the province of British Columbia—I care not whether it is the coast association or the association in the mountain region, as I understand there are two associations, but from the information I have received they are practically one and the same, we have to deal with this ring. Now I say that the limits in the province of Alberta have been allowed to get into the hands of this ring, practically without there having been any competition at all, practically without there being any knowledge in that country that these limits were to be disposed of. The government knew exactly what was going on, because we find that the applications came in within the space of a very few months, and practically the same people are applying. Some two or three are tendering on each proposition, and when one of these fortunate individuals obtains a limit it is only a very short time until an assignment is made to this mysterious Imperial Pulp Company. Now I think the government are to be criticised and censured for neglecting in this respect the interests of the settler. Everybody knows that the practical saw millers, now when they want to get additional limits, will have to come and deal with this ring, and he will be held up for extravagant prices, which will eventually have to come out of the pockets of the settler.

I do not propose to go through the circumstances under which all these limits were obtained, but I propose to deal with two particular sections in the province of Alberta. I propose to show very briefly the circumstances under which about 550 square miles of limits were put up were obtained in the province of Alberta, eleven limits in all. I propose to show the season of the year when these limits were put up for tender, the places where they are situated and the circumstances under which they were acquired and as I say I will only deal with these two localities. The first one to which I refer is a section where it is possible to bring down the lumber to Athabaska Landing, which is only about a hundred miles north of Edmonton, and from which the map I have in my hand shows a railway constructed to Athabaska Landing. I refer particularly to the limits which have been alienated and which are to be found on the Pembina, McLeod and Athabaska rivers. As I understand the situation there, the northern part of the province of Alberta is dependent upon that section of the country for their lumber supply. It is expected that within a comparatively short time the Canadian Northern will be extended from Edmonton to Athabaska Landing. When the railroad reaches this point the timber limits along the upper waters of the Athabaska and its tributaries will become valuable. Logs cut above this point on the Macleod and Pembina rivers can be floated to Athabaska Landing, manufactured at that point from whence there is but 100 miles rail haul to Edmonton. In this hitherto inaccessible region the government up to this summer had granted leases covering 400 square miles. When genuine sawmill operations are undertaken at Athabaska Landing it will be found that fifty per cent of the timber supply, and that the very best is in the hands of the member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows), a senator who deals in these transactions and a gentleman named Fraser, a lawyer of Ottawa, who have been quietly waiting for the past four years for the railroad to come and make valuable the holdings which cost them but comparatively little.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there have been granted in that locality four limits, 1046, 1191, 1192 and 1122. It is to the circumstances under which these were acquired that I desire to call the attention of the House. I propose to give the date that the application was made, the tender on each limit, the time the tenders were opened, the name of the applicant, the area of the limit, the price he paid for the same and the name of the successful tenderer. No. 1046 situated in Range 5 west of the fifth meridian, about sixty miles from the city of Edmonton, was put up for tender in six blocks. The advertisement appeared in Ottawa on January 28, 1903, the tenders were opened on the 7th March, 1903, at Ottawa, the applicant was J. S. Walker, there was an interval of thirty-seven days between January 28 and March 7 and if you consider the time it takes a letter to leave Ottawa, get to the end of railway construction and the time it would take a tender to return from the end of railway construction to Ottawa you would be justified, in 1903, in assuming that it would be fourteen days; so that about twenty-three days were left to any party in that part of the country who would be lucky enough to see the advertisement to select an area of forty square miles out of an area of 108 square miles. The bonus for this limit was $3,500 and the successful tenderer was Mr. T. A. Burrows.

1191 contains ten blocks, the advertisement appeared first on October 28, 1904, in Ottawa, tenders were opened on the 7th December, 1904, at Ottawa, the applicant was F. L. Grantham and there was a forty day interval. Taking the time required for the transmission of the mails, it would leave about twenty-six days for fifty square miles to be selected out of 234 square miles. The bonus was $1,075 or about three and a half cents an acre. The successful tenderer was Mr. T. A. Burrows, M. P., for Dauphin.

1192 consists of 10 blocks, the advertisement dated on October 28, 1904, at Ottawa, the tenders were opened on the 7th December in Ottawa, the applicant was F. L. Grantham, 50 square miles had to be selected out of 250 square miles, the bonus was $5,500 and the successful tenderer was Mr. T. A. Burrows. I noticed that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) in asking a question of my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine, (Mr. Ames) last night said: Did I apply to have these berths put up for tender? Mr. Burrows never applies to have berths put up to tender in so far as Alberta is concerned but we find that when the tenders are opened he usually gets there just the same.

1122: in reference to this berth, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I think this is the most glaring case of any that I have mentioned yet. I desire to give the date when it was advertised, the date of the application and the location of the limit simply for the reason that I want to ask the people in that section of the country to judge for themselves whether or not they consider there has been fair competition in this transaction. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to get up in this House and say that the time they allowed was sufficient for competitors to examine the property but the people of Alberta can judge for themselves. Berth 1122 consists of seven different areas. One of them is about 50 miles north of Edmonton, the next one 20 miles west of that, the next one 50 miles southwesterly and within about six miles of where the Grand Trunk Pacific will go through the Yellow Head Pass, which will give an idea of the value of that limit, the next one about 50 miles farther west and the next one about 10 miles west. This limit was advertised on the 15th December, 1903, at Ottawa. Tenders were opened on January 27, 1904, at Ottawa, or an interval of about 43 days was allowed. If we allow for the transmission of the mails, as the mail service in that country, I can assure you, four years ago was not the best, nor was the transmission as speedy as it is to-day, we would say that there would be an interval of 29 days approximately, to allow the people who were fortunate enough to see this advertisement in the city of Edmonton about 29 days to get out and inspect this one limit situated in seven different localities of the country and very widely separated. I state without any fear of contradiction that to go and visit these limits located north and west of Edmonton and as I have said widely separated, and return would involve a journey of at least 500 miles. In addition to that any person who desired to tender for these berths would be called upon to cruise an area of 110 square miles in seven different localities widely separated. The successful tenderer for these seven sections so widely separated, put up in the months of December and January, when travel by river was practically impossible, was Mr. A. W. Fraser, lawyer, of Ottawa. Now, I am quite prepared to leave the particulars in connection with the alienation of that limit to the judgment of the people of this province of Alberta and I ask them to determine for themselves whether or not there was any competition in this transaction. To suggest that there is fair competition in this transaction is simply playing with words and is nothing more than an idle suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. Was Mr. Fraser the applicant as well as the successful tenderer ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. No, the applicant was a Mr. A. McLean, who, I am given to understand, does considerable cruising for Mr. T. A. Burrows, M.P. If I am wrong in that statement, he no doubt will correct me.

An hon. MEMBER. How much was paid ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The price paid was $11,000. The next tender was $10,025, and the second tenderer was Mr. K. A. McLeod. As you will find in almost all these instances with regard to limits which are secured by Mr. Burrows, or Mr. Nolan, or by the Imperial Pulp Company, they manage to get above the next tender by a very small margin indeed. One of these seven blocks, as I have said, is within a very few miles—about 4 miles—of the intended line of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Two others are on the Pembina river to the west of it, another is on the McLeod river and another further up is on the Pembina river. By looking at this map you will see that they are all in very desirable locations. As to the quality of timber on these limits, I of course, cannot speak with any local knowledge but from the best information I can get I understand it is spruce, tamarack, jackpine and poplar, all to be found in large areas, the growth is very dense, these limits will be very valuable for railway ties and this limit is to be found all along the proposed line of the Grand Trunk Pacific. I have nothing further to say in regard to the other limits which were obtained there or the logs which, will eventually be floated down to Athabaska Landing. I desire to occupy the attention of the House for a few minutes while I discuss some limits which have been alienated on the head waters of the North Saskatchewan. Northern Alberta, as any person who knows anything about the geography of the country is aware, will depend for its timber supply on the wooded regions at the headwaters of the North Saskatchewan. For 100 miles above the city the timber has been acquired mainly by companies engaged at Edmonton and Strathcona in the manufacture of lumber. But when these lumber merchants and others in their efforts to meet the requirements of that section of the country shall have exhausted these nearby limits, they will doubtless endeavour further up the stream and among the foot-hills and along the base of the mountains to secure a reserve supply. Here, however, they will find that the speculator is ahead of them. The homeless company with a post office box at Winnipeg, known as the Imperial Pulp Company, controls 300 square miles on the upper waters of the North Saskatchewan. Some day the bona fide dealers of Northern Alberta will have to negotiate with the Imperial Company or close down their mills.

I propose to give the several dates when these limits were advertised, when the tenders were opened, the time allowed for inspecting the limits, allowing for postal service, the successful tenderers and other information. There are in all seven limits, all now under the control of the Imperial Pulp Company. The particulars of the disposal of these limits are as follows :—

On limits Nos. 118 and 119 Mr. Nolan tendered $100 more than Mr. Burrows in each case, Mr. Nolan's tenders being $500 and $600. The two limits so secured, I understand, have since been assigned to the Imperial Pulp Company. The second highest tender for No. 1031 was only $414 less than that of the Imperial Pulp Company, so that there is a very small margin between the second and the first tenderer, but the Imperial Company have again been successful in this case.

This is simply a bald statement of the facts in connection with the alienation of these limits, and I have been told by people who know, who have looked at the map on which are designated the different timber limits that have been transferred by the government in those three years, that these three or four people, with one or two others, practically control the timber situation at the present time in Northern Alberta. As to the southern part of the province we will perhaps hear more later on.

The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) took up a great deal of the time of the House in casting insinuations, although he objects very strongly to them himself. I think it would have been far better for him to devote more of his time to explanations and not so much to insinuations. It is no answer to what has been said or to what I am going to say, for him to cast insinuations. The people of this country, at least I think I can speak for the section of Alberta from which I come, are not worrying very much about what was done by the Mackenzie government between 1874 and 1878 or the Macdonald government in 1884. What they are worrying about now is how the public domain is being administered by the Laurier government and I must apologise for having to refer, in answer to some statements made by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turiff), to certain limits which were granted by the Mackenzie government because I know, just as well as any other member in this House, that what the Mackenzie government did in 1878 has nothing to do with this question to-day, nor has what the Conservative government did in 1884 anything to do with the question before the House. The Mackenzie government came into power and went out of power presumably for sins of omission or sins of commission. The same may be true of the Macdonald government. But, Sir, what the people of this country demand now is an explanation from the government in power as to why they have sacrificed the timber limits of that western country and put them into the hands of a few favourite political friends. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) and the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) ventured to give us what purported to be a history of the administration of these western timber limits by the Mackenzie government, but they did not tell the whole story. I think I am in a position to say that when these hon. gentlemen made the statement that only 310 square miles were alienated by the Mackenzie administration, they made a statement which is not in accordance with fact. If the hon. gentleman from Strathcona will be kind enough to give me the details of his calculation of that 310 square miles I shall be very glad to have them, but in the meantime I hope I am doing him no injustice when I say that his statement in that regard is not in accordance with the facts. What really did happen under the Mackenzie administration? The Mackenzie government was defeated at the polls on the 17th September, 1878, and I am informed that the government resigned on the 8th October, 1878. Now, by referring to the Sessional Papers No. 20, 55 Victoria, under date the 7th October, 1878, will be found the following memorandum which, in the light of the present discussion, will prove extremely interesting. That memorandum reads as follows :

On a memorandum, dated October 4, 1878, from the Hon. the Minister of the Interior, representing that being of the opinion that it would encourage and facilitate settlement in the valley of the Saskatchewan if facilities were afforded for obtaining lumber at a reasonable price, which he learns cannot be done at the present time, he recommends that a timber limit to the extent of 200 square miles on the Saskatchewan river and its tributaries in the Northwest Territories be granted to Messrs Cook and Sutherland, the same to be selected by them in blocks of not less than 20 square miles, the bonus payable on the said limit to be at the rate of $15 per square mile. And further recommending that the applicants shall have a period of three years within which to make selection of the limit.

Here we have in this memorandum to council 200 square miles transferred to H. H. Cook and Hugh Sutherland.

Mr. BERGERON. Where were they to make the selection?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. All over the Saskatchewan valley.

Mr. BERGERON. All over the west?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite will see that if ever a timber limit was given on favourable terms, it was this limit given by the Mackenzie government to Mr. H. H. Cook and to Mr. Hugh Sutherland. I would apologize for referring to this were it not that gentlemen opposite seem to base their whole defence on the allegation that preceding governments committed acts of mal-administration in connection with these timber limits at least as censurable as those which are alleged against the gentlemen now in office. But here, in one solitary instance, the Mackenzie government—after they were turned out of power, mind you—on the very day before they threw up the reins of office, granted to two political favourites a limit of 200 square miles of timber which was to be selected all over the valley of the Saskatchewan, and as if that were not the height of generosity, they gave them three years in which to make their selection. One hon. member opposite seemed to take great comfort out of the statement that an ex-Conservative member of parliament had received 50 square miles of limits in the west in the year 1883. And his friends around him applauded that statement. Now, I am not going to make the insinuation which the hon. gentleman from East Assiniboia made last night ; I am not going to say that the Mackenzie government gave these limits to political favourites to help the campaign fund, because I suppose whatever may be thought of Conservative members requiring a campaign fund it is a matter of history, both in the courts of the land and in this parliament, that Mr. H. H. Cook in the days gone by required a very substantial campaign fund indeed. At all events, here we have this Mackenzie government order in council of October 7, 1878——

Mr. BERGERON. A month after the people of the country defeated them.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Yes. And when the hon. member (Mr. Turriff) says that a 50-mile limit was given to an ex-Conservative member, and given for the purpose of graft, what does he think of this grant of 200 square miles to an ex-Liberal member of parliament? Does he think, to use the ingenuous words of this order in council, that it was given—

To encourage and facilitate settlement in the valley of the Saskatchewan.

If hon. gentlemen were to search the records of the Mackenzie administration, no doubt they would find other limits given to Liberal members and Liberal ex-members. Indeed, I think the hon. gentleman from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) referred to-day to a limit which was obtained by the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie himself. But all that is past history ; let us deal with the facts of to-day, and let us judge the government of to-day by these facts. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) said last night—I quote from 'Hansard' :

During the Mackenzie administration there were some people in that part of the country, and the Mackenzie government disposed of a small amount of timber between the years 1873 and 1878. They disposed of 310 square miles and they disposed of it practically under the same conditions that timber has been dealt with ever since. The Mackenzie government received a bonus of $7,150 for the timber they sold, or an average of a little over $23 per square mile. Now that is a long time ago, but in those days of the Mackenzie government when the timber of the west was properly administered, was put up for competition, was sold to the people who wanted it, was sold to the highest bidder, was handled in a proper manner and not given away for nothing, as it was to the pets and favourites of the late Conservative government.

Let me ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) if he considers that this 200 square miles was given to Mr. H. H. Cook and Mr. Hugh Sutherland by public competition? Let me ask him if these limits went to the highest bidder? Let me ask him if he discovers any difference between this grant to H. H. Cook and Hugh Sutherland and the grants which he alleged were made to ex-Conservative members of parliament? Yes; he may find this difference, that Mr. Cook and Mr. Sutherland received far more generous treatment than any member of parliament or ex-member of parliament ever received from a Conservative government.

Mr. FOSTER. Did he include that 200 miles in the 310 miles he spoke of?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I have tried without success to get that information from hon. gentlemen opposite, but probably they did not include the Cook-Sutherland grant, because shortly after the Mackenzie administration went out of power this order in council was cancelled by their successors in office. Faults may have been committed by both political parties in the past, but let us get down to the facts of the present time; let us consider this particular case which is now before the House, and let the government now in office give the people what explanation they have of the criticisms offered by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake). It is quite reasonable to expect that timber limits would have been sacrificed in the year 1872, and it is also reasonable to think that the same might have happened in 1883. With no railway facilities in that country, with no opportunity for getting a lumber supply from the province of British Columbia, it was urgent that something should be done to provide lumber for the settlers. The settler in the prairie provinces must have lumber, and it was good policy for any government to do everything it possibly could to encourage the manufacture of lumber in that country. With no railways in that country, with no means of transport for the lumber, a government might be justified in sacrificing these limits in days gone by, but what is true of those days would not be true of to-day, because conditions have entirely changed. Let us concede, if you will, that both political parties in the past were equally at fault, if fault there be, for sacrificing the limits. But while we do that, let us see what this government has done, and why it has done it. It would be just as reasonable for a member of this parliament twenty-five years hence, when the lands are all settled, as I have no doubt they will, and when there is no more free land for incoming population; it would be just as reasonable for a member of parliament a quarter century hence to criticise the government for giving away homestead lands as it is for us in this parliament to criticise governments of years past for giving away timber limits. Let me deal with a few of the statements made by the hon. member for Strathcona. He criticised the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley in connection with his application for a limit on Cedar lake.

I do not know the date of the applications, but I presume it would be about the year 1883. But he practically attempts to argue that a limit in 1883 should now be worth as much as it is to-day. He says that although there was no railway facilities then near the limits in question, the water connection with Winnipeg was just the same as it is to-day. Well, what was the population of Winnipeg in 1883 and what is its population to-day? What was the demand for lumber in 1883? To come nearer home to the hon. gentleman, I would ask him what was he paying for property in Strathcona in 1883 and what does he pay to-day? It is absolutely no answer to the argument that these limits were sold at ridiculous prices to-day to say that the same limits applied for twenty-five years ago had to be abandoned because the parties who got them found they could not be worked profitably. It would be no answer to the charge that the limit obtained by Mr. Fraser was sold to him at a sacrifice, and that it was put into the hands of a speculator at such a ridiculously low price as to enable him to make an immense profit—it would be no answer to that argument to say that the same limit in 1883 was practically valueless. The hon. gentleman also referred to one timber limit as having been competed for by two parties, namely, A. W. Fraser and Macdonald, but it may be that Mr. Fraser was acting for both parties, and was not representing any lumber company but speculators in Ottawa. Well, I do not think a lawyer can be said to be discharging his duty properly when he takes charge of applications on behalf of two people who have conflicting interests in the one transaction.

The hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) spent some time discussing the regulations which are to come in force before long. When these regulations are to come in force we do not know nor can we get any enlightment from him on that point. But what is the use of passing regulations concerning timber limits when, as is the case in northern Alberta, the supply there has been practically all alienated. This is only another instance of hon. gentlemen opposite locking the stable door after the horse has been stolen.

The hon. gentleman further said that the quantity of lumber on these great areas is not known. Is not that an additional reason why we should have the investigation asked for by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and find out just what lumber has been alienated by the present administration?

For the reasons I have given and for the following reasons, I submit that this investigation should be granted. It should be granted in order that we may find out the value of the timber disposed of and who the Imperial Pulp Company are, because the suspicion is current in that country, among the men interested in the lumber business, that there is no use in their applying for any timber limits because they cannot do any business with the present administration unless they get under cover. We should also have this investigaion in order to discover who this undisclosed client of Mr. Fraser really is. Surely we are entitled to know the names of the people who are acquiring our public domain at such ridiculous prices. Then the circumstances surrounding the publication of these advertisements, the reasons why reasonable time was not allowed for the exploration of those limits, the circumstances surrounding the reception and opening of tenders—all these call for a thorough investigation. No doubt the right hon. the First Minister, by means of his large majority, can take such position as he may see fit, but I trust that he will see that it is his duty, as leader of the government, as a statesman and as an honest administrator, to have this matter probed into and not allow his followers to try and draw away public attention from the question by showing what the Conservative and Mackenzie administrations did from 1873 to 1884.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). I have listened with much pleasure and interest to the very moderate and reasonable speech just delivered by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) and also to the speeches of the hon. gentlemen who preceded him—some of them containing reasonable statements, but others, to my mind, containing statements not so reasonable. Referring to the speech of the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames), I notice that he says he has no objection to the man who cuts the timber. He says that we should welcome him to the country—that we should welcome the man who is an actual lumberman. Not only should we welcome the man who is an actual lumberman securing timber for his immediate use, but also the man who, with shrewdness and foresight, secures a timber supply for twenty years to come. Yet immediately after making the very proper statement that the actual lumberman ought to be welcomed to the country, he attacked my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Burrows), who has never been anything else but a lumberman, who has been engaged in the lumber business out in the west all his life. If the actual lumberman is entitled to protection and to welcome, why should any distinction be made between one lumberman and another, and why should not the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) be entitled to the same fair play and treatment as any other man who is actually engaged in the lumber business?

In his speech, on page 2345 of 'Hansard,' the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) said :

That hon. gentleman has reserved limits that he, or those who come after him as inheritors, will some day cut into lumber, and yet I think that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) woud not be unwilling to sell those limits.

I submit that the hon. gentleman had no business to surmise what the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) intends doing, and should not speak regarding his inentions unless he had some definite knowledge as to what those intentions are. Then the hon. gentleman added :

And if rumour is correct, he would not take half a million dollars for the timber lands which he holds on the slopes of the Porcupine hills.

Well, the business of a member of this House is not, in my opinion, to consider and give currency to mere rumours. It is not part of his public duties to deal in rumours as Mrs. Grundy does. He should confine himself to dealing with facts, which are matters concerning which we have some information.

Again, the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames), speaking of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows), said :

He has acquired on the Pembina and Mcleod rivers, lying north and west of Edmonton, 28 square miles of timber limits. I understand that these limits are even now—he may correct me if I am making a mis-statement—under option for sale at a large amount.

My hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) did correct the hon. gentleman and said that that statement was entirely incorrect. Therefore, this information or the rumour on which it was based was unfounded and there was nothing in the story. My hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) assures me that of all the timber limits he holds—no matter from what government he may have obtained them—he has not put any price upon them or offered any of them for sale, but holds them for the purposes of his business, and he has been for thirty years in business as a lumberman in the west and has three large mills under operation.

Mr. AMES. Will he say that they were never under offer in whole or in part?

Mr. MILLER. He assured me that he has never offered them for sale, and how could he have given an option upon them unless he had offered them for sale ? It was unreasonable and unfair for the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) to speak as he did, and I think he owes the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) an apology, and so do many other members on that side, for what they have said regarding him, not only in this House but on the hustings.

An hon. MEMBER. Great Scott.

Mr. MILLER. Who is it says 'Great Scott?'

An hon. MEMBER. Everybody.

Mr. MILLER. Is it the hon. gentleman sitting on the front bench who himself has appealed for mercy in this House because of his own feeling and the feelings of those near and dear to him? And yet that hon. gentleman does not hesitate to cast reflections on and make insinuations against the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows), as have done other members, without the slightest ground.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say 'Great Scott,' but if you like I will say it.

Mr. MILLER. The hon. gentleman sitting upon the front bench who did not say 'Great Scott' has said 'hear, hear' every time the name of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) was mentioned, as though it were a crime for that hon. gentleman to secure a timber limit, whether he secured it from the Conservative government or the Liberal government or secured it by assignment from somebody else who had obtained it by legitimate means and at the highest tender.

One of the arguments made has been that the timber berths have been sold remote from settlement. Who can say where settlement will be in that great western country a year from to-day? Under the administration of the present government, settlers have been coming in in great numbers, and some of them are settled far from the railways in order to secure land that will be valuable when the railways come. In that way, lands are occupied fifty, eighty, a hundred miles from the railway. Who can say where settlement will or will not go a year hence? Again, as has been pointed out by hon. members on the Conservative side, a timber limit may be far from settlement if you measure by miles, but may be near to a settlement because of the course of streams down which the timber may be floated to settlement. But, surely, without dwelling too much on the tu quoque argument, if the timber limits sold since 1896 are remote from settlement, the much larger number of the limits sold from 1880 to 1896 were still further from settlement at that time.

It has been said that timber disposed of by the present government has been given to government favourites. But, Mr. Speaker, there is one very important fact in this debate, and that is that not one of the speakers who have supported this resolution—some of them experienced in timber and some of them not so experienced—has told us of a single case in which a Conservative engaged in the lumber business has been discriminated against or has been treated in any way differently from a man who has been in the habit of marking his ballot for the party now in power.

Mr. AMES. Give us the opportunity and we will show it.

Mr. MILLER. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) has had his opportunity, and so have his friends. They have made long speeches, and, not one single instance of discrimination against a lumberman who happened to be a Conservative has been even alleged. I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) speak, for he is a fair-minded gentleman, a respectable gentleman who well deserves the esteem in which he is held both inside and out of this House. He has, moreover, the advantage as a speaker in this debate of being a practical lumberman. He objected very strongly to the method of advertising these timber berths. Now, a timber berth is advertised first by notice posted in the nearest post office to that timber berth; second in the office of the Crown Timber agent; third in a newspaper published in the locality in which the timber is located, and fourth in a newspaper having a general circulation in the district. These methods the hon. gentleman mentioned, but objected to as not being sufficient. But he did not mention one means of advertising which is always adopted, and which, I think, is of greater value than any other method that is now in use or that the hon. gentleman himself suggested. He did not refer to the fact that the advertisement is sent to every man who has requested the department to place his name upon a list for that purpose. This is the practice under existing regulations and under regulations that have existed for many years. If any man in Canada, whether engaged in the lumber business or not, will simply spend two cents to send a letter—or, rather, will write to the department without spending even one cent in postage—he may have his name on this list. Then, instead of having to depend upon seeing the advertisement in a newspaper, where, though published, it may escape his attention, he has the notice sent to his post office address so that it is impossible for him to overlook it or neglect it. The hon. member for Argenteuil has suggested that these advertisements should be inserted in the 'Canada Gazette.' How many people does the hon. gentleman think read the columns of the 'Canada Gazette'? It may be that, if this method were accepted, some of the lumbermen who have large capital invested in the business would subscribe for the 'Canada Gazette' and follow these advertisements. But, so far as men of smaller capital are concerned, so far as nearly all the lumber operators in this Dominion are concerned, they might as well have the advertisement inserted in a paper published in Hong Kong as to have it inserted in the 'Canada Gazette.' The hon. gentleman (Mr. Perley) as well as others, have contended that the sale of a timber berth should be advertised for a longer period than sixty days. There may be something in that contention. I think that the Court of Chancery provides for the sale of property, after advertisement, within a shorter time than this. I think that a mortgagee advertising property under a mortgage is not bound to give as long a notice as sixty days. Still, it may be expedient and proper to give a longer time in the case of the sale of timber berths—it is a matter of opinion that may properly and reasonably be argued.

It has been said that large profits have been made by some of those who have secured timber limits from the present government, and from other governments as well. I think it likely that the present value of some of the timber limits has been greatly exaggerated. The evidence that has been laid before us thus far has been the evidence of what somebody has heard somebody else say; we have had no evidence from cases in which the property was transferred and the money paid. Still, I fancy it is true that some large profits have been made on timber limits procured from this government. But we know, also, that large profits have been made by individuals who have bought limits from other governments or from individuals. Such cases are known in the older parts of Canada. These large profits have been due to the increase in the price of lumber. We know that certain kinds of lumber are selling to-day at $20 a thousand, that, a few years ago, could be bought for $6 a thousand. But, if these large profits have been made on timber limits in the older parts of Canada, is it not much more likely that great profits would be made on timber limits in the western country where there has been such rapid development or such a great inflow of settlers, and such a noticeable increase in the railway mileage?

Now, the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) and some of those who preceded him stated that the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) and other speakers on that side had not made any explanation of recent transactions.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLER. An hon. member says, 'Hear, hear.' If there has been any failure on the Liberal side of the House to make explanations, surely there has been at least an equal failure to make explanations by the speakers on the Conservative side. For instance, I will quote again the figures already quoted, that in 1880 and the eight years following, a Conservative government disposed of 23,987 square miles of timber, in the one year, 1883 alone, 10,328 square miles; while since 1896 to 1908 the present government has only disposed of a little over 6,000 square miles, a little more than one-half of what our Conservative friends did in the year 1883 alone. Now surely if between 6,000 and 7,000 square miles of timber is too much to have disposed of between twelve years 1896 to 1908, then surely 10,326 square miles was too much to be disposed of by a Conservative government in the one year 1883, when there were no settlers and no population in that western country. It was stated by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) that what the people of the western country most want, and what they must first have, is lumber. It is true that one of the first wants of the settler is lumber; but you cannot have a demand for lumber until you have the settler; and in 1883 when the Conservative government disposed of over 10,000 square miles of timber there were no settlers in that region to demand lumber, none to use it if it were there. I have not heard from any Conservative speaker any explanation of this large disposition of timber lands in 1883 and in the years immediately following and immediately preceding; and I will ask any Conservative speaker who may follow in this debate to make some explanation, tell us why such a tremendous area of timber limits was disposed of in those two or three years. I quote the figures that have been already quoted to say that there has been no explanation of them, and to ask some hon. gentleman of the opposition to give an explanation.

It has been shown that under the Mackenzie government timber limits brought $23.06 per square mile; it has been shown that under the Conservative government, from 1878 to 1896, instead of bringing $23 per square mile, limits only brought $4.13; and it has been shown that under the Laurier administration timber areas brought on an average $81.92 per square mile. I ask for an explanation, I thought we would have had heard an explanation, but so far no explanation has been forthcoming. It is easy to understand that timber in the west is worth more money in 1908 than it was in 1896, but I do not think any valid reason can be shown why it should be worth more than twenty times as much in 1908 as it was in 1896. We have heard no explanation, and I think there is none to give, why timber in 1878 to 1896 was not worth at least one-fifth as much as it was during the five years preceding under the Mackenzie government.

Our Conservatiove friends have said, was all this timber granted by the Conservative government actually taken, was it actually retained? Now a large part of it was not retained, but I say that that has nothing whatever to do with the argument. Orders in council were passed disposing of the timber, orders in council were passed giving this timber away, without competition, without any bonus, giving it away at a tremendous rate. Now for an illustration, the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) says, I did make an application for 50 square miles of timber. He paid his first year's ground rent, but then he concluded that he did not want to hold the timber. A great many others were in the same position. They made their application, orders in council were passed granting them the timber. He did not retain his 50 square miles because he thought it was not of any particular value, and so, after paying one year's ground rent, he let the timber go. Some other hon. members not having even as much faith as he had in the value of the timber, did not pay even one year's ground rent, and to them licenses were not issued. But taking the case of the hon. member for Argenteuil as an example, he made his application, the timber was granted to him, there the transaction, so far as the late Conservative government was concerned, was ended. He made the application, they granted the timber. I will not say that they were to blame, I will not say that the hon. member was to blame. But if there was credit to be attached to the government for what they did, credit was due to them when they passed the order in council. If there was any blame reasonably attachable to them, that blame was attachable when they passed that order in council.

The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) said that the timber was not retained, the berths were given up, were abandoned, because of the onerous conditions that were contained in the leases from the Conservative government. But not a single member upon the Conservative side of the House has given one instance in which any man's timber berth was cancelled or taken away from him by a Conservative government because he failed to put up a mill or because he failed to cut timber. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), a great many of those berths were cancelled, a great deal of that timber had to be thrown up, because Sir Oliver Mowat stepped in and told them not to meddle longer with that to which they had no title.

Again referring to the very reasonable argument of the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) who says that the actual cutters of lumber are deserving of every consideration and ought to be welcomed to the country. Let us look, if you will, at some of the names of gentlemen to whom our Conservative friends granted these timber berths, and see whether they were actual cutters of lumber and manufacturers of timber. We have the name of the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). Now that hon. gentleman says, I do not know whether my name is in that list or not, but I do know that I never made an application for timber. Now I will not say that any member, or anybody else, who obtained a timber license or berth from the late Conservative government was in any way to blame for having obtained it, but I do say that if the hon. member for South Lanark obtained a grant of timber made by order in council, though he had made no application for it, it simply shows that the late Conservative government were willing, not only to give timber to their friends who applied for it, but also to their friends who had not applied for it. The papers show that on the 20th of September, 1879, Messrs John Shields and John Haggart applied for certain timber berths on Fairfield river, which was granted to them by order in council on the 23rd June, 1880, the grant being made to Shields, Haggart, MacLaren and Nichol. The first license was issued on that berth in 1886, for timber berth No. 14. Berths Nos. 25 and 25a containing 25 miles each were applied for on the 3rd March, 1881, by Mr. E. P. Leacock on behalf of himself and Messrs. Shields, Haggart and MacLaren. These berths were granted, on the 23rd May, 1882, by order in council to Messrs. Shields, Haggart, MacLaren and Nichol. These were good berths and they were men who had sufficient faith in the value of these limits to hold them as they are now held by Mr. John Hanbury, of Brandon.

Mr. LALOR. Who is the owner of those berths now ?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. John Hanbury, of Brandon.

Mr. LALOR. Under what circumstances did he become the owner ?

Mr. MILLER. You will have to ask Mr. Hanbury.

Mr. LALOR. Why should you not ask the government ? They sold them to him. They took them away from Mr. Haggart.

Mr. MILLER. You will have to look at the records.

Mr. LALOR. That statement was made in the House by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and never was denied.

Mr. BOYCE. You are only telling half the story.

Mr. MILLER. I am telling all the story that I know, let the honourable gentleman look up the records. Not only were our Conservative friends willing to give to the hon. member for South Lanark timber berths but when he had investigated these limits and found that they were not as valuable as he would like to have and not as valuable as some other limits he had learned of and would like to get, they were willing to exchange these berths for other berths of greater value or that suited them better and so, on the 2nd February, 1881, Mr. Haggart made application to exchange his fifty square miles on Fairfield river, that had been granted by order in council in June, 1880, for an equal area on Shell river. He made that application to exhange these limits on the 2nd February, 1881. The then very kindly and generous Conservative government did not take time to investigate, they did not send any official of the department to see whether the fifty miles on Shell river were of greater value than the limit on Fairfield river, but while the applicant made his application for exchange on the 2nd February, by an order in council, five days afterwards, upon the 7th February, the exchange was made and the new berth was granted to Messrs. Shields, Haggart, Maclaren and Nichol, and I am told that the first license was issued to T. Nichol in 1886 upon that berth which is also held by Mr. John Hanbury, of Brandon.

Now, the hon. member for South Lanark is not the only gentleman by whom application was made for timber berths in Canada and I want the House to consider these names and, from their knowledge of the gentlemen, to conclude as to whether they were or were not likely to be actual manufactures of lumber and of timber. We have the name of Mr. T. G. Blackstock, a Conservative lawyer of the city of Toronto, down for 100 miles, and Mr. Nicholas Flood Davin for fifty miles. Mr. Davin was a man of whom Canada might in many respects be proud, but I think it was never known to the House that he was a practical lumberman. Then, there is the name of Mr. Joseph Gibson to whom was given fifty square miles. I think that Mr. Gibson was likely one of those who did not hold his timber limit, but finding that the timber limit was rather a gold brick, to use an expression which an hon. member of this House is fond of using, he exchanged it for a post office and was appointed a postmaster. Then we have a gentleman named Gouin. He obtained from this good government fifty square miles and he too gave up the timber limit and obtained a post office. Fifty square miles more is set down opposite the name of Mr. McLeod Stewart, I believe, a prominent Conservative lawyer. Mr. D. Tisdale has a grant of fifty-two miles and then a grant of fifty miles. Then, the Hon. J. G. H. Bergeron—I am anticipating a little in calling him the 'honourable'—is down for fifty square miles. Mr. Devlin, an Ottawa hatter, is down for fifty square miles, Mr. Birkett, an Ottawa hardware merchant and at one time Conservative member of parliament, fifty square miles, Dr. D. W. Montague, whose name is familiar to our Conservative friends, fifty square miles, and the Hon. W. E. Sanford, Conservative senator, fifty square miles. In regard to the list I have read I simply want to point out that these were men who were not actual lumbermen—and that the government must have known that they were not actual lumbermen. Perhaps all of them were honest and honourable men and I do not want to impute anything improper to them because they got timber limits upon the terms upon which timber limits were being given away, but if the hon. member for South Lanark were here I would like to ask him if he thinks that these gentlemen were actual lumbermen to whom the hon. member for Montreal (St. Antoine) is willing to give some consideration, or whether they were the men to whom he so strongly objected in his speech this afternoon and whom he described as political flesh flies. I would like that some of our Conservative friends should give to us some explanation as to why that good Conservative government gave away timber in such large quantities in the years 1882 and 1883 and in smaller quantities comparatively in the two or three years following to these men who, they knew were not saw millers, and who, they knew, never would cut a stick of timber into lumber. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, has said to us that forty or fifty per cent of the timber limits of the west are now in the hands of speculators which is another way of saying that fifty or sixty per cent of the limits of the west are in the hands of men that he knows to be practical lumbermen. It is a good thing to have even the admission from the hon. gentleman that fifty or sixty per cent of the timber limits that have been disposed of by the present government are in the hands of men who are actual saw millers owning saw mills and intending to cut that timber into lumber. Of the remaining forty or fifty per cent I imagine that the hon. gentleman does not and cannot have the knowledge that will enable him to decide as to whether these men are speculators or as to whether they intend to manufacture lumber. I would like to know how the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), how the Department of the Interior, or any of its officials are to know and distinguish as between the speculator and the man who intends actually to manufacture. There is no way by which he can tell. The only thing they can do is to insert in their licenses some provision that upon notice they shall be compelled to manufacture the timber. The old Conservative government did make such a provision, I understand, in their licenses, and that is what has been referred to as an onerous condition, but I would point out that the present government has been just as careful to insert just as good a safeguard and conditions that are just as onerous and just as binding and calculated to bring about just as good results. It is true that our Conservative friends, while they had such a provision in their licenses, did not generally, did not in any case that I have heard of, enforce that provision. It is equally true that the present government, while they have had similar conditions in their licenses, have not seen fit always or in many cases to enforce those provisions whatever they may do in the time to come. Referring again to the hon. gentleman for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) we find by the record that Perley and Pattee received fifty square miles of timber and that to Mr. Geo. H. Perley another fifty miles of timber was allotted, 100 square miles in all. I think that these gentlemen were perfectly entitled to take the timber that they got on the terms upon which they got it. If they gave it back, if it has since proved to be valuable and if it has been sold by the present government at a greatly increased price and upon better terms that was their misfortune and their loss due perhaps to their lack of judgment at the time.

These men, honourable business men, engaged in an honourable business, had a perfect right to take the 50 square miles and the other 50 square miles of timber that they got at the time they got it and from the persons from whom they got it. I admit at once it was right for the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) and his partner to secure from a Conservative government, away back in 1882 or 1883, 100 square miles of timber; they were practical men, but were not carrying on any lumbering business in the west, not residing in the west, having no interests in the west; yet this was in all respects an honourable transaction, and they were quite within their rights; it was no reflection on their honesty that they took the timber which was given to them. But I say that it was surely equally right that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows), who is a lumber manufacturer in the west, who does nothing else, whose only interests are in the west, who has resided and carried on business there for a long time, should be allowed to obtain limits by open competition with the world—not as was done in 1883, when these other gentlemen obtained these limits without any competition. Surely he had a right to obtain a larger number of square miles, as he has mills actually in operation, and that is the only business in which he is engaged.

Some hon. gentlemen have attacked the government upon their timber policy; but they are mere infants at that work, they do not understand how to attack a government upon its timber policy. There are other members in this House who could teach them a great deal along this line. In the 'Mail and Empire' of December 17, in the report of the nomination proceedings at Thornhill in the late by-election in Centre York, I find these words:

Hon. George E. Foster speaking about the timber limits said that the farmer in the northwest could not go out and cut timber to build a shack for himself or his cattle because the government had given away the lumber which belonged to the settlers before 1896.

And so the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), as I heard him upon the hustings in that by-election, addressed the farmers of Centre York. Why the farmer of Centre York could see the settlers in the west in the cold blast, in the bleak November days, with winter approaching, shivering out in their fields without a stick to build a fence or a board to build a shelter, without fuel, without material to shelter their cattle or a shingle to keep out the rain. It was a terrible picture which the farmers of York saw because of the wicked acts of this government, which kept every stick of timber from the poor settlers. But he was excelled by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell), who was reported in the 'World' on the same occasion as saying:

He referred to Colchester, Brockville and Northumberland, and the victories of the Conservative party. What will they say after the elections of Centre York, said the speaker, and the crowd yelled in concert——

A very pleasing prediction.

He charged that every stick of timber from the eastern boundary of Manitoba to the foothills of the Rockies had been ceded over to the Liberal heelers and grafters.

Is it not a wonder that the Liberal party succeed in carrying any by-elections in the face of these wild flights of imagination on the part of hon. gentlemen who are sent out by the Conservative party to advocate their cause and tell the story of the wickedness of their opponents?

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member is groaning.

Mr. MILLER. I do not wonder you groan. I hope it is a groan of repentance the hon. gentleman is emitting. Then we will notice a change in his speeches, and I hope his repentance is genuine.

Mr. BOYCE. It was a gentleman opposite who groaned.

Mr. MILLER. Then no doubt he groaned because of the wickedness of the Tory speakers to whom I referred.

The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) was rather pleased with the new regulations of last December. They were not in his opinion perfect. Many men have many minds, but he thought they were at least a great improvement, and he rather taunted the Minister of the Interior because he had been advised by and had listened to the advice of members of the Conservative party. I thank the hon. member for thus taunting the Minister of the Interior, because it is a very dangerous thing for any cabinet minister in these days to listen to any advice given to him by gentlemen on the Conservative side. It should not be, and in times past it has not been so. I do not think the Minister of the Interior has on this occasion either sought for or acted upon advice from members of the Conservative party, but I do believe there have been other instances where he has not only accepted, but has sought the advice of certain Conservative members whom, because of their particular calling, the locality in which they lived or the particular interest and attention they had devoted to certain things, he thought capable of assisting him by their judgment, and he, as I believe, has sought their advice. I think that is a sign, not of weakness, but of strength. I think that any minister of any department of the government may well listen to and ought to be able to listen to, and ought to be big enough to accept the suggestions of opposition members when he felt that they appealed to his judgment and were sound. Conservative members are not without brains and intelligence, many of them are clever men, and if they would devote more of their time to thinking of what suggestions and improvements may be made in place of spending time, as they do, in hurling across the floor of the House and spreading in the country insinuations which are the result of their own disordered digestive apparatus, of their own suspicions, their time would be very much better employed and they would be doing better work than they have been doing for this country and for their constituents. The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) is a man of great intelligence—a statement which he will not deny. But if that hon. gentleman would go about with his leather bag, with his microscope, with his photographic apparatus, with the brains that are within his head, with the industry that is in his general make up, and would divest himself of the suspicion which he so entertains——

Mr. JOHNSTON. There would be nothing left.

Mr. MILLER. He would do better for the country and a great deal better for himself. Suspicion is not a virtue. I know of no other animal that is so suspicious as a fox; I know of no other animal that will quicker rob a hen roost. Now, referring to the particular case that is before the House, it is a case where three tenders were put in for a timber berth, one of them at about a thousand dollars, one between $6,000 and $7,000, and the other at the even $7,000. And this microscope with a man behind it or the man behind the microscope, whatever way you put it, has discovered that the $1,000 tender and the other tender at $7,000 are upon the same paper having a rampant lion as a water mark, and in the same handwriting, and that in the $7,000 tender the amount of the tender is inserted in a different pen and with different ink. And that is taken by this man with his suspicion as an evidence of wrong doing. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) thought he had some trouble to get hold of the original documents, and he did have, because he went about it the wrong way.

Mr. BOYCE. He got them.

Mr. MILLER. He might have got them more quickly had he gone about it in the right way.

Mr. BOYCE. He got them in spite of you.

Mr. MILLER. I don't claim a bit of credit for it. Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) having obtained the original documents, he no doubt felt that having laboured so long to obtain them and having fought so hard to get them, he must find a cause of some kind that would show some gain to his party. But let us look at the matter, not from the view point of the man who is filled with suspicion, but let us look at it with common sense and as fair-minded people.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That shuts him out.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Fraser is a Conservative lawyer——

Mr. AMES. We don't claim him.

Mr. MILLER. I should have said that he is a Reform lawyer. Mr. Fraser has been pictured to us to-night by Conservative speakers as a very shrewd and clever man. Now, I think the facts that have been brought forward to prove his guilt, effectually go to prove that there was no guilt and no wrong in the whole transaction. If Mr. Fraser had been a bungler, if he had been a man without business experience and was intending to do a wrong thing, he might have done that which he did do. But Mr. Fraser is a lawyer, a lawyer of very considerable practice, a lawyer who has done a good deal of work with the departments, a lawyer who has done a good deal of work in the courts. He has submitted evidence to judges and to juries; he has seen a good deal of evidence submitted to judges and juries and if at the time he put in these tenders he had been doing a thing he knew to be wrong, and if he felt guilty of wrong he would have avoided anything that might have attached to it the slightest appearance of wrong doing, and he would have been very careful to see that the writing was done by a different person, on different paper and with different ink. The very fact that he did use the same paper, that he did use the same pen, that he did use the same ink (except for filling in the amount of the tender), is evidence that any judge experienced in the weighing of evidence or that any advocate addressing a jury would point to as an evidence of innocence rather than of guilt.

I shall conclude by quoting the words used this afternoon by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) when he said that times have changed and we have changed with them. Times have changed and we have changed with them, and as times have changed under the Laurier government the people of Canada realize, the people in the constituencies where we have had the by-elections realize, the people from the Atlantic to the Pacific realize that in 1896 times changed and changed for the better. And these gentlemen of the opposition will have to do more than make insinuations; they will have to indulge in more than suspicion before they will be able to change the minds of the electors of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. JOHN HERRON (Alberta). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) who has last spoken devoted a great portion of his speech to asking questions and demanding information as to the reasons why timber limits were given away in such quantities in 1882 and 1883. Well, a brief answer to his questioning would be to repeat his own words: Conditions have changed in the Northwest. As I was a resident of that country in 1882 and on the ground in these years, I will give him some reason why the Conservative government parted with so much timber in the west, and I will tell the hon. gentleman also why the conditions in the Northwest have changed. There are no doubt a good many hon. gentlemen here to-night who have travelled over the prairies of recent years in a pullman car, but there are not many of them who have gone over those prairies by a long and tedious journey before there was a railway. The advent of the railway has changed conditions in that country. In these years there were only a few thousand settlers in the Northwest; I think the census of 1881 gives 6,000 white people as living in what is now the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. To-day we have 450,000 inhabitants in these two provinces. The 6,000 people who were in the country in 1882 were scattered over the plains from about Qu'Appelle to the Rocky mountains and on the North Saskatchewan. Of course, even though there were only 6,000 people in the country at the time, and even though there should be only 2,000, they would need buildings and houses in which to live and to seek shelter. At that time I do not think there were more than one or two sawmills south of Saskatchewan, perhaps there was not one sawmill south of that river. There may possibly have been some sort of a small mill at Prince Albert and perhaps another small mill in the vicinity of the Crow's Nest Pass. On the expanse of prairie extending for 1,000 miles from Lake Winnipeg to the Rocky Mountains, there was, for a distance of 300 miles from north to south, generally speaking, not a sawmill, and those who settled in any portion of that large area were compelled to draw their lumber from some of these points I have mentioned. You can at a glance realize what a serious hardship that was for the few settlers in that country. That was one of the principal reasons why the Conservative government tried to induce some practical lumber operators to establish mills in that district. The Conservative government offered these inducements, but they were not the first to offer limits for nothing because the Mackenzie government had done the same. What the Conservative government did was to offer these limits to men who would be likely to build mills and go into the operation of making lumber. When application was made for a timber limit, it was allotted to the applicant and he was given a certain period of time —I am not sure of the exact period—in which to define his limit, make a survey and get a license. Then, after the license was granted, he was given a certain further period in which to erect a sawmill. I think the regulations were to this effect. He had to erect a mill inside of twelve months and keep it running for six months during each year. At first sight this appears to be a great inducement to men in the lumber business ; but after those who took advantage of these regulations got into the country and made a survey, they found that the cost of erecting a mill, the small demand for lumber, and the conditions generally would not warrant the investment. Further, it must be remembered that in order to bring machinery into that country, it had to be transported overland a distance of 400 or 500 miles if brought from Montana, and if brought from Winnipeg, 1,000 miles west of that city. This was a big undertaking, and when these men saw what they were up against, very few of them took out a license. And those who did, saw it was hardly worth while to follow up their license by actual operations, because there were not sufficient settlers in that country to consume the lumber. What was the result? The result was that these limits were practically all given back to the government. I do not see, therefore, why we should blame the Conservative government for what they then did. It was necessary that there should be a supply of lumber if that country was to be settled. Without such supply, you could not get further settlement into the country, and that is the explanation why so much timber land was granted during the years 1881 and 1882. But since then conditions have changed, and during the last four or five years we have an immense settlement in that country. Ten years ago settlement began to come in rapidly. Then was the beginning of the great influx, and to-day these vast prairies are all settled. Ten years ago this government still retained a large portion of good timber in the Northwest around the skirts of this great prairie; and when settlement began to come in, if this government had been wise, they would have changed the regulations. But they did not. The timber regulataions have continued the same practically up to the present. In fact the present administration have even become more lax in their regulations.

But going back to 1882, I know of numerous cases in which the government insisted on these men who held licenses erecting sawmills and going into the business of sawing lumber. It was by enforcing these regulations that these men were compelled to give up their limits. Would it not then have been wise for this government, in the last four years, to have taken the whole question into consideration and have forced these men, who were applying for license, to erect sawmills, or else keep the limits in the hands of the government? A wise administration would have taken that course in the general good of the country.

The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) replied to the attack from this side by saying that if the transactions which were shown up are all wrong, this government was no worse than its predecessors. I fail to see how such a reply can be at all dignified by the name of argument. The Conservative party ran their day. I presume they did what they considered was best for the country, but the people did not approve of their administration and they were turned out of office; and if the signs of the times mean anything, this present government will go the same way the very next time the people have an opportunity of pronouncing a verdict. But there will be this difference between the two parties. It can be said to the credit of the Conservative party that the majority of the members who went out in 1896 went out poor men. But if rumour be true——

An hon. MEMBER. Facts.

Mr. HERRON. I think we may say facts. There are a lot of gentlemen opposite who will never be compelled to go to the poorhouse. A great many of them have profited immensely by the lax way in which these regulations concerning timber lands have been administered. These timber lands have been described in this debate as extending from Lake Winnipeg on the east up along north Saskatchewan to the Rockies, a distance of about 1,000 miles, and down the foothills of the Rockies to the boundary line. That is the timber range which is just outside the fringe of the great prairies of the Northwest. This prairie country is not only a good market for timber to-day but is going to be for years to come. It will probably be one of the greatest markets in the world, and we find that all the timber limits are practically in the hands of speculators. Yet on only a few of these limits are there any mills in operation. Nearly all of them are being offered for sale.

I want to speak more particularly about two or three limits in my own riding, which are of great value, and which, I have no hesitation in saying, are held for speculation. Last year, a committee was appointed by this House to investigate the lumber conditions of the Northwest. And we found that a lumber combine existed. On that being made clear, would it not have been a wise policy for the government to enforce these regulations? They say they have power to force the holder of a timber limit to build a sawmill. Would it not have tended to alleviate the condition of the settlers to compel the holders to operate these limits? At that time, things had come to such a pass that many settlers were absolutely unable to secure lumber to erect houses. And yet, in the face of that, we had these timber areas held unused for mere purposes of speculation. Now, it was proved last session before that committee that men who owned limits in the Northwest were in this combine. I think it was proven—it certainly was proven to my satisfaction, and I think to the satisfaction of every member of the committee that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) was a member of that combine. There were others who obtained these limits—I do not say fraudulently—but I am saying this to show that the government should have enforced the regulations in order to help relieve the situation at that time.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Does the hon. member (Mr. Herron) know of any limits in the Northwest, such as he has described, that are tributary to existing markets and are not being operated?

Mr. HERRON. I have two or three such cases, and, as I am anxious to satisfy the hon. member (Mr. Duncan Ross) I will tell him about them now. In the first place there is timber berth 114, area eighteen and a quarter square miles, date of advertisement November 20, 1903, date of opening tender December 30, 1903. The applicant who applied to have the berth put up was G. A. Sharp. The tenders were K. McDonald with a bid of $2,327; A. J. Maguire, with a bid of $275.75 and G. A. Sharp, $51.50. K. McDonald was the successful tenderer. On the same date, berth 115, area seventeen square miles, advertised on November 20, tenders opened December 30—a period of forty days—applicant C. G. Frith. The tenderers were C. G. Frith, $1,275; A. J. Maguire, $255; and G. A. Sharp, $51.50. The successful tenderer was C. G. Frith, a gentleman who was associated with Mr. McDonald in all his lumber transactions in that country. The third berth to which I would refer is berth 1,157, thirty and a half square miles, advertised February 27, 1904, tenders opened April 6, 1904—a period of thirty-seven days. The applicants to have the berth put up was G. A. Sharp. The tenderers were A. and H. McDonald $501, C. G. Frith $501. In this case Mr. Frith was the successful tenderer. Now, limits No. 114 and 115 are about from four to six miles north of the town of Coleman and not more than six miles north of the Canadian Pacific Railway. They are not more than six miles from two other flourishing towns—towns from two thousand to three thousand inhabitants.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The McDonalds are active sawmill men, are they not ?

Mr. HERRON. They have no sawmill there.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. They are running a sawmill in the Crow's Nest Pass are they not ?

Mr. HERRON. Not to my knowledge—not in the province of Alberta.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. But they are active sawmill men, are they not ?

Mr. HERRON. I cannot answer that.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Herron) knows whether they are or not.

Mr. HERRON. So far as I am aware, they have not a saw-mill in Alberta ; that is all the information I can give my hon. friend (Mr. Duncan Ross). Berth No. 1157 is situated about five or six miles south of the town of Coleman and easily accessible to means of transportation either by stream or railway. Yet these limits, thus close to towns affording a market, are held for speculation. They are offered for sale by these men. If the limits are not worked, it is not because timber is not badly needed in that country. Nor is it because there is much opposition, for there is only one sawmill within fifty miles. Another fact worth noting is that these limits lie near to the prairie country where there is no timber. They are practically on the very border of the great prairies of Alberta—the wheat growing belt. I suppose the timber stands within ten miles of the wheat-growing belt. But that is not the only thing that makes these limits valuable. Underlying that country are great beds of coal ; and it is believed that the timber will be valuable for mining purposes—making props and other timbers needed in the mines. It is believed that timber will be an actual necessity when coal mining begins. Some of the mines in that district use imported timber now. I suppose that this prospective demand is the reason why those parties would rather hold the limits for the prices I will mention. They paid $4,104 for these three timber limits. The last speaker, (Mr. Miller) said that others who have spoken in this debate exaggerated the value of the timber limits. I take issue on that point, and I say that not one of the speakers has put an estimate on this timber of anywhere near half its value. Of course, I cannot speak for the accuracy of their statements regarding the timber in the northern country ; but I do speak with confidence of the three particular limits in my own riding. I am prepared to give my figures and let the people of the country in which I live judge whether my statements are correct or not.

Hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the values of timber have estimated that these limits will furnish anywhere from 1,000,000 to 5,000,000 feet of lumber per square mile. According to my estimate, the quantity of timber on each mile is about 8,000,000 feet.

Mr. BURROWS. What kind of timber ?

Mr. HERRON. Mostly red fire pine, and some spruce. In that locality the average is about 7,500,000 feet, but it runs from 5,000,000 to 10,000,000 per square mile, east of the Rockies. If hon. gentlemen here think these figures are not correct, I am prepared to make the statement that there are areas of timber in that country that will yield 25,000,000 feet to the mile.

Mr. MILLER. What I said was that there was no instance of actual sales given to us to prove the value, they are only estimates.

Mr. HERRON. I will show before I am through that it is not the fault of these gentlemen if there are no sales made, because I have their offer here to make a sale.

Mr. MILLER. Have you any case in which the offers have been accepted ?

Mr. HERRON. No, I have not, but I am going to show you what I think timber is worth. I say there is timber land in that country that will run as high as 25,000,000 feet to the square mile ; but that is the exception.

Mr. BURROWS. How big does it grow ?

Mr. HERRON. Three feet at the stump and 65 feet high. I know miles of timber in that country where it stands as thick as it can grow. I consider therefore that 8,000,000 feet to a square mile is a fair estimate for these limits, I believe these particular limits will average that at the least. Now suppose it is worth a dollar a thousand on the stump, and I think it is surely worth that at a speculative value. It has been estimated in this debate that timber should be worth $2 a thousand, and even $2.50. I am told that the Hudson Bay Company sell no timber for less than $2.50 a thousand on the stump. Whether that is correct or not I do not know. But estimating it worth $1 a thousand on the stump, and 8,000,000 feet per square mile, these 65 miles that these gentlemen own in that country would consequently be worth $520,000. If you estimate the quantity at 5,000,000 feet per square mile, that would reduce the value to $325,000. Now these gentlemen obtained this timber for $4,104, they have held it for four years, and they are now offering it for $100,000. Mr. McDonald, of Ottawa, has offered this timber limit for sale at $100,000.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Does the hon. gentleman say that it is worth $525,000, and that the McDonald brothers are offering it for sale at $100,000.

Mr. HERRON. Yes, and I think they would make a very good profit out of it at $100,000, seeing they got it for nearly nothing. That would yield them a net profit of $96,000.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Is the hon. gentleman aware that immediately across on the British Columbia side, you can buy timber for 25 cents a thousand on the stump, which would bring the price down to about what they are offering it for, instead of $2 a thousand.

Mr. HERRON. I estimate it at $1 per thousand. If there is any good timber east of the mountains for 25 cents, I think it is very cheap. But these gentlemen are getting an immense profit out of their speculation, even at $100,000.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Does the hon. gentleman say that anybody has offered to purchase that property at that figure?

Mr. HERRON. No one has offered to purchase it, but they are offering to sell it for that figure. So I think that is a fair indication that they have been holding it for speculation. I think their offer is a very moderate one.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. And nobody will buy it?

Mr. HERRON. I think all the facts go to show that the government have not been handling the assets of this country to the advantage of the people. If this timber is worth $100,000, why don't the government dispose of it instead of putting it into the hands of men who are simply holding it for speculation?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me, as I am looking for information? He says this timber is within six miles of the town of Coleman, and that it is convenient to the Canadian Pacific Railway. He is well aware that the timber industry in the Crow's Nest country has been one of the chief industries there, that there are a number of mills in the Crow's Nest Pass, and a number of lumber operators there. He also says that forty-two days were given to advertise this timber, and he knows that under the regulations of the department a notice that this timber is for sale is sent to the different people who are interested in the lumber industry. Now, I want to ask him this question: Under these circumstances, why, if this timber is worth so much money, was there not a bid from other people for more than $4,000, when they knew all about it, and it was within six miles of a railway, so that they could go and see it at any time?

Mr. HERRON. An answer to part of the hon. gentleman's question is that at the time this timber was sold I do not think there was a newspaper within forty or fifty miles of the locality, perhaps within sixty or seventy miles, that is on the Alberta side.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. But notices were mailed to the timber men.

Mr. HERRON. We have no guarantee that they were mailed. That is supposed to be the regulation, but we have no guarantee that it is carried into effect. I do not think any one can come forward now and prove to this House that notices were sent to mill operators all over the country that these limits were to be sold. I think it has not been the case that they have done so. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that if these limits are worth more than is offered by these gentlemen, the government should not have sold these limits; and if they could not be sold at some near approach of their value, then they should be retained for the good of the settlers of the country. That is one of the reasons why the House should support this amendment and grant an investigation into this whole question. I might say, with perhaps some justice to the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), that I know cases where application has been made to have limits put up for sale, and he has refused to allow them to be put up. Whether that is only within the last year or two, and whether it was for the protection of the people or not, I give the minister credit at least for doing that, and I am glad to see that the regulations have been changed. I think, however, it is a case, as I said the other night, of locking the door after the horse is stolen. The settlers will have to pay these enormous profits that are now going into the hands of speculators, and the country is just set back that much by the lax way in which its timber resources have been handled.

On motion of Mr. Boyce the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 3, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) presented a message from His Excellency the Governor General, which was read by Mr. Speaker, as follows :—

GREY.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the twelve months ending 31st March, 1908, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, February 3, 1908.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, the estimates, together with His Excellency's message, were referred to the Committee of Supply.

PRINTING OF REPORT OF ROYAL GRAIN COMMISSION.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. LAKE. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask when the report of the Royal Grain Commission, which was presented some time ago, is likely to be printed and distributed ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Inquiries will be made by the clerk and the information given.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the government whether or not there is any objection to bringing down without further motion additional papers connected with the Metlakatla Indian reserve ? The Minister of the Interior will no doubt remember that papers were brought down last year up to that time ; the statement then was and the fact was that no grant had been issued. I understand that since then there has been an opinion from the Department of Justice upon which a grant has been issued. Of course if a further motion is required I will make it but I thought it might perhaps be not out of place to ask that these papers should be brought down without further motion in order to complete the return.

Mr. OLIVER. A motion was passed a few days ago and papers were brought down subsequent to the order of last year ; if my hon. friend will examine these papers he can let me know if there are any further papers desired and I shall bring them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not aware that papers had been brought down ; what I wanted particularly was the opinion of the Department of Justice and the grant. I shall examine the file and let the minister know.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—REPORT OF COMMITTEE MEETING.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw attention to a report of a committee meeting in the 'Globe' of Saturday, February 1, which reads :

Mr. Bennett, with characteristic unscrupulosity, spent a couple of hours in the Public Accounts Committee to-day in a vain effort to 'get level' in his own elegant parlance, with a political opponent in his own constituency, and to discredit Hon. A. G. MacKay, the leader of the opposition in the Ontario legislature. What he did succeed in doing was to prove once again the egregious folly which governs the actions of the opposition in these days. The facts demonstrated were these: In 1905 certain dredging works had to be done in Matchedash bay, and following the usual course the Department of Public Works called for tenders. These were put in, one by the Penetanguishene Dredging Company, another by the Owen Sound Dredging and Construction Company, and a third by Mr. H. W. Prendergast, Montreal. Mr Prendergast's tender, being the lowest, was accepted.

And further down :

When it is remembered that the successful tenderer was neither Mr. McKay nor Mr. Kastner, but Mr. Prendergast, against whom no suggestion of collusion is made, the absurdity of Mr. Bennett's case is manifest, and yet this is the way in which the time of the committee and of the House is being wasted, simply that Mr. Bennett may indulge his personal spleen and political prejudice.

The subject of the inquiry was not at all the dredging to be done at Matchedash bay; it was the dredging at Matchedash bay and Penetanguishene and it was proved beyond peradventure by the production of the original documents that Mr. McKay had——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member of course is referring to something which took place before the committee and has not yet been reported to the House. While the hon. member did not say so, I understood that he was introducing this as a matter of privilege. As far as it is a matter of privilege it is proper to refer to it here ; but what has happened in the committee is not a proper subject of reference in the House until it is reported.

Mr. BENNETT. The newspaper article attributes certain things to me which are untrue, and I am endeavouring to make an explanation of the true proceedings. What was proved beyond peradventure was that Mr. McKay——

Some Hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is entitled to set himself right but beyond that it would not be proper for him to go.

Mr. BENNETT. That is all I ask the House to permit me to do. I did not endeavour to prove before the committee what the 'Globe' said I did, but what I did endeavour to prove was that there were two separate and distinct contracts, that on these two, the Hon. Mr. Mackay, the leader of the opposition in Ontario, had based a tender, that these two tenders were contained in an envelope, that two tenders of a rival contracting firm were contained in an envelope of the firm of Mr. Mackay, the leader of the opposition in Ontario——

Mr. JOHNSTON. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is discussing a matter that is still before the Public Accounts Committee; and until such a time as the committee reports, he has no right to give an ex parte statement in this House.

Mr. FOSTER. What, it seems to me, the hon. gentleman was endeavouring to do was this, and I think he had the right to do it. He is charged by the 'Globe' newspaper of having done certain things in the Public Accounts Committee. He rises to a question of privilege and says he did not do them, and then goes on to say what he did endeavour to do. He is not saying what was done in the committee, but simply what he endeavoured to do, and he is showing this in order to set himself right.

Mr. SPEAKER. When the hon. gentleman complains of having been misreported by a newspaper, he is in order in making a correction or personal explanation.

Mr. BENNETT. That is what I am endeavouring to do. I endeavoured to prove in the committee by the production of the original document that when Mr. Kestner, representing the Penetanguishene Dredging Company had inclosed two tenders—one for the work at Penetanguishene and another for the Matchedash bay—in an envelope, it was the office envelope of the Hon. Mr. Mackay, used by him in his law office in the town of Owen Sound. I then endeavoured to prove that Mr. Mackay, as the president——

Mr. SPEAKER. That is going beyond what is permitted under the circumstances. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that a newspaper had misrepresented him. It is quite open to him to set that right, but not to enter upon a discussion of what occurred before the committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All I understood he was doing is this. The newspaper in question charged him with endeavouring to prove a certain thing. He says that he did not endeavour to prove that and then goes on to relate what it was he did endeavour to prove.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. BENNETT. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I am endeavouring to show that Mr. Mackay, as president of the Owen Sound Dredging Company, had inclosed two tenders.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is going contrary to your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is perfectly in order to state in what respect the newspaper in question misrepresented the hon. gentleman and to set that right by denial or otherwise, but it is quite apparent that the line of discussion which the hon. gentleman is following is simply a discussion here of what has occurred in the Public Accounts Committee, and that is not in order until that committee has reported.

Mr. BENNETT. I bow, Sir, to your ruling. But there is a part of the newspaper report which the House probably will permit me to mention. The newspaper says:

> Mr. Bennett to-day, in a vain effort to get level, in his eloquent parlance, with the political opponents in his own constituency—and so on.

That paragrapher implies that I said in the committee that my examination was solely for the purpose of getting level with a political opponent. I have this to say. Whoever wrote that paragraph wrote a statement that is absolutely devoid of truth, the writer was never informed by any one that I had made such a statement, it is absolutely false in every particular. The penny paragrapher who wrote this item, I congratulate upon being able to meet the wishes of the grafters who own the 'Globe' in publishing such untrue reports. There is another report in that newspaper, on page 13, written by a gentleman, and I have no fault to find with the report on page 13, written by a gentleman who is attached to the 'Globe.'

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. BOYCE. I would like to ask when the return with reference to timber berths 1048, 1059, 1152, 1068, 1050, 1265, 1274, 1275, ordered the 18th December last will be brought down?

Mr. OLIVER. They are being prepared, but there are a large number of orders for returns, and it is impossible to furnish them any faster than is being done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask with respect to returns which I moved for some weeks ago regarding the distribution of fishing bounties in the county of Cape Breton. As the hon. the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur) is not in his place, would my right hon. friend the First Minister call his attention to it?

Mr. FOSTER. Also a return called for some time ago from the Department of Agriculture, which, I understand, the Minister of Agriculture had about ready before he made that memorable trip to Stanstead. Perhaps that trip rather obliterated the return from his memory, but I should very much like to have it; and if he has now leisure to devote to that part of his work, I hope he will do so.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend has good reason to remember Stanstead. The return was made out and sent to the Secretary of State, but it was found there was some correspondence with the Marine department which had not yet been sent in. As soon as that is prepared—and the Minister of Marine promised it for this afternoon—the return will be laid on the table.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the Minister of Public Works lay on the table the report of the architect who drew the plans for the departmental building? I would like to have an opportunity of looking them over before we discuss the hotel site.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Plans were called for from architects in Canada generally, and a board of Council was appointed to determine their relative merits. Is it the report of that board which the hon. gentleman requires?

Mr. FOSTER. No, the report of the one who was adjudged to have furnished the best plan.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was distinctly understood, when the board or committee was appointed and architects invited to furnish plans, that the department would not be under any obligation to accept the plan which got the first prize, so that no plan has yet been accepted. I think perhaps that the best information I can give would be to supply the hon. gentleman with the report generally upon all the plans and particularly upon the one which received the first prize.

Mr. BOYCE. When may we expect the return ordered on the 18th December with regard to dredging in Kaministiquia river, Port Arthur, Sault St. Marie, and the Mission river? It is important that the preparation of these should be accelerated because the documents are very much needed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is impossible to tell just how soon the report can be laid on the table. A few days ago I laid on the table a very voluminous report which had just been completed. I am informed by the officials that there are not sufficient of them to make the returns with any degree of promptness. The rooms of the department are very limited. There is no accommodation for additional clerks and it is not regarded as good practice to employ the present clerks after hours for the purpose of copying these returns. I shall do the best possible to get the return down, but there are a large number called for, and each must come in its regular order.

ALIENATION OF TIMBER LIMITS.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to ask the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) if he can send me, or lay on the table of the House, his make-up of the statistics that he read here the other night in his speech. He had them in his hand and he gave us a statement of the number of square miles of timber limits which were alienated by the Mackenzie government, the number that were alienated by the Liberal-Conservative government succeeding, and those of the Liberal government since 1896, giving areas, amounts received and a calculation as to the average per mile. In his speech he said those were the records of the department. I would ask very kindly if he would send me his statement of the make-up so that I may verify it if possible.

Mr. TURRIFF. I have not got the papers in my hand, but I think I can get them and will send them to him.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 86) to incorporate the Northern Empire Railway Company—Mr. Caron.

Bill (No. 88) to incorporate the Institute of Architects of Canada.—Mr. Walsh (Montreal, St. Anns).

QUESTIONS.

SOURIS, P.E.I., PUBLIC WORKS.

2. Was the contract let by public tender?
3. What is the amount of the contract?
4. How much has been paid to the contractor to date?
5. Is this block being constructed for government purposes? If so, what?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes; for an extension to the present wharf at Souris. Contract awarded to E. A. Wallberg, his tender being the lowest.
2. Yes.
3. Schedule rates.
4. $47,460.44.
5. Yes, for the requirements of the Prince Edward Island Railway.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY BETWEEN MONCTON AND WINNIPEG.

Mr. KEMP—by Mr. Foster—asked:

1. How many miles of the National Transcontinental Railway have been located between Moncton and Winnipeg?

2. How many miles remain to be located?
3. How many miles of construction are there now under contract, and in what districts is such construction being carried on?
4. Is it the intention to let further contracts during the year 1908? If so, to what extent, and in what districts?
5. What is the total amount of obligations entered into, together with disbursements already made in connection with the surveys, terminals, administration and construction of the National Transcontinental Railway between Winnipeg and Monction?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Railways) :

1. Approximately 1,803 miles.
2. Approximately 4 miles and revision at a number of points already located.
3. 859 miles as follows : District A, 58 miles Moncton westerly; 61 miles easterly from Quebec; boundary to near Grand Falls. District B, 150 miles Quebec bridge easterly; 195 miles Quebec bridge westerly. Districts C and D, 150 miles from eight miles west of the Abitibi river, crossing easterly. District F, From Lake Superior Junction westerly about 245 miles.
4. Yes. District A, about 138 miles; district B, about 52 miles; district D, about 100 miles; district E, about 75 miles.
5. Estimated amount of obligations entered into about $38,000,000. Disbursements made to 28th January, $21,364,364.34.

I.C.R.—PASSES TO MR. P. S. ARCHIBALD, C.E.

Mr. EMMERSON asked :

1. Were any passes issued by the Intercolonial Railway to Mr. P. S. Archibald, C.E., and to any member of his family during the year 1907?
2. If any, what are the names of the members of the family to whom any such passes were issued, and the dates of issue respectively?
3. By whose authority were such passes issued, if any?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Railways) :

1. Yes, in accordance with the usual courtesy extended by one railway system to another, an annual pass was granted at Ottawa in favour of P. S. Archibald as general manager of the Elgin and Havelock Railway.
2. June 14, 1907, a trip pass in favour of Mrs. Harris (Mrs. P. S. Archibald's daughter living with her) ; August 22, trip pass in favour of Mrs. P. S. Archibald ; November 14, trip pass in favour of Mrs. P. S. Archibald.
3. The above trip passes were granted by the general manager of Canadian Government Railways at Moncton on account of Mr. P. S. Archibald, general manager of Elgin and Havelock Railway.

Mr. KEMP.

THOMAS WILLIAMS, EMPLOYEE, I.C.R.

Mr. EMMERSON asked :

1. Is Thomas Williams, formerly the accountant and treasurer of the Intercolonial Railway, now in the employ of that railway?
2. If so, what is the nature of his employment and the salary paid him therefor?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Railways). 1. Thomas Williams is still in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway, in the accountant's branch, as accountant, specially engaged in checking up the Grand Trunk accounts on the joint section in consequence of the arbitrator's award against that company, his salary being $2,700 per annum.

LOBSTER FISHERIES, P.E.I.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

Has the government received the following numerously signed petition? If so, what is the intention of the government as to the matter therein set forth :—

'To the Honourable L. P. Brodeur,
'Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
'Ottawa.

'Hon. Sir,—The petition of the undersigned, fishermen and other citizens of Prince Edward Island, humbly showeth:

'1. That under the present system of control in the lobster fisheries of the coast, licenses are restricted to certain parties with a right to catch and put up lobsters within a certain coastal area and within a given season.

'2. That licenses for new factories have been exceedingly difficult to obtain.

'3. That a number of the larger packing establishments, especially those in the hands of foreigners, have gradually acquired the plant and licenses of the less important local packers.

'4. That such control of the industry by monopoly is detrimental to the best interests of the province.

'5. That by such restriction of licenses the poorer fishermen are shut out from the larger emoluments of the industry.

'6. That rich corporations, especially those with headquarters in foreign countries, have recently acquired many franchises in the province of Prince Edward Island.

'7. That these corporations are a menace to the rights of fishermen, and may control the prices paid, raising them for the moment, thus driving out the smaller firms unable to compete with them, and then lowering the prices to the great damage of such fishermen.

'8. That this system of license inaugurated for the preservation of the fisheries should be modified as occasion requires, and certainly in such circumstances as we have cited.

'Therefore, we ask for the restoration of the rights of the fishermen of the province to secure licenses whenever such conditions as these arise, and thus prevent great injury being done to the fisheries and fishermen.

'And your petitioners will ever pray.'

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Marine). Yes. It has been the subject of representations which are receiving the most serious consideration.

SALE OF CATTLE BY CENTRAL EXPERIMENTAL FARM.

Mr. WM. JACKSON asked :

1. Did the management of the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, sell any pedigreed cattle during the years 1906 and 1907? If so, how many in each year, giving the different breeds?

2. What is the name of purchaser, his place of residence, price paid, and breed?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I would ask the hon. gentleman to put this in the form of a motion, as the answer would be rather long to read. In doing so I would ask him whether he uses the term 'cattle' in its restricted sense as meaning horn cattle ?

Mr. WM. JACKSON. Yes.

PORT BRUCE HARBOUR.

Mr. MARSHALL asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to spend any money on the Port Bruce harbour this year?

2. If so, how much?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1 and 2. It is the intention of the department to perform some dredging in the harbour of Port Bruce during next season; the estimated cost of the work is $855.

SEIZURE OF STEAMER 'COQUITLAM.'

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY asked :

1. Has any action been taken recently by the government to secure compensation from the United States authorities for seizure of the steamer 'Coquitlam'?

2. Is the government aware that such seizure has been declared by the United States courts to be illegal?

3. Is it the intention of the government to press for speedy settlement of several outstanding claims by Canadian sealers against the United States government?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.

2. The government is aware that the United States court of Appeal reached a decision in favour of the 'Coquitlam' and dismissed the libel against her.

3. The government has been and is continuing to press for a settlement of all outstanding claims against the United States government.

FISHERIES IN LAKE WINNIPEG.

Mr. SCHAFFNER asked :

1. Does the government contemplate any legislation having for its purport the closing of Lake Winnipeg to commercial fishing for whitefish by tugs?

2. Has any representation been made to the government regarding the depletion of fish in Lake Winnipeg?

3. What action has been taken by the government to preserve the fisheries in Lake Winnipeg?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. No such change is at present contemplated.

2. Yes.

3. The following changes were last year made in the regulations for Lake Winnipeg : A 5¼ inches mesh was required in whitefish nets instead of a 5 inches mesh as previously. The fishing season for whitefish under 'domestic' licenses was limited to the 'winter fishery' beginning after the 30th of November. Previously there was a close season for such fishing only from the 5th of October to the 30th of November. The fishing season for 'commercial' whitefish fishing which was previously from the 1st of May to the 31st of August was restricted to, from the 1st June to the 15th of August. A 4¼ inch. mesh was required in pickerel nets instead of 4 inch as previously. The close season for pickerel which was previously from the 1st of April to the 15th of May was extended to the 20th of June, and it is the intention to have a commission inquire into the conditions of the fisheries of Lake Winnipeg and other western waters during the coming summer, with a view to reaching regulations to best meet the requirements.

MR. F. F. FORBES—APPOINTMENT AS DISTRICT JUDGE.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. What information did the Department of Justice possess, or what inquiries or investigations did the department make as to the character, fitness and professional standing of Mr. Frederick Fraser Forbes, before and at the time of his appointment as district judge in the province of Saskatchewan?

2. Was the department at the time of said appointment aware that matters affecting Mr. Forbes were reported in the territorial law reports, volume 2, at pages 410, 423 and 447?

3. Was any action taken subsequent to the 11th June, 1897, with reference to the matters in said report referred to? If so, with what result, or where is the record thereof to be obtained?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) :

1. Mr. Forbes was considered to possess the qualifications required for the position and no question was raised as to his character or professional standing.

2. No.

3. The department is unable to say.

SALVATION ARMY IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. MARSHALL asked :

1. Has the attention of the government been called to a public statement recently made by General Booth of the Salvation Army, in Birmingham, England, to the following effect:—' He had wired to the government of Canada and had received a reply to the effect that of the twenty thousand immigrants sent out by the Army during the last two or three years, a hundred could not be found who were out of employment?

2. What are the terms of General Booth's message and the government's reply, to which reference was made in the above statement?

3. If the reply of the government was such as General Booth states it was, what means did the government adopt to ascertain the actual number of unemployed among such immigrants?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The government has no information on the subject.

CANADIAN CLAIMS FOR SEIZURE BY RUSSIANS.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Is the government aware that the sum of $82,544 has been paid to the high commissioner in England for the Russian government in settlement of outstanding claims for wrongful seizure of Canadian vessels? If so, has the government received the same?

2. Has the government determined the nature of the distribution?

3. Who will participate in such distribution?

4. What will the parties severally receive?

5. When may the owners expect to receive the payments due them?

Rt. Hon. SIR WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

1. The government has received in such connection the sum of £16,962 5s. 8d., equivalent to $82,549.77 through the High Commissioner.

2. The matter is now under consideration.

3, 4 and 5. Answered by No. 2.

REVENUE FROM WHARFS AND PIERS.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

What amount of revenue has been received from wharfs, piers, and harbours, for the years 1895 and 1907 respectively, showing amount received in each province?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The revenue is by fiscal year for nine months.

NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY.

Mr. LENNOX—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Referring to letter of Mr. F. C. Blair, as set out on page L—80 of Auditor General's Report for the year 1906-07, were any measures taken to ascertain whether or not the 10,636 persons referred to in said letter, or any of them, were induced or influenced to come to Canada by any act or proceeding of the North Atlantic Trading Company or its agents?

2. If so, what measures and with what results?

3. If not, why not?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. No.

2 and 3. Because the contract with the company stipulated that if a certain amount of money was expended by the company, in countries mentioned in the contract, in emigration work on behalf of Canada, the government would allow the company a bonus on agriculturists and domestics arriving in Canada from the countries covered by the said contract.

Steps were taken to assure the government that the amount named in the contract was spent and the Immigration Branch examined incoming immigrants in order to discover those on whom bonus was due according to the contract.

DREDGING AT MOUTH OF BECANCOUR RIVER.

Mr. BERGERON—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. During the year 1907 did the government have any dredging work done at the mouth of Bécancour river, in the county of Nicolet?

2. If so, by whom was such work done?

3. Was it day work or by the yard?

4. Who was in charge of the work, and what was his salary?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes.

2. L. E. Dufresne and F. E. Turcotte.
3. By the yard.
4. Paul Leduc ; salary, $2.50 per day.

MR. WM. MAXWELLL SMITH, FRUIT INSPECTOR.

Mr. SPROULE—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. What is the annual salary or remuneration of W. Maxwell Smith, Dominion fruit inspector in British Columbia?
2. What are the terms of the contract or arrangement under which he is employed by the government?
3. Is he paid a salary for twelve months in the year? If not, for how many months, and for what period?
4. How many days was he actually engaged in the performance of his duties during the years 1906 and 1907, respectively?
5. What were his expenses for 1906 and 1907, respectively?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. $1,250 per year since April 1, 1907.
2. He was appointed Dominion Fruit Inspector on August 1, 1903, at a salary of $1,100 per year, since increased as above, with actual expenses allowed when travelling on government business.
3. Yes. He is paid for 12 months services in the year.
4. He was engaged in the performance of his duties continuously during the years 1906 and 1907. A portion of his time was spent in attending fruit growers and farmers institute meetings and acting as an instructor in orchard work.
5. In 1906.. .. .. $961 38
In 1907.. .. .. 215 80.

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SPROULE—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. What land has been withdrawn for settlement, or set apart, or sold, for colonization purposes, since 1896?
2. What is the location and amount in each case, specifying townships, sections, half or quarter sections?
3. To whom has it been sold, or alienated, and on what terms of settlement?
4. What was the price per acre, on terms of payment, and what is the nationality of the settlers in each colony?
5. When was the land sold, alienated, reserved, or set apart, for such purpose, in each case?
6. How many of these companies have complied with their contracts, and to what extent?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). This requires a very voluminous answer and I would ask the hon. gentleman to move for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion for a return.

QUEBEC BRIDGE—DOMINION GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE.

Mr. SPROULE—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. What is the amount of money that has been raised by loan or otherwise, and guaranteed by the Dominion, by the Quebec Bridge Company?
2. Has the government paid off these loans, or other obligations?
3. If so, how was the money raised for that purpose?
4. On what terms, and at what rate of interest?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The bonds of the Quebec Bridge Company guaranteed by the government have not been sold. Money were raised by the company on the pledge of the bonds with the Bank of Montreal at the interest rate of five per cent per annum. The amount due the Bank of Montreal by the Bridge company for such advances and interest on June 30, 1907, was $5,561,507.23.

EXPENDITURE ON PUBLIC WORKS AT CLARK CITY, QUEBEC.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Barker—asked :

1. What is the total amount expended to date by the government on public works at Clark City, in the province of Quebec, or in the Bay of Seven Islands?
2. Are there any further works to be executed at the Bay of Seven Islands, and what is the estimated cost of projected works still incompleted?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. $91,708.37.
2. Nothing proposed except completion of work now under contract with the North Shore Power Railway and Navigation Company, there is still a balance of $16,105.52 to be paid.

WHARF AT POINTE-AUX-TREMBLES.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Barker—asked :

1. Up to the date of January 7, 1908, how many tenders did the Department of Public Works receive for the completion of the construction of the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles, county of Portneuf?
2. What is the name of each tenderer, and the amount asked by each of them?
3. Has the contract been awarded? If so, to whom and at what date was the contract signed?
4. If not, why not?
5. If the contract has been awarded, what amount has the contractor deposited as security?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Two.
2. Onésime Poliquin, $22,490 ; J. A. Lemay, $24,500.

3 and 4. (a) Yes. (b) Onésime Poliquin. (c) Contract forwarded for signature and not yet returned.

5. An accepted bank cheque for $2,500.

JURISDICTION OVER FISHERIES.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens) asked :

1. Has the government taken any steps to arrange the dispute existing between the Dominion and the maritime provinces concerning the fisheries? If so, what are they?

2. What difficulties prevent an amicable settlement of those disputes, and what is their nature?

3. Is the government aware that this 'divided jurisdiction' between the federal government and the governments of those provinces has proved detrimental to the fisheries interests of those provinces?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. The government is appointing a delegate with power to discuss with accredited representatives of the various local governments affected, the question of the relative rights and jurisdiction with respect to the fisheries.

2. The government is unaware of any difficulties which should prevent an amicable settlement of rights.

3. No ; but the government appreciates that the fisheries interests could proceed on a better and more satisfactory basis with undivided jurisdiction.

COAL LAND LEASES.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked :

1. How many coal land leases have been issued under the new regulations of April last?

2. What are the names and addresses of lessees?

3. How many applicants have withdrawn their applications to lease, and have obtained refund of application fee?

Hon. F. OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

WITHDRAWAL OF INDIAN LANDS FROM SALE.

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. In what townships in the district of Algoma have the undisposed of Indian lands been withdrawn from sale?

2. When was this ordered, and for what purpose?

3. Has any one been appointed to re-examine and revalue the same?

4. If so, who has been so appointed, and upon whose recommendation?

5. Is there any application filed in the department for these lands so withdrawn from sale, or any of them?

Hon. F. OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. The townships of Sheguiandah, Assiginack, Tehkummah, Sandfield, Howland, Billings, Campbell, Carnarvon, Gordon, Bidwell, Allan, Dawson, Robinson, Burpee, Barrie Island, Cockburn Island, Mills, Macdonald, Laird, Meredith, Kehoe, Duncan, Archibald, Tupper, Tilley, Vankoughnet, Fenwick, Ley, Herrick, Fisher, Kars and Dennis.

2. 2nd May, 1907, for the purpose of having the lands re-examined and re-valued.

3. Yes.

4. John Fraser, timber inspector and valuator, Gore Bay, recommended by the minister.

5. Yes, a number of applications have been received for individual lots.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

A copy of all correspondence between the Railway Commission and the Department of Railways and Canals, or the Intercolonial Railway, and between the Railway Commission and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Grand Trunk Railway, and between the Railway Commission and the Fredericton Board of Trade, in reference to the alleged discrimination against the City of Fredericton in the matter of freight rates. And also for a copy of all other papers and documents on file with the Railway Commission in relation thereto—Mr. Crocket by Mr. Blain.

A copy of all correspondence, contracts, telegrams, reports, plans and specifications, together with all other information not already brought down, in possession of the government, relating to the construction of piers or docks already constructed or under construction at the following places: Bayfield, Huron County, Ontario; Grand Bend, Huron County, Ontario; St. Joseph, Huron County, Ontario; together with a statement of all moneys expended, and to whom paid, and the date of payment, and the nature of the work done or material used—Mr. Armstrong.

A return showing during the last ten years how much money has been expended by years by this government for printing and lithographing done inside of Canada; and for what reason such work was done out of Canada—Mr. Macdonell.

A copy of all correspondence between the government and any person or corporation with reference to the export to the United States of electrical power or energy produced at Niagara Falls, Ontario, together with the names of all persons or corporations exporting such power or energy, and the amount thereof and the duties thereon, respectively; together with a copy of all leases or licenses granted, and of the regulations of the Governor in Council in that behalf; and for a copy of all other papers and documents in relation to the above pursuant to the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, 1907.—Mr. Macdonell.

A copy of all correspondence, telegrams, engineer's reports, &c., in the hands of the government or any member or official thereof, respecting proposed repairs to the wharf at Little Sands, in Prince Edward Island—Mr. Martin (Queens).

A copy of all tenders, contracts, correspondence, plans, specifications, certificates, schedules, and all other papers and documents, including settlement agreements, claims or adjustments thereof, relating to the contract of Messrs. Murray & Cleveland to do the work at the eastern gap at Toronto Harbour, which work was completed in or about the year 1896.—Mr. Macdonell.

A copy of the clauses and conditions, regulations and the specifications contained in the contracts, in virtue of which the National Transcontinental Railway is being built, and that are for the purpose of safeguarding, securing and guaranteeing the suppliers of the contractors to whom the work of construction has been accorded, the payment of their claims against the said contractors; likewise a list of the contracts signed, up to the present, in which appear the said clauses guaranteeing or securing the said suppliers the payment of their said bills or claims.—Mr. Morin.

A copy of all correspondence, reports and papers, respecting the salary, expenses, duties and annual period of employment of W. Maxwell Smith, Dominion fruit inspector in British Columbia; also, full detail of his expenses during the years 1906 and 1907, respectively.—Mr. Sproule by Mr. Blain.

A return showing what special immigration agents the government of Canada has in the British Islands; their respective names, and from what parts of Canada they came; the arrangements made by the government with the said agent or agents as to salary and expenses; the date of their respective appointments, and at what time they left this country to take up their work.—Mr. Uriah Wilson.

A copy of all letters, correspondence, applications, advertisements, reports, memoranda, valuations, estimates, tenders, transfers, or other writings or papers in respect of or in connection with timber berths Nos. 1413, 1414 and 1415.—Mr. Lennox.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Mr. R. A. PRINGLE (Stormont) moved:

That a select committee of nine be appointed to inquire into and consider a scheme or schemes by state aid or otherwise for making provisions for the aged and deserving poor, with special regard in case of any proposals of which they may approve, to their cost and probable financial results, and that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses on oath and affirmation.

He said: During the session of 1907 I brought to the attention of this House a resolution in favour of something being done for the relief of the aged and deserving poor. That resolution was debated on the 20th of February, and at the conclusion of the debate the right hon. the Prime Minister made some very sympathetic references to the matter, and the Minister of Labour made the statement that his department would certainly cooperate in the preliminary work required to be done before any legislation was presented to the House. In view of these statements I considered it in the best interests of those for whom I desire this legislation that the motion should be then allowed to drop so that we might have an expression of sentiment throughout the country in regard to the question. I announced then that I reserved to myself the right to move for a special committee to deal with this question. Unfortunately owing to the pressure of work during last session—although my resolution was on the Order Paper—it was not reached and consequently at the opening of this session I placed the same resolution upon the Order Paper. The question is a large one; it is a very important question; it is a question which has occupied the attention of the statesmen of all countries. Since we discussed this question here in the session of 1907 it has been most thoroughly discussed in the British House of Commons and a Bill dealing with the subject has been submitted to which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has given his support and has stated that a measure shall go through before the expiration of the present parliament. I noticed in the press of two or three days ago that a labour delegation had interviewed the right hon. the Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour and of that interview the press said :

In the matter of old age pensions Sir Wilfrid Laurier said if such a scheme were established they would have all the paupers and criminals of the United States coming to qualify for the 20 years residence. The scheme was certainly ahead of the times for Canada and although Sir Wilfrid Laurier was open to conviction as to its necessity, he would like to see the man who would convince him.

Well, I do not think I am the man who will be able to convince the right hon. the Prime Minister if he is prejudiced against any scheme which will provide some relief for the old and aged poor. But I would like to convince him that it would be a wise policy for this parliament to at least submit this question to a committee of the House so that it may be fully considered. Whether it could be considered this session or not I cannot say. But I do say that if this matter were submitted to a committee of this House for investigation, I believe that committee would be able to get at some result which would be for the benefit of the class of people for whom I am speaking. Hood's famous epitaph could still be written over the graves of many :

Rattle his bones over the stones
He's only a pauper whom nobody owns.

However, the question as it affects the man who, having spent the better part of life in working in the interest of his country, finds himself in need at the age of 65 or 70, in the twilight of his life, is an important question. It is a question which I think is worthy of the attention of this parliament. It is an old question. It is a question which has been before the public, I may say, since 1872, when a pamphlet was issued by Baron Maseres, containing a proposal for establishing life annuities. That was subsequently embodied in a Bill which passed the House of Commons in 1873, but was unfortunately rejected by the House of Lords.

It is in Daniel Defoe's 'Essay on Projects' that we first meet with a suggestion of a pensioning scheme, 'whereby all mankind, be he never so mean, so poor, so unable, shall gain for himself a just claim to a comfortable subsistence whenever age or disablement shall reduce him to a necessity of making use of it.' The 'project' of the brilliant journalist who wrote 'Robinson Crusoe' cannot, however, be taken in any but a strictly limited sense, to be a forerunner of modern old age pension schemes. Defoe probaby held the belief of his time, that the misfortunes of the poor were in no way connected with the organization of society, but were the outcome of their own thriftlessness and vice. However, he saw more clearly than any man of his time the defects of organized society as it then existed, and perhaps he saw, as Thomas Paine did half a century later, the helplessness of the individual in the days of his decrepitude, when all the forces of society were arrayed against him.

A very interesting discussion on this subject took place in the Senate last session. I spoke to my resolution on the 20th of February, 1907. On the 22nd of February, 1907, a question, with regard to old-age pensions, was asked in the Senate by Senator McMullen, and on a later day Sir Richard Cartwright brought down a draft Bill in regard to annuities. In the debate which followed, Sir Richard Cartwright, who made a very able speech, expressed himself as opposed to old age pensions on the ground that they would discourage thrift. Let me refer for a moment to the language he used on that occasion. It was on March 6, 1907, that he laid his draft Bill on the table with the remark : 'I now lay the document on the table for the information of the House' ; and in his speech, he said :

My own impression is that in a great many cases such a scheme would be found to encourage extravagance, and the result would be that the thrifty, industrious workingman would find himself compelled ultimately to bear the burden of his less industrious and possibly dissolute companion.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that those who have given to this matter the greatest consideration do not agree with the statement of Sir Richard Cartwright. I do not wish to take up the time of the House by quoting from reports of royal commissions in England, or from other sources, but I do say that the evidence shows that the statement made by Sir Richard Cartwright is not a correct statement. On the contrary, it shows that old-age pensions in Denmark do not discourage thrift. Take the evidence of the expert who appeared before the commission of 1893 ; take the evidence of the Hon. Mr. Reeves, who appeared before that commission as the agent of New Zealand ; take the report of the commission itself; and all are absolutely against that contention. If our great banks, our great industrial corporations, our great railway corporations, the Dominion parliament itself, thought pensions would discourage thrift, do you think pensions would be given by these institutions to their aged officials and by the Dominion government to the judges of this country ? I say that the evidence is entirely against the statement of Sir Richard Cartwright that old age pensions would discourage thrift.

Another ground which Sir Richard Cartwright took in the Senate was that the individual should be the sole contributor to his annuity scheme, the government contributing only slightly to the expenses of carrying it out. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the thrift schemes were thoroughly tested before the different committees which dealt with this matter, and those committees decided absolutely against them. Lord Aberdare's commission quoted with approval the opinion expressed by Mr. Chamberlain, 'that he had never seen how you could apply compulsion to any but persons who are in regular employment.' He was referring more particularly to the compulsory scheme in force in Germany. Lord Aberdare's Commission goes on to say :

> And the results were not more favourable in regard to the schemes contemplating voluntary payments.
> Those who would avail themselves of the advantages of the scheme would be limited in numbers, and would be mainly confined to the higher strata of the working classes.

I am not saying that I would oppose such a scheme as that proposed by Sir Richard Cartwright. The scheme may be a good one and when the hon. the Finance Minister brings down his Bill I shall be very pleased to discuss it fairly on its merits. There are advantages in the annuity scheme but we have that to-day in Great Britain and other countries, and yet the question of an old age pension which would reach a class that would be unable to contribute towards the annuity scheme is still to the fore in those countries.

We have had different commissions dealing with this matter in England and I shall run over them very hurriedly and briefly. We had the select committee of 1885 and 1887. Those who have taken any interest in that matter will remember that that commission dealt more particularly with an annuity scheme propounded by Canon Blakeley, who had taken a keen interest in this matter. This might be called a thrift scheme by which those who ultimately participated had to contribute. The members of this committee after dealing with the scheme in 1885 and 1887 said that :

> Although the reference was to inquire into the system of national providence insurance against pauperism, the inquiry has practically narrowed itself into one particular scheme, namely that formulated by the Rev. W. L. Blakely, Hon. Canon of Winchester.
> The committee were unable to recommend the adoption of the scheme, partly on account of the difficulties connected with the proposals as to sickness and accident and also on account of the general objection to any system of compulsion.

The next important step was in 1893, when a Royal Commission was appointed under the chairmanship of Lord Aberdeen to consider the question generally ; although the commissioners examined a large number of pension schemes they did not recommend the adoption of any. After that four committees were appointed ; the committee on old age pensions, Lord Rothschild chairman, in 1896, was appointed to consider the scheme for encouraging the industrial population, by state aid or otherwise, to make provision for old age. That committee examined over 100 schemes but found fault with them all. In the library are to be found very voluminous works dealing with the work done by all the committees that had this matter under their consideration. The second of the four committees was the select committee on the aged and deserving poor, Mr. Chaplin's committee, which was appointed in 1899 to consider and report upon the best means of improving the condition of the aged and deserving poor and providing for those of them who were helpless and infirm. Differing from its predecessors, this committee discovered a suitable pension scheme and reported definitely in its favour, with the result that the efforts of the two subsequent committees were expended in developing and improving a pension scheme thus discovered. These two last committees were officially designated, the one the departmental committee on aged and deserving poor. Sir E. Hamilton, chairman, appointed in 1900 ; and the other the select committee on the Aged Pensioners Bill, appointed in 1903. These are the committees which have investigated the subject authoritatively and elucidated its leading principles. Their labours have been so thorough that by common consent there is no further need of elaborate inquiry into the principle of the subject, all that remains to do in England is to settle the details. That was the opinion expressed by the last committee, the committee of 1903. The committee reported

> That, all the materials available apart from actual experiment for the purpose enabling parliament to arrive at a decision upon the subject of old age pensions, have been exhausted in the numerous inquiries that have already taken place.

And the president of the local government board, declared in the House of Commons on the 10th of May, 1907, that > If anything was to be done it should be worked out not by a committee but by the departments of the State.

However, Sir, from all this mass of exhaustive information one pension scheme emerges, namely that which gained the support of Mr. Chaplin's committee of 1899 and was further developed by the two subsequent committees. Of all the pension schemes which have been propounded in the United Kingdom this one of Mr. Chaplin's is now the most authoritative. It has enjoyed sympathetic treatment and development at the hands of three parliamentary committees when no other pension scheme could gain any commendation at all.

