Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the fullest liberty of legislation with reference to tariffs is under this treaty reserved by each country, that is, that the French chambers have a perfect right to take articles from the minimum tariff and put them on the general, or vice versa, even those articles in which under this treaty Canada has access to the French market—that France has a perfect right to make any changes she pleases in her tariff, and Canada has exactly the same right. Is that true ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is correct, with the qualification which no doubt the hon. gentleman had in his mind. France grants to us the benefit of her minimum tariff on a large list of articles, that is, the minimum tariff as it is now and as France shall have the right to change it from time to time; and reciprocally Canada grants to France the advantages of our intermediate tariff on a list of articles, that being the intermediate tariff as it is now, or as Canada may from time to time change it. To that extent both countries are reciprocally free to change their tariff. But in schedule 'C' there are a few special articles on which the duties are fixed, or, as the French say, consolidated. That was also the case in the treaty of 1893. These rates the parliament of Canada has no power to change. But subject to that special list of articles, the minimum tariff of France and the intermediate tariff of Canada each country retains full liberty to change from time to time.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to some articles in schedule 'C.' France enjoys a lower rate than the British preferential rate. Is any legislation proposed to remedy that inequality ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the Bill provides that every reduction accorded to France in this treaty shall apply to the whole British empire, except in cases where a larger reduction may have been granted under the British preference. But if there are imported from Great Britain articles which under the preferential tariff would bear a higher rate than the rate on similar articles expressed in this treaty, then the reduced rate specified in the treaty shall apply to Great Britain and the British empire generally.

Mr. FOSTER. So that with reference to certain articles at least, we can no longer say that there is British preferential treatment, France receiving equal treatment with Great Britain ?

Mr. FIELDING. There have always been articles as to which Great Britain had no preference, and in those cases there is no departure in this treaty. We have not given Great Britain a preference from time to time on everything.

Mr. FOSTER. Great Britain has a preference on everything over all foreign countries except on spirits and the like of that.

Mr. FIELDING. And tobacco and cigars.

Mr. FOSTER. Except on excise articles. But now you have taken a step further, have you not, and there are some other articles on which Great Britain will not have a preference.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, there are some special articles. For instance, on books the British rate was 5 per cent, and we have provided in this treaty that books in the French language imported from France shall bear 5 per cent; but as books in the French language are not likely to be imported from Great Britain to any extent, there will be no great disadvantage to her in that.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister made any calculation as to what preference Great Britain will now have upon the range of goods on which a diminution of duty is granted to France? France gets the intermediate tariff on a large number of items; she also gets under schedule 'C' equal duties with Great Britain on a number of articles on which there was formerly a preference, greater or less to Great Britain. This preference will of course be diminished by the amount of the reduction granted on goods coming from France. Has any calculation been made to show what the preference to Great Britain on that class of articles will now really be?

Mr. FIELDING. There has been no average taken. It would be necessary to take each article point by point and ascertain the effect of the intermediate tariff on each.

Mr. FOSTER. A calculation could be made on the whole.

Mr. HENDERSON. We all understood, when the British preference was given to its fullest extent, that it was one-third off the general tariff. I think the minister should be able to say how much he thinks that one-third is reduced with reference to France and the other countries which will have the benefit of this treaty. Would it be reasonable to say that the British preference would be cut in two ? Possibly the officers of the department who have had this matter under consideration could form some opinion. I think it would be interesting to the country to know to what extent we are now giving a British preference.

Mr. FIELDING. The rates of the intermediate tariff are not new; they were all set forth a year ago and as was then pointed out, there was a material reduction in the British preference. The hon. gentleman's question could only be answered by taking each item. The memorandum furnished to hon. members gives the detail of every item. For instance, there is item 567—fabrics, manufactures, wearing apparel and ready-made clothing, on which the general tariff was 35 per cent, the intermediate 25 per cent and the British preference 30 per cent. In that case the intermediate and the general tariffs were the same, 35 per cent and the British preferential rate 30 per cent, a difference of only 5 per cent. I take that as an illustration. Every item would have to be examined in the same way.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Finance has very shrewdly taken an exceptional case, in order, I suppose, to create a favourable impression. So I do not think that the case cited can at all be an illustration. I see the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) smiling at the shrewdness of his colleague in selecting such a peculiar case as an illustration.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend does me too much honour when he refers to my shrewdness. I simply took the first item on a page and pointed it out as an illustration. Let me now, in order to be fair, take the second item, No. 570, on page 17 of the documents, the item of mats : the general tariff rate is 35 per cent, the intermediate rate is 30 per cent and the British preference 25 per cent. Consequently, France gets the intermediate rate. In that case the difference of 10 per cent is cut in two.