We have heard a great deal of the operation of old age pensions in some of our newer British colonies. We have heard of the operation of old age pensions in New Zealand. I do not intend to detain the House by going through the whole history of old age pensions in New Zealand; but I do wish to say that great credit is due to the late Mr. R. G. Seddon, who persisted from 1894 down to 1898, until he secured in placing upon the statute-books of New Zealand, a Bill providing for pensions for the aged. We remember that when that matter first came before a committee of the New Zealand House in 1894 it met with great hostility. In 1896 he introduced a Bill in the House and in 1897 he was able to carry a Bill through the House but the upper House threw out the Bill. He persisted and in 1898 put through the first old age pension Bill for the colony of New Zealand. This Bill was put through as a temporary measure, the understanding being that it was for three years, that the people of New Zealand might have an opportunity of thoroughly considering it and at the end of three years if they were not satisfied with it, then the Bill would be repealed. In 1901 when the three years were up they increased the pension to the pensioners of that colony. In 1905 they made certain amendments to that Bill so as to make it more workable and to-day it is the most popular measure in the colony of New Zealand. There is no public opinion opposed to it. Mr. W. P. Reeves, in giving his evidence before the commission stated that since the Bill had become law there had been one or two elections and there was no public opinion opposed to it. Some will say, oh New Zealand! New Zealand is burdened with a heavy debt. It is true that New Zealand is burdened with a heavy debt, but if you analyse the debt of New Zealand you will find that she owns all her railways, telegraph and telephone lines, and these are all a source of income to her, so that New Zealand to-day is in a very happy and prosperous condition. I read a short time ago in one of the Canadian magazines, a report written by Mr. Russell. I think his article is called the 'Soldiers of the Common Good' and he refers to conditions in New Zealand. He went to New Zealand purposely as he says to make a study of conditions there. In this article he says, referring to New Zealand:

> In their view again, fear is the arch enemy of the human mind, and no life can be complete or sane or kindly when led under fear's shadow.
> They believe the fear of penury and old age to be the most devilish of the fear devils originally responsible for the cruel, callous and vicious things men do to gather a fortune, and they resolved to cast it out of New Zealand at least.

Then he goes on to show that Mr. Seddon introduced a Bill himself in 1898 and he says:

> I need hardly say that it provided additional, I suppose I need hardly say that it provided additional suffering for the representatives of formula and conservatism. Elsewhere, as in Germany, something had been done to inaugurate a compulsory self-insurance against old age incapacity, but nothing like this had been attempted anywhere. All duly qualified persons reaching the age of 65 years were declared by the Bill to be entitled to pensions from the state if they were not in receipt of an income of more than $300 a year.

He then goes on to deal with the provisions of the Bill and afterwards said:

> In other words, the dread of penury is lifted from New Zealand, no poorhouses are to be there, no man need fear that in his old age he will be a burden or in want.

In Canada, Sir, there is no large extent of poor people. We are fortunate in that respect, and consequently this wide measure of relief to the few old aged poor whom we have with us, would not be a burden upon this country. Canada is a rich country. Look at the savings of the people, over $600,000,000 in the saving banks, and you will see that Canada can well afford to be well abreast of the times in so far as legislation towards social reform is concerned. But we are told this is paternal legislation. Well, is it any more paternal than is our legislation giving to the industries of this country over $13,000,000 in bonuses and giving to the manufacturers of this country protection? Not only do we see this Dominion parliament enacting paternal legislation but the provinces every day are doing the same thing. Only a short time ago the province of Manitoba took over the Bell Telephone system of that province. I say therefore it is a foolish objection to urge against this matter that it is paternal legislation. The pensioning by a nation of its own aged citizens is a practical question and one which Canada can very well afford to work out successfully. We know that the principle of pension schemes to-day—and I am going to pass over this hurriedly—are the two schemes, namely, the universal scheme and a scheme such as suggested by the Chaplin Committee. After having given this matter some study, I am not in favour of the universal scheme. I find, on looking into the evidence and reports of the different committees, that no committee has as yet committed itseft to the universal scheme, although, I must say, in Great Britain to-day, it seems the most popular scheme of all. That scheme, as it is understood, requires no specific conditions from pensioners and imposes no limitations with regard to character. Once a man reaches the age of 65, he is entitled to receive his pension. The scheme, as submitted by the Chaplin Committee, seems to me that which is the most practicable of any suggested. It was the last of the four schemes developed by the Hamilton Committee of 1900 and approved by the Select Committee of 1902. It is the favourite child, the Benjamin of the pension family. It has received more kindly treatment than any of the others. Its progress towards maturity has been uniformly smoothe and pleasant. From the weight of these official recommendations, this is by far the most authoritative of all the pension schemes. Let me state briefly the plan of the Chaplin scheme :

Any person, 65 years of age, being a British subject, would be paid a pension of an amount varying from five shillings to seven shillings a week if he could show that:

(a) He had not within the previous twenty years been imprisoned without the option of a fine.

(b) He had not received poor relief other than medical relief unless under circumstances of a wholly exceptional character during twenty years prior to the application for a pension.

(c) He was a resident in a district of the pension authority.

(d) That he had not an income from any source of more than ten shillings a week.

(e) That he had endeavoured to the best of his ability, by his industry or by the exercise of reasonable prudence, to make provision for himself and those immediately dependent upon him.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Is that the scheme likely to be adopted by the British government ?

Mr. PRINGLE. If my hon. friend will have patience, I shall come to that shortly. It seems that the British government have introduced a Bill very much wider in its scope but there is no certainty that the Bill will go through in its present form.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the date of the Chaplin report ?

Mr. PRINGLE. The report of the committee in 1899, but it was referred to a committee in 1903 which also reported. The latest report is that of 1903. The last of the four schemes is that enunciated by the Chaplin Committee in 1899, developed by the Hamilton Committee in 1900, and approved by the Select Committee in 1902.

That was the last committee, so far as I can find which discussed the matter. I might say a word with regard to the problem we are trying to solve. We are all aware that the modern conditions of industry do not favour old age. Work is driven faster and needs more nerve and is changing new methods continually displacing the old. The community may gain but the old men suffer. Hence their claim to special consideration. We all know that the influence of age, as a factor in pauperism, is demonstrated by irrefutable arithmetic. Large sections of the populous, wage earners and small shop keepers in Great Britain, in proportion as they grow old, become poor. The majority of paupers in England are old people. This is the conclusion proved by official figures obtained at different dates between a period of eleven years, from 1892 to 1903. It is shown that 58 per cent of the adult paupers (that is those sixteen years of age and upwards) are old people of 65 years or more. This conclusion is not drawn from the evidence of a single investigation, but is gathered from a series of impartial official investigations made throughout that period. When stated in a slightly different manner the close connection between pauperism and old age is even more clearly shown. In the whole adult population, comprising persons of 16 years of age and up, one out of every 43 persons is a pauper, but among those who are 65 years of age the one out of every five is a pauper and among those who are over 65 years of age, one out of every four. In those over 80 years of age, one out of every three. Among those who are 75 years of age, one in every 74 is a pauper, of those over 80, one out of every 3.

To provide for the effective assistance of these aged poor is a problem which Great Britain is now wrestling with. I am glad to think that the percentage in Canada is very much smaller than the percentage in Great Britain.

Now, I may say a word with regard to the difference between the urban and the rural populations. Before I began to look into this subject I was of the opinion that the larger number of poor people were to be found in our cities and large towns, but that is not the case, as the larger proportion of aged poor is to be found in the rural districts of this country. It appears that the young people leave the farms and rural districts and go to towns and cities, leaving the older people at home. It is an interesting study to ascertain the proportion of old people in the various provinces of the Dominion of Canada. In Ontario the number of persons over 70 years of age to the thousand, including Toronto, is 34, while the number in Toronto is only 23 per thousand. In the province of Quebec, outside of Montreal, the number over 70 is 31 per thousand, while in Montreal it is only 19. There is a still greater discrepancy to be found in other directions. In British Columbia the number is only 11 per thousand; in the Northwest Territories and the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan it is only 12 per thousand; in Manitoba, 13 per thousand; in New Brunswick, 35 per thousand; in Nova Scotia, 42 and in Prince Edward Island, 43. They seem to have the largest percentage of old people in Prince Edward Island. I suppose the reason of that is the larger movement from the east to the west and from the country to cities, and as my hon. friend here (Mr. Lefurgey) suggests, it is the healthiest part of the Dominion.

Now, the question arises, if this matter should go to a committee, as I hope it will, what persons shall be pensioned. In all the different schemes for old age pensions there seem to run two main ideas which determine the classes of the population admitted to pensions. There is first the desire to confine the pension scheme to the really necessitous among the aged only, and to provide them with nothing more than the very minimum sum required to maintain existence. The idea is to give relief to every real necessitous person; that is the French system formulated by the law of July 14, 1905, and it is the predominating idea in the system of Victoria. There is no question that when it is confined to the real necessitous the percentage to be aided is much smaller. When we return to the statistics of Victoria and compare them with New South Wales we find that there is quite a difference in the percentage of the two colonies. As a result of this different treatment, the proportion of pensioners in the aged population is very much smaller in Victoria than in New South Wales. Let me just give the figures, which I have taken from the Year book of 1905. The estimated number of persons aged 65 and upwards in Victoria is 68,760; in New South Wales 53,900. The number of persons receiving old age pensions in Victoria was 11,055; in New South Wales, 20,737. The proportion of those eligible on the age basis, receiving a pension in Victoria, was 16 per cent and the proportion of those eligible receiving pensions in New South Wales is 38 per cent. But notwithstanding this difference exists, it is going to be continued. Mr. Brent, the Prime Minister of Victoria, speaking at Brighton, Australia, on the 16th of February, 1907, said:

> We intend to increase the payment to old age pensioners from 8 shillings to 10 shillings a week. These men and women (that is the pensioners) helped in the pioneering of this country, and when we now find them old and decrepit I am sure I may ask you to say that they shall have 10 shillings a week.

Now let me give you the frequently quoted words in the preamble to the New Zealand Pension Act of 1898. I do that for the purpose of showing this House that New Zealand took the broad ground that this pension was not a question of charity, but it was a question of right to the citizens of that colony. That preamble reads as follows :

> It is equitable that deserving persons who, during the prime of life, have helped to bear the different burdens of the colony by payment of taxes and to open up its resources by their labour and skill, should receive from the colony a pension in their old age.

I may say that in New Zealand, New South Wales and Denmark the schemes are based upon the principle of rewarding the deserving poor. Now I will hurriedly give you the position in regard to the different schemes in the different countries. Denmark has a non-contributory scheme for the deserving poor. This scheme has proved very popular and seems to have conferred great benefit upon that country. France has a non-contributory scheme for the necessitous aged poor and persons suffering from incurable maladies. Germany has a contributary scheme with compulsory insurance for persons earning £100 and up a year. New Zealand's scheme is non-contributory; so is New South Wales and Victoria, but in Victoria it is insisted that claimants must also be really necessitous. Belgium has a non-contributory scheme. They also have what was suggested by Sir Richard Cartwright, namely, a system of voluntary insurance. Nearly all countries have that voluntary insurance, but they have also the non-contributory scheme which provides for aged poor who are in want.

Now then the age limit is one concerning which there seems to have been a great deal of discussion. The general consensus of opinion seems to be that while France has 70 years, Denmark 65, and so on, 65 is the proper limit. Now I may say a word with regard to what might be a good method in regard to this country and would be a proper scheme. I may say at once that I think a universal scheme has to be ruled out. I see no reason why there should be any pension given to the well-to-do people of this country. It seems to me that a good method would be to grant a pension only to the aged poor who lack the most humble necessaries of life and who are unable to provide themselves with these ; and to leave it to the proper authorities—probably the local authorities with the assistance and guidance of the instructions issued by the head authority—to apply the definition in individual cases. Or, a useful plan might be to graduate the amount of the pension in proportion to the age of the individual receiving the pension. A good pension scheme, giving nothing more than a small amount of money at the age of seventy years, would be infinitely better than no pension scheme at all and should be regarded, under certain circumstances, as the beginning of a more thorough-going pension scheme which would certainly provide real assistance for many necessitous aged people and that is a great deal. Now, Sir, poverty unquestionably is a burden on the state. We, in the province of Ontario, have grappled with the question and I say that we have grappled with it well, but it is a great expense to the province. We have expended as a province considerably over $2,000,000 in assisting the poor. We have some forty houses of refuge, commonly called poor houses ; the province gives to each one of these, towards construction, some $4,000, and the municipality pays the balance. Then the province contributes a certain amount towards the maintenance of the inmates of these poor homes, the municipalities contributing the balance. It is a burden on the municipalities throughout the province. If there were a universal scheme by which the aged poor would receive a reasonable pension it would reduce to an enormous extent the amount of money that has and is now being expended upon the poor in the different provinces. We go to the province of Quebec ; the extensive charitable organizations there put a burden upon the Catholic and Protestant churches and upon the people of that province, but they have met the burden and they have met it very well. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman has said in England that there are twelve million of the population living on the poverty line. There may be some and I have no doubt that there are people living on the poverty line in the Dominion of Canada probably through no fault of their own We have seen this question thoroughly discussed by the Commonwealth of Australia and as I desire to hurry along I will only refer to the report of the Commission of the Commonwealth of Australia which took this matter into consideration and which recommended a scheme of old age pensions for the Commonwealth to be paid out of the consolidated revenue and to be payable to all sixty-five years of age who came within certain provisions and to some at sixty years of age in cases of permanent incapacity. The commissioners in their report said :

> We do not consider that the grant of pensions will discourage thrift, and suggest that a spirit of independence will be encouraged by the establishment of an assurance system enabling those who work to provide for old age, to do so under assurance of a government guarantee.

I do not intend to take up any more of the time of the House in discussing the laws as they now stand in Denmark, New Zealand, Victoria, New South Wales, Germany, Iceland, Austria, France or other countries which have made provision for the aged and destitute poor. I say, Sir, that in opposition to the argument of Sir Richard Cartwright in the Senate we should provide some scheme of assisting our aged poor. One of the most powerful arguments in favour of the scheme is the argument that was in the mind of Bismark who, when he commenced his advocacy of old age insurance said that he had no doubt that it would retain the people in the country. I always take interviews with a grain of salt and I am not at all sure that this interview is right, but if it is I cannot agree with the argument advanced in it by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If the interview is correct it seems to me very peculiar that he should put forward the idea that it would bring over from the United States of America an undesirable class of citizens if we attempted to put this scheme into operation. On the contrary, it would have a tendency to retain in our country a very desirable class of citizens. A man who had spent some years here would know that, if he continued in the country for twenty-five years, if he was a British subject, if he had done his share towards the development of Canada, at the end of that term, provided he had in all respects behaved himself and had come up to the conditions of the Bill, he would be entitled to some small pittance for his remaining days. In addition to that it would be an incentive to a good class of people to come to this Dominion, because a young man would know when he came to this country that if he spent twenty-five years of his life in assisting in the development of Canada, at the end of that term there would be some compensation for him. The question has been asked : Where can we provide the fund ? I do not see any difficulty in providing the fund. I do not see that the argument of Sir Richard Cartwright that it would be a burden upon the poorer people of this country is a fair argument. The rich have to look after the poor and not the poor after the poor. The revenue can be raised in such a way that it would not bear upon our farmers, artisans or labourers. Why, Sir, we can raise $13,000,000 to give in the form of bounties to the industrial enterprises of this country. I am glad to say that the province of Ontario at least have not been afraid of the ghosts of millionaires. They have put a succession duty upon these large estates and they have derived from that succession duty a large fund which goes towards the maintenance of our hospitals, asylums and other charitable institutions. When we see men standing high in the realm of finance, who can take out of the pockets of the people millions of dollars, they should be called upon, out of their wealth, to contribute something towards the assistance of their fellow men. I have no doubt that a committee, if the matter is referred to a committee, can very well find ways and means by which the revenue necessary for this provision can be maintained.

Now, Sir, what is our population? According to the census of 1901 the number of people in Canada over 65 years of age is 267,000, and the number over 70 years of age is about 160,000, and taking the same proportions as in New Zealand or Victoria, this would only leave a matter of 40,000 or 50,000 at the outside, who in Canada would require assistance after they had attained the age of 70 years. It has been said by some gentlemen who discussed this matter in the Senate: Oh, but these people should have provided for themselves; we will give them a scheme by which if they pay in every week or every month a certain amount, then when they arrive at 65 years of age there will be an annuity for them. But how many of those poor people can afford to pay for that annuity; how many can afford to contribute by the week or by the month for this purpose? The average rate of wages in this country for the labouring man is considered a fair rate—the highest rate is in British Columbia and coming east the rate seems to decrease—but as the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) pointed out last year, all the labouring man in the cities of this country could now do, was to feed and clothe his family. And what about the man who intending to make an investment for his old age, may have put his money in the Sovereign bank or in the Ontario bank, or in one of these great enterprises handled by these great masters of finance which the Royal Commission speaks of in the name of—the gentleman who can't wait—and the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and a number of others who the Royal Commission told us joined hands to form that beautiful syndicate that unloaded on the people of this Dominion securities by which the people of Canada had taken out of their pockets $36,000,000. This poor man may have been prudent; he may have been thrifty, he may have had confidence in these high financiers; he may have been led into the belief that when he invested in Dominion coal at 148 he would have a nice return upon his investment for the rest of his days. He didn't know the inside working, he didn't know that there was a pool, as was shown by the Royal Commission, consisting of bankers, brokers, and other financial men to unload these stocks upon an unsuspecting public at a very high price and afterwards to put them down to the lowest price and get them back whatever they liked to offer, and thus take out of the pockets of the people of this Dominion over $36,000,000. I say it is high time there was some plain talk in regard to this high financing. We have heard of frenzied finance in the United States; but when the Insurance Bill comes down for discussion we will hear of more frenzied finance that has been taking place in the Dominion of Canada. However this is not the time to discuss that phase of the question. I simply mention it to say, that I know men, poor men who have put their money into these enterprises headed by these financiers, thinking they were putting it into a safe investment and who to-day are without a dollar in the world. I know men who have attained the age of 65 years and some older, who are in this unfortunate position. Misfortune may befall any man; he may, with the greatest confidence place his money in an enterprise which may be wiped out while he is wiped out with it, and left to the care of the state. I say that we should give every consideration to this matter and I would like very much if the Prime Minister could see his way to have it sent to a committee which would thoroughly consider it. I am not going to say that I am opposed to an annuity scheme. We have annuity schemes in nearly every country, we have them in Great Britain; but I say that an annuity scheme will not reach the class of men I desire to see reached by a proper provision in an old-age pension Bill.

This matter was debated in the British House of Commons last session and I am glad to say there was not one dissentient voice as to the principle, and that the House was unanimously in favour of old-age pensions. The Chancellor of the Exchequer in his budget speech pledged himself that before the expiration of this parliament a Bill would be put through providing for old-age pensions. I quote his words from the debates of the British House of Commons (Vol. 172, April 18, 1907.)

Mr. Asquith (Chancellor of the Exchequer). There is another thing near the other end of life which makes a quite strong, though hitherto unavailing appeal, both to the interest and conscience of society. I mean the figure of the man or woman who perhaps, spent out with a life of ill-requited labour, find themselves confronted in old age without fault or demerit of their own with the proposition of physical want and the sacrifice of self-respect.

Sir, I never could, nor so far as I know, did any of my colleagues on this bench give any pledge on the subject of what is called old age pensions.

We knew something of the magnitude of the problem, and we thought it wrong to raise expectations without the knowledge that they should be met, nor do I now commit myself or any of my colleagues, to any specific scheme, although both my honourable friend the Prime Minister and myself have laid down certain conditions, to which in our judgment, any practical proposal must conform.

Whatever is done in this matter, as I have said before in this House, must be done by steps and stages, and cannot be achieved by a single step, but this I do say, and I wish to say it with all the emphasis of which I am capable, speaking for the whole of my colleagues who sit upon this bench, that in the sphere of finance we regard this as the most serious and the most urgent of all the demands of social reform, and that it is our hope—I will go further and say—it is our intention before the close of this parliament, if we are allowed to have our way—it is a large

'if'—to lay firm the foundations of this reform.

Later on in the discussion Mr. Askwith stated (p. 1211, Vol. 172):

Then in regard to the future, there are urgent, long-delayed and over-due problems of social reform and we have begun to provide the nucleus of a fund for the relief of necessitous old age.

I shall have next year, however, and earmarked for the purpose one million five hundred thousand pounds to which I have just referred, together with the uncollected arrears of this year's income tax, amounting to seven hundred and fifty thousand pounds, which will make a total of at least 2,250,000 pounds, and an additional sum from the increased estate duties.

I count with confidence on future economies and expenditure, and let me add as time goes on, nowhere with more hope than in the department of expenditure for the relief of the poor, and if I expect economies from my colleagues, I appeal for that with still more emphasis to this House.

You cannot have everything at once, or everything all together, but if you have set your purpose, as I believe you have, and as we have, on this greatest and most urgent of social reforms you must be willing to sacrifice or at any rate postpone other forms of useful and even beneficent expenditure.

Colonel Williams, member for Dorchester West, said (p. 1238, Vol. 172):

He hoped the right honourable gentleman would carry out his schemes of old age pensions. He himself had always been an advocate of old age pensions; he had watched the sentiment in favour of old age pensions gradually growing, and he was glad to think that it was coming near the time when they would be able to accomplish something, even if it would not be all that was expected in some quarters.

Mr. Madison said:

He had always felt that there was a real cause for dealing with the aged poor, who, from various causes, found themselves, not by any means all of them helpless, but in such a condition that public money might well be devoted in securing them in the twilight of their lives.

And so the debate continued, there being almost a unanimous sentiment in favour of the proposal. Sir Charles Dilke said:

They all on the ministerial side of the House rejected the view that in dealing with old age pensions the government should adopt the plan recommended by the late Chancellor of the Exchequer. They thought the arguments adduced against the thrifty and contributory plans were overwhelming, though, on the other hand, that rejection was made on account of the great expense involved by it. He himself would offer the most uncompromising resistance to a scheme of old age pensions based on thrift and contributions, and would fight it to the death, because it would be monstrously unjust against the poorer classes of men and women workers.

Labour members criticised the postponement. They wanted the measure to be brought down that session. Mr. Theodore Taylor, speaking of it said:

He believed in the genuineness of this government's promise to the House of Commons that they would make a real beginning of old age pensions.

I have a copy of the Bill which was brought down to the British House of Commons; I have read the debate that took place on that Bill, and I believe that this session that Bill will become law, and that Great Britain has been struggling with this problem for the last twenty-five years will at last solve it by making provision in that country for the aged poor.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Will the hon. gentleman tell the House what the Bill provides for?

Mr. PRINGLE. The Bill is a very wide one. The summary of it is as follows:

This Bill, with the exception of clauses 1 and 16, has been drafted on the lines of the Old Age Pensions Bills that have been introduced in preceding sessions of parliament by Mr. Channing, now Sir Francis Channing. The object of this Bill is to provide pensions for persons of 65 years of age and upwards. But in order to secure an immediate commencement of an old age pensions system and to provide for the gradual establishment of the organization and control that will have to be called into existence for the proper and efficient carrying out of the provisions of the same, as well as for the raising of the necessary funds required for payment of the pensions to aged persons, it is provided in clause 1 that during the first year of the Bill coming into operation pensions shall be paid to all persons of 75 years and upwards, and in the second year to all persons of 70 years and upwards, and in the third year and thereafter to all persons of 65 years and upwards. The funds required for payment of the old age pensions are to be provided nine-tenths out of the imperial exchequer and one-tenth from local taxation funds. The registrars of births, marriages and deaths, and the superintendent registrars of the various districts, are provided as the local authorities for carrying out the provisions of the Bill under the control and rules and regulations of the Local Government Board.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that I think the time has come in Canada when we should at least make a start by having a committee appointed to thoroughly consider this question. There are different ways of assisting the aged poor. It may be that this country is not ready to go as far as New Zealand, New South Wales or Denmark have gone, or even as far as France has gone; but surely this country is ready to consider some proposition for giving assistance to the aged and deserving poor. Mr. Speaker, I move the resolution which stands in my name, seconded by Mr. A. C. Macdonell.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I have very great pleasure in adding a few words to what has been so well and ably said by the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. A. Pringle) who has moved this resolution. It is quite obvious, I think, to every hon. member in this House that little, if anything, can be added to what he has said. I think he is entitled to the thanks of this House and the thanks of the country at large for the immense amount of information which he has collected bearing upon this important matter—information showing the experience of other countries situated very much as Canada is in dealing with this resolution and for focussing that information so as to make it applicable to our present conditions and to the proposal contained in the resolution. For these reasons, it is not necessary for me to add much to what the hon. gentleman has said. I can only say that I heartily support all that he has advanced and would join with him in urging that the select committee which he has asked for be appointed. It does appear to me that in our present good financial condition, when we are spending large sums of money in bringing young and vigorous people to our shore to help to increase our population and develop our industries, we should not overlook those who came of their own volition, without any state aid, or aid of any other kind, and hewed out homes for themselves in the then wilderness of Canada. In matters of social reform, we are very apt, and properly so, to look to the mother country; for experience and example and guidance, and we have precedents for the present resolution both in the old country and in other British colonies. I think that the first move for legislation of this kind took place in Great Britain in 1885. The movement in Germany goes as far back as 1877 or 1878; but the German system is contributory and is compulsory, not based on the same free principle that the proposed English legislation is. In 1885 a select committee of the British House was appointed to deal with the matter on the national provident insurance principle. That was the pioneer committee in Great Britain. That was followed in 1893 by a royal commission, which examined a large number of pension schemes, but did not recommend any special scheme. Following that Royal Commission there were the four select committees which had been spoken of by the hon. member (Mr. Pringle) and without dilating upon the work of these committees, I will say that the result of their labours and of what had been done previously is embodied in the Bill now before the British House of Commons.

I have mentioned these facts to show that as far back as 1885 the matter was first undertaken by the British House of Commons. We are now 23 years past that date, yet nothing has been finally accomplished in Great Britain although it is expected that in the present year an Act will be passed. Thus it will be seen that it is not too early for us to move in this country, at least in the direction of considering this important subject. The question presents itself in a great many aspects and as the mover of the resolution (Mr. Pringle) has said it has been dealt with in a very large number of countries. It has been dealt with in Denmark where they have a pension scheme which is not contributive. The objects of that scheme are the deserving aged poor. In France it is not contributing and the objects are the necessitous, aged poor and persons suffering from incurable maladies. In Germany it is contributing, compulsory insurance. In New Zealand it is non-contributing, the object being the deserving aged poor. In Australia it is the same as in New Zealand. In Belgium it is contributing insurance and the object is the deserving poor and the aged poor who are in want.

In these various countries we have practical schemes in actual operation. What is asked for here is merely the appointing of a committee to consider the matter. We have in this country many bodies distributing charity, and on the whole the aged poor are reasonably well taken care of, but as the country grows everybody's business becomes more and more nobody's business. In the earlier days when every one knew his neighbour, both in the country and the city, the deserving poor were pretty well taken care of on the basis of neighbourly treatment, but now as the country is opening up and the population is increasing so rapidly it is well known that there is a change from this condition and no one can walk the streets of our large cities without seeing the aged and helpless poor drifting along, helpless derelicts, with no hand extended to them with no means wherewith to purchase the necessities of life.

We have in many walks of life pension schemes in operation. In Great Britain they have a large scheme applied to the army and navy while many trades unions apply pension schemes to their members; they have accumulated sufficient money to provide for the aged poor and we actually find them taking care of their old fellow tradesmen. We find various charities taking care of the poor in this country, but it seems to me that with one body administering all this charity in a methodical way more satisfactory results would be secured than by having it doled out through the various channels I have referred to. If this matter goes before a committee and is fairly considered I think it can be shown that all the expense entailed will be the expense of subsidizing the fund; the machinery for the distribution is practically in existence, as we find various charitable organizations throughout the whole Dominion already thoroughly established and the avenues are there through which these pensions could be distributed. It might be found on consideration of the matter that a recommendation should be made that the federal authorities or the central authorities should contribute only a portion of this fund, that part of it should be contributed by the local authorities who are now bearing the entire expense, and part by the central authorities. There is no doubt that a special committee could do great good by going thoroughly into this matter and it may be found that the expense entailed would not be excessive.

It has been thought by some that the effect of a pensioning scheme upon the object himself would be unfavourable, that it would diminish thrift and lessen the incentive to wage earning; that its general effect upon existing labour conditions would be detrimental. There is no argument in that, because those who are foremost in the administration of the labour organizations of to-day, have no apprehension on that score, and I believe would favour the introduction of some such measure as has been outlined.

For these various reasons and for the reasons urged by the mover of this resolution, I certainly think it would be a wise and proper thing to permit the appointment of this committee. The committee will have means of obtaining information that no individual or municipality can have. The committee can take evidence at Ottawa, the central point, from all parts of Canada; all conditions of the people can be heard. To-day various creeds and nationalities or various provinces may make spasmodic efforts to establish such schemes, but there is no systematic treatment of this whole wide subject, and it seems to me that this is the proper place in which to move in this matter. It may be that I believe that information will be gained here by a special committee that will be of great benefit to the country at large. Such a committee would accumulate information and statistics of incalculable value, to philanthropic organizations which are now endeavouring to relieve the existing situation, to labour organizations, to the provincial and municipal authorities, in fact to the whole people of Canada. This question well deserves the earnest consideration of the government; it is agitating the mind of the public, there is upon it a live public opinion and I hope and trust that the government will be able to view this matter in that light, and to regard it as a matter of sufficient importance to at least warrant the appointment of a special committee with the usual facilities and machinery to investigate and to report to this House.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate the hon. member from Stormont (Mr. Pringle) on his very able presentation of this matter before the House. The information he has given us makes it unnecessary for other members of the House who may feel strongly upon this subject to go into it in any great detail. His argument has been exhaustive and the quotations he has made have been amply sufficient to support it. I am convinced that there is no question before this country to-day which should appeal more strongly to the sympathy and judgment of members of the House than this scheme of giving a pension to the deserving and aged poor. By this resolution it is simply proposed to appoint a committee of this House to consider this matter. When that committee is appointed it will have an opportunity of examining all schemes proposed and enacted in other countries and it will have the definite advantage of the investigation and discussion which is now in progress in the Imperial parliament.

I presume that all members of this House have read within the last few days the speech of the Hon. Mr. Askquith, who is looked upon as one of the most conservative members of the British cabinet, as a man who has never appealed to the masses in any demagogic way. When we read the argument of that hon. gentleman who, as Chancellor of the Exchequer, states that it is the policy of the British government to establish old age pensions, we must realize that such a policy, supported by him and other conservative statesmen, must be a sound one. I say, therefore, that if this committee be granted—and I trust the government will grant it—we will have an opportunity of carefully considering the arguments which have been advanced in the British House of Commons. One suggestion made is that we should limit the pensions to those who have spent twenty-five years in Canada. Some argue that the age limit should be at sixty, others at sixty-five and others at seventy years. Surely we can admit that a man who has spent twenty-five years in Canada deserves some support from the hands of the state if, unfortunately, in his old age, he is deprived of the wherewithal to purchase food and clothing. My hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) has referred to the wages of the working men in this country. Well, take the case of a man who is paid $1.50 per day. Suppose that man is blessed with a large family. How can he possibly on that wage support his wife and family, educate his children so as to fit them to be good Canadian citizens and put anything away for old age? He gives his life to the state; he hands over to the state a family of good Canadian citizens. Do you not think that the state owes him something if, in the twilight of life, he finds he has not sufficient to provide him with food and clothing? I do not believe that we should accept the argument often used that this will produce paupers and discourage men from thrift. This old age pension will apply to men who do not need to be encouraged to thrift. Their struggle is to provide food and clothing for their children who are dear to them and educate them so as to enable them to become good citizens, and after having given thirty-five, forty or fifty years of their life to that work, surely they are entitled to some gratuity. I do not intend to prolong this debate. All I wish to do is to urge upon the government to grant this committee so that it may investigate all the schemes that may be put before it. That committee, I trust, will be properly organized and have power to send for persons and papers so that an investigation may be made of a most thorough character and thus have this question gone into in its most minute detail. I therefore desire to add my request to that of the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) and the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) who has spoken so eloquently in favour of the government granting this committee, and I trust that the result will be the placing upon our statutes of legislation which will provide support, in the evening of their lives, to those who have fought the fight of Canadian life, who have hewn down our forests and produced wealth; who have brought into this country large families; who have given their honest strength to Canada, and who in their old age are entitled to some small comfort from the state.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo). It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to take up more than a few minutes of the time of the House, but I am anxious to record my vote in favour of the resolution brought in by the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle). Last year when a similar resolution was presented to the House; I was unfortunately not able to be present during its discussion, or I would have spoken in favour of it. I have followed for many years the discussion and investigation in the British parliament on this question and had something to do with agitating in favour of a Royal Commission formed in 1885, 1886 and 1887 to deal with this matter. Later on I was interested in influencing by petitions in that country the formation of select committees in the British House of Commons to consider this question. I have under my hand at present complete reports of all these select committees and Royal commissions. It is hardly necessary for me to say that the principle of old age pensions is a most complicated one, but one which must be dealt with. The hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) rejected entirely the scheme of universal pensions. Well, I do not propose to be controversial, but simply desire to support the resolution, and in doing so it is quite unnecessary that we should discuss the various schemes. But in my opinion, there is no system of old agen pension, which will be supported by the masses, other than the universal system. The difficulty, of any system which stipulates special conditions of poverty and distress, as a qualification for, which discriminates against certain people, a pension, will ever be accepted by the people generally. To discriminate against any one who may have been just as enterprising, sober and industrious as another, but who owing to special circumstances, is placed beyond the pale of the statute, is bound to create the greatest dissatisfaction, and the supervision necessitated by any partial system entails tremendous cost in the carrying out of any such scheme. My hon. friend has described the different schemes existing in different countries. In Denmark they have a non-contributory system which applies only to the deserving poor, but it has been found that the cost of supervision of that system is enormous. It creates any amount of friction in deciding who the persons are who shall come within the range of the statute. In France where they have a non-contributory system, the same trouble exists and in France the system takes in people suffering from incurable diseases. In Germany they have a compulsory insurance scheme, but the objection to that is the principle of compulsion, and no principle, especially in British countries, would be acceptable which would involve compulsion. In New Zealand, the non-contributory system which they have for the deserving poor meets with the same objections of the tremendous cost of supervision and the difficulty of discriminating between the deserving and non-deserving poor.

Of all the systems, the only conclusion I can come to is there can be none, which will give absolute satisfaction which does not include every one. What is the experience in England at present ?

Mr. FOSTER. Do you advocate a contributory or non-contributory system?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. A non-contributory system ; I do not at all agree with a contributory system.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does that include women ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Of course, she has to live the same as a man, and has to meet the disabilities of life the same as a man.

Mr. MACDONELL. Does that include the wealthy ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. That would include all classes if they were not specially provided by a certain income designed to exclude the wealthy. If my hon. friend has followed the discussions in England he will have observed that the Chaplin system provides for deserving poor, and that a man shall not benefit who receives more than 10s. a week. Any man acquainted with labour conditions in England knows that 75 per cent of the day wage earners receive the sum of 10s. a week, and by such a system would be entirely excluded. The principle of determining upon 10s. a week by the Chaplin scheme is to bring the claims of the poor man down to a minimum. I think the present British government will bring such a scheme into existence. But at the present time the labour organization and the co-operative societies are not supporting the Chaplin system, but they are supporting a universal scheme. Let me remind my hon. friend that General Booth's scheme was a universal scheme, because he wished that the fund should be raised by a system of national taxation bearing upon the rich as well as upon the poor, and he sought to oppose the inclusion of rich men in its benefits. In my opinion the only logical scheme that can be operated successfully, and with the least possible expense in the supervision, is a universal system.

I intend to support the resolution of my hon. friend. I think that no system can be brought into existence that will be successful which has not been previously thoroughly investigated, therefore I think his motion for a committee should be supported. I would like to ask the government to appoint a royal commission to look into the whole question and to determine what system is best adapted to this country. Every country has its own system adapted to its own peculiar conditions. I would like this government to take a strong hold of this question and appoint a royal commission as they did in England 25 years ago, and consider it in connection with industrial conditions in this country. I think the discussion in the Senate last session on the Annuity Bill was not very sensible, in some respects. I never could see what an annuity system has to do with an old age pension scheme. There is nothing in common between the two things. An annuity system is a provision whereby the industrious and fortunate workingman can invest a small sum with the government and feel absolutely sure that he will get it back again with good interest. In reading the speeches of some hon. gentlemen in the Senate I was surprised at some of the language used. For instance, I notice that Senator McMullen used these words :

It is too early in the day in Canada to introduce an old age pension Bill. Men who are industrious, and apply themselves honestly to the performance of their duty, in whatever sphere they labour, can earn a reasonable sum to support them and lay up something for a rainy day.

Again :

We should rather encourage people to provide for themselves. If they fail to make provision for their old age and cannot look to their friends for help, in nine cases out of every ten counties in the country there are poorhouses.

Again :

If they have made good use of their opportunities, not one out of every hundred of them would find any necessity to go to the poorhouse.

Now in regard to that statement, I think in Canada our industrial classes are in just as good a position as in any country in the world but none of them are what they should be ; at the same time, even taking Canada at its best, I want to say that seventy-five per cent of the wage earners of Canada, those with families to support and who wish to live in a comfortable manner and enjoy the modern advantages, are not able, up to the age of 65, to earn sufficient to keep them the rest of their lives. Under the present industrial conditions it is impossible, I say, for the man who desires to live as he ought to live, at the age of 65 to have saved enough to enable him to live the remainder of his days. I have investigated this question sufficiently to know whereof I speak, and I think I can prove this statement if I were given an opportunity. Now that being the case, it is an indisputable argument in favour of pensions to these individuals. That is the position I take on this matter. Let me say this also, that prosperity in Canada to-day does not mean as much to the individual workers as some people would imagine. What is more essential to them than any thing else in our present industrial conditions, is steady employment. There is an enormous demand for manufactured articles, such as has not existed for many years. But I say that the actual value of the wages earned to-day by the average worker is not greater than it was fifteen or twenty years ago. If the manufacturers have had to raise the wages of their workingmen we must remember that they have recouped themselves by taking it out of the consumers.

The workingman gets more money put into has hands but his money is not of the same value. He does not live on the cash. He lives on what the money gets and the real value of his wage is the purchasing power that is put into his hands at the end of the month. I contend that the real financial condition of the labourer in Canada to-day, when it is presented from the financial standpoint, from the standpoint of not being able to lay away at the end of the month in anticipation of what he may need when he gets to be 60 or 65 years of age, is not sufficient to support him in old age. I will support the resolution of my hon. friend and I see no reason why the government should not accept the proposition to make an inquiry because this is a question which is bound to be forced on this parliament sooner or later. When every country in the world and when the British parliament, after ten years of investigation into this matter, have decided upon a scheme of old age pensions we may make up our mind that every government will be compelled, by public opinion, to consider this question and that it will have to make some kind of provision. This committee will be able to collect evidence and data that will help the House or the government to come to a conclusion as to the applicability of the system to the conditions of this country. I have very much pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in supporting the resolution.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Cornwall and Stormont (Mr. Pringle) has shown commendable diligence and consistency in bringing this question to the attention of the House—undoubtedly one of the most important questions which now agitate public opinion in all civilized countries. If the hon. gentleman will permit me to say so, if he will accept it from me, I may say that I offer him my very hearty congratulations upon the manner in which he has brought this subject to the attention of the House. His speech has been clear, concise, full of information and a better presentment could not have been offered to the House. My hon. friend stated in his opening remarks that, last year, when he brought the same subject before us, I spoke sympathetically upon it. He quoted at the same time an interview which had been attributed to myself. I have not seen or heard anything of the statement which I am supposed to have made to a delegation which waited upon me a few days ago from the Trades and Labour Congress, and which, as quoted by the hon. gentleman was the very reverse of sympathetic. He stated that he took every interview with a grain of salt. I think he might go a little further than a grain on this occasion and take it with a full salt cellar. What I said may be gathered from the spirit of the remarks that I made last year. I did not hesitate to say to the representatives of the Trades and Labour Congress that, as expressing the views of the government on this question, I saw in it very serious difficulties, but, that, in so far as I was concerned, I was disposed, though not convinced, to approach the subject with an absolutely open mind. That is the spirit in which the government, which I now represent, approaches this question. I cannot say that we are convinced but I certainly can say that we are disposed to approach this subject with a very open mind. Undoubtedly there exists at the present time in all civilized countries a growing conviction that those who have reached old age without having been able to accumulate anything for themselves should receive some compensation which would carry them on to the end of their lives for the work and labour which they have given in their mature years to the community. All nations, all communities, I think, recognize the principle of providing for those who have not been able to provide for themselves. This principle is acted upon in different communities and in different manners but almost universally in the same manner in this respect that such help is given in a niggardly manner and in a manner which carries with it some amount of contumely. The object of my hon. friend, and those who favour his proposal, is that this relief should be given to those who have not been able to provide for themselves and that it should be given not as a charity, not in a way that would carry contumely with it, but in a manner which would preserve the self-respect and which would simply be given as a compensation and not as an alm. My hon. friend, however, will agree with me that this subject is one which is not free from difficulties. The very discussion which we had to-day shows that there is a very large scope for difference of opinion. My hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) who, upon this subject, I think, always speaks with authority, says that he is in favour of a project which I do not think would carry with it unanimous favour. He thinks that any scheme of this kind should be universal, that the law should provide for a pension not only for those who have not been able to provide for themselves but also that every man, whether he should be a millionaire or not, might come to the government and ask for a pension, which should be provided for everybody. For my part I would not be prepared to favour such a scheme as that. My own personal opinion would be rather that the law should come to the rescue of those who have not been able, through different circumstances, quite independently of their own efforts to accumulate enough for their old age. It seems to me at all events that this is a scheme which would carry more weight than the other, but I am also aware that this opinion is not universal, that there are those, who, like my hon. friend from Nanaimo, think that the law should make no exception whatever but that it should provide that when a man has reached the age of 65, without at all looking at his own condition, he may come and ask for the bounty of the state. There is another difficulty, and one that has always impressed me very seriously, and it is this: Should there be a contribution to this fund from the intended participants? As I understood the remarks of my hon. friend from Cornwall and Stormont his opinion is that there should be no contribution, that when a man had reached a certain age, if he had not been able to accumulate anything, he should be entitled to a pension even though he had not contributed anything to the fund. That is a way of looking at it which certainly has much to commend it, but it is a view which cannot be free from the objection that it might impair thrift, that it might be an incentive to slovenliness and want of diligence, and, for my part, I say frankly I think I have heard no serious answer to this objection except this one which was repeated to the House a minute ago by my hon. friend from Nanaimo and that is, that with the present scale of wages it will not be possible for any man, obliged to earn his living—a workingman, whether in factories, on public works, or otherwise—to lay by anything which would enable him to contribute to this fund. In other words, the statement is made now by my hon. friend from Nanaimo that a labourer who receives $1.50 a day is not able to provide for the comforts of life, to live in respectability and, at the same time, lay by such a sum as will enable him to contribute to this fund. These considerations show that there is reason for inquiry and for very diligent inquiry and without committing ourselves to the scheme, the government are disposed to accept the motion of my hon. friend and provide for the appointment of a committee whose business and duty it would be to look into this case and all such considerations. If such a committee is appointed it should be the very best the House could afford, and even though the session should be protracted it will tax the energy of that committee to the utmost to accumulate all the information which must be accumulated before any satisfactory conclusion can be reached. We have already, what I may say a wealth of information, but nevertheless it has taken the British parliament very many years before it was able to come to a conclusion. The committee will also have the benefit of the discussion which will take place in the Imperial House of Commons upon the Bill of the Chancellor of the Exchequer providing for a scheme similar to that which my hon. friend (Mr. Pringle) has in contemplation. I have only to add that the government will agree to the motion.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Pringle) has been able to prevail on the government to grant the committee which he asked for last year, and which with so much persistence and skill he has pressed on the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He did not move for it last year so far as I remember.

Mr. FOSTER. He had his motion on the Order Paper, and laid the foundation for the result which we now have. There is no doubt that the scheme which has been propounded by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pringle) appeals to our sympathy. The deserving poor, in fact the poor whether they are deserving or not, command our sympathy, and I do not think this country or any other progressive country has ever been wanting in the application of that accordant help which proceeds from sympathy. The private charities of this and every other Christian country have been generously poured forth for the poor, and municipal and other benefactions, insurance societies and benefit societies are proof of the practical desire and practical effort to give effect to that great wide sympathetic feeling which all Christians possess. The question of its being made a purpose of the state to aid the poor is of later development. In different countries the state has been asked to take care of its constituents, thus reversing the primal idea that the people for their own personal and corporate advantage organized originally to protect the state. I quite agree with the idea that there are difficulties in the way of the state raising the money, and difficulties in the way of wisely distributing it when the money has been raised. I quite sympathize with the view of the member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) —and I think he is perfectly right on the broad logical ground—that you meet a very difficult question when you come to decide who should be the receipents of the contributions raised by the state. The Prime Minister spoke of it as the 'bounty' of the state, but that may be a little objectionable because when you come to look upon it in that light it is no longer the right of the individual to demand this ; it is simply an application by the state of the charitable aid hitherto carried on by individuals or benevolent societies. I think it is logically sound to-day, that every unit of the state should contribute according to his ability, and that if there is to be a state fund for the poor every unit of the population needing aid should have the right to participate. It is a difficult problem financially to solve, as to how such a large amount of money shall be raised, and I think it is that idea which has chiefly tended towards the different schemes for minimizing as far as possible the number of recipients and limiting the age, in order that the financial burden on the contributors may be lightened. There is no doubt that the fact of such a fund being in prospect will leave certain effects upon those who are in anticipation of being benefited thereby. The common argument is that it would have a tendency to destroy the spirit of saving and thrift in the people, just as the younger son of a rich father feels that it is not necessary for him to labour as there will be sufficient coming to him to keep him out of want. It is argued that if there be a fund contributed by the state for persons beyond a certain age, the tendency will be on the part of some to look forward to that fund and to spend more or to earn less or to save less. I think that effect would certainly follow amongst a certain number of peculiarly constituted minds, and that will have to be provided against, but I do not believe that such a result would be very large or very general. I think the spirit of work and of earning, and of spending and of thrift, is so active in the human mind that it will remove the defects which objectors along this line urge. I do not believe it will be found in practice that such an argument would prove of very much weight.

Now as to the particular age limit at which the poor shall be helped, that must apparently be absolutely arbitrary. At the age of 65 one man may be a sturdy mechanic able to provide for himself and those depending on him, while another at the age of 55 may be absolutely incapable of doing so, and may be actually more deserving of a share from the state fund than the other one. If you are going to make a discriminative body and to give discriminative contributions out of a fund, it is perfectly right that circumstances should be taken into account perhaps more than the mere matter of age. There are various other considerations. If it is to be an aid to the deserving then it would follow almost that no age limit should be provided, but that if those who deserve the aid of the state and who have contributed by their labour towards their own support and that of their families, (which is really for the benefit of the state) should by circumstances over which they are powerless be unable to buy their food and clothing, they would get aid from the state. The claim of such a man would be just as good and just as valid as it would be if he had been able up to seventy years of age to take care of himself and those who depend upon him, and then came to be in want. Thus you find, when you put the matter on a discriminating basis, and ask through what channels the assistance should pass and to what classes it should be distributed, that you have no more right to fix an age limit than to fix any other arbitrary limit, but that you ought to put the aid on the broad ground of whether it is deserved and necessary or not.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have only to add one or two practical suggestions which have occurred to me. I have watched with great interest the development of this question in other countries, especially in the older countries of Europe and in the Australian colonies and New Zealand ; but I had not come to the conclusion that in a country like Canada there was as yet a necessity for the introduction of what we might call old age pensions. It would therefore be necessary that the committee should do its work thoroughly; and the question which troubles me now is whether a committee appointed when the session is three months advanced could do its work thoroughly unless in some way power was given it to continue the work through another session. Members of the committee, of course, will have the other duties of the session to attend to, other committees and other legislative work, and such an inquiry as this requires a great deal of attention, a great deal of care and a considerable time.

Personally—and probably it is the same with other members of the House—I am anxious not so much to have a report as to systems in vogue in other countries, as that is available in the form of literature either in the exhaustive reports of commissions and committees or the reports of the actual workings of these systems; I would prefer to see only a summary of what is a matter of history. The point where my information is lacking is as to the conditions in Canada itself. The amount of real poverty which is being relieved through individual effort and provincial and municipal legislative machinery of all kinds ; the poverty which presses to such an extent as to make it necessary for us to enact legislation in the Dominion parliament with regard to old age pensions. There is already large, wide and effective machinery at work in our country for the relief of poverty. The insurance societies are in a great measure societies to provide against the disabilties of old age, particularly with reference to families dependent on those who have to make their living from day to day by their labour. There is a great number of benevolent societies formed more particularly with reference to the very same call and aleviating the same kind of suffering. These are widespread and very effective. Then there are the greater charities of the provincial legislatures and the municipalities, and these also are doing large work. Added to these are the still larger, in some respect, charities of the individual, distributed everywhere in this country, which contribute a very substantial amount each year. Whether such a scheme could be evolved which would collect, to as great an extent as possible, the energies which are now developed in all these different ways and make a system which, aided by the Dominion government and contributed to, in effort as well as in funds, by the provincial and municipal authorities, would systematize the present system of charities and benefits and put the whole on a basis which would be far more effective and yet removed from the line of charity, which is distasteful to many, and the exercise of which, even in its best form, has an influence which is not at all times and in all cases productive of the best for its recipients, can only be determined after the fullest inquiry, and therefore it is with reference to the conditions in Canada and the means at present in vogue for their relief that I would like to see information gathered. But it is in this line, when the legislator comes to look for it, that he finds the least information gathered. We have no system of collecting this information and putting it in a position where we may have it for use when a question like this comes up, so that the appointment of a committee, I hope, will result in attention being given very particularly to gathering information along that line. To my mind, that would be the most effective means of reaching a wise conclusion. I congratulate my hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) on the reception his motion has received. I myself would like to have seen a thorough discussion of it. Several gentlemen have stated that this is the most important question which has ever come before parliament; but if its importance be attested by the interest which is shown in it, I am afraid we shall have to pass a different verdict. I would like to have seen a thorough discussion of this matter, so that conflicting views, if there be any, might be offered to the attention of the House, and in the clash of views and the contribution of men thinking in different ways, we might arrive at more well-founded conclusions than we can from a discussion which, although well carried on by the mover and seconder, has not been participated in generally by the House. My sympathies are always with those who are in need and who are worthy and deserving. I am not fully convinced that in Canada we need at present undertake a system of old age pensions. But I am looking for information, and would be sorry indeed if the appointment and the work of this committee will not give us that much needed information, especially with reference to our own country and its conditions in the way of charities, which we need before we come to legislate on so important a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). I quite well realize that it may not be very desirable to prolong this discussion to much greater length, nor perhaps is it necessary that the discussion at this stage should be carried on more fully, although I appreciate that a fuller discussion might be of great interest to the House and the country. I rise merely to say that, so far as I am concerned, I attach very much importance indeed to the subject brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle), and to the remarks of those who have spoken in approval of his resolution. There are many things that might be considered in this connection. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Foster) has suggested that while there is much information which a committee of this House could gather on this question, there is probably a good deal which a committee of this House cannot collect. I realize that it may be difficult for a committee to gather all the information that would be desirable before a system of state pensions can be undertaken. It is for that reason that, while I approve heartily of the proposition to appoint a committee of the House, I would endorse the larger scheme mooted by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) when he suggested that this question might well be the subject for a Royal Commission to investigate. In order to collect all the information necessary before undertaking this new departure, it will be requisite to ascertain the views of the people in the various centres of this country. By coming in contact with the people themselves who are thinking along these lines to-day to a greater extent probably than ever before, there will be much to be learned, and this cannot be done by a committee of this House. However, very much useful information can be gathered by it which will help members and the electors generally to reach a sound conclusion, and I do hope that when the committee is appointed—as I am satisfied it will be, after the announcement of the First Minister—it will get to work earnestly and seriously, and that in the end some scheme may be devised which will prove satisfactory to the people. I am content to simply endorse what has been said regarding the desirability of Canada doing as much as lies in her power to provide for worthy people who, in their old age, are not as well off as some of their more fortunate brethren. Few subjects can better engage our attention than that which has been brought up this evening by the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle).

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince, P.E.I.). The subject before the House is of far-reaching importance, but not one regarding which this House, or the country, should commit itself too hastily. Great thought and care are required in its consideration, and I am in entire accord with the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) when he says that every information possible should be gathered by the committee, and that to this end power should be given that committee to acquire all the information necessary before a subject of this importance can be solved. The mover of this resolution is to be congratulated on the material he has brought before the House and the manner in which he has delivered his argument in favour of his resolution. He has pointed out the different schemes existing in other countries and has presented the whole case in a very concise and clear form. Whether this country is ripe for a system of old age pensions or annuities is a matter for very serious consideration. A great many young men are coming into this country at the present time who, with those who are native born, it seems to me, present a situation in which there is no very urgent need for a scheme of this kind to be put forward. Possibly there are other considerations, of course, that might lead us to take another view. Other countries have adopted systems of old age pensions or annuities, for instance, New Zealand, New South Wales and Victoria, where those who are ultimately to benefit by pensions contribute nothing of themselves. In Germany on the other hand pensioners and government make joint contributions, the contributions being fixed on the side of the pensioners, the maximum that they receive ultimately being also fixed on the part of the government. In Germany, under the contributory system, there are some 16,000,000 persons insured, and when each one of them arrives at the age of 70 years he is provided for during the rest of his life. The burden of the state is about £2 10s. per annum for each person who reaches the age of 70 years, or become incapacitated for work. England also has a system of annuities; she has an outstanding value of some £14,000,000 in annuities at the present time. Canada has insurance companies which provide annuities; the banks and railways have their pension schemes, and the civil service also has its pension scheme. In England to-day a Bill is now ready for presentation along the line of the contributory system for the benefit of the aged and the incapacitated. So you can see that the principle is not a new one. There are a great many volumes in the library upon this question. It seems to me highly desirable, as the mover has pointed out, that each country should have regard to its own peculiar conditions in the working out of a scheme that will suit them. The trend of public opinion at present is in favour of the government taking hold of public utilities, but on the other hand we also observe a trend of public opinion in favour of the government exercising a paternal care over aged persons and in the infirm, at least in many countries. No doubt 50 or 100 years ago a scheme of this kind would almost have been revolutionary, and if we go back only a few years ago, it would have been thought of as a piece of rank socialism. But the trend of public opinion is changing from year to year, and we find that in one form or another the idea of pensioning aged persons is occupying a good deal of attention at the present time. It seems to me that what we want to aim at is to reach the poorer classes and the deserving aged. In England and in the crowded European centres, these words that have been quoted from Hood:

> Rattle his bones over the stones,
> He's only a pauper whom nobody owns.

might very well be written over the graves of a great number, but I do not think it can be said of many in this country. We have not here at present, nor are we likely to have for a great many years to come, that hand to hand struggle for existence that we find in a great many cities like London, Paris and other cities of the continent. About four out of every five paupers in England are receiving assistance either on account of age or infirmity. I do not think we have a state of affairs anything like that in North America.

Now it has been said that schemes of this kind do not tend to thrift on the part of the people who benefit by annuities or from old age pensions when they reach the age limit. But it seems to me that they should have the very opposite effect, that they are likely to encourage thrift. I think that has been the effect of insurance companies. From my own experience I have observed that when a man takes out an insurance policy, if he has only a moderate salary, it makes him frugal and thrifty, because he is desirous of providing for the payment of his premium that he may get the benefit of the insurance when the time of need arrives. It seems to me, therefore, without committing myself to any definite scheme, that we require to get information. I think a contributory system would be the most reasonable and would conduce most to the interest of the public and of the pensioners themselves. One great advantage I think is that it would enable the wage earners by easy payments to lay up for a rainy day and make provision for their old age. A safe scheme which is administered by the government or by a commission would inspire confidence, and those who entered into it would feel that when they reached old age they were not going to be swindled out of their savings. We can also see how this system would be beneficial to the state, in as much as it would relieve the public funds to a considerable extent of the present charge for poorhouses, and in England at the present time vast sums of money are spent in workhouses and other charities, and a pension scheme would tend to draw away from the workhouses and other charities a great number of men who are at present dependent upon them for their existence. I would just call attention to the fact that in the report of the Royal Commission of Australia in 1907 they make this statement with regard to the question of thrift:

> The question as to whether thrift is encouraged by old age pensions has been inquired into by your commission, and they have arrived at the conclusion that the fact of a necessitous person being entitled to a pension of 10s. a week at the age of 65 will not have any appreciable influence on the saving habit at an earlier age.

In Denmark a commission reported in 1903:

I found in Denmark that the people who had most right to speak with authority on the subject maintain that the law has not acted in a way detrimental to thrift. The inspector general of the sick relief funds holds that they are more thrifty—'never so eager to insure against sickness as now.'

The question is whether we should of necessity anticipate the conditions that we find prevalent in the older countries of Europe. Perhaps it may be wise to do so but it seems to me that we are far from the necessity of plunging into a scheme of this kind at least without most thorough investigation. It seems to me that we have largely in our own control the destinies of the people of this country, and by a wise and gracious policy we may hope to postpone the evil day that we hear about in other countries, particularly in the countries of Europe, for many years to come. I therefore see no particular breakers ahead in regard to Canada. On the continent and in England we find many people in a state of poverty, people who are reduced by accident, people who are beyond middle age, who have made financial failures and who are too old to commence again. Those, of course, have to be provided for in the large centres and we have to provide for them here too, but in an active country like Canada we do not have the same proportion or anything like it that will be found in the older and more settled countries. Possibly now it may be time when our nation is young and vigorous to move in this matter and to make it pleasant at middle age to look forward to old age with serenity. It is something to be prepared for the future, it is something to achieve wisely and this can only be done by a thorough investigation into the subject. Perhaps we may find after the committee has performed its labours that an expenditure of public money is necessary and justifiable. It would be pleasant indeed to be able to say to our aged poor, as one writer has expressed it:

Thy thoughts and feelings shall not die,
Nor leave thee when gray hairs are nigh
A melancholy slave;
But an old age serene and bright,
As lovely as a Lapland night,
Shall lead thee to thy grave.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, I am very heartily in sympathy with the hon. member for Cornwall and Stormont (Mr. Pringle) in bringing this matter before the House with the view of having a very careful inquiry. This is one of the great questions of the modern world, and even those who may not be willing to go as far at once as some in this House have indicated their desire to go will agree in the conclusion that it is a proper subject for careful consideration and inquiry. I suppose from the nature of my office I am obliged to be somewhat mercenary and to give some thought to the question of the dollar. That is natural to a minister of finance. Already the question has proved a very serious one to Mr. Asquith, the very able Chancellor of the Exchequer, who, while accepting the principle that at some time the question must be dealt with, has confessed that the great difficulty is in the inquiry where the money is to come from. We want to avoid opposing the movement at all, but merely that we may look carefully at it I venture to take a glimpse for a moment at a question of the utmost importance which has not received any attention at all in the discussion up to the present moment. In a very hurried computation from the census returns—which we may take as being substantially correct—I find that according to the last decennial census of 1901, we have in Canada about 270,000 people of the age of 65 and upwards. I take 65 as the age at which people who are advising the adoption of this scheme suggest that it should begin. Some men, as was well stated by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), are vigorous at 60 or 65 while others are feeble and would have need of any scheme which might be devised, but I take 65 for the purpose of the present consideration as a fair age to adopt. Reference has been made to the very modest sums which it is proposed to grant from time to time by way of pensions in European countries. I think it would be admitted at once that what might be a decent means—shall I say of livelihood ?—no, a decent means of existence in Europe would probably not be a decent means of existence under the conditions in which we live in Canada, where the standard of living for most of the people, and for the labouring classes certainly, is somewhat higher, and where many commodities are somewhat more expensive than in European countries. I think it would not be too much to say that if we were to adopt a pension system in Canada about $3 a week or $150 a year is about as low a figure as we could reasonably give. I think that anything less than that would hardly give a respectable man in Canada a means of decent existence in the evening of life. If I am correct in my estimate that there are 270,000 people above the age of 65 in Canada, and if it is right to admit at a rough calculation that about $150 per year is as low a pension as one would care to offer if we want to make a man comfortable at all in his declining years, we find that to apply that system generally to all persons above the age of 65 years would cost us, on the basis of the population of the last census, $40,000,000 per annum. As our total taxation only a few years ago was about $40,000,000 and as it is, roughly speaking, about sixty-five or sixty-eight millions, I suppose at the present time, it will be seen that the proposition from the financial point of view is a very grave and serious one. Of course it may be said, and the argument of some hon. gentlemen is on that line, that all of these would not need it and that all of these would not receive it. Without coming to a conclusion upon the point, which is a very important one, I am inclined to think that there is much force in the contention of my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) that if the pension system is a good one it should be universal. The moment you separate people and say that assistance has to be given to one man because he is poor and destitute and must not be given to another man because he is not poor and destitute, that moment you put upon it the stamp of charity which is so repulsive and objectionable to a great many people. If it is a matter of right then it belongs to every person who has reached this age in Canada. The moment you make a distinction and say that one man shall receive it because he is poor and that another shall not you are creating a discrimination which is likely to stamp the movement with a form of charity that its advocates desire to avoid. I only make these observations in taking a passing glimpse at the financial question. Under the conditions that you have here, if the age limit starts at 70 instead of 65 and if you reduce the amount from $150 down to perhaps $100, or make any such change as you will, still you will find that you are adding an enormous charge to the obligations of the country. I do not say that the great purpose that the advocates of the movement have in view would not justify it, but I think that, even with the passing glimpse, that is all we are taking at the present time, it is well to realize that the carrying out of this movement would involve an enormous addition to the taxation of the country, and all who consider it will have to keep that in mind and take the position that so good a purpose would justify even so large an increase in taxation.

Motion agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY — BRANCH LINES—EXTENSION TO GREAT LAKES.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmoreland) moved :

Resolved, that in the opinion of this House it is desirable in furtherance of the transportation interests of this Dominion that the sphere of influence of the Intercolonial Railway, as a government-operated railway, should be widened and extended, by securing by lease or otherwise, such of the branch lines of railway now connecting with the Intercolonial, as will serve as direct and profitable feeders to the traffic of said railway, and by providing for the extension of the government operation of said railway to industrial centres of western Canada, and to a point or points on the great lakes of Canada, either by the construction of an extension to the same to such points, or by securing such running rights over existing lines thereto, as will enable the Intercolonial Railway to extend its transportation facilities westwardly, with a view of stimulating and promoting internal and interprovincial traffic, and facilitating the import and export trade of the Dominion, through Canadian channels.

He said : I am sure that no apology is necessary on my part when I invite the consideration of the members of this House to a question of such great importance to the people of this country as that which is involved in the motion which I have the honour to move. The Intercolonial Railway has been the subject of discussion in this country from a date twenty-five years preceding confederation down to the present moment. It has been discussed in parliament, perhaps, every session in the interim and it has been frequently and constantly commented upon by the press and people of Canada. A discussion of my motion need not necessarily take us into that disputed arena wherein you have on the one side those who advocate the operation and control of public utilities by government and on the other side those who uphold the control of those utilities by private corporations. I look upon that question as one that cannot be settled from any theorical standpoint ; I think it can only be determined by realizing that conditions must always govern. We have in this country illustrations of government ownership, and also illustrations of private ownership and operation. I realize that when the Intercolonial Railway was first initiated, it would have been impossible to undertake such a great work at that time by any other means than that of government construction and government operation. I realize also that the Canadian Pacific Railway has proved of immense advantage to the people of this country, and that it was a wise thing on the part of parliament and government to entrust to the hands of a private company the carrying out of that great scheme. The early history of the isolated provinces is such that it would have been impossible for them to have undertaken public works and to have built railways by any other means than those which were at the time adopted. It is true that in the wealthier and more populous provinces of Ontario and Quebec they were able to entrust the construction of public works and railways to private corporations, but they did that under conditions which were peculiar to themselves and not shared in by the other provinces. When the province of Nova Scotia constructed its line of railway from Halifax to Windsor, Nova Scotia ; and from Windsor Junction to Pictou, it was confronted with conditions which demanded that the government should boldly and courageously undertake the work. When the European and North American Railway was constructed between St. John and Point Duchene, in New Brunswick, the conditions demanded that the government should carry out the project. And while there is very much to be said in favour of the construction of railways by private corporations and of public utilities being owned by private corporations, there is a great deal to be said also in favour of government undertaking to grapple with these great public works. We all realize that there are epochs in the history of the empire when it would have been impossible for the imperial government to grapple with great schemes by any means other than of entrusting their accomplishment to private corporations. There are three great corporations in the history of the empire, through whose instrumentality the whole colouring of the map of the world has been changed. There was first the East India Company which having been granted certain powers by government started out with the selfish idea of looking after its own interests, but these interests soon became the interests of the empire. Then there was the Hudson Bay Company which had for its first aim and object the advancement of private interests, but which, by reason of the powers it was entrusted with and by reason of its operations made for England, on the American continent, the great territory which is now known as the Dominion of Canada. And in later years, the third of these private corporations, the South African Company, which in its initiation had only the incentive of private gain, become the parent of British Dominion in that realm.

As we all know, the Intercolonial Railway was undertaken by reason of the compact of confederation. Without the construction of the Intercolonial Railway by the government of Canada there would not have been any confederation. All who read the ante-confederation debates in the parliament of the united provinces of upper and lower Canada will find underlying all the speeches of the fathers of confederation at that date, the clear acknowledgment that unless the Intercolonial were built by the government there could not and would not have been any confederation. We all know that one great and distinguished man, the late Hon. George Brown, stated that if it were necessary to pay the price for a confederated British North America, he would be willing to construct six intercolonials instead of the one which was asked for.

It may be that any one who has studied the Intercolonial as it has been my privilege to do, will realize, as I realize, that a great many mistakes were made. It was acknowledged at the very outset that the Intercolonial was to be, not a commercial undertaking, but an undertaking by the government for the benefit of all Canada, for the promotion of the interchange of trade and people between the provinces by the sea and the inland provinces of Canada. This mission of the Intercolonial, I am sure, has been measurably fulfilled ; and perhaps we do not all realize just the amount of good the Intercolonial has done for the people of Canada. I have many times from my place in this House called attention to the historical features of that railway ; I have called attention to the good it has done, I have pointed out that the freight rates and passenger rates were placed so low with a view to the accomplishment of its mission, that we could not expect any great financial returns from the operation of the road, whether that operation should be carried on by government or by corporation. I think it was my privilege to demonstrate to this House beyond the shadow of questioning that if the rates of the Intercolonial during the past few years had been measurably near the rates charged by the great private railway corporations of Canada, instead of having any deficits we should have had yearly large surpluses, In fact, I have had the calculataion made, showing that for the year 1907, instead of a balancing of the accounts practically—a very small surplus—there would have been on the credit side of the account not less than $2,500,000 ; and if that had gone on from the time of confederation, with favourable traffic, there would not have been a single year in the history of the Intercolonial which would have shown any deficit ; but, on the contrary, there would have been year by year a balance on the credit side of the account. Of course, as a result of that, I have perhaps been looked upon as an enthusiast with respect to the Intercolonial Railway, as one who had the courage to say that it was the great national asset of Canada. I have indeed ventured to prophesy that the day would come when the Intercolonial would stand in such a position before the people of Canada that they would recognize that no other undertaking of the government of Canada has ever been as profitable to them ; and I repeat the prophecy, Sir. Although our eyes for the last few years have been turned westward, although we have gloried in the fact that we have a magnificent western heritage—and we have —although we have prided ourselves on our prairies and the wealth of those prairies, although we have realized that the Pacific slope is rich in all natural resources, presenting a splendid present and promising a greater future, although we have been looking that way, our eyes have been so closed to the east that we have failed to realize what we have at our doors down by the Atlantic coast.

Do we from the maritime provinces realize the wealth of resources which we have there ? Do we take sufficient stock of the possibilities and the potentialities of our great fisheries ? It is true that our seas have been teeming with fish ; it is true that within the past twenty years it has been known to many members of this House that the fish were so plentiful as to be valueless —that they were simply scooped from the sea and left to waste and decay on the land. But do we realize that all that is changing—that that which was considered a few years ago to be of no value is to-day considered to be of immense value ? I can remember when there was no such thing as a trade in clams in the maritime provinces ; but to-day immense wealth is flowing into Canada simply from the business of clams. We have valued the oyster, but we are valuing it very much more to-day because of its scarcity. We have valued the lobster, but to-day we place a very much higher estimate upon its value by reason of its scarcity. The real extent of our wealth in fisheries is only beginning to dawn upon us. The maritime provinces and the central provinces of this Dominion have not been recognized as they should have been recognized and as I believe they will be recognized during the next ten years. We have had splendid immigration schemes ; we have spent I might almost say millions of money in directing the eyes of Europe to Canada ; but to what part of Canada ? To the west and only to the west. The maritime provinces escape attention. Go into the government offices in London and ask any question with respect to Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick or even Quebec and Ontario, and how little informatiton you will get. A stranger going there and asking with respect to the future of this country and the prospects for immigrants gets what answer ? Not a word with respect to eastern Canada, but all with respect to western Canada. I am simply endeavouring to show that we ourselves do not realize just what we have in the east ; but I believe the time is coming, and quickly coming, when the people of this Dominion will realize that there are other sections of Canada than the west which should be fostered and encouraged with respect to immigration, and with respect to their upbuilding and advancement.

The Intercolonial, it is true, is associated with the history of the maritime provinces in so far as they are part of this Dominion. That railway was constructed in fulfilment of an agreement which was incorporated in the terms of confederation, and I admit that that agreement covered only the building of a railway from Rivière du Loup, in the province of Quebec, to Truro, in the province of Nova Scotia. I grant you that Canada, having done that, has fulfilled, to the letter at least, all that was agreed upon under the terms of confederation. That railway was constructed, but from time to time at each session of parliament, from 1868 down to the present day, parliament has taken a wider view of the Intercolonial Railway and its interests, its requirements and the good it was doing. It has been recognized that it was desirable, having that asset—the original railway from Rivière du Loup to Truro—to perfect it, to make it of greater advantage, to improve the railway itself and to make it more useful to the country which it traverses. I would not discuss this question from the point of view of good to any one section of Canada, but from the standpoint of the good that will accrue and that has accrued to all Canada. The Intercolonial was demanded by the maritime provinces at the time of confederation, and for that reason it has been looked upon as a work simply for the benefit of the maritime provinces. Not so, Mr. Speaker. It has been, it is true, of value and advantage to those provinces, but it has been of equal value and equal advantage to the people of those western provinces. I have time and again pointed out that the markets which have been secured by the manufacturers of Ontario and Quebec on the shores of Nova Scotia and in the lumber woods of New Brunswick were the best markets that the manufacturers and merchants in those upper provinces found anywhere. I have demonstrated, I think beyond all question, that the Intercolonial Railway has been the instrument which has enabled the manufacturers of Ontario and of Quebec to secure those markets, and that without that railway they never would have been able to secure, certainly as quickly as they did, these very valuable and profitable markets. Ontario has made money out of the manufacturing interests, and the benefits from the operation of the railway have been shared equally in the west and in the east.

Perhaps I am too enthusiastic, too ardent in my advocacy of the Intercolonial Railway and in setting forth the good which it has accomplished for all these provinces. We have been told that the Greeks, unscrupulously or otherwise, confused together excitement, enthusiasm and divinity. When their priestess at Delphi became excited she was said to be inspired, to be divine—and they were right; there is a touch of divinity in all human enthusiasm. It alone can command and make possible the impossible. I would not say that there was any divinity about the enthusiasm which I have with regard to the Intercolonial Railway, but I do say that there has been a prejudice against the Intercolonial Railway, and a misapprehension as to the work it has done for Canada ; and if I could be inspired with any enthusiasm so as to awaken, in the minds of the people of Ontario particularly, a recognition of the good that the Intercolonial Railway has done, I would feel that while there was no divinity in that enthusiasm, in the accomplishment of it there would be something divine.

There is in parliament always a hesitancy in questions dealing with a great national asset like the Intercolonial Railway. The proposition that I will make to-night is to my mind purely and simply a business proposition. The fact that the Intercolonial Railway is owned and operated by the government of Canada is no reason why it should not be dealt with as a business proposition or why there should be hesitancy in dealing with it. If that railway were owned by a private corporation, would there be lack of courage in dealing with it, in putting it in such a condition that it would meet the requirements of the country served by it with respect to its trade and traffic, would there be any timidity in respect to the improvements that were required to be made in order to perfect it as a railway? If private corporations would not lack courage with respect to this matter, surely the government of Canada, with such a splendid asset and with such splendid possibilities, should not show a want of courage in dealing with it, in improving it, in making it what it was designed to be, in the spirit if not in the letter, at the time of confederation. Do you, sir, apprehend that when the delegates met in Quebec in 1864 and agreed upon the construction of a railway from Truro to Rivière du Loup, they felt that there the work of Canada would end? Why was it that such an agreement was entered into? Was it not for the purpose of the expansion of trade and the interchange of trade between the east and west? And if it were desirable to reach Truro, is it not still more desirable that they should reach the shores of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and thus touch the markets along those shores? The Intercolonial Railway runs through the centre of New Brunswick and practically through the centre of Nova Scotia. On either side there are these large and prosperous settlements not touched by the Intercolonial Railway, and do you not think it was the spirit of the agreement that that railway was destined to reach these prosperous settlements? We know that in the early settlement of the provinces down there, as in the early settlements of Ontario and Quebec, the people settled along the shores and their means of transportation were entirely by water. Along the rivers and the shores of the bays, and indeed along the shores of the Atlantic, only could be found the early settlements of these provinces. Those settlements still exist, and it seems to me desirable that they should be brought in touch with the other settlements of Canada, and that it is just as important that this should be done as to have these settlements along the line of the Intercolonial Railway brought in touch with the great centres of trade in other sections of Canada.

I have stated that this was simply a business proposition which I have to make to this House, and it is a business proposition which has been recognized, from time to time, from the early seventies down to the present. The Intercolonial Railway stopped at Truro, but the Canadian government wisely thought that it should extend to Cape Breton and to Sydney, and so they purchased an extension of the Intercolonial Railway. They further thought it wise that the Intercolonial Railway should not stop at Rivière du Loup but should reach the old city of Quebec, and so they purchased from the Grand Trunk Railway that portion of its line between Rivière du Loup and Lévis. They subsequently, in order to make their railway more efficient, constructed what is known as the St. Charles branch, and at a later day they constructed a line of railway to connect the Intercolonial Railway at Oxford Junction in Nova Scotia with the town of Pictou, known as the short line. Then later, they constructed, as a branch and feeder of the Intercolonial Railway, a line from Derby Junction to Blackville in the county of Northumberland, N.S.—a line that was known as the Indian town branch. They subsequently built what is known as the Dalhousie branch. All these were subsequent to the construction of the initial railway. Then later on they purchased the Drummond County Railway and brought the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal and afterwards they purchased the Canada Eastern. Sir Charles Tupper in 1883, when Minister of Railways, brought a resolution before this House favouring the construction of what is known as the Baie des Chaleurs Railway running from Metapedia along the shores of the Baie des Chaleurs through the county of Bonaventure; and if any one will take the trouble to refer to the 'Hansard' of 1884, he will find the following:

> Moved by Sir Charles Tupper, for a branch of the Intercolonial Railway from Metapedia eastward towards Paspebiac, twenty miles in the province of New Brunswick, a sum not exceeding on the whole $300,000.

That is to say, recognizing the importance of bringing these outlying sections in close touch with the Intercolonial Railway and thereby in close touch with the markets of the west, he invited parliament to vote $300,000 for building a branch at that point, or a sum equal to $15,000 per mile; and during the same session, proposals were made with respect to the Indian town branch and other proposals with respect to the Dalhousie branch; and if any one will turn to 'Hansard' of 1883, he will find on pages 1252 to 1283 references to these proposals. In 1884, in the second volume of 'Hansard,' on pages 1445 and 1479 and so on, reference is made to the construction of these branch lines. For what purpose were they constructed ? For the purpose, as Sir Charles then pointed out, of providing feeders for the government railway, in order to gather in the traffic of the outlying districts and making the Intercolonial Railway a more perfect road, to the greater advantage of the people of Canada. The principle recognized by parliament at that time has been recognized, almost every year since, down to the present moment. It is therefore no new principle which I am submitting and no new departure in the policy of Canada in dealing with our national railway.

I have said that this is a business proposition. I have gone so far as to say that if the Intercolonial Railway were owned by a private corporation, every branch line, every feeder touching that line of railway at any point, would be absorbed by the trunk line. What justification have I for making that statement ? I have the history of the great railway corporations of Canada. Go through the west ; and wherever you see a branch line touching the Canadian Pacific Railway and inquire who operates and controls it, you will find that the Canadian Pacific Railway does, under a lease, as a feeder to its trunk line. Go through Ontario and wherever you find a branch line of railway touching the Grand Trunk and you ask who operates or controls it, the answer almost invariably is that the Grand Trunk Railway has it under lease. I assume that these astute railway magnates, these men who are in the business for all that there is in it, are not securing control and operation of these roads merely as a past time, but they are doing it as a business proposition, for the advancement of the interest of their respective companies. I venture this assertion, that if there had been granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway by the government of Canada the rights which they ask in connection with the Intercolonial, that is to say, their request being that they should have a joint user of the Intercolonial from St. John to Halifax, and from Truro on to Sydney, a joint user whereby they would be able to compete with the Intercolonial itself for its intermediate or local traffic, both passenger and freight, if they had secured the privilege which they sought—and they were justified in securing it, I have no quarrel with them because from a business standpoint they desired these privileges, they were within their rights in attempting to secure them—but I do say that if these privileges had been granted, or if they ever are granted, the Canadian Pacific Railway will secure in a night almost every branch line touching the Intercolonial between Halifax and St. John, or at any other point along the line of the Intercolonial from which they have secured these rights. The Intercolonial, if such rights had been granted, or if they ever are granted, would awaken to the fact that the traffic which comes over the coal roads from the coal mines to the Intercolonial, and traverses the Intercolonial to points of destination, the traffic which comes over the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island road, over the Moncton and Buctouche, over the coal railways in the province of New Brunswick and serving as a feeder of the Intercolonial, the Canadian Pacific Railway would gather up all that traffic and leave the Intercolonial denuded not only of the passenger traffic coming from these outlying sections, but deprived as well of any advantage of the traffic which comes in such volume to-day over its respective lines. Now it may be said that this proposition goes to the point of securing for government operation these lines of railway which to-day are in operation and are affording to the Intercolonial traffic in just as great volume as would be afforded to the Intercolonial if it obtained control and operated them itself. Now, Sir, I dispute that proposition. I make the assertion that if these branch lines were operated and controlled by the government, there would be a very great increase in the volume of traffic. I make the assertion that no man to-day can establish an industry on any of the branch lines in the maritime provinces, or in the province of Quebec, connecting with the Intercolonial, in competition with a like industry along the trunk line.

Mr. LEFURGEY. They cannot do it in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. EMMERSON. It will be recognized by every business man that the cost of transportation is a very material factor in the cost of placing the manufactured product in the market. It will be recognized that any one who has to transport his material over two lines of railway will find his transportation charges increased by some 15 or 20 per cent over those of the man in the same business situated on the trunk line of railway.

Now I have been speaking of these branch lines, speaking of them in the abstract. Sir, every one of these branch lines has cost this country a very large sum of money. They have not only cost the Dominion of Canada large sums, but each of the provinces have contributed of their resources in large measure to aid the construction of these roads. The following table will show exactly what they have cost the Dominion and the respective provinces.

The International of New Brunswick and the St. John Valley and Riviere du Loup are not in operation and, therefore, do not come within the purview of this discussion. I have forgotten to mention the line of railway connecting the Canada Eastern with the village of Stanley in York county. I think the distance is some six miles. That was aided by the Dominion government to the extent of $3,200 per mile and by the province to the same extent and it is very easy to calculate the totals from these details. In these figures I have been speaking of the cash subsidies apart from the contributions that were made by the Dominion government in the way of old rails. A system grew up in the early seventies whereby these branch lines of railway received by way of aid contributions of old rails that were taken up from the Intercolonial Railway and the value of these rails is not included in the sums which I have mentioned. The following table will show the branch railways in the province of Nova Scotia, their connecting point, their mileage, the aid granted by the Dominion, the aid granted by the province and the aid granted by the municipalities.

The Canada Coal and Railway Company's line connects Maccan, in Cumberland, with what is known as the Joggins mine, on the Bay of Fundy; it runs through several valuable coal mines, amongst others the Strathcona mine, the Minudie mine and another mine which, in my young days, used to be called the 'hard scrabble.'

Mr. LOGAN. It is now called the Fundy mine.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, it has a more dignified name now. The Springhill Railway runs from Springhill junction past the Springhill mine, and thence on to Parrsboro' and along the shores of Minas Basin. The other railways also run through areas rich in natural resources and run through excellent traffic producing territory.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I might point out to the hon. gentleman that he has omitted the contribution paid by the province of Prince Edward Island, which is over $3,000,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. $3,144,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not included the Prince Edward Island Railway lines, but I have no doubt my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) will attend to that.

Mr. LEFURGEY. You should have a tunnel to connect the railway system.

Mr. EMMERSON. There have been very large sums of money expended in Prince Edward Island for the construction of railways; I think some $7,000,000 was expended in the construction of railways in that province, and they have railways in every direction.

Mr. A. MARTIN (P.E.I.). Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that $7,000,000 was expended by this government for railway construction in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. EMMERSON. I understand that to be the total expended on the island.

Mr. A. MARTIN (P.E.I.). The total expended by whom?

Mr. EMMERSON. The total expended by the Dominion or, if originally expended by the province, repaid by the Dominion.

Mr. A. MARTIN (P.E.I.). The hon. gentleman should not make such a statement as that; it is not correct.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the figures before me, and my statement is subject to correction. I have no wish at all to misrepresent the amount expended by the Dominion in Prince Edward Island, but there is no doubt that a very large amount has been expended, and that a great many branch lines of railway have been constructed there. However, that is altogether aside from my argument, and I have no wish at all to introduce it. It is not connected with the discussion before the House, for the reason that the lines of railway on Prince Edward Island were constructed as part of the government system of railways, whereas I am dealing with railways that were constructed by private corporations who received aid from the Dominion and provincial governments respectively. Outside that question I do not intend to travel. Now, the total aid given to these railways by the Dominion, the provinces and the municipalities amounts to $12,050,514.46, as the following summary statement will show:

—	Dominion Aid Paid Up.	Provincial Aid Paid Up.	Municipal Aid Paid Up.

Grand Total			12,050,514 46

It is well for us to look this matter squarely in the face. Canada undertook to construct the Intercolonial Railway. I do not think it was ever intended by the fathers of confederation that the provinces should aid in any degree whatever in the construction of local lines of railway within these provinces. But there was a departure. I do not know exactly when it occurred, but occur it did, and the several provinces aided the construction of branch lines of railway to serve the communities outlying from the main line so as to meet the legitimate desire of these outlying communities to have railway facilities. Too often perhaps they did not realize just what was before them, and in many instances perhaps there were lines of railway constructed that were not actual necessities; yet who can say that the people concerned should be deprived of railway accommodation? What was the modus operandi? Those who were promoting such lines would go perhaps first to the provincial government and say: We want this line of railway, and we want you to aid it; if you will, perhaps the Dominion will. They secure a promise from the provincial authorities, and then they come to Ottawa and say to the Ottawa authorities: The province is willing to aid this line of railway; we want your assistance. In this way they secured assistance from both governments. Sometimes they came first to the Ottawa government, and secondarily went to the provincial government, or they went first to the provincial government and then to the Dominion government, just as it seemed to be most propitious for them. The lines of railway were constructed; in many instances the bonds were sold at a very low rate. In many instances, I believe, not much more was realized than would actually construct the road. But the construction of a railway and setting it in operation is one thing, and the continuance of it is quite a different thing. Every one realizes that the great railway systems of this country are compelled to come to parliament year after year seeking authority to issue additional debentures, from the proceeds of which they shall make those betterments which are so absolutely necessary. The completion of a railway is not its completion for all time. The wear and tear and the changes constantly going on necessitates a large expenditure on capital account; for it is impossible to expect a railway, out of its earnings, to make those betterments, to improve its rolling stock or even to continue it as it was at its first completion. These railways could not secure betterments; they could not obtain credit; they had exhausted their sources of credit, with the result that many of them are to-day in such a position that they cannot be advantageously operated. They are not the good to the communities they were intended to be, and I am sure that the parliament of Canada, after granting the aid which they did to these respective railways, contemplated that the communities which they were intended to serve would have proper railway facilities, and by means of them would experience an impulse to their industrial and agricultural life. The result is that to-day we have along the line of the Intercolonial very many railways which are affording that accommodation to the people which they should, and Canada, having invested so largely in these railways, should certainly consider how best it can aid them and the communities which they serve.

I do not, however, maintain my argument in favour of the passage of the resolution which I will move, upon the ground that it is simply for the aid of these particular communities. I think I shall be able to show that it will be of advantage to the Intercolonial itself and that it will not entail any burden on the taxpayer of Canada. As I have stated, if the Intercolonial were owned by a private corporation, they would absorb every branch railway along the line of the Intercolonial, perhaps every one of the lines which I have mentioned in the statement which I have placed before the House. I have reason to think that would be done, because that has been done elsewhere; it is done without increasing the burden of debt upon the corporations concerned, and it could be done in this instance without adding one dollar to the debt of Canada or adding in any way to the burdens of the people of Canada. I know that there is not a community touched by any one of these lines of railway along the line of the Intercolonial that is not susceptible of very great development. I believe that there is no section tapped by any of these branch lines that is not capable of greater and still greater development if it were afforded proper railway or transportation facilities. If this motion involved an addition to the public debt of Canada I could very well understand why people, especially in Ontario, would hesitate before stamping it with their approval. But it does not do anything of the kind; it does not mean that. They would say, perhaps: We invested a large sum of money in the Intercolonial, what have been the returns? They have been nil; there have been deficits, and it is hard work to make the accounts balance. True in one sense and untrue in another, because, as I have stated, the records of the Intercolonial do not show the true conditions with respect to that railway. The very low, the ruinously low rates have made the bookkeeping of the Intercolonial show a balance against the Intercolonial itself, but if you could gather together those additional roads and draw from the pockets of the people the money they have saved in utilizing them as means of transportation you would have a sum of money that would certainly represent the payment of interest on the expenditure and a very good balance to the good. People talk about the Canadian Pacific Railway as a great dividend payer. True it is, but the Canadian Pacific Railway has been a dividend payer because its patrons have had to contribute those dividends. The Intercolonial has not been a dividend payer because the parliament and the respective governments of Canada have felt that it was more in the interest of the Dominion that there should be a cementing together of the widely separated provinces and that there should be a diversion of trade from the eastern states of the American republic to the Canadian provinces, as they were called in the early days. That diversion took place by reason of low rates; the markets were given to the Canadian manufacturer and the Intercolonial by its low rates has contributed to that development of the trade of the other provinces, but for the same reason it has not shown as high a balance to its credit as it would otherwise have shown.

What should be done under these circumstances? Should we not do as the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway have done, absorb the branch lines by way of leasehold? It is one thing to purchase, and if you have the money perhaps it would be wise to do that, but the methods pursued by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, business methods I assume, were to acquire the branch lines by way of leasehold, in some instances paying an amount sufficient to meet the interest on a fair valuation of the railways acquired, or in other instances undertaking to operate the branch lines of railway in conjunction with the trunk lines, giving to the respective branch lines a percentage of the gross earnings. A good illustration of that is seen in New Brunswick, where a branch line constructed from Perth Centre on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Plaster Rock up the Tobique valley, a distance of 28 miles. This railway had been built by private enterprise aided by government subsidies, and the builders undertook to run it. They operated it for a time but not with satisfaction to the people of the rich Tobique valley. The Canadian Pacific Railway offered to take the road on a long term lease, giving a percentage of the gross earnings and undertaking to operate it as part of their system. This arrangement was carried out and it has been one of the most successful ventures, not merely for the Canadian Pacific Railway but for the Tobique Valley Railway Company. This transaction in no sense involves an addition to the capital expenditure of the Canadian Pacific Railway but it afforded them additional traffic for their trunk line, gave satisfaction to the people along the line of the Tobique Valley and afforded a good revenue to the builders of the railway. This could be done to advantage with respect to every one of those lines of railway which I have mentioned. How important it is for the Intercolonial Railway to have control of the territory which may be said to be within its sphere, and to control for instance the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway, a line that brings the Intercolonial Railway nearest to the Prince Edward Island Railway on the island of Prince Edward Island. How important it is that the Intercolonial Railway should control and operate every one of those so-called coal railways. They get their largest freight traffic from those districts. Coal traffic of the Intercolonial Railway is a very important factor in its earnings, and the outlying districts traversed by these respective branch line railways are important contributors to the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway. It seems to me to be a business proposition that the Intercolonial Railway should secure these branch lines upon the basis of the terms which I have mentioned. They can, I believe, be so secured, and their operation under one management would avoid those separate business charges which are incident to the separate operation of the respective railways. Under these circumstances it would appear to me to be wise business indeed to follow the course outlined in the motion now under consideration.

Mr. BLAIN. What has been the history of the branch lines that the hon. gentleman proposes this government should purchase?

Mr. EMMERSON. Where the management has been businesslike, they have in every instance paid their expenses with something to the good.

Mr. BLAIN. Are they doing that now?

Mr. EMMERSON. I can give one particular instance, the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway, a railway that pays its interest on the bonds and a fair dividend on its common stock. The same is true with respect to the Kent-Northern. There are other railways that have not been successful. One of the most important in eastern Canada, traversing a country that is perhaps the richest of any section in that part of Canada, the Albert Railway, was not a success, and the reason it was not a success, as I understand it, was that having been built quite a number of years ago the promoters issued a very large amount of bonds and floated them on the British market. The bond issue was out of proportion to the value of the road and they could not by any possibility meet the interest charges, with the result that the bondholders foreclosed. The railway was purchased by another syndicate; I do not know them, but as I understand the situation they have been certainly in receipt of a revenue greater than their expenditure and in addition to that they have set aside each year quite a large amount by way of betterment.

I think I am speaking within the mark when I make those statements, although I am not personally familiar with the inner transaction connected with the railways. They are all in this position that they serve communities which are susceptible of immense development. By reason of the two lines of railway or three in some instances, by reason of the two or three freights it is impossible to encourage industrial establishment in that section. Manufacturing is stifled; even the industrial establishments that only furnish natural products are suppressed. Why? Because they have not transportation facilities at a minimum rate. If these were afforded, if freight rates were given on a basis of mileage over one railway, there would, I believe, be established in the counties of Albert, Kings, Queens and Gloucester, manufacturing industries, and there would be developments in the fishing and lumber and other interests that do not exist to-day. The operation of these branch lines of railway by the Intercolonial Railway, with the one charge for business management, would open the doors to these respective communities, and make possible the investment of capital to develop their natural resources. Who will tell me there is a richer section anywhere in Canada than the county of Albert with its plaster quarries, its possibilities with respect to oil and coal and fisheries and stone quarries, all of which are languishing for the lack of railway facilities. Furnish these facilities and energy and capital will flow into this country. The same is true of every section. Take the county of Gloucester, no man can travel through that rich and magnificent country, from Bathurst to Shippegan and Tracadie, without being conscious that it is one of the richest sections of our province—rich in its agricultural and other natural resources, stone quarries and fisheries, all of which are pregnant with immense possibilities. That railway, if it were connected with the Intercolonial Railway, would bring in capital and energy, and the Intercolonial Railway would reap a reflex benefit. Canada, as a whole, would certainly feel the impetus and receive the benefit. It would afford better markets for those who manufacture in this section and enable its people to engage in natural industries and bring their products to market, thus contributing to the welfare of that section and contributing to the same extent to the welfare of other sections of the Dominion.

What I am saying with respect to these two counties is true with respect to the others. What I say with respect to the one railway is true with respect to all these railways—perhaps not to all in the same degree, but they are not measurably separated from each other. Some have greater advantages, but all of them, as a business proposition, justify the Intercolonial Railway in moving forward to absorb them as feeders to the trunk line. I believe it was intended by the fathers of confederation that the Intercolonial Railway should gather up the traffic of the maritime provinces and bring it to the west and likewise gather up the manufactured products of the western provinces and distribute them to the east. Measurably the Intercolonial Railway has fulfilled its mission in that regard, but it will do so to a very much greater extent if we move along in the direction indicated by the motion I shall in a moment move.

Some reference was made to Prince Edward Island, and I made a statement regarding that province. Inclusive of government expenditure, prior to confederation, there has been expended in the construction of Prince Edward Island railways $7,307,364.86, of which $3,114,735.11 was expended prior to confederation.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Prince Edward Island). Would the hon. gentleman allow me? He has made the statement that $7,000,000 were expended and then he modified it by saying that $3,114,000 was expended prior to confederation. It was $3,144,000, but he did not say by which government that money was expended.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said before confederation. But what difference does it make whether that expenditure was made before or since confederation?

Mr. A. MARTIN (Prince Edward Island). By whom was it made?

Mr. EMMERSON. I care not by whom. I am not discussing party politics, I am not discussing this government or that government, but a question that appertains to the Intercolonial Railway. I am discussing a business proposition, regardless of party politics, regardless of government, or of individuals. The amount of money expended on railways in Prince Edward Island was upwards of $7,000,000. It was not expended by way of subsidies, but was direct expenditure by the government of the day, on government owned roads, operated by government, and in no sense, comes within the jurisdiction of the motion now under consideration.

I do not think I need detain the House any further. I have perhaps wearied the House already. I have dealt with the absorption of branch lines. I have always felt that the Intercolonial Railway had not properly fulfilled its mission because we had not placed it in a position to do its work efficiently and effectively. I have always thought that the Intercolonial Railway should be extended further west to the great lakes, and I believe that the time is coming near when we shall be in a position to do this. A year or two ago, when there was a Bill of some importance before this parliament and I had the honour of presiding over the Department of Railways, there was incorporated in certain legislation a provision whereby the Intercolonial Railway would have certain running rights over the line of railway from Coteau Junction to Parry Sound. But I do not think that that covers the whole ground. It seems to me that there are two very strong features to be recognized and they are these. If the Intercolonial Railway is to carry out what was hoped of it, it must touch the centres of trade in Ontario. It must be brought in touch with the industrial centres of Ontario, the nerve centres of trade, and I believe that as a means of stimulating trade, and building up commerce, of securing the carriage of Canadian traffic over Canadian soil to Canadian seaports and out on to the ocean, it is important, and indeed important, that the Intercolonial should be placed in a position whereby it could do that, and that it should be extended from Montreal west, brought in touch with Toronto and other important trade centres, brought in touch with one or more ports on the great lakes, when it would carry out the object to which I have referred, and would secure that traffic for Canadian routes over Canadian soil and out upon the ocean through Canadian seaports.

Sir, it seems to me that if we have any faith in the future of this country there will be work for many railways before many years. The immense products of the west must find an egress through the ports of the Atlantic, and we cannot provide facilities sufficiently fast or sufficiently perfect to do that trade as it should be done. The great cry to-day, and the great cry has been, that the railways already in existence have not furnished facilities equal to the requirements of trade. It is not for me to say just where and to just what ports this railway should go upon the lakes, but I do hold that the Intercolonial should reach some port or ports on the great inland waters of Canada, so that it can be brought in touch by water communication with the great outflow of grain that must come down from Manitoba to Port Arthur and Fort William; and that in conjunction therewith, connected with the extension to the great lakes, there shall be connection given with Toronto and with other centres where traffic can be given to the Intercolonial to take east, and where traffic can be brought from the east to the very national centre of our commerce and our trade.

Now, Sir, I do not think that I am too optimistic when I say that the day will come, and it is not so far distant, when Canada will move forward along these lines. I do not know what this government will do, I do not know what the intentions of this government may be as regards this matter; but I do know that there will rise up a government in Canada some day, and I hope before I have passed away, that will carry out these ideas, that will make the Intercolonial a national work in the truest sense of the word, that will make the Intercolonial not merely a railway to be referred to as the plaything of the maritime provinces, but as a national undertaking to carry out the aims and objects set forth in the confederation debates, fulfilling the prophecies that were made at the time. George Brown and Sir John Macdonald visited Halifax and St. John in 1864, after having come from the conference at Charlottetown. What were their views with respect to the future of the railway to be constructed as an Intercolonial ? I need only refer hon. members of this House to those splendid speeches, to those splendid prophecies ; and if there is one thing I would like to say, it is to pay my tribute of respect to Sir Charles Tupper because he had a prophetic vision of the future of the Intercolonial and as to the good that it would do. I have never been associated with the party with which he was allied, but his splendid courage and his prophetic vision have always challenged my admiration. I believe that there is to-day in Canada a courage and a fortitude that will bear us along in the same direction, and will impel us to carry out what was intended to be carried out by confederation, making the Intercolonial a truly national work, a work that will not merely serve this section or that section, but will serve all sections in Canada, and contribute to the splendid growth of the country in which we take so much pride. Courage and confidence are quite as important factors in the lives of nations as they are in the lives of individuals. God hates a coward, either in men, or in nations, or in parliaments, I say it with all respect. It seems to me that we stand on the threshold of splendid possibilities, that we stand face to face with a duty to move forward, and moving forward we certainly must contribute to the growth and the advancement of every province in the Dominion. We have set no bounds as a people to our possibilities in trade and in general development. In Canada to-day we are actuated by a spirit of aggressiveness. I think this is true not merely of individuals, but it is true of parties, it is true of nations; and with that spirit of aggressiveness actuating us I am sure that we will not prove timid when we find ourselves face to face with these great undertakings.

I listened the other day with pleasure to the debate on the so-called Georgian bay canal. I was glad to note the spirit of optimism, the spirt of confidence, if you will, the spirit of faith, in the future of this country. If we ourselves have not this faith, if we are not actuated by this confidence, surely there are none others who can be. The man who would hesitate in the face of great undertakings that mean the expansion of trade, because, forsooth, he thinks that there are some timid ones in his constituency, is not worthy to represent his constituency. We are here as leaders, not as followers, nor as time servers and opportunists; we are here for the purpose of marking and blazing out the trail wherein others may follow. I think that if we were to-night to mark out the trail a way for Canada to go in connection with this project, and with other projects that are in the public mind, we certainly will be given credit for a confidence and a faith in the country that are justified by actualities and by the possibilities that are before us. The Canadian of to-day looks out over the Dominion with a wider vision, and sees avenues of enterprise open of which he never dreamed in years gone by. That is true. Once admit it and with those avenues open, with this wider vision, with these greater possibilities, and with a country in which we have faith, let us not hesitate, even in the face of some risk to take the important step which I here propose. Certainly, in the motion which I now move, there is no element of risk; there is on the contrary an element of business—of good business—and an element which will receive, as it merits, the approval of the people of every province of the Dominion. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to move the motion which stands in my name. This will be seconded by my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Telford).

Mr. W. P. TELFORD (North Grey). Mr. Speaker, I beg to second the motion, and in doing so I think I can come to the conclusion that it is quite unnecessary that I should add a single sentence to the splendid presentation of the case by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). He has exhausted the subject. It is true that I might go on for a short time with the discussion of the subject, but it would only be a repetition of what has been so well said by my hon. friend and I do not think it would be a profitable way of spending the time of the House although it is frequently done. I might say, however, that coming from a port on the Georgian bay, we regard the Intercolonial Railway as a matter of great importance to the Georgian bay ports. We are delighted with the prospect of getting this connection because it would give us the best competitor and the best controller of rates that we could possibly have and incidentally it would enable us to do away with the necessity of calling in the services of the Railway Commission. In regard to freights over this line, there may be some misapprehension. If the House, in its wisdom, should see fit to give us a branch to Owen Sound I think I can safely say that we would provide one-third of the traffic that the line would carry. At the present time Owen Sound is badly handicapped by the hills in the neighbourhood. A locomotive can only take a limited number of cars out of town, whereas, by the proposed route running by Meaford and Collingwood, a locomotive would be able to take out forty cars. That makes all the difference in the world. At present we will only get 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 bushels of grain at our elevators during the season. If one locomotive were able to take forty cars out of town I am satisfied that we would get grain by tens of millions of bushels because we have all the facilities for handling grain in the cheapest and best manner possible. At the present moment we have $3,500,000 worth of vessels lying at the wharfs. We have the best harbour on the Georgian bay, the easiest of access and the latest open in the fall. The biggest steel vessel that we have in the harbour to-day came in on Christmas Day of last year. Then, another thing that would assist in providing traffic for the proposed line is the fact that as soon as the branch line of the Transcontinental Railway to Port Arthur is completed and connection is made between that port and Winnipeg the stream of traffic that would come down over that route would tax every line, the Intercolonial Railway included, to its utmost capacity. I might also add that the traffic coming through the Sault canal is greater than the combined traffic of the port of London and the Suez canal and greater still than the combined traffic of Liverpool and the Suez canal. Just as Canada is able to provide facilities for taking care of that traffic more and more of it is bound to find its way to the Atlantic through the ports of the Georgian bay. I am optimistic enough to believe that in the next twelve months one-third of the total export trade from the American continent will come through these Georgian bay ports and yet larger proportion when the Georgian bay canal is finished, and that not only our Great Northwest but Duluth and even Chicago will be tributary to that mighty stream of traffic, for it is a fact, although a trite one, that trade follows the line of least resistance.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that this great question has been most exhaustively dealt with by my hon. friend from. Westmoreland (Mr Emmerson). I regret to-night that when this, the second most important question dealt with this session, is up for consideration we have so few of the members of the House present, particularly so few members of the opposition, because, after all, this is largely a question upon——

Mr. FOWLER. There are more members of the opposition proportionately than on your side.

Mr. LOGAN. I was counting the number during the debate and found fourteen members of the opposition present.

Mr. J. D. REID. There are only twenty-two on the other side.

Mr. LOGAN. There were fifty or sixty on this side.

Mr. J. D. REID. Only 22.

Mr. LOGAN. I think the government side does not need as much conversion as the opposition and therefore I regret all the more that more members of the opposition are not here. This, Mr. Speaker, is a most important debate ; it is an important debate to all parts of Canada and particularly to the maritime provinces. I am afraid that when we talk of the Intercolonial Railway, we are apt in this House to think that we are talking of something that only appertains to the maritime provinces, forgetting the fact that the Intercolonial Railway, through the regulation of freight tariffs, is of very great benefit to the great province of Ontario, and to the province of Quebec, and also that it traverses the province of Quebec and in that way is another benefit to that province. My hon. friend from Westmoreland has proposed in his resolution that the Intercolonial shall be extended westward. I hope to live, Mr. Speaker—and I hope not to have to live long—to see the Intercolonial Railway traversing the province of Ontario. If for no other reason on earth I hope the Intercolonial will traverse the province of Ontario so that the people of that great province may realize that the Intercolonial is not a provincial railway but a Canadian railway, and that it is their duty to regard it as such and to encourage it to the best of their ability.

My hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) has pointed out that the weak part of the Intercolonial Railway, as a revenue producer, lies in its defective system of branch lines. We who live by the sea and know the conditions do not need arguments to convince us of this, but it may be well to point out to those who are not familiar with the maritime provinces, that the railways which should naturally be tributary to the Intercolonial are really feeders for competing lines of railway. I venture to say that three-quarters of the freight which comes from the so-called feeders of the Intercolonial destined for points in western Ontario leaves the Intercolonial at the first junction point and gives the Canadian Pacific Railway the benefit of the long haul west. I know, as a matter of fact, that in connection with several of these smaller railways the freight is not routed via the Intercolonial, but via St. John and the Canadian Pacific Railway to the west. There are many reasons for this, and one is that the Canadian Pacific Railway can offer inducements to agents and give them special commissions for obtaining special freight which the government cannot offer. As a matter of fact, I know that on one particular branch railway in the maritime provinces it is almost impossible for one to secure a ticket by the Intercolonial for Montreal in the face of the insistence that you should travel by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I say, therefore, that these railways which are tributary to the Intercolonial in the maritime provinces are not feeders of the Intercolonial, but are feeders of its competitors. The Intercolonial Railway does not get the traffic from these branch lines that it should get, and it never will get that traffic until they are controlled by the Intercolonial.

I do not think, Sir, that the country would entertain a proposition to acquire these branch lines on the basis of what they have cost, for it would take a great many million dollars to do that. But I do think the people of Canada will endorse a policy under which these branch lines will be leased for a reasonable rental based upon the present net earnings of the roads and the probable future earnings under government operation. My hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) is not asking to add to the debt of the country; as I understand it, his chief argument is that the government should take these branch lines under lease and operate them as part of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. LOGAN. These railways are not at the present time so equipped as to induce freight being shipped over them, or to take care of it should it be given to them. Take one of these lines, say twenty miles in length, and its equipment will probably be one or two broken down locomotives. The traffic of the roads does not warrant the reduction of grades to a modern standard, and they are probably able to haul only three or four cars in a train, which necessarily means expensive operation, and to meet which they charge exorbitant freight rates. In this respect, I might mention that while some of these lines are under the control of the Railway Commission, others have provincial charters and are not. There is no uniformity in the freight rates on these branch railways; in many cases they charge whatever they can squeeze out of the public who ship freight over them. In some cases where they have an industry located on their railway which they favour, they endeavour to crush out other industries of a similar character. In my own constituency there is a branch line running from Maccan, on the Intercolonial, to Joggins. It is owned by the same people who own the Joggins coal mine. On that line of railway are located several other coal mines, some of which the hon. member (Mr. Emmerson) has named. The complaint is being made continuously that this railway is operated in the interest of the mine belonging to those who own the railway, and that the railroad is operated in a manner not beneficial to the other mines. In this particular instance it would seem to me to be the special duty of the government of Canada to take over that railway and to give equal rights to all the great coal producing industries in the district. Again in my constituency, another railway, thirty-two miles in length, runs from Springhill to Parrsboro', and complaints are continuously made of the rates charged on that road. It is said that other coal mines cannot be opened up along that road, because the capitalists say: What is the good of our opening up a coal mine if we have to depend on a railway which is operated in the interests of a rival mine? It is stated that the people who ship freight along that railway are charged much in excess of the ordinary rates. It can be well understood that the people of Parrsboro' are seriously handicapped, because when they send freight to Halifax or St. John by rail they are obliged to consign over two different roads.

Then, as to the rolling stock on branch railways, in some cases the entire equipment consists of a few locomotives. The cars used on some of them are rented from the Intercolonial, so that if a farmer desires to ship, for instance, hay, it is almost impossible for him to get a car, and he can only procure one by the grace of the officials. The passenger accommodation on several of these branch lines is inferior, because the heavy fixed charges on their bonded indebtedness prevents them from acquiring and maintaining modern passenger coaches.

I would ask hon. gentleman to remember that I do not come here to-night as a beggar, and neither does my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) come here begging the people of Canada to take over these roads for charity's sake. He declares, and I endorse his statement, that this will be a good investment for both sides. It will be good for the small roads, and it will pay the Intercolonial to take them over and give better facilities and accommodation to the people who depend on them.

Mr. EMMERSON. We could put our old rails and old rolling stock on these lines.

Mr. LOGAN. If we operated these lines under lease we would secure for the Intercolonial all the freight which comes from them destined for western points. At the present time the smaller locomotives on the Intercolonial are being replaced by those of a more powerful type; the lighter rails on the main line are being replaced by 80-pound rails, and thus the small locomotives and the 57-pound and 70-pound rails which are taken off the main line would be put on these branch lines and would be quite sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. EMMERSON. There are thousands of tons of these lighter rails available.

Mr. LOGAN. My hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Railways, tells us that there are thousands of tons of these rails available, and as they could be used on the branch lines that would greatly reduce the cost of putting them in first-class condition. Speaking for my own constituency, we are desirous that the government of Canada should take up this question seriously. Is it to be said, Mr. Speaker, because we got the Intercolonial Railway at confederation that for all time we have to be satisfied with a road that does not acquire branches or extend its lines? If that is to be said, then we are not being well served. I have not the slightest doubt that if the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway owned the Intercolonial Railway they would acquire every one of these branch lines and make them feeders to their general system, and would build other branch lines in other parts of the maritime provinces. My hon. friend has spoken of the future of the maritime provinces. He has referred to the fact that our eyes have of late been diverted to the golden fields of the west. It is time that the people of the maritime provinces looked about them and considered what is to be their future. Is the time coming when we shall have a small representation in this House because of the growing up of the west? Have we a country of which we have reason to be ashamed? Have we not one of the most valuable parts of the Dominion, rich in minerals, in fisheries, in lumber, in agriculture, in all the great potentialities that go to make a nation, and are we to be satisfied with our present railway accommodation? I do not believe it. With my hon. friend I believe that the government which grapples with this question with courage, recognizing the great future that awaits the maritime provinces, will commend itself to the best judgment not only to the people of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, but of the people of the whole Dominion of Canada. If it is necessary in order to build up our country that we should acquire branch lines, we ought to acquire them; if it is necessary in order to build up our country that we should build new lines, we ought to build them.

Mr. Speaker, I humbly submit that this question is one that interests us all as Canadians. Just as we in the maritime provinces are interested in building up the great Northwest, in assisting to build railroads through the Rocky mountains and to the Pacific coast, so may I ask the people of western Canada to be willing to assist us in the maritime provinces to have better railway facilities which will make those provinces blossom and bloom as the rose, and destroy for ever any feeling that may lurk in the hearts of our people that it would have been better for them if they had never come into confederation.

This resolution is along the right lines. We should acquire these branch lines, and we should extend the Intercolonial Railway into the western provinces and thus add one more link to the great chain of Canadian confederation. By building the Intercolonial into the province of Ontario we may hope to increase the interest of the people of that province in our national railway as a part of our transcontinental system. A few days ago I gave my humble support to the project of the Georgian bay canal, because I believed that it was along the right lines of Canadian policy. The whole future of this country depends on the development of this Canadian idea. If we are satisfied to let our goods come through American ports, if we are satisfied to let the Canadian spirit die, then we are not worthy to become a great country, as I believe we are destined to be. The building of the Georgian bay canal means a greater interchange of products between the provinces of Canada, another great link in our transportation system from the west to the east. With the same thought in my heart that I had in regard to the Georgian bay canal, I commend to the consideration of this House and the country the extension of the Intercolonial Railway and the acquisition of the branch lines in the maritime provinces and in Quebec as feeders thereto.

Mr. GEORGE W. FOWLER (Kings, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, I wish, in the first place, to congratulate the hon. mover of this resolution upon the very fair and impartial manner in which he has presented it to the House. I also wish to congratulate him upon the magnificent peroration with which he closed his speech. I wish particularly to congratulate him upon that, from the fact that it contained a reference to that great statesman—Sir Charles Tupper—a reference of a most laudatory and commendatory character. The statesmanship of Sir Charles Tupper is now admitted by all, whether they be opponents or friends. No man in his active political life has received so much abuse as has that veteran statesman, but at last the people of this country, without regard to political affiliation, are beginning to understand the master mind of that great statesman, and I am glad that my hon. friend from Westmoreland has made here to-night the public profession of his faith in the statesmanship of Sir Charles Tupper.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have always spoken of him as I have spoken to-night, although I have not agreed with him in his policy.

Mr. FOWLER. All the more reason why the hon. member should be commended for the statement he has made. The matter we are discussing to-night is one of very great importance, not only in the maritime provinces but to the Dominion at large. For my own part, I am strongly in favour of the resolution—in favour of both parts of it—both that which relates to the acquisition of branch lines and that which relates to the extension of the Intercolonial westward through the province of Ontario, and for my part to the Pacific coast. I believe that trunk lines should always own their branch lines. No great railway has become a dividend payer without owning its branch lines; that is the history of railways throughout the world. On that ground alone, I think this proposition should meet with the favour of this House. Mr. Speaker, as the hour is late, with your permission, I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 4, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE SALE OF RAILWAY PASSENGER TICKETS.

Mr. J. D. REID moved the first reading of Bill (No. 90) to amend the Passenger Tickets Act. He said: This Bill consists of two clauses, which are as follows:—

The Passenger Tickets Act, chapter 38 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is amended by inserting the following section immediately after section 7:

7a. Every railway company to which this Act applies shall at all its ticket offices, offer for sale first-class mileage tickets in books of five hundred and one thousand miles each, at a rate not exceeding two cents per mile; and every such book, or coupon therefrom, shall be accepted by the conductor on any passenger train of the company when presented by the person specified in the book in payment of his transportation.

7b. If the holder of a ticket over the line of any railway company inadvertently gets on the train of another railway company, starting from the same station and running to the same place, his ticket shall be valid on the said train, and the company accepting it shall be entitled to recover the cost thereof from the company by which it was sold.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY — DISPOSAL OF NORTHWEST TIMBER LIMITS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding: 'That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply,' and the proposed amendment of Mr. Lake thereto.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Mr. Speaker, the debate upon the amendment to supply proposed by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) has presented some remarkable features. It must be apparent to the members of the House that hon. members on the government side in speaking on this subject have not given to the subject the careful consideration which its importance deserves. They have rather ignored the vital subjects involved in the resolution and have travelled in by-paths and endeavoured to divert the attention of the House and the judgment of the country into other channels, into bygone days, anywhere away from the subject of this motion. I desire to adhere closely to the subject-matter of the motion so ably introduced by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), ably seconded by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), and supported by my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley). The resolution reads :

In the opinion of this House a committee of nine members should be appointed to investigate, inquire into and consider all matters connected with or relating to the alienation, granting, rental, leasing or other disposal by lease, license or otherwise, since the first day of July, 1908, of any timber lands, or timber berths forming part of the public lands of Canada, or of rights to the same, or to the timber thereon, and to report upon the matters aforesaid to this House, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation.

What is the object of introducing a motion of that kind? The reasons given by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) are of a very cogent nature and the subject is of very grave importance to the people of Canada. The importance of preserving the public domain of Canada cannot be exaggerated. If, as has been alleged, through recklessness, through dishonest tendering, through scheming and collusion by members close to the ministry and other politicians, those who are, to use a vulgarism, 'in the know,' the policy of conservation of the public domain in the west has been departed from, surely it is a matter deserving the earnest consideration of the House and the granting of the proposal of my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake). The reasons advanced in support of this motion are not founded upon suspicion or upon mere rumour, as has been suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite, but upon facts which have been made apparent to this House and which have aroused the interests of the people of this country as nothing else has done for a long time past. The arguments in support of the motion have been ably presented to the House and I need not repeat them.

I shall content myself with setting forth what I believe should be the principles which should guide this government in dealing with the timber areas of Canada, which are of such vast importance to the present and future of the western country. First, in deciding upon the disposition of timber areas, regard should be had to the relative value of the limits, the quantity of the timber, its present and its future accessibility. These should be the first principles to which the government should have regard in dealing with these matters. Secondly, the administration should then decide whether it is desirable or necessary to dispose of the timber at all, that is, necessary in the interest of the people, because it must be manifest that to dispose of timber worth hundreds of thousands of dollars for a few hundred dollars, when, as we are told, the small amount of purchase money realized is not necessary to carry on the government, is not necessary for revenue purposes, is little short of the greatest extravagance which can be charged against any administration. Therefore it must be apparent that it is dangerous policy recklessly to dispose of large areas of territory where little value can be obtained for them. Then the administration should take the greatest precaution to protect the country from collusive and dishonest tendering in the disposal of timber areas. If regard be had for these principles then we can work out a policy which will conserve the resources of this country in respect of timber. In determining on a timber policy for this country, it would be destructive to the preservation of timber areas to offer them for sale in accessible or partly accessible places. That is a self-evident proposition. Where, as has been the case for many years past, and is to-day, timber areas are far removed from settlement, it is impossible to get for them a value anything like what that timber will possess when railways are built and the country is opened up, and there is an immediate demand for timber. Therefore, a proposition which can be safely laid down along the lines of the speeches of hon. gentlemen who have preceded me in supporting this motion, is that the premature disposition of timber limits means inadequate returns to the public for those limits.

It is not alone in Canada that interest has been taken in the timber resources of this country and in the policy that has been pursued, or rather I should say the lack of policy that has characterized the disposition of those areas. Last summer this country was visited by a gentleman from England, Mr. Keir Hardie, a member of the British House of Commons, who, on August 6, in Victoria, British Columbia, being interviewed, made this statement with regard to the situation as he saw it :

The condition of the workers in Canada is as far as I can see, about the limit of subsistence. Income and expenditure about balance, and it is my opeinion that the condition of the worker will become worse. The next generation will find a struggle for existence just as keen here as it is now in the old country, and I attribute this condition mainly to the present insane policy of allowing the public lands to be given to or acquired by speculators.

Now those are the words of a gentleman who is a careful observer of what he saw in Canada, and he has given to the country his views in a concrete form. His view is the principle involved in the motion now before this House. The timber at present in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan is to a large extent removed from present means of accessibility, and if we consider what the prospects of the future are, if the present wanton distribution of timber areas amongst speculators is allowed to continue, you have to contemplate a state of things which does not augur well for the future prosperity of the Canadian people. We want to see these timber areas preserved, we want to see them dealt with in a manner which will benefit not only the Canada of to-day but the teeming millions that will inhabit that region fifty or a hundred years from now. We want to see a policy so administered that our children and our children's children will not be robbed of their rightful heritage. We are trustees of the people's possessions, and we should so handle them, we should so conserve the property of the people that generations in future will not rise up and condemn us for having been recreant to the trust which was reposed in us as public men, and will not heap anathema maranatha upon our names.

A great many instances have been put forward before this House showing a disposition of timber areas on the part of this government, unreasonable, unnecessary and extravagant, let alone a dishonest disposition. I am not going to elaborate upon what has been said, but I will shortly draw attention to a few cases which may interest this House. In the fall of 1900 limit 920 was put up at the request of one E. H. Moore, of Prince Albert. That limit was 50 square miles in extent, situated on the Carrot river. There were only two bids for that property, one was by a man named P. D. Tyreman for $512, another by Samuel Sanderson for $550 and the area was awarded to the highest bidder. Now this was subsequently acquired by Herman Finger of Port Arthur. Herman Finger then bid upon limit 1267 which was in reality the second choice of limit 902. This limit contained 34 square miles and Herman Finger bid $5,000 for the second choice of a limit which was sold in 1900, the previous year, for $550, or $11 per square mile. The result of that was that another bid, that of one McCracken, who, it was supposed, was representing one W. Anderson, came in for $6,870. McCracken was the fortunate purchaser. But, let us see the difference. In 1900 limit 970 was sold for $550 and two years afterwards the second choice of that same limit was put up and the sum of $8,670 was realized for it. That again shows that the more accessible the timber areas become the greater the value to this country if it is advisable to sell them at all.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the area of selection ?

Mr. BOYCE. There were seventy-five townships and there was a selection of four blocks out of that area. The average bonus for 1267 works out to $320 per mile as against $11 per mile. On May 18, 1906, tenders were opened for limit 1265 containing fourteen miles. Herman Finger of Port Arthur offered for this limit through C. R. Smith of Wisconsin the modest sum of $200, but McCracken offered $3,584 and got the limit. Again Finger applied for limit 1275, an area of forty miles. It was apparent that by this time he had realized that this timber was of very great value and he bid the sum of $15,000, a large bid, comparatively speaking, as compared with previous bids. But, there was a gentleman named W. Anderson, and we shall have something further to say about him later on—his name has already been referred to by my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames)—and Anderson evidently had such a very close estimate of the value of this timber that by a bid of $15,050 he was able to secure the limit. I am not suggesting that there was anything dishonest in Mr. Anderson's bid of that amount but to a man of ordinary business understanding it does, Mr. Speaker, appear to be somewhat peculiar, somewhat significant and possibly a cause for some slight suspicion that where, after the bidding had gone up not exceeding $6,870 where Mr. Anderson had participated in the bidding and Mr. Finger had been an active competitor, that where Mr. Finger bid $15,000, or over $7,000 better, 100 per cent more, Anderson was still able to top his bid by the little sum of $50. For berth No. 1237 Mr. Anderson only bid $550 for five square miles. I am informed that Finger then desired to purchase berths Nos. 1237, 1267 and 1275 and his offer for these limits was the sum of $65,000. He offered this sum to Anderson, who at that time owned these limits either himself or jointly with others, or merged in a corporation. The cost of these limits—$550, $8,670 and $15,050 respectively—was $24,270, so that there was a substantial profit to Mr. Anderson if he was desiring to make a good return upon his money. But, Sir, that offer was refused. Limit 1274 was offered for sale and it will be seen how the bidding increased when I tell you that R. E. McCracken bid $7,735, Murphy and Stewart $9,005, and Finger $10,000 and got the limit. It contained twelve blocks of thirty-five square miles. For berth 965, one Thomas Mackie, I believe at that time a member of this House, on tendering for five blocks of twenty-five square miles, the time of tendering being only forty-five days, was able to secure the limit for $1,510. Berth 921 containing fifty square miles of ten blocks, was bought by Herman Finger for $550. Herman Finger bid for and tried to get berths 1265, 1267, 1274, 1275, but got only 1274 at $10,000.

On the question of these bonuses I have this to say along the lines of the principle which I will endeavour to make clear that premature disposal means inadequate returns, and that the opening of the western country vastly and enormously increases the value of these timber limits. This is proved to a demonstration and the hon. members of this House who have been interested in these timber limits, the owners of them who bought them, know that what I say is true. Take, for instance those timber limits which were tributary to the Canadian Northern railway through the Dauphin country. The Canadian Northern was under construction during 1900. By 1901 it had reached a place called Erwood, in 1904 it had reached Milfort and in 1905 it was into Prince Albert. Each mile of construction of that line necessarily opened up and made more valuable the timber which was tributary thereto and those who could appreciate the effect of the opening up of the country by that railway must necessarily have known how the value of these timber limits would increase. In 1901 the average bonus paid in the Dauphin country for timber limits was $125 per mile.

In 1903, as railway construction progressed, as the country became settled and as the demand for timber became greater the average bonus paid for timber was $325 per square mile. In 1905 there had been such a demand for timber limits in that country and the government had been so lavish in offering them for sale that as I understand there was only one good timber limit left and that went to the Red Deer Lumber Company at a bonus at the rate of $718 per square mile. You therefore have the fact that the bonus increased enormously with the opening up of the country. But, had these limits been conserved, were these timber areas in possession of the government, I venture to assert the bonus would average at the present time $1,000 per square mile, which emphasises the principle that accessibility creates the value of the timber and increases the bonus. In 1903 the average bonus along the Prince Albert line of the Canadian Northern Railway was $325 per square mile due to the opening up of that country by a railway. Other railway lines were then under construction, many others were rejected and it must have been within the ken of the gentlemen administering the affairs of the Interior Department that with the construction of these railways mile by mile into areas previously inaccessible the ratio of increase in the value of lumber would be very great indeed. But, were those who administered the affairs of the department guided by any wise policy founded on ordinary honest judgment ? No. Take the fact that during that year in accessible areas which would be subsequently opened up by railways but which were then not so opened up, in areas where there was no demand for timber, where it would be a great expense to get out the timber at that time, the government disposed of limits No. 1107 on Cedar lake at $550 per square mile; limit No. 1108 on Moose lake at $75 per square mile; limit No. 1171 on Cormorant lake at $3 per square mile; and limits on the Smoky river at $10 per square mile. Since that time these limits have become accessible and their value has very greatly increased to the speculators who bought them, and who knew perfectly well when they tendered for them and when the government allowed them to tender for them that they would be increased enormously in value within a very short time. It is not a wild estimate to make that if these same limits were to-day owned by the government of Canada $500 per square mile would not be an outrageous price for them, and the difference would go into the treasury of this country for the benefit of the people of the country. On the northern Saskatchewan above Edmonton we have the fact that in November, 1902, limit No. 1031 containing 118 miles was put up and $31,575 or an average bonus of $167 per square mile was realized for it. One would naturally say this was a fair value but that is a question which depends entirely upon the accessibility of the limit and the demand for the lumber on it. In December, 1903, on branches of the Saskatchewan higher up, and in regard to limits which were not so accessible and which were in fact almost inaccessible, we find limit No. 1118 containing 100 square miles disposed of for a bonus of $500; limit No. 1119 containing 20 square miles disposed of for a bonus of $600; limit No. 1097 containing 20 square miles disposed of for a bonus of $1,000; limit 1098, containing 40 square miles, disposed of for a bonus of $2,500, or a total of 180 square miles of timber disposed of for $4,600 or an average of $25.50 per square mile. Now, Sir, I assert that the timber contained in those last four limits was equally as valuable as the timber which was sold for $31,757. It was not the intrinsic value of the timber itself which brought the higher price; it was the proximity of the timber to the market and the demand for it by settlers which fixed the enhanced price. If those four lots which I have last mentioned were held by the government to-day the immense increase in their value would have enured to the benefit of the people of Canada, and it would have gone, not to the speculator, not to the gentleman who is watching railway maps and railway Bills and who is possibly a promoter of railway companies and who buys a limit with the idea that when the railway is constructed the timber would be of immense value; the increment of value I say would not have gone to him but it would go to the people of Canada to whom it belongs. It has been pointed out by the hon. member for St. Antoine the purchases of limits may be divided into three classes : 1, what might be called operative holdings, those which were actually used for lumber operations and the lumber on which was absolutely necessary for the settlers; 2, reserved limits or semi-speculative limits which would include such areas as might ordinarily be expected to be required having reasonable regard for the future demand under existing conditions, and 3, purely speculative purchases, being limits purchased with the idea that their value would considerably increase and that the increment of value would go to the speculator and not to the people of the country.

Under the first heading we find that berth No. 571a, containing 23¾ miles, berth No. 986, containing 50 square miles, and berth No. 1120, containing 15 square miles, or a total of 94 square miles, which are estimated to contain over 100,000,000 feet of standing timber after a great deal has been cut off, would be worth on an average $2,100 per mile. Under the second heading, the semi-speculative holdings or reserve limits, we have a large number. Berth No. 814, acquired in 1898, 15 square miles, at a bonus of $1,500; berth No. 992, acquired in 1901, 40 square miles, at a bonus of $1,502—I wonder who bid the $1,501; berth No. 1000, 5 square miles, at a bonus of $625; berth No. 1001, 6 square miles, at a bonus of $1,003; berth No. 1002, also acquired in 1902, 4 square miles, at a bonus of $640; in 1903, berth No. 1047, 50 square miles, at a bonus of $15,000; berth No. 1054, one square mile, at a bonus of $100; berth No. 1073, 20 square miles, at a bonus of $2,700. These make a total of 141 square miles, which were disposed of for $23,470. I am told, Sir, and I give my information to the House for what it is worth—hon. gentlemen opposite who are more capable of judging of the value of these limits than I am will correct me if I am wrong—that a very conservative valuation of these limits to-day puts them as worth $300,000, and the hon. gentleman who holds them would not be well advised to sell them at that figure. The next class is the speculative limits, and we find that in 1903 berth No. 1046 on the Pembina river, 40 square miles, was sold for $3,500; berth No. 1068, also on the Pembina river, 5¼ square miles, was sold for $400; berth No. 1093, on the Macleod river, on the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, 12 square miles, was sold for $1,500; berth No. 1094, on the same river, 27 square miles, was sold for $2,500; berth No. 1099, on the Athabaska river, on the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific 44 square miles, was sold for $6,500; berth No. 1191, on the Pembina river, 50 square miles, was sold for $1,075; berth No. 1192, on the Pembina river, 50 square miles, was sold for $5,500; making a total of 228 square miles at a bonus of $20,975, or an average of $92 per square mile. For the operative holdings we find that the hon. gentleman paid $2,100 per square mile on the average; that is, for timber that was actually necessary. For the second class, reserved limits, we find that he paid on the average about $170 per square mile. For the speculative holdings we find that he paid $92 per square mile. It is easy to see the difference between these three classifications. The first class were limits which were necessary, which were in operation. The second class were semi-speculative, from which very much less per square mile was realized. The third class were purely speculative, the value of which to-day might be enormously increased, and for these very much less per square mile was realized, demonstrating beyond a doubt that the policy of the government has been entirely and extravagantly wrong in allowing speculative sales to be made of timber on these areas.

The next essential of a policy of dealing with timber areas is probity in administering the policy of the government as it stands. If the policy of the government was wrong, if it did not bring to the people of this country the revenues that it might have been expected to bring, if it was extravagant and non-conservative, if it did not look sufficiently to the conservation of the timber areas for the future of Canada, yet if it was honestly administered, there would be a great deal to say with regard to the administration that was carrying out that policy. But, Sir, if added to the extravagance of the policy, a policy which would dissipate the resources of this country, you have absolute dishonesty, collusion and trickery mixed up in the administration of that policy, then you have a state of things which is deplorable, and which would justify the Canadian people in rising in their might and condemning it as a whole. Charges have been made and very cogent reasons advanced by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) in support of the motion which he has made. My hon. friend from St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) has ably amplified those reasons with other reasons and facts, which have been brought home so closely that I have yet to hear a reasonable argument offered against them. We have been told that areas have been given away under conditions which have prohibited competition.

What is the object of tendering at all, if there is to be no competition allowed? And there cannot possibly be competition when the time between the sending out of the advertisements and the receipt of tenders is utterly inadequate to give opportunity, except to those who are on the inside, to examine and estimate the value of the limits offered for sale. That condition of things is not denied by the government or their friends. Very grave charges have been made and made repeatedly in this House implicating members of the government and some of their supporters, and we have had no reply to these charges. We have had no defense made by the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). I cannot say that I blame him for refraining from speaking. He was not in office when these things were done, and I do not suppose there is any one who knows more about the dishonesty of these transactions than does the hon. minister. No wonder therefore he remains silent and prefers to let those who consummated or winked at these transactions make what explanation they can. But there is an hon. gentleman opposite more active and more interested in the debate than is the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). That hon. gentleman has been very assiduous in his attendance during this debate and the debate which preceded it and which caused the government to at last bring down the original papers demanded. This House has been more than usually honoured with the presence of the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). That hon. gentleman has taken a keen interest in this discussion. He has been going from one side of the House to the other, gathering up the threads of the debate. I wonder whether he will be able to give any reasonable explanation in reply to the charge brought against the government of so handling the timber limits of the northwest as to benefit their particular friends.

On the 13th of January last application was made by the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) for certain original papers. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) opposed the motion and so did the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and they called upon their followers to vote it down. In his speech in reply to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), the right hon. gentleman said that such a motion was unprecedented. Yet I find that in the year 1906 this House, without discussion, agreed to a motion for the production of original tenders for timber berths from the Department of the Interior. And I find that, when those original tenders were not brought down, a discussion took place in May of the same year in this House. I do not know whether the right hon. gentleman was here or not, but the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) said he would bring the papers down. Whether he ever did so or not, I do not know, but I wish to point out the extraordinary contradiction between the House agreeing, without discussion, to order certain original tenders and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) then promising to bring them down and the statement of the right hon. gentleman in this House when he called on his followers to vote down a motion for original papers on the ground that such a motion was unprecedented. In 1906, 'Hansard', volume 1, page 73, March 28th, you will find among the motions agreed to without discussion a motion for a return :

Showing the original tenders received by the Department of the Interior in connection with the leasing of timber berths Nos. 1158, 1175, 1192, 1219, 1231 and 1232, during 1904-5; with copies of all correspondence in reference thereto, had with the Minister of the Interior, the department itself, or any officer thereof; and the various transfers, if any, made of the leases after they were granted to the successful tenderers, giving name of transferee and date of transfer, in each case. —Mr. Foster.

Again, in the same year, page 3578 of 'Hansard,' we find my hon. friend from St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) saying :

While we are talking on this question, there is one matter which I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). On the 28th March, Mr. Foster moved for a return asking for certain original tenders.

And a discussion taking place as to whether the order of the House had been complied with finally the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) said :

There is no difficulty whatever. If the hon. gentleman insists, he shall have the original documents.

That statement was clear enough. The minister had no hesitation in promising the documents, if the hon. gentleman insisted on having them. How are we to account for the change that has come over the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) since then ? When the motion for the original papers in question came up on the 13th of January, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) read a letter from his deputy, dated a month before the motion was argued. The last paragraph of this letter reads :

With regard to these papers, therefore, I would strongly urge that any attempt to compel the department to produce the same should be resisted.

And the right hon. gentleman supported that by saying that the motion was unprecedented and contrary to the rules of parliament. He did not say that in 1906, he did not say that when his minister said that the papers could be brought down, and the 'Hansard' of 1906 shows that the right hon. gentleman was in the House when the discussion took place. What was the reason for this strange change of position? Why does the Minister of the Interior in one year say : You shall have the original documents ; and then with regard to these particular documents say : You shall not have them ; my deputy says that no matter what reasons you urge you shall not have access to these original documents. So the farce goes on. The right hon. gentleman called upon his majority to vote down the motion. I note with interest that upon the vote the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), although he was not present and did not vote, was paired, which indicated that had he been present he would have voted to suppress the document. My hon. friend shakes his head.

Mr. TURRIFF. I do not remember ever being paired in my life on a vote ; possibly I was.

Mr. BOYCE. I must refer to 'Hansard' to show my hon. friend that I am right.

Mr. TURRIFF. Possibly you are right ; I do not remember.

Mr. BOYCE. I know my hon. friend will accept my word for it. I might also say that the hon. members for Dauphin, Humboldt and Brandon were neither paired nor voted.

On the 21st of January this year a motion was made by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), to which the right hon. gentleman acceded ; and on January 23 my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) moved with regard to those documents that > Subject to such considerations of public policy as can be validly urged in any case, members of parliament have the right to have access to all the records of the government and to all the archives.

The very words of the Prime Minister of this country in debate in this House upon that very subject, at page 1685 of 'Hansard' of January 21, 1908. It was voted down, and I notice that my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) was then in the House and voted against that resolution, and the hon. members for Dauphin and Brandon voted in the same way.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member will note that he is rather referring to a past debate than confining his remarks to the amendment under discussion.

Mr. BOYCE. I may have offended in some little respects ; it has been done by other hon. gentlemen in this House without any comment, Mr. Speaker ; and I would crave the indulgence of the House just for a few minutes.

It will be seen that the difficulty in obtaining these documents was not one of a very serious character, so far as any constitutional question was concerned. Eventually the documents were brought down and laid upon the table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member should take notice of the fact that he is really referring to a past debate, and not debating the amendment under discussion.

Mr. BOYCE. I was referring to the fact that certain papers had been brought down by the right hon. gentleman and were now before the House ; and upon these original documents being produced, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) made certain statements in the House and made a motion for an inquiry. The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) advanced very strong and cogent reasons why the inquiry should be made. Some of those reasons seemed to touch some hon. members on the other side on the raw, because I noticed that immediately after the hon. gentleman had sat down, after being subjected to frequent interruptions, the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) indulged in a violent speech.

Mr. TURRIFF. Oh.

Mr. BOYCE. I shall not offend again by referring to a debate of the present session. The hon. gentleman commences his speech by suggesting that charges should be made, and that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) or the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) should take what the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) conceived to be the manly course and make charges. I have both listened to and read the speeches of the hon. members for Qu-'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames), and I must confess that if the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) wants charges he has enough of them in those speeches to last a lifetime —and possibly it may take him a lifetime to get rid of some of them. But why does the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) take to himself these charges ? There were no charges against him; there were no charges against any member of this House; I do not know that his name was mentioned, except as an official of the Department of the Interior. Then why is he so sensitive? What was done when he was Commissioner of Lands in the Department of the Interior? Is he going to claim in this House privileges as a member of parliament for himself when he was a public official employed by this country? My hon. friend shakes his head as if he does not claim that privilege ; but he did so, or else I fail to understand the English language. What my hon. friend said is :

> I stand here representing the department——

Mr. TURRIFF. Read on.

Mr. BOYCE (reading) :

> —at that time.

Mr. TURRIFF. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOYCE. That is as a member of parliament representing an official of the department at the time that the scandalous transactions took place. He continued :

> If there was anything wrong in the action of the department I am the man who was responsible, and if he thinks there has been anything wrong on my part or on the part of the department in connection with these tenders, I declare in the most emphatic and flat-footed manner possible that it is absolutely false, and I now challenge the hon. gentleman or any other hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House to take the manly course for once, to stop insinuating and to rise in his place and to make a charge.

Bearing in mind the fact that in the course of the speech introducing this motion the hon. member for Qu'Appelle stated, and supported his statement from 'Hansard,' that the hon. gentleman occupying the office of Commissioner of Dominion Lands in the Department of the Interior was the gentleman who alone, behind a closed door, in his office in that department, was responsible for the opening of these tenders. It was charged inferentially that there was dishonesty in opening the tenders, it was charged that a spurious tender, which upon its face was not an honest tender, had been put in; it was charged that the tender for $1,000 and another tender for $7,000 had been straddled, so to speak; and those coming under the exclusive domain of the hon. member for Assiniboia when he was Commissioner of Dominion Lands, does he think that his words uttered here will exonerate him from suspicion, and that the course he has taken to shield himself will relieve him from the grave reflections upon his administration as an official of the Department of the Interior? All he says is, Stop making insinuations, come out and make a charge. Make a charge, against whom? When I want to make a charge against an official of the Department of the Interior, have I got to formulate a specific complaint, and does the fact that the hon. gentleman now holds a seat in parliament as a representative of the people exonerate him from any blame which would be visited upon him otherwise as an official of the department? Why is the hon. gentleman so supersensitive about this transaction? Why does he say, Stop insinuating? The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) did not insinuate, he made distinct charges, he referred to original papers, he had himself seen those papers, they came under his direct notice, I have seen them and many hon. gentlemen around me have seen them, and I say that any man possessing a pair of eyes in his head and a brain capable of reasoning, can only come to the conclusion that has been come to by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), and which they gave to this House, namely, that one of these tenders at least was a spurious and improper tender. Did the man who opened these tenders know it? The man who opened these tenders is sitting in this House as the member for East Assiniboia, he saw those tenders, as other hon. gentlemen have seen them, their physical appearance has not changed, and could he not have seen that the handwriting of two of the tenders was the same? Could he not—oh, the hon. gentleman nods his head, he could see that one hand had written the two tenders. Could he not see that one of those tenders had been left blank as to the amount, and it was filled up with a sum seven times greater than the original tender, that they were both put into similar envelopes by the same hand, and by the same solicitor? Did he notice that and if he did notice those things as an official of the Department of the Interior, and if they were so absolutely, suspicious, does he not think that it is due to this House that a better explanation should be given than he has given?—namely, that hon. gentlemen on this side are merely throwing a taunt across the floor of the House, are merely making insinuations, and that he was absolutely without fault? We say that these original documents contain upon their face evidence of such a character as to demand from the government an investigation. My hon. friend from East Assiniboia is a man of keen business perceptions, and I doubt not that if he did his duty he scrutinized these tenders. I ask him if he did notice anything in them at that time which excited his suspicion, and if he did, did he consult his minister, did he consult the deputy minister, did he consult anybody with regard to these tenders? Or did he simply let them go in for what they were worth, and award the land to the bidder who put in what must have appeared to him, if he used his eyes and his intelligence, as a spurious, or at any rate, a highly suspicious tender? Now did he do that, or was he so wilfully blind that he would not see, and did not care to see, that the $7,000 tender was in a different ink and had been filled in very recently, and very recently blotted, though it was in the same handwriting as the tender for $1,000? Did these features of the tenders present themselves to the hon. gentleman when he was Commissioner of Dominion Lands?

I say therefore it is due to this House that the hon. gentleman should explain his conduct, and I say that he has not acquitted himself as we had a right to expect under these circumstances. Let us now see what the speeches of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley), and the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. McCarthy), bring against the hon. member for East Assiniboia with regard to his acts as Commissioner of Dominion Lands. The charge involved a grave malfeasance of office on the part of the hon. gentleman. All these hon. gentlemen, in their speeches, made upon their responsibility as members of this House, have cast upon him grave suspicion of, firstly, having entered into collusion with those bidders, secondly, of being privy to spurious tenders, so apparent on their face, thirdly, of permitting a blank tender to be put in and filled up in his department, and fourthly, permitting these tenders to be fraudulently filled up in his department.

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) is doing just what I complained of before, he is insinuating, and I ask him to make his charges. I want to say again that it was not my business to act as a detective in regard to those tenders. I opened the tenders as they came to me, they came to me as sealed tenders, and I have nothing to do with the question of whether one tender or half a dozen tenders were written in the same handwriting. I do not remember at this date—this was three or four years ago—whether I noticed it or not. I opened these tenders as they came to me, I opened them in a perfectly straight and honest manner ; and any insinuations the hon. member may make that I was in collusion with any one who put in tenders, or if they were blank tenders that they were filled up after they came to me, I say is absolutely false, and I ask him again to make his charges.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman is getting unnecessarily warm. He seems to have misconceived his position. I repeat that the speeches of those hon. gentlemen on this side of the House in support of this motion, have cast upon him a grave suspicion, and no matter how vehemently he may deny their statements, until he clears the suspicion, or until the right hon. gentleman grants a commission and the suspicion is cleared up by incontrovertible evidence, he must continue to lie under that suspicion in the minds of everybody in this country.

The hon. gentleman may speak about not being a detective but I tell you, Sir, that there was a gentleman in the province of Ontario who, just before the landslide that overwhelmed the Liberal party in 1905, told the people of Algoma on the public platform that he was not a policeman. That gentleman had brought to his notice a political crime of great enormity and he took exactly the same course that the hon. gentleman, when he was commissioner of Dominion lands took, namely, that of shrugging his shoulders and saying : What have I to do with it ? I am not a policeman. This hon. gentleman seemed to think that 'detective' would be the proper word and he said that he was not a detective. I charge the hon. gentleman, and I say without fear of contradiction, as a proposition, that, as Dominion lands commissioner, as an official discharging a public duty to this country, concerning the rights of the people to the public domain, it was his first duty to be a detective, to be a policeman and to guard the interests of the people. If there was, in his judgment, anything in the tenders which was calculated to arouse suspicion, why did he not refer it to his minister ? If he did not refer it to his minister, he did not do his duty as a commissioner of Dominion lands. He admits now that he did not do his duty when he says that he was not a detective ; that is he did not detect the spurious nature of these tenders. He has said everything to justify the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in granting just exactly what is asked. The hon. gentleman, speaking as an official of the past in the Department of the Interior, he has said enough to make it imperative, in order to clear himself and to clear those associated with him in the department, his deputy minister, Mr. J. A. Smart, and his minister, the Hon. Clifford Sifton, from any implication of this nature, that the government must yield to the demand of this motion and grant the commission that is asked for. What does the hon. gentleman say ? Without any further explanation of these grave charges which have been brought against him he simply says : Bring along your charges ; stop insinuating ; I am not guilty. But, what further does he say ? In the first place he speaks as a past commissioner of Dominion lands and then, as the hon. member for Assiniboia, he starts into an elaborate attack upon the party on this side of the House in regard to its method of dealing with timber limits. I am not going to touch upon that. The hon. gentleman need not be afraid that I am going to prolong my remarks, but I simply state that it evidenced the desire on the part of the hon. gentleman to get away from an unpleasant subject as quickly as possible and to get into something that would be more palatable to him. With the documents in the shape that they are, with the transactions of the department in regard to dealing with the public domain laid bare to the light of day and with the hon. member for Assiniboia rising in his place and admitting enough to make this motion imperative, will the right hon. First Minister acquiesce in our demand and grant an inquiry ? Will the right hon. gentleman be courageous enough, honest enough to be bold and bold enough to be honest, in the language of the premier of Ontario, to grant an investigation, to let the light of day into the Department of the Interior, to turn up these particular tenders and to see whether there has been a gang plundering the public domain by spurious methods and whether there has been a combination which has proven subversive of the interests of the country ? Will the right hon. gentleman rise to that height ? Will he throw wide open the door and grant this commission, or will he stand in front of the door, as he endeavoured to stand when we demanded these original documents which throw such a flood of light upon this question, and block the way that the people demand shall be made clear. Will he stand in the way still and obstruct an investigation, raise technicalities and difficulties of a parliamentary or constitutional nature from his point of view, or will he yield to what he must know is the feeling of an aroused people ? Will he realize that to do that any further would be to sacrifice the highest interests of the people, their right to an investigation, their right to an honest government, their right to an honest administration of the departments of the government and their right to know if there are dishonest men in these departments or if the departments of the government are being operated by a gang of political thugs and thieves. Scandals, in regard to the Department of the Interior have penetrated beyond the confines of Canada. They have been often enough ventilated in this House and they have been often enough brought to the attention of the right hon. gentleman, but with very little sympathy from him. These scandals have become so enormous that they have gone across the ocean. They have got to England and here is what the London 'Economist' says as late as November 9 last. Speaking of the right hon. gentleman and speaking of him as Prime Minister the 'Economist' says :

> The worst his opponents can allege is that he has been remiss in not ordering an inquiry into the Interior Department and not dismissing those about him who make a vulgar display of riches, acquired no one knows how, unless by official malversation on a grand scale.

That is what Englishmen are saying today in regard to the right hon. gentleman's position. Will he continue to remain under that insinuation ? It is a dark blot upon the right hon. gentleman's career and it is a darker blot upon the name of Canada that such things should be permitted.

There were several remarks made in this debate all to the same effect and all tending to divert attention from the motion which is before you, Mr. Speaker, and which you will be called upon shortly to put to the House. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) made a speech on Friday night and I am sorry that the hon. gentleman was very specious in his argument in regard to what was involved in this motion. I grieve to say that the hon. gentleman referred to the charges which had been made on the floor of this House, charges so grave and charges so abundantly proven, prima facie by the documents themselves, as rumours, spoke about Mrs. Grundy and said that my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) owed the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) an apology. An apology, forsooth—an apology to the hon. member for Daphin, who undoubtedly has profited very considerably by his transactions in these timber limits. But let me say to my hon. friend from South Grey that if the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House confined themselves to rumours we might ask a great many questions in regard to the rumours that we hear. We hear rumours in regard to what has taken place in connection with the Department of the Interior. We hear rumours of men sitting in this House forming themselves into corporations, and we hear rumours that timber limits acquired by Mr. A. W. Fraser and others get somehow into the hands or under the names of these corporations in a very mysterious manner. We hear rumours of gentlemen being concerned in the North Atlantic Trading Company. We hear rumours that if the light of inquiry is cast upon that company there will be suicides. I wonder if there would be suicides if any one were curious enough to insist upon all the books and all the papers of the Imperial Pulp Company and the Spruce Lumber Company being produced before a special committee of this House. Perhaps there have been already moral suicides, but I wonder if political or other suicides would follow that event. I wonder whether my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) ever heard of the rumour that when Mr. Smart was deputy minister of the Interior he burned certain documents rather than have them brought before a committee for investigation. I wonder if the hon. gentleman knows that when Mr. Smart was deputy minister of the Interior and while he was commissioner of Dominion lands, Mr. Smart swore that he burned certain documents relating to the North Atlantic Trading company.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) whether Mr. Smart ever declared at any time or in any place that he had ever burned any single public document relating to the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. BOYCE. I will answer your question. Mr. Smart on his oath stated that there were certain letter books which contained letters referring to the North Atlantic Trading Company which were public property and that he burned them.

Mr. MILER. I would like to ask another question, and that is whether if the hon. gentleman was present he does not remember that Mr. Smart distinctly said that anything he had burned was absolutely not a public document in any way relating to public matters, but was private correspondence.

Mr. BOYCE. I cannot agree with my hon. friend in that.

Mr. MILLER. I remember that quite distinctly.

Mr. BOYCE. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman in that statement, but possibly the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) as he himself stated in his speech the other night, is suffering from a disordered digestion. Anyway, why if Mr. Smart burned his private letter book, should he feel that such an explanation as that was due to a committee of this House. Now, Sir, hon. gentlemen on the other side have given not a single reasonable cogent explanation of this transaction. The methods under this government by which the public lands of this country have been gotten hold of by fraudulent tenders and by collusion have been shown, and yet not a man on the other side of the House has offered the slightest explanation, reasonable or unreasonable, except that they ask us to believe the hypothesis that Mr. Fraser went to the bank with a blank tender, and that when he was at the bank he may have filled in this tender with the amount at the same time filling up the cheque as the ink on the tender and on the cheque is the same. But did the hon. member for East Assiniboia take any trouble to advance that as a theory on his own behalf ? Oh, no, the hon. gentleman from Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) puts that forward merely as a supposition. But, there sits the man who can give the explanation if he wants to ; there sits the man who is charged with the duty of giving the explanation and he remains silent. He gives no explanation as to the kernel and the crux of the whole case, but he is content to hurl taunts of derision with regard to the manner, forsooth, in which this motion is presented. Well, Sir, I have only this to say : That this country will no longer tolerate obstruction by the government into inquiry as to these matters ; that the eyes of the country are upon the right hon. the Prime Minister to-day, and that if he calls upon his followers to vote this motion down he will at the same time call on the people of Canada to vote want of confidence in him. The right hon. gentleman has gone to the limit of endurance in these matters, and I suggest to him with the respect which is due to him from me and from any other member of this House, that he dare not any longer obstruct the will of the majority of the people of this country. The men of this country, honest, God-fearing Canadians who want to see honest administration and who will not endorse crookedness, collusion and robbery, will insist and do insist that these matters shall be cleared up and that the light of day shall be let in on these transactions. It is only by such a course that the right hon. gentleman can satisfy the country. I know whereof I speak, I am not speaking wildly. I know that the people of this country are aroused and that they insist upon inquiry. They have viewed with a great deal of suspicion the attitude of the right hon. gentleman in obstructing the production of the original papers and that suspicion has been confirmed by what the papers were seen to contain when they were brought down. There must be an inquiry. We must have the timber of this country preserved for the people of the country to-day and for the people who will inhabit the country in the future. Timber is a most important asset of that western country. We have the land, we have other resources, but if we have not timber in that country its absence will entail great expense upon the settlers. And when the settler in the future comes to find that the natural timber resources of the country have been squandered during these years, he will be reminded of the good old British maxim : 'What we have we'll hold,' and he will feel that the Liberal government of to-day in their policy of disposing of these timber limits, changed that good old British maxim so as to conform with the modern Liberal doctrine : 'What we had we've sold.'

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). There is one expression used by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) with which the House will agree, and that is, that this discussion has become a farce. I don't think there is anything in parliament to compare with it and there is probably nothing on the records to compare with it except the celebrated case of Bardwell vs. Pickwick.

Mr. BENNETT. This case won't last as long as that.

Mr. OLIVER. We have had the benefit of the opinions of our friends on the other side for a matter of two days debate. The government has been attacked in its policy and its administration and the country has been informed that under that policy and administration its resources have been squandered and its treasury has been robbed. Would it be out of place to say that our friends on the other side have assumed a policy to exist which has not existed in connection with the administration of the timber resources of this country for a matter of twenty-five years ? They have assumed that the timber resources of the country are administered by the government under a policy of revenue from the sale of standing timber.

Now, our friends opposite know, as everybody who gives any attention to the matter must know, that for a period of twenty-five years under the late administration and under the present administration, the policy of that government and of this government, in administering the timber of the country, has been to secure the development of a lumbering industry, and not to secure a price for the standing timber. It is true, the late government did, in 1879, embody in the Dominion Lands Act a provision which contemplated dealing with the timber resources of the country from the standpoint of a revenue from the sale of standing timber. That Act provided in good fair terms, for the setting apart of timber lands, for the sale of the timber in competition, for the payment of a bonus, and generally contemplated regulations looking to a revenue to be derived from the sale of the timber resources of the country. That was the policy that prevailed at that time in eastern Canada, and I presume that the government thought that what was good in eastern Canada must necessarily be good in western Canada ; so the policy of eastern Canada was adopted by them for western Canada. But the conditions were different. The conditions prevailing in western Canada at the time that Act was passed resembled the conditions which prevailed in eastern Canada many years before, to which the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) alluded during their remarks. There was need of securing the investment of capital in the lumbering industry in order that the standing timber might be turned into lumber for the use of the people of the country at a reasonable price. They found that the policy which was a sound and good policy under the conditions prevailing in eastern Canada was not a sound and good policy in the conditions prevailing in western Canada ; and we find that in 1881 they abandoned the attempt to raise a revenue from the sale of standing timber, becoming satisfied that that was not a practicable policy. I will take the liberty of reading just what they say in the regulations of May 18, 1881 :

With a view to encouraging settlement by cheapening the cost of building material, the government reserves the right to grant from time to time leases or licenses, as the case may be, under and in accordance with the provisions in that behalf from time to time of the Dominion Lands Act, to cut merchantable timber on any lands owned by it; and settlement upon or sale of lands within the territory covered by such license shall, for the time being, be subject to the operation of such leases or licenses.

In the regulations of November 11, 1881, the following conditions are made : that the licensee shall pay a ground rent of $5 per square mile ; that the licensee shall also pay a royalty of 5 per cent on the sale of all products of the berth ; that where two or more parties apply for a license for the same timber limit, their competitive tender shall be invited, and the one offering the highest sum in addition to the annual ground rent shall be granted the berth ; and that there shall be a renewal of the license for a year in case the licensee has fully complied with the conditions, and no portion of the berth is required for settlement or other public purposes. That is to say, the government found that the policy of undertaking to derive a revenue from the sale of the standing timber did not conduce to the welfare and progress and settlement of the country, and they abandoned it and deliberately adopted the principle—to quote the words of our hon. friends opposite—of 'handing over as a free gift' valuable areas of timber to those who would operate those areas and turn the timber into lumber for the benefit of the people, so that it could be bought by settlers.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. BRISTOL. What provision did they make that the persons to whom they handed them would operate them ?

Mr. OLIVER. They provided that the license should contain a requirement that a mill should be operated before a certain date.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. How long ?

Mr. OLIVER. Within a year after the date fixed in the license.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. For how long a time in the year ?

Mr. OLIVER. For six months, and it was to have a capacity of ten thousand feet a day. The policy has been the same under the late government and under this government. It has been altered in detail, but the principle has remained the same.

Mr. BRISTOL. When was the provision made with regard to the mill dispensed with ?

Mr. OLIVER. The regulation as regards the mill remains practically the same today as it was then. There was a slight change made, however, the mill instead of being required to be erected within one year after year the license was given, to be erected within one year after notice was given.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. Has notice been given yet ?

Mr. OLIVER. Notices have been given. What I want to point out is that in policy and in principle the same conditions of dealing with timber have prevailed for twenty-five years. And those conditions were found to be necessary by our hon. friends opposite. They had to abandon of their own motion the position they first took, that the standing timber should be a source of revenue to the country.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. How many of the holders of the timber limits in question have been notified to put up a mill ?

Mr. OLIVER. I wish, Mr. Speaker, to make a consecutive statement without prejudice, at this stage of my remarks, at any rate, so that we may get a fair understanding of the merits of the case. But my hon. friend has interjected a question, and I can only say to him, if I speak the truth, that the provision in regard to the erection of a mill within a year from the issue of the license, was absolutely ignored by the government which he supported.

That provision was never enforced, so far as I am aware, and later on it was changed by this government. Instead of allowing it to remain as a dead letter in the license, we had it changed so that the licensee would be required to erect a mill one year after he received notice.

Mr. AVERY. What date was that changed ?

Mr. HAGGART. Was there any condition in the license providing that any quantity of lumber should be sawn at all ?

Mr. OLIVER. The present licenses provide, if I recollect rightly, that on notice being given a mill must be erected and a certain quantity of lumber sawn. That condition has remained in the license, in one form or another, from 1881 to the present and is still there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman says that the condition as to the operation of a sawmill was not in force. I am not very familiar with the facts but I gather from this and previous debates, during previous sessions as well, that a very large area—I think about 29,000 square miles—which was granted by the Conservative administration between 1878 and 1896, was in the end almost completely given up by reason of the enforcement of these conditions. If not, for what reason were they given up ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is difficult, in making a statement such as I desire to put before the House, to give the facts without casting reflection when questions are asked. But since my hon. friend has asked the question, I suppose I shall have to answer. I hold here a number of copies of leases which were issued. Among them is a lease to my hon. friend for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). The order in council was granted on February 3rd, 1883.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the order in council over there ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman kindly read it ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly :

Certified copy of a report of a committee of the hon. the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on February 3, 1883.

On a memorandum dated January 24, 1883, from the Minister of the Interior, submitting an application from Mr. J. G. H. Bergeron, of Montreal, for a yearly license to cut timber on a berth as shown on the annexed sketch, and coloured in pink, of 50 square miles, more or less, on the west side of Dauphin river, in the province of Manitoba, more particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the discharge of Lake Dauphin into the Dauphin river; thence due west six miles; thence due north eight and one-third miles; thence due east six miles; more or less, to the river; thence southerly along the river to the place of beginning.

The minister recommends that the license be granted, on the terms and under the conditions of the regulations approved by order in council of November 11, 1881, subject to any prior grant or reserve, and upon the survey of the berth being made within one year under instructions.

The committee advise that a license be granted as recommended.

That order in council stood until the 23rd of October, 1888,—for a period of five years—and there never was a mill erected.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there ever a license issued ?

Mr. OLIVER. There never was.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. As my hon. friends have drawn attention to this feature of the license, it will be as well to put before the House some of the facts, because they have some bearing on the contention so frequently made by hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to a case considered by this House not very long ago. My hon. friend says there was no license issued in this case. True, there was none, and in the large majority of cases there was no license issued ; but in this case as in others, very evident acts of ownership were exercised. For instance I have here a certified copy of the report of council dated 15th of December, 1882, being an application from D. Tisdale for a yearly license, to cut timber on a berth 50 miles square.

Mr. FOSTER. That follows the same order.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the hon. gentleman tell the House, how many applications altogether were made and how many licenses were granted and how many were actually worked ?

Mr. OLIVER. I shall have to reply as I proceed.

Mr. AVERY. I asked what date that regulation was changed and should like an answer.

Mr. OLIVER. I have the date here but cannot on the moment put my hand on it and I don't wish to delay the House while I am searching for it. The date is one we can easily find out by other means. As regards these orders in council, acts of ownership were exercised under them.

Mr. D. Tisdale applied on October 31, 1882, for a berth of 50 square miles in townships 24 and 25, range 23, and township 25, range 22, west of the first meridian. This berth, No. 126, was granted by order in council of December 15, 1882. Mr. Tisdale did not make any payment in connection with this berth.

On August 27, 1883, Mr. Tisdale applied for another berth of 50 square miles in townships 23 and 24, range 26, west of the first meridian, but was advised that as he already had a berth of 50 square miles he could not be granted additional territory. On November 16, 1883, he requested cancellation of berth granted him as there was not any timber thereon, and asked for a berth of 50 square miles on the south shore of Lake Minnietakie. This berth,

No. 349, was granted in lieu of berth No. 136 by order in council of December 6, 1883. On March 2, 1885, Mr. Tisdale requested cancellation of berths as the timber thereon did not justify the expense of the survey. The berth was cancelled by order in council of May 29, 1885.

There is no question that this order in council did set apart the timber on that area for the exclusive use and benefit of D. Tisdale and there is no doubt that he did exercise the rights of a proprietor upon that area as against any other citizen of Canada, with the consent of the government of that day. I am not charging any thing improper but am pointing out the fact that Mr. Tisdale did exercise the right of ownership in that land in as much as he traded it off for another more convenient.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He surrendered it.

Mr. OLIVER. On condition that he got another in place of it. My hon. friend may call it what he likes but it looks like a trade to me. He could not trade any thing he did not own and the ownership was recognized.

I am not suggesting that there was the slightest impropriety in this. The government was anxious to have people with money go in and develop the timber resources of the country and they made this offer, which for the moment, I am assuming was a wide open offer. Mr. Tisdale came forward, he was granted a berth; it did not suit him and he got it exchanged for another. As time rolled on he found it was not a practicable proposition and he gave it up. There was nothing improper in that so far as I can see, if it is considered from the standpoint which I claim it should properly be considered from, the standpoint of the desirability of interesting capital in the development of the timber resources of the country of that day. I do not wish to say this in any offensive sense but I wish to show hon. gentlemen opposite how their argument, the argument they have twisted and turned and repeated, applies in this and the 450 other cases, practically of the same nature during the Conservative adminstration. Mr. Tisdale held a right on this timber berth for a matter of three years. He never paid any rent upon it, and at no time had he been fortunate enough to be able to sell that right, which he had to sell; if he could have sold it he would have been entitled to claim his license and operations might have been carried on.

Mr. FOSTER. If he fulfilled his conditions.

Mr. OLIVER. He fulfilled no conditions during the continuance of this period of three years.

Mr. FOSTER. Therefore he cut not a single stick of timber.

Mr. OLIVER. None whatever, he did nothing; but he held the right and he might have sold that right at any time during that period of three years had he found a buyer. He had something to sell, he paid no rent during that time, he did not operate. This is exactly the case of the celebrated Galway Horse and Cattle lease which my hon. friends have blazoned all through this country as being a most corrupt or incompetent transaction, a case of corruption on the part of the gentlemen interested or of incompetence on my part. I say there was nothing improper from my point of view in this transaction and nothing improper in the fact that H. P. Brown held his right under his order in council until he was able to claim that right and exercise it. If it was wrong for H. P. Brown or his assignee the Galway Horse and Cattle Company, surely my hon. friend cannot say it was not just as wrong in the 450 cases which they assisted in administering under these regulations and orders in council.

Mr. LALOR. Could not the government refuse to grant a license in that particular instance because the conditions had not been complied with?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly they could.

Mr. LALOR. How does the property belong to the gentleman who got the order in council and held it for three years? It was subject to the approval of the government at any time.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not responsible if my hon. friend does not understand. A man is given a right with all the authority of this government, with this parliament behind it, and, having that right until it is cancelled by the same authority that issued it, he surely has something to sell or to hold. These men all have something to hold or to sell and so had H. P. Brown, the first lessee of the tract later held by the Galway Horse and Cattle Company.

I do not know whether it is desirable to give any more instances. If my hon. friends are not prepared to admit that these orders in council enabled the people who received them to exercise the rights of ownership, I can give them more instances that will certainly prove that rights of ownership were exercised with the cognizance of authority of the government of the day, backed by parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend speaks about rights of ownership being exercised. Has he any other instances, except the one he has brought forward in the case of the Tisdale order? I mean any other instances of other rights of ownership than what he calls the right of ownership as explained in that way.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is rather too intricate for me at this particular stage of the discussion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister speaks of what I would call a surrender as an act of ownership; has he any other acts of ownership except of that character ?

Mr. FOSTER. That is the point.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know exactly what my hon. friends would call acts of ownership. If they question the fact of the exchange of one piece of land for another, being an act of ownership, I cannot tell what they would consider an act of ownership and therefore cannot tell them what such acts there were. If we can agree on the meaning of the expression 'act of ownership' I can give particulars.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was assuming for the time being that that was an act of ownership, although I might dispute it afterwards. I want to know if there were any others of a different character.

Mr. OLIVER. There were others of a different character.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What were they ?

Mr. OLIVER. There were of course the cases in which the name of my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) appears, in which the acts of ownership were the actual operation of the limit, which of course was a perfectly proper transaction with which no fault could be found.

Mr. FOSTER. But a license issued in that case.

Mr. OLIVER. A license issued but the license did not issue to my hon. friend. I have a little memorandum here in regard to the matter which perhaps it would be interesting to read :

Berths 25 and 25a, 25 square miles each, were applied for on March 3, 1881, by E. P. Leacock, on behalf of himself and Messrs. Shields, Haggart and MacLaren, and was granted by order in council of May 23, 1882, to Messrs. Shields, Haggart, MacLaren and McNicol. The first license we have any record of was issued to A. Ferguson on June 29, 1884. It appears that Mr. Ferguson acquired these limits under a decree of the Court of Queen's Bench in Equity, wherein Mr. John Shields and others were plaintiffs, and Mr. Peter MacLaren and others were defendants.

That is to say, my hon. friend's interest in these berths was of such a nature that it formed the subject of a suit at law; there was a decision of the courts and the berths were awarded to another man before the license was issued; as a matter of fact the berths were operated from 1882 to 1884.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Were any rents paid before the decree of the court ?

Mr. OLIVER. No rents were paid but the berths were operated under a permit paying 50 cents a thousand in lieu of royalty; so that there is ample evidence there that the ownership of the firm of Shields, Haggart, McLaren and McNichol was recognized before the courts before a license was issued by that government.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will agree with me that this was a different case from the other. The right of ownership there was because a permit had been granted by the Crown to operate.

Mr. OLIVER. It may be different, but I think my hon. friend will have to settle any question there may be in this connection with those who are more learned in the law than myself. My proposition was stated in the beginning. I beg to repeat that the right granted under the several orders in council was a tangible and supposedly valuable right, and that the value was understood and recognized even by the court.

Mr. FOSTER. When the permit was granted.

Mr. OLIVER. Was recognized in the court. Whether the permit was granted or not, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. FOSTER. In that case I understood the hon. gentleman to say the permit was granted.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Can he give us any instance out of the whole bunch in which such a right operated unless the permit had been granted ?

Mr. OLIVER. If the House will pardon me, I would like to say that the permit, as I understand, has nothing whatever to do with the case. The permit was granted to Mr. Ferguson, and not to the gentleman in whose favour the order in council was passed.

Mr. FOSTER. In what year ?

Mr. OLIVER. The license was issued to Mr. Ferguson on the 29th of January, 1894.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister stated that the limit was operated from 1882.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Ferguson operated the limit under permit. Mr. Ferguson does not appear in the transaction, so far as the records here are concerned, until he got a judgment in the courts when he became actual owner of the berth. He had already been operating it under a permit. I do not know under whose judgment, but it had nothing whatever to do with the rights of Shields, Haggart, MacLaren and Nichol. They had a right that was dealt with by the court, and that went to Ferguson. The fact that Ferguson was operating under a different right during that same time, showed that the permit had nothing to do with the rights of these gentlemen. I think, Mr. Speaker, that point has been thoroughly established, and I do not wish to bring the matter up at this particular stage of the argument. But it is thoroughly established that the government in that day, as well as the government of to-day, was dealing with the question of the administration of the timber with a view to development and not to revenue. I cannot emphasize that point more strongly than it is emphasized by the facts already placed before the House, unless hon. gentlemen opposite are prepared to admit the allegation of improper dealing, which they have alleged against this side of the House, returned to them three hundred or four hundred fold. Either their principle was that they were dealing with the timber with a view to development rather than revenue, or they have put on record one of the most outrageous pieces of jobbery that ever this country saw. Now what was the policy that has been followed right along ? It has been well said that lumber is one of the first necessities in the settlement of that country. In order that there may be lumber there must be capital invested, and the larger the capital invested the cheaper the lumber can be produced. That is an elementary proposition that every one will agree to. Now from 1881 until the 19th of December, 1887, the practice of the old government, and of this government, was first come first served. The man first applying for the timber, it was his for the taking, unless there was more than one man who wanted it, and then the question of which should have it was decided by competition. It is upon that principle, the administration of that principle, that our friends on the oither side have built up this stupendous charge of jobbery, of corruption and waste of natural resources that we have heard from them during the last few days.

Now what has been the success of the efforts made in regard to the development of that country in this respect? In 1881 there was a total lumber cut—giving only round figures—of 13,000,000 feet, and lumber sales of 12,000,000 feet. In 1896, the lumber cut was 34,000,000 feet, and the sales 32,000,000 feet. These figures refer to Manitoba and the Northwest and the railway belt in British Columbia. That was less than a three fold increase in sixteen years. The policy and purpose of the administration then was to get the lumber cut, and as a result of that policy and administration they were successful in nearly trebling the cut in sixteen years. For the nine months ending March 31, 1907, the lumber cut was 141,000,000 feet, and the lumber sales 128,000,000 feet. That is to say, taking nine months instead of a year, there was a four fold increase under the administration of this government in ten years, as against a less than three fold increase under the adminstration of our friends opposite in sixteen years. Now both governments were striving for the same thing .to get the lumber cut, to get it on the market so that settlers could buy and use it. While I have nothing to say at this stage of the discussion in condemnation of the policy of the late government in that connection, I must point out the policy in both cases being the same, the enormously greater success of this government, in achieving development that these records show.

In regard to the number of mills, there were 55 in 1896, and 89 in 1907. It may be interesting to know where the increase of mills took place. In the Winnipeg district there were 29 mills in 1896, and 29 in 1907 ; in Edmonton, 2 in 1896, and 16 in 1907 ; in Calgary, 10 in 1896, and 13 in 1907 ; in Prince Albert, 3 in 1896, and 6 in 1907 ; in Westminster, 11 in 1896, and and 25 in 1907. I think it is fair to say that having succeeded to the extent this government has succeeded in .securing the development of the lumber industry, and having secured that development by the alienation of a total of something less than 8,000 square miles of timber, their administration stands in a much more favourable light than the administration of their predecessors, who, with the alienation of some 30,000 square miles of timber, only succeeded in getting a lumber cut of 34,000,000 feet in the year 1896.

Now a word as to the plight in which the people of Winnipeg are left by the immense alienation of timber by this government, and the even more terrible plight of the people of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Our friends opposite have mourned over the fearful results that will come to these people because of the stupendous alienation of timber. They would have the country believe that the timber is all alienated, or practically so. What was the alienation of 30,000 square miles which they provided for under their administration ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That was prairie land.

Mr. OLIVER. It was prairie. Does my hon. friend insist upon standing on that position ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. On what ?

Mr. OLIVER. Surely my hon. friend will not say that the government which he followed during those years passed out order in council after order in council alienating prairie land under the supposition that it was timber.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Sure.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, that is an awful charge. I would not like to make that charge against my hon. friend. Were they buncoing their friends or were they holding up the farm lands of the country under the pretence that they were timber limits? What were they doing? My hon. friend must surely admit that the government that he followed must have had some elements of honesty towards its followers and towards the country, and if there were then in the country 30,000 square miles of timber to be alienated and there have now been alienated some 8,000 square miles, there is a balance of more than three times as much remaining to be alienated of timber land that these hon. gentlemen said was timber land and in all probability was timber land.

Mr. BRISTOL. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that these 30,000 square miles of timber limits have been alienated or did some of them revert back to the government later on?

Mr. OLIVER. It has been said many times that these timber lands had reverted back to the government.

Mr. AMES. And have been regranted over and over again.

Mr. OLIVER. And have been regranted. I do not think it is really profitable to bring in these matters, but seeing that my hon. friend has brought them in I might take the opportunity to repeat that the timber limit which the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) got as a free gift on the 21st December, 1882, upon which he paid one year's ground rent, over which he had the right to exercise proprietorship for a period of six years, which he then gave up as being of no value, and which was of no value, is a part of the very limit that my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) has estimated to be worth I think half a million dollars. Is there not some explanation to be made by our friends on the other side of the House in this connection? They have revelled in stupendous figures as to the value of timber limits. They have given out to the country that this government has robbed the people of hundreds of thousands of millions of dollars, that they have absolutely prevented the people of Winnipeg and of the prairies from getting timber because it is in the hands of some of these speculators, and of people who own mills even. The timber has been alienated, but it has not run away. It is there on the ground yet just as it was before, and it is not worth anything to any one unless and until it is turned into lumber. The timber is there to be used by the people of Winnipeg, to be used by the people of the prairies whether it is in the hands of this terrible Imperial Pulp Company or in the hands of this terrible man Fraser, or in whoever else's hands it may be, and Mr. Fraser and the Imperial Pulp Company, or whoever else there may be, can only get their money out of it by manufacturing the lumber and selling it at market prices to the people who need it. Men who have invested their money in these timber limits have to follow their money with their mills or their money is dead and dormant.

Mr. FOSTER. That applies only to the ultimate investment.

Mr. OLIVER. To the ultimate investment. There may be speculative transactions intervening, but there is no value in that timber until it becomes lumber and is put upon the market to be used by the consumer and the only value is the value that the consumer is willing and able to pay for the lumber.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The only value to the public, but what about the value to the happy beneficiary?

Mr. OLIVER. Now, my hon. friend was a supporter of the government of 1882. He believed that the government had a sound policy in regard to the west. He supported that government in granting 450 separate and different areas of timber to private parties on exactly the same principle and with the very same idea that these limits are being granted to-day—so that these private parties may turn that timber into lumber in order to make it available to the settlers. The declaration of policy set out by the government of that time I have read already.

In regard to the stupendous values, the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, gives $500,000 as the value of the Cedar lake limit. Does my hon. friend who gave that value know that at the present time and under present conditions a timber limit on Cedar lake is of no more actual value as a working proposition, in so far as my poor judgment goes, than if it were in the moon? It is of no more value to-day than it was when the hon. member for Argenteuil acquired an interest there. It is just as near Winnipeg today as it was then. Lumber was dearer in Winnipeg then than it is to-day. It was not worth anything then and it is not worth anything more as a working proposition now. It has a speculative value and my hon. friend has regaled this House and has attempted to spread throughout the country the idea that this government is robbing the country of that speculative value. I do not know that it is necessary to emphasise that statement; it is so utterly absurd that I am sure that even my hon. friend will be able to see it himself. There were during the past year or two town lots in Winnipeg, in Regina, in Saskatoon, in Edmonton and other places in the Northwest; perhaps my hon. friend acquired an interest in some of these town lots when he was up there. They had a speculative value running into millions and millions and millions, because they were being bought and sold on the market in those days. They had a value which is as legitimate a value as my hon. friend has put on the Cedar lake limit.

Mr. AMES. I only put that value on the Cedar lake limit because the agent of the company put that value upon it.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely, just the same as the real estate man to whom my hon. friend went for prices put a value on suburban lots in Saskatoon. He was given a price and my hon. friend perhaps was able to take advantage of the opportunity to do something in Saskatoon suburban lots.

Mr. AMES. I only wish that I had got some of them.

Mr. OLIVER. Did the hon. gentleman get some?

Mr. AMES. No, I wish I had.

Mr. OLIVER. If he had and if he had held them until now I think he would have wished that he had none.

Mr. FOSTER. You must not run down Saskatoon.

Mr. OLIVER. We are not running down Saskatoon, but every man must see that there has been a speculative boom in suburban lots in the Northwest that had no legitimate foundation and that the speculative value of these outside lots has gone absolutely to nothing.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They are farm lands.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and they were diverted from the legitimate purpose of farm lands. I had the privilege of making a in British Columbia a few years ago when trip through the Boundary Creek country that country was being developed and when a number of mines were being operated to a certain extent. I had the pleasure of meeting my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) at that time. There were millions of dollars being invested in that country in speculative values; there were hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars invested in actual operation of mines; but there was not a dollar being produced from minerals in all that country and there could not be until a railroad was built. And yet the country was booming, mines were thought to be worth all kinds of money and everybody was a millionaire. I had the pleasure of travelling with a gentleman well known in Canada, Mr. George Ham, and Mr. Ham remarked that it was the pleasantest country he had ever seen and that the people were the happiest because while in other countries there might be some people who were poor, in that country he met no one who was not a millionaire except one man, and he was a billionaire. The wealth of the people was as plain as daylight; every man of them could prove it to you with pencil and paper; there was no argument about it any more than there was about my hon. friend's statement with regard to the timber limits; every man there told you; I have a claim that is so many feet long and so many feet wide, it runs so many dollars to the ton and there are so many tons, and the difference between the cost of production and the product is so much, it is my mine, it is worth a million. And all that in face of the fact that perhaps the man could not pay for his next meal. And to-day although that country has been developed and although ore is being produced and although there are millions of dollars coming out of it you could buy ninety-nine-one hundredths of those claims to-day for anything you like to give them. Perhaps my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) knows more about that than I do.

Mr. FOSTER. I will furnish you with one or two.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I hope the hon. gentemlan will enlighten his hon. friend from St. Antoine on the fallacy and impropriety of the argument he has put forward in regard to the speculative values of timber limits. If these speculative values are there, how is it that every man on this side of the House allied with the government and having the back door entry that gentlemen opposite think exists, are not all millionaires.

Mr. FOSTER. There are a few very smart fellows who won't let the others in.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend says there are a few smart ones who will not let the others in. Well, there are smart men on the other side of the House, and let me point out this to my hon. friend: it has not been alleged, and if alleged it cannot be proven, that under the system of tendering for timber limits which has prevailed since the year 1896, a gentleman who sits on the other side of the House did not have just as good a chance to put his money into a speculative timber venture as a gentleman who sits on this side of the House. There may be general allegations on that point, but the facts are here to prove that there was no restriction in the past which confined the purchase of timber limits to a member on this side of the House.

Mr. AMES. I wish you would let us examine a few witnesses on that point.

Mr. OLIVER. There is nothing to hinder my hon. friend getting the information. In fact he no doubt has the information in the myriad of returns which have been brought down; he knows who are the tenderers on timber limits; he knows that friends of his friends are successful tenderers as well as unsuccessful.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think so.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend must not excuse his lack of enterprise on that ground I say that the principle of dealing with these timber limits is that they should be developed, that lumber should be cut upon them, that in order that they should be developed it was necessary that they should get into private hands, and that they were free to the first comer for twenty-five years.

The first man who applied for a timber berth got it unless somebody else bid more than he did in the competition.

Now, according to the records of my hon. friends, there have been 8,000 miles alienated and there remain some 20,000 miles to aienate. Why have these gentlemen opposite not been up and doing; why have they not asked that timber be put up to public tender and taken their chances on getting it? It is because they know that the arguments advanced by the hon member (Mr. Ames) have absolutely no foundation in fact; not any more foundation in fact than the values of these suburban lots in the cities of the Northwest or of these Boundary Creek mining claims of which I have spoken. These gentlemen know that, or if they did not know it they certainly have been acting with more disregard to their own interests than any set of men can justify themselves in doing. They might have been up and out and after these limits, but they knew the limits did not have the value they placed upon them. They knew that between the acquirement of a timber limit and the earning of a dividend from the actual sawmill operation, there is a tremendous gap which has to be bridged by the application of capital, energy, intelligence and business sagacity. It is not every man who acquires a timber limit, nor is it every man who builds a mill who is able to arrive at the point of successful management of a lumber business. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) has said that there is 40 per cent of the timber which has been alienated for purely speculative purposes. I say it is a good thing that there is not more than that, and that under all the circumstances it is possible to show that 60 per cent of all alienations are either now under operation or are in the way of coming under operation.

Mr. AMES. I said at least 40 per cent, and as 75 per cent of the limits are not being operated it lies somewhere between 40 per cent and 75 per cent.

Mr. OLIVER. Very well, let my hon. friend have it any way he pleases. The point is that we have secured a cut of 141,000,000 feet of lumber in nine months, and to-day lumber is stacked up in the yard of every sawmill in the two western provinces and in the railway belt of British Columbia beyond the present requirements of the people of the country.

Now, my hon. friend in his argument of sympathy for the people who have been robbed of their rights, accuses this government of having a wasteful policy and a corrupt administration—perhaps he does not lay so much stress upon the corrupt administration as he does upon the wasteful policy. He says that the government has not paid any proper regard to the conservation of these timber resources. I say that so far as the evidence has gone, the fact that we have secured a cut of such an enormous amount of lumber with such a small alienation of land as compared with anything that has been done before, is evidence on that point. But that is not all. It is now two years since the policy of setting apart forest reserves was entered upon by this government, and under that policy there is now held in reservation in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia 5,391¾ square miles of forest reserves, nearly as much as the total alienation of timber during the years of this government's administration. And besides that we have special control of certain park reservations—the Rocky Mountain Park, 4,500 square miles; Yoho Park, 828½ square miles, Mountain Park 5,000 square miles, and Jasper Park 5,000 square miles; a total of 10,904½ square miles. We have the 5,391 square miles set apart for the reservation and recreation of the forest and the 10,904 square miles in what may be called pleasure parks, where we have special arrangements for the protection of timber. It is estimated by the gentleman who was in charge of the forestry branch of the Department of the Interior for the last year, a gentleman who has been alluded to by my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) as being a reliable and honourable man, that we have in the west and in the railway belt 150,000 square miles of timbered lands, that is, lands containing valuable merchantable timber, or a total of 96,000,000 acres.

Mr. AMES. He does not say merchantable timber.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is under a wrong impression. He may not use the word merchantable, but the effect of his statement is that there is that large area of merchantable timber.

Mr. AMES. No, the effect is that there is that large area covered with timber, but his statement is not that it is merchantable.

Mr. OLIVER. His statement is that there is five times that area covered with timber, but there is that area of what he considers merchantable or valuable timber. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that this government has anything to be ashamed of, but has everything to be proud of, in its administration of the timber lands of this country, judged by the purpose for which the lands are being administered. If we are working to one standard and are judged by another, naturally we must have the worst of the argument; but we deny the right of our opponents to judge us by other standards than those to which we are working, and to which our predecessors worked. Applying to both governments the same standard, our administration shows far and away ahead of theirs.

There is a point to which I wish to allude in this connection to emphasize the fallacious character of the arguments put forward by our friends on the other side. They have been particularly strong on the idea that there was not a fair opportunity given to people to tender on timber limits, and that as a consequence the country lost enormous sums of money. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron), in following this line of argument—in which I presume he was instructed by my hon. friend from St. Antoine—instanced three cases in a locality in which he was specially interested, and with which he was specially familiar. I am fairly familiar with that locality myself. These are the facts placed before the House by the hon. member for Alberta. Berth 1157, thirty and one-half square miles, five miles south of Coleman, on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway; tenders opened April 6, 1904; there were two tenders; the applicant for the berth did not get it; he was not the successful tenderer. Berth 1114, eighteen and one-quarter square miles, in the same locality within a few miles of the railroad; tenders opened December 30, 1903; there were three tenders—McDonald $2,327, McGuire $275, Sharp $51.50. The applicant was not successful. Berth 1115, seventeen square miles, in the same locality, quite close to the railroad; tenders opened December 30, 1903; there were three tenders—Frith $1,275, McGuire $255, Sharp $51.50. The applicant, Frith, was successful in this case. These three berths are estimated by the hon. member for Alberta to be of the value of $325,000. These tenders, as I have pointed out, were opened in December, 1903, and in April, 1904. There is no question of the sufficiency of the thirty or forty or fifty days notice given within a stone's throw of a daily railway train. The berths were in close touch with large lumbering operations, both east and west. Some of the largest operators in the country being within twenty or thirty miles of them, and all on the same line of railway. If these limits are worth $325,000, I want to know what my hon. friend from Alberta was doing when they were up for sale. Surely my hon. friend was not so wealthy that he would allow an opportunity of profiting to the extent of a quarter of a million dollars to pass by for the sake of a paltry $500 or $1,300, or $2,000. Did my hon. friend believe that there was any such value in these limits? Does any member on the other side of the House believe that there was any such value in them? The men who operated lumber mills in the immediate locality, who certainly are not philanthropists, as those of us who know anything about the operations of the lumber combine investigation of last session will admit; and is it to be supposed for an instant that these gentlemen would have allowed a chance like that to pass by? There is no question that they must have had notice, and had ample time to examine the berths, and must have been absolutely familiar with the conditions existing in those cases, and yet they allowed them to pass for the sake of $2,000 in one case, a little over $1,300 in another, and a paltry $500 in another. My hon. friend from Alberta rang the changes in this House on the same story as that told by the hon. member for St. Antoine in regard to the Cedar lake limit, that the berths were put up too late in the season, and that the public had not a chance to inform themselves regarding them; but it is absolutely impossible to make the conditions conform to the story. This shows clearly that the facts have nothing to do with my hon. friend's argument. Facts are things he has no use for. I find here that a gentleman named McGuire put in a tender for berth 1114 and also berth 1115. I happen to know Mr. McGuire and I know that he is a practical lumberman and an enterprising man, and that he has as quick an eye for a dollar as any member of this House, not excepting the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). Well, Mr. McGuire estimated the value of berth 1114 at $275. That is what it was worth to him. He estimated berth 1115 at $255. And he lives right there at Pincher Creek, within a few miles of these limits, and there can be no doubt that he knew what was in them. There can be no suspicion of collusion with regard to these tenders because here is a tender for $2,327 as against the next highest for $275, and a tender for $1,275 as against another for $225. Yet the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) went through exactly the same hysterics over what he called the improper conduct of the Interior Department in letting these berths as the member for St. Antoine did in the case of the Cedar lake limits.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. OLIVER. I will take the liberty of saying at this stage of the discussion that I think I have been successful in establishing by the facts I have been able to place before the House, in the remarks I made before six o'clock, that the administration of the timber policy of this government has been an unqualified success, judged by the proper standard, that is, as a means of securing the investment of capital in the lumber industry, the manufacture of lumber and the distribution of that lumber which was the object of the policy of this government as of their predecessors. The allegation is that although the administration has been a success it has been corrupt in its methods, that is that there has been partiality, partisanship and impropriety of transactions and dealings in connection with timber limits in the department. Upon this point I am not in as good a position to speak as in regard to the general question of the results of the administration and of the policy, but I hold in my hand a statement of the berths awarded since 1896, and while I shall not trouble the House by reading it at length, I shall pick out a few typical cases of the awards of berths as illustrations of the general administration of the timber limits :

Berth No.	Tenders opened.	Area.	No. of tenderers	Range of tender price.
	1907.	sq. m.		$
1393.	Oct. 16..	10	7	400 to 6,550
1388.....	Sept. 18..	3·25	5	307 " 8,100
1387.....	Oct. 16..	12	4	400 " 2,106
1363	July 24..	12	4	372 " 1,000

I do not know that I need quote further examples as evidence that there was absolute competition, that there was sufficient notice given to secure that competition and that ample prices were secured.

Mr. OWEN. Were those berths sold to the highest bidder ?

Mr. OLIVER. They were sold to the highest bidder. Would my hon. friend care to have the figures ? I will say further that this list contains all the tenders for berths awarded since 1896 and in all cases the berths were awarded to the highest bidder. It will be observed that the people who desired to acquire these leases placed widely differing values upon the berths, in many cases the highest tender being ten times as great as the lowest. When there are such differences of opinion between the people who desire to become interested in these berths the House would hardly be warranted in accepting unquestioned the estimates of value placed on timber limits by the hon. member for St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames) or any of our hon. friends opposite.

Another point that is made evident by this list of tenders is that it was not a case of awarding berths to political favourites ; it was a question of open competition and the man who put in the highest bid, accompanied by the necessary cheque, got the berth. One illustration will serve. Our friends opposite have made particular mention of berth No. 1046. This is a berth of very large area, 250 square miles, situated north of Prince Albert. Two tenders were put in for this berth. One tender was for $2,510 by Mutchenbaker Bros. and the other for $5,000 by William Cowan, of Prince Albert. William Cowan is not a member of the Leberal party or a supporter of this government. He was mayor of Prince Albert for one or two years and was a Conservative candidate against the present Judge Lamont in the provincial elections of 1905.

Mr. AMES. Is that limit not now in the hands of the Big River Lumber Company?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Can the minister tell me who were Mr. Cowan's associates?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no idea in the world, and it does not make any difference. Mr. Cowan put in the highest tender for this limit and he got it, and he was not a friend of this government, so far as I am aware. What Mr. Cowan did with it after he got it is entirely his own business.

Mr. AMES. Would the minister make inquiries from the department and ascertain whether other tenderers did not ask that the time should be extended in order that other bids might be made in respect of that particular limit?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think I will, because it has not anything to do with this case. The point I want to make, and which my hon. friend wants to avoid, is that in the case of a limit which our hon. friends opposite declared to be especially valuable, and have instanced as one of the cases in which there was an improper if not a corrupt transactiaon on the part of this government, it was one of their own friends who got it. I want to say that Mr. Cowan got it properly; Mr. Cowan is an operating mill man on a large scale in the city of Prince Albert. There is a reason why Mr. Cowan, having got that limit, should not hold it. He tendered for it as a honest man and he got it. Now what has my hon. friend to say to that ?

Mr. AMES. Will the minister allow us to put Mr. Cowan in the witness box and get him to tell us under oath the circumstances under which he got that limit?

Mr. OLIVER. Will the hon. gentleman give me a reason why a reputable man such as Mr. Cowan should be put in the witness box to be cross-examined by the hon. member for St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames)? I think that private citizens of this country have some rights, and I hope my hon. friend does not expect to abuse the privilege of parliament outside of parliament as he does inside. I commend the suggestion of my hon. friend to the House and to the country, that Mr. William Cowan, of Prince Albert, shall be put in the witness box to gratify my hon. friend's curiosity in regard to matters or things in which he has not the remotest concern, and in regard to which he has not even informed the House. The hon. gentleman must have an exaggerated idea of his responsibility in the position he occupies at present, and a very minimized idea of the rights of citizens of this country. I think I am safe in giving him to understand that reputable private citizens of this country have rights which even members of parliament must respect. Mr. Cowan not only acquired this berth which has been the subject of adverse criticism, but he was also a successful tenderer in other cases. I merely give this instance as showing that hon. gentlemen have absolutely no foundation for their suggestion of favouritism in connection with the letting of these tenders, or for the allegation that there has not been ample notice, adequate competition, and fair prices.

Mr. OWENS. I desire to ask the hon. gentleman a question merely for information. Does the hon. minister think that in his judgment ample time was given between the asking for tenders and their acceptance, or the opening of tenders, for a thorough examination of the timber limits that were offered or bid for ?

Mr. OLIVER. In some cases there was ample time, in some cases there was not. It was not, as I have said, a question of the amount of revenue that this country should derive from the sale of timber, the question was how to place the timber in the hands of those who would utilize it. The practice adopted was that the first man who applied for it had a right to get it put up, and then if he was the highest bidder he got it. There was no question of reserving the timber, or holding it for higher prices, or auctioning it off. That was not the policy of this government, nor was it the policy of the hon. gentleman's friends. When we change our policy or undertake to raise a revenue from standing timber, then the criticism of the hon. gentleman will be perfectly in order, if we fail in our duty as they think we have in this case. But I submit that when our policy is, if you like, to get rid of the timber, to get rid of the standing timber up to a certain point, and get it in the hands of private parties who we expect will utilize it, that being the purpose, it is not a question of whether there was too much or too little time, because the policy was that the man who paid the most money got the limit, without favouritism, or without advantage to one side or the other. I have already pointed out that in the case of the limits instanced by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron), there was no question as to ample time to explore these limits. There was ample time, they were right under the noses of plenty of capable business men, capable mill operators, and yet he stood up in the House and gave us the same rhyme as to the impropriety of the conduct of the government in these cases, as the member for St. Antoine did in regard to other cases, and for the same reason.

Mr. OWEN. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he wanted to get rid of these timber limits ?

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a fair way of stating the avowed policy of the Conservative government from 1881 to 1896, and of the Liberal government from 1896 to 1907. We wanted to get the timber into the hands of persons who would operate it, just as we wanted to get the homestead land into the hands of the people who would work it.

Now with regard to the question of dealing with these matters in the House and in the department, it has been suggested by our friends opposite that there is something to conceal, there must be some impropriety contained in the papers in the department, or else every member of the House would be free to go into the department and examine those papers as he pleased, and that it would be the business of the department to place those papers upon the table of the House for any member who chose to examine them as he pleased. Now I have already had occasion to say that these papers in connection with timber limits constitute the title of the owner to his property. His title is set out in each of the regulations that have been made from 1881 to the present time, and the retention of the limit depends upon the fulfilment of the conditions set forth. Now the evidence of the fulfilment of those conditions is contained in the papers on file in the department, it is not contained anywhere else. The minister is responsible to see that the conditions are fulfilled, that is, he is practically the judge in the matter. Now that being the case, these papers constitute the title of these men to their property, and if that property has a hundredth part of the value my hon. friend suggests, then I say it is in the highest degree improper that these papers should not be kept in the most careful custody .

Mr. OWEN. Does the hon. gentleman say that all the timber limits which have been sold since 1896 are being operated ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. OWEN. Or are they being held for speculative purposes ?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine, says that forty per cent are being held for speculative purposes.

Mr. OWEN. If they are not being operated why are the government so anxious to get rid of the timber limits of this country, selling them as they are for a mere pittance? As I understand the contention of the hon. gentleman it is that the government were anxious to dispose of the timber limits because they wanted the lumber brought upon the market. Now, I understand the hon. minister to say that these limits are not being operated.

Mr. OLIVER. The government has disposed of timber with the view to the limits being operated and in every license is a condition under which the government can compel the limit to be operated or else cancel the limit. The government has not insisted upon that provision.

Mr. HERRON. In how many instances has the government put that clause into operation? Are there any cases or are there many of them?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not familiar with all the transactions in the department, but as far as I am aware, from 1881 until December last that provision was not insisted upon. But, if it is of interest, I may say that in view of the conditions as shown to exist last summer it was believed by the department that the time had come when steps should be taken to bring into operation that section and after looking over the ground carefully we decided that with respect to all limits which were accessible and which had been held without operation for five years, notice should be issued that these limits should be operated in accordance with the terms of the license. This is the first time that I am aware of that such action has been taken. It seemed to us that the time had come when it was proper to insist to a moderate degree upon the enforcement of this clause in the license which, up to that time, under our predecessors or under our administration, had not been enforced for the reason that it was considered desirable that private owners should hold timber limits with the view of interesting capital, either now or later, so that ultimately these limits would be brought into operation, and it was not considered to be sound public policy to cancel the limit because there was no mill erected upon it.

Mr. HERRON. Has notice been served on the operators in any instance that the minister can name?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. HERRON. It has been?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot name instances but if the hon. gentleman will move for a return I will bring them down. I was proceeding to say—I have so much assistance in making these few remarks that really I find difficulty in just meeting all the cases—that the title to the limit depended upon papers on file in the department and that the department would not be discharging its duty as a business proposition if it did not give every care to the custody of these papers. It would be trifling with the property of the citizens of the country. Now, when the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, asked the privilege of examining certain files in the department in regard to timber limits it did not seem to me that I could give him the right to examine these files and refuse it to other people. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman takes the position that he has rights over and above those of other people. Perhaps he does. He may be larger in his own eyes than any of his neighbours, but I will say to him in all kindness that he is not any larger in mine and that I could not accord to him a privilege or a right that I was not able to accord to other people who are just as good as he is.

Mr. AMES. May I ask the hon. minister if that right has not been accorded to many other people for a long time past?

Mr. OLIVER. I have said—I hope I will not have to make that speech again—that from the year 1892 up to the present time there has been a standing order in the department that such should not be allowed.

Mr. AMES. Has that standing order been obeyed in all particulars?

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend is evidence that it has been obeyed?

Mr. AMES. That is not fairly answering my question. I am aware that it has been disobeyed.

Mr. OLIVER. Can my hon. friend give an instance? I believe it has been disobeyed but I do not hold myself responsible for the fact that it may have been disobeyed. It has been disobeyed contrary to the orders of those in authority ever since 1892, but in so far as I am concerned I would be obliged to my hon. friend if he would give me any instance in which it has been disobeyed under my control. I will be obliged to him if he can give me that information.

Mr. AMES. I cannot give that but I would say that so long as senators and members of the House received that privilege I thought it was my privilege also. If the privilege is taken from all of us, in so far as the Department of the Interior is concerned, I will stand on just the same terms as every other member.

Mr. OLIVER. I have asked my hon. friend for an instance. He has said that he cannot give me an instance and yet he stands up in this House and says that there are instances. I want him either to give an instance or say that there are no instances.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman will permit me I will give him an instance.

Mr. OLIVER. Wait until I get one from the hon. member for St. Antoine.

Mr. AMES. I will give an instance in my own case. As I said before I had no difficulty a year ago in securing access to the files of the department. There was not the slightest difficulty raised on the part of the deputy minister when I asked to be permitted to consult the original files.

Mr. OLIVER. And because the hon. gentleman was accorded that privilege in a special case last year he comes before the House and demands a general right.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the minister want another case ?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I will be obliged to the hon. gentleman if he can give me another case.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) stood up in his place in this House last session and said that he had read all the reports in the Department of Indian Affairs, from top to bottom, in the case of some islands in the Georgian bay, stating that he had spent the whole of an afternoon in the department reading the papers.

Mr. AMES. The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) said in this House the other day that he had repeatedly gone into the department and seen the files.

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose my hon. friend considers that he has a right to go into the department and examine a file for the purpose of building up a case to present to the House and the country against this government ?

Mr. BERGERON. Why not ?

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely, but the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) thinks that another member has not the same right or privilege to come into the department and build up a case against the opposition. This surely is a rule that might work both ways. A special case is not a general rule. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, was given the sepcial privilege last year to go in and see a file for a special reason because the matter was under discussion in the House, and I say it is absolutely unfair for him, that it is—I will not characterize it by its proper name—to suggest that because he was given a special privilege last year for a special reason he has therefore a general right. I say again that there is a standing rule in the department against that action ; it is a proper rule and the government would be acting improperly not to carry it out, and so far as I am concerned it is carried out.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. Against the Conservatives.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes and against the Liberals.

Mr. MILLER. While others are making explanations I would wish to say a word. Last session or the session before when the affairs of the North Atlantic Trading Company were being investigated I remember distinctly that the deputy in charge said to the Liberal members that it was disturbing the work of the department and that he could not possibly allow members to go into the department and look at the documents.

Mr. BENNETT. They were all burned up.