Mr. HENDERSON. So that practically the British preference is reduced from 33⅓ per cent to 16⅔ per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. On that particular item and many others.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that a fair sample of the whole?

Mr. FIELDING. They vary.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid the British preference will not amount to much under this.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know what the British ambassador will think of it when he comes from the United States to Canada and finds we are treating the British so very cavalierly as we appear to be by this resolution.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend's observations should ever reach the British ambassador, he will find that his criticism is not just, because there is a large number of gentlemen in England who rather hold that Canada is not bound to keep the preference up to a given rate, but is entirely free to make the preference what she wishes from time to time.

Mr. FOSTER. Not entirely free. There were some rather pregnant remarks made by the right hon. the First Minister at the Imperial Conference this year, in which he assured the representatives of the empire there assembled that a very substantial and permanent British preference had been secured and would be maintained. But this matter is somewhat more important than my hon. friend acknowledges. It would seem to be of first importance that the Finance Minister, when he asks parliament to ratify this treaty, should be prepared to give us full information as to how it affects previous policies and previous currents of trade, and one very important question is as to how far it cuts across that policy which my right hon. friend so strongly took up, and has so bravely championed since, of a large, wide preference to the mother country and British colonies. My hon. friend will recollect that they began with 25 per cent.

Mr. BERGERON. 12½ per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. The legislation was to come in force at two respective periods, and 12½ per cent was the preference at each period. But 25 per cent was the principle laid down. Afterwards, in a generous outburst of loyalty to the British Crown and British dependencies, that was raised to 33⅓ per cent. That has been the basis of my right hon. friend and his party since then. That has been the real and substantial preference on which they have taken their stand. It is of some importance then to know how far that has been cut across and what has been the result, because, taking this French treaty into consideration, we have not only to take into account the goods that come from France and the cutting down of the British preference so far as that import is concerned, but also some twelve or fifteen countries which have the most favoured nation treaty clause and therefore come under this treaty. It is of great importance that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) should have his officers make the calculation and give the results to this House before he asks us to ratify the treaty, so that we may know what will be the condition of British preference now. Let his officers take the imports of last year, and on that basis make the calculation as to what will be the effect on the British preference of the lower duties as regards France and the most favoured nations. It would be an easy matter to find out just how the British preference would be affected and determine whether it still retains its 33⅓ per cent or its original 25 per cent or is cut down to one-half of 25 per cent. We should know exactly how it stands. The Finance Minister has not performed his duty in not giving us that information.

Mr. FIELDING. I have so often failed in my duty to the satisfaction of my hon. friend that I cannot expect to please him in this instance.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you not think it is reasonable?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I do not. In the early part of the debate my hon. friend asked for heaps of information, a great deal of which was not necessary for the discussion. Nevertheless he thought it necessary, and we produced it. Now he wants more information, and if I bring that down he will want still more. The zeal of my hon. friend on behalf of the British preference is interesting, but it is rather novel to find on that side the British preference championed as it is.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. FIELDING. We have been more accustomed to hear it attacked. The hon. gentleman's complaint seems to me rather strange. He has all the information before him. He has every item in this tariff set forth in detail, showing what is the British preference, what is the intermediate tariff, what is the general tariff and what is the rate of duty under this treaty. What more does he want? He thinks that I should discover whether there has been any reduction on the British preference at 33⅓ per cent. It would have been strange had I given instructions of the character he mentions. When the House a year ago adopted the intermediate tariff it made a reduction on the original 33⅓ per cent preference. All my hon. friend has to do is to turn up the tariff of last year, and he will there find item after item set forth in which the British preference is materially less than 33⅓ per cent. The information he desires is already in his possession. We have set forth all the items point by point, and any hon. member who desires to know how the treaty is going to affect the British preference on any given article has simply to turn to the printed sheets.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has not met the whole question. He says we knew what the intermediate tariff was a year ago. Quite true, but we did not know whether France was going to get the benefit of that tariff in one or ten or a hundred articles. Since then he has made an arrangement with France by which a very large number of articles from that country come under the intermediate tariff. That is a situation quite different from that of a year ago. Does my hon. friend confess that he and his colleagues, when they undertook to negotiate a treaty with France which would settle their policy for years, did not inquire how that treaty was going to affect their settled doctrine and policy of British preference, and that they negotiated that treaty without having bothered their heads at all as to how it affected the policy of this country, as laid down by the right hon. gentleman himself, in the matter of preference to Britain and her colonies? That is an amazing confession. It seems to me you would hardly have a confession like that made in any house of parliament when a great treaty was being discussed. It seems to me that the very first duty of our ambassadors would have been to find out how the proposed treaty affected existing conditions. You are making a treaty with France, you are putting her on a favoured basis, you are giving her treatment she did not enjoy before on a large variety of articles. You are doing more than that, you are allowing Japan to come in under the most favoured nation treatment, and with respect to certain articles, on which you have allowed France the benefit of the intermediate tariff, Japan will have great advantage. More than that, you have allowed ten or twelve more favoured nations besides Japan the very same reduction under this treaty.