Mr. OLIVER. As to the question of bringing the original documents into the House ; my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) waxed eloquent on the fact that last year the original documents were brought into the House on the order of the House and this year they were refused. But last year there was an order of the House given to bring the original documents, and I would like any hon. gentlemen opposite to point to an occasion when any member of this government declined or hesitated to obey an order of the House. There was an order of the House given last year and that order was obeyed, and as I had occasion to tell the House the other night the original documents which were laid on the table then have never, so far as I am aware, been returned to the department, proving absolutely the impropriety of bringing those original documents into the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is now referring to what occurred in a former debate on this question.

Mr. OLIVER. I was only following the argument that my hon. friend on the other side put before the House.

Mr. BENNETT. It is the same rule for everybody.

Mr. OLIVER. Now, I want to say that as soon as the House gives an order for the production of papers, I do not care how many they are and I do not care what they are, so far as I am concerned they are at the service of the House. But I would like the House to appreciate the responsibility it takes in requiring that the titles to private property contained in the departmental files shall be placed in jeopardy by being taken from their proper custody and placed in the custody of others who are not directly interested in them. I think it is a fair proposition that before that action is decided upon by the House there should be some specific reason given for it. That is the position I took in the House when the question was up before. It is the only position I take, it is the only one I propose to take and I think it is a fair position. If the House sees fit to ignore the giving of a reason for the production of the documents and votes for their production, well, parliament is supreme and parliament becomes responsible for the custody of these documents. But it is only right that I, having been charged with the custody of these documents, should place before parliament the responsibility that is thereby assumed. We have nothing to conceal ; we do not desire to conceal any thing but we do desire to discharge the business responsibility that is placed upon us in a reasonable business way.

Now with regard to the question of the tender for this Cedar lake timber limit, I have practically nothing to say. I was not connected with the administration of the department at the time. But, the advertisement was issued, tenders were received, the highest tender got the limit. The gentleman who had sole charge of the handling of the tenders at that time and who is now a member of the House has said, that he was responsible for those tenders, that they were opened and found to be as they are now, and that the limit was awarded to the highest tender because the money was there to pay for it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Would the Minister of the Interior tell us how many tenders there were for that limit ?

Mr. OLIVER. Three. Why does the hon. gentleman ask me ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I thought the hon. gentleman stated it was given to the highest bidder. I understood there was only one tender for that limit and that tender was $500.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is wasting a good deal of the energy of the House. The original documents were on the table and the hon. gentleman had an opportunity of examining them and why does he ask me how many tenders there were. There were three tenders and the highest tender took the limit and the man who was responsible for the handling of the tenders declares now, as a member of this House, that there was no change made in the tenders by him, that they were awarded exactly as they came to him because the money was there. Our friends on the other side say that is not enough ; they want something more ; and the hon. gentleman who is in question says : Say that I am responsible in any way or to any degree for any thing in connection with these tenders that you complain about and I will demand an investigation at the hands of this House. But there is not one of them who has so far dared to say so. They have stood up and hour after hour they have declared their suspicion and have built up a suppositious case. Then, as the hon. member who spoke this afternoon did, they boast of the fact that they have created suspicion throughout this country that cannot be allayed. If there was an intention to get at the truth of this matter I think it is a fair proposition that they should state what they believe to be the truth. If they believe there is any thing wrong with these tenders they should state it, but they have not done so and I doubt if they will do so. They know that that is the proper course to take ; they know that that is the honourable and fair and manly course, to quote the words of my hon. friend (Mr. Turriff). But am I to say that they are not fair or honourable or manly that they will not take that course. I won't say so. Mr. Speaker, for I am sure you would rule me out of order. I will only make the statement in regard to this matter that Mr. Fraser the gentleman who put in these tenders made to me. I do not do it because I desire to place it before the House, because I consider there is nothing to explain, but certain statements have been made and Mr. Fraser has asked me to relate to this House his statement in regard to these tenders. His statement to me is this : That he was interested with certain associates and applied to have this celebrated Cedar lake timber limit put up to competition. It was put up to competition and on the understanding that he had with his associates he put in a tender for $1,000.

Before the time for the tenders to be opened arrived, he received either a letter or a telegram from a client in Winnipeg, authorizing him to put in a tender for this limit at $7,000. Having the authority of Mr. Nolan to use his name in tendering, and having already been required to tender in his own name, he could not use his own name a second time ; therefore he used Mr. Nolan's name to put in the tender for his client. He wrote out the tender, and, as he says was the custom, filled in the figures at the last minute before it was closed up and sent to the Department ; and the limit was awarded to his client. He points out, I think very fairly, that if he had any advantage in the department, any inside track as you might say, and if he wanted that timber limit and it was anything like the value my hon. friend from St. Antoine says it is, there was nothing in the world to prevent him putting in a tender at a higher figure than $7,000 and getting the limit for himself. It is on the record that he did not get it for himself; he got it for his client; and it was assigned to the Imperial Pulp company. There is no evidence that Mr. Fraser had or has any interest in that company. Therefore, on the face of the transaction, Mr. Fraser put in the tender in a legitimate way on behalf of his client, and the client got the limit, while the tender which Mr. Fraser put in on his own behalf and that of his associates of course did not get the limit.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister allow a question ? Where were the two tenders written out—at Mr. Fraser's office ?

Mr. OLIVER. So Mr. Fraser says.

Mr. BENNETT. Then can the minister explain why for one tender Mr. Fraser used his office paper and for the other tender a plain sheet ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say. I am merely giving the statement as Mr. Fraser gave it to me. I am not defending Mr. Fraser or his action. I know nothing about the matter except what he has told me. But I say that Mr. Fraser, acting with his associates putting in a tender for $1,000, was not in a position to discuss with them the fact that he had received an order from a client to put in a tender at a higher figure. Although he knew that the first tender which he was putting in was of no value, it was not his own personal tender; it was his and his associates'. But he put in the tender at the higher figure on behalf of his client as instructed. I give the explanation as Mr. Fraser gave it to me, and the fact that he was in position to profit to the extent of half a million dollars if he put in a tender in his own name for $7,100, but he did not do so, is evidence to me that the tender which he put in at $7,000 was an honest tender.

Mr. OWEN. Will you allow me to ask a question? Since you have been Minister of the Interior do you say to the House that you think you have in every case disposed of timber limits in the best interests of this country, or have you favoured the individual at the expense of this country?

Mr. OLIVER. I have had occasion to say already, and I have read to the House figures which prove that these tenders have been awarded without favouritism and without partisanship to the highest bidders, and we believe in the best interests of the people of this country.

Now, it may be said that if these regulations were good why should they be changed? It is within the knowledge of hon. members that some two years ago provisions were introduced and sanctioned for the setting aside of forest reserves, indicating the intention of the government to enter upon a policy of forest preservation. But a policy of forest preservation is a serious matter, and must be dealt with according to circumstances and knowledge acquired. It seemed to the government, in view of the progress that had been made in the development of the lumber industry, in view of the conditions that had arrived, as demonstrated particularly by the investigation held here last year into the lumber combine and the further investigation held in the province of Alberta into the same question, the time had come when it would be a safe proposition to deal in a more conservative manner with the timber areas than had been done in the past. As I said a while ago, the policy was to get the timber into the hands of the people who would cut it. It was not a question of getting a price for the standing timber; it was a question of getting the lumber on the market, and getting the benefit of the royalty on that lumber. But having reached a cut of 141,000,000 feet in nine months, having eighty-nine mills in operation in the woods under the control of this government, and there having entered into the question of the acquirement of these limits the element of speculation to a certain extent, it seemed that the time had arrived when it would be safe to change the regulations and adopt practically the policy that was adopted by the Conservative government in 1879 in their Land Act of that year, and to provide that timber should not be put up to competition, except in the judgment of the government, and that it should be so dealt with that the highest bonus would be obtained. Under the regulations that have been under discussion, the timber was there for the first applicant; there was no reservation. There being no reason to the contrary, the man who applied had the right to have the timber put up to competition, and if he bid the most for it he got it.

Now, we propose that the timber shall be put up only on the judgment of the government that it is right and proper and in the public interest that a certain area shall be advertised for sale. We propose to have the area examined so as to decide its suitability and its worth and then sell it by public auction with the view of getting the highest bonus. That is exactly in line with what my hon. friends opposite have been declaring is the policy the government should adopt, so that I hope we shall have their unanimous endorsation of it. But let me point out to those gentlemen that to have put such a policy in force, say five years ago, would, instead of being beneficial, have been most injurious to the best interests of the country. That was how the Conservative government found it to be in 1879, and that is how we would have found it to be had we undertaken to enforce such a policy before the investment of capital and the distribution of lumber interests gave sufficient assurance that the requirements of the people would be met without hindrance. But now that point having been reached, we believe it is opportune to change that policy and follow to a greater extent the line followed in this eastern part of the country with regard to timber limits. Whether we have done wisely or not can only be known later on. I am glad of this opportunity of placing before the House the facts with regard to these regulations and the reasons which have caused their adoption.

I would like to instance how these regulations would have worked had they, in their present form, been adopted many years ago. Supposing the Land Act of 1879 had been enforced and that timber could only be put for sale on bonus and on competition. Suppose there was a lumber firm operating in the city of Winnipeg, which had ample capital to extend its operations. At that time there was no demand for lumber. There were no people and consequently no lumber needed. Had, therefore, the system of competition been insisted upon, that single lumbering concern could have bought every atom of timber that would ever be put up for sale in the great west, because, so often as a limit was put up, so often could this company outbid every other, and thus secure a monopoly. No doubt that was one reason why the Conservative government did not see fit to carry out the provisions of their Land Act in dealing with timber. They saw that, in the conditions then existing, that would have been unworkable and improper, and they adopted the policy of giving the timber to the first applicant, and this they did with the view of providing lumber for the settlers. That is the policy which they carried on and which we have carried on to a point where we think it will be safe to change it. We are now changing it and our hon. friends opposite have endorsed the change.

There is something I want to say regarding the large number of limits that were granted in 1882, 1883 and 1884. The policy of granting limits at that time without competition and without bonus, on conditions of operation, was a sound policy. But that principle was grossly abused, and when our hon. friends opposite ask us to consent in a motion for a committee of inquiry into the administration of timber limits during these later years they can hardly expect the House to concede to them that privilege in any expectation that they would give us a better or cleaner administration in timber matters than we have had during recent years.

Mr. BERGERON. Recent years—two or three years ago.

Mr. OLIVER. It is an old rule that he who seeks justice must himself be just—that those who go into courts seeking justice must go with clean hands. When a party, like that of hon. gentlemen opposite, goes about the country declaiming against the improper conduct of this side of the House and asks to be put in our places in order that they may carry out their better policy, it is desirable the country should know what are the ideas of these hon. gentlemen so that the country may judge what sort of an administration they are likely to give us. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has said that is long ago. But my hon. friend was a part of the business of long ago just as he expects to be a part of the business of the future, should his party come to power.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the hon. gentleman say that I did anything wrong?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all; I would not say such a thing, but my hon. friend and his associates have spent three days of the time of the House declaring that this government has done wrong because it has done what he and his friends did when they were charged with the responsibilities of office. If it was wrong for us, it was wrong for them, and it is only fair that the House and country should be informed exactly how that matter stands. Again I say that the policy of hon. gentlemen was right under the circumstances of the country, but their administration was rotten. There was, as my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) said the other night, a population of some 6,000 white people in the two new provinces and perhaps 15,000 to 20,000 in Manitoba, and to supply lumber to some 30,000 or 40,000 people there were granted in three years 450 timber berths of 50 square miles each, so that in carrying out a good principle they grossly abused it. Were these limits granted to lumbermen? No, they were granted to politicians; they were granted to gentlemen who were members of the House then and who are members of the House now, and who were not lumbermen then and who are not lumbermen now. They were granted to their political friends who were not lumbermen then and who are not lumbermen now. In that long list of names you will not find a fraction of one per cent who are practical lumbermen, but you will find that all were active Conservative politicians of that day. The abuse was not in the principle, but in the administration of the principle. About that time, in 1882, there was a general election and on the face of the record it would appear that not the interest of the settlers of the Northwest, not the interests of the development of the lumber industry, but party exigencies arising out of and through those elections were the cause and the reason for the granting of those enormous concessions. I should not couple the name of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) with this question, because at that time I fancy he was not in any way identified with the Conservative party.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not need it, I was elected by acclamation at that time.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not suggesting anything about it; I say there is no way in which that enormous grant could be justified on any ground of public policy or public advantage; it could only be spoken of as a piece of political rascality of the most atrocious character. I lived in the Northwest at the time, I know the conditions and I know the feeling that existed there. The fact was that that great country was being parcelled out in colonization tracts, in railway subsidies, and in timber limits amongst the supporters of the dominant party here at that time without regard to rhyme, reason, the public interest or the development of the country. My friend says that was 25 years ago. It was 25 years ago, but at that time there was just as much expectation of value in every one of those concessions as there is to-day. There was a boom in the west in 1881 and 1882 such as there has never been since. Expectations were then entertained in regard to that country that have hardly yet been realized. When these concessions were granted they were believed to be of value and they were retained by the concessionaries who believed them to be of value until the time came that it was evident that they were not of value and they were given up.

The idea has been suggested that inasmuch as these concessions have all been given up they were in some way forced on the concessionaires ; that they knew nothing of them, that it was something altogether outside of their interest. The record shows that is not the fact ; that the concessions were granted, and that without any conditions being fulfilled, without licenses being granted, and without, in many cases, any payment being made, they were held as against that land ready to be turned into cold cash, if opportunity offered. Eventually it became necessary to cancel them. They were held from three to eight years without anything being done upon them, without any mill being erected or a stick of timber being cut upon them or a license issued, but the limit was held and the concessionaire had the right to dispose of it when he could.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend know that these were granted under the Dominion Lands Act of 1879 ? The minister has apparently overlooked clause 8 which shows that what he has said is incorrect. It was impossible to retain these concessions under clause 8 if some of these conditions were not carried out. In the case to which he has called attention in which I was concerned, I had nothing to do with it, after I got the order in council, because I did not fulfil the conditions. This is the clause my hon. friend has not put in practice, since he came into power.

Mr. OLIVER. I have already said that clause 2 is an excellent clause and the Dominion Lands Act of 1879 is an excellent Act if the revenue came in ; but the revenue did not come in under hon. gentlemen opposite and the clause was ignored.

Mr. BERGERON. It did come in.

Mr. OLIVER. Not from this concession, it did not come in from the concession that was granted to my hon. friend.

Mr. BERGERON. No, not from me.

Mr. OLIVER. Nor from the concession of the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Ward).

Mr. BERGERON. No, that is what I am telling my hon. friend ; those who did not fulfil the conditions did not retain their concessions, but those who did fulfil them paid money into the government.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. WARD. Assuming that the Conservative administration was wrong, does that justify the outrageous administration of the present government ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not saying that the Conservative policy was wrong.

Mr. WARD. I said 'administration.'

Mr. OLIVER. I say there is no parallel between the administration of that government and this government, absolutely none.

Mr. WARD. That is what we say.

Mr. OLIVER. That is where we are with you, we are absolutely with you on that.

Mr. WARD. That is exactly what we say.

Mr. OLIVER. The administration of that government which granted 450 timber limits of 50 square miles each in three years without justification of population, without justification of any material kind or character, is not in the same class as the business administration which has prevailed during the last ten years.

Mr. WARD. Let the minister be honest ; he knows licenses were never granted.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the minister's honesty is hardly——

Mr. WARD. I did not mean it in an offensive sense at all.

Mr. OLIVER. I shall give to the House information as to how long some of these rights existed. I find one, H. A Ward, who applied on the 3rd October, 1883, for 50 square miles on Red Deer lake. This was granted by order in council of the first of November, 1883.

Mr. WARD. Quite right.

Mr. OLIVER. There was not six weeks to give a chance to cruise the limit, but less than a month between the application and the granting of the limit. The berth was cancelled for non-payment of rental by departmental letter on the 10th of April, 1891. No license was issued for this berth. That is my hon. friend held the right to a tract of timber limit of 50 square miles on Red Deer lake for a period of 8 years without paying one cent to the revenue of this country. I am not saying that that was wrong; quite the contrary, I say that if the instances had not been multiplied unduly, it would have been perfectly right. It was proper in those days and at that time that men who had capital or might be able to enlist capital should be granted timber limits in the hope that they might employ their own capital or enlist the capital of others, and it would not have been sensible to require them to pay a bonus or enter into competition at that time. I am not finding fault with that, but I do say that to grant 450 of those limits at that time in the then condition of the country was neither more nor less than an outrage. It was not justifiable on any ground of public policy whatever, and no man can attempt to justify it, on that ground. The individual case I have no fault to find with, but it is with the general administration that permitted such an enormous alienation with so little result.

Mr. WARD. The minister has not answered my question yet.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman will repeat it, I will try to answer him.

Mr. WARD. I simply asked the minister to state, assuming that all this was wrong in the administration of the Conservative government, does that justify what has taken place under the regime of the hon. gentleman ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not assuming that it was all wrong. Now I want to allude to an instance that was mentioned by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) on Friday night. He found that a timber limit of 200 square miles had been granted in 1878, in the last days of the Mackenzie administration, on the Saskatchewan river, without competition, but at a bonus price of $15 per square mile. I may point out that the average bonus secured by our friends opposite for the timber afterwards disposed of by them, totalled something less than $5 per square mile; but that has nothing to do with the case. I thought it well to look this matter up, because I happened to be personally acquainted with the conditions prevailing in that country at that time where I was living, and I can give the House some information as to why the limit was granted. The record is that Mr. Sutherland applied for a timber limit on the North Saskatchewan river, of 100 square miles area on February 22, 1886, and Mr. Cook applied for a timber limit of 100 miles area on the North Saskatchewan river, on May 14, 1878; and on October 17, 1878, an order in council granting 200 miles of timber limits to Cook and Sutherland was passed by the Mackenzie administration, as the hon. member for Calgary stated, in the last days of their administration, after they were defeated in the country. But I notice that the next entry in the record is that by order in council of December 26, 1878, the timber limit was cancelled. The House will notice that the new government did not lose much time in cancelling this concession to a couple of political opponents. The same party which saw fit, of course in the public interest, to cancel this berth of 200 miles on the Saskatchewan river, which was paying $15 per square mile bonus, to cancel it within two months and a half after it was granted, this same party, within the next few years, granted 450 limits of 50 square miles each, in the same country, without competition, and without bonus. I do not know whether that would be considered as a case of political favouritism, but it looks very much like it to me. Now with regard to the justification for granting this timber limit, I want to say that Mr. Sutherland was a lumberman, Mr. Cook was a lumberman, and they were operating mills in the eastern portion of Canada. There was not at that time a saw mill on the whole length of the Saskatchewan river, except a small portable mill which had been taken there by the Mackenzie government in order to cut lumber for the government buildings at Battleford. This building having been completed, and the government having no further use for the mill, they sold it to Sutherland, and it was in order to get timber to be cut by that mill that his application was made. There was a mill there, it belonged to the government, the government had no further use for it, and it was for disposal to private parties. These parties, practical lumbermen, wanted to acquire timber necessary to operate the mill and they were granted that timber on those conditions. I say again that except this small mill, there was not a lumber mill in operation on the whole Saskatchewan river, and the lumber people used had to be sawed by hand. So if ever there was a case which justified the granting of a timber limit it was this case; and if ever there was a case which offered no justification for cancellation of that limit, it was this case.

I want to say a further word in regard to that particular case. In looking through the files I find the following letter dated Toronto, May 11, 1881. The letter is addressed to H. H. Cook, Esq., Toronto :

> Dear Sir,—In consideration of your consenting to permit us to retain one-third interest in the after-mentioned property, we agree to use influence with the government at Ottawa to transfer to you and us, the timber limits for which you applied to the Mackenzie government in 1878, situated in the Saskatchewan district west of Edmonton, and including 200 miles or thereabouts, we to have four months in which to succeed in this matter, and in the event of success, we agree to share to the extent of one-third all rents, costs or charges made or claimed by government hereafter.
>
> Yours truly,
> (Sgd.) H. H. COOK,
> P. H. JARVIS,
> T. M. DALY.

Mr. Daly, I may say, afterwards occupied the position of Minister of the Interior for some years in the government of our friends opposite.

Mr. BERGERON. What date was that letter ?

Mr. OLIVER. May 11, 1881.

Mr. BERGERON. What Daly was that.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know. I give it just as I find it. But there was a T. M. Daly, Minister of the Interior, from 1892 to 1894.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman made some insinuation; Mr. Daly was not in the House at that time.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not insinuating anything, I am merely giving my hon. friends some of those records they are so anxious to find out about.

Mr. BERGERON. You do not give us the records we want.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend can have all the records on a motion of the House. I suppose in this case a copy would do, it is a copy that I am reading. Now the House is asked

To appoint a committee of nine members to investigate, inquire into and consider all matters connected with or relating to the alienation, granting, rental, leasing or other disposal by lease, license or otherwise, since the first day of July, 1898, of any timber lands or timber berths forming part of the public lands of Canada, or of rights to the same or to the timber thereon, and to report upon the matters aforesaid to this House; to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation.

Now in regard to that resolution, I want to call attention to this fact, that while there is not the shadow of a suggestion in it of any wrong doing or of any impropriety on the part of the government of the day, every word that has been uttered in support of the resolution on the other side of the House, has not been argument, but has been insinuation and innuendo.

Mr. LAKE. Straight statements.

Mr. OLIVER. Absolutely none; does the hon. gentleman attempt to get up and make a straight assertion upon this subject?

Mr. LAKE. I made nine definite straight assertions in support of the resolution.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend's statement evoked applause before he had made it so that I was not able to hear it. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to repeat it?

Mr. LAKE. I said that I had made nine definite, positive statements in support of the resolution immediately preceding as the reason for which I moved that resolution. The hon. gentleman will find them in 'Hansard' immediately preceding the resolution.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the speech of my hon. friend before me and I do not wish to delay the House; but we are not voting on the hon. member's speech. We are voting on the resolution which he moved and my remembrance of his speech was that he was just as careful to skate around any assertion as to wrong doing in regard to the administration of timber as has been every other member in every other speech that was made on that side of the House.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman had better read the speech and refresh his memory.

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend will take the privilege I will give him—he knows what he said better than I do I will sit down and give him the opportunity to read it to the House now.

Mr. LAKE. It will take some little time. With the consent of the House and at the request of the Minister of the Interior, I will be very glad to read these statements.

Mr. OLIVER. I would be very much obliged. I have not the statements under my hand and I am anxious to hear them before I conclude my remarks. I would be very glad if the House would kindly permit the hon. gentleman to read them.

Mr. LAKE. (reading)—

1. That the order in council of the 14th April, 1903, which provided for a renewal of all licenses from year to year while merchantable timber remains upon the area licensed enormously increased the values of timber limits and encouraged speculative applications for berths for the purpose of holding for future increase in values.

2. That nevertheless the Department of the Interior continued to put up for public tender large areas of the timber lands upon which the prairie provinces of the Northwest would naturally rely for their lumber supply in the future, and this was done without any inquiry as to the value of such areas and without any reserve bid or upset price—a policy which has largely resulted in timber limits falling into the hands of speculators to the detriment and loss of the consumers.

3. That such areas have in a large number of cases been situated far remote from settlement where the products could not for some time to come be made available for the public owing to lack of transportation facilities, a fact which gave them entirely a speculative value realizable only on the future development of the country through the extension of railways and settlement.

4. That the selection was permitted of small blocks out of much larger areas, rendering the unselected portions of the belt of little value to any but the original lessees to whom they would ultimately fall at their own price.

5. That the manner in which tenders were called for prevented any effective competition, in as much as the limits were not sufficiently advertised; that in some cases the time allowed between the publishing of the advertisement and the opening of the tenders was too short to allow of inspection by others than the original applicants; that in other instances tenders were called for at seasons of the year when examination of the properties by would-be purchasers was an impossibility—all of which combined to prevent any effective competition, so that as a result these valuable reserves were alienated for a tithe of their real value.

6. That in some instances tracts of timber situated at considerable distances from each other had to be included in a single tender, thus rendering still more difficult any real competition with those who possessed previously acquired information.

7. That the practice by which tenders when received by the department were opened and contracts awarded by a single official in his private office, has been highly detrimental to the public interest, has created distrust among intending bidders and has tended to discourage legitimate competition.

8. That in the case of the tenders for timber limit No. 1108 in which the original files have been recently laid by the government on the table of the House, the presence of two tenders in the same handwriting for widely different amounts, the figures in the higher of the two having apparently been added after the remainder of the document had been drawn up, together with other features apparent in the documents themselves, render an investigation highly desirable in the public interest.

9. That the returns brought down by the department show so many remarkable coincidences in the matter of close bidding, and other circumstances, as to lead to the conclusion that the amount of the tenders must in some cases have leaked out, and thus led to undue advantage of one or other of the persons competing and that a thorough investigation is necessary to set at rest any suspicion that may have arisen. For these reasons I beg to move in amendment:

That all the words after the word 'that' to the end of the proposed motion be omitted and the following substituted therefor:

In the opinion of this House a committee of nine members should be appointed to investigate, inquire into and consider all matters connected with or relating to the alienation, granting, rental, leasing or other disposal by lease, license or otherwise, since the first day of July, 1898, of any timber lands or timber berths forming part of the public lands of Canada, or of rights to the same or to the timber thereon, and to report upon the matters aforesaid to this House; with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure the House will appreciate the opportunity of hearing this very remarkable set of statements again upon which is based the demand for support of the resolution. My hon. friend has read his statements and again I take the opportunity of saying that in so far as my understanding of the English language is concerned, he has been careful, just as careful as every other member who has spoken on that side of the House, to insinuate as much wrong-doing as he could without saying anything. Is the question that is before the House the question whether Mr. Fraser wrote the $7,000 figures in the tender or not? Will my hon. friend say that Mr. Fraser did not? Will he say that Mr. Turriff did? Will he say anything except to utter insinuations and slurs against his fellow members in this House?

Mr. LAKE. I can say that in my opinion the reason given in statement No. 8 alone is sufficient reason, or should be sufficient for any government to have the matter investigated.

Mr. OLIVER. These are matters of opinion; they are not matters of fact and from my point of view—and I think my point of view is entitled to just as much consideration as my hon. friend's—the assertion that he makes is absurd, and I think a large majority of the people who know the circumstances will take the same view of it. I cannot understand how my hon. friend can entertain the suspicions which he says he entertains and does not dare to rise in his place in this House and on his responsibility as a member say what he wants everybody else to think. That is all we ask him to do. He is careful not to say it in his resolution and he was just as careful not to say it in his statement. Every other hon. member who has spoken on the subject has been just as careful. It is a competition in so far as I can understand by these gentlemen to see how much dirt they can throw in the hope that some of it will stick. If these hon. members will produce a resolution that will say that the 't's' were crossed and the 'i's' were dotted in these particular documents by the wrong man there is no doubt they can have all the investigation they want. But let me suggest that it is not investigation they want. What they want, if I understand their position aright is the privilege of maligning and misrepresenting their fellow members and their fellow citizens without being held responsible for doing so.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. OLIVER. I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that if that is not it, I misunderstand their position.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that is hardly a retraction.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. OLIVER. I take back any words you choose me to take back, Sir. I thought it was a retraction. I understood their position to be so and then I say if that is not it, I misunderstand their position.

Mr. TAYLOR. He could not do it right if he tried.

Mr. OLIVER. Anything I can do to place myself in order I wish to do it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Get through some time to-night.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friends on the other side have been making my speech for me the greater part of the time and I cannot be charged with occupying the whole of the time. What I say again is that if I understand matters aright our friends opposite don't want an investigation; what they want is suspicion; what they want is to discredit their opponents without themselves being in any position of responsibility. That is their position as I understand it and I think that position is set out clearly in the resolutioin they ask the House to vote for.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). The Minister of the Interior in the earlier part of his remarks was comparatively sane in his expressions and he seemed inclined to deal with the question in a moderate way. But true to his habits he got away from that position as his speech went on and endeavoured to exemplify that system of mud slinging which he is so prone to charge against this side of the House. I do not know anything much more absurd—and I might use a very much stronger expression—than that the Minister of the Interior should stand in his place there and endeavour to connect with something he regards as discreditable the name of T. M. Daly without knowing whether or not that was the gentleman he desired to cast a reflection upon. Mr. T. M. Daly is a gentleman who once occupied the position of Minister of the Interior; he is not in public life at the present time, but notwithstanding that he cannot be left free from an attempt on the part of the Minister of the Interior to cast a reflection upon him. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) has talked a good deal about insinuation. I do not know any hon. gentleman in this House who during this debate has been guilty of insinuation to the same extent as the Minister of the Interior himself has in the course of his speech which he commenced about a quarter past five this afternoon. It is true that during a good deal of the time he had the assistance of several gentlemen on both sides of the House in his endeavour to complete his speech, and I do not suppose that we should charge all of the time against him; but I am bound to say that in the course of his remarks he showed himself entirely reckless in respect of his assertions both with regard to administration and with regard to policy.

Before I come to more important considerations than the speech of the Minister of the Interior, let me take up a few of the statements he has made. He has told us that these timber limits have been leased by the present government under exactly the same policy which prevailed under Conservative administrations from 1881 to 1886. Well, that is exactly the reverse of the statement and the argument of the hon. gentleman from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) because that hon. gentleman's speech from beginning to end was an attempt to show that there had been an absolutely distinct and different policy under this administration from that which prevailed under the Conservative governments between 1881 and 1896. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who propose to vote on the resolution, as usual, will take their choice between the declaration of the Minister of the Interior and the declaration of the hon. member from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). Which to 1896, or is it an absolutely new policy the Conservative administration from 1881 to 1896, or is it an absolutely new policy of brought into force by this Liberal government? The Minister of the Interior explained the position of affairs very frankly indeed. He admits in effect that in 1908 he is not conscious that the great west, which he ought to understand and know so well, has advanced one single foot since 1883, and he declares therefore that the policy which was good in 1883 is exactly the policy which should be followed in 1907 and 1908. Those are not his exact words I know, but that is the exact and definite substance of what it took him twenty minutes to endeavour to explain to the House. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite from the province of Ontario to consider for a moment how it would do for the government of Mr. Whitney in Ontario to hand over to the first comer, without one dollar of payment, timber limits for which that province is to-day receiving hundreds of thousnads of dollars; would it not be unwise and absurd to adopt such a policy to-day, although fifty years ago in this Ottawa valley and elsewhere in the province of Ontario these timber limits were given to the first comer. Which one of these hon. gentlemen opposite will have the hardihood to stand up in this House and to say that he for one moment would be prepared to defend on any public platform a proposal of that kind? Will any of those who were so ready with applause to the Minister of the Interior, venture to advocate such a policy ? And yet let them understand that this is exactly what they are applauding when they applaud the Minister of the Interior. Canada did not stand still from 1883 to the present time. Has it not been the boast of this government during the past ten years that Canada has been making the most marvellous progress. And yet the Minister of the Interior stands up and affirms that merely because a certain policy was a good policy in 1883 he shall invite his political friends to support that as a good policy in 1908. No such proposition ought to be entertained for one moment. The Minister of the Interior was equally frank in another respect when he said: We give these timber limits to the first comer unless two people want them, and he said further that the reason they did not advertise these limits properly was because the government was not looking for revenue. Did any man ever listen to so extraordinary an absurdity? Is this system of advertising a farce? Why, if the Minister of the Interior followed his statement to its logical conclusion there would be no competition at all because the government desires to give these limits to the first comer, and these timber limits in the west on which there is a supply of timber which cannot be used for actual operation for years to come ought to be handed over, upon the principle and the policy of 25 years ago, to the first man who comes and asks for them, because the government does not desire any revenue from them. Is there any answer to that? Does my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior see any answer? Why then this farce of competition? Why advertise for three or four weeks when an advertisement for three or four weeks is absolutely of no use? Is it to mislead the country ? Is it to give patronage to some newspaper ? For what useful purpose is this pretense of advertisement if the Minister of the Interior is right in the statement and conclusion which he has put before this House to-night? I never heard a more absolutely illogical and absurd statement out of the mouth of any man in this House than that which has emanated from the Minister of the Interior on this occasion. I could understand the policy, although I would not approve of it, if the province of Ontario or the Dominion of Canada should decide to hand over to the first man who asked for them the timber lands of that province or of this Dominion ; but I do not understand the policy which pretends to ask for competition—reasonable, fair and legitimate competition—from persons desirous of embarking in the timber business, but takes good care to prevent any real competition. You must take either the one or the other of the two alternatives—either hand over the timber lands to the man who asks for them first, or, if you desire and intend competition, in order that these timber limits should bring to the people of this country such a reasonable amount as can be obtained in fair competition, then have a reasonable advertisment for a reasonable length of time, and see to it that such advertisement goes into the hands of all the people in this country who would be likely to make a bid when the limits are put up.

The Minister of the Interior says that these timber limits are only of speculative value, and he argues against gentlemen on this side of the House in that connection. Does he not understand that that was exactly the argument put forward on this side of the House ? Surely he might have appreciated the fact that he gave the whole case away in that particular aspect of it when he admitted that these timber limits have at the present time only a speculaive value, for the reason that they cannot be operated successfully or efficiently for a great many years to come. Now, what does that statement of the Minister of the Interior mean when we come to analyse it? It means just this. Those timber limits at the present time are not required for immediate use by operators in order to supply the demands of the people of the country; they have therefore, as the minister has truly said, only a speculative value. That speculative value will, however, be converted into a very real and actual value as settlement progresses and approaches the places where those timber limits are situated, and as the means of transportation increase in the country. Well, the policy of this government is that that present speculative value, in the future to be converted into an actual and real value, should be handed over for the purpose of speculation to persons who do not intend to operate in the immediate future. Of what profit or advantage is that to the people of this country ? Let us see how it will work out. In the province of Ontario to-day, there are, I suppose, thousands of miles of timber lands which years ago possessed only a speculative value, but which to-day possess a very actual and real value by reason of the progress the country has made in the last fifty years. The government of the province of Ontario did not see fit to alienate or lease those lands years ago. If it had done so, it would have acquired practically nothing for them. It has held them for twenty-five or fifty years until to-day, and without any increase in the price of lumber to the people of Ontario, an enormous revenue from these limits is poured into the coffers of that province. Is there any good reason why exactly the same policy should not be carried out in the Dominion ? Why should we hand over timber limits which to-day are only of speculative value, to men who do not intend and are not required to operate them immediately, in order that that speculative value may be in the hands of private individuals instead of the government, to be converted in ten or twenty or thirty years into a very real and actual value? That is an aspect of this question which every hon. member of this House will require to face when he comes to render his vote on this motion.

Let us now come to consider a few phases of this question, which have already been discussed. Time after time during the progress of this debate, upon motion which the government insisted on proceeding with from day to day because they regarded it as a motion of want of confidence, we have been astonished that they should permit the debate to proceed for two full days and well into the third day before the Prime Minister or any other minister of the Crown rose in his place and expressed his view upon the motion. It is an extraordinary system into which the government have fallen in this case and in one other which has been before the House this session. Well, what has been the story? The member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) arose as the spokesman of the government after the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) had addressed the House and proposed the motion which is now under consideration; and what was the burden of the answer of the hon. member for East Assiniboia—delivered I suppose on behalf of the government—to the vigourous indictment propounded in the first place by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle, and then, in the absence of any answer on behalf of the government, by my hon. friend from St. Antoine Division, Montreal (Mr. Ames)? His answer was one which we have heard over and over again in this House until nearly every member who has the patience to listen to the hon. gentleman knows it practically by heart—the enumeration of a long list of persons who during the Conservative regime, twenty-five years ago, had obtained grants of timber limits from the Dominion government to the extent of fifty square miles in each instance. And I venture to call to the attention of the House the fact that in those days, according to the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), fifty square miles was the largest amount permitted to be received by any one; whereas in these later days that limit has been far surpassed, and we know of some hon. gentlemen who are now in the enjoyment of 300, 400, 500, even 600 miles of timber limits.

What has this story about Conservative misdeeds in 1883 or 1884 to do with the present case? I do not propose to consider those for more than a moment. The conditions of this country in 1883 were different from what they are in 1908 just as the conditions with respect to timber limits in Ontario and this very Ottawa valley were different in 1858 from what they are in 1908. For that reason, a policy, which may or may not have been good in 1883 or 1884, is no sensible answer to an indictment presented against the administration and policy of a government in 1908. In other words, it is not the Honourable Alexander Mackenzie or Sir John Macdonald or the government of either, but it is the present Prime Minister and the present government of Canada who are on their trial.

Let us look for a moment at the grounds upon which this inquiry is demanded. In the first place, it is demanded because 2,400 miles of timber limits have been alienated and have passed for absurdly small sums into the hands of men who hold them for speculative purposes. I make no attack on any man who, for speculative or other purposes, has availed himself, in a fair legitimate way, of the laws of the country and the regulations of the department. The attack is not on that man but it is on the system and the government which permits it. For what reason should 2,400 miles of timber limits, not required for immediate operations, be permitted to pass into the hands of speculators in order that they, and not the people of the country, may reap the increased value of these limits, which will surely come as soon as that western country receives the population we all desire to see poured into it. In the second place, the inquiry is asked because these lands have been alienated without any survey or any effort by the government to obtain reasonable information of their value. Is there any reason why the government should part with these enormous areas of timber lands in the west without even taking the trouble of having them surveyed or examined so as to find out what their actual value may be? Would any individual, would any corporation, having a heritage such as ours, permit that to be dissipated and pass into the hands of speculators without making at least some effort to ascertain its value? If, in the urgency of the moment, it was desirable that these timber lands should be put into the hands of lumber operators in order that the present needs of the people might be satisfied, I could understand the policy of the government in disposing of them to a sufficient extent to meet that want. But that was not the object in the present case because the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) himself gave to the House the fact that lumber supplies, far beyond the present needs of the people are now lying piled up in British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. If the lumber lands in operation at present are fulfilling, and more than fulfilling, all the demands of Alberta and Saskatchewan, why in the name of all that is sensible in the public interest, why in the name of all that is honest and decent, should you pass these timber limits into the hands of men who apparently are not holding them for the purposes of operation, who are not likely to operate them, but who are holding them solely with the view of obtaining for them that increased price which is bound to come from the settlement and development of that western country?

No upset price was fixed and no reserve bid settled. My hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) has gone into that very fully. Up to the present, the government being devoid of any information as to the value of these lands, could not for that reason fix an upset price or a reserve bid. Therefore the tender that came in, if it was only one, was accepted; and if others came in the result was what we have had described in some cases already brought to the attention of the House. This result must, indeed, have been anticipated.

Then we have the undisputed fact that the time allowed between the advertisement and the day for opening the tenders was so absurdly short as to prevent any real competition. When you go through the form—I am tempted to say the farce—of calling for tenders, why should you fix four weeks when four months are necessary? My hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) has pointed out that in Ontario, when a timber limit is advertised by the government of this province—although no doubt the exploration of a limit in Ontario would be accomplished in much less time than many of these limits in the Northwest—a period of four months was allowed between the date of the advertisement and the date when tenders were to be opened. Then why was the time fixed by this government so absurdly short? The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) himself, when challenged across the floor, frankly admitted that in some cases at least the time allowed between the first advertisement and the day fixed for the opening of the tender was entirely insufficient to permit any exploration to be made or to bring about any genuine competition.

We demand this inquiry because, in the next place, there was no effective publication of the advertisement, short as it was. Would any business man or corporation in this country, desiring to obtain a fair and reasonable price for timber limits, be content with one insertion of advertisement in one paper circulating generally in the province, and one insertion in some local paper nearest the timber limit, coupled with a little hand-bill three inches by two inches sent to a post office and perhaps to the office of the land agent? Would any business man or corporation expect that an advertisement of that kind would bring in any real genuine competition? We have had no reply on that point. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has not pretended to make any. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) did not say a word about it or attempt to justify it in any way. There can be no justification for it. So far as the record stands before the House up to this moment, there is no justification for it, and no excuse, no answer sufficient for parliament or the country has as yet been made by this government; indeed, up to this moment not one word has been said by them on this subject which could be seriously regarded.

We demand this inquiry in the next place because the lands have been put up before the demands of population so required, and obviously for the purpose of promoting and encouraging speculation therein. Contrast the time allowed for men who become possessed of these timber limits to make their selections with the time allowed for advertisement. In the one case you have four or five weeks, sometimes six weeks, or even seven or eight; the ordinary period allowed was about seven weeks from the time of the first advertisement until the day for opening the tender. That was a shortening of time when the public interest demanded a reasonable advertisement so that a fair price for the timber limits could have been obtained. On the other hand when you come to safeguard the interests of those who have taken possession of these limits, nearly as many years are allowed as weeks were allowed in the case of the advertisement; three or four years for the selection of 500 miles out of a total area of 6,000 miles.

We demand this inquiry because the lands were put up and disposed of by giving an option to select out of an enormously larger area, and the selection was long delayed. I have spoken of that just now.

We demand this inquiry because tenders were accepted for very small amounts without any knowledge or information as to the actual value and under such circumstances as should have put the department on inquiry and suggested the necessity of new tenders. I was astonished at the answer of the government given through the mouth of the hon. member for East Assiniboia. Tenders? Why, he thought it perfectly absurd that he should examine the tenders at all for the purpose of considering whether or not there might be some collusion between the tenderers or in the department. He was not a detective, he said; the amount of the tenders was not a matter for him, for the department or for the minister. Let me point out how differently matters are managed under a Conservative administration in this very province of Ontario. Previously to December 20, 1906, the government of Ontario had advertised for tenders for mining rights under Kerr lake. Tenders came in for those mining rights and they were opened by the Department of Mines of Ontario on the 20th day of December, 1906. The highest price offered was $51,500. The Department of Mines of Ontario, the Conservative government of Ontario, did not come to the conclusion that because a tender came in they were absolutely and necessarily bound to accept it. They regarded themselves as trustees of the people of the province of Ontario and they considered it no more than their duty to have regard for those interests before they decided to accept that tender. They thought that, having reasonable consideration for the prices which mining rights of that character had been bringing in Ontario, the amount offered was too low; so they decided they would not accept that tender, they advertised for fresh tenders, and on the 9th of January following they sold the same mining rights for $17,500, plus a royalty of 10 per cent of the gross value of all the ore that shall be extracted from that mine. In the first case they were offered $51,500 without any royalty; they declined to accept it, and about two or three weeks after they received for the people of Ontario in respect of these mining rights the amount I have named.

We demand this inquiry because the encouragement of speculation in timber limits which were not required for operation in the interests of the people of the west in the immediate future, was accompanied by a change in the regulations which was apparently designed to make and does make the leases perpetual. The circumstances in connection with this alteration of the regulations deserve the consideration of the House and of the people of this country. You are proposing, according to the frank and candid statement of the Minister of the Interior here to-night, to hand over the present speculative value (in the early future to be converted into an actual real value) of these timber limits; the applicants receive these timber limits, by the confession of the minister without any effective competition. I say by the confession of the Minister of the Interior for this reason, that he himself has definitely stated to the House that there was no sufficient advertisement in some of the cases at least; and it is obvious to every man, even to the Minister of the Interior, I think, that without effective and reasonable advertisement there could be no competition in the true sense of the word. You are therefore handing over to these gentlemen—and I do not blame them, I blame the government which permits this thing to be done—that possible future value, that speculative value, to be converted into an actual and real value in the near future; and at the same time you amend the regulations and convert these leases delivered to these gentlemen for speculative purposes into an absolute tenure for all time to come, so that the government cannot in good faith recede from that view of the situation. More than that, you so altered that regulation on the 14th day of April, 1903, that according to its meaning, as I understand it, you prevented the government while that regulation remained in its then form from increasing the royalties to be derived from timber cut on these lands, beyond the amount at which they had been placed at that time. That was accomplished by the omission of certain words contained in the order in council which preceded it. In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the meaning let me read the regulation as it was at first, dating from 1898 and the regulation as it was passed in 1903. The order in council of the 1st of July, 1898, fixed the regulation in this way:

Section 3. When a licensee has complied with all the conditions herein set forth in his license and the regulations, and where no portion of the timber berth is required for settlement or other public purpose, of which the Minister of the Interior is to be the judge, the license may be renewed for another year, subject to such revision of the annual rental and royalty to be paid therefor as may be fixed by the Governor in Council.

Now that regulation was repealed and the following substituted on April 14, 1903.

So long as the licensee complies with the conditions of his license and of the regulations, he shall be entitled to a renewal of his license from year to year while merchantable timber remains upon the area licensed. When a reasonable portion of the said area has been denuded of timber, the minister may dispose of the same under sale or settlement regulations, provided that no such disposition shall be made of land immediately contiguous to merchantable standing timber, or in such a way as to endanger destruction thereof by fire.

The House will note that the following words contained in the previous regulations are entirely omitted from the regulation of 1903, namely these words:

Subject to such revision of the annual rental and royalty to be paid therefor as may be fixed by the Governor General in Council.

It is true that after a storm had been raised in the House with regard to that, after a trenchant criticism had been made by some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, those words omitted were supplied in an order in council passed further on. But I am pointing out at present the exact terms of the regulation which was enacted by this government on April 14, 1903, and I am pointing out that not only was the tenure rendered absolutely permanent by that regulation, but there was a distinct and noticeable omission of any provision as to the future revision of the annual rental and royalty to be paid to the government therefor. Now what has been the result of this regulation of April 14, 1903? The effect of it was stated by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley), a gentleman who has had enormous experience in this business, a gentleman who to-day is the holder of very large timber limits in the province of Ontario. I will not quote his exact words, but I will give their effect. He declared that the passage of such an order in council must necessarily enormously enhance the value of any timber limits in the west held under lease from the government of this country. Well, I understand the answer that might be made by hon. gentlemen opposite. They say it is necessary to create that permanency, that fixity, that continuity of tenure, otherwise you cannot get business men to engage in the operation of cutting lumber in the west, and therefore it was necessary in the public interest, and especially in the interest of the people of that western country, I can appreciate that argument when it has any legitimate application; but I cannot appreciate that argument when its only use, in so far as speculative limits are concerned, is to enhance the speculative value of those limits and to put larger profits into the hnads of the gentlemen who have been fortunate enough to secure them. It is all very well if you apply that regulation to limits which must be operated at once and which are required for the use of the people in the west. But what justification can there be for it when you are handing over to men for speculative purposes enormous areas, 2,400 miles of the best timber limits in this country, in order that they may receive in the future that great increase in value which of right and of justice should belong, not to them, but to the public at large? What reason is there for permanency of tenure so far as these gentlemen are concerned. If you gave them the right to sell this land for a year or two years and made their tenure permanent during that period, surely one would suppose they had received from the people all they could reasonably ask for. In making that statement I am not condoning the conduct of the government in passing these areas out of the ownership of the people. It seems to me to be an act of madness to alienate those great timber areas when they cannot be required for the use of the western country for many years to come. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has not controverted that. Why then should you hand them over? If you have some great natural resource which you cannot expect to develop in the immediate future, which the necessities of the people do not require to be developed in the immediate future, why in the name of all that is sensible should you hand that over to men who propose to hold it, not for the purpose of development, but simply in order that they may sell it and receive an enormous increase of price over that which they have paid to the government therefor?

Now there is another circumstance which I think demands the gravest consideration from the Prime Minister, who more perhaps than any other member of the cabinet is responsible for the public honour of this country and its good administration. This other feature which ought to commend itself to his earnest attention is the admitted practice during many years in the past, by which the land commissioner opens these tenders in the department alone, and without the necessity of any other officer of the department being present at the time. My hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) has spoken in this House about the necessity of charges. He seems to regard himself in his capacity as land commissioner of Canada as nevertheless having all the rights and privileges of a member of parliament; and therefore when, by an accident, he comes into this House after having ceased to be land commissioner, and he considers himself entitled to demand charges against him as a member of this House in respect of his administration as an officer of the Department of the Interior. The case is exactly as it would be if the member for East Assinibioa were not a member of this House. Suppose he were not a member of this House, suppose he had continued to be land commissioner, and we were bringing to the attention of the government and the people the practice of that department by which one man, not in the presence of the tenderers, not in the presence of any other officer of the department, but alone, locked up if necessary in his own room, should open tenders for timber limits which afterwards were valued by hundreds of thousands of dollars. Why I would expect that any official of a department of this government which had been inadvertently led into a vicious practice—I use the expression advisedly, it is nothing but a vicious practice—I would expect that any official of the government led inadvertently into a vicious practice of that kind, would be the very first man to demand a most searching and thorough investigation into his conduct.

Yet that hon. gentleman stands up in this House and treats the matter as if it were of no moment to the people of this country. And, Sir, what is infinitely more extraordinary, he treats the matter as if it were of no moment to himself. It is of moment to every one in this country, but it is of infinitely more moment to the hon. member for East Assiniboia than it is to any other member of this House or to any citizen of this country. The right hon. First Minister frequently relies on British practice and declares that he is a Liberal of the British school. Did he ever hear of any Liberal of the British school in that grand old land whose institutions we all revere, who would venture for one moment to condone or defend a practice such as that? My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle has had some experience in the departments of the British government in days gone by; he has made some inquiries since and he tells me that in Great Britain the greatest possible care is taken in respect to the opening of tenders in every department as to which he could obtain any information. In the first instance they are put into careful custody and the utmost possible care is taken so that there shall not be any suspicion of tampering or unfair dealing. It is not only of tampering and unfair dealing that you must beware, but you must especially beware of even the suspicion of tampering or unfair dealing in such cases. How are the public interests and how is the public honour safeguarded in Great Britain? They are safeguarded by having these tenders sealed up and kept with the utmost care until the day for the opening of them comes; then they are opened, not by one man behind the locked doors of his private office, but they are opened in the presence of many of the superior officers of the department and even the very clerks who are charged with the care of these tenders, as they pass through the office, not by reason of any wrong doing of these clerks, but in order that suspicion may be absolutely absent, are changed from time to time. That is the policy which is supported by the Liberals of the old country of which school the right hon. First Minister professes in this country to be a follower. Yet, when we have asked for an investigation, when we challenged this practice two years ago in this House and challenged it, I think at that time, in language which was sufficiently forcible to have attracted the attention of the Prime Minister of this country, we had and we have no reply at all except that 'if you have any charges against me, the member for East Assiniboia, as a member of this House, have the manliness and the courage to make them and do not indulge in insinuations.' A more remarkable answer, a more remarkable statement surely never came from the lips of living man, under circumstances at all similar to this.

Now, the extraordinary appearance of the original documents which have been brought down has already been commented upon and if there is anything more extraordinary than the appearance of these documents it is the answer which the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) gave on behalf of Mr. Fraser in this House to-night. I sincerely trust that the minister may have misunderstood Mr. Fraser. The answer, in so far as I understood, was that Mr. Fraser, on behalf of himself and certain other associates decided to put in a tender for $1,000 and they did put in a tender for $1,000. Then Mr. Fraser received from a client in Winnipeg a telegram to put in a tender for $7,000. It never occurred to him to withdraw his own tender as it would be absolutely inoperative as against a tender for $7,000, and it never occurred to him apparently to tell the client in Winnipeg, that, being a tenderer himself for the same property, he could not possibly act for a client who also wished to put in a bid. I certainly think that Mr. Fraser must have been thoroughly misunderstood by the hon. Minister of the Interior in that regard. I do not think that any solicitor would put himself in that position, but assuming that he did put himself in that position, what did he do? He declares that he could not put in another tender in his own name. I do not know anything to prevent it. He did not see fit to take any of the partners in his office; he did not select any person in the city of Ottawa, but it seems that he had a standing authority from a gentleman in Montreal, Mr. W. H. Nolan, to use his name in respect of all tenders for all possible amounts, in respect of all timber limits and possibly in respect of everything else under heaven. With that comprehensive authority and without acquainting his client in Winnipeg that he was a rival applicant for the same property, he tenders in Mr. Nolan's name, signs that name to the tender without even putting his own name underneath to indicate that it is done by him as an agent, passes that tender into the Department of the Interior and, by the most extraordinary coincidence in the world, that tender of $7,000 happens to be just $200 or $300 more than another tender which had in the meantime gone in. It is so plain, so simple, so easily to be believed this story, that there is not the slightest pretense in the circumstances to justify any demand for an investigation by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. Well, if that is the view of the gentlemen who sit upon the treasury benches and of those who sit behind them they are at liberty to enjoy it and to record their votes accordingly. I venture to think that perhaps it is not an explanation of what appears on the face of these documents which will greatly commend itself to such of the people of this country as realize what the appearance of these documents is to-day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is easy to see that the public interests of this country may suffer from the lack of an investigation. I venture to think that there is no man within sound of my voice to-night who would deny, if he spoke what is in his heart, that sufficient considerations have been put forward for an investigation of these matters in the Department of the Interior. I ask what consideration of public interest is against such an investigation? If everything is as hon. gentlemen claim, what prejudice to the public interest, what prejudice to private interest, what prejudice to the reputation or status of any gentleman, whether within or without this House, will be effected by such an investigation as has been proposed by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle made no insinuation. I desire to say to the hon. Minister of the Interior that he cannot place his finger upon one line of the motion or of the reasons given by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle which justifies his statement with regard to insinuations. He cannot put his finger upon one of the reasons carefully stated to this House by the member for Qu'Appelle which deserves to be called an insinuation. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) stated circumstances and facts every one of which are proved either by the admission of ministers of the Crown or by official documents laid upon the table of the House. It is true the hon. gentleman drew certain inferences from these facts and circumstances, but, however, much opinions may differ as to what inferences should be drawn, no one can deny that there was reasonable ground for drawing the inferences he did. Every just man will admit that they were reasonable inferences to be deduced from the facts, and that they were inferences which the hon. gentleman had a right to put before the House. I submit that no public interest can be prejudiced by granting this investigation; I submit that public interests may be served by granting it; I submit that the administration of the Interior Department in relation to the matters which have been brought to the attention of the House, amply demands such an investigation, and if the government of this country be true to themselves and true to their position as trustees for the people of Canada, the investigation will be granted. They have legislated to a certain extent against combines and upon the report of a judicial officer customs duties may be lowered upon articles affected by a combine, but, Sir, the policy of the Interior Department in this respect tends to create in this country a more intolerable combine than has yet existed in Canada. They have created a combine which has already become possessed for speculative purposes of 2,400 square miles of timber limits of inestimable and incalculable value ; 2,400 square miles of timber which will be needed in the future for the wants of the people of the west. Let it be remembered first, last, and always that out of the pockets of the people of western Canada must in the ultimate result come the millions that are to flow to the speculators from the sale of these limits and from the enhanced price at which the lumber on these limits will in the future be sold. I am not advocating the sale of these areas at such a price as will increase the cost of lumber in the west. But I do say that if these areas are to be conserved for the future it is the duty of the government of this country as trustees for the people to hold them until such time as the present speculative and probable value will have been consummated into actual and real value. Just as conditions have changed in Ontario from fifty years ago, just as the province of Ontario receives an enormous income from her timber lands without any resulting increase in the price of timber and lumber, so in the future in western Canada the people of Canada would receive the enhanced price of these limits without increasing by one dollar the price which the people would pay for the lumber. Having regard for all the interests involved both public and private, I for one shall support with all the vigour I am possessed of the motion which has been proposed by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle.

On motion of Mr. Sifton, the debate, was adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 5, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

NEW MEMBERS.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, certificates of the election and return of Munro Young McLean, Esq., for the electoral district of South Huron, and Charles H. Lovell, Esq., for the electoral district of Stanstead.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Charles H. Lovell, Esq., member for the electoral district of Stanstead, introduced by Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. L. P. Brodeur.

SUPREME COURT ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. H. GERVAIS (Montreal, St. James) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 91) to amend the Supreme Court Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. GERVAIS. Last year I introduced practically the same Bill. The object of the Bill is very simple ; it is to make uniform the amount upon which an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court of Canada where the appeal is taken from the Court of Review of the province of Quebec or from the Court of King's Bench of the same province. As a matter of fact this Bill is of exclusive interest to the litigants of my province. Its object is to get rid of an anomaly, a clerical error which was made by those who framed a section of the Supreme Court Act as it now exists. The right of appeal to the Supreme Court may be dependent upon the amount in dispute. If the appeal is taken from the Court of King's Bench, the highest court of appeal in the province of Quebec, the minimum amount is $2,000 ; but by section 10 of the Supreme Court Act which defines the right of appeal to the Supreme Court from the Court of Review, which is a court of appeal lower than the Court of King's Bench in the province of Quebec, the statute reads :

> An appeal will lie from the Court of Review of the province of Quebec to the Supreme Court in all cases in which there is an appeal to the Privy Council of England.

This is a re-enactment of the old proclamation of Governor Murray, the first English Governor of Canada, in which we find that when the right of appeal turns upon a question of amount, the minimum, if the appeal is from any court of Quebec to the Privy Council of England, must be at least £500 sterling, that is $2,433.33. The law as it exists to-day concerning the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada has been catching quite a number of litigants and especially lawyers. If I am to have an appeal from the Court of King's Bench, the amount in dispute in my action must be $2,000, while if the appeal is from the Court of Review the amount in dispute must exceed $2,433.33. Quite a number of appeals have been dismissed by the Supreme Court during the last few years on this ground, and I have been requested by some legal gentlemen in Montreal, especially by the Chief Justice of Quebec, to introduce this legislation.

I shall read a letter of approval from Sir Melbourne Tait, Chief Justice of the Superior Court, which is as follows :—

I have read the extract from 'Hansard' which you kindly sent me regarding your Bill, the object of which is to put an appeal from the Court of Review upon the same basis as an appeal from the Court of King's Bench.

It certainly seems to me to be an anomaly that an appeal should be refused from the judgment of the Court of Review where the amount involved is $2,000, when such appeal is allowed from a judgment of the Court of King's Bench, which is a higher court. I think appeals from the two courts should be put upon the same footing.

This opinion was approved of by Sir Alexander Lacoste in the following words :

I am of the above opinion.

I have also a letter from Sir F. Langellier reading :

I have received a few days ago the speech in which is explained the Bill you had introduced to amend the law relating to appeals from the Court of Review to the Supreme Court, but I have been so much occupied by holding the Circuit Court and the Court of Review that I have found it impossible to answer you before.

I approve most heartily of this Bill. I do not see how one can question its propriety. It is evident to me that he who framed the law to amend the Supreme Court Act to provide for an appeal from the Court of Review to the Supreme Court was not aware of the fact that the amount for which an appeal could lie to the Privy Council from the Court of King's Bench is £500 sterling. For no one can imagine, for a moment, that a larger amount to appeal from the Court of Review would be required than for an appeal from the Court of King's Bench.

I am astonished that no one has thought before of proposing the amendment you are now introducing. The reasons you gave in support of your Bill, according to my mind, are absolutely peremptory.

I have also a letter of approval written by Mr. Justice Lafontaine. I think that under the circumstances this Bill should be allowed to become law.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

Mr. GERVAIS moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 92) to amend the Criminal Code.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. GERVAIS. The Bill has two objects. By one of the amendments introduced by this Bill it is sought to make defamatory libel triable without a jury. As a matter of fact, in the district of Montreal, some newspaper men have asked that libel should be tried without a jury with the consent of both parties. When both parties in such a case agree to have the case tried by a magistrate exclusively it is unnecessary that they should go to the expense of having a jury trial just for the purpose of having the trial, I suppose, published throughout the country. That proposition may be subject to criticism or to discussion when the Bill comes up again at a later stage.

Then, it is proposed to so amend the code that persons who are accused of an offence or a crime which may now be tried by a jury may be allowed to give bail for their appearance without going to jail and have their trial at once without being bound to renew their bail or bond. For example, if I am accused of some kind of theft I am ready to be tried at once; I have given bonds to appear before the examining magistrate ; there being a prima facie case against me I have been committed to jail to await my trial before a jury or before a magistrate without a jury ; I make up my mind to be tried at once ; I have to be sent to jail first, then after I have been imprisoned I may file a request with the sheriff of the county asking him to send me back for trial before a magistrate without a jury. by way of speedy trial. But in the meantime I have been committed to jail ; I have been imprisoned and in some cases it has been found humiliating for quite a number of persons so accused. The object of this Bill is to get rid of that more or less formal commitment or imprisonment. If this Bill becomes law, after I have been committed to jail, if I make at once my election to be tried at once, I may give bail bonds and be tried before a magistrate without any commitment to jail. I think that such a Bill has been asked for by many of the presiding magistrates of the province of Quebec.

Mr. MONK. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the disposition of the Bill which provides for the trial of libel actions without a jury had been asked for by the publishers of newspapers in the city of Montreal ?

Mr. GERVAIS. One or two of them and especially magistrates Lafontaine and Choquette.

Mr. MONK. These are magistrates ?

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I understood my hon. friend to say that the publishers of newspapers had also asked for it.

Mr. GERVAIS. One or two of them.

Mr. MONK. Does my hon. friend consider the effect that it might possibly have on the liberty of the press ?

Mr. GERVAIS. The Bill, as introduced, provides that no such trial without jury can be obtained except by the consent of both parties, unless it is agreed to by the plaintiff as well as the defendant.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

JUDGES OF THE SUPERIOR COURT, QUEBEC.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation) asked :

1. Are judges of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec under the supervision of the Minister of Justice?
2. If so, what steps does the minister purpose taking in regard to Judge Cimon, a judge of the Superior Court for the district of Kamouraska, in the province of Quebec, to compel him to reside in his district, as is required by the law?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) :

1. Only to the extent to which the general administration of justice throughout the Dominion may be ; but the administration of justice in the province, including the organization and maintenance of the superior court, is under control of the provincial authorities.
2. The minister has not been informed in what place, or places, the judge resides, and has not given consideration to the subject.

CENTRAL EMIGRATION BOARD, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Mr. VERVILLE—by Mr. A. Lavergne—(Translation) asked :

1. What moneys, if any, are paid on immigrants sent to Canada by the Central Emigration Board, London, England?
2. Has the Central Emigration Board, London, England, any authority to advertise as it does, that it receives in its work the 'co-operation of the Colonial Government employment agents and officials?'
3. Is the government aware that in the annual report of the said society, appearing in the 'Daily Telegraph,' London, England, January 4, 1908, it is stated that out of 369 persons sent out, two only went to Australia, the balance being sent to Canada, and that commenting on above statement, T. A. Coghlan, New South Wales, government office, London, E.C., states that it is true only two were accepted by Australia, 'the reason being that in the case of those whom we rejected it would have been unkind to themselves to send them to farm work, either in Australia or any other country'?
4. Has the government any information as to how many of the above number rejected by Australia, were subsequently almitted to Canada?
5. What steps, if any, are taken to protect Canada from the influx of immigrants rejected by other countries?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. The board has claimed a bonus on a total of fifteen men, four women and one child ; total payments £14.10.
2. Yes, in so far as placing on farms or in domestic service persons emigrated through their organization ; this offer is made to all steamship booking agents.
3. The government is aware of the statement appearing in the society's annual report to the effect that all but two of the entire number emigrated were sent to Canada. The attention of the government has not been drawn to the comments re this made by T. A. Coghlan, representative of the government of New South Wales.
4. No.
5. A strict medical and civil examination of all immigrants is held at the ports of debarkation in accordance with the Immigration Act. A medical examination also takes place at the port of embarkation by medical officers of the Imperial Board of Trade.

TIMBER BERTHS GRANTED IN MANITOBA AND NORTHWEST.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked :

1. Of the timber limits granted in Manitoba and the Northwest, between the 4th of February, 1878, and the 17th of August, 1896, inclusive, as per list given in sessional paper No. 66a, brought down on 22nd April, 1904, how many berths were retained by the original grantees or their legal assigns, and
2. What was the total area represented thereby?

Hon. F. OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. 80.
2. 1,720·73 square miles.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—WINTER STEAMER BETWEEN ISLANDS AND MAINLAND.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Has any contract been entered into for the construction of a winter steamer to ply between Prince Edward Island and the mainland?
2. If so, when was the contract closed, what is the contract price, and when is the boat to be completed?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved :

That a select committee composed of seven members of this House be named for the purpose of investigating the conditions and guarantees under which this government paid moneys to the Quebec Bridge Company and endorsed or guaranteed the bonds of the said company, and what measures were adopted by the government to insure the preparation of suitable plans of construction and the proper execution of the same and what security the government at present possesses for the sums already received by and guarantees given to the company.

That the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, and to employ a shorthand writer to take down such evidence as the committee deem necessary, and that the evidence be printed from day to day for the use of said committee, and that rule 72 be suspended in relation thereto.

He said, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this motion, which I have the honour to present to the House, I desire to say, as briefly as possible, that I have, on many occasions since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, presented motions of this nature for the nomination of a committee of investigation, but I do not remember having presented a motion having reference to a matter as important as the one which is contemplated in this motion. The Quebec bridge presents, for the examination of the House, a question which has been under consideration by the country and by the House for a great length of time and it presents itself to the consideration of this House under these peculiar circumstances that both parties have been, for a long time, committed to the construction of this great undertaking. Long before it had joined to it the further circumstance that it now forms part of the Transcontinental railway and must necessarily form part of the work of construction of that national undertaking, it at different times received promises of support from both parties, from the previous government and from this one, and even since the dreadful catastrophe of last summer when the whole structure collapsed into the water, the government on its side and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in the city of Quebec, at the very time of the catastrophe, pledged themselves that the work was not, on account of the sinister calamity that had supervened, going to be abandoned, but, on the contrary, it would be continued and terminated as expeditiously as possible.

In moving for a committee of examination I wish it to be understood that I am merely seeking to obtain for the House and the country that knowledge in regard to the affairs of the Quebec bridge undertaking which it has not been hitherto within our power to obtain, and which it is absolutely necessary we should possess to enable us to deal in an efficient way with the work before us. From the examination I have been able to make of the affairs of this company I have come to the conclusion, that, taking a moderate estimate, it is in my opinion impossible to complete this undertaking without incurring an expense which will amount to about $12,000,000. And in view of that, I feel that I am justified in my desire to obtain full information before the matter is dealt with. When the government was first called upon to help the undertaking the responsibility we were then assuming was not of great magnitude and the information given to the House was very meagre indeed. Then, later, when the country undertook to pledge its credit for over $6,000,000 in connection with the Quebec bridge the vote was put through a few hours before prorogation of parliament, after a prolonged session ; and although everybody seemed willing to encourage the undertaking we were not then in a position to obtain the necessary information, which no doubt explains why the vote was put through in what might be called, without exaggeration, a very singular and peculiar manner. A bridge at or near the city of Quebec was first projected a very long time ago. Many took an interest locally in it, and before it was destined to form part of the National Transcontinental Railway were anxious to see a bridge erected below the city of Quebec, passing to the island of Orleans and thence to the south side of the river. It was found on examination that the construction of a bridge there would be far more expensive than on the present site, but everybody agreed that were it not for the great cost, the bridge would have been better located below Quebec, and that the approaches to it (a very important item) would have been less costly on that site than at Cap Rouge.

On the 23rd June, 1887, by chapter 98, 50-51 Victoria, the company which at that time undertook to build the bridge was incorporated by the Dominion parliament. By section 5 of that statute the capital was fixed at $1,000,000 in 10,000 shares of $100 each. By section 7 it was provided that the company could not commence operations until $200,000 had been subscribed and ten per cent in cash deposited in a chartered bank.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Was that a Dominion charter.

Mr. MONK. Yes, it was considered to be a work for the general advantage of Canada even at that time. By chapter 69, 60-61 Victoria, the amount to be paid in cash on the subscription of $200,000 was fixed at $50,000. Did the company, with which we are at present very seriously concerned, fulfil that condition ? I have been unable to ascertain that fact and I do not think it is possible with the documents at our disposal to arrive at any certain conclusion as to the amount of stock which was actually paid in. The researches I have made lead me to think it is very doubtful if the company at any time conformed to that essential condition before it commenced operations. On the 12th of March, 1903, the secretary of the company, Mr. Ulric Barthe, certified that 2,145 shares of the capital had been subscribed representing a subscription of $214,500, while seven months later the same official certified that the subscribed capital was represented by 2,203 shares or $220,300. Now, as to what was actually paid in—and in this I am giving the House all the information I have been able to secure with the view of showing that there is still a great deal of information required before the House can possibly deal intelligently with this important subject. Now as to what had been actually paid in—on 1,928 shares twenty-five per cent or $48,200 had been paid in ; on 125 shares four per cent or $500 had been paid in ; on 150 shares the report says that 100 per cent or $15,000 had been paid in ; in all $63,700. That is what appears by the certificate of the secretary of the company. But this sum of $15,000 should be deducted, because in reality it represents 150 shares which were distributed between Mr. Parent and his co-directors, namely, R. Audette, Vesey Boswell, John Breakey, Narcisse Rioux, Nemese Garneau, Gaspard Lemoine, H. M. Price and Arthur Paquet.

So far as I have been able to ascertain, they were not paid for in cash; consequently they must be deducted from the sum of $63,700 of paid-up stock, leaving as the sum actually paid up in cash $48,700. I should remark here that the Act clearly decrees that the sum of $50,000 has to be paid up in cash, and section 15 of the same Act forbade the issuing of paid-up stock to promoters, restricting the use of paid-up stock to the payment of certain claims specified in the section, such as material for the bridge, work of construction and remuneration of engineers. By section 2 of the statute of 1897, 60-61 Victoria, it was provided that all those who appeared as subscribers to the bridge company before 1897 could withdraw on giving notice of their intention to do so. Up to 1897 the bridge company seems to have been composed of leading citizens of Quebec, without restriction to any particular political party; but it appears that pursuant to section 2 of the statute of 1897, most of the subscribers of stock withdrew, leaving the company under the control and in the possession of a few privileged individuals. There is a great deal of ambiguity in regard to the 125 shares to which I have referred upon which 4 per cent only had been paid. As far as I have been able to ascertain, these shares stand as follows : Ulric Barthe, secretary treasurer of the company, 50 shares; F. X. Berlinguet, 50 shares; and William Rhodes, 25 shares. But notwithstanding that information, there is a document furnished to the government, in which it is certified that 25 per cent, and not 4 per cent, has been paid on these shares. Apart from 75 shares which were given as I understand to Mr. Parent out of the 150 shares which were distributed among the gentlemen to whom I have already referred, Mr. Parent, who is the president of the company, had subscribed for fifty more shares, upon which he had paid 25 per cent like the others, that is to say, the sum of $1,250.

Now, this is as far as one can see by a reference to such documents as I have been able to obtain up to the year 1903 in regard to the shares. It was on the 4th August, 1899, that this House was asked for the first time to vote a sum in aid of the construction of that bridge, and we voted the sum of $1,000,000. It is sufficient to say, without referring to the evidence at greater length, that 40 per cent was to be paid on monthly progress estimates made by the government engineers. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister on that occasion gave a very short explanation of the structure which was then in contemplation, which explanation will be found in 'Hansard' of August 4, 1899. It appeared from that explanation that the length of the bridge was to be 3,280 feet and that the masonry would cost $1,200,000 and the superstructure $2,400,000, or a total for the bridge of $3,600,000, outside of the approaches, which it was considered at the time would cost more above Quebec than below the city. It also appeared from the remarks of the Prime Minister that $30,000 had been spent on plans, and that $50,000 had been paid up on capital. The cost of the approaches had been calculated, and according to the estimates submitted to the House by the Prime Minister at that time, their cost was not to exceed the sum of $400,000. In other words, it was calculated that the cost of the bridge complete, with all its approaches, would not exceed the sum of $4,000,000. Still, strange to say, in a letter bearing date October 14, 1903, which is document 148 of the session of 1905, Mr. Parent, the president of the bridge company, says to the government :

> It is calculated that the completion of these works will cost about $6,900,000.—S. M. Parent, president Quebec Bridge Company.

Mr. Schreiber, the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, in an estimate dated December 2, 1902, places the value of the work done up to that time at $1,416,394, and the amount required to complete the work in 1903, according to the statement of the president of the company, was $6,900,000, or a total of $8,316,394, or more by $300,000 than twice as much as had been estimated as the cost of the whole structure with the approaches. With the Act of 1903, which is known as 3 Edward VII, chapter 54, is incorporated the agreement between the bridge company and the government, which preceded the Act by three or four days. The Act was sanctioned on October 24, twenty-four hours before the prorogation of that year, and the agreement is dated October 19, 1903. The enterprise had received in subsidies up to that date from the province of Quebec, $250,000, from the city of Quebec, $300,000, and upon the grant of $1,000,000, made by this parliament in 1897, it had received from the Dominion government $374,353, making a total subsidy received of $924,353.

The company had received in paid up capital $65,585.70, according to its statement. But according to my calculation $50,000 has never been paid up in cash as required by the statute, but only $48,700—$15,000 of shares having been distributed among the persons I have already referred to.

Moreover, outside of the grants received, amounting in all to $924,353, outside the paid up capital of $65,585.70, there were debentures issued by the company upon its own responsibility amounting to $472,000, upon which debentures the company had received, or had benefited at any rate, to the extent of $283,279. The total, therefore, in cash received by the company amounted to $1,273,217.70.

The company itself admitted at that time that it had paid $1,198,141, which, deducted from the sum of $1,273,217.70, left a balance in the hands of the company of $75,076.70. But of this balance I have sought in vain to find any trace anywhere. That is what appears, according to the statement of the company itself, and it should, at that time, have had in hand that balance of $75,076.50, but I can find no trace of it.

Let us resume consideration of the estimate of Mr. Schreiber. The value of the works executed at that time, according to the calculation of Mr. Schreiber, deputy minister, was $1,416,394. There was paid off in cash $914,862 and in debentures $283,279, being a total of $1,198,141. What at that time was the condition of the company, as far as its debts were concerned? As far as I have been able to ascertain by the statements of the company itself, which are reiterated in the statute passed by us at the end of the session of 1903, the indebtedness of the company stood as follows:

Amount due to contractor..	$218,253
Debentures issued and due..	472,000
Interest and accounts due by the company..	34,298
Technical work..	25,000
Superstructure..	30,000

In other words, the company on the 15th October, 1903, had a floating debt of $779,551, and it is impossible to arrive at any other conclusion than that at the time when we entered into the agreement of the 19th October, 1903, which was sanctioned and incorporated into the Act passed the 24th October, 1903, that company was hopelessly insolvent, was unable to continue its operations, and it must have been evident to any one that by granting the company's request and guaranteeing its bonds for an amount exceeding $6,000,000 we were committing a most improvident and imprudent act. As regards the balance of $75,076.50 I have been unable to find any trace of it anywhere.

At that time, therefore, with this financial condition before us, and a few hours before the end of the session of 1903, we made the agreement and undertook to guarantee the bonds of the company to the amount of $6,678,200. Section 12 of the agreement, incorporated into the statute, provides that the plans of the bridge property had to receive the approval of the government. I do not know if they ever did. If I mistake not, since the beginning of the session the government was asked the question and it seems to me that my right hon. friend answered he presumed they had. But I have found no proof of that, though it seems impossible that the bonds could have been guaranteed and the agreement accepted before the government had ample occasion to look carefully into these plans and see whether they had good grounds for approving of them.

Section 14 of the agreement of 19th October, 1903, provides for the nomination of three directors. I believe that two were named in pursuance of that provision, but I have not found any trace of the third. Nor have I found trace of any report or communication or any evidence of these directors having ever acted with any great activity.

Section 4 is important, and I call attention to it because it provides that $200,000 of stock, before that agreement can be carried into effect, must be subscribed in the bridge company and paid up. Why was that disposition made part of the agreement? It was because when the bridge company discounted its debentures—amounting, as I have stated, to $472,000—it had paid as a discount the sum of $188,721. That is to say, it had given these bonds in payment for the undertaking at 40 per cent off their face value. These bonds, of course, as the House no doubt bears in mind, were not at that time guaranteed, but were the bonds of the bridge company itself. Section 18 provides for the expropriation of the company, because, as the House is aware, at that time, in 1903, it was perfectly apparent to everybody that our having undertaken the National Transcontinental road made it absolutely necessary for us to take that bridge over. And it is a question extremely difficult to answer why, at that moment—the bridge company being in the financial condition to which I have already referred, and that bridge being absolutely necessary to an undertaking already sanctioned by the country—we should have confided the construction of that most important work to a company that was practically in bankruptcy, and abandoned virtually that careful supervision and personal attention—if I may use that expression—of the work of construction which was absolutely necessary for an undertaking upon which we were embarking such a large amount of money, and in connection with which we were assuming such a responsibility. Section 18, as I have stated, provides for the expropriation of the whole undertaking by the government at any time on notice of thirty days. A strange disposition in that section providing for expropriation was that we should pay over to the shareholders of the company, at the time we exercised that power of expropriation, their stock at par, including the $15,000 to which I have referred, and 5 per cent interest on so much of that stock as had been paid up from the time of its being paid up, and 10 per cent bonus in addition. I have already stated that at the time when the Bill, with its accompanying grant, was hurriedly passed, questions were asked as to whether that $200,000 additional stock would be found. The then Minister of Justice, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, said, if I mistake not, that it had already been found. Was it really found, and was it paid up in conformity with the agreement when this discount of the bonds was made? This is more than I have been able to ascertain. Coming down to the present, a matter of very great moment is the question: What has been done upon that undertaking? I have pointed out that there was an admission by the company in 1903 that the sum of $1,198,141 had been spent. We have handed over the bonds to the company, I presume; for, from an answer given on the 3rd instant by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to a question put by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), it appears on June 30th last the company borrowed from the Bank of Montreal, upon the security of the bonds endorsed by the government, the sum of $5,561,507.23 at 5 per cent. The bonds bear 3 per cent. It would appear then that on June 30th last the company went to the Bank of Montreal and borrowed, at the rate of 5 per cent, this large sum of over five and a half millions.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will permit me; he has hardly correctly apprehended that part of the transaction. It did not take place on that date. Moneys were advanced from time to time. The balance I stated in reply to the question was correct; but it does not mean that the whole transaction was of that date. It makes no difference so far as the responsibility is concerned, I admit.

Mr. MONK. It seemed to me as my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) has just stated it. A passing observation is that it seems very extraordinary that so very large a sum should have been borrowed just at that time in a market where there was such a great stringency, when, with the guarantee that they had, the company could have secured that sum at a lower rate of interest in another market which was in a different situation from that in which the market of Montreal was about that time. Another question which naturally suggests itself is: Has the floating debt of $779,551 been paid off in full? I presume that the money was borrowed partly for the purpose of paying off that large floating debt which made the company appear insolvent in 1903, but I have found no absolute proof in regard to the disposition of that very large floating debt. One thing appears to me to be certain at the present moment—and I shall just touch upon it, as I do not wish to delay the House, my only excuse for taking up so much time as I do being that the subject is of considerable importance—and that is that this bridge company now, as in 1903, is insolvent; it is as insolvent to-day as it was at that time. Exactly what its condition is seems to be one of those points which it is our duty to ascertain fully. For we are committed absolutely to this important work. There is no doubt now, it seems to me, that we must take up this work ourselves; and it is necessary, in order that we may do that in a proper manner, that we should ascertain exactly the situation of the company. But what is the situation of the Phœnix Bridge Company, which had undertaken to construct the bridge? So far as I have been able to ascertain—and I do not wish in any sense to malign that company, but I think that what I say is well founded—it is not in a financial condition to face this very large loss. Very few companies would be; but, from information which I have been able to secure, I do not think that the Phœnix Bridge Company, in that respect, is in a different position from what most companies would be in under similar circumstances. Were there any insurances upon this work? I am informed that there were not. The loss is, therefore, an absolute loss. There seems to be nobody at present responsible in connection with the work or able to meet the financial loss connected with it. I conclude from that, from such information as I have been able, as a member of this House, to gather in a very limited and restricted manner, that this great loss must fall upon ourselves; that is, upon the country.

Another point which deserves consideration from a careful examination of section 18 of the agreement of 1903, incorporated in the statute of that year. We are obliged under section 18 of the agreement to pay, as I have stated, the shareholders of the company in the manner already referred to in order to disinterest them; but we are also bound to pay all the debts and obligations of the company, contracted with the approval or sanction of the government. This, to my mind, would undoubtedly include the floating debt existing to-day and it would also comprise all other debts or obligations of the company for which the company could presume to have the consent if not written at least tacit, of the government.

I would like to remark in connection with this same point, because it is intimately related to it, that on the 10th of July, 1903, by a statute known as chapter 177, 3 Edward VII., we increased very considerably indeed the powers of the company, particularly by sections 4 and 5 which I shall not take up the time of the House in reading. Suffice it to say in a general way that from being a mere bridge company the company became a terminal and connecting company. It was empowered to lay out wharfs, storehouses, elevators, at or near Quebec or at either end of the bridge; telephones, and tramways and terminal tracks from the north and south end of the bridge to Quebec and Lévis respectively; and powers of expropriation were given to the company in this connection. Have those powers been exercised? If they have, and I have heard some rumour to the effect that to a certain extent expropriations have been carried on—whether that is true or not, I cannot vouch—it seems to me undoubtedly that section 18 of the agreement would cover an indemnity to the company for such of those powers as it may have exercised. At any rate there is some very serious question on that point and I have no doubt that if those extraordinary powers granted in 1903 by this government and by this legislature have been legitimately exercised, our expropriation would have to cover an indemnity for the exercise of those powers.

An inquiry has been ordered by the government; and for this no doubt the government is to be commended, although I will say frankly that I am not in a position to very greatly commend the government for any other action of theirs in connection with this matter since 1903. It seems to me they could not have proceeded in a more imprudent and unbusinesslike manner than they have done. But the accident, the dreadful accident which we all have present in our minds to-day, occurred on the 29th of August last, and the following day a report was prepared and sent to Council on the 31st of August last, ordering an inquiry. The inquiry which was then ordered is in its scope and nature very different from the one which I have in contemplation by this motion. The object of that inquiry is set forth in the order in council, a copy of which I have here. It is to name three commissioners:

> to investigate and report upon the said matter.

That is, the breakdown of the bridge.

> —such investigation and report—but without thereby limiting the scope of the inquiry—to embrace and especially deal with the several questions suggested by the chief engineer.

Higher up it is stated that the chief engineer—

> States that it is his opinion that a commission should issue to three competent engineers empowering them to make an investigation, under oath, into the cause of the collapse of such bridge, and into all matters incidental thereto, and that this action should be taken immediately in view of the grave situation and the circumstances of the case.

The order in council further suggests the names of Mr. H. Holgate, civil engineer, Montreal; Mr. J. G. G. Kerry, civil engineer, Campbellford; and Prof. John Galbraith, of the University of Toronto. As I understand it, although as the House sees they are not absolutely circumscribed or limited, the object of that inquiry was to find out the causes of the accident and I for one am quite prepared to say that that was a very fit matter of investigation for this commission of three men, and one upon which it is desirable that the House should be fully informed. But it is of a technical nature, so technical in fact, that I am perfectly sure that very few members of this House, when that report is made, will be in a position to absolutely understand the cause of the accident.

The object of the inquiry which I propose is totally different, as the House will see on reading the motion. What I desire to know is our financial position, the situation of the company, the responsibilities of the company, the contracts, what disposal has been made of the money, all matters which, I submit to this House and to the government, we should be absolutely acquainted with, and familiar with before we can intelligently discuss a matter of this great importance. I take this occasion to say that I do not think we have abused select committees in this House but that there is rather a regrettable tendency to not grant select committees. It is my opinion that this is a very grave error indeed, and that we should as much as possible, follow the example of other legislatures of modern creation which have provided very largely for the devolution of their important work upon select committees. Even in England, within the last two or three years, any one who reads knows that the public men of that country are advocating on all sides a scheme of devolution by which a very great deal indeed of the multifarious labour devolves on the House of Commons in England will be divided off and distributed to the committees. That is the tendency. It seems to me, Sir, that within a very short time indeed we have learned what we might lose in this legislature by not pursuing that course. We have made a treaty which I deem to have been an unfortunate one and which it seems to me would have been a very different one had it been studied by a committee as the American treaty with Japan was, as all treaties are submitted to the committee of the Senate on Foreign Relations. I was surprised the other day, when I attempted to have another important commercial treaty submitted to a committee of this House in order that we could know exactly what the advantages of that treaty were, that the idea did not seem to meet with any acceptance from my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. It seems to me, Sir, that all matters without any exception in regard to which the House desires information are fit and proper matters to be referred to committees.

It is only by means of such a committee that, upon the questions that we have to deal with, we can become properly informed. I venture to say that we would have, after the session has not been in duration for quite a long time, made a great deal more progress indeed than we have made in the tendency to distribute the work of the House of Commons amongst small commit tees had been carried out. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that this is a work to which we are committed; there is no difference of opinion between us on that point. Are we going, as we have already on one occasion been called upon, to dispose of this very important matter, of this national matter, without careful knowledge and investigation of the facts so that at any time, even if it is at the end of the session, and this question is brought before us we will be in a position to intelligently deal with it? I submit that this is the proper course—the course that we should adopt. This is the course desired in my own province. I know that in the province of Quebec there is at the present moment a desire that the country should be fully informed. There is a reason for it. In the city of Quebec where this undertaking perhaps interests them more—although I question that myself—than it does in other parts of the country, at any rate, where there has been for a very long time a desire to see the river St. Lawrences bridged at that point, there is also a desire that this matter should be fully looked into. It must be taken up, it must be taken up soon, we are the only ones who can take it up and in order to take it up properly I submit to the House, Sir, a motion for this committee of investigation.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, while I am not prepared to admit the general view as expressed by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in regard to the formation of special committees to perform the work which has been entrusted by the people to the House, still, on this occasion I admit that the subject to which he has called attention is a proper subject for investigation. As my hon. friend has stated, on both sides of the House we are committed to the construction of a bridge at Quebec. It is a work of national importance and the usefulness of it is no longer contested. The unfortunate circumstance with which we are painfully familar makes it imperative that the most ample light should be shed upon that part of the transaction which has conduced from the beginning to the catastrophe. It is all the more important that such an investigation should take place because there are, in the minds of many hon. members and certainly in the mind of my hon. friend himself, what I believe to be misconceptions in regard to the organization of the company and the distribution of its funds and the money which has gone into the bridge. It is therefore, I conceive, advisable, as I said a moment ago, that ample opportunity should be given to the House to be placed in a position to know accurately where we stand before the government has to come again for the credit of the House in order to prosecute this work. Therefore, Mr Speaker, I have simply to agree to the resolution of my hon. friend.

Motion agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—ALLEGED RATE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FREDERICTON, N.B.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N.B.) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence between the Railway Commission and the Department of Railways and Canals, or the Intercolonial Railway, and between the Railway Commission and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Grand Trunk Railway, and between the Railway Commission and the Fredericton Board of Trade, in reference to the alleged discrimination against the city of Fredericton in the matter of freight rates. And also for a copy of all other papers and documents on file with the Railway Commission in relation thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I regret the necessity of having to move this motion in the absence of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), but it has been standing so long upon the paper without being reached that I feel I ought to avail myself of the present opportunity of presenting it to the House. The Canada Eastern Railway was acquired by the government and made a part of the Intercolonial Railway system in the autumn of 1904 shortly before the general elections of that year. The purchase was one of the principal government canvasses in that election. All the changes were rung upon it—what great benefits were to accrue to the city of Fredericton, to York and the adjoining counties, by reason of low freight and passenger rates, improved train service, &c. The Minister of Railways and Canals at that time himself addressed a political meeting at Fredericton a few days before polling day and devoted, I may say, a great portion of his speech to an appeal to the people of Fredericton and York county for support on the ground of the purchase of the Canada Eastern by the government and the great things that it would mean for the city of Fredericton and the country traversed by the railway. This is a passage from the report of the minister's speech as it appeared in the government organ published in Fredericton :

> The Conservatives of Fredericton don't want the Canada Eastern improved. They don't want higher wages paid. They don't want a maritime express or an ocean limited, they don't want an efficient service on the Canadian Eastern branch of the Intercolonial Railway; they don't want cheap passenger and freight rates; they don't want an express and a freight train each way on the Canada Eastern every day.

And so on. Before the railway was taken over by the government and at the time that the Minister of Railways and Canals used these words the rate upon first class through freight from Montreal and points west to Fredericton was fifty-eight cents per hundred pounds. That was the same rate that the city of St. John enjoyed. No sooner, however, was the election over than a differential of eight cents per 100 pounds was imposed against the city of Fredericton, the town of Marysville and also against Gibson upon all through freight from points west of Montreal, the rates being increased from fifty-eight to sixty-six cents per 100 pounds. The matter was discussed in this House in the month of May, 1905, and at that time hon. gentlemen may remember that a letter or a telegram was produced which showed that even the general traffic manager of the Intercolonial Railway, Mr. Tiffin, had held that this was a most unjust discrimination against the city of Fredericton and one which was calculated to ruin the city as a distributing centre. The Board of Trade of the city of Fredericton afterwards took the matter up and a petition was filed with the Board of Railway Commissioners on the 15th June, 1905, protesting against the differential.

Copies of that petition were forwarded to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway on the 13th July, 1905. The petition was referred to the traffic officer of the Board of Railway Commissioners and a report was received from that officer under date April 28th, 1906, which report, I am informed, contained a recommendation in favour of the removal of the discrimination complained of. Copies of that report were sent to the railways interested and a reply was received on the 21st of June, 1906. Notwithstanding that 21 months have since elapsed, nothing has since been done and the matter remains in statu quo, so that Fredericton, Gibson and Marysville have had to submit for over three years to a differential freight rate which the traffic manager of the Intercolonial has pronounced to be without justification or excuse and which the tariff expert of the Board of Railway Commissioners has also reported against. That is the injustice which I wish to bring to the attention of the government at the present time, and I hope that the Minister of Railways and Canals or the Railway Department will deem it to be their duty to take this matter up and to see that justice is done without further delay. It seems to me that this injustice should have been remedied long ago without the necessity of an application to the Board of Railway Commissioners. It cannot be seriously contended that the Intercolonial Railway is not responsible for the differentiation of rates as between different stations upon its own line. Nothing illustrates this more clearly to my mind than the differential against Fredericton, Gibson and Marysville, which is complained of in the present instance. For example, take the case of a shipment of freight from Gananoque, Ont., to Fredericton, N.B., and the case of a shipment of freight from Gananoque to the city of St. John, N.B.; in both cases the freight comes by the Grand Trunk Railway to the city of Montreal, between the same points and over the same rails, so that so far as the Grand Trunk end of the haul is concerned the rate must be the same in each case. If there is any difference in the rate between St. John and Fredericton it must necessarily, therefore, be in consequence of the Intercolonial end of the haul. Fredericton is 56 miles nearer Montreal than is St. John, N.B., and, as I have pointed out, in the time of the Canada Eastern and until this differential was imposed shortly after the last general election, both cities were in the same group in the matter of through freight rates. It is very clear that either this differential must have been imposed by the Intercolonial Railway itself or the Intercolonial Railway must have consented to its imposition by others. That is a proposition which I think admits of no controversy. It certainly could not have been imposed without the consent of the Intercolonial Railway. The Intercolonial Railway must take the responsibility of having imposed it directly in this particular case, or of having permitted it under the terms of an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway by which they have surrendered to these railways the control of their rates on through freight as between stations on their own line. If that is the situation, and I believe it is, the only explanation that has been offered of the differential complained of, it is, I think, a very ineffective defence, and so far as this government is concerned it will prove a more unpopular defence than if they had frankly admitted that the discrimination was imposed by the Intercolonial Railway itself without reference to the other railways, because it means nothing more or less than that they have entered into a combine with other railways of which the Intercolonial Railway is presumed to be a competitor, for the purpose of keeping down and destroying competition in rates. I have referred to the opinion of the traffic manager of the Intercolonial, Mr. Tiffin, on this matter. That opinion will be found in a telegram from Mr. Tiffin to Mr. J. W. Loud of the Grand Trunk printed in 'Hansard' (page 6118, May 17, 1905), which reads as follows:

Your telegram date re Fredericton rates. I still consider as a matter of justice and right that Fredericton rates should be on the basis of St. John and not any higher, in view of local changes made by the Canadian Pacific from St. John and Fredericton; and in view also of the reduction in their flour rates to their points north to Macadam Junction, this advance to Fredericton can have no other effect than that of crippling Fredericton as a distributing centre.

This being the opinion of the traffic manager of the Intercolonial, it seems to me that it will be very difficult to find any reason or excuse for the continuance of this discrimination against not only the city of Fredericton, but the important town of Marysville and Gibson also. I trust the government will lose no time in having the injustice remedied.

There is another matter in this connection which I also wish to bring to the attention of the government. The Fredericton and St. Marys Railway Bridge which spans the St. John river at Fredericton, became the property of the government in the summer of 1905 by virtue of the foreclosure of a mortgage to secure an advance of $300,000 towards the construction of the bridge. Notwithstanding that this bridge then became the property of the government and has since been and is now part of the Intercolonial Railway system, the government has continued to exact special tolls upon all passenger traffic crossing that bridge to and from the city of Fredericton. The ticket agents of the Intercolonial Railway are instructed upon the sale of all single first-class tickets from Fredericton to points beyond Marysville and from points beyond Marysville to Fredericton to exact an additional 10 cents, and in the case of return tickets to and from points beyond Fredericton an additional 15 cents as a special toll for the crossing of this bridge. In the case of Marysville the toll is five cents each way. Now, I believe that is a practice which cannot be justified by any government or by any railway company. This bridge being part of the Intercolonial Railway system there is no more reason why the people of York county or other parts of New Brunswick should pay a special toll for crossing that bridge than there is why passengers on the Intercolonial Railway should pay for crossing any other bridge upon the system. It is a burden upon the people of Fredericton and Marysville and bears specially hard upon the people of the rural districts of York county—a burden for which there is no justification and which should, therefore, be removed at once. It seems to me that I should only have to bring this injustice to the attention of the government to secure its removal, for I doubt if in any part of this country on the government railway or on any other railway tolls are exacted from passengers for crossing a bridge belonging to the railway system on which they are travelling.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am sorry that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways could not be in his place to-day; but I conceded that the hon. gentleman could not defer his motion any longer. I am sorry that I am not in a position to give any answer to the observations which he has made. The subject will, however, come up again for discussion when the Minister of Railways is in his place. In the meantime, I have no objection to papers being brought down.

Motion agreed to.

A BUREAU OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

Mr. J. B. BLACK (Hants) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived when the government of Canada should perfect organization whereby present scientific knowledge should be made practically available for the suppression of the causes of preventable diseases.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have no apology to make for moving this resolution, which looks to the formation of a bureau of public health. This is a subject which has taken a deep hold on the minds of the medical profession for some years, not only in Canada, but in the adjoining republic, as well as on the minds of others who are interested in the bettterment of present conditions. The question has been twice discussed in the Canadian Medical Association, and at its last session a large and representative committee was appointed to wait on the federal government to urge the formation of a properly equipped bureau of public health; and that committee, I believe, will fulfil that duty very soon.

The subject-matter in this resolution is of such a great importance both from an economic and humanitarian point of view that it is worthy of the earnest consideration and advocacy of the ablest minds of the Dominion. The consideration of the prevention of preventable diseases is to-day taking a place in the civilized world that it never did before, and the ablest men of this continent, of Great Britain, of the continent of Europe, and of Japan are giving earnest study and much time to the subject of government control of preventable diseases. The world has for several hundred years been making progress in banishing diseases, but it has been a slow and painful process. Ignorance of the laws violated, and when known, selfish indifference to the suffering of others or to the national loss have been the causes of failure and slow progress. Heretofore cowardice and personal fear of death and disease have been the chief motives in limping attempts at prevention. But in this enlightened 20th century science has more clearly seen the way of prevention. Political economists have seen the enormous loss to the state in dollars and cents, and humanitarians as well as economists have seen the appalling needless sacrifice of human lives, the needless suffering of sick and diseased humanity, and the needless and almost unbelievable slaughter of innocent children.

When dense ignorance prevailed and terrible epidemics of diseases swept the earth as in the 'black death,' in the 14th century, when 25,000,000 perished in Europe, or later when the great plagues swept over London and England, when half the population died, statesmen and physicians were helpless to save. But in the 20th century, when causes of diseases are so well known, when the prevention of so many of them is simply a question of organization and money, humanity and economy both demand why the present conditions should continue. They will not continue; for there is a persistent demand throughout the civilized world for government interference and there is growing everywhere a demand to teach and to be taught how to prevent preventable diseases. In England a course in hygiene and preventative medicine is being introduced into the universities, particularly the study of Galton's new Science of Eugenics—the science of improving the human race. In the United States there is a demand for, and an increased supply of literature bearing on the protection of public health. Among these are those touching on the prevention of tuberculosis, typhoid fever and the questions of pure water supply, pure milk, pure food, labour of women and children in factories, factory sanitation, &c.

A committee of 100 in the United States, embracing men of national and world-wide repute, are now engaged in conducting a campaign for the prevention of preventable diseases, and are asking the national government to reorganize the bureaus of public health so that the federal government may have a more perfect control of preventable diseases. I here quote from an editorial of the 'Yale Medical Journal' touching the United States government's Department of Health :

That the movement for a national organization of public health has gained a momentum which promises early and extensive legislation of Congress, few may doubt.

President Roosevelt, in his speech at Princeton, among other things said :

I also hope that there will be legislation increasing the power of the national government to deal with matters concerning the health of our people everywhere. The federal authorities, for instance, should join with all the state authorities in warring against the dreadful scourge of tuberculosis. I hope to see the national government stand abreast of the foremost state governments. This stand taken by the President is in accord with his letter to the Committee of One Hundred. In it he said: 'Our national health is physically our greatest national asset.'

To prevent any possible deterioration of the American stock should be a national ambition. We cannot too strongly insist on the necessity of proper ideals for the family, for simple living, and for those habits and tastes which produce vigour, and make men capable of strenuous service to their country. I can most cordially commend the endeavours of your committee to bring these matters prominently before the public.

He goes on to say :

By such an organization—a federal bureau of public health only can the pressing problems be met—such as the pollution of our rivers by means of which contamination of whole populations happens, and as a result typhoid is in constant occurrence; the infection of whole populations by travellers.

I am quoting now from the medical journal :

The dangers of the bubonic plague which already has a foothold on the Pacific coast, the extension of the federal quarantine and kindred questions. The progress already made in pure food legislation should also be maintained. There can be no question that laws regarding child labour and female labour, adulteration of drugs and food, contamination of water supply or such destructive scourges as tuberculosis are simply justified on the grounds of public health, and at the same time in legislation of incalculable value to the labouring classes.

I may say that the governments of Germany and of France have made the whole world their debtors for the work done for humanity, in the prevention of disease, by Koch, Pasteur and many others. These men, officials of their governments, with government salaries were able to devote their whole time and knowledge to scientific research which has blessed humanity everywhere. Government control, government patronage and a properly equipped government bureau is the keynote of success in the prevention of preventable diseases. To the French and German governments both we are indebted for the antitoxine diphtheria cure.

Two or three questions naturally come to the front in considering this resolution :

1. Can certain diseases be prevented ?
2. Can we afford it ?
3. Is it the duty of the federal government to form and control a bureau of public health ?

To the first question I answer, decidedly, yes. Actuated only for the most part by cowardice and personal fear of disease and death we have destroyed the great epidemic of small-pox, have reduced leprosy to a very few isolated spots. Have completely swept scurvy from the navy. Yellow fever and typhoid fever are greatly reduced. So is scarlet fever and tuberculosis. Enteric fever that (awful scourge of the military camp) was in the last great war, Russo-Japanese, reduced to such an extent that it attracted the wonder and admiration of the world. If all this can be done by the dim light of the past what may not be done in this Dominion of ours with the present scientific knowledge administered by a government bureau of public health.

Let us consider the question of typhoid fever alone. There are cities and towns in Canada that have their cases of typhoid every day in the year, any one of which is preventable, Professor Irving Fisher of Yale university says :

Typhoid fever can be practically abolished by the prevention of the pollution of the rivers and other sources of water supply and by improving our milk.

Medical writers of undoubted authority have said that it is a disgrace to any community to have an epidemic of typhoid fever. I have seen cases where the cause was so apparent, the filth so near, that the result, as well as the conditions, admitted of no other word than disgraceful.

In regard to the most frequent cause of typhoid. I would like to read a quotation in part, of an article on this subject by Dr. Charles A. S. Reid, special United States commissioner to Panama 1905, and president of the National Legislative Conference of the American Medical Association. What he says here of one particular river and its towns will apply, though perhaps in a less degree because of less population, to the St. Lawrence, the Ottawa, Toronto bay and a score or more other sources of water supply and typhoid, in Canada.

Everybody who knows anything about the subject at all knows that typhoid fever is a water borne disease, that its chief medium of dissemination is the water we drink. And everybody knows too, that the cities, in the Ohio watershed for the most part, derive their water supply from that stream or its tributaries. Now the city of Alleghany had nearly 1,300 cases of typhoid last year, the discharge from which patients, a half million of them, went into the Ohio river. Pittsburg with a larger population and a higher death rate from typhoid probably contributed twice as much. Cincinatti had about 2,000 cases and consequently drained a million typhoid dejections into the river. Louisville reinforced the pollution with a proportionately large contribution. And what is true of these large cities is proportionately true of the hundreds of smaller cities and towns. Is it any wonder that typhoid is prevalent at all times in this great area.

Why is there not more of it? The question may well be asked. In the first place, the human system under normal conditions has great powers of resistance. Not every person who swallows typhoid germs comes down with the disease. In the next place, streams fortunately have the power of self-purification to a certain extent. And finally, some of the cities have an extensive plant for precipitation and filteration of the water and these help to purify it. If it were not for these factors there would be no typhoid in the Ohio valley for the good and sufficient reason that the people would have died with the disease. As it is thousands of them die every year, for all the preventative facts that I have mentioned taken together do not and cannot prevent the disease as long as the flagrant contamination that I have hinted at is permitted to continue.

For, understand, typhoid fever dejectia represents only one of the countless forms of filth that are drained into the Ohio river. And what is true of the Ohio river is true of the majority of all the other rivers of the United States. We are simply making sewers lions in a futile effort to cure conditions that ought to have been successfully prevented for a tenth of the money.

I want you to keep it in mind that what we have said just now about the Ohio river and the United States is just as true of Canadian rivers and of Canada. Now, I wish to quote again Dr. McCormack, an official of the American Medical Association, speaking of typhoid, he says :

This is not only a preventable disease, but the most typical of the filth diseases, for no one can have it except by getting into his mouth and stomach some of the discharges from the bowels or kidneys of some one who has typhoid fever. This is not a nice thing to think about, but it is so much worse to do it that nice people—— —like ourselves here,

—ought to think and plan how to stop doing it. It usually gets into the mouth through infected water.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here is a picture of polluted water supply and its dreadful results which can be matched in miniature all over Canada, for typhoid fever is everywhere from Prince Rupert to Cape North, Cape Breton, whether from a conducted water system or from the farmhouse well, the baccillus typhosus gets in his work every day.

Now, I shall naturally be asked by practical men—and I want to consider this subject in a very practical way—can water supplies, whether from a river or a lake or a well be made so absolutely pure that no typhoid fever shall result. Medical science says, emphatically, yes. It is only a question of proper organization, proper control and money. And money ?—yes ; but less money than the cost of sickness, death, burial and the loss of producers. In other words, it will cost less, when properly used, to keep our drinking water clean than the loss occasioned by typhoid fever. I can personally cite more than one town where the ever-recurring annual list of typhoid has been completely wiped out by a correction of the water supply. I have taken the cases of typhoid fever, its chief causes and its prevention simply to illustrate what may be done in all preventable diseases. Of course, there are diseases which cannot be prevented, that is, at our present-time knowledge. Cancer and such things as that we do not claim to have sufficient knowledge yet to prevent. But I am sure that, at the present rate of progress in the medical profession, it will not be long before we can class cancer among the preventable diseases. I am just now discussing preventable diseases, and, God knows, there are enough of them without considering any others here. I hope I have shown that we can prevent preventable diseases. Now, let us try to answer the second question.

Can we afford it ? Let us look first at the appalling loss of useful lives, and of producing citizens to Canada, and the cost of protecting the public from the terror and alarm against the ravages of contagious diseases which should have been prevented. Canada contains a population, let us say, one-twelfth that of the United States. The natural condition and the state of sanitation are about equal in Canada and the United States. If I quote statistics by experts applying to the United States, we can judge how they should apply to Canada. According to that reliable journal,' American Medicine '—and it is a standard publication —typhoid fever alone costs the United States annually $185,000,000—that is a tremendous sum, and if it were not given by one of the most reliable medical journals in the United States, we might almost doubt. Taking the basis of comparison that I have mentioned, this would make the cost to Canada about five and one-half millions loss through typhoid alone yearly. Now, these are cold facts and there is no exaggeration about them. Dr. Hodgetts. the secretary of the Board of Health of Ontario, says that the neglect of sanitation has cost Ontario $2,000,000 in small-pox cases alone in the past ten years. Now, one would think that the sum of $2,000,000, if properly expended, would be sufficient to prevent small-pox in Canada—I was going to say for all time to come. Dr. Smith Walker, of Truro, N.S., says that he knows a county—presumably Colchester, N.S.—which, not long since spent $20,000 in one small-pox scare, the epidemic resulting in one death. We might go all over Canada and find like wasteful expenditure due to the want of intelligent and proper organization. According to our official statistics—and I have gone very carefully over them—the death-rate in Canada for the period covered by the census of 1901 was 81,201 per year on the average. According to reliable authorities on state sanitation, one-third of these deaths are preventable. That is to say, 27,066 people are needlessly lost every year to Canada—to Canada that needs citizens about as much as does any country in the world. At $5 a head, the amount paid as bonus to shipping companies for immigrants brought to this country, these 27,066 preventable deaths represent a loss of $135,330 a year, and these are good Canadians that die, and not foreigners. At the usual estimate that a citizen is worth $1,000 to the state, the loss to Canada annually is $27,066,000 from preventable diseases. Probably, the heaviest tax, state, municipal and general paid in Canada to-day is the tax paid for unnecessary funerals, unnecessary sickness and unnecessary deaths. We must keep constantly in mind that this enormous yearly loss of citizens is preventable, is needless, and that one of the first steps towards stopping this annual loss is the organization of a federal bureau of public health. It may further help us in our conclusions if we look at the loss from those diseases considered more immediately preventable, diseases that simply and actually arise from filth.

Now, ' filth ' is a nasty word, but it is the only one to designate the causes of diphtheria, typhoid fever, small-pox, scarlet fever, measles, a large percentage of cholera morbus, dysentery and diarrhœa. Leaving out the three latter our annual death rate from the others is 7,260—7,260 poisoned to death anuually. In estimating the loss to Canada from preventable diseases we must not count the loss merely from those who die; there is also the loss to the state of those who have been incapacitated from work by their illness, their producing power suspended for many weeks and the loss of time by those who nurse their friends.

Of all our Canadian-born who die of preventable diseases there are none done to death by such sheer and culpable ignorance as our children. Of all the deaths in Canada more than one-third, a little less than one-half die under five years of age. There are 5,000 more deaths annually under the fifth year than there are from the fifth to the fifty-fifth. 31,347 children die yearly under the fifth year and here the average of one-third preventable is far too small. There can be no doubt from experiments by private philanthropy that one-half are savable.

Of the awful mortality among our children I would like to read a couple of extracts taken at random from our daily press.

The Montreal 'Herald,' in an article on vital statistics, on March 25 last, said :

The record of births and deaths in the city last week, as shown by the statistics at the Civic Health Department, indicates that the heavy mortality is still being maintained in excess of the birth-rate. There were 144 deaths in Montreal last week. Of the total, 36 were infants under 6 months of age and 67 children under 5 years, or in other words, out of 144 deaths in the week 103 were children under 5 years of age.

I have also an extract from a Guelph paper of November 26 last, reading :

At the annual meeting of the Board of Health, Dr. Robinson, medical health officer, again drew attention to the excessive infant mortality rate, over 27 per cent of all our deaths occurring before the end of the second year. When it was considered that there were not more than 400 children under that age in the city the death rate at that period of life amounted to 110 per thousand against 11·34 per thousand of the total deaths of all ages.

I quote again :

If some truly wise man were asked what would be the best prescription for the future well-being and power of our country, I believe he would answer 'cut down the appalling infant death rate and care for the health of the children.'

I do not think there is a medical man within the sound of my voice who will contradict me when I say that more than one-half the deaths of children are from improper and impure food. To show what can be done by intelligent effort, even by one man, I would like to quote a very short extract descriptive of the work done by that wealthy philanthrophist, Nathan Strauss of New York—and please remember there is no difference between milk and babies in New York and milk and babies in Canada.

The first infants milk depot was opened in 1893 and the work has expanded with the public appreciation of the safety to be found in pasteurization. In the past season Mr. Strauss maintained 17 depots and dispensed 2,917,336 bottles and 1,222,045 glasses of pasteurized milk, making the total output since 1893 of 18,710,892 bottles and 10,089,674 glasses all of which has been sold at less than cost or given away on coupons distributed through charity workers.

With the development of this work the infantile mortality in New York has dropped from 96 per thousand per annum prior to 1893 to 55 per thousand in 1906, and the summer mortality from 136·1 per thousand to 62·7 per thousand.

Prof. Sedgewick said :

Milk is babies food and they are fed instead on a death seething liquid. They cry for milk and are given typhoid fever germs and perhaps also the germs of consumption. On September 29, 1897, I said: 'I hold that there is practically no milk delivered for general consumption in cities that is fit to be fed in its natural state to young children.'

No plague by which a city has ever been ravaged has yielded so plentiful a crop of deaths as that which is reaped every summer from the seeds of contagion deposited in the infant system by millions of noxious bacteria developed in milk.

Men of light leading have always said that the problem of preserving infant life is also in a great measure the problem of preserving juvenile health; and many men of action are taking the matter up with great earnestness.

May I also quote from an article by G. Pease Norton, secretary of the committee of 100 of the American Association for the Advancement of Science on 'federal legislation in the furtherance of public health.'

For a nation to not prevent great waste to go unchecked is more than a suicidal policy, for an evil more destructive than race suicide is race homicide. There are four great wastes to-day, the more lamentable because they are unnecessary. They are preventable death, preventable sickness, preventable conditions of low physical and mental efficiency and preventable ignorance. The magnitude of these wastes is testified to by experts competent to judge. They fall like the shades of night over the whole human race, blotting out its fair years of happiness.

Speaking of the United States he continues :

The facts are cold and bare, 1,500,000 persons must die in the United States during the next 12 months, equivalent to 4,200,000 persons will be constantly sick, over 5,000,000 homes consisting of 25,000,000 persons will be made more or less wretched by mortality and morbidity.

We look with horror on the black plague of the middle ages. The black waste was but a passing cloud compared with the white waste visitation.

During the next census period more than six million infants under two years of age will end their little spans of life while mothers sit by and watch in utter helplessness. And yet this number could be probably decreased by as much as one-half.

By all students of this subject, the average rate of saving of infant life is placed at one-half, while the average rate of saving of all lives is placed at one-third. In all the foregoing I have said nothing of the past enormous loss to Canada of deaths from tuberculosis or of the acknowledged decrease in deaths from that disease, even though this decrease has been accomplished by an association infinitely less powerful than a thoroughly equipped bureau backed by the weight of the federal government.

If then it is possible for man to win the fight against disease, to double the length of his working days, to vastly increase his energy and enjoyment of life, there is surely no more crying need than for applying modern science to this subject.

It may be doubted that modern science can really lengthen man's day and reduce materially the number of deaths. Can we reduce the general death rate by one-third? Sanitary scientists say yes. Can we reduce by one-half the awful death rate of babies? Scientists and practical workers both say yes. Can we abolish from Canada smallpox and typhoid fever and diphtheria, and all that class of diseases coming from filth? Emphatically, and without a doubt, yes. If the results claimed by the sanitary scientists and by all the thinkers and writers on state preservation of public health are justified and if they are correct in their estimates, surely Canada can afford a thoroughly equipped bureau of public health.

Now, our third point is that it is the duty of the federal government to equip and control a bureau of public health, a bureau thoroughly equipped with a responsible, say, commissioner, with his staff of sanitary inspectors, sanitary engineers, bacteriologists and chemists, with its laboratories and departments of hygiene, of literature departments, &c., &c.

The government has already acknowledged its duty to protect the lives of our domestic animals, and there was spent, and I am convinced properly spent, nearly half a million dollars for this purpose last year, and I presume this is the average annual expenditure. In this laudable work the government employs 107 veterinary surgeons, with salaries ranging from $5 per day when employed to $1,700 per year. This staff does laboratory work, press work, and in fact conducts a very efficient system for the prevention of preventable diseases, epidemic and sporadic, among animals—how to keep them in best health, how to improve their breed and stock in every way.

Now, what is done for the preservation of the lives of our people? The Department of Agriculture maintains some quarantine stations at some of our principal ocean ports, and there are two lazarettos for the care of leprosy, and this is all. Science says the lives of calves, hogs, colts and lambs can be saved, that the days of the mature animal can be lengthened and his usefulness by good health made greater to man and to the state; and, lo, half a million is yearly wisely spent in the accomplishment. Science also says that the lives of babies, of men and women, can be saved by preventing diseases; that the lives of men, by reason of good health, can be made more valuable to the state, and the sorrows from death prevented; and, lo, nothing is done. Is this fair or reasonable, or is it good statesmanship? If the federal government acknowledges its duty in maintaining the life and preserving the health of domestic animals and spends half a million a year with this in view, how much greater is it the government's duty to preserve the lives and health of our people, and how much more than half a million a year should be expended in the effort? Of how much more value is a man than an ox to the state—to his kind? The government has given evidence of its responsibility for the health of our people by issuing recently from the Department of Agriculture a pamphlet, a very practical and useful pamphlet, on how to avoid tuberculosis, by our good friend H. H. Miller, M.P. Having done this, why not pamphlets on prevention of typhoid, diphtheria, or infant hygiene, and on and on, till the full and complete work of a fully equipped division of sanitary literature in a bureau of public health is inaugurated and in working order?

But some may say public health should be controlled by the provinces. As well might the provinces say it should be controlled by the cities, and the cities say it should be done by boards or committees of health, and the boards and committees say everybody should look after himself, 'and the devil take the hindmost.'

Again, there are questions affecting the public health which can only be dealt with by the federal government, and such questions will come up before long. For instance, the pollution of international waters by either or both nations; the upper St. John river, stretches of the St. Lawrence, the Niagara, the St. Clair and certain stretches of the great lakes.

Common sense says there should be one central federal head for public health, and then following, departments of public health in every province of this Dominion, in every city, in every town, and in every parish or township. These are as important as our courts of justice, federal and provincial, county and town.

There is no manner of doubt that money as well as population can be saved to Canada by the equipment of a thoroughly scientific, up to present knowledge, bureau of public health. In discussing these matters, I would just like to take up the question of the physical training of the young by the federal government. The gain to the nation in physical health, in physical strength, in the development of citizens, in the lessening of crime and in the lessening of sickness, would amply repay the cost of maintaining a bureau of public health if nothing else than this were accomplished.

All experiments, over and over again have shown that physical training of the young tends to the obliteration of crime in the young; that the round-shouldered, slouch-gaited, hang-doged boy of the kerb can by physical training be made into a straight, erect, well regulated, honest, and honourable citizen; that by physical training the young youth who has a tendency to be a criminal and a thief can be made into an honest and a decent citizen. In this physical training there is a mental regeneration, there is moral redemption and there is health and strength to the industry of our country, ability to produce and to make wealth, and to beget a healthy and industrious generation. I would say that I have no wish to discuss details as to the lines of work to be pursued by a federal bureau of public health, but I would like to express the hope that the head of this economic, moral and philanthropic bureau would be a commissioner who would never change as the government or the party changed. I would like to see him a scientist of the highest rank, a man with practical business ability, and of an age young enough to be capable of the utmost enthusiasm at his work, and of the greatest ability. I regret I have taken up so much of the time of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. BLACK. Even in view of all I have said there may be some who think that this work is not practicable. There are many things in this world that look impracticable to a man who knows nothing about them but which are thoroughly practicable to the initiated. My neighbour may be a banker and a millionaire, I wonder how it is done, I cannot understand. All I know about a bank is that if I get a better name than mine on a note I may get it cashed, but the banker makes his wealth not by haphazard methods but by thorough business methods which he understands. So it is with other enterprises in life. What is difficult to me in banking is plain to the banker; what is difficult to the average individual about the prevention of preventable diseases is as plain and as practicable to me as banking is to the banker. I beg, Mr. Speaker, seconded by Dr. Chisholm of East Huron, to move the resolution which stands in my name.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM (East Huron). The hon. gentleman from Hants (Mr. Black) has so fully treated this subject that he has left little for me to say. He has presented to the House an array of medical opinions and of the views expressed by boards of health which surely must make an impression on the House. The hon. gentleman has done good work in bringing this matter up for discussion at the present time. The prevention of disease and the saving of the lives of our Canadian people are questions of such vital importance that I certainly consider it my duty to say something in support of the motion of my hon. friend. Weight is added to the words of warning pronounced by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Black) because of his age and his experience as a medical man, and the fact that he is either a past president or vice-president of the Canadian Medical Association. Such a plain and strong and unvarnished complaint coming from such a source, and from one of the government's own supporters, should surely and promptly lead to the adoption of active measures for the dissemination of information and the prevention of disease. The hon. gentleman has told us that 27,000 of the people of Canada die every year from diseases that might be prevented. That is a startling statement but it is absolutely true. I endorse all the hon. gentleman has said about our ability to prevent diseases by the destruction of germs and by the removal of filthy matter which is always the home and breeding place of these germs. The hon. gentleman has given us an accurate although perhaps a somewhat disagreeable description of the manner in which typhoid bacilli are conveyed from one person to another, and of the fearful danger which is incurred by drinking contaminated water. The slaughter of the innocents which the hon. gentleman mentioned and the fearful loss of life among infant children, is mostly due, as he said, to parental ignorance and it can therefore be easily guarded against. In France not long since, it was found that the death rate was exceeding the birth rate and that consequently the population of France was diminishing instead of increasing. The French government appointed a commission to enquire into the cause of this, and that commission after sitting for several months and taking evidence in various parts of the country made a report in which it was stated that the death rate in France was mostly due to the very great and excessive number of children who died before they were one year of age, which bears out the contention which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Black) has so ably presented to the House to-day. The report went on to say that this might be prevented by instructing the mothers not to use foul bottles, not to use bottles with long rubber necks laden with germs, and that the bottles should be thoroughly disinfected before they are used. The report went on to explain that children should not be given starchy food before they were one year old; that they should have teeth before they are given such food, for, if a kind Providence had intended that infant children should eat the products of wheat and of corn He certainly would have given them teeth to eat it with.

But they insist on feeding infants starchy food, which is not suitable for their digestion. There is no farmer or cheese-maker in Canada who does not know that a calf's stomach is very different from that of a cow. He would not think of feeding a calf on hay, because he knows that milk is the natural food of a calf. In the same way milk is the natural and proper food for a child, and it should not be fed on starchy food. I presume that in the Garden of Eden there was no roller mill, so that if Adam and Eve ate wheat at all, they must have ground it in their mouths between their teeth. In doing this they would be obeying the laws of health, because the bran would go with the flour and the whole mass would be thoroughly mixed with the saliva before being swallowed. Did it ever strike you that Eve, when nursing Cain and Abel, would give them a handful of wheat? How absurd is the suggestion! Still, that is practically what many of our people are now doing in their ignorance of the laws of health; they are trying to feed solid food to children who have no teeth. A kind Providence has arranged that children for a certain time cannot take solid food into their mouths by not providing them with teeth to masticate it; yet people will insist on forcing food of that kind down their children's throats, and when the poor children suffer the mothers try to stop them by giving them more starchy food. Is it any wonder they die? It is not natural for a child to die, because it is young and has all the elements of vitality in it. This slaughter of the innocents, this terrible death rate among children, is something the government should take up.

The resolution before us to-day I regard as one of the most important ever brought before this House, and I am sure it will have far-reaching effects. The people living in this country twenty years hence will, I have no doubt, look back in wonder and pity at the time when the Canadian people spent hundreds of thousands of dollars every year to bring in half-crazy Russians and other foreigners to take the place of their own poor dead children, whose lives might have been saved by the expenditure of about one-tenth of the money. Take one single preventable disease as an example. Not many years ago consumption was looked upon as hereditary and incurable. Those who were afflicted with it looked forward to nothing but death; they did not think it was possible that they could get any assistance. Ignorantly and unconsciously they spread the disease in every direction. But since that great German professor Dr. Koch has discovered the germ of the disease, the tubercular bacillus, great changes have taken place. Consumption, if taken in its first or incipient stages, is not only now considered curable, but it has been found that, with the exception of some races and families born with physical defects and weakened constitutions, the children of consumptive parents, if removed to healthy surroundings immediately after birth, are no more susceptible to the disease than others. But although consumption is not strictly hereditary, it is very easily and readily communicable. An ignorant or careless patient expectorates, and the sputa which is comparatively harmless while moist, soon becomes dry and disintegrated, and escapes into the atmosphere in the form of very fine dust. This passes into the lungs of those unfortunate enough to breathe that germ-laden air. When the tubercular bacilli pass into the lungs they are retained and invigorated by the moisture and heat of the body, and in some cases increase with appalling rapidity. It has been estimated that a single patient in the last stages of consumption will distribute seven thousand million of these bacilli in a single day. The mind of man can scarcely grasp the meaning of such a number. Think of what a menace such a person is to the community. Naturally we are afraid of savage animals, such as bears, wolves and rattlesnakes, but all the wild animals and venomous serpents in the Dominion of Canada do not destroy one-thousandth part of the number of people killed by these consumptive germs. Nearly one death out of every ten in the Dominion of Canada is caused by tubercular bacilli. A bonus is given by the government for the destruction of wolves. Why should not the government give a reward for the discovery of some system or process which, without injury to the patient, would destroy or prevent the distribution of tubercular bacilli? That would be an easy matter; it would not cost a great deal, and it might have wonderful results. Sanitaria have already accomplished a wonderful work, and they have been the source of a great deal of useful information to the people at large, but it is well to remember that if every sanitarium in the Dominion of Canada was now filled to its fullest capacity, forty-nine out of every fifty consumptives would still be abroad in the country spreading the disease. Many a poor man, the bread-winner of his family, is compelled to work on and on, a menace to his companions in the shop or the factory, until within a few days of his death, for he has not sufficient money to pay his way to a sanitarium, let alone support his family during his absence. Therefore I would say to the members of the government, something must be done to aid the poor man in his home if we are to conquer this terrible malady. The people, as the hon. member for Hants has said, must be warned and must be instructed. They must be taught that the destruction of the sputa, while moist and comparatively harmless, is of the utmost importance. They must also be taught that sunlight, fresh air, cheerful company and good food are important factors in the treatment. Nearly fifty thousand of the people of Canada are afflicted with this disease at the present time; ten thousand of our inhabitants die from its effect every year. The government are spending vast sums of money to prevent the spread of tuberculosis among cattle. Surely the people of Canada will sanction the expenditure of an equal sum to prevent the spread of that terrible disease among themselves. The government spend hundreds of thousands of dollars every year to bring in immigrants. Would it not be well to use part of that money to save our own people, who are always our most valuable and useful citizens? At the close of the Crusades many of the Christian soldiers, having ravaged the east, returned to western Europe tainted with leprosy. Thus the disease was spread far and wide. At one time there were 19,000 lazaretti, or leper houses, in Europe. Ninety-five of these were in the British isles. But even in that untutored and unlettered age, by isolation alone, that horrible disease was almost entirely stamped out of the country. The last British leper died in the Shetland islands 109 years ago. It is therefore plain that not only consumption, but typhoid fever—a disease which need not at all exist—small-pox, anthrax, diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles, whooping cough and a host of other diseases can be absolutely prevented if the people of this country are really in earnest and the government will do their duty. There are other diseases for the prevention of which a great deal might be done. We should have a commissioner of health appointed, whose duty it would be to distribute information and give people instruction regarding the laws of health. For example, there are a great many people in this country, not engaged in active manual labour, but in sedentary employment which keeps them indoors—the great majority of these people eat too much. They take a greater quantity of food into their system than is required. Only a certain portion of this can be assimilated. The balance goes to decay and rot in the system. It generates irritating acids and other poisonous materials which injure the health. The eliminating organs are continually overworked, and the result is diseases, such as indigestion, cancer, gall stones, kidney diseases, which could be easily prevented.

Take the case of a common cold as a simple example. Any medical man will tell you that a cold is generally caused in this way. There are 2,000 little pores, open doors, as it were, in every square inch of the human skin. When you go into the cold, the pores contract and become closed. Nature generally throws out an immense amount of refuse from the system through the skin, but when those pores are closed up that material has to go elsewhere. If you follow the skin on the outside, over your lips, down through your throat, and all the way down through the tubes into the lungs, you will find a skin called the mucous membrane on the inside. That is not exposed to cold, its pores are not closed up, and the material that should be thrown outside the system is thrown through these on to the lungs and this creates a cold. If that material comes so quickly that you cannot get rid of it, you have inflammation of the lungs. The proper remedy would be to open the pores. If people understood exactly what caused a common cold, they would know that all they have to do is to open the pores. Let them take a lot of fluid into the system, and if they go to bed they will have a profuse perspiration. But the great mass of the people think that they do not need to take any fluid. They take a sweating powder without the fluid, and that weakens them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What kind of fluid ?

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. Water. There are some people who take too much fluid of the wrong kind, I admit, but there are a good many others who do not take enough fluid of the right kind. It is just as necessary that we should take a sufficient amount of fluid as that we should not take too great a quantity of food. As a medical man, I frequently found an old lady come to see me and complain of certain troubles, and I would say to her: You are drinking too much tea perhaps. Oh, no, she would reply, I only just drink three little cupfuls—a small one at breakfast, another at noon and another at night. I could have told her that nature required that she should take about eight or ten cupfuls every day to carry off the refuse, but by putting the question the way I did, she would say she only took a small quantity and then wonder that she was not better. A great many take too much fluid at the wrong time or of the wrong kind. If they would take a good drink of hot or even cold water, for that matter they would find it do a great deal more good.

We should have an officer of the government whose duty it would be to spread information which would assist the people in guarding against disease.

After spending a lifetime in the practice of my profession, I am satisfied that far more than one half of the diseases and deaths before sixty years of age in this country can be prevented. The people must understand what the laws of health are and what the laws of nature are. They must be instructed in those laws. There is not an old man going around the country with a steam engine and thresher who will not tell you that when the machine stops, he must take away the fuel. But you will get any amount of farmers who, after working hard all their lives, come into town to take things easy. They bring their farmers' appetites with them, they eat too much, and the consequence is their average life in the town is only five years. If people understood the laws of health and would follow them out, that would be a great benefit to the country. They must be taught to understand that although they may break the laws of the land and avoid detection and punishment, there is no way of escaping the consequences if they break the laws of nature.

However, Mr. Speaker, as I know there are several gentlemen to follow me, and as I have taken more time than I intended, I shall now conclude and have great pleasure in seconding the motion. I trust that the government will see their way to support it and take steps to give it practical effect.

Mr. H. S. BELAND (Beauce). I must, in the first place, congratulate the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black) for having drawn the attention of the House to a subject of such vital importance. In previous years this question of improving the sanitary conditions in Canada has engaged the attention of the Canadian parliament, and on every occasion the sympathy and good will of the government has been cheerfully extended to the object in view. But the medical body of Canada, the humanitarian societies, such as the Canadian Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, and the people at large, I believe, will expect the government to show its sympathy this time in a more tangible manner. They will expect that this parliament will pause for a moment and consider the immense ravages and disastrous effects caused by contagious diseases and especially by that dread disease, tuberculosis.

They feel that this question is worthy of the closest attention of any legislative body in any civilized country of the world. They also feel that, as men invested with the care of government in a country, we cannot remain unconcerned about the beneficent discoveries of medical science and especially of that branch of medical science which is called hygiene. What is hygiene? It is the science and the art of preserving and perfecting health. The layman as well as the professional is invited to share in its knowledge and to partake of its benefits. It is neither abstract nor very difficult; it is within the reach of every man, even of those men whose studies have not borne upon medical science. If the hygiene movement were to begin in this country, and not only the government and this parliament, but also the rich, those favoured by fortune, were invited to take part in it, that movement, you may rely upon it, would spread and make its effects felt by all classes of the community. It would work wonderful results. If you invite the rich to partake in that movement, that movement will have a far-reaching and wholesome influence upon the relations between the rich and the poor, between the mighty and the weak, between the capitalist and the labourer; and nothing could be devised that would be more conducive to the maintenance of an equilibrium between the different elements of the social community.

Leaving aside these considerations, which are of a rather general character, I may say that the diseases we are supposed to prevent are the contagious diseases. Some of these spread very quickly, some will invade a district in a few months, in a few weeks, even in a few days. Such are measles, smallpox, scarlet fever, diphtheria and typhoid fever. The people are very much afraid of these diseases, though the diseases themselves are far from being as deadly as some others, which, for convenience of description, we will call slow-spreading diseases; and, with the possible exception of diphtheria, the percentage of death resulting from these diseases is very low. Does a case of scarlet fever, for instance, make its appearance in a town, the people are instantly alive to the importance of it. As they meet in stores or on the street, they talk of it; and every man in the town, whether rich or poor, will favour any action of the municipality that will help to confine the disease to the person affected. This is a most commendable spirit. But, turn your attention for a moment to these other diseases that we have called slow-spreading diseases. Here you find one of the most insidious, one of the most treacherous, one of the most deadly contagious diseases—tuberculosis. This disease is all the more dangerous, because it does not herald its coming, it does not reveal its presence, at least in its early stages. It allows its victim to wander about unnoticed, spreading everywhere germs, disease, poison—in the streets of a large city, in the street car, in the railway trains, in the places of reunion, such as churches, halls, schools and colleges. The people look indifferently upon the consumptive. They have a feeling of sympathy for the poor victim. And, the moment the victim of tuberculosis is removed from their presence, they believe that they are on safe ground and that they have escaped all danger. Yet, it is of daily occurrence, it is within the observation of every medical man in this country or anywhere else, that, so far from the removal of the consumptive meaning the removal of danger, we have instances of tuberculosis being contracted in a house two, three, four, five years after that house had been inhabited by a consumptive.

Now, what are the ravages of tuberculosis? Leave alone, for the time being, the consideration of those painful scenes of a long, protracted and incurable illness. Leave alone the sad spectacles of separation. Leave unconsidered the case of the mother bereft of her only support, her son; leave out of account the children robbed of their mother. Stop and consider only that 8,000 lives are lost annually to the commonwealth of Canada through this disease, and that 40,000 people are constantly suffering from tuberculosis in this country. And if the humanitarian aspect is not enough to arouse this government, or this parliament, let us take the more matter-of-fact view—the economic view for instance.

What is the estimated value of a citizen in good health? The economists agree in placing it at $1,000. If it be true that a citizen is worth $1,000—and we have no reason to doubt that this estimate of the economists is a correct one—then this country loses annually from tuberculosis alone (leaving aside the other contagious diseases which have been so ably referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Black) who moved this resolution), no less than $8,000,000. Add to that the loss through the weakened powers of these 40,000 people who have entered upon the fatal path of tuberculosis, and you will reach an enormous, an appalling total. Some have placed it as high as $16,000,000. Now, the question is, can we prevent this contamination. I say we can.

Although I do not desire to enter on any lengthy dissertation as to how best this disease can be prevented, let me say that tuberculosis is spread by sputum which being allowed to dry, permeates the atmosphere and floats around awaiting another victim who by respiration takes it into his lungs. If a patient is affected by tuberculosis and if he takes good care that the excretions from his lungs go only into a receiver; if he takes care that these excretions are destroyed before they are allowed to dry, there will be no danger of the disease spreading from him. Furthermore, if the man suffering from tuberculosis is a public speaker and if he refrains from the delivery of those forceful electoral speeches that might lead him to disseminate a few germs upon his hearers; if he has a mustache and takes good care of it, and last though not least if he abstains from kissing any other person he will practically confine the disease to himself. Now, these conditions may appear very severe on some people, but they are entirely compatible, I submit, with the enjoyment of life, and these precautions are necessary at all events in so far as public halls and places of assembly, churches, theatres, street cars, and railway cars, are concerned. It goes without saying that the best and most effective means of preventing the dissemination of tuberculosis is by the establishment of sanitoria in which, conducted as they would be on scientfic methods, the best means of prevention would be available. So much for the preventive features. The next question is: Is tuberculosis curable? My answer is in the affirmative. Tuberculosis is about the only contagious disease which if allowed to run its course will certainly bring death to its victim. That is a most serious thing but it becomes less appalling when we know that it is proven and admitted on all sides that 60 per cent of tuberculosis cases can be cured. How can the disease be cured? The treatment is very simple: Rest, absolute rest, pure air, and nutritious food. I submit, and in this I am borne out by every medical man, that this treatment will effect a cure in from 60 to 75 per cent of tuberculosis cases of recent origin. Serums also have been advocated and particularly that of Marmorek, and there is no doubt but that the administration of serum has had very beneficial results. But simple as the treatment may appear it cannot be availed of by the poorer classes. Pure air seems to be plentiful everywhere; anyone would think that pure air is available to all. It is not. It is not available to the poor family living in a crowded tenement in a large city. Pure air is available in the country to farmers who can breathe as much of it as they wish, but I think the medical men of this country will agree with me when I say that there is a prejudice among the people of the country districts against the outside air, and especially so in the case of persons suffering from lung trouble, for we find much reluctance on the part of our patients when we advise them to sleep eight months in the year with their windows wide open. Again, the best means to cure tuberculosis is the establishment of sanitoria all over the country where the poor victims—I mean the victims that are poor—can receive proper treatment and where they can be restored to health, to their families and to their country. The only consideration that could prevent the government establishing sanitoria in this country is the financial consideration. It is conceded on all sides that it is within the sphere of the provincial government to attend to matters of public health, but there is nothing in our constitution which prevents the federal government from joining with the provincial governments to establish sanitoria and to enforce rules and regulations. Now, comes the question: How can the money required for the establishment of these sanitoria be raised? We have said that 8,000 lives were annually sacrificed to the master disease, we have also stated that 40,000 Canadians were actually afflicted with tuberculosis; we have further advanced the opinion that if preventive measures are adopted that 40,000 can be reduced to 10,000, and retaining the proportion I may say that if 8,000 people die out of every 40,000 only 2,000 will die out of 10,000. And if we further assume that 60 per cent of the tuberculosis cases of recent origin are curable then you reduce the 2,000 to 800 and that will be the net loss to the country if proper means for prevention and cure are taken. I venture the statement that if these measures are adopted they will bring about the desired results. I will put aside the calculations of the economist, and I will be content for the purposes of this argument to compare the Canadian subject with the immigrant of the agricultural or domestic servant class. We know that such an immigrant is worth $5 and that being so can I not carry my argument to a logical conclusion by saying that the lives of 7,200 Canadians are worth to this country $36,000 annually? And, taking all these contagious diseases which have been ably referred to by the hon. gentleman from Hants the amount annually required for prevention and curative purposes would be $135,000. Now, I am certain I voice the sentiments of the Canadian Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis and other contagious diseases, when I say they would be ready to undertake to check the awful disaster caused by contagious diseases, namely to the 60 per cent I have mentioned with that amount of money.

I would also invite my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture to go into conference with his colleague the Minister of the Interior. They could have a chat over it and the Minister of Agriculture could say to the Minister of the Interior: You are looking for immigrants; what will you pay if I give you 7,200 solid Canadians next year? The Minister of the Interior would answer: I will give you $35,000. Well, the Minister of Agriculture could say: Give it to me and I will arrange that for you. To carry out successfully this policy I think that one thing is indispensable. It has been referred to by the mover and seconder of this resolution. It is the consolidation or concentration in one department, in one central bureau, of all branches connected with medical matters. What is the condition of affairs to-day? You have three or four departments with a medical branch. The Department of Agriculture sees to quarantine, the Department of the Interior supervises immigration, the Department of Marine and Fisheries overlooks the marine hospitals and the Department of Inland Revenue takes care of the food. If all these branches were concentrated in one department you would achieve two desirable ends. You would not require the appointment of one single man outside of the different staffs you have to-day. You have very good material. You would actually effect an economy and while doing more efficient work you would be able to gather information, to collect information, to distribute information frequently and profusely and correspondence would not be delayed as it is to-day. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that would be a desirable end. I cannot resume my seat without drawing the attention of parliament and of the government especially to what I consider is one of the most efficient measures for preventing the dissemination of contagious diseases and that is the periodical disinfection of passenger cars. As it is to-day tuberculos people are allowed to travel on the cars.

Mr. BLACK. It is the same with measles.

Mr. BELAND. And so on, as my hon. friend says, but I will confine myself to tuberculosis. Those people, either through carelessness or ignorance, will not hesitate sometimes to infect the floor of the car. What about the immigrants that we are carrying on our railway cars in the spring and summer months and who have with them their hand baggage? It is only reasonable to believe that this would be sufficient to contaminate the cars. I would ask the government to take up this matter with the railway companies. I am informed, in fact, I know that the process would be very inexpensive, as improved and perfected apparatus is available. Now, as many of my colleagues in this House intend to speak on this question I will bring my remarks to a close with an expression of hope that the remarks which have been and are going to be offered to the House this afternoon will fall into prepared and fertile minds and that they will bear fruit. I would not only appeal to this government to help this movement on but I would invite all the members of this House to undertake a campaign in sanitary matters in every county. I would invite the ministers of all the religious denominations of this country to thunder from the pulpit the new gospel of sanitation and I would also invite the public press, regardless of party, to join this movement. We may expect that this country which has led the rest of the nations in so many fields of human activity will, in regard to matters connected with public health, keep abreast of the most enlightened nations of the world.

Mr. A. N. WORTHINGTON (Sherbrooke). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to go further into the matter under discussion than to merely endorse the sentiments of the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black) as expressed in his admirable speech in the interest of public health and the scientific prevention of disease. This is not the first time that this matter has been before the House and I have no doubt that the government has in its possession sufficient facts, figures and data for the establishment of a bureau or department of public health or to enable it to take some action in that regard. I trust that the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the government will well consider the suggestions of the hon. member for Hants and the other speakers who followed him, and not only their suggestions but the suggestions of some 6,000 medical men, speaking through the medium of the Canadian Medical Association, and their various medical journals and publications for and in the interest of some six millions of people. In England there was a demand for a minister of public health, in the United States Congress has instituted a board of public health in connection with its marine hospitals, in our sister colonies, departments of public health exist and surely, with the advancement in the scientific prevention of disease, Canada should not be behindhand in a matter of such vast importance. This department would be consulted in all matters now under the jurisdiction of different departments. It would immensely simplify matters and its statistics would be of greater value and more readily accessible than a compilation of statistics from the provincial boards of health. The publication of information and of rules and regulations from such a department would have far greater weight with the profession and laity than such information and rules coming from other departments would have and such a department would not in any way interfere with the provincial bureaus. The hon. member for Hants has spoken of the contamination and pollution of rivers and waters and of our water supply in general. This, Mr. Speaker, is one of the greatest evils that confronts the medical profession and the public to-day. The hon. member for Hants gave a very excellent resume of the train of evils following the contamination of our water supply, such as diarrhœa, dysentery, enteric and many others. As illustrating what can be accomplished by sanitary precautions and what great evils can be produced by insanitary conditions I would give an instance taken from the statistics of the South African war. At one time in Bloemfontein there existed no less than 5,000 cases of enteric which it was very difficult for the army medical corps to contend with, having a train of disease in front and no communication in their rear; but strict attention to scientific principles and preventive methods arrested, checked and in time did away with the disease.

We have no greater example in Canada of what prevention can do than the checking of the ravages of tuberculosis that has already taken place ; but so far this has been done entirely by private and voluntary subscription and aid. I think it is now time that either federal or provincial action should be taken in this matter. I unite with the other speakers in urging the establishment of a national bureau of public health. It is time Canada was taking her place in a manner befitting her dignity in original reseach. A great deal of research is being done to-day by men of Canadian birth, such as Osler, but they are doing it abroad on account of adverse conditions which exist at home. I think it is time that an opportunity should be given to these men who have made a name for themselves and for Canada to do such work in the land of their birth and under the protection of the government of Canada.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE (Strathcona). Mr. Speaker, I would ask the indulgence of the House for a few minutes while I add my support to the motion which has been moved by my hon. friend for Hants (Mr. Black). It is not the intention in suggesting a Dominion bureau of health that it shall in any way interfere with the work that is now being done by the provincial boards of health, but rather that it should supplement and amplify the work of those boards. There is not to my mind any question of interference or of doubtful jurisdiction in this matter ; the very fact that the Department of Immigration, the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and the Department of Agriculture have had to undertake some work along this line is of itself evidence that the Dominion must do some work which the provinces cannot do. It is therefore our suggestion that these departments consolidate the work they are now doing under an advisory board to be known as the Dominion Bureau of Health.

The advances which have been made in medicine in the last few years have been so great that our present means for the prevention of disease is not adequate or modern. In the work that is being done by the various departments that have been mentioned, a certain amount of expert research and expert work is carried on ; but in the matter of exact diagnosis such as is required by the Immigration Department, I venture to say that the officers in charge of that department have not the material at hand to make an exact diagnosis. It is therefore the duty of this government to provide such machinery as is necessary in order that these departments which are now doing this work shall be more fully equipped. The work of this Dominion Bureau of Health would be, partly at least, educative. The value of its educative feature has no more striking example than the statements that have been made by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House of the advances that have been made in the prevention of tuberculosis. This is a disease that was looked upon with dread, shall I say superstition, in days gone by, and to-day its exact diagnosis, cause and mode of transmission are so accurately known, that already the public have a wholesome dread of it and are taking steps to prevent it.

What about other diseases ? What about the prevention of typhoid ? I will say that the prevention of typhoid is more necessary to public health than the prevention of tuberculosis, because in the treatment of typhoid fever if it is of a virulent type the medical man is practically helpless. The only method of safety for the public in typhoid fever is prevention. Therefore I claim that it is necessary that this government should take some steps to bring about a national method of prevention of one of the greatest destroyers of human life among the contagious diseases.

As to the question whether this is a proper subject to be handled by the federal government, I would point to the fact that the scientific knowledge on which we and all civilized countries have been able to proceed in the fight against disease, has been acquired and perfected under the guidance and protection of certain governments.

Pasteur's celebrated discovery was made and perfected under government protection and the work of the celebrated Koch in relation to tuberculosis was carried on in the same way.

The various modes of conveyance of typhoid fever have been very carefully stated by the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black) this afternoon. It is often a matter of very grave doubt as to how the germs are transmitted when an outbreak of typhoid occurs. This is particularly true in the more densely settled centres of population. In the west some years ago you might go to a village where the disease was practically unknown, and you would possibly find a single case coming into that village, but before long you would find nearly the whole village to a greater or less extent contaminated by it. Then you would begin to learn something about the contagion of typhoid. I have known a western town that had the good fortune to have a young medical man as the chief municipal officer to go to the extent of quarantining typhoid cases as we do in the cities with smallpox; taking those affected to a hospital, cremating their excreta and thus preventing what would under ordinary circumstances have become an epidemic of typhoid. I cite this instance to show what might be done towards preventing typhoid.

Another field of education would be the dissemination of common sense knowledge of the possibilities and limitations of medicines. We do not argue that we are going to teach the public the principles of medicine, but surely something should be done to prevent such recrudescences of superstition as Christian Science. There could be no greater danger in relation to the dissemination of infectious diseases than the idea held by Christian Scientists that there is no such thing as disease, and with the growth of Christian Science you will necessarily have an increased dissemination of contagious disease.

Another important field for educative work is in relation to the limitations of medicine. Imagine the enormous loss to this country caused by people reading trashy advertisements of patent medicines and following the advice given in them. Imagine reading in one of the leading journals as I did last week that Pink Pills will cure locomotor ataxia! Imagine that sort of thing being publicly stated! It is about as correct as to tell the public that sticking salve would restore an amputated limb. It is because of the gross ignorance of the public on a subject on which these advertisers profess to have knowledge that these false claims have any cause for being, and I say that, not a medical knowledge in particular, but a good common sense knowledge of the possibilities and limitations of medicine, if inculcated in certain pamphlets, would do a great deal of good along these lines.

There is another thing which is very important to my mind. There has been no movement along the lines of scientific medicine that has so astounded even the medical world as the principles of seram-therapy —in other words, the principle of immunity as seen in the development of anti-toxins. It is believed by the medical profession today that this will be the wonder-worker in the medical profession of the future. A common sense knowledge of what we mean by immunity would immediately eradicate all nonsensical objection to the injection of anti-toxin, or vaccination. You find people purporting to be well informed opposing vaccination, and you know they have not the first idea of what the principle underlying vaccination means. It is a grave thing to find a population growing up forming a medium of culture for such a disease as small-pox. Older countries have recognized this. In Scotland, and I believe also in England and Ireland also, every child before it is six months old must be vaccinated. That is the safeguard against a great distructive process that may go on if children are allowed to be unvaccinated until they arrive at a certain age.

Another line of education has been mentioned and elaborated with great exactitude and force by the hon. member for Hants; that is, the dissemination of literature in regard to the proper feeding of infants. That is one of the topics on which every medical man both in this House and in the country must feel the necessity of further education on the part of the people, thereby stopping to a great extent the immense amount of infant mortality that exists.

But there is a practical side to this question. We must have laboratories established for the cultivation of germs, the manufacture of anti-toxins and the various other modern products for the prevention and cure of disease. This cannot be done without some considerable expense, but I venture to say that there is no expense which this government could assume that would yield the same return as the establishment of a properly equipped laboratory, with the privilege of using it open to the medical men of the country. With such a laboratory the last court of appeal in medicine the immigration and quaratine officers who guard our shores could do their work with much greater efficiency than they can to-day. An exact diagnosis may determine between the injustice of excluding an immigrant and the importation of a very virulent disease into the country. Our main method in the prevention of disease is still quarantine or isolation. When people are informed of the facts concerning a certain disease and learn that it is dangerous, one would naturally suppose that they would be careful about coming into contact with it. That is true, but there is another side to the question. People afflicted with a contagious disease are not so careful about their neighbours being protected from it.

That is one point in which the public is absolutely careless. Some years ago, while on the house staff of the hospital for sick children in Toronto, I found time and again playthings and books which had been used by children who had died of contagious disease sent to that hospital for the little patients. Can you think of anything more far-reaching than that for disseminating among the children of such an institution the seeds of contagious disease by kind-hearted but ignorant people?

There is another matter which this department of public health must take cognizance of. We in the west find that the immigrants coming into that country, not from foreign countries alone, but frequently from the older provinces, arrive in a convalescent stage of disease. They will go among their friends in the west and will say nothing about having been afflicted with disease, and the local authorities have no knowledge of the matter. What is the result? These people go among their friends and among children who attend the schools, and in a short time an epidemic breaks out. The number of deaths from diphtheria and scarlet fever in our western country, due to causes of this kind, is absolutely appalling. We cannot blame the quarantine officers, because they have no check on people coming from the eastern provinces. If a corpse were being transported from one part of this country to another, every precaution would be taken to prevent it spreading contamination; but a living subject may disseminate disease widely without any precaution being taken. It may be said that this belongs to the field of the provincial officers. At any rate, it belongs to somebody, and it is the duty of parliament or somebody to see that such a condition of things should not be possible in this country. Consider such a case a little further. Consider the hundreds of people an infected person comes in contact with in travelling 2,000 miles to the west; and we have a most inefficient method of disinfection of railway cars. The car in which that person travels may continue to carry the germs of the disease, year in and year out, to thousands of people. It is said that on the transcontinental trains there is a good method of disinfection, but I claim that the disinfection is so only in name. It should be carried on under an efficient officer subject to the direction of the Dominion board of health which we are so anxious to have established.

I have taken up so much time of the House as I see is at my disposal, and I have only to say in conclusion that I hope the government has obtained sufficient facts today to cause it to act and form a Dominion board of health.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN (Inverness). This is too important a matter to be disposed of in a discussion of a couple of hours, and I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

At Six o'clock the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 6, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. GERVAIS presented the first report of the committee appointed to supervise the official report of the debates, as follows :—

Thursday, February 6, 1908.

The Select Standing Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of the House during the prsent session beg leave to present the following as their First Report. Your committee recommend that Mr. H. R. Holmden be appointed to prepare the analytical index to the English Revised Edition of the Debates of this session vice Mr. D. McGillicuddy who has discontinued to perform the work connected with the preparation of the said index and that the former be paid for his services the sum of $750 on the completion of the index in question.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Sgd.) HONORE GERVAIS, Chairman.

Mr. GERVAIS moved that the first report of the Select Standing Committee on Debates be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

Mr. LEWIS moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 93) to amend the Criminal Code and to punish homicide while hunting.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, the Bill which I desire to introduce to the House is in reference to homicide while hunting. It is a short Bill of one clause amending the Criminal Code as follows :—

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who injures by shooting any person although the person charged believed the object he was aiming at was a deer, moose or other animal.

I have discussed this matter with a number of criminal lawyers in the province of Ontario. The general impression seems to be that the mens rea or criminal intent of the person charged would interfere with any such legislation. Now, Sir, I stand here on behalf of the man who is injured, the man who is shot by a person who is negligent; compensation should also be awarded for injuries inflicted. The mens rea does not apply in a great many other cases. I contend that this House has authority to punish people who are negligent. The man who goes hunting is not obliged to kill a deer, moose or other animal; he is going there simply for his own pleasure. It is absolutely possible for him to prevent his injuring any human being. In the case of an unavoidable accident the facts are to be taken into consideration. By taking proper precaution he may avoid injuring a human being. It is not a very serious matter if the deer, or moose, or other wild animal escapes. The law that I ask this House to promulgate is not to punish but to prevent such accidents. There is no necessity of my bringing before this House a statement of the numbers of people who are shot from day to day and week to week by hunters. Here is the last case:

Mistook man for a deer.

Dauphin, Manitoba, January 16.—John Williams, aged 20, was shot by Ed. McCormick while going through the bush. McCormick took Williams for a deer and fired. The bullet passed through Williams' neck severing his jugular vein and he died almost instantly.

I wish the House to note that in all these cases the victim always dies. There is no person injured. It is a strange fatality that in every case the injured person dies. In the province of Ontario they have discussed the matter for some time and they have considered the advisability of making hunters wear red coats. How could such a law as that affect the person who is up in that country looking for mines and looking for land; how could it affect the habitant or the farmer or the lumberman. He cannot wear read coats. The enactment which I propose is simply a provision that people generally who are using firearms should take proper precautions and that they should be subjected to a penalty for negligence. This is no new provision of law for in the state of Michigan they have: 'An Act to punish the negligent or careless shooting of human beings by persons in pursuit of game.' And that law provides that a person who while in pursuit of game negligently or carelessly shoots and kills any human being shall be liable to imprisonment not exceeding ten years or a fine not exceeding $1,000. The state of Maine has a similar law. Now, as to criminal intent, we have already a law which provides that the master shall be punished if his servant sells adulterated food, and we have also a law which punishes an hotel keeper, even though he should be absent in England, if his clerk sells liquor illegally on his licensed premises. If a hunter should in contravention of the law kill a cow moose, or if he shoots a deer that is not over one year old, he is liable to punishment, and the newspapers have published particulars regarding the case of two poor men who have been hunted out of the country for shooting a cow moose by mistake. There is no criminal intent in a person who points a loaded or unloaded gun at another, still it is a crime. I trust that hon. gentlemen in this House who are of the legal profession will give consideration to this Bill, and if it be not accepted as drafted by me they will lend their talents to the framing of such a measure as will prevent such regrettable occurrences as have happened in the past.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

SESSIONAL PAPERS.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked:

1. How many returns or sessional papers have been presented to parliament in answer to motions for the same, since January 1, 1906?

2. How many of these returns have been taken out of the Office of Routine and Records, and the Journal Office, by members of this House since the above date, giving also the name of the member to whom delivered?

3. For what length of time were such returns retained by the members who obtained them?

4. How many of these returns had not been returned to the proper officer of the House of Commons on January 1, 1908?

5. In the case of those returned, how long were they out with the members?

6. How many of these returns are still in the possession of the members, and how long have they had them?

7. What steps, if any, are usually taken by the Clerk of Routine and Records and the Clerk of Current Sessional Papers to have outstanding returns retransferred to their possession?

8. What has been the average cost to the country of preparing these returns by the various departments interested, during the above period?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am informed that this question can best be answered by a motion for a return.

Question stands as a motion for a return.

BELLEVILLE HARBOUR.

Mr. PORTER asked:

1. What has been the total revenue of Belleville, Ontario, harbour, for the years 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906 and 1907?

2. What has been the expenditure for the years above-mentioned in that harbour (a) for salaries and to whom, (b) dredging in each year, (c) for building retaining walls along the river at entrance of harbour, and (d) to whom or what persons were such last-named sums paid?

3. Has the government advanced any money to the harbour commissioners of Belleville for improvements? If so, how much and when?

4. If any money has been advanced, what security has the government for repayment of the same?

5. How many tenders were received for building the retaining walls for improvement of Belleville harbour, who were the tenderers, what was the amount of each tender, and to whom was the contract awarded?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). As the information in answer to this question covers an extended period and relates to more than one department it will be necessary to bring it down in the form of a return.

Question stands as motion for a return.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM—DISTRICT OF QUEBEC.

Mr. PAQUET asked :

1. Does the government purpose establishing an experimental farm in the district of Quebec?

2. If so, when will it be established?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Parliament has authorized the government to establish experimental farms, and when the Department of Agriculture takes steps towards that end I trust the district of Quebec will be among the districts favourably considered.

THE MINT.

Mr. THOMPSON asked :

1. When will the Mint be making gold coins?

2. Will the gold coins when made be in decimal system?

3. What denominations will be made?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. If gold of sufficient purity can be obtained from existing smelters in Canada gold coins will be made within a short time, but it may be necessary to construct a refinery. If so, there will be some further delay.

2. Yes.

3. The denominations determined on are $2½, $5 and $10.

AMERICAN BANK NOTE COMPANY.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What is the date of the last agreement made between the Department of Finance, Post Office and Inland Revenue, and the American Bank Note Company, in reference to printing notes and stamps?

2. Was this agreement made upon call for public tenders?

3. What is the comparative scale of prices in this and the preceding agreement?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. On the 1st April, 1906, an agreement was made extending the agreement then existing for a period of five years from the 1st October, 1907.

2. Tenders were not invited. The class of work is one in which there is very little competition in Canada. The prices under the contract were, in March, 1906, certified to by Dr. S. E. Dawson, King's Printer, as being fair and reasonable.

3. Briefly, the changes were in the cost of notes for the Finance Department, reduced from $65.03 to $62 per thousand sheets of four notes, and in the cost of postage stamps for the Post Office Department, reduced from 10 cents to 9 cents per thousand stamps. In other respects the prices were as before.

The agreement and all papers connected with it were laid before parliament in the session of 1906.

MR. JUSTICE MAGEE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. How many suits were tried before Mr. Justice Magee in the year 1905, on which he has not yet delivered judgment?

2. What action has the government taken to see that decisions are rendered in cases tried as long ago as the year 1905?

3. If no action has been taken, what do they propose doing in the premises?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) :

1. The government has no information on this subject.

2 and 3. Judges are not amenable to governmental control in the matter of the time within which their decisions shall be pronounced.

TORONTO POSTMASTERSHIP.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). What steps have been taken to fill the vacancy in the office of postmaster at Toronto? The office has been vacant for several months and the public service demands that action should be taken by the government at once.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster). The general inspector of post offices, Mr. Ross, is filling the office for the present. He is an old and trusted officer of many years experience in post office work and there is no trouble about the office just now. The question of the appointment of a new postmaster is still under consideration.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. When is the appointment likely to be made ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Shortly.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the Postmaster General if he has received a report with reference to that vacancy from the Patronage Committee, and if it is satisfactory.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have not received any such report. We generally select the best man for the office in that department.

PATENT OR PROPRIETARY MEDICINES.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Can the Minister of Inland Revenue tell me when he will bring down the Bill with reference to patent or proprietary medicines which was presented to the House last year and which it was understood would be reintroduced this session. Has the Minister of Inland Revenue considered the subject very seriously ?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). The question of submitting such legislation is receiving the consideration of the department. We are hopeful that if the measure will be acceptable to all interests concerned and acceptable to the House, it may be passed this session. I cannot say anything more definite just now.

SUPPLY—DISPOSAL OF TIMBER LIMITS IN THE NORTHWEST.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding that the House go into Committee of Supply and the motion of Mr. Lake in amendment thereto.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Brandon). Mr. Speaker, the debate which we are resuming to-day on the motion of my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and the speeches which have been made in support of that motion constitute a very carefully planned attack upon the administration of the Department of the Interior during the period that I had the honour to have charge of it. And therefore, although I have no direct responsibility, no responsibility except that of having to the best of my judgment and ability directed the administration of the department while I was in charge of it, it has seemed to me that the House (including our friends on the other side) might not be unwilling to hear a few words from me on the subject. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition in his remarks the other evening—speaking after the Minister of the Interior had spoken—assumed that the Minister of the Interior had stated that the policy which was followed by the Conservative government in the years 1881, 1882, and 1883 was a justifiable policy, That inference was I think wholly unwarranted. What the Minister of the Interior, if I understood his argument correctly, and I think I did, said was that giving a small amount of timber free of charge for the purpose of getting the timber into the hands of manufacturers might indeed be a justifiable policy if it were not carried to excess. But I gathered nothing from his remarks which would in the slightest degree justify the idea that the excess to which it was carried by our friends on the other side of the House was in any degree justified. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition proceeded to say :

> Is it a continuation of the policy of the Conservative administration from 1881 to 1896, or is it an absolutely new policy brought into force by this Liberal government?

I propose now, Mr. Speaker, to devote myself for a few moments to elucidating the answer to that question. In doing so, it will be necessary to refer, which I shall do only very briefly, to the particular administration of 1881, 1882 and 1883 in reference to which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition asks that question. In the year 1881 the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was let, and the whole question of the great western country from Lake Superior to the Rocky Mountains was opened up, to be dealt with as might seem best to the administration of the day. The result of their consideration is to be found in what they did. It was expected at that time that the railway would be rapidly constructed, and applications were made to the government for privileges in connection with the timber lands which they controlled. It is true that the gentlemen who made those applications were not in any considerable degree lumbermen ; and it is true that they did not have any special knowledge of the lumber conditions which prevailed in that country. But, Sir, they had information which was much more valuable than any private information could be. In the records of the Department of Public Works and in the records of the Department of Railways and Canals there were elaborate and detailed explanations of the many surveys and explorations which had been made all through that great country at the expense of the government of Canada ; and this information was at the disposal of those gentlemen and was used by them to enable them to locate timber lands. But we are told, with a superior virtue which I am sure is touching, that, finding that those lands were of no value, they gave them up. I venture to say that any person who has acquired property and afterwards finds it to be of absolutely no value, and rather difficult to carry, will be glad to give it up. I imagine that any of the gentlemen who since this government came into power have acquired timber lands and have found them to be of no value, would be willing to emulate the virtue displayed by gentlemen on the other side of the House, and give them up. But why was it that those lands were relinquished ? At the time they were taken up the definite route of the Canadian Pacific Railway was not settled. It was expected that the railway would follow what was known as the old Mackenzie government route. If it had done so, large quantities of those timber lands would have been extremely valuable. But, as time went on, it became evident that the railway was not going there and that the northern country was going for many years to be left out in the cold, and so these gentlemen year by year allowed the timber lands to drop out of their hands, finding that they were of no value.

Contrast that act of administration with the policy which has been followed by this government. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has asked the House to make the contrast. We came into power in 1896. We undertook the duty of developing that western country as it had not been developed before, and we performed that duty. As settlement progressed, here and there, wherever it became necessary, we disposed of timber lands. During its eleven years of administration this government has disposed of 6,400 miles to satisfy the wants of a population of 900,000. What did our predecessors do ? In three years they disposed of 21,000 square miles of timber lands for the purpose of satisfying the wants of 100,000 settlers. What in those days became of my hon. friend from St. Antoine's (Mr. Ames) principle of preserving the unearned increment for the people? The people did not have the unearned increment in those days ; and I can say, as having had some experience as a resident of the Northwest since the year 1875, that there were other things in connection with their administration of the timber lands which were of a most objectionable character. I have defended in the police court unhappy settlers who were prosecuted by the timber rangers of our hon. friends opposite for taking firewood from the timber lands of the government—their policy was 21,000 square miles for the speculators and the police court for the settlers. If the speculators did not gather in the proceeds of the 21,000 square miles, whose fault was it ? Was it for any want of intention on their part ? Was it because the government did not connive with and assist the holders of those lands to the best of their ability ? Not a bit of it. It was due solely to the fact that the settlement policy was an entire failure, and there was no market for lumber and very little market for anything else. That is the answer which I have to make to my hon. friend when he asks whether our policy was the policy that was followed in 1881.

Now, let me address myself to the criticisms which have been made against the policy which was followed during the time I was in office. We have been treated by our hon. friends opposite to long lists containing the names of people who purchased timber berths, the areas of the berths they acquired, the names of the people who tendered in competition with them, we have been treated to discussions as to whether the immediate people who tendered were principals, brokers or agents, and as to who were the stockholders in the companies which tendered. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition, I am bound to say to his credit, has not followed that line of argument. I can conceive of no application that that line of argument has to the question under discussion, as to the policy of the government in reference to these timber lands. It may possibly answer as a somewhat low order of campaign literature, when the time comes for taking the verdict of the electors. The reading of these lists, and the fictitious value placed on these timber berths, might possibly excite the envy or cupidity of those who are addressed ; but in a reasonable discussion of the timber policy of this government, I submit that they have no application whatever.

What is the duty of the government in reference to the disposition of property such as timber lands ? First of all, there is undoubtedly a responsibility resting on the officers of the department to see that in the main, to a considerable extent at least, the lands shall go into the hands of lumbermen who will probably be able to operate them efficiently. We have the admission on the other side of the House that probably two-thirds of the timber lands which we have leased have gone into the hands of actual operators ; so that that duty of the government has been reasonably well covered. Then, it is the duty of the government to provide by proper regulations that they shall control those lands in such a way as to be able to compel them to be operated in the interest of the settlers. That has been provided for both by the regulations of the former government and by our regulations.

And then it is their duty to put them up to public competition to see that notices are given, that tenders are called for, and that the limits are given to the highest bidder. That, it seems to me, is the duty of the government. What possible grounds can there be for bringing into a discussion of this kind the question as to discriminating between one tenderer and another? Imagine, for an instance, a government undertaking to do anything of the kind. It will be admitted at once that no officer of the department could be permitted to do that and that no minister would undertake to exercise such a responsibility. Suppose the case of three or four tenders for a limit. The minister takes them to council, the council takes into solemn consideration the question of several tenders. They call each tenderer before them in turn and interrogate them. They send for one, who is a lawyer, and ask him who his clients are, whether they are lumbermen, how much lumber they own in other places, what is their financial standing. Another tenderer happens to be a joint stock company, and they send for its representative and ask who are the shareholders and so on. Another tenderer, a lumberman, comes up and they question him about his financial circumstances. Then they sit down, and after careful consideration they decide not to give the limit to the highest tenderer but to somebody else. It is only necessary to suggest such a process being gone through to condemn it for utter and entire absurdity. All the government can do is call for tenders, and give the limit to the highest tenderer. Every citizen has a perfect right to tender, and every man who tenders has the right to have his tender accepted if it be the highest. So far as I am concerned, I entirely repudiate any responsibility whatever as to who the tenderer was, or who was known to own the limits after they have been sold by public competition.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SIFTON. There is another thing I would call attention to. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, and his supporters, have declared that our whole system of selling these limits has been vicious and sinister and suspicious. Well, if there is one thing every member of this House would be clear on, after listening to this debate, if he had to decide any thing, it would be this, namely, that the system which has been condemned in such unmeasured terms by our hon. friends opposite, which has been described in every detail as wrong and vicious and sinister, certainly must be the same creature of this government and must have been originated by them. They come here, they attack us most unmercifully, and call on the government to justify the manner in which these timber limits have been disposed of, and the only conclusion any one could come to would be that this system was originated by the present government. But when we come to inquire into the subject, we find that that is an entire mistake, and therefore it behooves me, for a moment or two, to indicate just how this system of selling timber limits came into effect. When in 1881, 1882, 1883 and 1884 the system then in vogue was criticised year after year by the then opposition in this House, it was decided by the late government that another system should be adopted. Consequently in 1889, the hon. gentlemen who then composed the government adopted a system of regulations for the disposal of timber. That system was provided for by an order in council, a copy of which I hold in my hand. It went into force the 17th of September, 1889, and was the result of continued discussions in parliament from year to year. It was adopted as the result of those discussions and was supposed to be entirely satisfactory to both sides of the House. The evidence, I claim, is that it was satisfactory to both sides. It was satisfactory to the gentlemen who then sat on the treasury benches and I believe to those who sat on the other side because, from the time it was adopted until the Conservative government went out of office, there is no record of any serious complaint having been made. So that we have a system adopted in 1889 for the sale and disposal of timber limits and carried on until 1896. What was that system ? Under it, it was not the practice for the government to offer timber lands for sale unless some application was made for them. It was the custom of the officers of the timber and mines branch to receive applications for timber lands. When anybody wished to have a timber limit put up for sale, he made application to the timber and mines branch, then the officers of that branch issued the notices and advertisements after seeing whether the land was available and open to be sold by the government. Tenders were advertised for, and after the tenders were received they were opened on the day fixed and the limit given to the highest bidder. That was the plan adopted under the regulations of 1889, and it was carried on from 1889 to 1895 without complaint having ever been made by the opposition then in parliament, so far as I know. It was carried on when I took office. I found the timber and mines branch in charge of officers appointed by my hon. friends opposite. The chief clerk was Mr. Ryley, an officer well known as one of the most competent and capable officers the Canadian government ever had. What did I do ? I simply let that system go on as before. I made no change whatever. Never during the whole time I was in the Department of the Interior did I change by one iota the modus operandi of selling the timber lands or the regulations for selling them. The system was the same, the practice was the same, the officers who carried it out were the same. From 1889 to 1896 and from 1896 to 1905, the period during which these complaints were made, the practice was precisely the same in every respect, and when my hon. friends opposite complain of the system they complain of the system they inaugurated themselves and which we carried on in the same way. If there is any thing that has to be explained, they are the men to explain how and why this system was continued.

Some questions have been raised about the opening of tenders. All I have to say is that while I was in the department I never heard a question raised or a suspicion discussed in this connection. It naturally fell to the commissioner of Dominion lands, who is at the head of that branch, to supervise the opening of tenders. If a complaint of any kind had ever been made, if any suggestion had ever been made to me in connection with that subject, not for the purpose of protecting the tenderers but for the purpose of protecting the department and the commissioner. I would have directed a change to be made, but no such suggestion was ever made to me and I never heard of any until I retired from office.

It has been said that the time I gave was too short, and the changes have been rung on this point day in and day out, and the fact that, in connection with this or that limit, the time was so many weeks. and was not so many weeks more, is held up before this House as proof positive that the whole system of selling timber limits under this government is something absolutely too rotten to be described. Now, what are the facts ? One fact is that, if the time was too short, I did not fix it. The same time was given and the same practice followed as under regulations which hon. gentlemen opposite themselves, when in power, had inaugurated; and, if the time was wrong, they are the men who are to blame. They instructed the officers, they established the precedents. The officers who were there when I came into office were simply proceeding upon the practice which had obtained before I had anything to do with the matter. I took office, assuming the charge of an immense department. Upon me developed not only the administrative duties of that department, but the duties of advising the government practically upon all the complicated questions that arose in the development of the northwest. And I think I can say to the House, and with every assurance that the House would consider it reasonable, that, when I found a branch of the department established by hon. gentlemen opposite themselves, in charge of competent men, whose work had been carried on without complaint from either side of the House, I was justified in allowing it to go on as I found it, assuming that it was going on as it ought to do.

Mr. TAYLOR. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) a question?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why were not the tenders called for by Mr. Ryley, who was in charge of the department, addressed to him as formerly?

Mr. SIFTON. They were not adressed to Mr. Ryley, but to the department. I want to make this point absolutely clear, because attempts have been made to show that the very fact that notices were so short is in itself an indicator that there was something wrong about the system, or, at least, that there was something wrong in intention, and that notices were deliberately made too short to allow the people to have a proper opportunity to tender. Therefore, I have had a number of cases of sales made from 1889 to 1896, taken from the records. These are taken absolutely at random, without any attempt at selection as to long notice or short notice, I would like to give these cases to show exactly what the practice was when our hon. friends opposite were in power, and when they were acting under regulations which had been adopted after full discussion in parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the hon. member (Mr. Sifton) a question? Would he read the situation of the berth in each case, and the area out of which it was selected?

Mr. SIFTON. I cannot give the area out of which it is selected, because it is not described here, I give the information I have.

My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) can get that information if he wants it.

The following are the cases to which I have just referred:

Now, I have not given the particulars for the purpose of criticising the method under which these gentlemen carried on these timber limit sales, I have simply given them for the purpose of proving my assertion that the method of carrying on these things was absolutely the same from 1889 to 1896 as it was subsequently, and that no sinister inference is to be drawn from the length of time given for putting in tenders. If the time was too short between 1896 and 1905, the time was too short between 1889 and 1896. No rule can be applied to one that does not apply as well to the others. If the time was too short, why did not the lumbermen of Canada, on whose behalf my hon. friends in their speeches are making many pleas, complain ? I was there in the department year after year but the lumbermen of Canada made no representation to me on the subject. The only letter I ever received on the subject came from a gentleman in Prince Albert who explained that he had made certain representations against the sale of limits by the department but said he thought it was in the public interest that these limits should be sold. I have inquired since leaving the department and the only record I find is of a letter from a gentleman in St. Paul who wrote to the department, the letter arriving a few days before tenders were opened, asking for an extension of time. That letter was never brought to my attention nor were any letters from the lumbermen in this connection ; no lumberman said anything to me. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been sitting in parliament from 1896 to 1905, officered by ex-members of the government, by men who had been selling this timber under the same regulations year after year and yet they never said a word about the method in which these regulations were being carried out. They are the men to make any explanations and not myself. The rule was altered in no single particular during the time I was in office, either by my instructions or otherwise.

My hon friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) thinks we ought to have an inquiry for certain specific reasons which he gives. He says that we ought to have an inquiry because the lands were sold without valuation. They were sold without valuation from 1889 to 1896, and they were sold without valuation from 1896 to 1905. There are no facts in dispute, the fact is admitted, it is known. What is the committee to inquire about ? Will the committee ascertain any further facts in connection with that than are now before the House.

My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) says: Give us a committee of inquiry because there was no upset price. There could not be an upset price or a reserve bid if there was no valuation. The facts are known ; my hon. friend is in a position to make his argument and call for the condemnation of the government. If the people will condemn them after hearing his argument and ours well and good, but there is no possible ground for a committee, because there is nothing to inquire into.

My hon. friend says he wants a committee of inquiry because there was no sufficient publication of the notice. He has examined the particulars of the sales and he says that the average time we gave by the publication of the notice for the examination of the limits was seven weeks. I have read particulars indicating the time which they gave. Does that indicate that there was any ground for a committee of inquiry to ascertain why any more effective public notice was not given than in former times? They know what the notice was, the House knows, the papers are all on the table ; there is absolutely nothing in the world for a committee to inquire into.

My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) says there should be a committee because the lands were put up before the demands of the population required it. We know what the population was, what it is, and what lands were sold; and what in the name of common sense would a committee add to our information on the subject? It is a matter for the House to decide whether they will condemn the government in that respect or not; it is not a question for the consideration of a special committee of inquiry.

My hon friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) says there should be a committee of inquiry because there were certain changes in the regulations. I have dealt with the question of these changes in the House before, but, inasmuch as the question comes up perennially, I presume I had better deal with it again. My hon. friend puts forward as the changes in the regulations which call for a committee of inquiry two particular changes which were made during the time of my administration ; in the first place he asserts that by an order in council dated April 14, 1903, a change was made in the regulations which prevented the government thereafter from raising the dues as as against lumbermen cutting upon timber limits sold by the government. I have stated in this House before and I state now most emphatically and most clearly that no such change was made in the regulations and that the change that was made had no such effect as my hon. friend says. A clause was substituted for section 3 of the regulations as they stood on the 14th day of April, 1903. I can make the matter absolutely clear, at least to my legal friends, in a moment or two. Section 3, as it stood in the regulations of 1898, provided for the renewal of the licenses.

Subject to such revision of the annual rental and royalty to be paid therefor as may be fixed by the Governor in Council.

When that came before me, at the time I was making this other change which I shall discuss in a few moments, it occurred to me that the exception made in the latter part of the clause in favour of the regulation affecting the royalty and the rental had the effect, by implication, of preventing the government from making any other regulation of any kind. Every lawyer in the House will understand what I mean when I refer to the well known principle of law that if you make a single exception in a document you thereby, by implication, exclude everything else; and this section in the clause appeared to me to throw a doubt upon the power of the government to make regulations in other respects, and I said to the clerk: You had better throw that out because our power to make regulations on all matters of whatever nature under the Act is clear and undoubted and the only effect of that exception is to throw a doubt on the power of the government to make regulations in other respects. I have no doubt that would be the effect placed on the words by any court to which they might be referred. There was no intention to take from the government the power to raise the dues and I assert positively that in my judgment no such action was taken by the change to which my hon. friend has referred. It was discussed in this House and two years ago I stated the opinion I now state. But inasmuch as the question had been raised, the Minister of the Interior (Mr Oliver) proceeded to make a change which clearly set forth that the right to make regulations from time to time was reserved to the government.

My hon. friend refers to another change as having been made in the regulations and as indicating that there was a desire on the part of the government to do something which would add to the value of the limits in the hands of the holders; and that by reason of the action taken by the government in this respect, their administration should be the subject of a stringent inquiry. I have explained before the nature of the change and why it was made. I was perfectly clear upon the soundness of the policy of making the change when I recommended it, and I am quite as clear in my own mind now as I was then. Under the regulations as they stood, they having been carried on from 1889, there was a clause which was perfectly plain to everybody providing for the renewal of licenses from year to year. That was optional, as a matter of grace, on the part of the government. You have the same practice in Ontario; I believe you have the same practice in Quebec; you have the same practice in British Columbia; and, in regard to mining locations, you have practically the same practice in many cases where mining leases are in effect. At a certain period in the development of the Northwest we had a number of American firms coming in for the purpose of investing in timber limits and establishing lumber industries. The solicitor of one of these firms—the Red Deer Lumber Company—came to me and said: We are in a difficulty on account of the question of title to the limits, and I said: What is the difficulty? He said: Our people do not understand this clause, in which it says that the renewal of the right to cut is a matter that is optional on the part of the government. I said: Do you know it is the same in Ontario, and he said: Yes; but we have to make our financial arrangements in St. Paul and Minneapolis, and if it is true that it is the intention of the government to renew the right to cut from year to year, provided we comply with the regulations, why should not the government say so in the regulations? I considered it, and I came to the conclusion that there was no objection to this being so stated in the regulations, and the regulations were amended accordingly. Substantially the effect of stating that in the regulations is nothing whatever; it makes no difference whatever in the carrying out of the regulations, because everybody knows that when a man buys timber limits, whether he does it under the Dominion regulations, under the Ontario regulations or under the Quebec regulations, if he complies with the regulations from year to year, he is entitled to get a renewal. On what other principle would a man pay $500,000 for a timber limit? We find that half a million dollars or a million dollars is paid in the province of Ontario for a timber limit. Is it suggested that under these regulations, at the end of twelve months, that a man has no rights? Of course, he has rights. It is perfectly well understood that so long as he complies with the regulations he is entitled to get a renewal from year to year. In Ontario and Quebec the custom has been so sanctified by time that nobody raises the least question as to the fact, and the effect of this provision in our regulations does not alter the carrying out of the practice in any respect whatever. But if it did give the limit holder more secure tenure than it did before, even then it would be sound policy. It is not sound policy to put a man in a spruce bush to cut the timber with no interest in preserving that timber, but whose interest is to cut it as quickly as possible. It is sound policy to provide that a man who is operating that spruce bush shall have the greatest possible interest in cutting it providently and preserving the forest from destruction by fire. No better and no sounder policy could be adopted in connection with our spruce timber in the Northwest than to give a limit holder the strongest possible interest in carrying on provident operation of the limit and to protect the forest from fire.

The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) seemed to object to an advertisement that was issued with respect to one of the timber limits which was sold some years ago. In criticising it he said:

Further on, in order to clinch the matter and make sure that nobody could possibly examine the limits in time, this last paragraph is added: 'No tender by telegraph will be entertained.'

And hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, thinking that that was such conclusive evidence of incapacity or fraud that it needed no argument, burst into derisive laughter when the hon. gentleman read that clause. Well, it will be interesting to find out where that provision came from. As a matter of fact, it will be interesting to know that our hon. friends on the other side of the House are responsible for that provision. In the first section of the regulations, which were adopted on the 17th September, 1889, we find this expression used:

No tender by telegraph will be accepted.

I commend that to the hon. member for Argenteuil as an indication of the fact that sometimes all is not gold that glitters.

Now, a word or two in regard to the estimates which have been placed upon the value of limits by my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames). I shall not attempt to follow the many statements that have been made, but in regard to a few of the statements, they are so misleading, they leave such an entirely false impression of the facts of the case upon the minds of the public and of the House, if they are not dealt with, that it seems to me to be necessary to deal with them at least briefly. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, makes use of this expression. Referring to a limit on Cormorant lake, No. 1178, he speaks of a report, accompanied by some photographs, and he says that superior timber grows upon that lake and that the quality is excellent. He adds:

It will cut by actual measurement from 6,000,000 to 7,000,000 feet to the mile.

Mr. AMES. That was incorrect reporting. I corrected it next day, sent a copy to the Liberal whip, and said that if any one wished to speak on that side of the House I desired him to know that that statement was incorrectly reported. My words were 'in some places,' and I can prove that.

Mr. SIFTON. Well, if my hon. friend wishes to have it corrected and corrects it himself, it is not necessary for me to correct it. The statement that a spruce timber limit in Manitoba or the Northwest will cut six or seven million feet to the mile would be a most preposterous statement for any person to make. You might find a few square miles or a square mile in the course of thirty or forty that would cut 2,000,000 or 2,500,000 feet. Some men say, I do not know if they are believed, that they have found limits which, in the course of two or three or four miles, they might cut as high as 4,000,000 feet to the mile, but to say that anywhere in Manitoba or the Northwest Territories in a spruce bush of forty or fifty miles you can cut anything like 2,500,000 to 4,000,000 feet to the mile is saying something that everybody in that part of the country knows to be absolutely incorrect. If the hon. gentleman will look at a report printed some three or four years ago from the chief of the Forestry branch of the Department of the Interior he will see that this gentleman estimated the quantity of timber upon the merchantable areas in Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and British Columbia at an average of 1,280,000 feet to the square mile, and that included the enormous forest of the railway belt of British Columbia, where, of course, the amount per square mile is enormously greater—twenty or thirty or forty times greater—than it is in the spruce bush of the Northwest. Any lumberman buying spruce limits in what we generally call the Northwest, taking one mile with another, if he gets a million feet to the mile, thinks he is doing fairly well.

Hon. gentlemen talk a good deal about prices and they would create the impression by the remarks that they make that the limits that are sold in the Northwest are worth phenomenal prices. As a matter of fact they have no such value at all as is talked about. There have been very few sales indeed of timber limits in the Northwest. An American concern went in and bought out a milling proposition at Prince Albert and the Red Deer Lumber Company established large mills and bought a few limits in the northern part of Manitoba, but they are about the only sales I know of having taken place. Generally speaking the men who have got the limits from the government of Canada have the limits yet, and there have been practically no speculative sales at all. Why? We know that American capitalists during the last three or four years have gone from Lake Superior clean through to the Pacific ocean with any amount of financial resources at their back looking for investment. They have bought city property, they have bought farm lands, they have bought timber limits in British Columbia, but they have not bought timber limits in the Northwest Territories, showing conclusively that these limits have no such speculative value as that which is sought to be attached to them. If you go through the list you will find hardly a sale at all (here and there one), but there are no speculative sales as an indication that they have any remarkable speculative value. And Mr. Speaker, I want to say this, that if any of the large buyers of timber limits from this government, any of the men whose names figure in this list as buyers on any considerable scale of timber limits from this government had sat down in a confortable office in the city of Winnipeg and if they had bought property in the city of Winnipeg with their money or if they had bought farm lands in Manitoba or the Northwest Territories, in each and every case they would have been far better off than they are at the present time. Investment in timber limits has not been a gilt-edged investment. While property all through the Northwest has appreciated, the actual fact of the matter is that the timber property in which these men have invested their money has probably appreciated less than any other class of property. It is largely because the supply is so great. I can assure my hon. friend from St. Antoine that the supply is not nearly run out yet. There is a considerable amount of timber yet in the west; there is an enormous supply coming from the south of the line, the greater portion of which comes in free of duty. There is an absolutely illimitable supply in British Columbia and every one knows that at the present time timber limits are a drug on the market in British Columbia. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) wishes to invest he could go on the street in Ottawa and buy magnificent timber limits in British Columbia for 10 and 12 cents a thousand feet, the finest timber that stands outdoors. And yet the hon. gentleman comes here and he wants this House to judge the government on the assumption that spruce limits in inaccessible places in the Northwest Territories are to be valued at $2 or $3 per thousand feet standing when you can buy the finest timber in the world, accessible to a railway, favourably situated, for 10 or 12 cents a thousand any time you want to go out on the street and do so. That is an excellent reason, Mr. Speaker, why these timber limits have no speculative value at the present time.

Then we have a comparison made between our policy with regard to the Northwest timber limits and the policy that has has been followed in different provinces of the Dominion with regard to their timber. I shall not enter into a lengthy discussion of that question; it is a question upon which it might be difficult to arrive at any very definite conclusion, but we know that the province of Quebec sells its timber right straight along and we know that the province of Ontario sells its timber right straight along. The suggestion that this timber is only sold according to necessity would be absolutely incompatible with the facts, for the timber is sold constantly, and it is sold although there is no immediate necessity for it. We have not followed that policy in the Northwest; we have followed the policy of selling a sufficient number of limits, as was well set forth by the Minister of the Interior, to supply the men who find it desirable to go into the business with a sufficient extent of limits to justify them in making the investments that are necessary to carry on a lumber business. If you are going to have a large lumber industry established, say at Edmonton or Prince Albert, what is necessary to be done? The government is not going to establish that business; the government has to bring about conditions by which some person with the necessary capital who feels disposed to enter into that class of business will find it to his advantage to do so. If you are going to establish a large lumbering business it means you have to invest $150,000, $200,000, $250,000 or $300,000 in a milling plant and in improvements to rivers and roads and all that sort of thing. Now, we all know perfectly well that in the eastern provinces no person will establish that kind of a business and make an investment of that sort unless he has timber limits in advance, owned and absolutely under his control, good to keep his mill occupied for 20 or 25 years. Under any other circumstances a man in this part of the country would be considered to be doing an act of madness if he made an immense investment of that kind without sufficient precaution in the way of limit supply: It is the same in the Northwest, and unless the government permits these limits to get into the hands of private holders so that they can be collected, in the hands of private persons who are prepared to make this investment to carry on the business, it is absolutely impossible that the business can be developed. The Minister of the Interior referred to the fact that the supply of lumber has increased from 34,000,000 feet per annum in 1896 to 128,000,000 feet per annum in 1907. I expect that the production of lumber in the Northwest from the domestic supply will increase from the 128,000,000 feet of last year to 400,000,000 or 500,000,000 feet in the course of the next eight or ten years. But if that is to be done, how is it to be done? It cannot be done if the government keep the limits in its own hands and do not allow people to have an opportunity of acquiring property that justifies the investment. And when that increase takes place as it will take place, it will be upon these limits that we have sold that the lumber will be cut that will supply the people of the Northwest.

I wish to say a word about the question of price. We have been criticised in that respect, and I wish upon that subject to make a comparison which will take but one moment. We cannot, of course, compare the price that we get for the spruce limits of the Northwest Territories with the price obtained for white pine in Ontario or the choice limits of British Columbia. But we can compare the prices which are received by the government of Canada for such timber as we have in the Northwest with the prices that are received by the government of Quebec where they have a spruce country and where much of the timber is of a very similar character. Now, it has been shown that in the last eleven years we sold 6,400 square miles and that the average price received for it was $81 per square mile. I find from an official statement made by the Hon. Mr. Gouin, Premier of Quebec, at Chateauguay in the month of August, 1907, that from 1888 to 1905, a period of 16 years, the province of Quebec sold 26,500 square miles of timber and that the average price was $81.16 per square mile, or the same price within a few cents of the price we procured for the limits sold in the Northwest, many of which are in most inaccessible places and of very doubtful value. I think, therefore, we may say that the prices we have obtained will compare favourably with the prices which have been obtained elsewhere and we cannot, therefore, be accused of having sold the timber of the country at a sacrifice.

There is a serious question which must be dealt with in connection with this discussion, and it is a question which I desire to address a few remarks to. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames), and other gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, have endeavoured to create the impression that we have practically sold the whole of the lands which are covered with timber in the Northwest country, or, that we have seriously depleted the timber supply of the people of that country. My hon. friend from St. Antoine went to Winnipeg and the Northwest, and he concluded that the reserve timber supply of the city of Winnipeg was to be found on Cedar lake, Cormorant lake and Moose lake. Well, if my hon. friend could not see any other sources of supply in the neighbourhood of Winnipeg than existed in those three little limits, I can hardly think that he made excellent use of his opportunities for observation. One hundred and twenty-five miles from the city of Winnipeg, at the mouth of Rainy river, is the largest sawmill in Canada, owned by the Rainy River Lumber Company. It cuts comfortably 75,000,000 feet in the year, or perhaps more, and has limits on both sides of Rainy river which will satisfy it, cutting at that rate, for the next thirty years. There is the Rat Portage Lumber Company, which has a large mill, cutting 20,000,000 or 25,000,000 feet a year, and which has extensive limits. The Bacchus Brooks Lumber Company of Minneapolis or St. Paul, has lately erected a large mill at Rat Portage, having bought out the Keewatin Lumber Company, which is capable of cutting, I suppose, from 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 feet a year, and I believe has limits which will keep it cutting at that rate for twenty or twenty-five years. In the three limits to which my hon. friend from St. Antoine refers there cannot possibly be more than 200,000,000 or 300,000,000 feet of lumber, and the three mills which I have mentioned would cut the whole of it in three years. These are the limits my hon. friend shed tears over because they were sold, and the supply of the Winnipeg district had thus been for ever depleted. The Grand Trunk Pacific is going through a magnificent lumber country which as yet has hardly been touched by the foot of man, and my hon. friend may rest assured that neither he nor I nor our children will ever see any lack of supply of lumber for the Winnipeg district.

Now, have we, in selling 6,500 miles of timber lands, sold more than we ought to have sold ? Have we been improvident or extravagant ? Have we depleted the lumber supply of the Northwest ? That is a serious question for this House to consider, and I want it understood, without regard to party, that I am responsible for what has been done, and I accept the responsibility. I ask the members of the House, in judging whether that responsibility has been well or ill carried out, to consider just what the facts are. I have told you in a general way about the lumber supply in the neighbourhood of the city of Winnipeg; but I am going to give you a few particulars, and in doing that it is necessary for me to give the authority from which I speak. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior referred to it briefly the other night, but it is necessary, I think, for me to go into it in more detail. In the report of the superintendent of forestry for the year 1903 we find the following estimate of the lumber of the west:

> It will be seen from the census of 1891 that an estimate is made of the area of forests and woodlands for each of the provinces and also for the territories. That of Manitoba and the territories is placed at 722,578 square miles. Add to this 20,000 square miles of Dominion territory in the railway belt in British Columbia, and we have 742,578 square miles as the total on Dominion lands. Probably about one-fifth of this contains merchantable timber, or say 150,000 square miles, or 96,000,000 acres. After thus reducing the area, and remembering that in addition to the timber suitable for lumber, a large part of it is covered with spruce valuable for pulpwood, it can scarcely be considered an extravagant estimate to place the merchantile timber, including pulpwood, at 2,000 feet board measure per acre, or in all 192,000,000,000 feet. We have thus arrived at a very rough approximation of the quantity of timber now fit for use on the lands owned and controlled by the Dominion.

Now, let us take the figures here given. The forest lands in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories are 722,578 square miles ; in the British Columbia railway belt, 20,000 square miles ; total, 742,578 square miles. This is the area of the forest lands on Dominion territory. Total area bearing merchantable timber in Manitoba, Northwest provinces and British Columbia, 15,000 square miles, averaging 1,280,000 feet to the mile; deduct for the railway belt in British Columbia, 20,000 square miles; leaving 130,000 square miles of mer-chantable timber in Manitoba and the northwestern provinces. Sold from 1896 to 1907, 6,400 square miles. Remaining unsold bearing merchantable timber, 123,600 square miles. Sold in a period of eleven years, 6,400 square miles. To sell what is remaining unsold would take twenty such periods, or 220 years. Meantime I commend this to my hon. friend from St. Antoine for his comfort, the fact that we have in addition 592,000 square miles of forest area, largely spruce, growing, which can be cut once every twenty years if it is kept from being burnt up. The total annual growth is estimated by Mr. Stewart at 13,440,000,000 feet. If half of that quantity grows on the above 592,000 square miles, which would be a small proportion, there would be an annual growth, outside of the present merchantable area of 6,720,000,000 feet.

I want to add only a word or two in regard to the general question, as to the care of our forests and as to what has been done in that respect. I do not often agree with my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), but travelling on a train a little while ago, I picked up a copy of a paper, and, reading the parliamentary report, I saw that my hon. friend had addressed a few words to the House on the necessity of conserving our forest supply. I do not think anybody could state the case better than my hon. friend did, and I fully agree with everything that he said. There is nothing that is more important in the Dominion of Canada to-day than to properly conserve the forests of the west. The prosperity of Canada depends upon the continued fertility of our western provinces; every sensible man who gives consideration to the question knows that.

Every sensible man, who gives consideration to the question, knows that the fertility of those western provinces, their capacity to raise agricultural products, cannot continue unless the forest territory is properly preserved. I did not, during my term of office, do as much as I would like to do, but I did something. I had the honour of inaugurating a policy—it was the first, I think, upon this American continent—under which, under the direct supervision of the government, a systematic custom of tree planting was established upon the farms of the west. I could read to you, if it were necessary, the report from the forestry bureau which shows that, under that little system which I established, in connection with the Department of the Interior, of tree planting, more than nine million trees have been already planted on the farms of the western provinces.

My hon. friends opposite are not free from blame in respect to the adoption of that policy. When we came to parliament and asked for a miserable little appropriation of $15,000 or $20,000 a year for the purpose of establishing that system, my hon. friends opposite were just as denunciatory as they are in regard to the question now before the House. Day in and day out, week after week, they said it was for the purpose of carrying on some nefarious political scheme, that it was for the purpose of providing political parasites with office; but I venture to say now that they are not proud of the position they then took and are prepared to admit that the work done by thoroughly trained scientific officers in establishing that system of tree planting in the west is one which future generations will appreciate, if the present does not.

For the first time in the history of Canada, there was established some years ago, under my direction, a systematic system of fire guarding in our western provinces. It is not as systematic or as thorough as it ought to be, but since the establishment of the system, the thousands of dollars that have been expended have saved from destruction more than the entire mileage of timber limits alienated by this and preceding governments. No man who is at all familiar with the subject will deny that statement. I should have liked, Mr. Speaker, to have carried on this work to a more systematic and a more creditable conclusion. At the time when I left office I was in communication indirectly with Dr. Fernow, one of the greatest authorities on forestry perhaps in America to-day, and was particularly desirous that he should be brought into the service of the government in order that he might carry out the system of fire guarding and promoting our forests effectively. I commend the suggestion to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to have some such man to direct our fire guard system and have a systematic and careful policy in that respect inaugurated.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). In a discussion affecting the Department of the Interior at a time when he was the responsible head of that department, it would be expected that the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), the ex-Minister of the Interior, would have offered some defence of his actions as head of that department, and not only of his actions but those of his officials for whom he was responsible. But the strangest thing is that, after making a speech of over an hour's duration, he resumed his seat without once expressing any opinion on the resolution before the House. What are the ex-minister's opinions about holding an investigation into the actions of himself and his colleagues. He has not told us. He would have done well had he, instead of talking generally about the quantity of timber we had at our disposal, devoted some attention to the resolution calling for an investigation into the affairs of his department while he was minister of the Crown.

I did not intend to follow the hon. gentleman in all his remarks. He has taken us back to his police court days, and that was not so very long ago. They lasted until a very short time prior to his advent into this government. But times have changed. What a wonderful revolution has taken place in the hon. gentleman's own history. Had he been as conscientious in the discharge of his public duties and as good a financier, in the interests of our country, as he has been in his own interests, would it not have paid us to have had him as Finance Minister ? He has said that he does not care who secures our timber limits. It matters not to him whether it be a speculator or a lumberman or the owner of a corner grocery, so long as he is the highest bidder. He is thus frankly antagonistic to the present minister (Mr. Oliver) who says that it is the desire of himself and his department to have our lumber limits fall into the hands of lumbermen in order that they may provide the necessary lumber for our settlers in the Northwest. The ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) however, who was the responsible head of that department, holds different views, and I can well understand why he should when we see into whose hands the timber limits have fallen.

There are several things which took place during his administration of the Department of the Interior, which call for special reply from him. But he harked back instead to the time when a Conservative administration was in power, and he said that if there was anything wrong in the administration by him in the department he could trace it back to the time when his predecessors held office. He told us that he kept as his head clerk in that department the gentleman who was there under the Conservative regime. Let me ask him why he did not promote that head clerk, and why instead he selected the present member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) and placed him over Mr. Ryley and entrusted to him the opening of the tenders. The ex-minister (Mr. Sifton) has not attempted to justify his own action in selecting the Dominion Land Commissioner (Mr. Turriff) to open the tenders instead of Mr. Ryley. In that one respect, he did not follow the practice of his predecessors. Mr. Ryley was one of the officials who was present when tenders were opened when a Conservative government was in power. Could the ex-Minister of the Interior not trust that gentleman, why select Mr. Turriff, and allow that gentleman to open in secret all those tenders ? In that respect he might have followed the action of his predecessors because therein lies the mystery of many of those tenders. This question, which has been engaging the attention of parliament for several days—this question of the disposition of our forest wealth—is one of prime importance more especially to the people of the country from which I come. In view of the disclosures made by my colleagues of vast areas of timber limits having passed into the possession of private individuals who hold them for speculative purposes and who are bound to make millions from their speculations, this is a question which ought to engage more particularly the earnest consideration, not only of the government but of this parliament. There are hundreds of miles in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba entirely devoid of any local timber supply, and it is to the country to the far north that we must look for the major portion of the timber to supply not only the demand for fuel, but the rapidly increasing demand for lumber on the part of the population in that country. Any policy that would permit the alienation of hundreds of thousands of square miles of timber to speculators, to men, for instance, who secure information of a private character as to the location of a proposed line of railway, and who, in advance of settlement and of the requirements of the trade, send out their cruisers to estimate the quality, quantity and value of large areas of timber, and the opportunities of securing it, not for the purpose of manufacturing it into lumber to meet the demands of the trade, but for the sole and only purpose of holding it until these new transportation facilities make the limits more accessible and give them much greater value ; any policy that would allow these timber limits to be tendered for, so short a time being allowed as to handicap active competitors, with the result that, instead of the government holding these limits as trustees for the whole people until the public should get the benefit of the increased value, the control goes to speculators who stand to reap profits of thousands and perhaps of millions—any such policy I say should meet the condemnation not only of the members of this House but of the people of this country, and such a policy should not be tolerated for the future. Lumber is rightly regarded in the west as being almost one of the necessaries of life. In that country of strenuous winters, it is absolutely necessary that every settler should be in a position to secure his building material at the cheapest possible price, not only that he may have the opportunity of providing a home for himself and family, but also that he may provide needed protection against the rigorous climate for the stock he owns. When the Conservative party was in power, a tariff commission was sent to the Northwest. Strong complaints had been made of a combine in the lumber industry in that country. Evidence was adduced before that commission that went far to prove the truth of that contention. In order to break the power of that combine and give relief to the people the Minister of Finance of that day at the next session of parliament, placed on the free list lumber in the rough and lumber planed on one side. This was declared by our opponents to be entirely inadequate to meet the condition, and we were promised when a Liberal administration was in power that we should have complete relief and that all lumber should be placed on the free list. A change of government came, but the change of duties so far as lumber was concerned failed to materialize. But this is only another of the many unfulfilled pledges with which the country have become so familiar in the case of hon. gentlemen opposite. Apparently, there is still complaint of the existence of a lumber combine, and, last session, so important did the government think this lumber industry and so serious the condition of affairs shown by the representations of members of parliament from the west, that they agreed to the appointment of a committee of this House to investigate the whole lumber business. Powers were conferred upon that committee to send for persons and papers and to take evidence under oath. The committee did its work. An enormous mass of evidence was adduced. And what have we as a result of that investigation ? Not a particle of information has been vouchsafed to the members of this House that the government are going to lift a finger to prevent a continuance of the state of affairs shown by that committee to exist. It is true that one of the provincial governments, that of Alberta, did prosecute one member of that combine ; true, a verdict of guilty was secured, and a fine imposed. But, for all the time, labour and money spent upon that committee last year, what have we to show? Aparently, we are going to have the whole matter treated as was the telephone committee, which cost thousands of dollars but did not result in anything of a practical character, excepting the driving out from the government of Sir William Mulock because he was in favour of the nationalization of telegraphs and telephones. Important as is the question of cheap telephones, the question that is now before the House is of vastly more importance, because it relates to the source of supply of a commodity of crying necessity in the west, and also relates to a great national asset that should be preserved for the benefit of generations to come. But, when the members of the opposition, in the exercise of their duty, attempt to criticise the government for its actions and its policy, they are met with a tu quoque argument, as we were by the ex-minister (Mr. Sifton) here to-day, and as we have been by every other hon. gentleman on that side who has spoken on this subject. As if that settled the question; as if what these hon. gentlemen condemned in their opponents is to be approved in their own party to-day. We find the same policy pursued in everything relating to the public domain, mining, agriculture or timber ; but, more especially in regard to the timber supply, we have had the spectacle of hon. gentlemen on the other side rising in their places and reading from long lists of applicants for timber licenses under the Conservative regime with the evident determination to leave with the House and the country the impression that each and every one of these applicants had secured timber limits to the area set opposite their names, and that all those timber lands had passed out of the possession of the government into the possession of those individuals to be used for their own purpose and absolutely without compensation to the government. Nothing could be further from the truth, and I think that the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was not too severe in his characterization of that plan of campaign when he said it was a stale falsehood, which had been repeated in this House, which had been again and again exploded in this House, but which, undoubtedly, will be used again by hon. gentlemen on the opposite side. It is true that numerous applications were made for licenses during the Conservative regime for licenses to cut timber. But the applicants were not confined to persons of one political faith, as hon. gentlemen opposite would have us believe. Any person could apply for a timber berth and secure the same if he followed out the regulations; and if he did not follow out the regulations he could not secure the license. And I desire to say that in the long list that has been time and again, this session and previous sessions, read to this House, there are not more than five per cent of the men named who ever secured an acre of timber limits. That is all that it is necessary to say in order to controvert that statement.

Now, let me advert just for a moment to the regulation. This matter has been spoken of before, but I ask leave to refer to it again. In 1872, an Act relating to public lands was placed upon the statute-book under the government led by Sir John Macdonald. This Act provided that leases of land on which to cut timber could be put up for by tender or public auction, that the leases should exist for twenty-one years, and that the annual ground rent should be $2 per square mile—that being the ground rent charged at that time by the Ontario government. In lieu of stumpage dues, a royalty of 5 per cent was imposed on the sales of the products of the berth. I refer to this because one of the hon. gentlemen opposite states that the bonus is not everything, but that there is ground rent and also royalty, because these parties getting timber berths have to pay 50 cents per thousand feet on the lumber cut. But, Sir, there was a royalty in those days which amounted to a very large sum, very much more than 50 cents per thousand feet, that is the royalty of 5 per cent of the value. The price of lumber was over $20 per thousand more often that it was under $20, but taking $20 as an average, 5 per cent is $1 per thousand feet, instead of 50 cents as these gentlemen are charging even at present.

I have stated that in 1872 the government of Sir John Macdonald passed a law in this matter. I have here the statute of 1872, chapter 50, which provides:

The right of cutting timber on such limits shall be put up at a bonus per square mile, varying according to the situation and value of the limit, and sold to the highest bidder by competition, either by tender or at public auction.

Other sections of the Act provide for the erection of a sawmill with a capacity of 1,000 feet in 24 hours for every two and a half miles in the lease and, in addition to the bonus, an annual rental of $2 per square mile and a royalty of 5 per cent on each monthly account.

The government of Hon. Alexander Mackenzie succeeded that of Sir John Macdonald and in 1874, the very first year they were in power, they repealed the existing Act and did away with all competition. Again I say if there is any fault to be found with the regulations in that respect, the fault lies with that government and not with the Conservative government. In 1874 a new subsection was added to section 11 reading:

Provided further that in cases where applications may be made for limits on which to cut timber in unsurveyed territory the Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior, authorize the same to be leased for such bonus as may be deemed fair and reasonable.

No competition there.

Such lease to be subject nevertheless to the foregoing conditions of this section, except as to that part of subsection 1 which provides for the erection of mills, which provision in respect of limits in unsurveyed territory may, if considered expedient by the Minister of the Interior, be dispensed with.

Here competition is entirely done away with and cancelled and the erection of mills which was compulsory under Sir John Macdonald's Act of 1872, was made optional with the minister by the government of Hon. Alexander Mackenzie in 1874. Thus the law remained for a short time after the succeeding government of Sir John Macdonald came into power in 1878, but with these alterations: The ground rent was raised from $2 per square mile to $5 per square mile so that had the regulations of the Mackenzie government remained in force those timber berths that had been given without bonus would only have drawn $2 per square mile ground rent; whereas under the ground rent exacted by Sir John Macdonald's government, they yielded $5 per square mile. The result was to encourage the building of mills to produce timber for the settlers in that country. That remained until 1889 when it was made compulsory and also I may say that the Act provided that where there was more than one bidder tenders should be asked; but where there was only one bidder he got it without any competition. That was continued until 1889 when it was made compulsory to have all timber limits put up for tender whether there was one tender or more.

I am somewhat surprised at the ignorance (I do not use the word offensively) displayed by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) in regard to something of which he should have knowledge, for a man occupying the position of commissioner of Dominion lands for years and years should be acquainted not only with the laws governing his own administration of the timber limits but of the laws prior to his administration that hon. member made an astounding statement, just about as reckless as the major portion of his speech, when he stated:

Now that is a long time ago, but in those days of the Mackenzie government when the timber of the west was properly administered, was put up for competition, was sold to the people who wanted it, was sold to the highest bidder, was handled in a proper manner and not given away for nothing, as it was to the pets and favourites of the late Conservative government, it shows that the Mackenzie government got a reasonably fair price for the lumber.

From the extracts I have read from the laws governing the disposition of timber limits, hon. gentleman will see how far astray these statements are. I defy the hon. gentleman to point to one mile or acre of timber disposed of by competition during the Mackenzie regime.

In reference to the claims that have been made as to the manner in which these gentlemen have disposed of the lands to their own friends I am going once more to refer to a matter which was referred to by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) and to which the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) also referred. After the Mackenzie government were defeated at the polls, one day prior to leaving office, by order in council 200 square miles were granted, not to a Conservative but to a political pet of their own at that time, Mr. H. H. Cook and Mr. Sutherland. I have the order in council dealing with that and I marvel at the Minister of the Interior defending the action of that government on that score. This order in council was passed on the 7th day (not the 17th as the minister said) of October, 1878, one day prior to the Mackenzie government leaving office. And what was granted by it? The right to roam all over the Saskatchewan valley and select 200 square miles of timber limits in lots of 20 square miles each and to make the selection they were allowed the long term of three years. Still they were anxious to have the lumber and timber fall into the hands of the proper parties. I maintain that the government of Sir John Macdonald were quite justified in cancelling that order in council giving three years to make that selection of 200 square miles in blocks of 20 square miles each, particularly as the order in council was granted after the people of this country had expressed a want of confidence in the government of Hon. Alexander Mackenzie.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have said that only 310 or 311 square miles were alienated by the Mackenzie government and this at an average price of $23 per square mile. That statement is absolutely unfounded. In making that calculation hon. gentleman took good care not to include this 200 square miles in the 311 square miles. This 200 square miles had been alienated by their own friends but thanks to the government of Sir John Macdonald it was again secured for the crown.

But that was not the only order passed by the Mackenzie government after their defeat. I find an order in favour of Messrs. Dick and Banning of Winnipeg of 20 square miles. This too was omitted by hon. gentlemen in making their calculation. These gentlemen were Liberals but I understand that they were engaged in the lumber business and Sir John Macdonald's government did them the justice, while not allowing them the same territory that was granted by the original order, because they had the opportunity to take it on all the small streams flowing into Lake Winnipeg, of permitting them to secure twenty square miles other than that provided for in the order at a bonus of $20 per square mile. This alienation was also omitted in the 311 mile calculation so that the addition of these two areas will bring down their average price per square mile very materially, will practically cut it in half.

I shall quote other authorities to show that the government of Mr. Alexander Mackenzie alienated 605 square miles and that the average bonus per square mile was nothing like what these hon. gentlemen say it was. I have here a list, from which quotations have been made on different occasions, of members who had applied for timber limits during the Conservative regime. I simply desire to say that I take no stock in the 'tu quoque' argument because if these things were done by our friends they were punished for them. I want to show how far these hon. gentlemen have acted the manly part in skating over certain names in the list which has been read on many occasions, not only this session but in other sessions, of persons who, I personally know, are not of the Conservative faith and whom these hon. gentlemen knew but whom they overlooked because they did not wish to leave the impression upon the House that there were any Liberals applying for these timber limits or that any had been secured by them. In that list there are several names of parties who not only applied for limits but secured them. There is Mr. J. A. Christie of Brandon, Mr. Christie is one of the most prominent Liberals in Manitoba and a gentleman, who, if he has not been a Liberal candidate, has been balloted on in a Liberal convention. Another is Mr. J. D. McArthur of Winnipeg, another leading Liberal and a gentleman who has a contract on the government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Another is Mr. Jos. Boulton of my own town, a man who never cast a Conservative vote in his life, I understand. Messrs. Hooker & Co., of Selkirk are on the list, Mr. Hooker being a prominent Liberal and a fishery officer of this government. Another is Mr. C. A. McCool. Need I ask what his politics are ? He is the present member for Nipissing. More than that, Mr. Speaker, by looking at the past debates of this House I find that Mr. Charlton is responsible for having introduced this list in 1886 and that he held up to the odium of the public Mr. Bryson who was then the Conservative member for Ottawa and who had handed in some applications for timber limits, the same as my hon. friend in front of me did and how he turned it as a sweet morsel under the tongue when he got a Conservative member of parliament who had made application for a timber berth ! What did Mr. Bryson do ? He had never made an application for himself but for some of his friends and amongst others he made application for Mr. McCool. Yet Mr. McCool is passed over while Mr. Bryson is condemned. His name apears on that list on two occasions. As the hon. member for East Assiniboia says, he must have got hungry and come back again. Another gentleman is Mr. S. Jonnason, at the present time Liberal member of the provincial parliament for the constituency of Gimli, in the legislative assembly of Manitoba. Another is Mr. J. D. Dagg, the present secretary of the Liberal Association of Winnipeg, a gentleman who was an officer in the industrial school a few miles outside of Winnipeg, but failing to run things to the satisfaction of the party in power he was relieved of his position. Another was Mr. Charles Whitehead. I am sure that if the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), the ex-premier of Manitoba, were here we would only have to ask him, as we might also appeal to the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), as to the politics of this particular gentleman who held a dredging contract under that hon. gentleman when he was in the government for years known as the Boyne-March dredging contract and who was paid twice over for the work that he did and paid for work that he did not do at all. This same Charles Whitehead figures as an applicant on several occasions and he actually received timber limits from the Conservative administration. Another is Mr. Joseph Whitehead, I understand, the father of Mr. Charles Whitehead and he was treated the same as any Conservative applicant. Another gentleman was the present member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows). It is true that the hon. member for East Assiniboia overlooked his name but he stated that it was because his partner was a Conservative that he got the limits.

Mr. TURRIFF. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to correct him? These people were not applicants in the year covered by the list of names that I read out. I read out the name of every man who had applied that year whether he was a Conservative or a Liberal.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I know the hon. gentleman confined himself to 1883 but some of the names I am reading now he will find if he looks at the list moved for by Mr. McCreary in 1894. Besides these I can give the names of some other persons who applied in 1883. There is Mr. A. Cameron whom I know personally, and who, I understand, is a very strong Liberal in Manitoba. Another is Mr. R. Hardesty of Edmonton, I understand, a strong Liberal. Another is Capt. Robinson of Selkirk, a gentleman who has made considerable money out of this government since it came into power. Another is Mr. A. G. Rutherford of Manitoba, who was formerly in the lumber business there. Another was Mr. Hugh Sutherland who at one time was a Liberal member in this House representing the constituency of Lisgar. Another was Mr. B. E. Chaffy who was the Liberal candidate in the provincial elections for South Winnipeg. This is a list of persons known to myself and that if other hon. members on this side of the House were to take up the list they could select many more known to them. Hon. gentlemen opposite did not desire to leave the impression that any Liberal had been successful in obtaining timber limits but they wished the House and the country to believe that the list was confined to the Conservatives entirely. I find in looking over the same return that many applications were made in 1882 and 1883 and I am going to leave it to hon. members of this House to say if the applicants are lumbermen or if they are engaged in a similar line of business. For instance, I find here the name of Mr. H. N. Bate as having applied in 1882. Who is Mr. Bate? Any person in Ottawa knows that he is not a lumberman and still he was an applicant for a timber license. Another is Mr. H. A. Bate. Another is whom?—Mr. John Sifton, father of the hon. ex-Minister of the Interior. If it was wrong for a Liberal to apply for a timber limit was it not equally wrong for that hon. gentleman's father to apply? Is he also to be classed as a timber grabber because he sent in his application? I do not say that there is anything wrong in it but these hon. gentlemen want the people to believe that there was. Again, Mr. Robert Lockheard, a gentleman who lives in my own constituency—near Newdale—and a very strong Liberal, applied for a license. Again we have the name of Mr. H. N. Bate in 1883 and also the name of H. N. Bate & Co. Nelson and Mackenzie, who are strong Liberals, and who formerly lived in Birtle, also applied. Mr. M. C. Cameron was another applicant. Another name of a gentleman who is very prominent in the councils of hon. gentlemen opposite, Mr. C. J. Mickle, the present leader of the Liberal party in the local legislature and the prospective opponent of your humble servant in the next election, appears as an applicant. Another is Mr. William Nelson; another is Mr. Monkman, a Liberal lawyer of the city of Winnipeg; another is Mr. Robert McNeil, formerly near my own town; another is Mr. A. Macdonald, wholesale grocer of the city of Winnipeg, and another is Mr. A. C. Rutherford, the present premier of the province of Alberta who made application when he was here in a law office in the city of Ottawa in 1883. If these hon. gentlemen opposite wanted to adopt the manly course and the fair course they would read all these names and not merely pick out here and there the names of such as are Conservatives.

They say that the Conservatives only got some $4, less than $5 per square mile. How do they arrive at that conclusion and how do they arrive at the conclusion that $23 per square mile was obtained during the Liberal regime? They took about half the mileage that was disposed of by the Mackenzie administration which would necessarily represent a higher rate per mile, but in connection with the Conservative regime they took 29,000 miles for which applications were handed in and of which area not more than five per cent, certainly not more than ten per cent, was ever alienated and then they divided that by the amount of the bonus to show that we only got $5 per square mile. I have here some of the debates that took place in 1886 when this question was up and I am going to trouble the House to show how it was dealt with at that time by the then Minister of the Interior who spoke as follows:

Well, Sir, during the five years the Liberals were in office while they had given timber limits for 605 square miles, all the money they received for dues, ground rents, bonuses —no, there were no bonuses, because they put up nothing at public competition—was $6,160.

Instead of $7,000 as quoted by these hon. gentlemen opposite.

While during the last five years——

That is prior to 1886.

While during the last five years, this government has received from timber limits in the Northwest for ground rents, bonuses, dues and royalties, no less a sum than $539,433.

Again he said:

It is quite true that there were a large number of applications. The regulations fixed the terms upon which applications could be made, and under which grants could be given. The law fixed the lines which had been considered by hon. gentlemen opposite the proper lines on which people could obtain limits, and surely it was not an offence for any one to make an application for a timber limit under regulations open to the world, known to everybody, and under which everybody had the opportunity of making an application. If the hon. gentlemen could point out a case in which a Liberal applied for a timber limit, and a Conservative applied for the same timber limit and the Liberal's application was set aside, and the timber limit was given to the Conservative without competition, then he would have a case; but in that speech of his—which exceeded somewhat his own limits of what should be a proper speech, for, I believe, he enjoined the hon. member for Ottawa County (Mr. Wright) to give him a gentle reminder when he went beyond an hour and six minutes —in that speech, he never ventured to make a suggestion, among all the charges he had to make, that the government had in any one case given a Conservative a timber limit without competition for which a Liberal had applied or was applying; but on the contrary, wherever there were two applications, the limit was given to the highest bidder, and where there was only one applicant, it was given to him on condition of his fulfilling the conditions required, whether he was a Liberal or a Conservative.

And yet we had the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) stating the other night that if the members on this side of the House could point to any instance in which a Conservative had been refused concessions that a Liberal had secured, then there might be some argument on our side. I would turn the hon. gentleman's logic on to himself and ask him why, when he was quoting what was done in the Conservative regime, he did not point to an instance where a Conservative had secured privileges that were refused to a Liberal.

Mr. MILLER. I would answer that the accusation and the charge did not come from this side of the House, but from the other.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The accusation always comes from the other side of the House. Then the Hon. Thomas White went on to say :

Let the hon. gentleman put his hand upon a single case of a Liberal having been, because of his politics, refused a timber limit by this government. Now, Sir, what has been the practical result? There were no less than 2,029 applications for licenses ; the time of boom brought numerous applications.

It was not because there was an election in 1882. These hon. gentlemen opposite speak about insinuation, but they have insinuated that because there was a general election in 1882 all these applicants were given timber berths as a reward for services in the coming election, and that in 1883 they were given them as rewards for past service during the election. But the Minister of the Interior was frank enough to confess that it was during the time of the boom of 1882 that the applications were made. Hon. Thomas White continued:

But, Sir, an application was not of any value; it gave no one anything except the privilege of making it, and the trouble to the department of filling it; there was no money in the application, that is quite certain. I am speaking now of the applications up to May 1 of this year——

That includes all these years from 1882 up to 1886.

—and out of the 2,029 applications there were 568 orders in council authorizing licenses to issue. But, Sir, the order in council did nothing; it did not authorize any one except under permit to cut timber. In four cases in all, I believe persons have been permitted to cut timber under order in council.

Out of 2,029 applications and 568 orders in council but four of them were allowed to cut under these orders in council.

A license was required before any one could cut timber; and, Sir, we find that, before the licenses were issued, after the mere passage of the order in council, the result has been no profit to the people who applied, but this remarkable fact for ground rents alone.

Mark you, the ground rent had to be paid in advance.

—which did not give any one a right to cut one stick of timber, the country received $24,-062.27. Did that look like favouritism to any one? Now, let us see what the country received for bonuses under this system under which we are told the government gave away these timber limits in order to provide for their friends. In these cases, recollect, where no licenses were ever issued, the country received $21,226.25 from persons who were competing for the right to obtain licenses; and for royalties, in the four cases to which I have referred, in which timber was permitted to be cut, we received $8,587.92, so that for these cases where orders in council were passed, but no licenses were issued, the country received $4,176.44, and only in relation to $8,-500 of that was there a right, on the part of a single person paying the money, to cut a single stick of timber. Yet that was the kind of favouritism and corruption bestowed on our friends—the corruption of letting them apply for licenses and giving them order in council compelling them to pay the ground rent; and if they did not go further, if they did not make a survey, if they did not put up a mill and get out a license, they got nothing else and the country got the money.

That is to be found at pages 1042 and 1043 of the 'Hansard' of 1886, and that speech was made by the then Minister of the Interior, the Hon. Thomas White. I think that disposes of the order in council business to the satisfaction at any rate of any reasonable minded man. That there has not been 29,000 square miles alienated by the Conservative government, the very best evidence is the evidence afforded by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) himself, who in reply to a question of the hon. member from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) stated that out of 367 leases now in operation only 56 were in existence which were granted prior to 1896, and these 56 licenses that were issued prior to 1896 will not cover more than 1,000 miles instead of 29,000. I shall now, Mr. Speaker, refer to some of these specific cases that have not been dealt with by hon. gentlemen who have already spoken on this side of the House—and remember that although every hon. gentleman who has spoken here has given some specific illustratioins, every man who spoke has not as yet touched upon the same limit. We have had a new list every time, and I think when hon. gentlemen read over 'Hansard' they will find sufficient material —and I commend this especially to the Prime Minister—to demand an investigation at the hands of the government. Now, Sir, it has been well said that when the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill was before parliament in 1903 there were certain gentlemen who availed themselves no doubt of inside information and who rushed up into that part of the country through which they thought the road was going in order to secure these valuable timber limits. In almost every instance those were speculators. The Grand Trunk Pacific Act at first provided, not definitely, but almost in specific terms, that the railway would be very likely to follow the route via Dunvegan and the Peace river. I desire to read that portion of the Act, chapter 122, section 12, statutes of 1903, which reads :

The company may lay out, construct and operate a railway of the gauge of four feet and one-half inches to a point at or near the city of Winnipeg; thence westerly and northwesterly, passing through or near Battleford, Edmonton and Dunvegan, or by such other more feasible route as is hereafter located, but following in a general direction that herein indicated, and by way of either the Peace River pass, or the Pine River pass, or such other pass in the Rocky Mountains as is found most convenient and practicable, to Fort Simpson or Bute Inlet, or such other port on the Pacific coast between the said points as is considered more accessible and better adapted for the purposes of the company.

You will see that Dunvegan was specifically mentioned in the section, and this Act was assented to in 1903. A few months prior to this time we find some gentlemen rushing into that country to secure timber limits. As a result all the best timber along the Peace river has been taken up, so that when that country comes to be settled, to whom must the people go to get their supplies of timber ? In the first place, Mr. J. W. Stewart, an associate if not one of the partners of Foley brothers and Larsen, a firm of American contractors.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

Mr. HARTY. I beg to correct that. They come from Arnprior.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Their headquarters at any rate are in St. Paul ; and no doubt with the expectation of having a contract in that country, they secured a valuable timber limit of 330 square miles on the Wapiti and Little Smoky rivers, 200 miles north west of Edmonton. If they did not secure a contract themselves, at any rate they could hold up another contractor who wanted to get his supplies of bridge timber, ties, telegraph poles and other materials used in the construction of the road. There is practically no trail there, and to get into the country requires a journey of many weeks if not months, without cruising over this vast territory. Yet the notice was given on the 4th of May, and bids were opened on the 14th of June. Of course, no one but the applicant could tender ; any other applicants were handicapped. He made this selection of 330 square miles out of an area, I understand, three times as large. The result was, of course, that there was no other applicant. No person had time in the three weeks given by the notice, which appeared in the city of Edmonton, to examine the country. Mr. Stewart secured those 330 square miles for $7,500 or a little less than $23 per square mile. It is difficult to say what this limit is worth at the present time. I do not think the man on the street could secure it for 12 cents, as the hon. member for Brandon said to-day ; but we do know that while much of the country there has been burned over, this area is marked on the maps as plateau country, generally wooded. We also know that a gentleman named Elliott bought 24 square miles in that country, which he selected after Mr. Stewart selected his, and I have here a description of Mr. Elliott's limit over his own signature, which reads as follows :

Report of Timber Limit No. 1,272.

Location and area of limit.

This limit is situated on the Simonite river and at its junction with the Big Smoky river towards the entrance to the Pine River Pass about 200 miles northwest of Edmonton. The latest map issued by the Dominion government shows the located line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway passing through or immediately in the neighbourhood of the property. The limit comprises twenty-four square miles in area or about 15,360 acres, has a frontage of twelve miles on the Simonite river and a depth of one mile on either side. The Simonite has a width at this point of at least 150 feet with splendid booming facilities and makes a first class driving stream. Should more timber be required than is included within the area of this limit it can be acquired by going further up stream.

Timber and Basis of Calculation as to Quantity.

The timber consists mainly of spruce and white pine, all of the finest quality and of large size. The limit has been well prospected and in estimating the amount of available lumber no tree has been included of less than one foot in diameter. A large number of trees will run over three feet in diameter. Taking as a basis the most conservative estimate of 10,000 board measure feet to the acre, I have placed the lumber value on this limit at 145 to 150,000,000 board measure feet. Beyond this there will be an enormous number of ties and wood suitable for pulp wood, of which no account is included.

I wish to emphasize the fact that the estimate I have placed on the available amount of timber is extremely low and I am convinced that many inspectors going over the ground would almost double my estimate. There are many square miles which will run 30,000 board measure feet to the acre, and the amount of 145,000,000 here stated is the minimum. The amount of pine is not large, perhaps 5 to 10 per cent. There is much large, beautiful poplar, some trees four feet in diameter. This wood is not exactly poplar, and is rare. A few trees of this variety grow along the Assiniboine river near Portage la Prairie, and the lumber was highly valued. It is ivory white to near the heart and would make beautiful flooring.

Market.

It is my opinion much of the timber on this limit will be required for the construction and future use of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. It is suitable in every respect for bridge timber, ties, station buildings, &c. The cost of installing a sawmill on the ground would be comparatively small, and the haulage short. I may state that spruce ties at Edmonton at present sell for 60 cents a piece. The life of a tie is from four to five years, and with the use of the latest preservatives the life and value of these ties would be greatly increased.

Leaving the Grand Trunk Pacific out of the question, there will be an immense demand for timber at Edmonton, and within a radius of 200 miles from the limits.

General Remarks.

The limit occupies the most favourable location at the junction of two rivers with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, insuring splendid facilities of the material cut, and for the delivery of the logs at the mill. There is bound to be a large and steady demand for ties which can be made by axes, the timber being of suitable size, for an immediate and quick supply of ties, bridge timber, &c. This must be regarded as a temporary expedient, as it is extremely wasteful.

Price of above limit is $72,500.

August 24, 1907. (Sgd.) E. J. ELLIOTT.

Hon. gentlemen opposite are very anxious to know whether I have heard of any sale being made. I understand that Mr. Elliott has refused $52,000 for his limit, which he secured for $7,500. While I have no figures as to the quantity or quality of the timber on the Stewart limit it is reasonable to presume that when Mr. Stewart went in and cruised over that district and passed over this Elliott limit, he secured other limits as valuable, if not more valuable; and Mr. Stewart's limit of 330 square miles, at the same rate at which Mr. Elliott values his limit, would be worth $990,000. It happens that the Grand Trunk Pacific is not going via the Peace river, but via the Yellow Head Pass. To whom then, will people have to go to obtain their timber? I find on looking at the map that along the route of the Grand Trunk Pacific as surveyed at the present time, Mr. T. A. Burrows, the member for Dauphin in this House, has a very large area on the Macleod and Athabaska rivers.

It is somewhat significant, and I admire his astuteness, that he took only that portion above, where the river leaves the line of railway, making it all the more valuable, because the Grand Trunk Pacific is surveyed right through every one of these timber berths held by him. I have here a map showing the line of railway, I have an advertisement here of the timber berths along that line. Timber berth 1903 is twelve square miles. The length of time given in the advertisement was a little longer than in some of the others, but it was very far out of reach, away out near the Yellow Head Pass, 250 miles west of Edmonton, and 62 days were given. If you take off the time used in sending out the notices and the tenders coming back and also the insertion in the paper out there—only one insertion—and a very few heard of it—that would reduce the time to about forty days. Mr. Burrows secured that. It is true he was the highest tenderer. The next tenderer was Mr. Gentles for $700. Mr. T. A. Burrows bid $1,500. It is somewhat significant, on looking over the timber berths referred to in the course of the debate, that in no single instance was Mr. Burrows unsuccessful, when he put in a tender, save when he was in competition with the mysterious Imperial Pulp Company. Whether that competition was a live, active competition, I am not prepared to say. Berth 1093 was secured by Mr. Burrows and the Grand Trunk Pacific passes right through it.

There was another timber berth a little further up the line of railway and along the Athabasca river, berth 1094. This comprised 27 miles. The length of time was the same and the same objection can be urged. The second highest tender was that of Mr. J. W. Blain of Strathcona, who bid $2,025. Mr. Burrows went a little better and got it for $2,500, very little above Mr. Blain's bid; and it is very amusing to hear these hon. gentlemen, notably the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) stating that these men knew the value of these timber limits, that they had plenty of time to estimate their value, and therefore we might necessarily expect very close tenders. But if you look at the facts you will find there is great discrepancy. For instance the lowest tender for berth 1093 was $25, the second highest tender was $700, and Mr. Burrows got the berth for $1,500. In the case of berth No. 1094, Mr. Gentles bid $1,850, Mr. Blain $2,025 and Mr. Burrows $2,500. Take the case of berth No.

1099, and that again is on the line of railway. This is a most valuable berth. It is 44 square miles, and Mr. Burrows applied to have it put up for tender. The others were not in the name of Burrows but it is seldom that Mr. Burrows applies in his own name. In this instance he did, but although the berth was further away and very inaccessible, still Burrows was anxious they should know he was applying for it and they cut down the notices by days. Five days less than what they had done in more accessible places. Burrows was again the successful tenderer. The applicants were :

J. W. Blain..	$3,300
John Thompson..	5,116
T. A. Burrows..	6,500

In those three cases I congratulate the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) on being so very fortunate. It is somewhat significant that Mr. Burrows, above all others, should be the successful tenderer save in one or two or three cases, where he was the supposed competitor of the Imperial Pulp Company.

Mr. Burrows had been the land commissioner for the Canadian Northern Railway. He knew that the Canadian Northern had a charter to build through the Yellow Head Pass. No doubt he availed himself of the information he received in that position, and prior to the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill receiving the assent of parliament in 1903, he went out and had these berths put up for sale and secured the same. The building of the Grand Trunk Pacific will make that timber limit most valuable. I am not blaming Mr. Burrows for having asked that these timber berths be put up for sale, but it is the policy we are condemning and what the resolution calls for is an investigation, not only into the policy, but into the practice of the department, into the opening of tenders, in order to find out how it happens that one man should be so very fortunate in every instance he makes a tender. The government should have retained those limits in its possession in order to let the people reap the increased value which they are bound to attain by reason of transportation facilities making them more accessible.

I have also here a small limit that I wish to draw the attention of the House to, just to show how very close some of these gentlemen figure. I have here berth 1279 which was applied for on June 20, 1906. The notices were sent from Ottawa on August 25. How comes it that when Mr. Burrows applied for a timber limit, that limit was within twelve days placed in the market by the government, now berth 1279 is a limit close to that acquired by Mr. Burrows —it is a small one to be sure but it shows the discrimination made—when this limit was applied for by Mr. Hall on June 20, it was not put up by the government until August 25. In the meantime any friend of the government who desired to get it, would have this opportunity of cruising this limit and finding out its value. The tenders were opened on the 10th of October, 1906, making something in the neighbourhood of forty days. If any one is entitled to this timber limit, it was Mr. Hall. He and his party went into British Columbia to look up some other timber limits, and on their return they discovered this small berth situated on the Athabasca. Mr. Hall sent in his tender at $50. In the latter part of October he received a notice from the department that his tender was too low and that the successful tenderer was Mr. James Smith of Kamloops whose tender was $52—$52—just $2 in advance of Mr. Hall. Who opened the tenders ? It happened that on November the 1st this Mr. James Smith wrote the following letter to Mr. Hall :

Kamloops, November 1, 1906.

John Hall, Esq.,
Edmonton, Alberta.

Dear Sir,—Timber berth 1279, situate on the Athabasca, containing 480 acres, has been awarded to me and the license to cut timber thereon has been issued. Apparently it was put up to public competition by you, and if you wish to purchase the same I am willing to sell it very reasonably, my price is $500, which is a fraction over $1 per acre. I had it cruised and am satisfied it is good value at twice that price. If you wish to purchase it, kindly let me hear from you at your earliest convenience.

I remain, yours truly,
JAMES SMITH.

The pertinent question might be asked here: When did he have it cruised? Possibly between the time when Mr. Hall's request came in and the time when the government put it up. So, we have Mr. Smith writing this letter to Mr. Hall who had asked to have the timber limit put up, asking $500. He did not put up a mill. We would like to see the original documents in connection with this matter and to have some of these hon. gentlemen in the witness box to see if there has really been any manipulation of tenders. We would also like to find out something in regard to the identity of this Mr. Smith. In the return that was brought down to the House, I see that there is another letter in connection with this matter, and I desire to refer to it. Now, 'Smith' is rather a familiar-sounding name. This Mr. Smith writes a letter to the department in connection with some other limits. This letter is dated Edmonton, Alta., August 23, 1907, and the latter part of it is as follows :

As I am interested in berths 1330 to 1336, inclusive, held by Alex. Smith, of Ottawa, and which we propose surveying this fall, could you extend the time for surveying timber berth 1279 so that we could do it in conjunction with 1330 to 1336?

This 1279 is the small one to which refence has been made. Now, Alex. Smith, of course is a lumberman, is he not? Surely this Alex. Smith cannot be former organizer of the Liberal party in Ontario and now practising lawyer in Ottawa. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) himself has told us that he desires to see these timber limits in the hands of practical lumbermen. I find on looking up the tenders for the berths referred to as being held by Alex. Smith—1330 to 1336 inclusive, seven berths in all—that Alex. Smith was the successful tenderer in every case, and that in nearly every case his tender was just a little higher than the next highest. In the case of 1330, the lowest tender was $90. The next to the highest was $700, and the highest, that of Alex. Smith, was $930. And I desire to say that, in these limits in which Alex Smith tendered, he was fortunate enough to be successful in each and every case. Referring to berth 1331, we find that in this case also the lowest tender was $90; the second to the highest, that of the McInnes Lumber Company, was $900, and the highest, that of Alex. Smith, $920. Yet I understand that all these berths were granted after the present minister (Mr. Oliver) came into power. But I will do the hon. minister the justice to say that he did give a little longer time to put in tenders than had been given before, differing in this respect from the method of the hon. gentleman who spoke this afternoon, the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), who told us that no complaints had been made to him on this subject by lumbermen or by members of parliament. In No. 1332 the lowest tender was for $76; the second highest, that of the McInnes Lumber Company, was $600, and the successful tender was that of Alex. Smith, $660. In the case of No. 1333, the lowest tender was $75; the next highest was $168. In this case Mr. Smith did go somewhat higher and was the successful tenderer at $660—the same price as for timber berth 1332. In the case of 1334, the lowest tender again was $75, and the highest was that of Mr. Smith, again $660. For timber berth 1335 the lowest tender was that of the Western Timber and Mines, Limited, $75; the next $528, and the highest that of Mr. Alex Smith, $660—that seems to be his lucky number. In the case of 1336, once more the lowest tender was $75; the next highest, that of G. K. Allen, $352, and, in this case, Mr. Smith made a reduction to $450, but was successful. So here we have seven timber berths given to Mr. Alex. Smith, who is no lumberman, but who was the successful tenderer in every case, and who seems to own them in conjunction with Mr. James Smith, formerly of Kamloops, and now of Edmonton, these two being associated also with timber berth 1279.

The hon. member for Brandon this afternoon spoke about the way the public domain was given away during the Conservative regime, and other hon. gentlemen who have spoken have harked back not only to timber grants, but also to grants of colonization lands. The hon. member for Brandon spoke of this to-day, and the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) spoke of it when this subject was under debate before. They dwelt upon the alienation of lands for colonization purposes from 1878 to 1886——

Mr. BENNETT. A quarter of a century ago.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes, a quarter of a century ago. And these hon. gentlemen do not seem to realize now, in their reproaches, they include their own leaders of bygone days. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) referred to one leading Liberal who had applied for colonization lands—no less a person than Alexander Mackenzie, the leader of hon. gentlemen opposite at one time. Mr. Mackenzie, as the representative of a colonization company, applied to the Conservative government of that day for a vast tract of land. But he was not the only one. One who is still a leader of hon. gentlemen opposite, the present leader of their party in the Senate, Hon. R. W. Scott, applied for colonization lands. Mr. Gunn, then a Liberal member of parliament, representing Kingston, who was elected in 1878. Senator Reesor and Mr. Hugh Sutherland, then a Liberal M.P., were also applicants. Out of eleven members of parliament and senators who applied at that time for these colonization lands, five belong to the Liberal party and only six were Conservatives—a very fair proportion, I think. Yet these hon. gentlemen opposite would give an impression to this House that the Conservative government was parcelling out to their friends the public dominion in the form of colonization lands.

At Six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was referring to the fact that our friends on the government side of the House were reflecting upon the administration that preceded them, charging them with parcelling out western lands to colonization companies, to their own particular friends and supporters; I referred to the fact that of eleven members of the Senate and House of Commons who were connected with these colonization companies, five were members of their own political faith and their own political past leaders. In addition to those I have mentioned, Alexander Mackenzie, Hon. R. W. Scott, Mr. Gunn (formerly member of this House for Kingston), Senator Reesor and Mr. Hugh Sutherland, I have to mention the present Senators Jaffray and Cox. These two gentlemen, I understand, were also connected with colonization companies during the Conservative regime, and certainly they were not particular pets of the Conservative administration. But the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) has stated that in those days it was the case of the grafter getting the timber and the lands and the settler getting the police court. Surely he does not include amongst those grafters a gentleman of his own name, Mr. J. W. Sifton, his own esteemed father, for he was one of the applicants, and certainly it is not right to call the Conservative applicants grafters and let the Liberals escape scot free. Of course, we are not in a position to judge how extensive the police court experience of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) has been, but the mere fact of his having defended one man in the police court for having burned some timber belonging to the government is no evidence that that was the policy pursued by the government of that day. That is the usual style of debate of the Minister of the Interior; he selects certain isolated instances, and dilates upon them with the evident intention of leaving the impression on the House that they indicated the general policy pursued by the Conservative government. He did exactly the same thing in discussing the timber berths.

The length of time for which these limits were advertised has been much discussed in this debate, and the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) has claimed that under this government the same policy has been in vogue as was in vogue during the term of office of his predecessor. To that I wish to give a flat contradiction, and I wish to strengthen my contradiction by a quotation from the then Minister of the Interior as to the policy which was pursued in 1884 and later. The few isolated instances mentioned by the Minister of the Interior were not indicative of the policy pursued by the ministry.

During the session of 1894 a debate occurred in this House between practical lumbermen, the present Senator Edwards and Mr. John Charlton. I beg to quote for a few moments from the remarks made by these gentlemen. Mr. Charlton was moving for a return—

> Of all timber licenses granted since January 1, 1888, showing the date of each grant, the location, the area of the same, the name of the grantee, the bonus, if any, paid upon the same, whether disposed of: (a) at public auction duly advertised where the public were invited to compete; (b) at auction where only applicants for the berth or limit were invited to bid; (c) by private application; (d) if in neither of the ways above-mentioned, then stating in what way disposal and grant was made.
> Also a summary statement giving total area granted, and total amount of bonuses received.

He said: I shall ask leave to amend this order by inserting after subsection (d) an additional subsection as follows: The length of public notice given in each case when limits are sold, either at public auction or by other form of public competition.

This was the particular portion of his resolution to which Mr. Charlton desired to speak, and in discussing that question he said :

> The object, of course, of this amendment is to ascertain whether the government, in giving notice of sale, have given what would be considered a fair length of notice. The sale of timber limits, to be made advantageously, must, in my opinion, be by public auction, and that after ample notice has been given.

I would ask the attention of the Minister of the Interior to these remarks in view of his remarks upon the same subject yesterday :

> A short notice will, of course, prevent intending purchasers, who are not previously apprised of intention to sell, from making a thorough examination of the property. It is unnecessary to say that timber limits are invariably in the wilderness, not easy of access, and if the first intimation to be given intending purchasers be conveyed by the public notice, it requires a little time on the part of intending purchasers to make their preparations for examination. Men familiar with the lumber trade are perfectly well aware that any public notice, short of three or four months, is utterly insufficient.

Now, Mr. Charlton called himself a practical lumberman.

> The object of this motion is to ascertain whether the government, in giving notice, has given the length of time necessary for making examinations, sufficient for intending buyers.

Not only did he state that it was absolutely necessary in every case to have three or four months' notice, but he also stated that even at that day all timber limits should be put up to public auction.

He was succeeded by the present Senator Edwards, then a member of this House, who spoke in the same strain. Mr. Edwards said :

> Mr. Speaker, my only object in rising to speak upon this matter is to endeavour to impress upon the government the desirability of giving sufficient time for examination in cases of selling timber limits, both in the interest of the public and in the interests of lumbermen themselves. In a general way timber limits have become very valuable. To-day, the examination of these properties is made with very much more accuracy than was the case some years ago. For this reason, it is desirable that ample time shall be given to examine any timber limits that are put upon the market for sale. As to the time that it is desirable to give, that altogether depends upon the area that is offered. In some instances, three or four months might be sufficient, but, in a great many cases, six months would be required.

The very least that Senator Edwards thought should be given was three to four months.

It is desirable that the limits should be travelled closely in order to ascertain their real value; and one month is certainly not sufficient time in which to examine any timber limit. In my opinion, as a lumberman, one having had a good deal of experience in matters of this kind, in no instance should the time allowed for examination be less than four or five months; and, as I have said, in a great many instances, it should be six months, or even more. Now, as to the method of selling, I certainly agree that timber limits should be put up at public auction, and not sold by tender. My reason for so saying is this: If the principle of selling by tender is admitted, an individual knowing all the conditions of the limit, and the value of it, may ask that it be put up for sale; then, if tenders are asked for, the lumbermen generally, knowing nothing as to the value of the property, pay no attention whatever to the request for tenders. The consequence would be that the individual knowing the value of the property, might put in his tender for a very small sum, and secure the limit. I am speaking of a matter of which I have personal knowledge, for within the last few years I have received a great many requests for tenders, and in no instance have I known anything about the property offered, nor in any instance did I consider it in my interest to examine the property.

Now, the then Minister of the Interior, Mr. Daly, said in reply to that, not as the hon. ex-Minister of the Interior stated that there was only twenty-four, or twenty-eight, or thirty, or forty days, but that Ample notice has been given in every case—three, four or five months, acording to the location of the limits, and the means afforded for people to go and examine them—and notice has been given by advertisements in the newspapers, not only in the locality of the limit, not only in the province in which it is situated, but in the newspapers in other parts of the Dominion as well. In addition to that, circulars are sent to all the lumbermen in Canada and the United States, whose addresses are known to the department, and I think we know them all pretty well. That is evidenced by what the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) has said, that he has received numbers of these notices. He says that in no instance has he sought to purchase any limits of which he has had notice.

Again, when Mr. Charlton asked him :

What does the hon. gentleman consider ample notice?

He replied :

Three or four months' notice according to location of the berth, giving ample time to people to examine the berths and obtain all the information they require.

This was the general policy adopted by the then administration and it shows that an erroneous impression was attempted to be left on this House, by the hon. member for Brandon this afternoon when he sought to lead the House to believe that the policy of the former administration was to call for tenders without allowing sufficient time to permit of competitive bids being submitted. A few isolated instances of tenders being received on short notice for some special reason only can be cited. But, these were far more widely advertised than they are under this present administration. To-day, for instance, the advertisement of the sale of this limit, located away up at Cedar lake, had only one insertion in the Winnipeg 'Free Press' and one insertion in the Dauphin paper. Here was a timber limit away out in Saskatchewan and as the Dauphin paper did not circulate there it should have been advertised in a Prince Albert paper. Besides that there were only a few notices sent around to those in the trade. With that one insertion in a weekly local paper and no other, except that in the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' it was absolutely impossible to have the required notice given which would secure active competition. The hon. Minister of the Interior stated yesterday in speaking about the system of public auction that it was his intention in the future to put that system in vogue :

Now, we propose that the timber shall be put up only on the judgment of the government that it is right and proper and in the public interest that a certain area shall be advertised for sale. We propose to have the area examined so as to decide its suitability and its worth and then sell it by public auction with the view of getting the highest bonus. That is exactly in line with what my hon. friends opposite have been declaring is the policy the government should adopt, so that I hope we shall have their unanimous endorsation of it. But let me point out to those gentlemen that to have put such a policy in force, say five years ago, would, instead of being beneficial, have been most injurious to the best interests of the country.

That, in the face of the declaration of lumbermen like Mr. Edwards and Mr. Charlton that they would advise the government to put up all timber berths at auction and not to sell by tender or until they had advertised them for three, four, five or six months ! The hon. member for Brandon has stated that the Conservatives sold their timber berths without giving sufficient notice by public advertisement. But, Mr. Speaker, there is one great difference between the berths that were sold by the Conservative administration and those that are being sold at the present time and that is that at that time a person tendering for any particular timber berth had to go and make a selection in one block. If it were thirty or fifty square miles he had to take that in one block, whereas, under the administration of this government, a man may select 50 miles out of an area of 100 or 200 miles and he may select 330 miles out of an area three times as large which is a vastly different proposition.

I would ask the hon. member for Brandon : Where did he get this information which he gave to the House this afternoon ? Where did he get the information about certain timber berths that were advertised for such a short time ? Has he had the run of the Department of the Interior, has he had the officials of the department, from whom we find it very difficult to get our correspondence nowadays, preparing ammunition for the government's friends ? Has the hon. gentleman still got the run of the department, is he allowed to peruse original documents, or to get his speech prepared by the Department of the Interior, or to look over the files of the department, notwithstanding the promise made by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) that the law that he was going to put into effect would be made to apply equally to Liberals and Conservatives ? It seems to me that the hon. gentleman could not get that information in any other way than by having access to the department or by having some one in the department to secure this information for him.

Mr. FOSTER. He says that he took it at random.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes, he took it at random and he must have had an opportunity to look over the files. He stated that no objections were made in the past when he was minister by any lumberman or by any member of parliament in regard to the length of time that these limits were advertised. I would like to have a little more evidence on that subject than the hon. gentleman's own word in view of a similar declaration that he made in this House a few years ago when he stated that he had received no criticism upon his administration of the Dominion lands branch of the Department of the Interior, and when he even referred to the member for Marquette as writing only one letter in connection with various reserves. I had the privilege of stating upon that occasion that I not only had furnished one letter, but instance after instance, letter after letter and application after application on behalf of my constituents all of which were practicaly ignored by the then Minister of the Interior. In this connection, also as upon that occasion probably the memory of the hon. ex-Minister of the Interior is not of the very best. He has defended the regulation which was changed in 1903 while he was minister in reference to the annual revision of the royalty and in that respect he has taken directly opposite ground to that of his successor in office. He states that limit holders had practically continuity of tenure, that so long as they carried out the regulations as a matter of course they had a renewal of their licenses. But, the hon. ex-Minister of the Interior, a couple of years ago, in discussing this question, made that one of the great reasons why he changed this order in council on April 14, 1903, namely, that lumbermen had no guarantee that there was continuity of tenure and he therefore had an order in council passed which did away with the revision of the annual royalty. So that, no matter how much the profit might be, the country, had that order in council remained in force at the present time, would not be the gainer thereby, but to show that the members on this side of the House were correct in the attitude which they took upon this question at that time it is only necessary to say that upon this as upon many other questions the course that the hon. Minister of the Interior adopted was the one which was forced upon him by this side of the House and now he has provided that there shall be an annual revision of the royalty if necessary,.

The hon. member for Brandon stated that those limits have to-day no speculative value whatever, that you could go out on the street and purchase them for a few cents per thousand feet. That is very strange in view of the letter that I read in the 'Free Press' the other day from one of these gentlemen who is the owner of some of these northern limits, Mr. McDonald, an ardent Liberal, I believe, and a gentleman, who, no doubt, would try to defend his party to the utmost of his power, and who takes exception to the figures quoted by my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) when he says that this limit is held to-day for $500,000. The writer states that the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, can have that limit for $75,000 if he desires it.

Mr. BENNETT. What did he pay for it ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. He only paid the sum of $1,845. Still, the hon. member for Brandon says that they have no speculative value at the present time. My hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine, can get this limit of $75,000 at this stringent time peg by the selling partner in Winnipeg, Mr. Donald says he is quite willing to part with it if he gets this amount of money. This notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Fraser's limit on Cedar lake is being put on the market, is being offered in St. Paul and Winnipeg by the selling partner in Winnipeg. Mr. McDonnell, at the price of $500,000! If that timber limit is sold for half of that what an immense profit there will be ? And every dollar of it comes out of the settler eventually, and it will mean that the settlers will have to pay $2 or $3 per thousand more than they otherwise would have to pay, just the same as they had to pay enhanced prices for other lands sold by this government. The ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has said that when he had his estimate up for tree planting he was fought day after day and week after week by the members on this side of the House. Let him produce his proof. He has made that statement before and it has been denied and if he could prove it he would have the proof at hand. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) has a faculty of clapping and pounding his fists to lend emphasis where he lacks logic and when he makes broad statements without proof to support them. It is true that probably the members on this side of the House asked for some information in regard to that matter as they had a perfect right to and that they criticised some of his actions in regard to it, but as for opposing the planting of forests in the west that statement is absolutely unfounded.

I desire for a moment to refer to the Cedar lake limit. The hon. gentleman from Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) has stated that this Cedar lake limit, which is claimed to be so very valuable to-day, was applied for—practically the same limit he stated—by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) 25 years ago. Even if that were the case, it would not be any defence of the action of the government to-day. Timber lands have increased in value as all other lands have increased in value during the last quarter of a century. But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that it was not the same limit that was applied for by the member for Argenteuil, and it was not selected in the same manner either. In the first place I wish to draw the attention of members in this House to the description given by the member for Strathcona of that limit that was applied for by the member for Argenteuil :

Commencing at the discharge of the north Saskatchewan river into Cedar lake, thence to extend——

Not around the lake, mind you.

—up the river to a point on it eight and a third miles in direct distance from the point of beginning;——

It is to extend up the river on one side from its entrance into the lake, 8⅓ miles.

—the western boundary to be at right angles to the general bearing of the river within said distance; the eastern boundary to be the shore of Cedar lake; the southern boundary to be parallel to the general course of the river and back therefrom a sufficient distance to make the required area.

And what was the area? It was 50 square miles. And how selected? It was to be selected in one solid block and up the river, having the river as a boundary on one side, an area sufficient in depth to take in the 50 miles, running from its entrance into Cedar lake, 8⅓ miles up the river. That is vastly different from going around Cedar lake with a coast line of from 100 to 150 miles in length and selecting 60 miles in 6 blocks of 10 square miles, together with 30 miles in the islands. That is a different proposition. It was not the same area; it was not the same limit; it was not selected in the same way; it was not to be selected in 6 blocks of 10 square miles each around the coast line of Cedar lake, but it was to be up the Saskatchewan river from its entrance into the lake. Therefore, the hon. member for Strathcona was entirely wrong in giving as an illustration that the limit applied for by the hon. member (Mr. Perley) was considered entirely worthless then, although it is represented as being very valuable at the present day. It was not the same limit.

The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) has stated that at the present rate of disposing of this timber we will have enough to last us for the next 200 years. The hon. gentleman is fond of speaking in large figures; he is a high financier and possibly one reason why he has been giving the berths away as quickly as he can to all his friends is because he thinks we had abundance of timber to last us for years to come. Therefore, certain favorite gentlemen had to secure these berths because we had sufficient to last us for the next 200 years.

The reason given by the member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) why these applications were cancelled during the Conservative regime was because, he said, not of the onerous conditions, but because of the fact that the policy of the Conservative party did not tend to bring settlers into that country; in fact, the Conservative policy drove them out. These are his words, although later on in his speech he admitted the applications were cancelled simply because the conditions were not complied with. The member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) stated that it was the onerous conditions and regulations imposed by the late government that compelled these people to give up these timber limits, and the member for East Assiniboia said :

I venture the statement, Mr. Speaker, that you may go through the limits that were given in those days, and of all the hundreds that were given away for nothing you cannot find three that were cancelled for that reason.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the very reason that was given by the Minister of the Interior in his speech yesterday contradicts that statement of the member for East Assiniboia, for the minister has admitted that they were surrendered because the conditions were not complied with. In the first place there were no ground rents paid; in the second, there were no surveys made, and in the third place in the absence of these they could not get their license without which they could not cut one single stick of timber. But the hon. member (Mr. Turriff) goes on and says :

I will tell you why they were cancelled, not because there was not good timber on the limits, but because, under the administration of my hon. friends opposite, if the timber was not worth anything, they scarcely got any people into the country, and the people they did get in there did not stay, with the result that they could not afford to go paying five square miles ground rent, and they did not pay the five square miles ground rent, and for a good many years many of the timber limits that had been given away and that were valuable, were canceled for non-payment of the ground rent.

Well, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turiff) changes his ground there, and he admits exactly what we have stated, that the conditions had not been complied with and the regulations not fulfilled and they reverted to the Crown. And, Mr. Speaker, that puts me in mind of a little of the history of the Liberal party. Why did we not get settlers into that country? I think hon. gentlemen opposite should be the last to twit the Conservatives with not being able to get settlers into that country as fast as we all would like. Let us take the unpatriotic stand in this parliament and out of this partliament of these same Liberals decrying the fair fame and name of their own country. Who was it stated that our great western plains were only fit for the red man and the buffalo? Who was it stated—when the Conservative party were carrying out the terms of confederation with British Columbia and building—the Canadian Pacific Railway—that it would brankrupt the resources of Canada to build such a railway? Who was it lauded the American northwestern states as a more advantageous field for immigration than our own Canadian Northwest? Whose photograph ornamented the frontispiece of a publication lauding Kansas in contradistinction to our own Northwest? It was the political leaders of the hon. member (Mr. Turriff) who did all this; it was the Hon. Edward Blake and his friends who took the unpatriotic stand of decrying their own country and is it any wonder that we did not get the settlers into that country that we ought to get?

Now, there are a few of those tenders that I have not referred to thus far as showing the methods of tendering for these timber berths. Take, for instance, limit No. 1031. I have already stated that so far as I can see on all these timber berths that have been discussed in the House in which the member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) was a successful tenderer, in no instance except where he was a competitor of the Imperial Pulp Company was he non-successful. Timber berth 1031 was put up and here are the bids—the second highest bidder was McDonald, of Ottawa, $31,161, and the highest bidder was the Imperial Pulp Company, $31,575. This timber limit which was worth such a vast sum of money was pretty closely figured between these two tenderers, as you will notice. But the member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) tells us that these men are up in their business, that they have their cruisers out; they know these areas and they can estimate very closely what they are worth. Let us see. This is one of the cases where the member for Dauphin was unsuccessful against the Imperial Pulp Company, apparently because the Imperial Pulp Company had a little more pull than even the hon. member for Dauphin. But the member for Dauphin is an experienced and practical lumberman and he had a tender in for this timber limit and what was it? It was not $31,000 as in the case of the other tenderer, but just $6,057. What a wonderful discrepancy. The lowest tender was $2,000. Now, let us take berth No. 1046, and here is one where Mr. Burrows was again a successful competitor. The second highest tender was D. R. Fraser, of Edmonton, for $3,015; the highest tenderer was Mr. Burrows for $3,500, and the lowest tender, which was from Craft & Lee, was $815. Mr. Burrows had not any Imperial Pulp Company to go up against in this instance. Then again we have berth No. 1047 and this was put up and the highest tender was from Mr. Burrows for $15,000, and the second highest was from McDonald, and I just venture the opinion that as great a friend as McDonald may be of this administration, I think that if he would be frank he would say and possibly he has said, that he had serious grievances against this government; that he and his friends have been jockeyed on many occasions out of timber limits which they should properly have had. Their offer was $13,524. Mr. Burrows got the limit for $15,000; the lowest tender was $2,000. In this instance again we would like to have a peep at the original documents.

Next, take timber berth 1231. This case beats all the others, and when hon. gentlemen learn who the gentleman was who was the successful tenderer, I am sure that a broad smile will spead over their faces. There were four tenders: Craft & Lee, of Edmonton, $300; K. McDonald, $657; William Humberstone, of Edmonton, $1,000; and then the financier, the close reckoner, T. O. Davis, the present senator, $1,005—$5 above the next figure. Now, will not the Prime Minister give us an investigation? Surely after the statements I have given he will not only do that, but let us have a peep at the original documents so that we may see how these tenders were manipulated and who did the manipulating.

We have been told that we have made insinuations. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who twitted us with indulging in insinuations was the ex-commissioner of Dominion lands; and what did he do before he got through? I am not going to go through his speech and select all his insinuations. He challenged us on this side of the House to take an open stand and make our charges against him if we had any to make; and yet before he got through he said to the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames):

I think that possibly if the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, would look back in his history, he might possibly be able to throw some light on this Rochester limit.

What did the hon. gentleman mean by that—a charge ? Nothing else but an insinuation. The hon. member for St. Antoine division informs me that he never saw Rochester, and does not know who Rochester was. Yet this is the hon. gentleman who insists on insinuations being dropped and charges being made. Other insinuations have been indulged in on the other side of the House. I think the hon. Minister of the Interior himself was not free from that offense when he mentioned the name of T. Mayne Daly, who wrote a letter to Mr. Cook, leaving the impression on the House that it was the ex-Minister of the Interior of that name. I do not think it was, but another altogether. Yet the hon. minister seemed to convey the impression that it was the ex-Minister of the Interior, though he afterwards denied that he was at all sure of that. The same hon. gentleman referred to all the timber berths which had been handed out in 1882 and 1883—an insinuation again—because there was an election in 1882. Is that the reason John W. Sifton applied for a limit in 1882 ? The Conservative government was not parcelling out timber limits to friends and pets of their own party, but many strong and ardent Liberals applied for timber licenses under the Conservative administration, and secured them, and they were quite right in doing so.

Now, these hon. gentlemen have stated that we have been parcelling out the public domain of this country among our friends. Look at their own record of the last few years in regard to not only timber licenses, but agriculture, mining and grazing lands as well. The Saskatchewan Valley Land Company got 250,000 acres of land ; the Robbins Irrigation Company got 380,000 acres—what for ? To help Conservatives ? No, not at all. The gentlemen who got that contract from the government were not required to pay a single dollar until 1910, and they went across the Atlantic and put their contract on the market and sold it for $500,000. Along with that, they sold the Grand Forks lease for between $800,000 and $900,000. We know of the grazing lands which were given to Messrs. McGregor and Hitchcock. We know that the Yukon country was the stamping ground of the exploiter under the regime of the ex-Minister of the Interior, who enabled his favourites to come out with their pockets bursting with money, and brought down upon himself the condemnation not only of the Conservative press of Canada, but of the independent press and the press of the mother land as well. But these hon. gentlemen have not confined themselves to the land, but have also given privileges and fishing leases. To Mr. Markey, a lawyer of Montreal, they gave a monoply of the fisheries on the Nelson river and its tributaries for 21 years, not allowing the settlers to take fish for commercial purposes, but only for domestic purposes, for the magnificent sum of $10 a year. In the same way they gave a lease of the fishing privileges on the Lesser Slave lake and Lake Athabaska to Mr. J. K. McKenzie of Selkirk. for nine years for $10 per annum. They gave to Mr. Archibald McNee, a journalist of Windsor, the same privilege in James bay for the magnificent sum of $10 per annum. It comes with very poor grace from these gentlemen to revile their opponents about parcelling out the public domain when they have such a record for the last few years.

The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) may get up and call upon his opponents to make other charges. Why, one would require to have an epidermis like a rhinoceros to stand any more charges. The hon. gentleman should be the very first himself to demand an investigation. He it was who was the Commissioner of Crown Lands, to whom was entrusted the opening of those tenders. And there is a well grounded suspicion in the minds, not only of lumbermen, but of the people generally, that there was, while he was commissioner, the greatest manipulation of tenders. The only way to drive that suspicion out of the public mind, if there be nothing in it, is for the hon. gentleman himself (Mr. Turriff) to go to the First Minister and insist on having this investigation in order that he may be given the opportunity of clearing his own skirts. But he stands on his position as a member of this House. Well, Mr. Speaker, he was not a member of this House during the period when this manipulating of tenders is charged to have taken place. Why did the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), when he was Minister of the Interior, change the officer who opened the tenders? Why did he pass over Mr. Ryley, who used to open the tenders before, and give that work to be done by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff)? Could he not trust Mr. Ryley, or could he better trust the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) to do certain work? In view of the record, the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) should be the first to insist on an investigation, if he be the honest man he claims to be. The right hon. the First Minister himself (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) cannot afford to take the position on this motion that he has done on others. When an investigation into the administration of the Interior Department was asked before, the right hon. gentleman shielded himself behind the subterfuge that what was wanted was a fishing expedition. But in this instance he is confronted with specified items of charges one after another. Nine reasons have been given by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), reasons have been given by every member on this side who has spoken. Why, in the interests of good government, in the interest of the members of this administration who are under suspicion in connection with these transactions, the Prime Minister cannot afford to shield himself by any such subterfuge, and the people of Canada will not take it as a sufficient answer, that specific charges have not been made. Any First Minister, who has the honour of the country, the honour of his government and the honour of his officials at heart, would accede to this resolution. If there is nothing to hide, why not go on with the investigation? The people will not be satisfied with any refusal of the First Minister, but will hold him, as the Prime Minister of this country, personally responsible for the conduct of the administration, whether the ex-Commissioner of Dominion Lands (Mr. Turriff) or the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) be implicated, or whomever the investigation may affect. Therefore, I have the utmost pleasure in supporting the resolution of my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), and am confident that the people of this country will not be satisfied with anything short of a thorough investigation.

Mr. E. BRISTOL (Centre Toronto). I am indeed astonished that not one of the members of the present administration or their followers have seen fit to make an attempt at least to reply to the very able, clear and eloquent indictment just made by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche). One would think that in a matter touching the honour of several members of this House, we would have heard from the other side every defence it was possible for them to make. But since no one rises to reply to my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) we must come to the conclusion that the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and the present minister (Mr. Oliver) have exhausted all the defence that can be offered to this resolution.

Let us examine the line of defence, if you can call it such, which these hon. gentlemen have put forward. It can be very briefly stated. In effect what they say is this: You did it in 1883; we did it when we came into power, but the swag is not nearly so valuable as you think, and in any case there is a lot more of it. Well, I do not think the people are much concerned in what the late Conservative party did or did not do in 1883. Whatever may have been their sins of omission or commission, they have paid the penalty, and the late Conservative government is no longer on its trial. But the government which is on its trial is the present administration; and unless the present administration can offer some better excuse than to say the Conservatives in 1883 did wrong, the people will think it is high time to make a change. What did the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) tell us was the policy in 1883? He said there was no desire to get revenue, but what was desired was to get as many people as possible into the business of cutting lumber, so that the supply of lumber would be cheap and plentiful. Well, if that statement of the position be correct, would it not be better for the western country if there were 1,000 people cutting lumber under proper conditions than if there were only twenty? The more lumber that would be cut under reasonable conditions, the cheaper would be the product. So long as the conditions were fair, so long as the timber lands were open to competition by everybody. I do not see how the fact that one or two or three hundred persons at that time thought they would go into the lumber business and then gave up the idea, affects the situation one iota. The important point is that the interests of the settlers were then protected by the obligation being imposed on the purchasers of timber limits to erect mills within a definite time, to pay certain rentals, and do other things. That is proven by the fact that when the Conservatives went out of power in 1896 there were only 1,700 square miles of limits in the hands of the lumbermen of that day, and these were being practically operated. Had the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) been fair, instead of talking about 21,000 square miles of timber limits having been alienated by the Conservatives, he would have stated that, although licenses to that extent were granted, the amount alienated in 1896 was only 1,700 square miles, which shows how absurd it was to talk of 21,000 square miles and the police court.

We have further elicited from the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) the statement that from 1889 to 1896 the administration of our timber limits was honest and good and in the interests of the country. Surely we could not have any higher testimony. It shows how futile it is to go back to the acts of the Conservative government in 1883, when we have the admission from the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) that not only was that administration on the same lines as at present, but that from 1889 to 1896 it was in the best interests of this country. And the fact that in 1896 only 1,700 square miles of timber lands were alienated proves that statement.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have told us that they followed in our footsteps. Well, we know that in many instances they endeavoured to do so, but their endeavour on this occasion reminds me very much of the Chinaman who was given an old pair of trousers as a pattern for a new pair. Unfortunately there was a patch on the old one, and the Chinaman thought it necessary to reproduce that patch on the new pair. That is the kind of servile imitation which this government have practiced in connection with our timber limits. No doubt if the resolution now before the House had not been brought up, they would have gone on to the end of time distributing timber limits to their favourites quite irrespective of competition.

Now, these hon. gentlemen say that they followed the Conservative policy. But there are one or two essential matters in which it is quite evident that, not merely did they not follow the Conservative policy, but they materially changed that policy to the detriment of the people of this country. If I am correctly informed, and I believe I am, it was the policy of the Conservative administration of that day to have three people open tenders of this kind. If that was so, and if Mr. Ryley was one of these people, then I venture to say that the change of policy by which, instead of three officials of the department opening the tenders in one another's presence a policy was adopted by which one official alone opened these tenders, may be one of the chief means whereby the country and this administration have got into trouble with respect to this very important matter. I wish to call the attention of the House and the country to what, in my humble judgment, is another very important change that took place and which seems to have been entirely overlooked by this administration. If there is one boast which the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier)) makes, it is that he is the head of a business administration. If this is a business administration, I would like to know why it was that they were unable to discover that, since the year 1900, there has been a complete change in the conditions of the west. If they had been a business administration, they should have endeavoured to change their policy so as to fit it to the changed conditions which have arisen in the west since that time. I take it that that which was a good policy in 1880 may not have been a good policy in 1900. I take it that it is the duty of an administration to watch the course of affairs, and to adapt its policy to the conditions as they arise. But these gentlemen now in power seem to have entirely overlooked the changed conditions of that western country in the seven years since 1900. From 1883 to 1900, the country had been gradually filling up with settlers. In 1883 there was no Canadian Pacific Railway, in fact no railway. In 1900, the government had enunciated its policy of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. And, even before that time, the Canadian Northern had been extending its lines through the western country as rapidly as possible. The areas in the United States open for free settlement had been filled up and American settlers had been pouring into this country. Instead of a population of 100,000, with very little railway communication, you had a population of 500,000 and a good railway system over a great portion of the country.

Now, if the government were not alive to the changed conditions of the west, apparently a gang of speculators, very much the friends of the government were very much alive to these changes. And so, we find this particular crowd of friends of the government were able, between 1902 and 1905, to corral what has been stated to be practically all the best available timber limits of that western country. We were told by the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) that there were 150,000 miles of merchantable timber in the west. Every Canadian is glad to know it. But it would have been a kind act on the part of the hon. gentleman, if, in giving that information to the House and to the country, he had stated also that nearly the whole of that great timber area is on the northern slope of the continent, that not only is it not now available by the present railway systems, but that it cannot be brought to the use of the present settlers of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba by the rivers of that country, because it is almost entirely tributary to the rivers which flow into the Arctic ocean. What did the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) charge in this House ? He charged that practically all the available timber of Alberta had been corraled by these speculators to the detriment of the people of that province. Was there any answer to that from the hon. member from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) ? Not a word. That hon. gentleman dealt in glittering generalities which have no bearing upon the matter which the House is now considering, and which is of so much interest to the people of Canada. So, I say, so far as this government are concerned, whether through stupidity or through a desire to assist their friends, they absolutely closed their eyes and their minds to the development of this country from 1900 to 1907, and continued a policy, which may have been a good policy when the country was not settled, when there were no railway systems, and when it was almost impossible to get anybody to take timber limits at any price and work them but which was not necessarily a good policy when lumber was one of the most vital needs for a great and rapidly increasing population. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has told us that there was no change in the regulations between 1889 and the present time. That seems a very extraordinary statement, in view of the total change of conditions that has taken place. These gentlemen found that, instead of timber limits being a drug, which it was difficult to get anybody to take and work, applications were being made to have these timber limits put up for sale. And what did they do ? They went through a farce of competition. I am not going, at this stage of the debate, to set forth the various methods by which they tried not to advertise the various limits that were put up, so that their favorites might secure them, but it has been amply shown that the competition was a farce, that it was absurd, that there was no real competition in these important transactions. We have applied since the 4th of December last for some twenty returns of original documents in matters of this description.

After a week of fighting, we did secure some nine documents, but, up to this time, we have been unable to have the motions dealt with that call for other documents which are of vital importance in the discussion of this matter. But what happens? The ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) comes here, and it would appear from his speech that he has been allowed to go through the files of the department and pick up, 'at random,' as he says, any matter that he thinks will help his argument in this case. But, apart from the matters which I have been referring to, the people of this country have their eyes fixed upon this very important point—that there has been a most remarkable closeness of guessing on the part of certain gentlemen who were favorites of this administration, and who have secured for a song valuable timber limits. I venture to think that the people of this country will not be satisfied to be told that, because certain things were done in 1883, when practically there were no settlers in the west and no railways, therefore, even when every evidence of fraud is shown by the documents brought down, an investigation into this department where this fraud seems to exist shall not be permitted. Comment has been made on the two tenders put in in Mr. Fraser's handwriting; in view of the fact that Mr. Fraser himself has thought fit, through the Minister of the Interior, to endeavour to make a statement to this House—a statement, which, I venture to think, is most unsatisfactory, the least that should be done in a matter of this kind is to give Mr. Fraser an opportunity to appear before a commission, to make on oath and under proper circumstances, the statement he has endeavoured to get before this House. The very fact that any gentleman feels it necessary to clear his skirts in respect of the documents that have been brought forward is of itself a sufficient reason why a proper commission should be appointed to take evidence on oath of this gentleman and any others who can throw light on the subject. Quite apart from that, you have the further statement of Mr. Nolan in the newspapers, which seems quite different from Mr. Fraser's.

If there is one matter in these original papers which I think deserves the careful attention of this House and more than any other calls for the granting of an investigation, it is the circumstances surrounding the three alleged tenders put in on December 2, 1903. The two Fraser tenders are marked Nos. 454,689 and 454,689, and they are stamped with a blue stamp: Department of the Interior, Wednesday 9th December, 1903; Timber and Mines branch. The third tender which appears here as an alleged tender by James Curry, dated December 2, 1903, bears no number and no date or receipt stamp to show that the original tender was ever received by the department. Without evidence how can we tell whether or not that is a genuine tender? On its face it is not genuine because it does not appear with the proper number or with the stamp of the department as the other tenders do. It was alleged that the first thousand dollar tender went in first and the other, No. 454,688, last. Yet between these two tenders you will find that other tender shoved in with no number and no official stamp on it. I submit that the people want to know, even if hon. gentlemen opposite do not, how it is that in the only original documents produced from this department we find one that has not the earmarks of authenticity on it. This is a matter which calls for an explanation from the department. Is it because we find these irregularities; is it because we find in the second Fraser tender the figures put in with different ink and different handwriting, that we have not been able to have the original documents in the other 21 instances produced to the House? Would their return to the House disclose the same irregularities? If this department has been regularly and properly run, then in the interest of the people of this country and of the department every suspicion in connection with a matter of this kind, which is vital to the government and to the public interest, should be at once absolutely cleared up.

In view of the charges that have been made in the various speeches during this debate, I declare that the honour of the government is at stake; I declare that the responsibility of this matter does not rest with either the present Minister of the Interior or his predecessor, but that the people of Canada have their eyes on the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). They want to know what the right hon. gentleman is going to do about this. He is the one who is responsible for the administration of the affairs of the country, responsible for the honour of the government and of parliament, and unless he does as he did in connection with the original documents, and lets in the light of day, I am satisfied that the people of Canada will not believe that there is not something to hide in this case, that there is not something which if exposed to the light of day, would bring disgrace and discredit on the administration of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. H. A. WARD (Durham). I did not intend participating in this debate, but as my name has been mentioned in connection with the granting of timber licenses to friends of the Conservative government, I feel it due to myself, to the House and to the country, that a short explanation of that transaction should be given. When I called the attention of the Minister of the Interior to a matter referred to in his speech and asked him a question, he pulled out from among the papers that he had ready from his department a statement of my connection with a timber limit granted by the Conservative government in 1883. In 1886 Mr. Charlton, then member for South Norfolk, brought forward the same list that has been produced by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) during this debate and proclaimed that I, among other members of the House of Commons, had succeeded in obtaining concessions from the Conservative government that would not have been granted had I not been a friend of the administration and that therefore the granting of the concession was a wrongful act by that administration. Mr. Charlton's attention was called by the Hon. Peter White, then member for one of the Renfrews, to the fact that I was not a member of the House when that application was made. Again in 1890 Mr. Charlton brought forward the same list of Conservative delinquents, as he called them, who had obtained concessions from that administration. I desire to read to the House exactly what I said on the second occasion when Mr. Charlton brought this matter to the attention of the House. I made no reply in 1886, but in 1890, after the list had been read by Mr. Charlton, although I was not in the House when he spoke, I made this reply :

Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words with regard to the matter brought before the House by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Unfortunately I was out of the House when he brought forward the list of the names of members who had from time to time made application for portions of the public lands. I read from the hon. gentleman's speech in Hansard that he stated: 'That H. A. Ward, M.P., had received one limit' and further 'H. A. Ward, M.P., made three applications and secured three limits.' The hon. gentleman must have had the returns before him at the time he made that declaration in this House, and he must have known, if he had read the returns and dates on which these applications were made, that these limits in question were applied for two years before I became a member of this House. That, however, is the style of the allegation put forward by the hon. gentleman. I simply wish to say that at that time, two years before I became a member, I was interested with some American and Canadian gentlemen who desired to enter into transactions in timber in the Northwest. They applied through me, and I had one limit granted to myself, and afterwards, about $3,000 was expended in examining and surveying the limits. My friends, however, came to the conclusion that they could not by any possibility be made to pay. Nothing more was done in regard to them and the applications were cancelled. The hon. gentleman's mind must be relieved by the circumstance that the public domain has not in any way been squandered on gentlemen associated with me but he cannot be relieved of the imputation of having attempted on false pretences to assail the reputation of a member of this House.

That was the explanation I made in 1886. I was then a member of the House, but at the time that these limits were granted to me I was not a member of the House. For the information of hon. gentlemen opposite I would state that two of the gentlemen who were associated with me in that transaction were Liberals of the old school. They were not Conservatives, they never were Conservatives before their applications were granted for that limit and they have never been Conservatives since. No inquiry was made as to their political complexion. The limits were granted as a matter of course. Some members of the House seem to lose sight of the fact entirely that conditions were different twenty-five years ago from what they are at the present time and that it was the object of the Conservative administration at that time to secure the manufacture of lumber in the country for the benefit of the settler. It was the intention of those who were associated with me, one of these gentleman being a lumberman, to undertake the manufacture of timber and lumber in the Northwest. But, upon a close examination of the conditions which existed about Prince Albert at that time—these limits were quite close to Prince Albert—it was considered by those who knew a great deal more about the transaction than I did myself, not being initiated in the lumber trade, that there was no chance in the condition of the country at that time to make any money out of these limits. Therefore, they were dropped. That is the whole history of this transaction as far as I am concerned and I am sure that those who hear what I say will do me the justice to admit that the transaction was not entered upon with the object of engaging in a speculation. We found, as I say, that there was no possible speculation in it, either to manufacture or to sell. I would have been very glad to have given the limit I myself took to anybody for the amount I expended on the survey but there was no one who desired to obtain the limit even at that price and I believe that in the case of almost ninety-nine out of every hundred applications that were made the limits were dropped for the same reason. But, the country did not lose anything by these orders in council being passed granting these limits. They were never followed up except as my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) has stated in the case of about five per cent of the licenses granted. But, if they had been the country would have got the benefit. If all these licenses which were granted, aggregating 29,300 square miles, had been taken up, what do you suppose would have been the result to this country ? From that time to the present—I will not weary the House by giving the exact calculation — the country would have taken in ground rents alone $3,500,000. If every square mile of timber which was granted by order in council had been taken up a great deal better showing would have been made than this administration has made in the years that have followed. Just direct your attention for a moment to what was taken in by the Mackenzie administration in the five years they were in power. The whole amount taken in by that administration for timber dues and bonuses was $6,160. During the five years following that, after the Conservative administration came into power, $539,000 was taken in for timber berths for bonuses and for rents. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) has boasted with great unction that in the ten years of the present administration they have taken in about the same amount, so that upon a comparison of the administrations, both Conservative and Liberal, which have existed since 1872, the Conservative administrations have nothing to be ashamed of. I do not propose to take up the attention of the House any longer as this debate has lasted a long time, but I thought that this explanation was due to myself and I can only say that I shall have great pleasure in voting for the motion of my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake).

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris). Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Ward) has said, this debate has lasted for a long time. A great many very able speeches have been made and the matter has been thoroughly, I think, explained and put before the people. It seems very evident that the other side have given up the debate. I do not know whether they are tired or whether they have gone to hear Nordica, but for some reason or other they have given up this debate. I am confident that the only course by which they can justify themselves before the people of the country is to accept this motion and grant the investigation which is asked for. I would not detain the House for one moment were it not for the fact that I believe that the people whom I have the honour to represent in this House would hold me responsible if I did not at least put myself on record on this great question. I would like to say to this House and particularly to those members who represent the eastern section of the country, that Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are in a somewhat different position from any other province in relation to their timber limits. In the maritime provinces, Quebec and Ontario and British Columbia, you have your timber limits scattered all over these provinces. Not so with these western provinces. As those who have travelled through that country and who are familiar with it know, for hundreds of miles from the international boundary north there is very little timber. There is some but not much. The timber limits lie north, along the Saskatchewan river, running from Lake Winnipeg, Lake Winnipegosis and Cedar lake along the banks and watershed of the Saskatchewan, along the Pembina and the Macleod rivers and north of the watershed of the Saskatchewan. That is where you find the principal timber limits of that country. My hon. friend for Marquette (Mr. Roche) said that lumber was a necessity in that country. Those of us who have been there for the last twenty or twenty-five years thoroughly realize that fact. Many of us who have been practising medicine, or practising our professions in that country for a number of years, have had an oportunity of visiting the homes of the people and we know of what great importance the lumber industry is to that country and how important it is that the farmers should get their lumber at the very smallest possible cost. I had something to say last year in connection with agricultural implements, in connection with machinery, and I claim that the question of agricultural implements depends to some extent and perhaps to quite a large extent on the question before us tonight. I said that it was absolutely necessary for agricultural implements, in order to get the best results out of them, to be in the very best possible condition. It is impossible to keep agricultural implements in good condition because the farmers are unable to get lumber at a reasonable price to provide buildings in which to store this machinery. Therefore, they know by experience how necessary it is that they should get lumber at as reasonable a price as possible. Last year we had a committee of investigation in this House in connection with the lumber combine. What led up to the desire or demand that this parliament should investigate the lumber combine? The investigation was not held because lumber was cheap but because lumber was dear, and because they believed there was a monopoly and because they believed that those engaged in the manufacture of lumber were not selling this lumber to the farmers as cheaply as they should. I would like to say right here that if this discussion during the last few days has done no other good than to bring to this House and keep in this House a few members whom we very seldom see here—with the exception of the member for East Assiniboia who is not quite so much of a sinner in that respect—it has achieved something. I notice also that these same members were very attentive when the lumber combine investigation was going on last year. They seem particularly anxious whenever anything concerning the lumber industry of that country is before the House. Now Sir, last week we were in the throes of original documents and I used that word advisedly because I do not think there is any doubt but that we 'threw' the government. Notwithstanding the fact that we had a good many acrobatic performances on the part of the Prime Minister, one day saying: You can have the documents and the next day saying, you cannot, I am convinced that the reason we got the documents was because of the stand of the Conservative members in this House who fought for what they believed to be their constitutional right, and because of the aid they received from the Conservative and independent press of the country. And when we got these documents they confirmed the belief that the timber limits in the Northwest are not being administered by the present government in the interests of the people. Let me point out that the chief argument, and perhaps the only argument advanced on the other side of the House against our contention is, that the Liberals have done no worse than the Conservatives did. Hon. gentlemen opposite are continually harping on that throughout the country. I would like to read what the Toronto 'Globe' says, in its attempt to make the people of the country believe that the government had acted properly because they had put these limits up to public tender and given them to the highest bidder. The Toronto 'Globe' of February 4 says:

> Two or three considerations in the case would make them pause. In the first place, it is difficult to understand how the most serious of Mr. Ames' allegations, or rather inferences, can be well founded in view of the fact that no license to cut timber is ever issued except after the invitation of tenders, the license being granted to the highest bidder.

That is the stock argument of the Liberal party and press, but time and time again the fallacy of that argument has been shown up by gentlemen on this side. Believing that on the other side of the House there are men of intelligence, I cannot for one moment understand how they can hope that the farce they have gone through in connection with advertising these timber limits is not apparent to the people of Canada. The late Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) laboured this afternoon to make a defence, for any cause he can make the very best possible explanation and defence that can be offered, but to-day the weakness of his effort was apparent. I believe there is not a Liberal member on the other side of the House who does not feel in his heart disappointment at the defence of the government attempted by the ex-Minister of the Interior. Like all others he resorted to the old argument against the Conservatives: You did it when you were in power. Well that argument has been well and often answered from this side of the House. While everybody has got to admit that conditions were very different during the days of the Conservative government from what they are now, even admitting that the Conservatives did wrong before 1896, the people condemned them, passed judgment upon them, turned them out of power and put in power a set of men who they believed would conduct the business of the country in a better way. It is no argument to say that the Conservatives did what the Liberals are doing, and it is only advanced to-day for the want of a better argument on their part. Now, after the hon. member for St. Antoine introduced this question, the first who spoke on the government side was the late land commissioner, and he had not spoken for two minutes before he got very bold and he declared: Take the manly course of making a charge. Well, that may be a manly course for him to take, but to my mind the manly course for me to take under such circumstances would be that if I am accused or held under suspicion, my manly course would be to justify myself and prove to my friends and my country that I am not guilty. In our battle for the original papers, the government also asked us to make a charge, and they wanted us practically to swear that the copy was not like the original before they brought down the documents, knowing perfectly well as they did that it was absolutely impossible for any one to say that the copies were not like the originals until he had seen the originals. I say it is impossible to make an absolute charge in connection with the late commissioner of public lands, but to my mind there has been brought forth by the different speakers in this House quite sufficient to warrant inquiry, and the First Minister will find it very difficult to deny the motion for an inquiry. I said a few moments ago that the system of advertising these limits by the government was a farce and I repeat that statement. In 1896 when this government came into power all the timber limits that had been alienated were to be found around the Lake of the Woods, the Winnipeg river, and Lake Winnipeg, and a very short distance up the rivers that flow into Lake Winnipeg.

They were all not very far away, and there was not the same necessity of giving a very long time for advertising as in the case of the limits which are under discussion at the present time. These are hundreds of miles away from railways and are absolutely inaccessible. I am not familiar with the way in which the government advertise the limits; but it has been shown time and again in this House since this discussion began that they had simply a small notice of about three inches by two inches placed in a post office in the vicinity of the limits and had an advertisement inserted once in a small newspaper in the neighbourhood, and notices were sent to some, we do not know how many, of those who were supposed to be interested in buying timber lands. It has been shown beyond a doubt that it would take at least two weeks for tenders to go from Ottawa to Dauphin or Prince Albert or Edmonton, or wherever the notices might be placed, and back to Ottawa—one week going and one week coming. The people who would be most interested in buying those timber limits would not probably live where the notices were placed. We have shown or tried to show that these limits were so far away that it was absolutely impossible, even if those who wished to tender started on the first day on which the notice was given, for them to have made the journey. The peculiar feature of this matter is that the tenders were invariably called for in the winter, at a time when it was absolutely impossible to cruise over the territory. I think it has been fairly well established in this debate that those who asked that the limits should be put up had already cruised over them, and knew pretty well what they were asking for. I agree with some hon. gentlemen who have said that the government should know something about what the limits are worth before putting them up for tender. As individuals we do not sell a house or a farm without knowing something about it. The government are the trustees of this country, and it is commonly agreed that a trustee should take more care and pains in disposing of a property that does not belong to himself than he does of a property he owns. These timber limits do not belong to our hon. friends opposite; they never did.

An hon. MEMBER. They do now.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They do now, quite a lot of them. The 6,400 square miles which have been disposed of have probably been picked out of a thousand blocks. I do not say that there are not more timber limits in that country; but I do say that the friends of the government have had the first opportunity—why? It has been proven beyond any doubt why—because they had friends at court. There is a quintette—five men who have benefited from these lands. Most of them are in this House, and are from the Northwest. I know these men; I have lived in that country twenty-five years, and have gone in and out among them. If they have made money legitimately, I am glad of it. I am not one to hold as altogether responsible the gentlemen who have secured these limits; I hold the government responsible. I do not agree with the late Minister of the Interior when he says, as he did to-day: I have no responsibility; we put the lands up for tender, and we do not have to consider whether the tenders are genuine or not. What a condition of affairs that was. The Prime Minister has told us that the government is responsible for everything that takes place in the department. I hold the Prime Minister of this country responsible for the alienation of our public lands, not only timber lands but agriculture lands. This is a time when we have party government. The country is ruled largely by the caucus, and the caucus is ruled almost entirely by the First Minister. Hence we have in this country to-day a one-man government, and therefore we must hold that one man responsible.

Now, I have shown that the only argument these gentlemen put up is that these lands were advertised and were sold to the highest bidder. The man on the street at any rate will make up his mind that when you call for tenders, knowing that sufficient time is not given for the inspection of the lands, those tenders are a farce. Then, who opens the tenders? The late Land Commissioner, who is now the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). I am not going to charge that he was responsible for any changes which were made in those tenders; but I believe that somebody at court had something to do with changing the tenders. If not, how is it that a few friends of the late Minister of the Interior were always lucky enough to put in a tender just a little higher than the second one from the last? The country is bound to believe that there is something at least suspicious looking in that circumstance.

I do not think it necessary that I should take up very much of the time of the House, but the importance of this subject, the great importance of our lumber supply to the farmers of our Northwest, makes it imperative that I should not give a silent vote on the resolution submitted to us. The ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has told us that there is the Rainy river district from which we can draw our lumber. True, there is timber there, but it is owned to-day by manufacturers, and to that I have no objection because they are the right kind of men to own the timber. I like the way in which the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Ames) approached this subject when he said that in so far as the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) was a manufacturer of lumber and had his limits in the vicinity of his mills he had no criticism to make. I agree with the hon. gentleman, but the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) has not mills all the way from Lake Winnipeg to the foot of the Rockies, and you may go over that country to the water shed of the Saskatchewan and you will not go very far after leaving Lake Winnipeg before you will see a sign 'keep off the grass' by order of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows). Go a little further and you will see a similar sign by Mr. Fraser, of Ottawa. A little further on and you will see the same sign by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) again, and sometimes you will see a sign by the Imperial Pulp Company, and we would all like to know who are the members of that company. If we had this committee of investigation—and I do not see how the First Minister can refuse to grant it—we would perhaps be able to find who the Imperial Pulp Company are.

Lumber is one of the most important assets and necessities we have in our northwestern country, and I would like the people from the east and from British Columbia to understand its importance. The farmers of our Northwest believe that these timber limits have been alienated, and not alienated in the interests of the farmers. The ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) told us this afternoon that the timber is still there and the farmers can still have it. Yes, but only on paying what the speculator sees fit to charge them for it. Let me give you an illustration. Take a mill, supposed to cut on a mile limit, and say it cuts 2,500,000 feet of lumber. Suppose the individual who starts that mill pays a bonus of $500. That is a pretty good bonus. Our friends did not get any such bonus, and I claim that is sufficient to cut out speculators. Let us charge a bonus of $500 per square mile, which will be 20 cents per thousand feet, which will have to be added to the cost of manufacture. That charge is so small that, in all probability, it will not increase one iota the cost of the lumber to the farmer. But when the limit goes into the hands of a speculator, he will charge $2 per thousand feet and the price of the lumber is increased to that extent to the farmer, and this is due to the fact that this government has seen fit to alienate our timber limits into the hands of individuals.

As I said in the beginning, I am glad that these men are rich, but I do not want them to get rich on the land which has been alienated from our farmers on the prairies of the Northwest. And it is not only our timber limits which have gone to enrich these speculators. We have had the Saskatchewan land deal, the Galway horse and cattle deal, and what is most wonderful in this connection is that these deals and the Robbins irrigation deal went on from 1900 and 1901 until about 1904-5. All these deals occurred during that period, and it is a very strange coincidence that many of the same men who have benefited by these timber limit sales also benefited by the Galway Cattle Company, the Saskatchewan land deal, the Robbins Irrigation Company and all those other deals which went through during the years I have mentioned. Is it any wonder then that the country is suspicious? Is it any wonder that people suspect something wrong in connection with these matters and with our timber lands in the Northwest? I knew these men when they were no better off than the rest of us. I knew the five of them, and if they have made some money I am glad of it. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) said he was not a pauper ten years ago. No, he was not. He said also that he was not a millionaire now. I do not know whether he is or not, but I have a very good idea of what he and these other men were worth at that time, and I say again that no set of men could have accumulated the wealth these men have done unless they had very good friends at court.

If this is all right, if these timber lands have been properly administered, why object to an investigation? We on this side are very anxious to clear the skirts of hon. gentlemen opposite, of whom we have what we consider well founded suspicion. Some people do not like the word 'suspicion,' but there is a very strong suspicion throughout the country which these men ought, in justice to themselves, take the opportunity to remove. In the United States, I understand there is a law to which I would refer these gentlemen when they ask us to make a charge. I understand that over there the jury has to make an investigation, and upon this investigation depends whether a charge will be brought or not. That, it seems to me, is reasonable. Suppose I were to make a charge to-night against any one of these men. I am not a lawyer, but there are plenty lawyers here—too many I am afraid—and I would not be allowed in the investigation to go outside that specific charge. No other matters could be brought in. But we do not want an investigation confined to one charge. We want this whole matter of the alienation of our lands in the west investigated, so that we may know and understand what has been done. If it is all right, the people will feel so much better about it, if only they are allowed to know the facts. I am sorry that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is not here, as I am sure that after the pleading I have done the Prime Minister would rise at once and say: 'Give this commission right off, without further argument.' Now, that is all I have to say. But it was absolutely necessary that I should put myself on record. I have spoken from the bottom of my heart. I believe that our lands have not been disposed of in the best interests of the farmers. I represent the farmers, and I know pretty nearly what they want, what they think and what they believe. If the government want to stand well with the farmers of the Northwest—and they are the people of the Northwest—they will rise and say: 'If you will only sit down we are anxious to give you this commission.'

Mr. MELZAR AVERY (Frontenac). I had not intended saying anything on this question, as I think it has been pretty well threshed out. But there are one or two points which I may briefly mention, and which I think, the government should take notice of. In the first place, the Minister of the Interior seems to have fixed on a method by which the friends of the government could help themselves, and it looks as though their friends had done it. It would seem that the present member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) when commissioner of lands of this country, had plenty of time to look over the lands that were in his charge, and see what they were worth. Some of these timber lands were very valuable, no doubt, for when you find the price asked by a joint stock company is $500,000, that is evidence that the limit is very valuable. The former commissioner of lands, now a member of this House (Mr. Turriff), in justice to himself, should ask for an investigation. If he is innocent, as he claims he is, he should be the first man to demand an investigation, and not allow this cloud to hang over him. If the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) had been wise, he would have taken a leaf out of the book of British Columbia in the handling of these timber berths. How do they dispose of their timber in British Columbia ? Every holder of a timber limit has to pay $115 per mile annually, and a stumpage of 60 cents for every thousand feet he takes off. At this rate on this 2,400 square miles of timber limits that have been given out by this government under two bids the dues would be $276,000. And, for the three years, during which these timber limits have been held, instead of the small amount that has been paid—$7,500—the amount would have been $828,000, and that amount would have been in the pockets of the people. If the government continue to dispose of limits in this way, they will promote speculation and discourage the people who, otherwise, would take up these limits and put in sawmills and get out the lumber. These limits are held by large stockholders who have blanketed the whole country. They have to make a choice of twenty-five per cent, but they hold the whole area out of use and nobody else can get it. They have secured, in this way, the timber along the streams and in the available valleys, and they hold it because they expect the railroad to go through there and the timber to be made valuable from that cause. This will keep the timber lands there tied up for years. These men, when they put in their mill, will be able to charge their own prices and the people will have to pay them. I think the minister should have considered this matter, and should have taken a leaf out of the book of British Columbia in handling timber limits. The minister says that the government gets so much under every tender on these limits besides fifty cents a thousand feet and the ground rent also. But what does that amount to, especially when you consider that these speculators have tied up the whole country ? It is a mere bagatelle compared with what the timber is worth. I can tell the hon. minister that the people think that it was a foolish policy on his part, when he changed the law, that he did not make the law one for the benefit of the many instead of for the benefit of the few. I sincerely hope that, if there is any timber left, he will try to save it for the people of the country and not leave all for the benefit of the grafters.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech, but just that I may have a few minutes friendly talk with the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am glad he came in just to oblige me. The Prime Minister of this country is responsible, in my opinion, for the management of each one of his departments. He was elected in 1896 as head of the administration of this country. He divided the administration under the charge of superintendents, his ministers. He had no trouble in filling the great majority of the places, but there was one that he found pretty difficult—the Department of the Interior. He had a very knotty problem to solve—the Manitoba School question. He wanted to trade that question off for a head of the Department of the Interior. He sent his right hand man, the late Hon. J. Israel Tarte, up to Manitoba to see if he could not settle the Manitoba school question, and, at the same time, secure for him a man to take charge of the Interior Department. Mr. Tarte interviewed the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), and, I am informed, on very creditable authority, that this is about what took place. Mr. Tarte asked the ex-Minister of the Interior to settle this Manitoba school question, and the ex-minister said : There are three men you have to make terms with and get out of the way before I can carry the matter through in the Manitoba legislature—Mr. Prendergast, Mr. Joe Martin, and you must pacify Hon. Thomas Greenway. The late Mr. Tarte undertook this job. He went to Mr. Prendergast and said : You are fighting for the rights of the halfbreeds here for a paltry $1,000 a year ; throw up the sponge, give up the fight, and we will make you chief justice of Manitoba. The bargain was made ; Mr. Prendergast dropped out and was made chief justice. Then, Mr. Tarte went to the Canadian Pacific Railway and said : We want you to hire Mr. Joe Martin as your solicitor, and remove him to British Columbia, giving him $8,000 or $10,000 a year for five years. The Canadian Pacific Railway said : We will do it, if you will recoup us. Mr. Tarte replied : We will recoup you by increasing the subsidy on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. And that was carried out. Mr. Martin was engaged immediately by the Canadian Pacific Railway and sent out to British Columbia. And the Crow's Nest Pass subsidy, as we all know, was brought down and voted—double the subsidy that had been proposed by the Conservative government. As to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) he was promised a senatorship which he has not got yet, and which he has kicked for here a good many times. The Manitoba school question was settled as soon as these people were pacified. And the question of the ministry of the Interior was also settled. In what way? The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) said: I will take that department, provided I have full control without being subject to council. Mr. Tarte made that bargain, and the Prime Minister made the announcement here that he had appointed Hon. Mr. Sifton and had given him full control of that department—all the lands, timber, coal, and all the gold in the Yukon; he was to have it to handle as he saw fit.

Mr. FOSTER. Don't forget the whisky permits.

Mr. TAYLOR. Of course, the whisky permits were included—everything. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) accepted the Department of the Interior, and managed it as suited himself. And we saw last session, and we see to-day, as reported in speeches of hon. members in this discussion, what has taken place. I look upon this as the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) did the other night, as a practical, commonsense business man. The Prime Minister occupies the same position as the president of an incorporated company. He is president of an incorporated company for the Dominion and each taxpayer is a stockholder in the company. The Prime Minister assigns the departments to different superintendents. Fancy the president of an incorporated company being informed by one of the stockholders at the annual meeting that one of the superintendents was selling $100 worth of goods for $50, giving a rake-off to the purchaser of $25, and the president saying: No, I have faith in that fellow, I do not believe he did it and I will not grant an inquiry to find out; I will keep him there to run the business. That is the position in which the Prime Minister is to-day; he is charged by a stockholder with having such a superintendent and I expect that when the Prime Minister rises to answer me he will say: I have faith in the management of that department, I committed it to the ex-minister, and I do not believe he did anything wrong while in that department and therefore I will have no investigation.

I am not a lawyer but I have gone through this file and I want to look at it from a practical business standpoint and then I ask the Prime Minister to take the file and do the same. I make the statement that he cannot place that file before a jury of any half dozen judges in Canada who will look at it as I do who will not say: Guilty is the word. I do not think the Prime Minister has examined the file and I want to draw his attention to a few facts in connection with it, and ask him if he thinks any half dozen judges will not pronounce the former Land Commissioner guilty in connection with these tenders for berth 1108.

The first letter on this file reads:

We are instructed by a client to ask the department to put for sale timber berth of 60 miles——

It is typewritten fifty, but that is changed to sixty.

—to be selected from the islands in Moose lake in the district of Saskatchewan, and the land surrounding the lake not exceeding a distance of five miles from the shores thereof, the same to be selected in not more than six blocks. Islands or parts thereof, selected to be considered one block.

(Sgd.) PERKINS, FRASER & BURBIDGE.

The department writes a letter on October 12 to Perkins, Fraser and Burbidge, as follows:

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo in which you make application on behalf of a client for a timber berth of 60 miles on the islands, Moose lake, in the district of Saskatchewan. In reply I inclose herewith a copy of an advertisement which will shortly appear in the newspapers inviting competition for this berth, which has been numbered 1108.

They got busy. On October 12, they notified him that they had complied with his request and the berth would be put up. On October 12, they wrote another letter to the King's Printer, as follows:—

I am directed to request you to be good enough to cause inclosed advertisement calling for tenders for timber berth No. 1108 in the district of Saskatchewan, to be inserted once in each of the following papers. The Dauphin 'Press,' published at Dauphin; the 'Manitoba Free Press,' published at Winnipeg.

This land was in Saskatchewan; was there not a paper in Saskatchewan to send it to?

Please forward 150 copies of this advertisement to the Timber and Mines Branch of this department.

That letter was sent to the King's Printer on October 12. and on consulting the files in the library I find that berth No. 1108 was advertised on October 24, it appeared in the 'Free Press' two weeks after the notice was sent to the King's Printer, so that shortens the usually short notice by two weeks, before anybody knew anything about it.

Then we come to the tenders. The first tender is dated December 2, enclosed and marked to the Timber and Mines branch, tender for timber berth 1108. It reads as follows:

I beg to tender for timber berth No. 1108, in the district of Saskatchewan, surrounding Moose lake, and inclose herewith $1,000 bonus for same.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) A. W. FRASER.

That tender is marked as having been received by the Department of the Interior in the Timber and Mines branch on Wednesday, December 9, 1903, and is numbered 654,688. Next to that comes another tender dated September 2, signed Curry, for $6,420 with one of the little advertisements filed on it. That has not a number on it. As my friend from Toronto (Mr. Bristol) stated a few moments ago, it is not numbered, neither is it stamped as having been in the Timber and Mines branch of that department at all, and yet it is on the file as having been the second received.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there no envelope with it ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No envelope. There are envelopes on the others and the notice calling for tenders asks that they be sealed in envelopes and the envelopes are, according to the rule of the department, to be filed with the tender. There is no envelope, simply this typewritten document. Upon this is a receipt for the return of his cheque for $6,420, signed James Currie, but there is no envelope, no number, no stamp, and it is the second on the file. The third on the file is from W. H. Nolan. It is dated Ottawa, December 2, and is numbered 454,689. The other is 454,688. There is no number left to put on this second tender which is placed between the other two. This tender reads :

I desire to tender for timber berth No. 1108, Moose lake, and inclose herewith $7,000 bonus as per advertisement.

Yours truly,
W. H. NOLAN.

That is signed by the same hand that signed the Fraser tender and here is the $7,000 put in and I am bound to say as an expert in handwriting that the figures of that $7,000 never were made by Fraser, because they do not agree with any other figure, in that document. The figures are not the same, the ink is not the same, it is a different colour ; and the pen is not the same. The hon. member for East Assiniboia said the other night that receiving and opening these tenders locked up in his room alone, he was not a detective. He is familiar with Nolan's handwriting ; he is an intimate friend of Nolan's. When Nolan had a daughter married it was announced that the only outside visitor of any standing or note was the hon. member for East Assiniboia, and the finest gift that was presented to the bride was from the hon. member for East Assiniboia. He knew when he saw this tender signed by W. H. Nolan that it was not in his handwriting. That letter says that Nolan inclosed his cheque. We want to see that cheque. I am prepared to say and I will make good the statement that Nolan's cheque was never inclosed because we have from the hon. Minister of the Interior, Mr. Fraser's statement that he first put in a tender for one client of $1,000 and then he got word from another client asking him to put in another tender and he put in another tender. Whoever heard of a lawyer of any standing acting for two clients? I will make this statement, and I ask the hon. member for East Assiniboia to contradict it, that the letter of Mr. Nolan never inclosed Mr. Nolan's cheque, that it was Mr. Fraser's cheque. Then, when the hon. gentleman saw a tender signed by Nolan and accompanied by Mr. Fraser's cheque, was not that enough? Although he was not acting as a detective he was acting for the people of the country.

Mr. LANCASTER. He ought to have been.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, he ought to have been.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which tender ought he to have accepted ?

Mr. LANCASTER. He ought to have had an investigation and found out which was the genuine one.

Mr. GANONG. Has the Minister of Public Works acted for two clients ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That does not answer my question.

Mr. TAYLOR. Now, I submit these facts to the Prime Minister and I want him to look at them and say whether he will grant an investigation to find out whether that servant of his did his duty. Here we have a tender written out all right in one hand and the $7,000 filled in in different coloured ink and by a different hand, written in by some other man and everybody knows a lawyer's handwriting.

Mr. SPROULE. Why should a lawyer put in a tender for a client without giving the name of the tenderer ?

Mr. TAYLOR. He forged that tenderer's name. He signed Nolan's name, he might have had authority to sign it but he should have put under it 'per A. W. Fraser.' and anybody who is acquainted with Nolan's handwriting knows that this is not his. On December 4 they write a letter to Mr. A. W. Fraser inclosing his cheque of $1,000 as follows :

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of of your tender of the 2nd instant inclosing your cheque for $1,000 which sum you offer as a bonus for a license to cut timber on berth 1108 in the district of Saskatchewan. As your tender was not the highest received, your cheque is returned herewith.

Your obedient servant,

Mr. SPROULE. Who signs that ?

Mr. TAYLOR. P. G. Keyes, secretary. They write another one to Mr. Currie and this is funny :

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your tender of the 2nd instant inclosing your cheque for $6,420 which sum you offer as a bonus for a license to cut timber on berth 1108 in the district of Saskatchewan. As your tender was not the highest received, it of course could not be accepted. As you are aware the cheque in question was delivered to you at Ottawa.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) P. G. KEYES.

Mr. AMES. Where is it addressed to ?

Mr. TAYLOR. It is addressed to him at Ottawa—W. H. Nolan, Esq., Ottawa, Ont.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought he lived in Montreal.

Mr. TAYLOR. The next letter is one addressed to the department on the same date:

We have received a letter from Mr. W. H. Nolan, instructing us to act for him in connection with this berth, and make the necessary payment thereon. Kindly let us know the amount required to be paid for ground rent in connection therewith.

Yours truly,
PERKINS, FRASER, BURBIDGE AND GIBSON.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they inclose that letter?

Mr. TAYLOR. This letter goes to the department and the date is the same—December 12.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they inclose Nolan's letter ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No. Nolan received the letter himself here, on December 11, the day before.

As I do not know the area of the islands included in the berth, I am referring the matter to my solicitors, Messrs Perkins, Fraser and Burbidge and they will look after my interest and pay the ground rent.

This is signed with Nolan's own signature which is as different from the signature on the tender as the moon is from the sun. When the hon. gentleman opened these tenders alone had he any of the other tenders ?

In the time of the Conservative administration no tenders were opened by a single officer of the department. The deputy minister and two first-class clerks opened all the tenders, but here, the right hon. Prime Minister gave the running of that branch of his business, that he was president of, to the Department of the Interior, without being subject to council, they ran it as they liked and they discarded the old and the safer plan. No man should undertake to do this work alone. He would say to himself: If I had two others with me every one would then know that it was done right. Under the old system, however honest an official might be, there was no chance of suspicion. The deputy minister and two clerks opened the tenders and they submitted them to the minister for approval. There is another funny letter here. It is dated the 16th of March, 1904. You remember that they only published this notice in two papers, one published in Dauphin and the other in Winnipeg, and they sent a notice to the Crown Timber agent at Winnipeg. On the 16th of March, 1904 this gentleman writes to the department :

I beg to report that up to the present no advice has been received as to whom berth No. 1108, tenders for which closed on December 2 last, was awarded. Be good enough to inform me as to this, and at the same time state what rental, if any has been paid.

Your obedient servant,
A. F. CROWE.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the date of the transfer from Nolan to the Imperial Pulp Company ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know. That occurred later on. But, this is a funny point; on March 23 the department writes back to Mr. Crowe at Winnipeg :

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, file No. 188,193, in which you ask to be advised of the name of the successful tenderer for berth No. 1108, and also what amount of rental had been paid. In reply I am to say that as this berth is within the Prince Albert agency correspondence in that connection is being carried on with the agent at Prince Albert. It was an oversight in forwarding to you a copy of the advertisement calling for tenders for this berth.

Your obedient servant,
P. G. KEYES.

They put the advertisement only in one paper at Dauphin and they sent the notice to a paper published at Winnipeg, hundreds of miles away from Prince Albert. What was the information which they gave in regard to this sale at Prince Albert ? They sent a single notice to the postmaster at Winnipeg and another to the Crown timber agent. In view of these plain facts which are there on that file I ask the Prime Minister to submit them to any jury of five lawyers, or to any jury of five judges, and if they do not bring in a verdict and say that the man who accepted these tenders is guilty, that the department has not been run in the interest of the country, that something is wrong, that he should not have accepted a tender bearing a name that he knew was not signed by the tenderer and accompanied by the cheque of some lawyer, I will be very much surprised. The whole thing is fishy from start to finish, and now that the matter is brought to the attention of the Prime Minister I am satisfied he will give some explanation. Although he gave the ex-minister (Mr. Sifton) full control without asking him to report to council, and although the right hon. gentleman allowed the member for Brandon to deal with these matters as he saw fit, yet, now that he has seen what has been done I am sure he will feel it his bounden duty to the country to say that the whole department must be investigated. The whole argument has been on the other side to point to what the Conservatives did in 1882 and 1883. What do we care what they did ? If they did wrong they were turned from power and this government was put in power on a promise to the people of Canada that they would administer public affairs in a businesslike manner. It does not matter what the Conservatives did; the people of the country expect the Liberals to do right when they are in power. Now that the Prime Minister has found out that wrong has been committed he should be the first to say: I will have it investigated and as we can cancel their leases if they were obtained by fraud, we will make some of those fellows who get rich out of it poney up if they were guilty of fraud.

Mr. F. R. LALOR (Haldimand). The motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) has been pretty well discussed, and I believe the members of this House and the people of the country generally thoroughly understand the question that is at issue. After having listened to this debate for several days with a great deal of attention, what most strikes me is the silence of the Liberal members, and that I say is to the credit of the Liberal members who come from the great province of Ontario. During this debate there is only one Liberal member from that province who has had the hardihood to stand up and defend this transaction, and he is the member for South Grey (Mr. Miller). He would defend anything. I don't think there is anything that this government could do that the hon. member for South Grey would not defend. He has been the one Ontario member sitting upon the government benches who has defended this timber deal. Why is it that the Liberal members from Ontario are so silent? Is it not that they dare not go back to their constituencies and tell them they have defended this transaction in the House of Commons? They imagine it is bad enough for the Prime Minister to call them in, to ring the bell and have them stand up and stultify themselves by voting, without defending the transaction by word of mouth. And the members from the other provinces are also silent. We have not heard any defence of this transaction from a Nova Scotia member, nor have we heard a New Brunswick member speak on the government side. It is also true that no Liberal member from the province of Quebec has spoken in defence of it, and I am not at all surprised at that, because, if I understand it aright, and if reports are true, Mr. Sifton and his quartette in this House are not very popular with the members from Quebec. They don't feel very kindly disposed towards them ; they remember some of the votes and transactions of these gentlemen in this House, and, remembering, they don't feel like defending them. In fact, it looks very much like as though the Liberal members of this House, outside of those from Alberta and Saskatchewan, proposed to let the quartette who have got rich at the expense of the country defend themselves as best they can. But when the time comes, no doubt these gentlemen will record their votes as good subservient followers of the Prime Minister, although they are not willing to make any attempt to defend this transaction. The only defence we have heard from the Liberal side is that twenty-eight years ago the Conservative party did something which they say is nearly as bad as what this Liberal government is doing to-day. Now, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the great county from which I come, the county of Haldimand, which I have the honour to represent, did not send me to this House to defend the conduct of the Conservative party a quarter of a century ago. They sent me here to find out what is going on at present, to support good measures and to denounce measures that are not in the interest of the people of Canada. That ' you're-another ' argument, which the Liberals are so fond of, is not an argument that will have any weight with the people of Canada. We all know there were mistakes made by the Conservatives twenty-five years ago, and we also know that the Liberal members—some of whom sit in the House to-day, amongst others the Prime Minister himself—were loud in their denunciations of the Conservative party at that time in connection with timber transactions. Although I was a young man then, I remember that the Liberals denounced these timber transactions from the public platforms, and charged that the Conservatives had given to their friends timber limits for which there was no value received.

Mr. LANCASTER. And the Conservative government ordered an investigation.

Mr. LALOR. Yes ; I remember that when a transaction was brought before this House, which could not be compared with the transaction we are discussing to-day, Sir John Thompson expelled that member from the House of Commons. We cannot expect anything of that kind from this government ; we would not expect them to expel one of their supporters for dishonest acts. An hon. member says that if they did there would be none left, but although I will not go that far, I think there would be some expelled if we started investigating the Department of the Interior. The government of this country have disposed of no less than about 6,000 square miles of timber lands in the Northwest. We are willing to admit that some of that has gone into the hands of honest saw-mill men, but there is not the slightest doubt that 2,400 square miles has gone into the hands of speculators. Who are the speculators, and to whom did the limits go? I believe that some of the members of this House are interested in these, and that some of them have passed into the hands of gentlemen who are members of this House, and not only members of this House, but related very closely to the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), the ex-Minister of the Interior. I notice from the reports that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) seems to be one of the most fortunate gentlemen in tendering for timber limits, and I also notice that the Imperial Pulp Company is another most fortunate tenderer. You will find that in only one instance was the member for Dauphin outbid, and that was when the Imperial Pulp Company outbid him. This country is anxious to know who is the Imperial Pulp Company. Is it like the North Atlantic Trading Company? Is the government afraid to tell us who the members composing the Imperial Pulp Company are? Surely if they were dealing with a corporation such as the Imperial Pulp Company, the government must have known who that corporation was, and why don't they enlighten us by telling us what gentlemen compose that company? Are they members of this House? Do they belong to the same crowd who have been getting so much graft from this government in connection with timber transactions and land deals in the west? Why don't they give us the names and expose to us who those parties are? The hon. member for East Assiniboia the other night tried his best to defend these transactions. He was the Commissioner of Dominion Lands at the time these tenders were put in; he was the gentleman who opened these tenders behind sealed doors, with no one else present; and the people of this country are very suspicious as to what he did in opening those tenders, and whether he or somebody else in the department did not favour their friends by enabling them to put in tenders just a few dollars above others. Hon. gentlemen will tell us that there was competition in these tenders; but we know from the way they were advertised that the whole competition was a farce, that sufficient time was not given for people to examine the lands, that only the favoured few knew anything of their value, and these few had no doubt every possible means of cruising over the limits long in advance of the time that the tenders were asked for.

Another peculiar circumstance is that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) seems to have had advance knowledge, before anybody else, as to the route of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and was therefore able to go over the line and select the best timber lands along that route; and then, by a system of bogus tendering, was able to get hold of these lands for himself. How was it that that hon. gentleman was able to get such knowledge? Was it because his brother-in-law was the then Minister of the Interior? I would not suppose that was the reason, but the people of this country look on the matter with a great deal of suspicion, and they imagine that there must have been something due to the close relationship of the hon. member for Dauphin to the hon. member for Brandon. In more than one instance we have had an illustration of the old saying that blood is thicker than water. We have the hon. member for East Assiniboia, the former land commissioner, befriending his brother-in-law, Adamson, not only in regard to timber limits, but in regard to other transactions, like the Saskatchewan valley land transaction, the Galway cattle ranch deal, and the Robbins Irrigation Company. All of these transactions have been with gentlemen occupying seats in this House and relatives one of another, and without the slightest doubt they have received benefits from that relationship which has made them the wealthy men they are to-day. An hon. gentleman representing a Manitoba constituency has told us that he knew these gentlemen some years ago when they were not very well off, but they have suddenly acquired great wealth. We are living in a time when, I admit, it is easy to make money in the Northwest, and many men have made money there. I am willing to acknowledge that there are great opportunities to make money in that country. But I ask if other gentlemen from the Northwest have been so fortunate as these gentlemen. They have probably as much ability, but they have not accumulated as great wealth, nor have they obtained possession of the best timber lands between Winnipeg and the Rocky mountains, and the best wheat lands in that country, as these other gentlemen have.

Some days ago an application was made to the government for original documents. That application, as we all know, was fought in this House, day after day, until finally the original documents were brought down. Those original documents, I think, have been a revelation to the members of this House and to the people of this country. I am not going into them in detail, because they have been already explained. But those original documents show on their face that in the Department of the Interior there was something radically wrong. They show that different tenders were put in, in the same handwriting, by one individual, one filled out for a very small sum and another left blank to be filled in in the department. The question is, who in that department filled in these tenders, and was able to ascertain what the other tenders were?—because the documents brought down show plainly that the blanks were filled in by some one in the Department of the Interior.

As to the value of the timber limits which have been secured by the Imperial Pulp Company and the hon. gentlemen sitting opposite, I cannot give any better illustration than the fact that in one case where $500 was the tender the gentleman who secured the timber limit offered it for sale for $500,000. But the question is not what these timber limits are worth to-day. It is what they are going to be worth in ten or twenty years from now. If they are worth $1,000,000 now, I think the time will come when they will be worth tens of millions.

We can hardly imagine the amount of money that these men are going to make out of these transactions. These timber lands are going to grow in value so much as to bring these men fortunes even beyond the conceptions of the members of this House.

Then, these timber berths were granted on conditions entirely different from those of the old Conservative government. I am not going to defend the actions of that government. It was not a special berth here or there that was tendered for; but this government not only received tenders for a certain area of land, but gave the parties the privilege of selecting the land from the best timber lands in the country. The hon. member for Brandon tells us that there is a great quantity left. I am not prepared to dispute that; I do not know what quantity of timber is there; but I do know that the gentlemen who were successful tenderers were able to select the very best timber lands, and no limit of time was imposed within which they were obliged to operate them. They are able to hold them for ever; whereas under the old Conservative government a sawmill had to be erected and certain other conditions complied with.

When this government came in, they wiped out all those conditions and made these leases perpetual. As long as there is a stick of timber on the limit, the lease continues, and these lands increase in value every year. It is no argument to tell us that twenty-five years ago a Conservative government granted timber lands at a certain price per acre or even farm lands. Twenty-five years ago, 50 cents an acre was a good price for the most fertile lands in the great west, but to-day that land is worth from $25 to $40 an acre. It is the same with timber lands. The conditions have changed entirely within the last twenty-five years, and in the next ten or twenty-five these lands will have doubled or trebled again in value. Who will pay this increased value? It will be the poor settler who wants to build a barn or a house; and the speculator, who has got from the government these valuable and extensive timber areas, will reap the profit. This question is one in which the people are particularly interested. A few friends of the government have become millionaires and multimillionaires and every dollar must come out of the pockets of the people. I do not see how the government can fail to grant this investigation. The resolution is a most moderate one. The right hon. the First Minister certainly owes it to his own self respect and to public opinion to accede to this resolution and allow this investigation to be had. The request is a fair and honest one, and the only reason for not granting it must be that there is something in the department which will not bear the light of day. Why would the First Minister refuse this investigation? Is it because he has something to hide? Is he afraid that the people will find out what has really taken place in the Department of the Interior? It has become a continual scandal from one end of the country to the other that certain members close to the government have made great fortunes out of the country, and it is only justice to the people who have to pay that they should be given the opportunity of looking into the original documents in the Department of the Interior. If the government refuse to grant an investigation, we can only conclude that they are afraid to have revealed what has really been done in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. JOHN CRAWFORD (Portage la Prairie). At this late hour, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go at any length into details, but only rise for the purpose of correcting some misstatements made by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) took exception to our drawing comparisons between the administration of this government and that of the late government. But it seems to me that it is quite proper we should do this, especially when we see on the opposition benches some hon. members who formed part of the late Conservative cabinet, and who no doubt, if a change of government should take place, would be again in office. That being the case, it is only right that we should draw attention to the record of these hon. gentlemen and judge from that record what we might expect of them should they ever succeed in again winning the confidence of the people.

The charge is made that our timber lands are being administered in the interest of speculators and not of the country. Well, to show how unfounded is this charge, let me point to some sales of timber berths, with the parties interested in which I am well acquainted. Take berth No. 1388. That berth is in the northwest corner of the province of Manitoba, and the tenders on it were $307, $430, $2,000, $6,300, and $8,100. The highest tenderer got the berth. The competition was closed on the 18th of September, 1907. Now let me point to a sale in 1903. Berth No. 333 was put up to tender. It comprised 23 square miles, and the tenders were as follows: $3,025, $4,600, $5,114.44, $7,283, $7,510, $9,200 and $25,225. Surely there is a case which contradicts the statement of hon. gentlemen opposite. Here is another berth which was put up for competition, berth No. 335. The lowest tender was $1,005; the next was $1,111.45 and the successful tender was $3,150. The successful tenderers in connection with these berths are gentlemen whom I know and with whom I have discussed the situation. But here is another berth which was dealt with by our friends opposite when they were in office. Berth No. 410 in the year 1884, 16¼ square miles. I know the gentleman who got it. All he had to do was to come to Ottawa and ask for it, and he got it without price, competition or any thing else. I give you that to show the difference between the operations of the timber business and the administration of the two parties.

Our hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) seems to have been specially selected as the target for hon. gentlemen opposite in this matter. One of them said to-night that Mr. Burrows was never unsuccessful except when the Imperial Pulp Company came into competition with him. Well, I have run over a few of the limits in connection with his operations. I find that he tendered on berth No. 888, $750 and that Knox Bros., of Gladstone bid $850, only $100 more. Berth No. 960, Mr. Burrows' tender was $2,100, and the tender of Thomas Mackie was $10,000. There was no evidence of collusion there, both of these tenderers being friends of the Liberal party. For No. 958, Mr. Burrows' tender was $1,200 and the successful tender was $1,650. For berth 988, Mr. Burrows' tender was $3,500, while the successful tender was $3,769.40. In berth 1050, Mr. Burrows' tender was $6,000, while the successful tender of McDonald & Frith was $13,125. In berth 1281, Mr. Burrows' tender was $5,100 and that of D. A. Robertson was $5,195. This last was a very close one. I am satisfied that if these figures had been reversed and Mr. Burrows had been the successful tenderer at the amount stated, there would have been a charge of collusion and wrongdoing on the part of the administration.

Mr. STAPLES. May I ask the hon. member (Mr. Crawford) a question? Would he tell the House how many timber limits the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) had succeeded in getting from this government?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have those figures here, but I think I will not look them up to-night. There is one thing in connection with the holdings of the hon. member for Dauphin that hon. members opposite were glad to pass over very quickly. That is the hon. gentleman's holdings at Grandview. They take the position that these holdings are all right. There is very good reason why these hon. gentlemen should treat them in a very adroit manner, that is that a considerable portion of these holdings in Dauphin were of timber limits that had been disposed of by the Conservative government at a small price. For instance, there was one limit of 28¼ miles which had been sold by the Conservative government for $800, but for which Mr. Burrows paid $16,000. This constituted a very good reason why these hon. gentlemen did not wish to inquire into his holdings at that point.

I do not wish to delay the House, but there is one other matter I desire to bring before you, Mr. Speaker. That matter is the extravagant statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite throughout this whole debate. Hon. members know the very high estimates of value that have been put on these timber limits which are under discussion. For instance, take the Cormorant lake limit. I have a letter here written by Mr. H. M. McDonald and published in the newspapers which, I think, ought to go on 'Hansard.' It will be seen that he replies to the statements made by the hon. gentleman from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) :

Editor 'Journal.'—As considerable prominence has been given the names of McDonald and Frith and the Saskatchewan Lumber Company by Messrs. Ames, Perley and other members of parliament, on the floor of the House of Commons within the last few days, as reported by the 'Morning Citizen,' I will ask you to give me space in the columns of your valuable paper to correct some of the grossly misleading statements and insinuations made by these gentlemen—statements which put us in a false position, and which I cannot allow to pass unchallenged. Permit me at the outset to say that I have not any objection, on the contrary, I heartily invite the fullest investigation into any timber limit transaction I have ever had with the Dominion government. I have never asked any favours that I am aware of, neither have I received any, and I never had any understanding with Mr. Fraser or any one else, as to tendering or not tendering on any limit, as some of the statements of Mr. Ames would seem to insinuate. So far as I know, either Mr. Ames or Mr. Perley would have had an equal chance with me to secure any of these limits they refer to.

Mr. Ames is reported as having stated that Cormorant lake limit probably contains six or seven million feet to the square mile, and I hope he is correct in his figures, however, I have to say to him if he can find that quantity on it any time before the end of this year of our Lord, he can have one-half of it for his trouble.

For Mr. Perley, who is himself a lumberman, and should know the value of timber, there is even a bigger bargain. He deals in large figures in reference to that 'sacrifice,' as he was pleased to call it, 'of 125 square miles near the Pas,' and which he says is held to-day at $375,000; that very limit Mr. Perley can have for $75,000 without the $300,000 at all, or if too small for his personal consideration, if he can induce some of his friends to buy it for $375,000 he can have that trifling $300,000 (that falls from his tongue so glibly), as a commission. Any one unacquainted with the real situation would, by the speeches of these gentlemen, be led to believe that we were speculators buying and holding limits merely to the prejudice of the settler generally, whereas the truth is, we have for the last three or four years been operating large saw and planing mills, and at the present time are giving employment to over three hundred men. In view of these facts it will be seen that the statements and insinuations made with respect to the McDonalds are, to say the least, unfair, and while appreciating the difficulty that politicians find in locating political capital, I object to transactions with which I have been connected being so misconstrued and distorted as to convey to the mind of the public the impression that something was wrong.

H. M. McDONALD.

Ottawa, February 4, 1908.

Mr. PERLEY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) tell us how much was paid for that limit?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not know at this time. I am ready to leave the matter as it stands.

Mr. PERLEY. Perhaps I may be allowed a word of personal explanation in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford). I am glad he has read the letter of Mr. McDonald. That letter attempts to show that I have tried to lead this House to believe that this limit was worth $375,000. Of course, I stated nothing of the kind. I know nothing of the value of the limit, but these gentlemen themselves, in their prospectus, asked $375,000 for it. That is all I said—they paid $13,000 for the limit and they asked $375,000 for it. I take it for granted that these business men have some reason for their position when they ask that price for the limit, though I have never pretended to know anything about the value of it myself.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Perley has corrected himself. If he would manage to correct his friends I should be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. PERLEY. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) will be good enough to read 'Hansard' he will see that what I am saying now is exactly what I said the other night.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). It is not my intention to detain the House very long. I think that nearly everything has been said that need be said on this subject. But my name has been dragged into this discussion and some effort has been made by hon. members on the other side to make me pass for a millionaire, and in case my creditors should take these representations too seriously, I think it best that I should take this opportunity to explain that I do not possess the wealth with which these hon. gentlemen would endow me. Of course, some of the new members of the House who have spoken do not know that this question was thoroughly threshed out over twenty years ago. But everybody must see that it is a small defence on the part of those implicated in the transactions mentioned in this debate to bring up the tu quoque argument. So far as concerns those matters with which my name has been connected, I have no defence to make. Hon. members have only to read 'Hansard' of many years ago to see that there is nothing whatever in what has been said so far as I am concerned. This whole question should be considered in two ways. First, not only the members of this House but the 'man on the street' will remember that, from the very beginning of the session, documents—original documents—have been asked for. These were refused by the government. Why? Many reasons were given, but it is evident that no good reasons were given, because the government at last brought down these documents. When the government did bring them down we found that in the very case which is now before the House bogus tenders had been given to the Department of the Interior. That is one thing which is now known by the public and the discussion which has been going on for three days past has been on these tenders which were not bona fide.

When the charge was made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) in his motion and very ably sustained by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) it constituted a very serious accusation against the government, a very serious accusation for men who posed upon the stump as members of an honest government, yet not a minister rose to defend the administration. Who was put up to defend the government? A private member, the hon. member for East Assiniboia who rose to defend himself before anything else; and in doing so, he had the audacity to say that hon. members on this side should be manly enough to bring an accusation against him. We have heard that so often in this House that I think we ought to put a stop to it. Such an argument is childish. Bring an accusation! Could a stronger accusation be brought against a government than the one brought by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) or could stronger arguments be advanced than those used by the hon. member for St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames)? The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) says: Bring an accusation against me. There is no accusation to bring against him as a member of the House, the accusation is against the Department of the Interior, against the government. The hon. member was not a member at that time, he was an employee of the government and I have no doubt it was on account of that that he thought it was his duty to defend himself.

One statement of his was that when the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) made his tour in the west last summer, he did not dare to accuse either the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) or any of his colleagues implicated in these same transactions in that part of the country. I have heard that before but never thought it was taken seriously. I had the honour to be with the chief of the opposition in that tour and at every meeting we addressed—and we addressed over sixty meetings in the west and in the east—we spoke of these transactions, and nearly every one whom we addressed in the west knew of them and appreciated them. Why should we have been afraid to speak of those transactions in the west when we had spoken of them in this House in the presence of the hon. gentlemen implicated? Once for all it is childish to attempt to make the people believe that in the west or anywhere else we are afraid to speak of the transactions which have been spoken of in this House; our statements about them are in print and shall go to posterity. But my hon. friend feels the necessity of defending himself.

The hon. member has brought my name into this. What a small business it is for him to talk about members who made application twenty-seven years ago for limits in the Northwest. Hon. members will remember that at that time we did in a very candid and honest way what everybody did not only Conservative members of parliament but Liberal members of parliament, we applied for timber limits. Blanks were left on the table of the House for any one who wanted limits to apply for them. That western country was just opened up, no one knew anything about it, it had not even been surveyed. We knew it was an immense country, it was a kind of advertisement to have as many people in the House or out of the House as possible apply for limits to make it known not only in Canada but in other countries that there was an enormous country there which we wished to have exploited. Over 2,000 applications were made. It has been said this afternoon that 500 licenses were granted. It did not cost the government of Canada a cent for the granting of the orders in council. Over 2,000 applications were put in and five hundred orders in council were passed, but only four licenses were granted. As was said this afternoon the government made money out of all that. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) knew he had to defend himself and to defend the government, but he has no business to advance that tu quoque argument.

The best and most practical way to bring this to a conclusion is to examine the policy of the two parties upon that question. The Conservative party were in power in 1872. That territory had just been acquired by the Conservative party against every possible opposition that could be made by the Liberal party. It had been bought for a small sum of money against the arguments and the work of hon. gentlemen opposite. The Conservative government passed regulations which were in the interest of the country. No man could get a limit unless he paid, unless a mill was erected and some work was done. The limits brought money into the treasury. The Liberals came into power in 1874 and immediately changed that law, making it easier for their friends to obtain limits or whatever could be obtained in the Northwest without bringing the same amount of money into the public treasury. That has been their policy throughout. They changed the law and then during the time they were in office they granted 605 square miles of timber limits, but not a foot of wood was cut. It was all given without competition, and for ground rent they received only $6,160. That was the Liberal policy, the policy of the party which later on declared that the land was for the settler and that Canada belonged to the Canadians. In 1878, when the Conservatives came into power, they reverted to the law of 1872. obliging a man obtaining a timber limit to erect a mill, to work the mill and to saw the timber. They increased the amount of rent from $2.50 to $5. Any man who obtained a timber limit had to pay $5 a year rent for every mile that he rented from the government. What did that bring to the government? The hon. member for East Assiniboia spoke of these 2,000 applications which he took from 'Hansard' of 1896. Any man who knows how to read can do that. He will find that Mr. Charlton, in May, 1886, mentioned the name of nearly everybody in Canada except members of his own party. Any man could do that. At that time these applications did not cost the country anything at all. The orders in council, as I said a moment ago, did not cost anything. Three or four licenses were granted and how much did the Canadian government make out of them? When the Conservative government was in power they worked for the best interest of Canada, not for their friends and they did not favour anybody. Every man who applied for a license in the Northwest, Liberal or Conservative, was treated alike. No Conservative had any privilege over a Liberal in the House or outside of it. How much revenue did the Canadian government derive from this source? All that the Liberal government got from 1874 to 1878 was $6,160. How much did the Liberal-Conservative government get from 1879 to 1886?—a short period of time? They restored the law to the condition in which it was in 1872. The law had been changed by the Liberal administration in such a way as to help their friends but the Conservative government changed it so as to make it more difficult for any man to acquire a timber limit. Notwithstanding that fact what was the result? The Conservative government received for ground rents from 1879 to 1886, $24,062.27. Where orders in council had been passed but no licenses had been granted the government received $21,226.25, and for royalties where timber was cut the government received $8,587.92. Altogether from 1879 to 1886 the Canadian government received out of timber limits in the Northwest $54,176.44. That illustrates the difference between the administration of the affairs of that country by a Conservative government and a Liberal government. This afternoon the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) said : We have not changed anything ; the regulations under which we have administered the timber in the Northwest are the same as they were under the Conservative administration. How can we be blamed ? That reminds me of the remark of a good farmer who said : It is true that there is not much difference between the policy of the Liberal and Conservative government ; they have adopted your policy on pretty nearly everything, but where you committed a venial sin they commit a sacrilege. The government have done it here. Let us take the explanation which has been given by the hon. member for Brandon. While the Conservatives, during eighteen years were not permitted by their government to do anything wrong in the Northwest, Liberal members of parliament or their friends, under the very same rules and regulations, have been allowed by the government to become wealthy by the acquisition of timber limits in the Northwest. The hon. member for Brandon also said this afternoon : We have limits in the Northwest for 225 years to come. That is no excuse. We are here as trustees of the people in charge of the wealth and the assets of Canada. We have no right to give away to our friends in the Northwest or anywhere else wealth that may last hundreds of years. It is no excuse for us to do anything which a private individual would not do if he were administering his own affairs. We have also heard about the length of time during which these limits had been advertised. The hon. member for Brandon said : You have accused us of selling limits on too short notice ; we are giving the same amount of notice that was given by the Conservatives—thirty or forty days. He read a list of all the timber limits which were granted where the time during which they were advertised was no longer than the time which has been given lately. But, what was it that struck me while he was speaking ? How is it that, whether the time was short or whether the time was long, there were men who knew where the good limits of the Northwest were ? These men were friends of the government. They went to the Department of the Interior, they were received in a friendly way, and they submitted tenders for limits in the west. They did not go out and examine them at all. They knew what was in these limits. They knew the amount of timber there. They knew what kind of timber was there and they put in tenders like those we have had before the House. One tender was put in for $1,000. One hon. gentleman says that we do not need any investigation, that we know all about it. We know that a tender was submitted for $1,000. We know that there was another tender for six thousand and some hundreds of dollars. As soon as that tender was put in by what machinery was it that some one else knew that there was a tender for $6,000 and how was it that somebody came over to the department and put in a tender for $7,000—a blind tender, a bogus tender ? A lawyer comes and says : I have clients who want to tender. A man can stay in the city of Ottawa in that way and buy the whole Northwest ; yet we are told that there is no use in having an investigation. A man gets up behind there, a man who has no more to do with that in a technical way than the man in the moon, and protests that there has been no wrong doing. The hon. member for Assiniboia had something to do with it, not as a member of parliament but as an employee of the government. He knew all about it. What is the Imperial Pulp Company ? Who compose the Imperial Pulp Company ? Are we not entitled to know that ? Yes. It may be something like the North Atlantic Trading Company. We may have the very same thing in sight. The hon. member for Brandon, this afternoon, defended his administration, and he would have to work for a year and a half every year to defend his administration. He said it was all right. Did he not pass a contract for a million dollars when he was a minister of the Crown, a trustee of Canada sworn to do his duty ? He passed a contract for a million of dollars with a company that never existed, and that money was paid to a company which never existed. When we wanted to find out to whom it had been paid we were told that we could not know, that we were not entitled to know, and the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was the first man to rise in his place and say : You shall not know if Mr. Preston will not tell you. What is the Imperial Pulp Company ? It is something of the same kind. My impression is that the North Atlantic Trading Company was composed of members of parliament and, it may be, of ministers too, and deputy ministers and nobody can remove that impression from me. What is the Imperial Pulp Company ? Of whom is it composed ? Why should I not believe that it is composed of members of parliament, and why are we not entitled to know? Why is the country not entitled to know ? Why should not this question be investigated ? Who is Mr. Nolan ? He may never have existed.

Mr. TAYLOR. He is a brother-in-law of Gallery's, isn't he?

Mr. BERGERON. I don't know. We heard the other day of a new organization called the Sturgeon Lake Lumber Company. What is that organization ?

Mr. FOSTER. That is easy.

Mr. BERGERON. The Sturgeon Lake Lumber Company is registered at Regina, Saskatchewan, and it is composed of, amongst others, J. G. Turriff. Who is J.

G. Turriff ? Another member is A. Adamson. Who is A. Adamson ? Another is George McCraney. Who is he ? Another is A. J. Bell. Who is he ? There is a gentleman by the name of Dempster whose first name I cannot get, but he is Dominion land agent at Humboldt, Saskatchewan. Who are these gentlemen ? I know some who bear the same names and who occupy seats in this House. Are these the same gentlemen who are members of parliament ? Compare that with the applications made 22 years ago by men who applied like everybody else, and any man had a right to apply inside the House as well as out of it, and a great many did so. But these applicants were told by an honest government that when they wanted to get limits in the west or anywhere else, whether they wanted to make money or not (and it might be a legitimate ambition to make money they were told by the honest Conservative government of these days : You can have a mile of timber limits but you will have to pay $5 a year for it, and you will have to pay stumpage on the timber, and you will have to erect a sawmill and in that sawmill you will have to manufacture so many thousand feet of lumber a day. These were the conditions imposed by an honest Conservative administration. Were the same terms made by this Liberal government, which is now in power ? No. Wherever any of their friends beseeched them as we know they did beseech them they let them have the limits. Mr. Mackenzie, when he was premier wrote to a friend that he had to guard the public coffers night and day to prevent his political associates plunging into it. Is there any one on guard now? But, the Mackenzie government was defeated on September 17, 1878, and on October 7 they passed an order in council, when they had no more right to act in the name of the people of this country, and they gave to two friends of theirs 200 square miles of timber to be selected anywhere in the Northwest Territories, and these two friends had three years in which to make the selection. Was that a proper thing to do ? Let us contrast it with what occurred when the Conservative government went out of power in 1896, when my right hon. friend came into office then he would not allow Sir Charles Tupper to pass a single order in council after his defeat on June 23. Two senators had resigned before the general elections and my right hon. friend refused to allow of their reappointment when he accepted the reins of power. But the Mackenzie government after their defeat by the people granted 200 square miles of some of the best limits to be found in the Northwest to two of their friends. I listened to the speech of the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) with a good deal of astonishment. It struck me that he made a very clever defence of a very bad case, but it occurred to me as it occurred to others that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) had not acquitted himself as well as he has done under similar circumstances in the past. It would appear as though hon. gentlemen opposite share in that opinion if we are to judge by their manner of distributing their applause. Sometimes, before the words were out of the ex-minister's mouth these hon. gentlemen applauded loudly, but at other times when they saw that the arguments of the ex-minister were simply absurd, they were not able to muster up courage to greet him with applause. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) told us that when he came into the department in 1897 he simply carried out until 1905 the line of policy adopted by the previous Conservative administration. Now, the Liberals have always declared that the Conservatives were bad and that all their acts were bad and that when they got into power they would change everything. We have it now from the mouth of one of their own ministers that in his department he did not change anything, just as we know that the government as a whole have changed nothing of the policy of the Conservative party in other respects. The ex-Minister of the Interior told us that he had nothing to do with the opening of tenders. What does the Prime Minister think of that ? The Prime Minister is responsible for the acts of his ministers; the others do not amount to much because they will do what he wants them to do, but the right hon. gentleman is responsible for what is done. And yet, here is an ex-minister of the Crown, a sworn representative of the government, who deliberately states that in his department he had nothing to do with the opening of tenders, but that he relied altogether on the member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) who opened these tenders alone in his office. I never knew before that tenders were to be opened unless there were at least three officers of the department present. Surely the government must have an immense amount of confidence in the integrity and the wisdom of the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff)) to have allowed him when he was commissioner of Dominion lands to be the sole arbiter in the opening of tenders. I shall not detain the House any longer, Mr. Speaker. I trust, after what I have said that if I have the pleasure of sitting in this House for twenty-five years longer there will not be some kids who will get up and accuse me of having obtained limits in 1882. That question has been settled long ago. It is no defence for this government to say that the Conservatives did wrong when they were in power. It is not sufficient for the member for Brandon to state that the rules and regulations of the department had not been changed between 1879 and 1905, and that what the Liberal government has done since 1896 was done under the same rules and regulations as obtained when the Conservatives were in power. What harm can come of granting an investigation into this matter? What danger is there to the public interest in granting it? When my right hon. friend was in opposition he was very fond of asking for investigations, and investigations were granted him by the Conservative administration. When these hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition the Conservative government gave them all the investigation they asked for, even to the extent of paying the lawyers they employed to go through the books of every department and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. To-day we do not ask that the government should pay lawyers to help us, but if we were granted such an opportunity as the Conservative government gave the Liberal opposition; if we had the privilege of bringing up for investigation the books of the Department of the Interior, and the Department of Marine, and of two or three other departments before the Public Accounts Committee, what do you think would happen? If, only, the government would not prevent us from investigation by obstructing us in the Public Accounts Committee, what grand findings we would have there, and how the people of this country would be convinced that investigation was necessary. My right hon. friend may refuse investigation in this case but if he does the people of this country will not long stand for it. After all the people are our masters; we are only here as their representatives, and the people will not long endorse an administration which refuses investigation into their acts, but will place the affairs of the country in the hands of men who will administer them in an honourable way as they should be administered. I shall vote for the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Lake).

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM (East Huron). Mr. Speaker, once more we find the Minister of the Interior and his department in trouble. It seems as if the time of the House is to be continually occupied with discussions in regard to this department. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) has admitted that a certain timber limit can now be sold for $75,000. I understand that that limit was bought from the government a short time ago for $1,840, so that there would be a clear profit of $73,000 in that transaction. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite think that that transaction and many more like it do not need investigation. Why, Sir John Macdonald's government was driven from power because he sent a telegram asking for $10,000. Here is something acknowledged by the very last speaker on the other side of the House, and that of itself shows that we should have an investigation.

Then we have heard evidence piled up against the old Conservative government of Sir John Macdonald, evidence which applies with equal force against the government of Alexander Mackenzie. You would think, to hear hon. gentlemen opposite talking, that they were accumulating evidence and intended to move a vote of want of confidence in Sir John Macdonald's government. Now, what is the use of applying all this hot wind to Sir John Macdonald? He is not here; his government was put out a considerable time ago; and surely men of fair intelligence are not going to be influenced by these tu quoque arguments.

This timber question is one of the points on which the two parties differ, and differ very materially. In the Halifax platform we have it laid down that the timber, the minerals and the lands are to be given to the provinces, while the Liberal party contend that they should be retained by the Dominion government, and it would appear that they are to be used for the benefit of the political friends of the Dominion government.

Now, this is a very important question. In regard to timber we know that there has been a great change in the last thirty years. In my own constituency thirty years ago tenders were asked for burning or cutting up beautiful maple timber; people paid for getting it put out of the way; yet now they are paying as much as $25 a tree for timber that is no better than the timber they paid people to destroy at that time. What is the use of drawing a parallel between timber to-day and timber twenty-five years ago? The thing is perfectly absurd to any one who has ever lived in a new country.

There is one point which I think should be seriously considered in connection with this matter. All who have been in the Northwest territories know that the country may be divided into three districts. The southern district is a dry district, much of it requiring to be irrigated; then there is a belt between it and the timber district which receives a sufficient amount of rainfall and does not require to be irrigated. This is the valuable part of our Northwest Territory, and if the policy of the government is to be such that, according to the hon. member for Brandon, in 220 years all the timber in that country will be gone, everybody who knows anything of the forest knows that it conserves moisture, and the arid belt of the south will extend over the whole of the fertile valley of the Saskatchewan, where there is so much valuable agricultural land at the present time. The timber should not be sold en bloc at all. There should be an arrangement made whereby the large trees would be cut and taken away carefully, and the others left to grow. In that way we could have a continual supply. When the provinces take over the lands, as we expect they will after the next general election, they will derive a much larger revenue from them than the $375,000 which they are getting now from the Dominion government. To destroy all the trees is very much like a farmer killing both his young cattle and his old cattle. We know that when a farmer wishes to dispose of his cattle, he sells or kills only those which have grown to maturity, leaving the younger ones to grow up, and in that way he keeps his revenue going. But this government is giving away not only the large timber, but the small, and in that way is destroying the whole supply. There was no need of hurry in disposing of these timber limits. We are told that the lumber yards in British Columbia and the Territories are overflowing at the present time. It does not appear that we require the money, because with the large surpluses that are so much boasted about, certainly $1,840 was not a great consideration for giving away a timber limit which hon. gentlemen opposite are now boasting will be sold at a great bargain for $75,000.

If the land be given back to the provinces, as it will be after the next elections, they will be able to make proper use of it. It will furnish the provinces with an immense income. There are about 1,000,000 acres not occupied in each of those provinces. If they would continue to give away the even numbered sections, as this government has been doing, for homesteads, there would still be 50,000,000 acres left in each province for sale. If that were sold by public auction—I would not suggest that it should be sold by tender—if it were sold by public auction like the school lands, it should bring at least $10 an acre. That would give each province $500,000,000, which, at 3 per cent, would furnish an income of $15,000,000 a year. Not to mention the mines and coal lands, just see what the people could do with $15,000,000 a year. The first thing they could do would be to follow the example of the province of Ontario. That province has built the Temiscaming Railway and are continuing it to James bay. The people of Ontario will own that railway; why should not these new provinces also build railways? It would be a great advantage to them to own railways, just as it is to Ontario. That would create competition with the other three great systems in that country. These three systems might very easily combine. Corporations have very little regard for the people; and if they could combine and thereby make more money, no doubt they would do so. But if the people of Saskatchewan and Alberta had each a railway, owned by themselves, extending from the southern to the northern boundary in each of the provinces, if they had besides, from Edmonton, a double track railway extending to Fort Churchill, on the Hudson bay, see what an advantage that would be. They could also build any number of necessary branch lines. It costs a cent to carry a bushel of wheat 60 miles, but this would shorten the land carriage of wheat by more than 1,000 miles. That would mean that every settler would have 15 cents more a bushel for his wheat than he has at present. Not only that, but he would get $10 or $12 per head more for his cattle, and by means of competition with the other systems of railways he would get his goods in cheaper. The settlers could come in easier, passenger rates would be reduced, and the people of those two provinces would be benefited to the extent of twice the profit they are making now from their farms.

Surely, under these circumstances, an investigation should be granted. If this investigation be not granted, the people of the west, when they understand the great loss they are suffering at present, when they consider that they have been freezing with hundreds of thousands of government-owned acres of coal land within a hundred miles, when they consider that they have been paying from $30 to $40 per 1,000 feet for lumber when there are government-owned limits of spruce and other timber within a hundred miles of settlement—when they consider these things, they will understand the imperative necessity for a change. If these provinces could get their lands and dispose of them as I have described, and build and own their railways, as the Temiscaming Railway is owned by the Ontario government, they would be independent in these matters. They could go to the north and get their firewood and lumber. They would get their lumber at $8 or $10 a thousand feet instead of having to pay $30 or $40. They would get their firewood laid down at Saskatoon and other places along the line at $3 a cord instead of having to pay $5 or $6. The fact of the matter is that these provinces are treated very unfairly by the Dominion. Surely hon. members on that side should be willing to grant an investigation. If there be nothing wrong, no harm can come to them. If ever there was a chance in the whole history of Canada for a man on the government side, some man with a conscience, some man of honour, who respects himself and the people he represents, it is now. If there be such a man on that side, let him rise when I sit down and support this motion for an investigation.

Mr. J. B. MORIN (Dorchester). A great deal has been said regarding the administration of both governments and parties of these timber limits, but I am afraid that so long as these limits are administered in the way they have been, we will have the same trouble. The government pretend to sell, but in reality they are giving away the timber to party friends. When the government dispose of these timber limits they give a lease, and the lessee pays so much ground rent and so on. What does that amount to by the thousand feet? The government gives a lease for $2 or $3 per square mile. Well, a square mile consists of 640 square acres of land, and each acre cuts 30,000 cubic feet. We all know that lumbermen can buy timber and pay $4 or $5 per thousand feet stumpage; yet, although a square mile has 30,000 feet per acre, you sell it for from $4 to $10 per mile. When you do that, you are not getting the best price for your property. If you were to sell that property for what it is worth, you would base your price upon the quantity of lumber that is in it and not sell at so much per square mile. The timber should net, in that country, $150 or $160 per acre, based on the value per thousand feet of lumber. It is very easy for the government to hire estimators to go through the woods and estimate how much timber there is. I have done it time and again, and I could do it yet. Without boasting, I could take a square mile, or ten or fifty square miles, and, even if there was 300,000,000 feet to the square mile, I could make an estimate of it within half a million feet. Let the government sell the timber to whoever wants it, not give a lease of it to their friends who will hold the property for speculation. We all know that there are lumbermen in this country who have been holding leases for over fifty years, and the government gets very little out of it.

Mr. WM. D. STAPLES (Macdonald). Since I have had a seat in this House, I have never risen to argue for or against any resolution unless I thought it was my clear duty to do so. I feel that if I were not to rise and say a word or two in support of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and seconded by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and so ably supported, I should not be doing my duty to the constituency I have the honour to represent or the province from which I come. I shall not go into details at this late hour, but if I cared to go into details, I think I could bring to bear upon the question some little knowledge of the lumber business. But, while I have had a mill or two in that western country I could not see that there was any thing left for me to manufacture, owing to the way in which the timber was being dealt with by this government. I concluded that it would be wisdom on my part to let the big fellows have it all as already they have so great a portion of it. Now, let me give a little incident which will illustrate the opinion of the people in that country of the manner in which their timber has been dealt with by this administration. Last summer I had occasion to take a drive for a considerable distance. As I journeyed driven by an old pioneer of that country, and by the way, he was a supporter of this government—he called my attention to one lonely tree standing on the prairie, and said 'Staples, do you see that tree?' I said, 'I do.' He said, 'That is the only tree in this great western country that has not passed into the hands of the Big Four.' With natural curiosity, I inquired, 'Who are the Big Four?' 'Why,' he answered, 'I am surprised at you, an M. P., who has been there for three sessions and do not know the Big Four—Turriff, Burrows, Adamson and Sifton.' Now, I have been a resident of the western country for a long time. I went there pretty nearly at the same time as did the hon. gentlemen whose names I have mentioned, and I have known them for many years. I knew them when they were plodding along with very little substance, trying to make a living on a farm, or out of different professions, until the present government came into power. But, after this government came into power, did we see them long in that western country? No, Sir, they came here, close to the treasury benches in close proximity to where they could get their hands into the people's money. And, if we are to judge them by the way we see them sailing through this country at the present time, we must come to the conclusion that they have been successful. I knew these gentlemen, as I have stated when they had but limited means. And what have they to-day? Go about the streets of Ottawa; and you will see their beautiful horses and fine equipages. Sail upon the St. Lawrence river, and on its shores you find their immense summer residences. When they came here, had they anything of this kind? In order that you may see what one of the Big Four at least has secured, let me refer to a return brought down to this House. We find that the hon. member for Dauphin has got—I was going to say twenty or thirty different timber limits; but instead of giving the number, let me just read a list of them, giving the area of each:

Limit No.	Area, sq. miles.
814	15
827	44
966	50
992	40
1000	5
1001	6
1002	4
1046	40
1047	50
1054	1
1068	5¼
1073	20
1095	12
1094	27
1099	44
1120	15
1191	50
1192	50

I do not know whether that is all that the hon. member for Dauphin has succeeded in getting, but it seems to me it was quite a quantity. Well might one of the journals on the other side of the ocean say, as was shown by an hon. member on this side, that the Big Four I have mentioned are making a gorgeous and vulgar display of wealth.

I shall not go further into detail. I only say that the people of that western country, the people of the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba—yes, and the people of British Columbia also—want a thorough investigation into this department, and they hold the Prime Minister responsible. Member after member on this side of the House has tried to draw the right hon. gentleman to his feet to state whether or not he will allow an investigation. He is the man who can permit or deny an investigation, who can throw the doors open. In every campaign in which I have participated, on every platform, I have heard supporters of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) laud him as a big man, an honest man, a man who would not allow such transactions or manipulations as have been charged to go on without granting a thorough investigation. I ask the Prime Minister if he will allow this vote to take place without proving that the eulogies we have heard pronounced upon him are correct, by stating that he will allow a thorough investigation into this department. The people ask for it, and look to the right hon. gentleman for it.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is late, or rather early, but at the same time it seems to be impossible to let the hour pass without saying a word or two upon this question. First let me express my surprise that in a debate of two or three days upon one of the most important questions which we could have in the House of Commons, involving one of the gravest charges ever brought in the House against a department, a debate which has been pursued in a moderate, reasonable and painstaking way, in which enough evidence has been adduced to arouse the interest of people outside of this House and in this House, no member of the government apart from the hon. gentleman who to-day is the head of the department, the responsibility for which he disavows in the matter we are discussing, has spoken. The Prime Minister cannot disavow the responsibility for what has taken place in that department. The minister gives as his excuse: I was not minister when these acts took place and I am not responsible for what did take place. The Prime Minister cannot say that; he was the man who chose the late Minister of the Interior and put him in undisputed and almost absolute charge of the department, as the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) stated to-night. The right hon. gentleman who leads the government made the opportunities for that gentleman and placed him in charge of that department; he must be held responsible for that department and its administration under these two ministers. Yet, no word of defence or explanation from him after three days of a debate in which the speeches from this side of the House cannot be characterized as other than reasonable, temperate, cogent and fact-full, from that of the hon. gentleman who introduced the motion (Mr. Lake) to the gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Staples)—every one of them had certain facts to adduce, every one had documents to support his facts and every document opened up a new avenue of thought, disclosed new methods of exploitation, and added a new idea of the administration of the work of that department during the last ten years. Analyze the speeches made on the other side of the House in defence of the former employee of the department. Fancy a government sheltering itself when it is attacked behind an employee of its department, a man to whom it has paid daily wages. The second defence was made by the hon. gentleman who is to-day at the head of the department, but he was careful to say that he did not know much about what was going on at that time and was not really responsible. The third defence was made by a gentleman who has left the department and he comes before the House to-day not to defend the government but to defend his own action and glorify himself—and that is all he did in his speech to-day.

But the country will not be satisfied until it hears from the right hon. gentleman who leads the government. That right hon. gentleman pledged his honour to the people in 1896 and declared it to be a constant principle and one that he would carry into effect were he given power in this country, that honest administration should be kept, that the land should be kept for the settler and not given away or sold to the speculator; he pledged himself in Toronto and other cities that whereas public life and administrative life had not been as pure and straightforward as it should have been, if he were put in power he would purge the political atmosphere and see that administrative works were carried out properly. What more enormous scandal could you have to-day in parliamentary life than to have four men sitting as members of this House, every one of them the beneficiaries of the favours of this government and the franchises of this country? The right hon. gentleman appointed a Royal commission ostensibly to probe into matters connected with insurance companies. He and his Minister of Justice, when they got their commission—and a star chamber commission it was—followed like sleuth hounds two or three members of parliament who bought lands in the Northwest—not from this government; they did not go hat in hand, stealing by crooked ways and by back doors, asking favours from the Minister of the Interior; they did not fee lawyers to put in bogus tenders in order to get something secretly which they dare not go like men and ask for themselves; they are men on whom there is not a breath of suspicion that they had any collusion with any employee of any department of this government, but who went, as they had a perfect right to do, and bought lands from companies in the west. Yet what do we find? That right hon. gentleman's Minister of Justice, with his paid attorneys and counsel, following these men like sleuth hounds; where to? In all their meandering through the Northwest when they were making their negotiations with independent companies with which the government had nothing to do, and were purchasing at a fair price lands which they had a perfect right to purchase. And yet, who is there in this House who has not heard from the Minister of Justice down to the furthest back bencher on the opposite side in the last two years the statement that the independence of parliament was grossly violated by these gentlemen buying land from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and other companies, that, forsooth, they wisely got some idea of what route the railway was going to take and they bought lands somewhere along the possible route of that railway. The servile, paid, bonused, organs of the right hon. gentleman, paid two prices, as he knows well, with hon. gentlemen behind him on the other side of the House and with their supporters throughout this country, hounded these men and declared that they should not be in parliament, because they were not independent men, that had actually found out the route that the railway was going to take and that they had invested money in lands along that prospective route. Mr. Speaker, what have we brought out to-day? Does the right hon. gentleman know it? Does he sense it? Has he a conscience?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, hon. gentlemen may say 'Oh,' but before we get through we will have a little more to say about that. The right hon. gentleman heard that to-day. What is it? What are the cold facts? The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway his own creature was bounsed by the credit and the dollars, to the extent of millions, of this country. Almost before it had received its charter and in the charter the very spots were indicated which would mark the route of that company, almost before the thing had been consummated, before the charter had dried almost from its ink, members supporting the right hon. gentleman were on the scent, coursing the proposed line of railway, turning up in the end at Dunvegan, Yellow Head pass and at every prominent place along the line, the possessors of large timber limits through which this Grand Trunk Pacific Railway when it is surveyed, will pass and through which its cars will run. These timber limits were not bought from the Canadian Pacic Railway, were not bought from the Hudson's Bay Company-; they were bought from this government through negotiations which are no credit, on the face of the papers, to this government. These gentlemen to-day the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows), with his hundreds of square miles of timber limits, the hon. member for Humbolt (Mr. Adamson), with his lots here and there of timber limits, the hon. member for East Assiniboia and others, in this House, sit behind the right hon. gentleman and vote for him. Great heavens, how could they afford not to vote for him? Would there be anything of human gratitude in their souls if they did not vote for him through thick and thin? They get their franchises from him and the people of this country have to pay the price. Where is your Minister of Justice? Why do you not get a royal commission, why do you not instruct him to follow these four men in all the devious paths that they have taken until they have become the possessors of the people's franchises got from the Department of the Interior, as the documents show—why do you not follow these men out by a royal commission and hold them up to public scorn? The independence of parliament Act, forsooth, is violated when a member of parliament buys from the Canadian Pacific Railway at any price that may be agreed upon a lot of land! The independence of parliament is spotless in its purity and splendid in its effulgence if he can only go to the back door and get the people's land from the government at small cost! They do it and the right hon. gentleman knows they do it. We look to him to fulfil his pledges and to give to this parliament a chance to know what is going on in that department. But some one says—I believe it is the Minister of the Interior: Why do you need to give a commission or a committee to investigate the policy of the Department of the Interior for? The policy of the Department of the Interior, he says, is well known; it is written on the records. Nobody asks for a commission or a committee to investigate the policy of the department. It is the practice of the department we wish to examine. The Minister of the Interior and the ex-Minister of the Interior thought they did everything that was necessary when they spent two hours defending the policy of the department. What we want to investigate is the bad practice of the department and the bad practice of the department has been apparent from the time that it passed into the hands of my right hon. friend's government up to this time. This is no isolated case. You must take this in connection with other things. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) is not in his place and I wish he were. Wagner will be coming to us the next thing and asking us to prefer charges against him. Joseph Nixon will be trotting out here some of these days and saying: What are you men talking about me for; make your charges like men and then we will talk about it. What have we to do with the hon. member for East Assiniboia in this matter as a member of parliament? We have nothing to do with him at all except as we are investigating the practice of the department where he was an employee. He forgot himself. He forgot the past. He had the audacity to stand up in this House, to look us in the face and say: If you have anything to say about the administration of the department when I was there bring your charges against me. We do not usually formulate charges against paid officials of the departments. That is all the hon. gentleman was in the dealings we are trying to investigate. I have a word to say to that hon. gentleman or to his vacant seat. He was very brave the other day. He stood up in this House and declared that he went down to Stanstead and that the moment he went on the platform and spoke we did not dare say a word. Members from this House were there but they were dumbfounded, they stood in awe of the hon. member for East Assiniboia. He spoke and he expected them to meet him but nobody dared meet him. Well, Sir, it is not necessary for me to give history but on two occasions he was invited to attend my meeting, he was in the neighbourhood and he did not. Does anybody in this House think that my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) was cowed and made to tremble in every limb in his body because the hon. member for East Assiniboia was on the platform down in Stanstead?

Mr. BERGERON. He did not come to our meeting at Magog.

Mr. FOSTER. No, he did not. I want to say in reference to the hon. member for East Assiniboia that as an employee of the government his course in Stanstead and his course here have made me have less faith in him as an employee than I had before he took that course, because he went to Stanstead and he stood up here and absolutely misrepresented the facts of the case in order to gain an advantage against an opponent. What did he say in Stanstead?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman can hardly say that a member of the House misrepresented the facts.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, he did not state them correctly, if that is better. It is a very fine point to tell what is the difference. If I had said he had deliberately misrepresented the facts I might have come under the rules of the House, but it was a misrepresentation which means that it was not a proper representation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The ruling was: That to say that an hon. member had misrepresented facts is out of order in the opinion of the chair. If the hon. member (Mr Foster) thinks that ruling is not correct his proper course is to appeal from it and not to proceed to criticise it after the ruling has been given.

Mr. FOSTER. I have something more important to do now than to have an appeal and so I will put it in the other way, withdrawing that, and I say that he did not correctly represent. Am I in order, Mr. Speaker? Then, he did not correctly represent the facts in Stanstead. What I meant there as having been said by the member for East Assiniboia was this: What are these men talking about, why, the Liberal-Conservative government when they were in power gave as a free gift to Liberal-Conservative members and senators 29,300 square miles of land. In this House he stood up and made the same incorrect representation. He declared here over and over again that the Liberal-Conservative government made a free gift, and that they alienated 29,300 square miles of timber limits. Is it true, Mr. Speaker? Is it true, I ask the right hon. gentleman who leads the House? Is it true that it was alienated? The ex-Minister of the Interior made the same statement. Do these gentlemen know the meaning of English words? Will any man now stand up on his feet and say in the light of the facts that the Liberal-Conservative government alienated 29,300 square miles of timber lands?

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman is asking me, I will say that they certainly did all that lay in their power to alienate.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I am afraid that if my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) was down in Stanstead county, or any other county, he would be guilty of the same incorrect representation. What is the meaning of the word 'alienate'? When is property alienated? It is alienated when by legal title it passes into possession of another. Does the Minister of the Interior; does the member for East Assiniboia dare to get up in the House and state that these 29,300 square miles of timber lands ever passed into the possession of any one outside of the government, by title? Never. The right hon. gentleman the other day answered a question, and the Minister of the Interior the other day answered a question. They were a little apart but not enough for practical purposes, and what the Minister of the Interior himself said in answer to the question was: that the total quantity of lands alienated by the Liberal-Conservative government from 1878 to 1896 in the way of timber lands was 1,720 square miles. The right hon. gentleman answered the question the day before and he put it at about 1,800 square miles Now, there is the truth of the whole thing. These gentlemen say that 29,300 square miles were alienated when the fact is that all but 1,720 square miles has been in the absolute possession of the government, and, if it has not been otherwise alienated is still in their possession. Now, the Minister of the Interior says the Conservative government alienated it as far as they could. Did the Minister of the Interior say that?

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I said.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well.

Mr. OLIVER. And I want to repeat what I said before, and what my hon friend discussed with me when I was speaking: that for the whole of that 29,300 square miles the people who were given the rights on that land exercised these rights as rights of possession.

Mr. FOSTER. Now I will argue this matter with the Minister of the Interior. First he said that the government alienated it as far as they had the power to do? The government could have given the absolute title to every square mile of this land. Does the Minister of the Interior deny that? Of course not. Then he is wrong in the first statement. Does his second statement rest on any better basis? He says that the government gave to every one of the holders of that 29,300 square miles rights of ownership, and that they exercised rights of ownership. Now, Sir that is just as incorrect as his first statement. I put questions to the Minister of the Interior the other night and he struggled with all the records of the department to answer them, and he only could give two instances, and what were they? He says that Mr. Tisdale exercised rights of possession and ownership. Well, let us see whether he did or not. Under a wide open regulation (and I am quoting the Minister of the Interior), under a policy and regulations which he declared to be just and proper (I am quoting him again)—by the way just there let me remind the House that the ex-Minister of the Interior tried to correct the Minister of the Interior today and said that the Minister of the Interior did not mean to say that. But the Minister of the Interior now says that he did mean to say it and he sticks to it.

Mr. OLIVER. I said it was a proper policy but it was not properly administered.

Mr. FOSTER. That is right, the hon. gentleman said that. But I point out that there is a wide difference of opinion between the ex-minister and the minister as to that. The clear headed ex-Minister of the Interior did not want to be bound by what the Minister of the Interior said. The Minister of the Interior in his characteristic western language said: the policy was good but the administration was rotten. Now as to the acts of ownership. Under a wide open policy which is approved by the Minister of the Interior, under regulations approved by the Minister of the Interior, David Tisdale, Esq., a member of parliament, exercised the same right that any inhabitant of this country could exercise, and he made out an application for a timber limit. His application was received, was filed, and an order in council was passed which simply gave to David Tisdale the right under certain conditions to exercise rights of ownership on that property. But David Tisdale, until he performed the conditions could not sell a stick of timber off that, could not cut a stick of timber on it. And what were the conditions? Before that could be done and the right of ownership could be exercised he had to pay his ground rent, he had to put up a mill of a certain capacity, he had to make a survey at his own cost and charge if it were in unsurveyed territory. Then when he had done all that he could receive a license to cut. Then he had rights of ownership and could exercise them, but not one single hour before. How did the Minister of the Interior prove rights of ownership exercised by Mr. Tisdale? In this way: Tisdale found that after a certain time the limit for which he had applied had no timber on it. He came back to the government and said: I don't want that one; let me have another. The government cancelled the first, and he put in an application for a second, and they accepted it. Is that the exercise of a right of ownership? It is the exercise of the right of surrender. There was no trade; no consideration passed.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I ask how Mr. Tisdale could surrender something he did not own?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that is difficult, if my hon. friend will put his keen and acute mind to it for a moment. Mr. Tisdale had a right which he could not exercise except under conditions; he got that right from the Dominion government; he brought it back and surrendered it. That very moment, under the regulations, he had the right to apply for another limit, and he did apply for another and received it. My hon. friend did not show that he had any right of ownership, nor can he do it.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I ask my hon. friend was the right of Mr. Tisdale cancelled upon his non-compliance with the conditions as to time upon which the right was granted?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has the advantage of me; he has the documents and I have not; but I have the order in council, which recites that about a year from the time that he put in his first application he wrote to the department that there was no timber upon that limit and that he did not want that, but that he would apply for another; and the first was cancelled and the second was given. As to the order of time, I cannot tell exactly. That is all I know from the documents. It was not a right of ownership. The right of ownership came into force only when he had fulfilled the conditions. The conditions were not fulfilled, and consequently no power or right or act of ownership could be carried on by the person applying.

Now, let me go a little further. I was arguing about the correctness or not of the representation that the Liberal-Conservative government, from 1880 to 1896, had alienated 29,300 square miles of timber land. I think I have made my case. Only 1,720 miles were alienated, according to an answer of the Minister of the Interior, given the day before yesterday, which I have in 'Hansard' of that date. An hon. member of this House goes into the county of Stanstead and trades upon his position as a member of parliament, and as a former trusted employee of the department, about whose inner workings in that business he says he knew everything, and stands up before an audience and declares to them: The Liberal-Conservatives, who say that we are doing badly, alienated 29,300 square miles of timber lands and gave them to their supporters. Why, Foster got 50 square miles, Colby got 50 square miles, and so it went through the list. And what did the honest farmers and other people who listened to that conclude? They saw a member of parliament, a man who had been in the department, they trusted that his reputation would convey honesty and correctness, and they went away and said: The Liberal-Conservatives cannot say anything; they alienated 29,300 square miles, while these people only alienated 6,400. There was absolutely not a word of truth in that statement. And that gentleman was formerly the trusted employee who went into his own private room, locked the door, kept all inconvenient witnesses away, and adjudicated upon the application of his brother-in-law and other relatives and party friends. I say, and I do not fear to say it, that the exhibition he made of himself in this House and in Stanstead for the advantage of his party, stamps him as a partisan who, in the inmost recesses of his unwatched room, would not be beyond doing something for the good of a party supporter in the matter of tenders. A man who is honest is honest all the way through. He is as honest when he makes a statement to confiding people as he is in the transaction of his business. If he is not honest in the one, I would not trust him in the other. There is where the member for East Assiniboia stands as far as I am concerned.

I said this was not an isolated circumstance. This exploitation of the public domain began in 1900 or before, when the late Minister of the Interior brought this gentleman down from the west, and the two of them sailed in through the golden gate and entered into the paradise of the Interior Department. Immediately this thing began. Your ex-Minister of the Interior stood there to-day and said, with a calm face and unruffled voice: 'I made no changes in the regulations or practice of the Department of the Interior, not a single one.' Did my right hon. friend hear him? Did he believe him? 'I found,' he said, 'that in 1898 the Liberal-Conservative government adopted a policy and based their regulations upon it, and this went on till 1896, and there was no trouble about it. I found the regulations there in 1896 and I carried them on until 1905, and there was no trouble about it. I made no changes, not a single change.' Now, to the law and the testimony. Who was the man who looked over the tenders and gave the adjudications under the Liberal-Conservative government, whom he found there when he came into that office, and to whose uprightness and probity he paid a high compliment to-day? Mr. Ryley; and Mr. Ryley and his associates opened the tenders and gave the decision. He says he made no change. The man he brought from the west was put in a position of authority, and instead of the tenders thereafter being adjudicated upon by Mr. Ryley and his coadjutors, they were given into the private side pocket of Mr. Turriff; and when hundreds of thousands of dollars and partisan considerations were pressed upon him from the man who made the application, from interested friends who backed him up, from lawyers who had their fee to gain and their charges to get—when all that took place, a strong partisanship dyeing every fibre of his body, he was put into a darkened and secluded room and given the full power of decision in reference to those matters. Did not make a change? Why, he made the very change which, if he wanted to, gave him the opportunity of carrying out the most nefarious schemes in respect of the administration of his department.

Make no changes! My hon. friend will know now, if he did not know it before, that when Mr. Clifford Sifton became Minister of the Interior he took the right which, up to that time had been in the power of the Governor in Council with reference to irrevocable and revocable grazing leases, out of the council and invested it in himself as minister. And what did he then do? He turned yearly leases into irrevocable twenty-one year leases. Who was advising him when he did that? It was Mr. J. G. Turriff, the present member for East Assiniboia. He was there when the minister let the bars down and let Hitchcock and McGregor in and the Galway Ranching Company and H. B. Brown and the other five or six animals who got over the bars. Mr. Turriff was there as the advising officer and he advised and recommended it. Who was the man, when a sufficient number of them got in, who went to work and put up the bars again in order to keep any one else from getting in and thus immeasurably enhancing the value of the leases that had been given?

He made no changes! He made other changes. Up to that time the law stated what price should be paid for land, but the Minister of the Interior of that day (Mr. Sifton) took power to sell to lessees of those grazing lands, land selected over the whole lot, at $1 a mile to the fortunate men who got through the bars and were given irrevocable leases, and these men availed themselves of that privilege, and purchased the land at $1 an acre and sold it shortly afterwards at $12 an acre to an English company.

Has made no changes! Up to that date the man who held a timber limit license, held it at the pleasure of the government. It could be revised and after a little notice could be revised again. The settler alongside had the right to his firewood and lumber, and if it became necessary the lease could be cancelled and the land taken back for settlement. Well, one of the first things the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) did was to so change the conditions that as long as merchantable timber was standing on the lands that went to his brother-in-law first and his other pets afterwards, the leases could not be revoked and were thus made practically perpetual. What did the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) say to-day? The great thing, he said, to do is to preserve the forests. So it is, but do you mean to say that a wide-awake man who gets a lease revocable on a two years' notice and suddenly, with the help of his brother-in-law, finds it is made irrevocable—do you think he is not wise enough to cultivate his lease and keep merchantable timber always growing on the limits so that it will be a perpetual source of income and profit to himself? And this is the ex-minister who tells us he made no changes.

And all the while J. G. Turriff was the man who aided and abetted him in making these people rich. What did Hitchcock and McGregor ever do for their country that they should get 100,000 acres on an irrevocable twenty-one year lease? Does history record anything that they ever did for their country? What did they do for good government? Do the annals of government show any great thing ever done by them? Men go to South Africa and risk their lives to help the empire, and this government does not even go to the expense of giving them a medal. But Hitchcock and McGregor get 100,000 acres on a twenty-one year lease, and inside of two and a half years these dear middlemen sell that lease and bag $350,000 profit.

I am told that we make insinuations. We hear that from the small fry everywhere. Well, I am now making statements of fact as they have been made before in this parliament. I am making them to the right hon. gentleman. They are not insinuations, but statements of fact. What did Hitchcock and McGregor do that they should get all this wealth at the expense of the country? But J. G. Turriff was in another transaction, not so large, but even more reprehensible. Who was H. P. Brown? Did he ever exist? Will the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) tell me, if he knows? He does not reply. It is a conundrum. I know that the department were for two and a half years hunting for H. P. Brown, or represented that they were. While they were hunting for him, they let his arrears run up. They gave him an irrevocable lease, and while they were still hunting for him and he had not signed his lease or paid his money, the real Brown turned up in the person of A. J. Adamson, M.P. Mr. Adamson had an assignment from Brown who never had the lease. He exercised the right of ownership.

Mr. OLIVER. Exactly as the 450 beneficiaries of my hon. friend's administration were able to do under those orders in council.

Mr. FOSTER. If any man be simple enough to think these things are alike we shall not quarrel.

Mr. OLIVER. They were exactly the same.

Mr. FOSTER. On the eminent authority of my hon. friend, whose logical factory is one of the most wonderful things in nature, I shall have to take it as being so for the moment. H. P. Brown did not turn up and never paid his arrears. He never signed the lease, but afterwards Mr. Adamson, M.P., turned up with an assignment of that lease, which he had held in his pocket at least a year and a half. While the innocent department, under the leadership of the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and the present (Mr. Oliver), was hunting up and down for Brown, beseeching him to appear and pay his arrears and sign the deed, Brown was all the time hidden away in the trousers pocket of Mr. Adamson. Mr. Adamson had the assignment of the lease, that never was signed, to a company which, when the assignment was taken, had not been incorporated. And at the last Mr. Adamson got a 60,000 acre lease by paying six months of the fee and agreeing to take it as a revocable lease. The minister made an agreement with him. He took it as a revocable lease. He found it was not so valuable as he thought. So he and Mr. Turriff collogued together, Mr. Turriff at that time being an M.P. And Turriff, the former employee, and Adamson, the M.P., after having made a solemn engagement with the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) by which they paid less money for a revocable lease, collared the obstinate, but not very strong, Minister of the Interior, and with hands at his throat actually compelled him to turn that revocable lease into an irrevocable twenty-one year lease for the same amount of money and no more. Then Adamson, M.P., sold it out at a fine profit, though he is too modest to tell us here just exactly how much.

Mr. NORTHRUP. And that's what happened to Brown ?

Mr. FOSTER. That's what happened to Brown. Now, Sir, J. G. Turriff, the employee of the department, was the man who followed that all through. 'I am not a detective,' he says. What was he getting the people's money for ? Is there any theory more thoroughly established than that every public employee, is, to the extent of his powers, the trustee of the people of this country ? Was this gentleman drawing his salary simply for making his pen and pencil marks ? Is that all that J. G. Turriff was doing as the responsible head of the department ? 'I am not a detective,' he said—I have no right to think; mine is simply the mechanical work, and I do it. But this mechanical work ran swiftly in the direction of carrying out behests of Mr. Adamson and J. G. Turriff, who is Mr. Adamson's brother-in-law. Could a scandal be greater ? And is there to be no royal commission to follow up things like this ? Why, you set your royal commission to work, under your Minister of Justice, and pay the people's money to that commission, under the guise of a royal commission on insurance, to follow up members of parliament who bought lands from private companies in the Northwest, and you do it on the plea that these members had done an improper thing and were infringing the Independence of Parliament Act. And I can go further with reference to Mr. Turriff. Mr. Turriff was good enough to hand me, at my request, a statement which is marked 'certified.' When he gave it to me, I asked him : 'Is that an authenticated document from the Interior Department ?' He said : 'I got it from the Interior Department ; it is certified.' And I looked at it and found it marked 'Certified correct.' Now, had I gone over to the Department of the Interior and asked the present Minister of the Interior to allow me to see the back files showing the timber leases and license transactions, I should have been turned out of doors. But Mr. J. G. Turriff, the former employee, now member of parliament, walks right in at the open door, and gets a certified copy, if he does not look through the files himself. And from that certified copy he reads in this House. And it is false. And if the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) had listened, as he, no doubt, did, to what went on in this debate, he would have known that it was an incorrect representation. It showed that 310 square miles was the quantity alienated by the Mackenzie government during their time in power. And yet when I looked at that certified copy I called his attention to the fact that 200 square miles granted to Cook & Sutherland was not included in that certified copy. And the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) read in this House, the order in council which, in the Mackenzie government's name, and in the dying hours of that government, made a gift, so far as it could under the conditions, of 200 square miles of timber lands, to Cook & Sutherland. But there was the certified statement. That is what he crammed down the Stanstead people's throats; that is what he crammed down the throats of members on the other side of the House; that is what he tried to cause members on this side of the House to accept as true. But it is not true; the account is incorrect, though it is certified to, presumably, by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. Was the land covered by this grant to Messrs. Cook & Sutherland alienated ?

Mr. FOSTER. I guarded myself by not using the word 'alienated.' I have a sense of what English words mean, and I am in the judgment of the House if I did not say that the Mackenzie government gave to Messrs. Cook & Sutherland, so far as the conditions allowed, this 200 square miles.

Mr. OLIVER. Exactly what I desired to say to the House in regard to the 450 cases of similar transactions by the government of which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was a member.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, it is a pity the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) did not say it. Now, what more ? The ex-minister (Mr. Sifton) told us that he did not change the system. Does my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) know of another act that his supporters outside call an insinuation ? Has he read the history of the Blairmore town site ? Does he know that while Mr. J. G. Turriff was commissioner of Crown Lands, and Hon. Mr. Sifton, Minister of the Interior, a supporter of the government by the name of Malcolm Mackenzie got from a man named Montalbetti an assignment of a right which Montalbetti never did have which Mr. Chief Justice Wetmore declared fraudulent and false, and meant to be fraudulent and false from the first—and got it without giving anything to Montalbetti for it ? And does he know that when those who thought they had a right to claim it put in their claim, this same commissioner of lands got a speed on that never had been known before in the history of the department ? One day the application came in, and the next day a Dominion lands inspector was telegraphed to to make an inquiry. But before that telegram was cold, a second thought struck—whom ? Most probably the commissioner. And, instead of allowing his own authorized inspector to make a report, he telegraphed to have Joseph Nixon go up and make the report; Nixon, of fraud fame, Nixon, who altered the stubs of his cheques, embezzled the money and stole the property of this country; Nixon was told to supersede the regular inspector. And Nixon did his work. He and Mackenzie both went up to the place, Nixon made his report, showed it to Mackenzie and sent it here to Ottawa. And, in almost less than no time, the then commissioner of Crown lands in Ottawa had that case up and tried and gave his decision within six or seven days, adjudging Mackenzie to be entitled to that property. Then, a protest was lodged by Lyon's attorney, who asked for time to prove that this transfer was fraudulent. But the answer was : No, no; I cannot stop the wheels of time;—Malcolm Mackenzie will not wait; I give my decision, and Mackenzie is to have the title in the land. But a higher court intervened. A less pliable gentleman was, for the time being, in the department of Justice; and when Lyon's lawyers put the case to David Mills, David Mills said : Whatever happens, you shall have your fiat. He gave them the fiat, and they took the case before Judge Burbidge. Chief Justice Wetmore was asked to make an examination and report, and Judge Burbidge was ready, on that report, to vacate the assignment as fraudulent, in which case the land would have gone back to the Crown. He made no changes ! But what did he do ? He stepped into the court of Justice, withdrew the case, and gave the land to Malcolm Mackenzie for $3 an acre, a townsite worth $100,000 at least.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to say that this matter was before the House last session and the record as placed on the table of the House does not bear out my hon. friend's statement.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a matter of opinion. If any hon. gentleman opposite except the Minister of the Interior, with his curious logic factory had made that statement I would pay some attention to it, but I have thoroughly studied that case and I know what I am saying. This is not insinuation, this is a statement of fact for the benefit of my right hon. friend. And more than that, the government instead of asking this man to pay the costs actually paid about $2,500 costs of the action, and gave him the land for $480.

Do I need to go any further than that ? We have had discussions of these tenders that went before Mr. Turriff and his sole adjudicating upon them, but he is not a detective. Here is a limit of 90 square miles. A. W. Fraser got possession of information as to the Cedar lake limit and applied to have it set up. It was set up by an insufficient notice, and nobody else had any chance to see that limit or appraise it ; Mr Fraser paid in $500 and got the sixty square miles for which he applied. Mr. Turriff was not a detective ; he was not to say to himself : Well, this is an awful waste of the lands of this country, that immense area of sixty square miles to be selected out of about 300 square miles ; that seems to be altogether wrong, and I will not accept that tender. The ex-Minister of the Interior and the Minister of the Interior seemed to think that they had no right to refuse the tenders. The government is never obliged to accept a tender; they may call for tenders and the people may tender, but the government at any time until the award has been made may say : That is not a sufficient price. That is what the Whitney government does, that was their example in the case of the Kerr Lake mining rights, where they refused an offer of $51,000 and by asking for new tenders, obtained $187,000 besides the royalty. But this gentleman was not a detective ; what did he care as to the price, what did he care as to the rights of the people in this land ? His not to reason why, his not to ask any questions, but simply to do and die—that is, to put in the mechanical marks that gave Mr. Fraser this limit. I want to know what my right hon. friend thinks of this. Then Mr. Fraser went to Mr. Turriff and Mr. Turriff granted him thirty miles in addition to the sixty, picked out of the same area ; never had it put up to tender again and never charged him another dollar besides the $500. Does my right hon. friend think that is fair dealing ? Oh, but, says the ex-Minister of the Interior, what is the matter, we have lots of it left ? The same argument was made by the minister of the Interior. When the beneficiary who intrusts a gentleman with a property to manage for her comes to him afterwards and says : Will you give me an accounting of your property? Yes, he says, I have alienated—absolutely this time—one-third of your property. What did you get for it ? Oh, but a paltry amount. Well, you have not treated me rightly, you have really given that away ; you have trifled with my property. Is she answered and justice satisfied when he says : But, my good woman, there is quite a lot of it left ? And so the Minister and ex-Minister of the Interior think it is all right so long as there is lots of it left. It is no palliation at all ; the trust has been violated unless it has been executed solely in the interest of the beneficiary. The Minister of the Interior says : Our policy has been a success. And he defends it on that ground amongst others. He says that their policy is a success compared to the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party because, forsooth, in 1896 there were fifty-five mills in the Northwest whilst in 1907 there were eighty-nine mills ; because in 1896 a certain quantity of lumber was manufactured, and in 1907 a far larger quantity was manufactured. There is no need to elaborate that argument; every man sees in a moment that the only way to test a policy is under like conditions. You manufactured more lumber in 1896 than in 1881 and more lumber in 1907 than in 1896 because there were more people, better facilities to get the lumber to the people and a greater demand for lumber by each settler, because in the early days they were satisfied with poorer buildings, but now were able to put up new and better ones. I ask the Prime Minister whether or not, disabusing his mind of the idea that we want any inquiry into the policy of the governmetn or the department at this particular time, and knowing that all we ask is an investigation into the practice of the department based on the facts that we have given from the authorities in the last three days in this debate, he is going to throw himself across the front door and prevent the representatives of the people from seeing how their property is being managed. The Liberal-Conservatives in this House represent 3,000,000 people in this country. These lands are the people's property. We are sent here to represent our people's rights in these properties. These properties belong to the people and not to the right hon. gentleman or to the Minister of the Interior. Representing three millions of people we declare we believe that there has been malpractice and I do firmly believe it. We come up to the gates of the business house of this Dominion of Canada and as representatives of three millions of people interested equally with the others of this country in that property we demand to be shown inside the door.

We demand an accounting. Why, was the like of this ever heard of in a private business? The idea that people who have a one-half interest in it could not ask to see the inside of their own business to see whether it was badly managed and to go through the records! Fancy the directorate in a bank or a company; five out of nine of them saying to the other four, or to the shareholders of the whole company when they come to the door and say: We have grave suspicions about such and such an officer and the doings in the bank or business corporation; we want to know the truth—fancy the majority of directors rising up and saying: You shall not see the original papers! It is absurd. Now, what is the statement that we are met with?—Make your charges. That is what we are met with. Make your charges. What kind of charges? Personal charges? I decline, as a member of parliament, to make personal charges against the hon. member for East Assiniboia. We are investigating the work of the Department of the Interior but not that hon. gentleman as a member of parliament, but as a paid employee of the government. What personal charges do you want? Must we go and swear out a warrant for murder or theft before we can get an inside look into our own business? On what rule or by what reason can you deny the right of investigation when we have shown what we have shown? You have tried to make it impossible for us to show anything. Your Minister of the Interior turned us out of his doors; your Minister of the Interior refused to give us original papers. You, yourself, Sir, refused to give us original papers until the sentiment of outside people made it so warm for you that grudgingly you brought down one set of these papers? There are four sets of these papers yet that you have not brought down bearing on this very question. Do you propose to bring them down? May I ask the right hon. gentleman if he proposes to give us these originals? Having brought down one set will he bring down the others? He has it in his power to prevent it. The orders are well back on the order paper. It is quite impossible to reach them in the regular order for many and many a week and may be not at all. We have been held up four times when he tried to pass these as unopposed motions. What is the policy? Does the right hon. gentleman propose to hold still that his Minister of the Interior shall shut the door and refuse us the documents? I think he should be better advised. I think he will find that there is a sentiment outside of this House. Sometimes it has seemed to me as if the First Minister, in utter hopelessness shuts his ears and his eyes to all that is going on around and about him for fear that if he attempts to defend it he will get himself into a worse box than if he said nothing. I tell you that the people of the country are aroused. I tell you that there will be an investigation of the department as sure as there is a God in heaven. You may, with your majority, perhaps, vote down this motion. There are members looking forward to offices which they know they will not get unless they maintain their hold on the coat-tails of the right hon. First Minister; 102 members, senators and ex-members have already been rewarded by public offices paid for by the money of this country. How many men sit behind you who are not loking forward to some like reward? You will be supported if you keep the lid down. If you refuse an examination, if you refuse a committee you will be supported here, but you may depend upon it that the time will come sooner or later when the Department of the Interior will be gone through from top to bottom. The people will have their undoubted right to see how their own business is done and they will ultimately bear down all opposition. What objection is there? Who will be hurt if we get this committee? There is a simple question. What interest would be injured? The Minister of the Interior says he is ready for it. The hon. member for East Assiniboia says: Come on with your charge, and all the others say: Make your charges; there is nothing wrong; you are simply a set of insinuators. Who will be hurt if you give it? You will be helped if all is proved right. The suspicion of this country which is lowering down upon you like a cloud will be lifted. What would the hon. Minister of the Interior not do to lift the cloud of suspicion which is lowering down upon you in this country, the suspicion which is in many men's mouths and upon many men's tongues, the open assertion which is borne out by the vulgar display of wealth by men who, but a short time ago, came into these public departments as bare as the rest of us of the means of living, or of existing? The public is talking, the public is comparing notes, the public will demand an answer from every member who refuses to open the door upon the practice of this department and sooner or later the door will be open. Who is to be injured by it? You say you are innocent. Nobody will be injured if that is true. In a political sense if we make these charges and cannot prove them it will rebound upon us. We are the ones to get the backwater, not you. What can be injured? The mere inconvenience of making an investigation should not stand in the way for a moment. Again I ask: Who will be injured and what would be injured because of an investigation being granted? Nothing been proved? Nothing but insinuations? Let me show you what has been proved. It has been proved that no investigation into the value of these properties has ever been made by this government before they were sold. Fancy a business undertaking or corporation with things for sale selling them without apraising the value of them and without knowing their value! Oh, but says the Minister of the Interior, you had no valuation. That does not count the weight of an acorn. That is not your business. The business of the late government was had with the people and the late government settled with the people. It has been proved that no upset price or reserve bid was ever set up. You took whatever was offered. If it was $10 you took it, if it was $1,000 you took it, if it was $10,000 all the better, but you absolutely sold it for whatever the highest bid was no matter how small of a bid it was. There was no public, open competition. That was a farce drawn over the eyes of the people so as to blind them; it was the pretence of competition but these papers before us show that there was no competition. Was there competition for the Fraser limit or for the large limit alongside of it? It is farcical to talk of that as competition. There was no discrimination as to what should be reserved and what should be alienated. The Minister of the Interior had the argument: We wanted to get rid of our lands and what we did was to sell them to people who would operate them. Were they sold to people who would operate them? Is Alexander Smith going to operate these? Alexander Smith operating timber limits up in the Peace river country! Think of it! I could go over a list there running up to 3,000 square miles where there is no pretense of operation, and no prospect of operation maybe for a decade or a score of years at the very shortest. And so that argument is taken away. We have proved that now there is no critical examination of tenders at all, no limit fixed, and that it goes through as a matter of course. In all that was read with reference to the Liberal Conservative government, the limits ran from 3 up to 50 square miles, and it is altogether an exception if more than 50 square miles was given to any one person. But now, a man may get 50 miles, he may get 250 miles, he may get 500 miles as Mr. Burrows has, and as others have who are holding speculative limits. On the same principle they might get 1,000 square miles or they might get 6,000. But it is all right, says the ex-Minister of the Interior, there is plenty left. He has placed a limit on the age of the country of 220 years when that timber will be exhausted, and then Canada may die, for die she will when the timber resources of her great Northwest are exhausted. And so for all these reasons which have been given, and which have been proved, we ask: Why not an investigation?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, I have listened on various occasions to addresses deliveed by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) both upon the stump and in this House of Commons, but I think that every hon. gentleman here to-night whether he sits on this side of the House or on that will agree with me that this was the most peculiar utterance that he has ever made upon a public question in this country. The hon. gentleman seems to be smarting under the recollection of two things, one of which is the result of the recent by-elections. Our friends opposite having formulated a platform called the Halifax platform, found when they got before the electorate that there were none among the people of this country who cared tu'pence for their Halifax platform, and so they were compelled to resort, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was compelled to resort in Stanstead, to this business of insinuation and of statements without proof which he and his followers make about hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. These hon. gentlemen opposite have flattered themselves into the belief that because they had hounded the Ross government out of power in Ontario, by a system of calumny and abuse in this federal arena they might be able to throw enough mud to make it stick against the reputations of certain honourable people in this House. But the verdict of the people in the by-elections given a short time ago, was an intimation to my hon. friend of the failure of tactics of that kind and he is smarting under the recollection of his defeat. And hence it is that we have had this wonderfully exhaustive product of his verbose vocabulary which we have heard to-night. Hence it is that we have had these wild declarations, these peculiar utterances and gyrations in which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has indulged; this talking about things which have no relation whatever to timber berths and this retailing to the House all the old tales of the Tory party contained in the book called 'The Sessions Disclosures.' My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is doing that because in the first place he is smarting under the recollection of the fact that the people to whom he went a few days ago defeated him, and decided there was nothing in that kind of talk. He thinks to-night that by going a little further and by speaking a little stronger and by indulging in language more extreme than in the past, that probably somebody may believe him. But my hon. friend—and I am sorry to say it—when he struck this question of timber berths recalled another unhappy instance in his career. I am one of those who. after hearing last year the terrible arraignment of that hon. gentleman by the Minister of Justice, would be inclined to say to that hon. gentleman: Go and sin no more. My hon. friend cannot complain of any hon. gentleman on this side of the House recalling to his recollection or to the recollection of hon. gentlemen present, that incident which seems to smart in his own mind and which prompts him to the peculiar utterances which we have heard to-night. My hon. friend as an old parliamentarian must know and does know, that the argument which he has presented here to-night as an alleged reason why a committee should be granted to investigate the Interior Department during the past ten years is an argument which from every standpoint of parliamentary usage and constitutional government is absolutely and wholly untenable. My hon. friend knows, and I am sure he ought not to wish any one of us on this side of the House to be called upon to remind him, that if we hark back to 'Hansard' we will find him laying down during the years when he sat on the treasury benches the conditions under which committees should be granted and investigations held. For what purpose to-night, when we have to deal with a concrete resolution moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in which we are asked to investigate certain dealings in regard to timber berths, does my hon. friend trot out these stories about the Blairmore site, H. P. Brown, and all those old stories of which the country is sick and which my hon. friend well knows, can form not the slightest warrant for arguing to this House or the country why a committee should be granted. My hon. friend is a marvellous special pleader; he belongs to that tribe of hon. gentlemen who

> Can a hair divide
> 'Twixt west and sou'west side.

I heard my hon. friend with his marvellous ingenuity attempting to argue that all his old friends could take of a title which they got without having paid any money for it in the days when their friends were in power—did not amount to anything and that the lands were not alienated to them. I am not going to follow him into this artistic feat of hair spliting which sits upon him so easily, but I submit that any one who studies the records in regard to this matter will come to the conclusion that these gentlemen had a right to the title of these timber berths, which they could have exercised at any time during these years. It is too late to split hairs on that question, because it was tacitly admitted by my hon. friends in the days when they were in power, and when the then premier of this country, Sir John Thompson, discussed this matter he did not venture to make the argument which my hon. friend has, but attempted to justify it on another ground. The motion which has been presented by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) demands that there should be an investigation into the affairs of the Interior Department during the past ten years. Now, is an investigation into a department or an investigation into anything else a proposition so simple and natural and easy that parliamentary usage and constitutional rights entitle any gentleman in this House to stand up and say: I suspect somebody of doing something and therefore we must have a committee of inquiry. In the mood in which hon. gentlemen on the other side are in just now we would be doing nothing but having committees of inquiry from now until next Christmas, if that were so. If there is one thing that does characterize my hon. friends on the other side over and above everything else, it is that they have forgotten all the old traditions of their party, all the old policies, all the old shibboleths by which they used to swear in the old days. They have forgotten even the Halifax platform, and there is only one thing that these hon. gentlemen set themselves to do now, and that is to look about and see if they can suspect their fellowman. I am sorry my hon. friend from St. Antoine is one of these gentlemen who have forgotten the injunctions which are laid down in Holy Writ, about thinking evil of no man and doing unto others as you would that they might do unto you. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) has forgotten all these injunctions, and if he has one occupation since he has come into this House it is to go about suspecting his fellow members, and employees of this government, and suggesting these insinuations, and intimating to the House and to the country that there is some evil thing which he has in the back of his head but which up to the present day he has never been able to get out.

There are some people in this country who hoped that my hon. friend, when he came to the House of Commons, would stand for some principles which meant the advancement and prosperity of this country; but during the four sessions that he has sat in this parliament, at no time has his name been identified with any proposition making for the advancement and prosperity of this country. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether or not you believe in the science of phrenology. I do not know that I believe very much in it myself; but I have found in some of the books that I have read that the professors of phrenology claim that one of the bumps to be found in the heads of certain gentlemen indicates that they are destined to become accusers of their fellow-men, and I think that an examination of the head of the hon. member for St. Antoine would show that particular bump to be abnormally developed. When did my hon. friend come before this House and make any announcement of policy or suggest that in the administration of public affairs during the last ten years there has been any error of policy which he proposed to remedy? Those who have listened to his utterances, or who have read them with care, will fail to find anything of the kind. Has he laid down a policy himself? If there is anything to be gathered from his vague suggestion about retaining the timber berths for some indefinite time in the future, so that the country might have the advantage of the unearned increment, it is that he, coming from the city of Montreal, where the good Conservatives take no stock in the talk about the public operation of utilities, is casting his eyes sideways towards the socialistic theories of the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) as adopted by his leader, and is thinking of the time when a Conservative government will be in power, and, in addition to operating many other things, will operate these timber limits themselves.

I submit that if this motion for a committee of investigation is seriously intended, we should have some evidence. According to all authorities, the parliamentary practice is that the gentleman who asks for a committee should make out a prima facie case to warrant the House in granting that committee. What have we in this case? Instead of evidence, there is incorrect representation of facts; instead of proof, there is an unwarranted and unreasonable suspicion; instead of a frank statement of the case, there is ingenious and unfair reasoning and plausible but wholly impossible conclusions.

You would think, to hear hon. gentlemen opposite, that this government were dealing with timber berths in a different manner from that of any other government. In the older provinces the timber berths are controlled by the local legislatures, and how are they administered? What has been the rule in the province of Nova Scotia, from which I come? For the past fifty years it has been open to any man who desired to obtain a timber berth to go to the office of the provincial secretary and by paying $40 per 100 acres get the title to the land and the wood as well. I am sure that the souls of our hon. friends, if they did not happen to know that, must have been terribly shocked at such a policy on the part of the government of Nova Scotia, which would let Tom, Dick and Harry buy all the land they wanted at 40 cents an acre. Our hon. friends opposite a few years ago had as their leader Sir John Thompson, who, while premier of Nova Scotia, carried out that policy. Yet these hon. gentlemen talk about a policy in regard to timber lands in the Northwest, which requires every man who gets a timber limit to pay $5 per annum for each square mile and 50 cents on every thousand feet of lumber he cuts. No matter what occurs, that payment must go on or he loses his limit. And this policy has existed under both governments. In addition, there is to be paid the amount of the bonus, which is determined by public competition. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of the Interior this afternoon read to this House a statement of the results of sales of timber limits in the province of Quebec during the past ten years, and it was found that the proceeds of those sales were exactly similar, so far as the bonuses were concerned, to those of the sales by this government in the Northwest during the same period. I am not familiar with the conditions in the other provinces; but I cite these conditions in these two eastern provinces to show that in this matter hon. gentlemen opposite are simply attempting to deceive and delude the people of this country.

Some of our hon. friends declare that it was a frightful statement that was made by the ex-Minister of the Interior this afternoon when he said that the same policy was carried on now as had been carried on under the late government. What are the facts? If you turn to chapter 55, section 170, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, you will find among other things this laid down: That the Governor in Council may from time to time order that leases of the right to cut timber on certain timber berths shall be offered at public auction, and may authorize the lease of the right to cut timber on any timber berth to any person who is the sole applicant for such lease. Mark you, this legislation, put on the statute-book by hon. gentlemen opposite, authorized the Governor in Council to lease the right to cut timber on any berth to any one who was the sole applicant for such lease, the bonus to be fixed in the application, and without putting the berth up to public competition at all. But here comes a section under which the council could authorize the minister, when one or more applied for the right to cut timber on the same berth, to invite tenders and to award the lease to the person tendering the highest cash bonus. That was put on the statute-book in 1884 by hon. gentlemen opposite and was there down to 1896 and is still there. That is the law which was enforced when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power and when they gave Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann 500 square miles of timber land in five separate berths in Swan river, an inaccessible part of the country, after giving only fourteen days' notice. Just imagine how the souls of my hon. friends, which seem to be terribly wrung over the short time allowed in advertising berths by the present administration, must be wrung when they think that only fourteen days' notice was given by the good Conservative government with regard to the disposition of five timber berths on Swan river. But I do not suppose that any one of them, except the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) will worry about the question at all. Because they are only playing the game. Everybody knows that this whole thing is a farce. Everybody knows that these gentlemen are attempting to startle the country with these allegations, which they are making indiscriminately on the stump and in this peculiar literature which they are circulating all over the country. They come to parliament and say that somebody informed them about something. Another says that the man on the street told him something. So they go on retailing all these slanders and ingenious misrepresentations and are going to ask the people to believe them.

I am not going over the story of what occurred under Conservative governments, but I want to show you one fact with regard to the question as to whether a statement of the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) this afternoon was correct or not. We have heard some discussion about Mr. T. Mayne Daly, former Minister of the Interior. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) read from a speech delivered by him in 1894. I turned up that address and I find this is what Mr. Daly said and as to which the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) said nothing :

I may say for the information of the House that the Department of the Interior has sold the timber over which it has jurisdiction in Manitoba and the Territories and in the railway belt in British Columbia by public competition. That is by public tender and not by auction sale, it having been the opinion of the officers of the department, in contra distinction to the views of the hon. gentleman who has last spoken, that better prices could be got by tender than by public auction.

That was the policy of the Conservative government in 1894 under the statute which I have read and that policy has obtained down to the present time under the administration of the ex-Minister of the Interior and the present minister.

This resolution asks us to investigate what was done since the 1st of July, 1898, and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) gives nine reasons why an investigation should be had. Seven of these refer to matters of policy which could be regulated by a Bill, if the hon. gentleman wished to assume the responsibility of introducing one. I make the statement, following in some respect that made by the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), that seven of these alleged reasons relate to matters of law, and either the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) or the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) could have had that law amended at any time during the past ten years if they wanted to, or if they belonged to that class of men who might be dignified with the title of initiative statesmen, who would stand by some definite policy which they would ask this House to accept. What is there to investigate? What is there for the committee to deal with so far as regards seven out of those nine reasons?

But we are told that the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) changed the terms of the holdings, so that a man who had invested his money in a timber berth could obtain a title to it. Well, if the end to be desired is to have the wood cut by mills, what an absurd proposition it would be to say to a man who was willing to invest say $40,000 in the erection of a large mill: We shall only give you a title which may expire the 31st December in any year. The ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) did what any sound business man would have done. We had a similar proposition in Nova Scotia some years ago. Our coal lands were held under twenty-one year leases, renewable at the end of each term. A gentleman came along who said he wanted to develop the coal mines on a large scale, but could not do so unless he got a lease for ninety-nine years so that capitalists would have some security and permanencey for their investment, and he pointed out that in consideration of this they would give the Nova Scotia government more yearly by way of royalty for the coal than they would under the twenty-one year lease. Well, the government of Nova Scotia gave them that lease for ninety-nine years, and they did it as a business proposition. And the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton would deserve to be condemned if he declined to give the lumber operators, who were willing to put money into a mill and cut lumber, the permanencey they desired and to which they were entitled.

Oh, but they say, look at the close bidding. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) made that one of his reasons. What a terrible ground for attack. But what kind of bids would you expect to have when people put in tenders? Did you expect that the bids should be $10,000 apart? Would you expect that those who are tendering had not some intelligent appreciation of what they wanted? And because the bids were $500 apart on a timber berth, our friends say that this is a terrible ground for suspicion and we must have a committee. Well, I venture to say there is not among them a business man who has had to do with tenders who does not know that under ordinary business conditions, you will find tenders coming close together at all times and under all conditions.

Then the only other ground given by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is the fact that one person opened the tenders in the department. You would think that these gentlemen, in the olden days, with all the virtues and glories which they possessed, when they were in power, would, before opening tenders, summon a conclave of all the honest and dignified men in the department and a secret convention prepared with the greatest possible solemnity. I am sorry the ex-Minister of Railways is not here because he is the only gentleman opposite who has any experience in opening tenders, but I venture the statement that when he was having tenders awarded in his department he did not have any conclave assembled, but one man only opened them in the days when John Haggart was Minister of Railways. And such was the case in the other departments, and in a great many instances they dispensed with tenders altogether and gave the contracts to their own friends without any public competition at all.

And, let me say again, it is purely a matter in regard to which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), if they were responsible public men and were here to take the initiative in regard to matters in the interests of the country, would have introduced a Bill in this House and had it put on the statute-book which would have provided that the practice of their friends when in office should not now be followed, but that tenders should now be opened under certain conditions. Incidentally, I would congratulate hon. members on the other side on one fact. I listened with a great deal of interest to the eloquent reference made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) the other night to glorious old England. I do not know whether the House can recall the incident, but my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) and I were much interested in a little touch of eloquence which the leader of the opposition threw into the statement that over in England, his hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) told him, they did not open tenders as they opened them here.

My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is not much given to looking to England for precedents. For instance, he was never very enthusiastic about the British preference. And, the other day he might have gone to the mother country to take a lesson from the diplomacy of the great mistress of the seas, that diplomacy which has done so much to make her the guardian of the world's peace, and in discussing the Japanese question, he might have learned from Great Britain's diplomacy a lesson which would have done him and his followers good. Now, what kind of a function will have to be performed in order to suit my hon. friend from St. Antoine in the opening of tenders? So far as I can gather from the utterances of that hon. gentleman and others on that side, I think the first thing required would be a microscope. Then you would have an expert on handwriting. And in the third place you would have to have a person who was an authority on pedigrees and family history. But even all this would not be sufficient. You would have to have a man to watch the handwriting expert and another man to watch the authority on pedigree and family history. But even after all that, you would need a man to watch the microscope, for otherwise you would never satisfy my hon. friend from St. Antoine. Now, though it is rather late, I would like to say a word or two in regard to the hon. member (Mr. Ames). We have heard a great many exaggerations in this debate. The hon. gentleman for St. Antoine started out in his discussion of this question on apparently, very good grounds. He was, apparently very ingenious about it; he sought to lead the House to believe that he wanted to be perfectly fair. He went on to say that he had no criticism to offer of the practical timber operator. The timber operator called forth every admiration that he was willing to express of anybody. He was even disposed to admit that the genuine lumber manufacturer would be justified in making a capital outlay for the purpose of securing reserve supply. The man he was after was the man who had no mill and no intention of having one. Now, we have heard talk here about the Big Four and about my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Burrows). That hon. gentleman was a lumber operator before he came into this House—just as honest and capable a lumber operator in all respects as my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley). As a lumber operator, he had a perfect right to get timber berths from this government as my hon. friend from Argenteuil has to hold timber berths under the Ontario government. Though that hon. gentleman does not happen to sit in the Ontario House, he is a prominent member of his party. Why should he criticize my hon. friend from Dauphin for holding timber lands in the Northwest, a bona fide timber operator in the Northwest who grew up in the business and has been just as honest a timber operator since he entered this House in 1902 as he was before. What did these hon. gentlemen expect Mr. Burrows to do? Is the penalty of his being a member of this House to be that he shall throw aside the business of a lifetime, give away his property, and retire from business life altogether? The hon. member for St. Antoine thinks it is all right for Mr. Burrows to hold the land he works. But some members on the back benches rise and talk about the Big Four and about men who are rich today and were poor ten years ago—and all this miserable innuendo and insinuation. Any one in the western country will tell you that Mr. Burrows is a capable and successful business man, a man who attended to his affairs honestly and properly, a man who had a right to hold that property now as he had then. What do hon. gentlemen opposite mean by the criticism they direct against my hon. friend from Dauphin? That hon. gentleman has friends who are near and dear to him as other members of this House have. He has been an honest gentleman in his own business affairs. The hon. member for St. Antoine concedes that he has a perfect right to hold 235 square miles of timber in the Northwest without criticism. Is it upright or fair, I submit to this House and this country, for hon. gentlemen opposite, simply because they are out of power and wish to get back, to attack the good name of a man like Mr. Burrows, and pillory him before the country as a grafter, simply because he stands in the way of the peculiarly illegitimate criticism they are making of the public affairs of this country? Here is Mr. T. A. Burrows, a legitimate lumberman, owning 235 square miles of property conceded by that peculiarly correct spirit, the hon. member for St. Antoine, to be all right. But my hon. friend from Dauphin, owns, in addition, 228 square miles which, as a bona fide operator, he will some day operate. But, because, for the moment, he is not actually cuting down timber on this limit, therefore he is to be represented to this country as a man to be condemned and despised, and vilified. If, on March 1, 1908, he were to start to build a mill on that property, then according to my hon. friend from St. Antoine, he would be a very estimable and proper man. How about Mr. J. R. Booth, of Ottawa, who, I am told, owns some 5,000 square miles of timber land which at present is not working? What about Messrs. Price Brothers, of Quebec, friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, who, while they operate one or two mills, have no less than 4,000 square miles of spruce lands in the province of Quebec. Did anybody ever hear my hon. friend in his own province, either publicly or privately or in the public press declaring that the Messrs. Price should not be respected and should not hold up their heads in the community because they happen to have some timber berths which at the present time they are not working but which they might work at any time.

The Conservative party during the time they were in power gave away 511 timber berths without competition for which they received nothing. The Liberal party during the time they have been in power have sold by public competition on the same terms and under the same conditions as were laid down by the Conservatives as the proper rule, 309 berths for which they received for the country $528,878. Yet they tell you that there is no use in applying the tu quoque argument. We have, of course, seen some peculiar developments of that allegation that you should not use the tu quoque argument; when you hear these gentlemen speaking of the Cook and Sutherland claims they are using what might be called a tu quoque quoque argument. We do not need any tu quoque argument to defend our position, but when our friends go on the stump and talk about the glories of the Conservative party and their achievements in this country, the bringing about of confederation, the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the accomplishing of everything that has been done in Canada, they cannot take all the glory they claim without having a word or two of criticism; we must point out some of the things they have done which they ought not to have done, and some of the things which they left undone which they ought to have done. In Stanstead the other day the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) waxed eloquent over the proposition that the Conservative party were the natural rulers of this country. He likened them to a dear old mother who had brought up her children and had reached the time of life when she had disappeared and a step-mother came into the family and he indicated that the Liberal party was the step-mother, and were abusing the children and doing all kinds of things. He was hardly fortunate in his simile. If he had said that there was an unfortunate widower who had got into the clutches of a housekeeper, who after being there eighteen years had come to think that she owned the whole establishment, frittered away all the resources, and took nearly all the money of the old man; and in addition to that fought with the neighbours and became such a nuisance that the whole community demanded that she be turned out, he would have come nearer the true case. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. (Haggart) tells us that times have changed and we have changed with them. I know my friends opposite would like to persuade the country that they have changed quite a bit since 1896, but I am afraid they have hardly reached that stage at which they will be able to convince any large portion of the people of this country that their change has been of any radical character; we see the same people in the front benches, the same people controlling the destinies of the party, except that the new leader has supplanted the old, and the people will recognize the old faces the next time the party appeals to them.

Let me examine some of Mr. Ames' statements. He said that 365 licenses were in existence covering 6,402 miles. Fifty-six of these licenses had been granted under the Conservative government, and were still in force; fifty-six licenses at fifty square miles a license is a fair estimate. Applying these figures you will find that twenty-eight hundred square miles were chargeable to our friends before this government came into power.

Mr. AMES. The minister told us the other day 1,840.

Mr. E. A. MACDONALD. I remember that. I was going to say that we could even take them at twenty-five square miles per license.

Mr. AMES. Take them at what they actually are.

Mr. E. A. MACDONALD. 1,800. That would mean that this government would be responsible for something like 4,602 square miles. The Conservative party granted 29,322 square miles. My hon. friend said that 2,400 square miles was in the hands of speculators. I take the proportion before 1896 of the fifty-six square miles that had then been granted and I find that if you make that proportion properly, of the quantity granted by the Conservative party 343 square miles would be in the hands of speculators. In addition to that I submit there should be deducted from this calculation the 228 miles which belonged to my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) which I submit to any fair-minded man should be classified as belonging to a bona fide mill operator and not a speculator. The hon. gentleman from Dauphin had a right to hold these lands and should not be classed as a speculator.

In another of these statements prepared by the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) and given to other gentlemen who have spoken, the statement used by the hon. member of Calgary, I find one or two little errors which might well be taken into consideration. The hon. member at page 2430 of 'Hansard' purported to give the number of square miles which apparently were applied for but he did not give correctly the number of acres which were surveyed. For instance, if you take berth 1907, advertised September 14, 1903, on the application of J. & M. Young, the amount he puts there is 100 acres, but the description in that lease shows that only twenty square miles were actually alienated. Again with berth 1031 in the same document we find that whereas 118 square miles are alleged to have been alienated, as a matter of fact only 51½ were alienated. Going through the statement accurately you find an error of 137 square miles in the statement of the hon. member (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) which should be deducted from the number given by Mr. Ames. Then you heard the hon. member for Portage la Prairie to-night read a statement made by Messrs. McDonald of Ottawa in regard to the allegation made that they were speculators. My hon. friend has included in his statement the 125 miles which should be deducted. I think the positive statement made by the Messrs. McDonald is one which my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) if he is fair at all, will be bound to accept. In a public leter Mr. McDonald says:

> Any one unacquainted with the real situation, would by the speeches of these gentlemen, be led to believe that we were speculators, buying and holding limits merely to the prejudice of the settlers generally, whereas the truth is, we have for the last three or four years been operating large saw and planing mills, and at the present time are giving employment to over three hundred men.
> In view of these facts it will be seen that the statements and insinuations made with respect to the McDonalds are, to say the least, unfair, and while appreciating the difficulty that politicians find in locating political capital, I object to transactions with which I have been connected being so misconstrued and distorted as to convey to the minds of the public the impression that something was wrong.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, in the face of that statement that you must take this 125 square miles of the Messrs. McDonald out of the category of speculation and put it in the list of bona fide operators. Then I find that my hon. friend has only made a mistake—a slight mistake—of 833 square miles. So that after our hon. friends have grown eloquent and their souls have been vexed about the alienation of 2,400 square miles, we find, after deducting these mistakes that we have been enabled to correct, that 833 miles of these timber berths belong to real operators. I fancy that if we kept this debate open for a day or two we would find that almost all, if not all, of these allegations as to speculators would disappear. I venture to make the statement that if a careful examination of these holdings were made it would be found that not more than 500 square miles were in the hands of men against whom it might be said that they were speculators. As to even these, what are the real facts? The hon. Minister of the Interior has notified these men that any one who has had a limit for a reasonable period of years must at once proceed to erect mills and cut lumber and thus take it out of the category of limits in regard to which it might be alleged that they were held for speculation. After all this tempest in a teapot, as my right hon. friend the Prime Minister said the other day, after all this wild tearing of hair about 2,400 square miles of timber lands in the Northwest, we found there are not 500 square miles or the one three hundreth part of available timber lands involved in the whole question. Oh, but the souls of these hon. gentlemen are vexed about the fixity of tenure and the time of the advertisement. I do not need to go into those points, as they have been fully answered. They want to know who the members of the Imperial Pulp Company are, and they drag in the old North Atlantic Trading Company fad, a thing that was explained long ago, and nobody but an antediluvian Tory orator ventures to discuss it in this House to-day. They attempted to drag this in. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, knows very well that the Imperial Pulp Company was incorporated somewhere in Canada, either in the Dominion or in one of the provinces. The hon. gentleman can go around insinuating, and if he does not know who compose the company he can find out if he wants to. They tell us that Governor McMillan, of Manitoba, is one of the gentlemen composing that company. Is not that a frightful thing? Just fancy a gentleman, who, in his long career in that western country, has won the respect and confidence, not only of Liberals, but of those belonging to the party with which these hon. gentlemen are associated, being made the object of attack and innuendo, and having it said that he was connected with a transaction that was improper. I venture to say that there is no man who occupies any position in this country against whom they would not cast insinuations for the purpose of playing their game of defamation. Responsible men, they say, will tell you that there has been no use of tendering for timber limits except through some one who is a favourite with the government. After all the wealth of insinuations that we have had given to us in this debate, did these hon. gentlemen venture to say that there was any man who was proscribed on account of his politics in regard to the selling of one of these timber berths? I watched very carefully, after the statement my hon. friend made, to see if any of these hon. gentlemen would make that assertion, but the perusal of the debate shows that not one of these hon. gentlemen has ventured to make the statement that any man was prevented on account of his politics from having the same fair treatment in regard to the timber lands of this country as is accorded to any man by this government. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior cited the case of Mr. Cowan, of Prince Albert, as to whose political proclivities there does not seem to be much doubt. Why insinuate about it? Why talk about what people are alleged to be saying on the street? Has this House come to this, that every old wife's story, and all the tittle tattle of the corner grocery is to be lugged in here and made the basis of charges against public men? That is the depth to which these hon. gentlemen have descended. They say that so-and-so is talked about the street. What man who has any respect for the position of the representatives of the people in this parliament will descend to such depths in the serious discussion of a public question, and yet we have come to this pass in Canada that there is nothing that these hon. gentlemen, who have been so long out of office, will not do in order to try to get back again. Need I discuss further the question of the values of these timber limits to which my hon. friend referred? My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, at the time that this absurd statement of value was made, stated there and then that the valuation which the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, placed upon these limits was 500 per cent in excess of the price at which the same character of timber was being held in the province of New Brunswick. The statement of my hon. friend, which appears in 'Hansard,' shows that he talked about the settlers in the Northwest, about the injury that is being done to them; and in that connection, just let me quote, in passing, from the Regina 'Leader,' a despatch that shows how things really are:

> Vancouver, British Columbia, January 24.—At a large meeting of lumbermen representing both coast and mountain manufacturers held here yesterday an important reduction in the price of lumber was agreed upon. Rough lumber goes down $3 per thousand, clear $2, and shingles 75 cents. There are immense stocks of lumber on hand at present and nine-tenths of the mills in British Columbia are closed. The situation was undoubtedly forced by the banks clamouring for a reduction of the overdrafts and insisting that the present large stocks be sold off. There is the additional reason that the American mills will cut prices, and sell heavily in the northwest provinces just as soon as the season opens. The wages of mill hands are from twenty-five per cent to fifty per cent lower than a year ago and logs are worth three to four dollars less per thousand. There are approximately three hundred million feet of lumber now on hand, while last year's entire output was not more than five hundred.

That is in reference to the lumber conditions in the Northwest. As to the value of these limits, the only evidence that is submitted to us is the evidence of a real estate agent in Manitoba, anxious to inflate the value of some property that he may possibly sell, anxious to get big commissions. That is the only evidence that my hon friend seriously puts forward in this House, and he asks us to believe it. Let me say right here that the statement of Mr. McDonald to-day directly contradicted the statement of the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) as to the value of the property secured by them, and I find that the hon. gentleman tried to-night to get out of this statement, which will be found in 'Hansard.' Let us see what he did say:

> I do not know who comprise that company, but I am informed that this company have offered their limits at $3,000 a mile, which would make the price of this one berth $375,000. I am passing no comment on the value of that berth as I have no means of knowing it, but these limits cost by the way of bonus $13,125, or $105 per square mile, and I infer that the company which bought it for $13,125 must have some reason for now asking $375,000 for it.

He stated in his utterance the other day that that was the statement made by the Messrs. McDonald. That hon. gentleman also stated that he did not know who comprised the company, but that he was informed that the company had offered the property at that price. Mr. McDonald positively contradicted that statement, and with regard to these exaggerated values that these hon. gentlemen have stated in the hope of influencing the country, he has given the lie direct to them and put them to the proof. I venture to say that instead of these timber limits being worth $5,000,000, 500 per cent of that amount would come nearer to the correct value, and I venture to say that hon. gentlemen in dealing with this question as regards the values have been quite as unfair as they have been in dealing with other phases of the question.

I was amused at the way the chief whip of the Conservative party conned these papers; he is one of these gentlemen who can smell a scandal further than any one else; next the member for St. Antoine he fairly revels in it. The hon. member for Argenteuil complained that these people in the Interior Department would not accept tenders by telegram, but I venture to make the statement, having some slight knowledge of business in this country, that neither the hon. member (Mr. Perley) himself, nor any other well regulated business man would accept a tender of this kind by telegram. And yet that is a charge which is brought against this government. We know that if a man approaches the consideration of any question with a poisoned mind and with a desire to look suspiciously at even the most proper thing, he can find wrong-doing in almost any thing. When my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) put on his microscope and gathered his experts around him and approached the matter in this spirit, he was bound to find something wrong for if he did not there was something sure to go. I say that any honest man sitting down in his office whether in a department or in a counting house in this country who has to do with the disposition of a property in regard to which the only question for him to determine is how much money he is going to receive from the highest tenderer, could not do otherwise than the official of the Interior Department acted in regard to the tenders. I asked my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) what he would do in regard to this matter of the tender and he said he would call for new tenders. Just remember that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) went and looked at this paper and although he knows nothing about the change at all, he is dead sure there is something wrong. I say that any honest man attending to his business which is to get the most money for these timber berths, would never have questioned this transaction; and, there was nothing in it to question. All that the official of the Interior Department had to do was to report to the minister that a certain amount had been paid by a man who was the highest tenderer and that he did. Talk about collusion. What was he going to collude about. This idea of collusion is suggesting a thing which it is perfectly ridiculous to suggest in connection with this proposition. Could any two men collude against the whole world. With forty-two days notice in newspapers, and notices scattered all over this country, what sense would there be in any two people colluding. But as this debate went on, one hon. gentleman got up and he talked about Mr. Turriff locking himself in his room, his iron clad chamber I think the excited member for North Toronto said. How do they know anything about it? We have not heard anything about secret chambers. One hon. gentleman opposite said they had suspicion in their minds, and because they had suspicion in their minds forsooth, the right hon. gentleman should dance to their whistling and appoint a committee to suit one of the back benchers on the other side. Let me say that if these hon. gentlemen would carry out the golden rule that other people in this world are just as honest as they are, and refrained from going around suspecting wrongly and unfairly their fellow men, they would not be bothered so much about suspicion. Now, where do we stand with regard to this question. We have the same system in dealing with timber berths that was adopted by our opponents; there is not a single case of complaint on record from any tenderer of unfair treatment in this department during the whole ten years of its administration. My hon. friends opposite have gone far in innuendo and suspicion, but they have not been able to produce to this House or to this country a single man who wanted to tender or who had tendered in the Department of the Interior, who had ever alleged he had not received fair treatment. And if there are no complaints of that kind these hon. gentlemen are worrying themselves unnecessarily.

Let me ask: Is there any instance of any sale of any of these timber limits at any of the fancy prices which hon. gentlemen opposite allege they are worth. There is not one tittle of proof in that respect, and when the minister tells us that whenever a possible objection might be taken about holding timber berths without operating mills upon them, notice has been given to these holders of timber berths that mills should be provided, every possible shred of the case presented by these hon. gentlemen falls at once to the ground. All that my hon. friend from St. Antoine could say was: that at least in the case of one timber limit disposed of it had aroused his suspicions. My hon. friends opposite, after all their declamations after all the excited language they have used, the very best their leader upon this question could say is, that in the case of one limit he thought it was disposed of under circumstances that might be characterized as suspicious. Is not that a great case to ask for a commission upon ? And when we happen to have in this House in the person of the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turiff)—a gentleman who has as much right to be treated as an honourable man as any one who sits at the left of the Speaker—and when he stands up in this House and declares that so far as regards these tenders there was no wrong-doing, is there one man who has in his make-up the slightest scintilla of fairness who will not say that the statement made by my hon. friend from St. Antoine, that the circumstances in one case might be characterized as suspicious, falls to the ground. If there should be any suspicion created by the hon. member (Mr. Ames) would it not be removed by the word of an honest honourable man, and is there any fair minded man in this country who need worry about suspicions. As I have said, if a man approaches a proposition of this kind, intending to misconstrue, intending to misrepresent, intending to think evil of his fellow man, it is very easy for him to find circumstances which are suspicious. But if any one considers all we have heard as a judge or a jury should do, desiring to do that which is fair and right and to render to every man his due, I say that from all we have heard in this House during the past three days discussion there is not the slightest scintilla of evidence to warrant this motion being granted by the House. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether you ever have read the story called 'Ten thousand a year,' but if you have you will recollect that it describes the efforts of a firm of lawyers called Quirk, Gammon and Snap, who were engaged in the task of promoting the claims to the peerage of a gentleman known as Mr. Tittlebat Titmouse. These gentlemen laboured long and wearily and Mr. Quirk was very wise and very suspicious, and Mr. Gammon was as smooth and as oily as any gentleman of that particular type could be, and Mr. Snap was aggressive at every stage of the case as it went along and they won at some stages and people thought Titmouse would get the peerage. Now my hon. friend from North Toronto is the Quirk of the Conservative party, my hon. friend from St. Antoine is the Gammon of the opposition firm, and there are so many Snaps that I could hardly number them. Mr. Speaker. But just as the firm of Quirk, Gammon and Snap failed to land this peerage for Tittlebat Titmouse, so will hon. gentlemen opposite fail to impress this country with the message which they are now attempting to send forth and will never reach office by these methods.

Just one word in conclusion. I find that a distinguished gentlemen who sits on the front benches on the other side once used this language in this parliament :

> I think it is time that the hon. gentleman dealt more fairly with his fellow members in this House who are endeavouring to discharge their duties here as faithfully and honorably as himself. I think it is time that we settled down to business and endeavour to do something useful for which the country gives us our indemnity. I think it is time that we endeavoured to carry through legislation which will be beneficial to the country instead of taking up the whole time of the House in fishing and alleged scandals, in making allegations that cannot be substantiated and in trying to create the impression in the country that there is something wrong at the seat of government in the hope of destroying the feeling of confidence in the government which prevails throughout the country to-day.

My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) used that eloquent language some years ago in this House. I commend to my hon. friend as an old parliamentarian the task of impressing on his friend the member for St. Antoine and some others who sit behind him, the virtue of this beautiful language.

Mr. SPROULE. I may tell the hon. gentleman that the circumstances were as different from the present circumstances as day is from night.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I am sorry that my hon. friend is not growing mellow with advancing years, because if he were he would know that his words are just as true to-day as they were in 1891 when he uttered them. I apologize for trespassing on the attention of the House at such length at this late hour. I ventured to do so because I felt that my hon. friends opposite were not dealing fairly with this House and this country, and I submit that their apparently sincere appeals to the right hon. gentleman who leads this House for a committee are not sincere, and the right hon. gentleman would not be justified for one moment in paying any attention to them. This motion should be defeated.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I fancy that when the Premier to-night lays his head upon his pillow, with the terrible indictment of the hon. member for North Toronto still ringing in his ears, and with the full knowledge of the fact that not only the eyes of the members of this House, but the eyes of the people of this country as a whole, are upon him, he will not take much consolation from the stump speech and the attempted comical stories that have been perpetrated by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). This is not a time in the history of Canada for frivolous stories. It is not a time to indulge in buncombe. It is a time when not only the eyes of Canada, but the eyes of the whole world, are on the right hon. gentleman. Why, Sir, what does the great English press to-day say of the position the Premier occupies ? The right hon. gentleman has been fortunate in the past few years ; he has gone to England on more than one occasion and has been treated there with a great deal of adulation and flattery, and has been thrown into contact with the best people in the mother land. There has been a time too in the province of Ontario, that greatest province in this whole confederation, when the right hon. gentleman thought well of the people there and of their opinion. What does the right hon. gentleman think to-day of the opinion of the English press of himself and those by whom he is surrounded ? The 'Economist' says

> The worst his opponents can allege is that he has been remiss in not ordering an inquiry in the Interior Department and not dismissing those about him who make a vulgar display of riches, acquired no one knows how, unless by official malversation on a grand scale.

And the right hon. gentleman has sat there all day long, consulting notes, and has time and again picked up from his desk a file of papers, intending to reply to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who he knew was going to speak ; yet so strong has been the indictment made by the hon. member for North Toronto that the right hon. gentleman dare not rise in his place and reply. So, forsooth, what has been done ? Something had to be done, and so my genial friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), ever on the alert to deliver a stump speech or to repeat a funny story, has filled in the breach. Yes, the right hon. gentleman will go home to-night, but there will still be ringing in his ears that terrible indictment against his government. There have been times when the right hon. gentleman has awaked to the emergency of the occasion. There was a time when he stood up and said that the stories of the immorality of members of his cabinet were so strong that he had to listen to them. He heard those stories on the street, and I venture to say that they came to him in letters from all parts of the Dominion ; and what has he had to do? He has had to drive the unclean element out of his cabinet on the score of immorality. What has he done in regard to these charges against colleagues who have acquired riches, 'no one knows how unless by official malversation on a grand scale.' I need not tell the right hon. gentleman what stories are repeated from one end of this Dominion to the other, or give him the names of the gentlemen who have been implicated in these scandals. I will not use the word scandals ; I will say the statements of facts. It is idle to say that he has not heard the stories of the suddenly-acquired wealth of the four gentlemen whose names have been on the lips of every man in this House and of many people throughout this whole country. What is he face to face with to-night ? A week ago, knowing exactly what was in the documents—for no one will believe that he did not know, until he got up and made the statement that he never looked at that file until it was laid on the table of this House the other day——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I never did.

Mr. BENNETT. I will accept the right hon. gentleman's statement that he never looked at that file until it was laid on the table the other day ; but I will say that it was passing strange that he did not. Then, why did he refuse day in and day out to allow it to be produced? It is not because it was against a rule of the House, because he had allowed before official files to be brought down. We accept the word of the right hon. gentleman that he never saw that file until it was laid on the table, but he must imagine that the people in the country are very credulous if he thinks they will accept that statement. It must be however accepted by the House. The record was brought down and what was presented? The only thing presented was this, and it is a statement that never will be accepted by any sane man as a truthful one. When I speak of the truth of the statement, I am not attacking the statement made by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) who gave the story as told him by Mr. Fraser. What is the statement of Mr. Fraser? It is that he wrote out the tender and, as he says was the custom, filled in the figures at the last minute before closing it and sending it to the department. But where was the necessity of Mr. Fraser leaving the amount in blank when he had instructions to bid a positive sum, namely $7,000? Mr. Fraser's statement is that he had received instructions to tender at $7,000. Why then did he leave the amount blank?

Mr. OLIVER. I might say that Mr. Fraser told me it is customary, in preparing a tender for submission to the department, to have it written out without the figures being filled in, leaving a blank for the figures, so that there will be no opportunity for any one to know what the figures were, as Mr. Fraser himself would be the only one who would know and he would write them in himself.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Fraser wrote the tender out himself. He wrote it out in his own office and placed it in his own pocket and walked up to the department with it.

Will any reasonable man accept the explanation that he was afraid to mark in the figures in his own office when he had placed the document in his own pocket and handed it to the minister himself? Such a statement is absurd and incredible. Take all the elements that go to mark out this piece of strategy, and strategy of a poor kind, and it is only on a par with the original files exhibited to-day. Here are men supposed to be rival contractors, and the one man writes out the two tenders and the other signs his name to one of them. Does the right hon. gentleman know what is going on to-day in the Department of Public Works? Does he know that that kind of thing is going on? I tell him it is. I would like to see the right hon. gentleman visit the Committee of Public Accounts next Tuesday, and he will see my statement verified. Why was the other tender made out in different coloured ink and why did not Mr. Fraser bring that second one up? Has the minister an answer to that?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Fraser said that having received an order from his client to put in a tender at $7,000, he knew that the tender at $1,000 would have no value, but he was compelled, by the understanding he had with his associates, to put in that tender.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. I am giving the information as it is asked for. He put in the tender, as he had agreed to do with his associates, knowing that it was of no value, and therefore it was not of importance whether anybody knew or not what the amount was.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did he withhold the name of the tenderer?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT. If the second tender of $7,000 was an honest tender, why did he not write it on his own office paper as he did the first? Can the minister explain that? No one can. Why is the First Minister afraid to single out this case and have an investigation? In my opinion he takes the charitable view that not to give an investigation will prevent perjury. That is the only reason which can at all satisfy his mind.

Talk about suspicions regarding the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). Why, the evidence is uncontradicted that he opened those tenders in his own room and alone. The First Minister does not know what is going on around these departments. Does he know that one of the principal officials in that department has the goods in his house under a chattel mortgage to the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff)? Does the right hon. gentleman know that? Will the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) deny it? He cannot very well deny it, because it is a matter of record in the chattel mortgage office in this city. This man who comes here and says that his hands are clean has got right in his clutches, down to the last chair in the man's house, a chattel mortgage on the property and on all the belongings of one of the principal clerks in the Department of the Interior. There will be no difficulty in the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) getting all the information out of that department which he wants, so long as that clerk is there. Where are these two gentlemen, Mr. Nolan and the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff)? Are they on friendly terms? Why does not the First Minister say he must clear the skirts of Mr. Fraser who is a prominent Liberal; I must have him go into the witness box and swear that that tender, when he handed it to Mr. Turriff, was in the condition in which it is to-day. Every circumstance of time and place is against that contention. Look at the figures, written without doubt by Mr. Fraser, giving the dates, and look at the figures that stand there for $7,000? They are as different as day from night. If Mr. Fraser were ever placed in that witness box I do not believe he would swear, in the face of the damning evidence, with the figures all different, that he inserted those figures of $7,000. Who did, that is the question. There is one point that is uncontradicted and that is that one man alone looked at these tenders when they were opened and that was the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). These hon. gentlemen want charges made. Would it not be foolish for anyone on this side to say that the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) filled in those figures? What reason have we to make such a charge? I cannot make it. What reason have we to say that some clerk under the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), perhaps the unfortunate victim, who is writhing under his chattel mortgage, filled in the figures. I do not know who filled them in, but I do know that there are two papers standing there to-day that bear on their face most damning proof of being fraudulent, and the public will never believe that they are not fraudulent until the oath of the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) is pledged, and the oath of Mr. Fraser is pledged. But, let me go a little further. There is a charge made here that no $7,000 cheque was inclosed with Nolan's tender? And, in the case of Currie, also, the insinuation is that this tender was not properly made. This thing can be probed to the bottom. If Nolan placed in that envelope a marked cheque, you can find out from his bank that, on that date, a cheque for that amount was charged against his account.

Every business man knows that, and if Currie did not place a cheque in the envelope, that too can be proven by his bank account.

The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has fallen on stormy times. Let him remember that that which brought about the fall of the Ross administration in Ontario was scandals about their timber lands. Let him remember that that government gave to its friends and favorites properties that were worth thousands for a mere bagatelle. The public mind is keenly alive to these wrongs. The public do not believe that there has been straightforward selling to these men, who, from comparative ease in life, have reached a state of affluence that is known throughout this city—and, as an hon. friend suggests to me, throughout this whole country. The time has arrived when speeches such as that of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald)—and I say it in no disrespectful way—are not sufficient answer to such charges as those made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). It is not too late for the right hon. Prime Minister to accept the proposition made; it is not too late to move an amendment that, in this case, there be a searching inquiry. That will meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen on this side. But better than that in the hon. gentleman's eyes, it will meet the wishes of the right hon. gentleman's friends throughout the country—and he has many friends not only on the Liberal but on the Conservative side, friends who believe in his honesty of purpose and believe that he has stood out against the influences by which he is surrounded. These people read carefully what has been brought to light in the Public Accounts Committee. Let me remind the right hon. gentleman of one pitiful exhibition made in that committee last year. A man stood there giving his evidence who had been employed at $3 a day to watch the loading of a dredge. He had never gone near the dredge, but had simply gone to another employee of this government and paid him half the fee he was getting to do his work. And that witness stood there, unabashed, and said: I believe a man has a right to defraud the country as things are now. Is not that a terrible state of affairs? It is not too late for the right hon. gentleman to move an amendment that there should be a thorough investigation. I think the right hon. gentleman is uneasy in his conscience. I think he feels that it is due to his Liberal supporters and admirers throughout the country that there should be an investigation. For, whilst he listens to the flatteries of fawning sycophants amongst his supporters, he must see also the stern faces of men whose respect he would sooner have than the loudest flattery of some of those behind him. Let him remember the words that Shakespeare has placed in Wolsey's mouth:

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Give them to us.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not appealing to the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. A. Johnston)—Shakespeare is above him. Let the hon. Prime Minister remember the words.

I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities,
A still and quiet conscience.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Lake).

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hour were not so late I would ask the attention of the committee to the special estimate concerning seed grain in the Northwest, but I think the committee will hardly wish to proceed to-night.

Progress reported.

Mr. FOSTER. What business will be taken up this afternoon ?

Mr. FIELDING. Supply, the first estimate to be that regarding seed grain.

Motion agreed to and House adjourned at 3.25 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 7, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—OPENING OF TENDERS.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I am sorry I was not in the House last night when the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) was speaking, but I notice from the report of his speech that he made this statement :

> I am sorry that the ex-Minister of Railways is not here because he is the only gentleman opposite who has any experience in opening tenders, but I venture to submit that when he was having tenders awarded in his department he did not have any conclave assembled, but one man only opened them in the days when John Haggart was Minister of Railways.

Let me assure the House that I never was present at the opening of any tenders in my life when I was Minister of Railways, and furthermore by an order of the department it was absolutely necessary in the opening of the tenders that the deputy head of the department and another official should be present. It was they who opened the tenders and upon their report the contracts were awarded.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the orders of the day are called I ask the Minister of Public Works when I may expect a return that was ordered by the House on the 15th of January with reference to the erection of a breakwater in Prince Edward Island. I will send over a memorandum. I would like to have the return as soon as possible.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The returns are being prepared as rapidly as possible by the staff which is at the disposal of the department.

SUPPLY—CANADIANS ENTERING THE UNITED STATES.

The Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto) : Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the government, and particularly the attention of the Minister of the Interior, to a practice which has grown up recently in the United States of turning back Canadians who are passing the international boundary line without any just cause or reason. I have before me a case in which some residents of Toronto—in this instance they were chiefly Macedonians—had left Toronto to go to Europe and on returning to their home in Toronto, together with certain friends whom they were bringing out to Canada, and having return tickets to the city of Toronto, they landed at the port of Boston and were refused permission to proceed to their destination. They were deported without reason, were sent back to Liverpool, and they had to return subsequently at great expense, delay, and discomfort to themselves. I have received a letter from a Toronto firm of solicitors who act for these people, and as it summarizes the facts I shall read it. It would appear that the American authorities considered apparently that the Canadian authorities did not want these people in Canada. I think this is a proper subject for inquiry by the Minister of the Interior. I shall read the letter and leave it to the minister to take action.

Mr. OLIVER. Give me the name of the firm of solicitors so that I may communicate with them.

Mr. MACDONELL. The solicitors are Allan, Cassels & Defries. The letter reads :

A client of mine has interested me in the hard luck of some fourteen Macedonians. Most of these men were at one time residents of Toronto and had gone back to visit their friends and relatives in Europe and were returning to Toronto with some of their friends when they were stopped at Boston by the American commissioner and without being given any opportunity to communicate with their friends or to establish their right to proceed to their destination in Canada (whither their transportation tickets read) they were deported. The ship in which these people were expected arrived in Boston about December 23 last. On the 24th their friends here telegraphed to the commissioner at Boston to ascertain why they were not allowed to proceed on their journey. They received in reply a number of telegrams to the effect that these parties were 'debarred as likely to become a public charge; Canadian authorities do not want them in Canada.' Subsequent inquiries showed that they had been shipped to Liverpool. I got into communication with the department here and they cabled the Dominion government agent at Liverpool to return these parties. This was done and they are now in Toronto. I have received an account for their transportation from Liverpool. It appears to me that the American commissioner at Boston, one George Billings, acted in a very high-handed and arbitrary manner with the result that these people were put to a great deal of unnecessary discomfort, annoyance and expense. I do not know how to obtain copies of the instructions issued by the Department of Immigration to their officers, if any, at American seaports or to the United States officials. I thought perhaps you might oblige me by asking the requisite papers to be brought down and laid on the table of the House. The matter is one which may call for some attention on the part of the government, as it will be highly improper to permit without protest American officials to debar persons from entering who had tickets through to Canadian points and who had every right to proceed.

I notice that the very same thing has taken place at Buffalo lately where on two occasions parties from the city of Toronto having business to do in the United States were turned back and subjected to annoyance and delay without any apparent reason. It would seem from the letter I have read that the American authorities had some information that the Canadian authorities did not want these people in Canada. I hope there is some mistake about that. The facts are simple and I trust the Minister of the Interior will make proper inquiry to see that justice is done to these people who have suffered at the hands of the American authorities without any apparent reason.

THE PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND HILLSBOROUGH BRIDGE.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister to the fact that in the year 1900 the government decided to build a bridge at Hillsborough, P.E.I. The matter was brought up in this House, and Mr. Martin, the member for Queens, P.E.I., asked the following question :

1. When are tenders to be called for the construction of the Hillsborough bridge at Southport in Prince Edward Island? Are the tenders to be called for the work as a whole? If not, what division of the work is proposed to be made?
2. What limit of time is proposed for the completion of the work?
3. Does the government provide for the safety of foot passengers and other persons using the highway portion of the bridge?
4. What is the estimated cost of the bridge now proposed to be built? What was the estimated cost of bridge proposed to be built under section 2 of chapter 4 of the statutes of 1899?
5. What proportionate share of the cost of the bridge is the province of Prince Edward Island to contribute under the agreement for construction entered into on the 18th day of April, 1899?—capitalizing the half-yearly subsidy from the province at current rate of interest.

The reply to that question was as follows :

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. Preparations are being made for inviting tenders for this work, and hope in a few days to send out advertisements to newspapers. The work will be divided into two sections, the substructure in one, and the superstructure in the other.

2. Not yet fixed.

3. I asked the hon. gentleman to allow that to stand. The answer I have received does not correspond with my own recollection of the facts.

4. The estimated cost of the bridge is $750,000. The original estimate was something less than $1,000,000.

5. The provincial government shall contribute annually towards the interest on the cost.

I want to draw the attention of the right hon. First Minister to the fact that on the 23rd January last I asked the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in regard to an item published in the press, as follows :

Mr. Collingwood Schreiber has been appointed sole arbitrator in the claim for extras of Mr. M. J. Haney, of Toronto, who was the contractor for the bridge across the Hillsborough river, Prince Edward Island, and which cost the government $1,500,000. Mr. Haney is claiming $300,000 as still due him. The investigation will last all this week.

To that the Hon. Mr. Graham replied :

The item may be correct. I am not sure as to the details. It is true that Mr. Schreiber has been appointed arbitrator to settle a claim made by Mr. Haney against the Department of Railways and Canals.

In January 22 the question was asked of the Minister of Railways and Canals, as will be found on page 1751 of 'Hansard' : What was the total cost of the construction of the Hillsborough bridge ? Reply given was : $1,363,085.57. It was also asked what claims are outstanding, and the reply given was : $393,821.04. So that if this claim is paid the total cost of the bridge will have been $1,756,906.61 or $1,006,906.61 more than it was originally estimated to cost. The original estimate of the cost of this bridge was prepared by Mr. Schreiber, the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, and the work of construction was done under his direction. It indicates a very strange state of affairs that a gentleman occupying the position of Mr. Schreiber should have made an estimate of that kind; and now to have a claim for extras equal to half his original estimate of the whole cost seems to me to show a state of affairs that warrants a thorough investigation. I have understood it to be the practice for many years, both under the previous government and under the present government, when a claim comes before any department, particularly a very large claim as in this case, that it is referred to the Exchequer Court. That court was established for the purpose of investigating claims of this kind. It does seem very strange to me that the man who prepared the original estimate and under whom the work was done should be appointed sole arbitrator to decide how much should be paid for extras. On the face of the matter it would seem as if some grave mistake had been made, either in the original estimates or while the work was under construction, by which this government has paid more than it should have paid. We had a sample of Mr. Schreiber's work before the Public Accounts Committee last year, when it was shown that accounts were presented to him by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad Company for $165,000, and he certified and passed those accounts, and if it had not been for the action of the hon. Minister of Finance this country would have paid a large amount which it was not entitled to pay. I think the government should explain why this claim was not submitted to the Exchequer Court where it would have been thoroughly investigated. In face of the fact that the contractor was paid twice as much as the original estimate of the cost of the bridge, it looks to me as if this were a matter that would not stand a proper investigation before the Exchequer Court, and therefore Mr. Schreiber was appointed to cover it up so that all the facts would not come to light. I think the Prime Minister should at once cancel the arbitration and send the case to the Exchequer Court, or else give the people of this country some explanation of why this particular course has been taken. A case of this kind, in which there is a possibility of suspicion that matters are not all right, should certainly be sent to that court. From what I have heard, there is a grave suspicion in Prince Edward Island that this government have paid for this bridge much more than they should have paid, and the course the government have taken in appointing Mr. Schreiber as sole arbitrator of this claim, instead of sending it to the Exchequer Court, convinces me that they do not want to let all the facts come to light. I think therefore that we are entitled to an explanation from the government for having singled out this case and put it in the hands of Mr. Schreiber. For my part I have not any confidence in Mr. Schreiber's investigation of that matter in the interests of this country after what was brought out in the Public Accounts Committee last session.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am sorry that my hon. friend did not give me any notice of his intention to bring this matter to the attention of the House. Had he done so, I would have taken some precaution to have the information laid at once on the table, which he desires, and I shall give instructions at once, in the absence of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) who is unfortunately detained by illness at his house, to have all the papers brought down at the earliest possible moment. The hon. gentleman will realize that it is impossible for me at this moment to discuss this matter, which is a technical departmental matter. The hon. gentleman is, however, entitled to all light on the subject and will be given every information possible, but I think that his remarks are in bad taste, to say the least, in so far as they refer to Mr. Schreiber. Mr. Schreiber is only human and like all of us subject to err, but no one has the right to challenge his intentions. motives or honesty. He has been selected to this work and will be quite prepared at the proper time to give an account of his service, and in the meantime the hon. gentleman has no reason to make the assertions he has done.

Mr. FOSTER. It is only fair for me to explain that about ten days ago I informed the Minister of Railways and Canals—soon after, I think, that question was put in the House—that at the next time the House was moved into Committee of Supply, the matter would be discussed and I asked him if he would be prepared to make a statement then. Since then the minister, as we all regret, has not been able to attend our sittings; but in the meantime, as I understand it, the arbitrator has been appointed and the arbitration is going on. This morning I wrote the Deputy Minister asking him to consult his minister and have a statement sent by his minister to one of his colleagues so that the latter could answer the inquiry in the House. Every precaution possible therefore was taken in order to give the minister, or some one for him, due notice and an opportunity to reply.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have just received the card of Mr. Butler this very minute.

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Butler was busy in the Public Accounts Committee all morning.

Mr. FOSTER. I saw the letter go into his hand. I sent it by special messenger.

Mr. EMMERSON. He was on the witness stand and not able to attend to any of the affairs of his department.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be, but the Prime Minister was under the impression that we had not been sufficiently courteous to give notice. We did give notice, and that it did not result in the statement being made here is due to the fact that Mr. Butler was where my hon. friend says he was. That is the position. I would not mind the thing going over until the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) can be here, but in the meantime the arbitrator has been appointed and the arbitration is going on. It is important that we should have a full explanation before the House before the matter goes too far.

On January 22, my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) moved for an order of the House for copies of all papers in connection with Mr. Haney and the Hillsborough Bridge, also copies of papers re the proposed Intercolonial workshops and sidings at Moncton. These papers have not yet been brought down. My hon. friend gave that notice so that we might have the papers before us when discussing this matter. It may not be true that the arbitration is proceeding at present, but I would not like the matter to go irrevocably until the House has had some chance to discuss it. Under the circumstances. I do not think we can carry it any further until the proper information is brought down, and I hope the minister will have that by Tuesday next.

Mr. EMMERSON. In justice to Mr. Schreiber, it is but fair to say that the original estimate referred to was prepared by the chief engineer of the Intercolonial, Mr. W. B. McKenzie, and not by Mr. Schreiber. Subsequent to that, the character of the bridge was changed very materially.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the ex-minister (Mr. Emmerson) answer this question Who was it that certified to the final estimates on the bridge?

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. W. B. McKenzie, the chief engineer of the Intercolonial.

Mr. HAGGART. Who was the officer in the department here? It must be certified here.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is done by the official at Moncton who has charge of the work.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a difficulty that it may be as well to mention at once. These contracts with the Railway Department leave matters very largely to the ultimate judgment of the chief engineer of the department, as the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is aware. It so happens that at the time when Mr. Haney was pressing this claim, the chief engineer of the department was Mr. Butler, who in former days was Mr. Haney's engineer in charge of the Hillsborough bridge. Having been in that way associated, on behalf of Mr. Haney with the work, he could not undertake to act on behalf of the government in certifying to the account. Inasmuch as for that reason it was impossible to have the ordinary machinery of the department applied, it was thought well that Mr. Butler should stand aside and that Mr. Schreiber should be deputed to act in his place. The present Deputy Minister of Railways, Mr. Butler, was Mr. Haney's engineer in charge of the bridge, and Mr. Butler would not wish, nor would the government permit him, to act at present in the judging of Mr. Haney's account. That is the reason he was put aside.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand that Mr. Schreiber is simply put in the position of Mr. Butler for the purpose of certifying to the account ?

Mr. FIELDING. More than that. Mr. Schreiber has been given full power to determine the whole matter.

Mr. A. MARTIN. This question is not very new to me. I have brought it to the attention of the government on more than one occasion. I think, however, that at pre- these additional extras are now claimed after that bridge has been completed and in operation for two or three years, there is strong ground for suspicion. It is a very suspicious circumstance that Mr. Haney should be coming to-day with a claim for extras amounting to nearly one-half the original estimated cost of the bridge. There is one thing I want to bring to the notice of the First Minister and that is that the bridge is not a new one by any means. When it was first proposed, it was estimated to cost $500,000. The next estimate was $700,000. The next $750,000. The superstructure is an old bridge which has been on the Intercolonial for thirty years, yet it was supposed that a new bridge was built there. It is not the first time that I have stated in the House that that bridge is a second hand one, which had been in use on the Intercolonial thirty years, and was then brought down to Prince Edward Island, and the cost of that bridge, which was estimated at $750,000, at present amounts to nearly $2,000,000. These extras have excited suspicion in the minds of the people, and that suspicion has been excited not only with regard to that bridge but with regard to the few miles of railway which the government built there a few years ago. The estimated cost of that railway was $12,000 a mile, but when the road was completed it was found that the cost was $31,000 a mile. And I have no hesitation in saying that somebody has raked off three-quarters of a milion on the bridge and another three-quarters of a million on the railway.

Mr. GANONG. Who was the contractor for the railway ?

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN (Queens). Mr. Kitchen, a friend of the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson). The old road was built in Prince Edward Island in 1873, when rails were worth $90 a ton and labour was as high as it is to-day, and when there were not nearly the facilities that there are to-day for the building of a road. Yet they built that road equipped it complete at a cost of $16,500 a mile. How is it that when this road was finished it cost $31,000 a mile, particularly when you consider that the rails used on it were rails that had been on the Intercolonial for thirty years and were removed to Prince Edward Island and charged against the contractor of that bridge at $20 a ton ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? When he speaks of this being an old bridge, I suppose he is referring to the iron?

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN (Queens). To the superstructure—that is what I said, and I thought the hon. gentleman would understand.

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman did not use the word 'superstructure.'

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN (Queens). I used that very word. But what I complain of, and what, I think, I have good reason to complain of, is that hon. members stand up in this House and tell us of the large expenditures made in Prince Edward Island, though we believe that more than a million of it is pure graft. The ex-Minister of Railways stands up here and quotes the railway report, showing that over $7,000,000 was expended in Prince Edward Island. There is not a word of truth in it. Why, take this very railway report itself and see how one page contradicts another. I would ask the hon. gentleman to turn to page 127 of this railway report, where it is stated that $7,000,000 was expended by the Dominion government in Prince Edward Island. Then turn to page 49, and you will find that the amount spent for railway construction by the province before Confederation was $3,144. Then, on the next page, it is stated that the amount expended by the province of Prince Edward Island previous to confederation was $3,144,000. These statements are distinctly at variance. Then, further than that, does the ex-Minister of Railways, when he speaks here, take into account that the local government is paying the interest of half the estimated cost of that bridge ? The province of Prince Edward Island is taxed $10,000 a year as its quota for the construction of that bridge. That is, they pay half of the $800,000 which it should have cost. However, this question can be more fully discussed on a resolution of my own which is to come up before long, and I shall have an opportunity to discuss it more fully. Had I known that this matter would be brought up to-day, I should have been prepared to discuss it. Now, I may say that if the government wish to gain the confidence of the people of Prince Edward Island, they will not allow this $393,000 for extras asked for by Mr. Haney, to be referred to one person as arbitrator. Let it go to the Exchequer Court to which all such claims are sent. The presumption is, down in Prince Edward Island, that all these claims will eventually be paid. I have read over the contract, and I would like to give the House a sample of what I found. According to the specification, the contractor was obliged to furnish galvanized spikes, and yet there is a charge of $5,000 extras for galvanized spikes. Of course, it is quite true that $5,000 would not go very far in election times. They want the money. I am a little suspicious about where the greater part of this money is to go. But as I said, I should have an opportunity to discuss more fully the expenditures made in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings). The hon. member (Mr. A. Martin, Queens) is in error in saying that the railway recently constructed in Prince Edward Island cost $31,000 a mile.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN (Queens). I said distinctly that I spoke of the branch between Murray harbour and Charlottetown.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings). I understood that, but I say that is an unfair statement. The original railway cost $16,500 a mile. In order to make up the amount he has given, the hon. gentleman had to take in the cost of the bridge—a very expensive bridge on a short piece of railway.

Mr. A. MARTIN. If the cost of the bridge were added to that railway, the total would represent not merely $31,000 a mile but over $60,000 a mile, for the bridge and the railway each cost about the same figure.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong, as the figures will show. The railroad cost about $22,000 or $23,000 a mile, and it is easily proved. It is a different character of railway altogether from the original railway. It was built to the standard of the Intercolonial, while the original road was of a very inferior character, so that there is no fair comparison. There is a difference of statement between myself and the hon. gentleman, who says that the railway actually cost $31,000 a mile. I have not the figures, but I can get them, and I am quite satisfied the hon. gentleman is mistaken unless he adds the cost of the bridge.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I am sure that people living in or near Toronto, who are at all interested in matters political, will be astounded when they hear that an arbitration is to be undertaken under such circumstances. It is notorious in Toronto that Mr. M. J. Haney is the head and front of the Liberal party in Toronto to-day. If I mistake not, he is president of what is known as the Liberal Association of the city of Toronto, the head and front of the whole party organization there.

Mr. CALVERT. An awful crime.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not say it is at all a crime for Mr. Haney to be president of that association; but I do say that when the government of Canada is going to engage on behalf of the people in an arbitration with a contractor who stands close to and is a very warm friend of the government, it is high time that every safeguard should be thrown about that arbitration.

I have not a word to say about Mr. Schreiber as an old and tried servant of the Dominion of Canada; but there is this to be remembered, that if Mr. Schreiber's time is not fully occupied with the work he has in hand as chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Transcontinental Railway, it should be. That project involves the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars, and it demands the whole time, the best service and all the talents that Mr. Schreiber can give in the interests of the country. For what have we an Exchequer Court if it is not to deal with arbitrations, especially where such enormous sums are involved? The hon. gentlemen think that a trifle of $365,000 or $400,000 is a bagatelle. The people are suspicious of these arbitrations, and expect that every safeguard will be thrown about them. It is to be regretted that Mr. Justice Burbidge is ill, but the government had secured an eminent judge to act as a substitute, Sir Thomas Taylor. Is there any reason why Sir Thomas Taylor could not undertake that arbitration and why Mr. Schreiber should be withdrawn from the service of the country for which he is paid a very handsome salary, delegating his duties to another, and taking part in this arbitration?

The Minister of Finance stated that a close relationship had existed between Mr. Haney and Mr. Butler, the present deputy minister; that Mr. Butler had been Mr. Haney's chief engineer. Is there not even a closer relationship between Mr. Haney and Mr. Butler?

Mr. FIELDING. There is not to my knowledge; it may be so. Mr. Butler acted as Mr. Haney's engineer, and therefore could not properly advise the government in this matter. I do not know anything about any other relationship.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not vouch for it, but I have heard that there is a close relationship existing between the two gentlemen. I do not know if that is so or not.

Mr. FIELDING. What harm would there be in that?

Mr. BENNETT. I would have thought, after the discussion of the last two or three days, that relationships would go for something.

Mr. FIELDING. If Mr. Butler has not acted in the matter, what difference does it make what relationship there is?

Mr. BENNETT. That is what I am coming to. On behalf of Canada some one must act in that arbitration; Mr. Butler is the head of the department under the minister. In the Public Accounts Committee Mr. Butler stated that he is the supreme power in that department, that things were different when he took it in hand and changed about the whole control of the Intercolonial Railway. Every one knows that Mr. Butler is a man of great authority in the department. Time and again when matters have been brought up in this House in connection with that department the defence of the government has been: We can do only one thing, employ a man in whose honesty and skill we have every confidence, and rely on him and on him alone. The government is going to rely upon him for the proper conduct of that arbitration on the part of the people of Canada. The minister says it will not be Mr. Butler. Very well then, who is it to be? Why does Mr. Butler hold the position he does? Is it not by reason of the fact that the government have every confidence in his probity and ability? No one is attacking that, certainly I am not; but you are going to delegate the duty of looking after this large arbitration to whom? Not to Mr. Butler, because the Minister of Finance says he will be excepted because of the relationship hitherto existing between these two gentlemen, and so, perforce, it must go to some subordinate in the department.

There is another reason why it should not be conducted by Mr. Schreiber. Mr. Schreiber is only a creature of this government. His dismissal or retention in office depends on their sweet will. Why should Mr. Schreiber be made the sole arbitrator in an adjudication of a claim by a most prominent friend of the government? Why should he not be free from such an entanglement, and the matter be relegated where it should be—to the judiciary of the country?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does the hon. gentleman imply that Mr. Schreiber is subordinate to Mr. Butler?

Mr. BENNETT. No; the right hon. gentleman mistakes me. I say that Mr. Schreiber is in the employ of the government, that he is a creature of the government, to go or to stay at its bidding, and you are going to place him in a position where he is to be the sole arbitrator upon a matter involving such an immense amount of money. The hon. member from Prince Edward Island has stated that this claim is not a meritorious claim, and that it should be brought up, not before an arbitration such as this, where the arbitrator is an employee of the government, but before the judiciary. The Exchequer Court has been organized at great expense to deal with such matters and is to-day presided over by Sir Thomas Taylor, a man of eminent worth and undoubted standing in the judiciary; then why should not these duties devolve upon him rather than upon a man who is an employee of the government? All men have human feelings, and Mr. Schreiber may not care to run against the wishes, if he thinks there are wishes, of the government in that regard.

But here is the main point. If this work is a work of a great kind as this claim is a large claim, you are going to be debarred in the arbitration from enlisting, on behalf of the people of Canada, the active support of the present deputy minister, Mr. Butler. The Minister of Finance will admit that if this arbitration goes on Mr. Butler will be debarred from giving to the people of Canada, through his department, any suggestion, any advice or the benefit of his ability. Why should that be? When an arbitration involving upwards of $400,000 is brought on in his department, Mr. Butler can, I think, give all the advice necessary for the benefit of the government if a judge acts as arbitrator. It will be manifestly different if the arbitrator is one of the departmental staff. I think the right hon. First Minister should announce to-day, on behalf of the government, that this arbitration, whether it has been commenced or not, shall be entrusted to a judge of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP. I wish to subscribe fully to everything the right hon. the First Minister has said in regard to the honour and integrity of Mr. Collingwood Schreiber. I am sure that no person on this side of the House has the slightest desire to reflect upon Mr. Schreiber's honour or integrity. At the same time, it does seem to me that if the government had exercised all their astuteness to select the one man in the Dominion of Canada who was peculiarly unfitted to discharge the particular duty now assigned to him, they would have selected Mr. Collingwood Schreiber. The history of this bridge is such that the government could not have considered it for one moment before selecting Mr. Schreiber as sole arbitrator in respect to these contractors claims for extras. The original estimate of the cost of the bridge was $750,000, then it was increased to $900,000, later on the Minister of Finance stated to the House that it would be completed for $1,100,000, subsequently the estimate got up to $1,500,000. It appeared that somebody had blundered and blundered very badly. The Minister of Finance, explaining why the original estimate was so much exceeded, said that the bridge was to be 630 feet longer than it was at first expected to be. We all know that Mr. Schreiber was the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals in the days when this bridge was constructed, and was responsible to the government and through the government to the people for the proper doing of the work. When it was decided to enlarge the bridge further tenders were not called for, but practically a new contract was given to the old contractors. Under these circumstances it seems to me that one can well say, without casting any reflection on Mr. Schreiber's honour or integrity, that he is personally interested in showing that everything was reasonably and properly done. The most honest man in the world is the man whose judgment is liable to be influenced when unconsciously he has a personal interest in the decision. Besides, Mr. Schreiber was removed from his position of deputy minister and placed in another position, in which it has been made his duty to revise certain accounts which are sent in. We remember that last year an account of some $160,000 was sent in by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and was certified by Mr. Schreiber, although the officials of the railway company refused to exhibit the vouchers for the account, and withdrew $50,000 or $60,000 of their claim rather than exhibit them to show what the money was really spent for, and it was only owing to the astuteness and integrity of a subordinate official that the country escaped paying that $50,000 or $60,000, and it has not been paid up to this day. In view of this fact, it seems to me, without reflecting on Mr. Schreiber's integrity in the slightest degree, that he is hardly the proper person to select as sole arbitrator in this case, when the government goes out of the ordinary course to remove it from the courts, where all parties would have to acquiesce in the justice of the decision, no matter which way it went. Therefore I think, in justice to Mr. Schreiber that he should not be asked to discharge duties which, to the sight of many people, he could not fairly and properly discharge.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the Minister of Railways if the arbitration is now going on ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That makes the matter a little serious as we are asked to discuss a question that may be disposed of. It seems to me that it might be as well not to go on with the arbitration in the meantime. I would like also to ask the minister if when the matter comes up again he will be prepared to state the price at which this second-hand bridge was sold to the contractor, and bring down the papers in connection with that sale. I understand that the superstructure was second-hand and was bought from the Intercolonial Railway at a certain rate.

Mr. FIELDING. It was a bridge across the Miramichi river which was transferred and became a matter of account between the two roads.

Mr. GRAHAM. I must acknowledge that I do not feel much like making a speech on this or any other question.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not do it if I were you. We are going to take the question up again next week.

Mr. GRAHAM. I want to make an explanation which, if it were known to my hon. friend would have prevented his saying what he did. The hon. member for North Toronto wrote me a note some days ago stating that he was going to bring this matter up. In that note he asked me one or two questions. One was the total amount paid to Mr. Haney under his contract. The answer is $1,066,491.96. He also asked the amount paid to Mr. McDonald. The answer is $64,749.61. I am not conversant with the history of this bridge from its conception. I understand that it was discussed and passed on by the House, as a work of necessity. The question I wish to answer more definitely is this : Why was Mr. Collingwood Schreiber the one man appointed as arbitrator to settle the outstanding claim ? The first reason is because it was the most efficient and to my mind the most practical way to settle that claim. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) will understand perhaps better than any one else that in the Railway Department there are continually arising additional claims made by contractors.

The form of the contract is such and the engineer's certificate can only be made absolutely in accordance with the letter of the contract. Even though the chief engineer knows and will say that the government owes a contractor a balance in equity for work done, he cannot as chief engineer give a certificate if it is outside the form of the contract. These things are not new ; they have been coming up day after day and year after year in the department as I find from the records. I want to say further that if there is anything wrong in appointing an engineer as single sole arbitrator, that wrong has been perpetrated ever since there was a department, and I merely followed the precedent which was time and again laid down by the preceding government. I did not make the precedent of appointing a sole arbitrator to settle such claims. I find that time and again under the former government not only was it an ex-chief engineer who was appointed but that the actual chief engineer of the department was made sole arbitrator in regard to a work over which he was chief engineer at the time.

Mr. HAGGART. Since the appointment of the Exchequer Court ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think so. The late Mr. Page was in scores of instances appointed sole arbitrator.

Mr. HAGGART. That was before the Exchequer Court was established.

Mr. GRAHAM. Since there has been an Exchequer Court the late Walter Shanley, was appointed sole arbitrator, and made his award and the government accepted it. That is a matter of fact, it is not a matter of opinion. In the case of the claim made by the late Hugh Ryan in connection with the Soo canal which was constructed when my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) was minister, the claim of the contractor was referred to the late Walter Shanley as sole arbitrator and he decided between the late Hugh Ryan and the government. I followed the lines laid down by my predecessors in office, and even though these gentleman may repudiate it now I say that these were lines of common sense and of absolutely business principles. This is not the only case, there are dozens of others, and if hon. gentlemen will investigate these cases they will find that the only possible way to arrive at a practical solution by which both the contractor and the government will get fair play is to appoint an arbitrator who can in a measure lay aside technical impediments and investigate these claims in a business-like way. Let me say that I am trying to apply to that department and the work in it the same business principles that I have always tried to apply to my own private affairs. I do that where the law does not prevent me, but in some cases I find that I cannot arrive at a conclusion as expeditiously and as fairly as I would like to in the settlement of these claims. I might say to my hon. friend that there are in the department several claims that should be settled, and I further say that no government, because it is a government, has the right to defraud any contractor out of a dollar it owes him in equity. I think that is an honest position to take, I think it is a position the country will sustain. The government, of which my two hon. friends opposite were members, followed that line and did in many cases exactly what I have done in this case, and what I would like to do in other cases. Now, I would have preferred to select the present chief engineer and thus to follow absolutely in the footsteps of my predecessors, but the present chief engineer of the department was chief engineer for Mr. Haney at the time the work was carried on and it was too delicate a position to put him in—he would not accept anyway and I would not ask him. As it was not possible to do that I appointed Mr. Schreiber, who is ex-chief engineer, and notwithstanding anything that has been said I believe that Mr. Schreiber is absolutely honest and perfectly capable of carrying on the arbitration that has been entrusted to him and of bringing in an award which while fair to the contractor will be absolutely just to the government and to the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. Years ago, as the hon. gentleman has said, the chief engineer of the department sometimes sat in review over his own final estimates. That was in Mr. Page's time but the anomaly was pointed out and the absurdity of the chief engineer sitting in judgment to review his own report was so apparent that parliament thought it well to appoint an Exchequer Court and give it jurisdiction over all these matters of disputed accounts. The Minister of Railways cannot show that it was the practice of the department to appoint the chief engineer to such a position after the Exchequer Court had been appointed. We thought it improper to appoint the chief engineer and to give him power to judge of the equities of the claim of a contractor against the department. and in that view the Exchequer Court was established. If there are equities in a claim against the government, it is for the government itself and not for its chief engineer, to decide that these equities exist, and as has been done over and over again the equities of the case as well as the law may be referred to the Exchequer Court. It is true that the estimates in reference to this particular bridge were made by an engineer of the Intercolonial Railway but the responsibility lies with the department and with the deputy minister who reports to the House as to what is necessary for the purpose of carrying on the work. What we object to is that any officer of a department shall sit in review upon his own work, and if there are equities in the case the government should set forth these equities in an order in council and empower the Exchequer Court judge to inquire into them. Therefore, I must protest that in the management of the department, ever since the creation of the Exchequer Court, there has never been, that I am aware of, any such reference to an officer of the department for the purpose of making inquiries such as the Minister of Railways and Canals explained to the House to-day.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am authorized by Mr. Butler, the chief engineer, to state absolutely that there is no foundation for the assertion that he and Mr. Haney are related in any manner whatever.

FRUIT INSPECTION.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to an article that I will read to the House. It is headed :

Apples wrongly marked— Trade Commissioner in England complains to department.
(Special to the 'Mail and Empire.')

Ottawa, February 4.—Mr. Jackson, Canada's trade commissioner at Leeds, writes the department that the Fruit Marks Act is not being observed, and that all kinds of apples are being put into a barrel and wrongly marked. This, he says, should be remedied. In one case a dealer paid seventeen shillings for a barrel and had to sell them for fifteen shillings. There were some very fine barrels sent from Ontario, but because of the dissatisfaction which arose from defective marking the price was not realized.

I wish to say that there have been articles of this kind appearing in the newspapers for some time past and that we remember that the hon. Minister of Agriculture pointed out to the House that we now had a perfect Fruit Marks Act in so far as perliament could make it so. But I would like to draw his attention to the fact that there are a large number of complaints that the condition of the export apple trade in this country at the present time is not at all satisfactory and that a great deal of the complaint is made against the Fruit Marks Act and the manner in which it is administered by the government.

Mr. THOMAS SPROULE (East Grey). As this subject is up for consideration and as it is on the same line, the minister while he is on his feet may deal with the question which my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) has brought up at the same time as he does with that which I propose to bring to his attention. I have a copy of a letter which was addressed to the Hon. Mr. Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, and which reads as follows :

Middleton, Nova Scotia, October 22, 1907.

Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg leave to call to your attention the following facts:

Freeman Fitch, of Clarence, in the county of Annapolis, is at present employed by your department as inspector of fruit under the provisions of the Fruit Marks Act.

As such inspector his duties are to inspect apples packed by growers and dealers thereof and to ascertain if they are packed in accordance with the provisions of the said Act.

If, as such inspector, he finds apples fraudulently packed he is required to mark the package in which such apples are contained with the words 'falsely marked.' It is also a part of his duty to prosecute parties violating the provisions of the said Act.

From the quasi-judicial nature of the office of inspector it is possible for the occupant of the said office to discriminate between those toward whom he is friendly disposed and those toward whom he is unfriendly disposed.

The ratepayers of polling district No. 111, in the county of Annapolis, are nearly all engaged in the pursuit of raising apples for sale, and it is a part of the duty of the said Freeman Fitch, as said fruit inspector, to inspect the apples as packed by the different ratepayers of said polling district No. 111, in the said county of Annapolis.

The said Freeman Fitch is at present a candidate for the office of municipal councillor to represent the said polling district No. 111 in the municipal council of the municipality of the county of Annapolis. The election for the said office will be held upon the 19th day of November, 1907, when the ratepayers of the said polling district will elect their councillor by ballot.

As a candidate at such election the said Freeman Fitch is peculiarly open to the temptation of showing favouritism as an inspector to those of the said ratepayers of polling district No. 111 as may support the said Freeman Fitch at the said election and discrimination against such of said ratepayers as do not support him at said election. If elected as a councillor the said Freeman Fitch will be peculiarly tempted to refrain from enforcing the law against his supporters for the fear of estranging their support, and his usefulness as an inspector will in the nature of things be seriously impaired.

The time spent by the said Freeman Fitch in canvassing the said polling district as a candidate as aforesaid, coming as it does at the season of the year when his official duties are the most pressing cannot but interfere with the proper discharge of his duties as an inspector as aforesaid, as will also his duties as a councillor, should he be elected to that office.

All of which facts are respectfully submitted for your careful consideration.

Yours respectfully,
A. L. DAVIDSON.

Attached is a declaration as to the correctness of the allegations contained in the letter. I understand that the hon. Minister of Agriculture gave to Mr. Davidson a reply, a copy of which I have in my hand and which is as follows :

Ottawa, October 25, 1907.

Mr. A. L. Davidson,
Middleton, Nova Scotia.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of yours of October 22 and note what you say in regard to Mr. Freeman Fitch and his duties as inspector of fruits under the Fruit Marks Act.

Your statements require careful consideration, which I shall certainly give them. I cannot say, however, speaking from memory and without investigation, that there is any law or rule in the public service that debars members from taking part in municipal affairs.

I will see what the practice is in regard to such things, and will act accordingly.

I am, yours very truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

As far as I know no further information has been vouchsafed in regard to this case than that. I do submit to the Minister of Agriculture the question if it is not very improper for a man acting in this capacity and who would in the very nature of things —it is only human nature to do so—be likely to favour his friends in some way or other to a greater extent than those who are opposed to him in an election. I do not think, of course, that politics enter into it at all. I do not see anything that indicates that there is any political question involved whatever. But it is the duty of an employee of the government to do certain work. If he runs for a position in the municipal council, part of the community will be for him and another part will be against him; those who are against him are obliged to come under his inspection afterwards and he is in a quasi judicial sense deciding as to whether they have done their duty properly or improperly in packing apples, whereas he does this same duty in regard to those who are his friends. Does not the minister think that it will seriously impair his usefulness? Will it not be likely to destroy the confidence that many people will have in him there who are obliged to submit to his arbitrament in such cases and who have been perhaps strong opponents in the election contests in which he has been engaged? In my judgment it is entirely wrong and I think that the minister ought to have given attention to it before and that he should have communicated something to his inspector there that would have prevented him from taking the very anomalous and onerous position as between the different members of the community with whom he must deal afterwards.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I will reply to my hon.

friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) first as the subject he has mentioned is fresh in my mind. The correspondence which he has read has been before me. Mr. Fitch is not a permanent officer of the department, he is an employee for part of the year as a fruit inspector and for a part of the year he is his own master. I am not prepared to formulate positively an opinion as to the advisability of employees of the government taking part in municipal affairs. It is a moot question and I think it depends largely upon circumstances and the character of the employment. I was not prepared to say to Mr. Fitch that he should not be elected to the council of the municipality unless he resigned his position. I hardly think that the circumstances would justify that. As to the supposititious statement in the letter, I shall be prepared to deal with the events which the writer fears may happen, should they ever happen, but I am not prepared to express an opinion on such supposititious events. The idea expressed is that Mr. Fitch may act improperly. Well, if he ever should I shall look into thes accusations.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman not regard it as important that confidence should exist between the inspector and the people he has to deal with, so that they will feel there is no possibility of their getting other than fair play?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly. But I must confess I look upon the letter as the outcome of a miserable squabble between what are probable rival aspirants. I do not know that the gentleman who wrote the letter was a candidate against Mr. Fitch or interested in some one who was a candidate against him, but the trend of the letter makes it look like an attempt to injure Mr. Fitch in a municipal contest which he had an undoubted right to enter if he chose. Mr. Fitch is not a permanent employee of the department. He does not work for it the year round. He is not paid by the year, but by the month, which makes a little difference.

Mr. SPROULE. This communication states that Mr. Fitch was in this contest when he should have been performing his duties as inspector.

Mr. FISHER. The department will inquire whether Mr. Fitch was paid during the time the municipal contest went on. Unless it be shown that Mr. Fitch's entry into a municipal contest at that time was inconsistent with the discharge of the duties to the department, I am not prepared to go into the squabble.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does not the minister think that this is a case in which the officer should not be encouraged to go into any municipal contest because that might lead people to suspect that he was not giving fair play to those who were opposed to him when performing his duties as inspector?

Mr. FISHER. I am not aware of any charge against Mr. Fitch of unfair dealing. This writer imputes to Mr. Fitch such a possibility, but I cannot inquire into possibilities.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the minister think that would be allowed in England?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say whether it would or not, and I do not very much care. In so far as matters of that kind are concerned our Canadian officials have as good a record as the English. I am not willing to have any reflections cast on the honesty and integrity of either the Canadian people or officials. I believe they stand well before the whole world and can bear comparison with the officials of any government on the face of the earth. I did look into the matter and I found no complaint of Mr. Fitch's actions. There is nothing in the department to show that there was any imputation of wrong doing, and under the circumstances I do not think it would be in the public interest to interfere in what appears to be a municipal squabble over a municipal election.

With regard to a statement which the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) read from a newspaper, the head of the branch, in which the Fruit Marking Act is administered, sent a statement to the newspaper in response to some such paragraphs as have been published in the last few weeks. I have not that statement here, but I will say that we have at present some 40 or 50 prosecutions under way for wrongly marking fruit packages. We have been enforcing the Act fairly and I think judiciously. In no case have we undertaken a prosecution in which the individual was not convicted. But we do not undertake prosecutions, as a rule, when a person has filled in the wrong mark for the first time and when it appears that he did this through ignorance. It would not be fair to the individual to do anything that would savour of persecution, but whenever an individual has been found marking his fruit wrongly and it is the second offence, we invariably prosecute him and exact the fine. It never was the contemplation of parliament, in passing the Fruit Marks Act, that the department should undertake universal inspection or universal prosecution. The Act is one which provides the individual himself with the machinery for protecting himself. But incidentally, for the purpose of dealing with the export and interprovincial trade especially, certain inspectors were appointed whose duty it would be, as far as the number of them would permit, to take up cases of evident intentional fraud and deal with such cases instead of throwing the burden on the individual who might be aggrieved. Especially is this done when the individual aggrieved is not in a position, owing to the locality in which he lives and that in which the offender lives, being wide apart, to conveniently bring a prosecution and carry it to a successful conclusion.

With regard to the export trade, with which this paragraph in the papers has especially to deal, this has been rather an exceptional year. We have had a very large quantity of rather small sized fruit. We have had sent forward to Great Britain a very large quantity of packages, and these packages have been marked under our Fruit Marks Act, on the whole, legally. But I want to point out this. While, usually, our fruit is of large size, this year the best of our fruit—or nearly the best of it—is of only medium size. It is of good enough quality, so far as spots, or blemishes, or hurt in the packing, is concerned, but the size is deficient. Under the Act, the definition of grades of apples for export, medium sized apples are allowed to be marked No. 1, and our people have taken full advantage of that provision this season. It has been usual for our packers and exporters to mix the largest and medium apples, so that the average package of No. 1 would contain a large number of large apples, and a moderate quantity of apples of medium size. This year, there has been a marked absence of the large apples. The result has been that our apples marked—quite legally—No. 1, have consisted almost entirely of medium-sized apples, otherwise good enough. I have no doubt that this has led to the formation of an opinion in Great Britian that our No. 1 apples this year are not equal to those of ordinary years. There has been some criticism and complaint. In a number of these instances, perhaps in all, the complaints have been founded on that misconception as to what may be legally marked No. 1, So far as the enforcement of the Act is concerned, it is not our duty to examine every package that goes forward—it would be a physical impossibility to do it—but we have examined packages as in former years, and where apples have been found to be improperly marked or packed, we have had a number of prosecutions. As a matter of fact, to-day, there are about forty or fifty prosecutions being taken before the courts. I think we are doing our duty in the way of enforcing the Act; and, while our export apple trade this season is not giving us the credit which it earned us in former years, still, I think the Fruit Marks Act has saved the country from a very deplorable disaster, which otherwise would have come about.

Mr. BLAIN. How many inspectors are there ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot give the mumber offhand. The number is the same as last year and the year before. I have been urged very strongly to add to the number of inspectors, and, possibly, it would have been wise under the circumstances of the year to increase the number somewhat. But hon. members opposite will remember how severely they have criticised me for finding places for my friends and they can understand why I hesitated to appoint more inspectors.

Mr. F. R. LALOR (Haldimand). I am glad that this matter has been brought to the attention of the House; I had intended to call attention to it myself later on. Earlier in the present session, I did call the attention of the minister in this House to the question of apple inspection. The 'Free Press,' of this city, came out with big headlines over its report of that debate 'Not true.' What will the farmers of Haldimand county think of Mr. Lalor?' I am not worrying very much about that because I think the farmers of Haldimand county think that Lalor is all right. I know something about the export apple business, especially this year, and I speak with some experience. I noticed that, after I brought the matter to the attention of this House, it was only a short time after that when the inspectors of the government got busy and a seizure was made in the port of Montreal of about 60,000 barrels of apples. It was found that these were marked in pencil on the head 'No. 3,' but they were branded, 'No. 1.' I believe that up to that time there had been little or no inspection of apples, even for export.

Mr. FISHER. What was the date ?

Mr. LALOR. I have forgotten the exact date, but it was before the Christmas holidays.

Mr. FISHER. There were dozens of prosecutions before that date.

Mr. LALOR. I had an opportunity of seeing a good number of the apples being packed for export, and I can tell the minister that they were absolutely not packed according to the Fruit Marks Act, nor were they marked on the end of the barrel according to that Act. At my own station, the town of Dunnville, a shipper of apples came to me and asked me to go and look at some apples just loaded on the car. In fact, there were two of these gentlemen, and both were very strong Liberals, one especially. I went to the car and he opened up a barrel which was marked 'No. 1.' I said, 'Surely you are not going to ship these apples branded No. 1?' He answered, 'Yes; we got a pointer that anything would go this year.'

Mr. FISHER. Where did he get it ?

Mr. LALOR. That is a question. I can only say that I know others who did not get it. And, on the strength of that pointer, that anything would go, he was packing practically No. 2 and No. 3 apples, and branding them No. 1. And I know that shippers have been doing that all season, and no seizure made, no difficulty encountered. And the result is that the apple export business has been almost ruined by that sort of thing. The packer who packed his apples honestly and branded them properly, sending his apples to the British market, found that the name of Canadian apples has been ruined in that market by this false branding that hardly any price can be got for them. I know of returns that have come in of fruit that brought only $1.20 a barrel in Great Britain. And I have in my possession a letter from the largest receiving house in Great Britain, telling me that the reason for this kind of thing was that the English purchaser had come to the conclusion that he could not depend upon the branding of Canadian apples, and not knowing what was in the barrel, he had to buy them as No. 3. That is the kind of thing that has ruined the market this year, and has so discredited the name of Canada in the British fruit market that it will be a long time before the minister will be able to restore that name, and give the Canadian apple the standing in Great Britain that it ought to have. I believe that the Fruit Marks Act is a good Act, if properly administered; but, this year, there is not the slightest doubt the Fruit Marks Act was not properly administered.

Mr. FISHER. In what way was there remissness?

Mr. LALOR. You allowed them to brand No. 3 as No. 1.

Mr. FISHER. Does my hon. friend undertake to say that the department is expected to inspect all apples that go forward?

Mr. LALOR. I think when you have a Fruit Marks Act and have an army of inspectors to do that inspection, they should do their duty and should not be biased by any political reasons in doing it.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. LALOR. I do not like to insinuate what that reason is, but I believe that the Canadian fruit market and the name of Canada in Great Britain in connection with apples was ruined on account of the election in East Northumberland.

Mr. FISHER. In what way?

Mr. LALOR. There was so much dissatisfaction in that apple shipping county that even a special inspector was appointed there during the election to inspect the apples.

Mr. FISHER. And the department refused absolutely to make any change in the enforcement of the Act, right in the election.

Mr. LALOR. But a special inspector was appointed who was a friend of the government and of the candidate to inspect the apples going forward in order to please the shippers, and the true reason, without the slightest doubt, for the ruin of the name of Canada in the English apple market is the election in East Northumberland. Many apple shippers in this country have suffered on this account. I believe the Act is a good Act and should be enforced, but I do not see why Canada's good name in the apple market in England should not be maintained.

I find that in some important ports of this country there are no inspectors and apples pass through these ports in large quantities without inspection. If we have a law we should live up to it. It is the farmer who suffers indirectly from the absence of proper inspection, for while the apple shipper may get a good price this year, next year, owing to the discovery of this false branding, the price will not be so good, and this is ruinous to the market; apple buyers will be afraid to pay anything on account of criticisms of this year's shipments.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Did the shipper pay the farmer the price of No. 1 for his No. 3 grade or did he pay the farmer the No. 3 price for No. 3 apples and then get the price of No. 1 himself?

Mr. LALOR. In many cases they bought by the barrel No. 1 and No. 2, but it has become a common practice to buy by the orchard in which case of course the shipper would make all the money derived from false branding. If we had proper inspection the name of Canada could be kept up to that high standard which it should have in the English market.

Mr. C. L. OWEN (East Northumberland). I have the honour to represent an apple-growing riding and therefore wish to speak on this subject. I would first ask the minister why it is that the apples from eastern Ontario are subject to inspection while apples from western Ontario, shipped via Niagara Falls or Black Rock to Boston and New York, are not subject to inspection?

Mr. FISHER. That is not the case.

Mr. OWEN. Where are they inspected?

Mr. FISHER. Any place where they happen to be found.

Mr. OWEN. Have you any inspectors in western Ontario, and if so, how many?

Mr. FISHER. We have, but I cannot say offhand at the moment how many, two I think.

Mr. OWEN. Are there any at these ports?

Mr. FISHER. Not at the ports, no.

Mr. OWEN. I was given to understand by a large fruit man in western Ontario that not a barrel or box of fruit shipped by Suspension Bridge and Black Rock was subject to inspection.

Mr. FISHER. We do not have inspectors placed at any one particular point. The inspectors travel about and they are liable to drop on a shipment at any place at any time, and the Niagara district and that neighbourhood which ships by the ports mentioned, is inspected just the same as other portions of the Dominion

Mr. OWEN. I was told by a large fruit man in western Ontario that that was not the case, but I will, of course, accept the minister's statement. I would then ask why it is that farmers of eastern Ontario are subjected to such rigid inspection, more rigid than in other portions of the Dominion?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think they are.

Mr. OWEN. It is well known that half a million barrels are shipped from Nova Scotia with very little inspection.

Mr. FISHER. Excuse me, we have a larger number of inspectors in Nova Scotia, in proportion to the amount of fruit exported, than in Ontario.

Mr. OWEN. I am going to endeavour to prove to the minister why the Fruit Marks Act is not in the interest of the farmer. An apple buyer with some few years' experience, on entering an orchard, can tell very nearly the number of barrels it will produce ; but no matter how much experience he has he cannot tell the number of barrels of No. 1 and the number of barrels of No. 2 in the orchard. The apple shippers from my section, Brighton and Colborne, where 300,000 or 400,000 barrels of apples are shipped every year, find it necessary to rob the No. 1 quality in order to bring the No. 2 up to the standard of inspection, and it is well known that it is the No. 1 quality that commands a high price in the British market. The No. 3 quality are not shipped at all, in fact many buyers do not take them from the trees ; and unless the farmers pick them themselves and take them to the evaporator, where they will bring from 30 to 40 cents a hundred, they are allowed to remain on the trees until they are frozen. Last season was a very late season for apples as for everything else. In our district they began picking apples rather early and they were fined for shipping apples too green. That made the shippers very cautious and they allowed the apples to remain on the trees two or three weeks longer so that they were caught with the early frost and thousands of barrels were shipped that had been twice frozen to the core before they were picked from the tree. There should be some clause in the Act permitting shippers in such a season as last year to pack the apples a little earlier than they do ; this would prevent the shipping of frozen apples. I have had several letters from shippers in my district with regard to this Act ; they say they are trying to live up to it, but they have heard that in other portions of the Dominion it is not being lived up to, that the apples from these other districts are not inspected ; improperly marked apples go upon the English market lowering the price. The inferior apple makes the price for the good apple and in that way I claim that the Act is not in the interest of the apple grower in this country, because it is not impartially enforced. I cannot understand why the farmers or other shippers of eastern Ontario are treated differently from the shippers in other parts of Ontario or the Dominion. I do not think it is fair for the shippers of eastern Ontario that their fruit should be subject to a rigid inspection when such is not the case in other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). In reference to this matter, I am not so well informed as other hon. gentlemen who have spoken upon it. However, I do not think that the inspection has been so lax in western Ontario as has been claimed. During the Christmas holidays I was talking to a gentleman from the county of Bruce who ships large quantities of apples year after year, and he told me that a number of barrels of apples that he had shipped this fall—I do not know by what port they were shipped, whether by Buffalo or by Montreal—had been held up for inspection and found not to be properly marked. He said that the Act was a good Act, and that while he would have to pay the penalty of shipping apples falsely marked, he had no complaint to make. He said that the fault was his own or that of his employees, that he had instructed his employees to pack carefully, but that they had not been careful to do so, and that he would have to pay the penalty. He made a suggestion. He said that in his own case, as probably in many other cases, the inspection had been made a long distance from his home in some of the cities and a large number of inferior barrels of apples were placed upon his hands there, owing to his own fault, and which he might much more profitably have dealt with had the inspection been made at his own home. His suggestion was that it would be a good thing in the interest of the shipper if it could possibly be arranged that the inspection could be made at the point of shipment rather than at some place a long distance from there.

Mr. LALOR. In answer to a question asked by myself on December 9, the hon. Minister of Agriculture informed me that there are—

Nine fruit inspectors stationed at different ports of the Dominion as follows: Montreal, Quebec, four; Quebec, 1; Halifax, Nova Scotia 1; St. John, New Brunswick, 1; Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, 1, and Vancouver, British Columbia, 1.

Which, I think, will show that the ports are not all properly equipped with inspectors.

Mr. OWEN. That will prove to the minister that apples in western Ontario are not subject to inspection. There is no inspector up there, according to his own answer.

Mr. FISHER. These are the permanent inspectors. Besides that, during the apple shipping season, we have five or six more who are employed for a few months, and we always have at least two of these in western Ontario. The men in Montreal practically inspect most of the apples that come down from Ontario for shipment to Europe, just the same as the man in Halifax inspects apples leaving that port for Europe. But, in addition to these, we have, during the apple shipping season, six or seven—I forget the exact number—of temporary employees, such as Mr. Fitch, whom my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was speaking of a little while ago, whom we employ for six or seven months in the year, and these are the men who do the work in western Ontario. I would like to say to my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Owen) that he was not present during the discussion in regard to this Act when the Act was passed through parliament, but that it was then distinctly understood that there would be no attempt to inspect all the fruit. It would require an army of inspectors. The fifteen or sixteen that we employ each year during the apple shipping season, nine of them permanently the year around and some six or seven temporarily, could not possibly inspect more than 10 per cent of the fruit that is shipped from Canada, to say nothing of any of the interior fruit. If the proposition of my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) were to be adopted, I would have immediately to treble the number of my fruit inspectors. I will do that if parliament thinks it is wise or necessary, but it would involve to a very considerable extent a change in the methods of the enforcement of the Act which I never felt justified by the discussion which took place in parliament in doing.

Mr. LALOR. If I might suggest to the minister, and I do it with the intention of giving him good advice——

Mr. SPEAKER. The only motion before the House is a motion to go into Committee of Supply, and on that motion the hon. gentleman has only a right to speak once, except with the consent of the House.

Mr. FISHER. I would be very glad to hear what the hon. gentleman desires to say.

Mr. SPEAKER. With the consent of the House the hon. gentleman may be allowed to speak again.

Mr. LALOR. I think that the suggestion of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) to have inspectors at the point of shipment would be impracticable.

Mr. FISHER. It would be very expensive.

Mr. LALOR. Yes, though I believe that if at ports like the International bridge and the Suspension bridge inspectors were placed it would have a good effect, because shippers would then know that they would run the risk of inspection.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister form any idea from his experience of the year or so that the Act has been in force as to what proportion of the apples that are exported are really inspected?

Mr. FISHER. I have had these figures exactly; I would not like to speak from memory, but I will furnish my hon. friend with a statement of the proportion. It is not a large proportion—quite small—I do not think 10 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. The point that would appeal to me would be this: You put in force an Act which purports to give a foreign buyer a protected article—protected by the inspection and stamp of the government.

Mr. FISHER. No; I think my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. It works out in practice that not 10 per cent of the apples that go to the foreign market really have the benefit of the inspector's work. Is it not much better to have no Act than to have an Act so improperly carried out?

Mr. FISHER. Does the hon. gentleman wish me to answer him now?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will be speaking again on the subject, and he may defer it until then.

Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to ask the minister if he really thinks in his own mind that this inspection is any benefit to the apple packers?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, emphatically.

Mr. MARSHALL. The reason I ask that question is that we have an apple packer in the section in which I am living. He thinks the inspection is of no use, and the reason he gives is just that which you have mentioned—that the inspection is not sufficient, that there are not inspectors enough. It seems to me that unless these apples can be all inspected the inspection is useless. I am not prepared to say how many apples are going into the old country without inspection, but it seems to me that if they are not all inspected it is of no use whatever. I am only quoting what a large packer in East Elgin said to me. He was not condemning the system at all, but he said: I think the present system of inspecting apples does not go far enough. Apparently the inspection of apples is very much like the inspection of canned goods. I am aware that the minister has not appointed a sufficient number of inspectors, but I must tell him that as far as he has gone I am pleased with the system. He has had one or two men out inspecting the factories. That is very necessary, and I am going to give him all the encouragement I can, for the reason that I think it will be a benefit to the business. I do not think it is necessary, as I said last session, to have an inspector at the factory while the packing is going on. It is too expensive, and it is unnecessary. But as far as the minister has gone, I think it is going to improve the quality of canned goods very much in so far as cleanliness is concerned.

THOROUGHBRED CATTLE—EXPORT TO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). At the present time in the city of Ottawa there are a large number of influential Canadians from all parts of the Dominion attending a convention of the National Live Stock Association, and it may be an opportune time to bring to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture a matter concerning our live stock industry. I understand there is a practice in the United States whereby Canadians who import thoroughbred animals from the old country and then sell them into the United States have to pay a fee of $100 on each animal before it can enter the United States. We were under the impression that the quarantine of cattle going into the United States was entirely abolished, and I confess it was a matter of some surprise for me to learn that this fee of $100 is exacted. I do not say of course that it is an actual quarantine on these animals, but it amounts to very nearly the same thing. It is an indirect tax of $100 imposed by the United States Breeders' Association on each animal. Has the Minister of Agriculture taken any steps to have that penalty removed so as to enable Canadians who are engaged in this industry to carry it on without such a restriction? In the county I have the honour to represent there is a gentleman who does a large amount of business in that line, and it will be a matter of interest for him to know whether the minister has taken any steps to have removed this unjust restriction on the carrying on of the Canadian trade in thoroughbred animals.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). This is a matter of considerable consequence. The convention to which my hon. friend refers is the convention of the National Live Stock Association in which a very representative body of men from the whole Dominion have gathered in Ottawa this week to discuss matters in connection with live stock interests. I am only sorry that more members of the House of Commons have not been able to come to the deliberations of that body, which have been extremely interesting and valuable. I will have to correct my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) a little in regard to the matter he has mentioned. This $100 is not in the form of any taxation or customs duty. The customs laws of the United States as of Canada permit the free entry of pedigreed or pure bred stock free of customs duty. But the United States authorities have hedged that privilege about with a good many restrictions which have been constantly increasing. About a year ago they passed a resolution by which no person could have the privilege of entering free pure bred stock into the United States unless he was a citizen of the United States and had registered that stock in one of the live stock association records of the United States. A person who was a United States citizen and a member of one of the associations for the record of pure bred stock can present an animal as to which he has a certificate from that association at the frontier and enter that animal free of duty. Formerly, if a Canadian was a member of that American association he could get free entry and, therefore, some of our Canadian dealers joined the American association, paying the membership fee of $100 so that they might have the privilege. But lately there has been a still further restriction and unless the importer into the United States is a United States citizen he cannot get the privilege. A Canadian who is a member of a live stock association in the United States cannot now get free entry for these animals.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not equal treatment of citizens.

Mr. FISHER. It is certainly not. It is to my mind a barbarous—I say advisedly—it is a barbarous regulation. It savours of the old time restrictions in Europe between Russia and other countries.

Mr. BLAIN. When did that come into force?

Mr. FISHER. I am not quite sure, but about a year ago.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister taken any steps about it?

Mr. FISHER. I have had discussions with the Bureau of Animal Industry in Washington, but they say it is in the hands of their own breeders' associations, and they say they will not go apart from the recommendations of these associations, which are practically close corporations and which wish to retain for themselves the entire market for pure bred stock in the United States and to shut out the Canadian stock or the Canadian dealer. We have no control over the matter.

Mr. BLAIN. What does the minister propose to do about it from the Canadian standpoint?

Mr. FISHER. I do not see anything we can do about it. We have regulations which are very much more liberal, and I do not feel like following such a bad example as that and cutting off our nose to spite our face.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would it not be one way to bring them to a sense of their duty?

Mr. FISHER. Well——

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not suggest that.

Mr. FISHER. It is a natural inclination if you are hit to hit back, and I feel that just as much as anybody does, and I sometimes practise it. But at the same time I do not know that it would be wise, and I doubt if it would be in our own interests to do it.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister lost all his influence with the government of the United States of which he used to boast a good deal?

Mr. FISHER. I have had some influence and I have accomplished quite a little there. But perhaps that has been by reason of the fact that I have tried to do what I thought I could do and have not tried to do what I was pretty sure I could not do. In that case, as in others, prudence is sometimes the better part of valour.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Was not the primary action taken for the removing of the quarantine by an association of cattlemen in the city of Buffalo?

Mr. FISHER. No, it was taken by the authorities at Washington on representations made.

Mr. STAPLES. I understand this subject has been debated in the convention now being held in Ottawa, but I have not yet heard what conclusion they have come to. This is a question which I think should be taken up and dealt with by the minister. If we Canadian farmers have to submit to such a regulation. I think it is up to this government to adopt a similar regulation. This to my mind is the only way in which they can be brought to time. The feeling of the delegates to that convention with whom I have conversed is very keen on the subject, and I hope the minister will pay close attention to the debate that has taken place on this subject and will devise some legislation that will work out to the best interests of the stock raisers of this country.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. About a month ago I obtained from the House an order for a return showing what lands have been sold, leased, given as homesteads, transferred or set apart in any way by the government to each, individuals, companies, syndicates or other organizations in the Peace River Valley, or along or near tributaries thereof, in the Northwest of Canada, and so on. I first put it in the form of a question. There are very many questions answered in the House much longer than that. But at the request of the government I put it in the form of a motion, which I moved at the first opportunity. I would like to ask the leader of the government to direct the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the matter and request him to have the return brought down at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FIELDING. I will direct the minister's attention to the matter, as requested.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

To provide an amount to purchase seed grain for homestead settlers in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan; the cost of said seed grain to be repaid by the settlers with interest at the rate of 5 per centum per annum, and until repayment, to be a lien or charge upon the lands of the settlers held under homestead entry	$ 585,000 00
To provide an amount to enable the government of Canada to advance to the government of Alberta, by way of loan, a sum for the purchase of seed grain for settlers..	440,000 00
To provide an amount to enable the government of Canada to advance to the government of Saskatchewan, by way of loan, a sum for the purchase of seed grain for settlers..	$1,825,000 00