Yet the minister who carried on the negotiations and who asked us to ratify the treaty confesses to the House that he has never made the mark of a pencil in calculation, nor has he consulted any of his experts to find out how that will affect the general trend of trade. I supposed that we had set out on a policy of distinct and substantial preference to Great Britain and the British colonies. My hon. friend says that he has not heard that policy championed on this side of the House. Well, his hearing must be dull, or his memory bad. I will not carry that any further. It is sufficient for my purpose to state that the hon. gentleman himself, and the premier, and all the other members of the cabinet, have plumed themselves, in Britain and in every part of Canada, upon their practical British preference. But they have entered into a treaty giving to France and ten or twelve other countries a distinct diminution of duties, in some cases even below the intermediate tariff duties thus materially affecting the amount of preference that Britain and the colonies enjoy. For instance, I should think that it might have struck my hon. friend as worth while to consider the effect of such a section as this in schedule 'C':

> Embroideries, not otherwise provided; lace, not otherwise provided; collars or collarettes in lace and all manufactures of lace; netting of cotton, linen, silk or other material, not otherwise provided, 27½ per cent.

I find that the intermediate tariff on that item is thirty-two and a half per cent. But France gets a reduction of five per cent below the intermediate or ten per cent below the general tariff and only two and a half per cent above the preferential rate to Great Britain. In some cases, she even gets better than the British preference. And all these things taken together must affect the currents of trade and have a special bearing upon the preference which I had thought, up to the present time, was especially dear to the hon. gentlemen opposite. We are entitled to know how this will affect the British preference.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Foster's) remarks may have a little force with regard to the items in schedule 'C,' but no others. And these items are very few. The most important is one in which, I take it, Great Britain is not concerned—wines. Silks are the only other item of importance, but we get our silks also from other countries. But the hon. gentleman seems to forget, when he asks what effect this is going to have on the British preference, that this was a subject the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) need not have concerned himself very much about. Why? Because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself and all the members of the House had laid down the limits within which the Finance Minister might act. When we adopted this tariff last year, the effect upon Great Britain was considered. The fact that there would be a lowering of the preference to the extent of the difference between the general and the intermediate tariff was known. But the House accepted that. The Minister of Finance made his arrangement under system, except so far as regards the items in schedule 'C,' and with regard to these, as I have said, the hon. gentleman's remarks have some pertinence.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all pertinent as to the information we require.

Mr. PATERSON. No, because that information was had, or should have been had, last year. At that time we deliberately adopted the resolution that we could afford to lower the British preference to the extent of the difference between the intermediate and the general tariff, and under that, the commissioners acted. Of course, the House has not pronounced upon the matter so far as the items in schedule 'C' are concerned and, as to these, the effect upon the preference may still reasonably be considered by the House.

Now, I would like to give, as well as I can offhand, an answer to the point raised by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson.) If he consults the tariff, he will find that in the general tariff items of twenty-five per cent, thirty per cent or even thirty-five per cent, as a rule—I say as a rule, but, of course, there are exceptions—are reduced by two and a half per cent. On the article on which the duty is twenty-five per cent this two and a half per cent reduction would mean a ten per cent cut in the duty; on the article at thirty per cent it would mean seven and a half per cent. In a very few cases there is a reduction from the thirty-five per cent duty of five per cent, which would be a reduction of fourteen per cent. My own judgment is that, taken in the gross and attempting, as I say, to answer offhand the question of my hon. friend the effect of this treaty will be to reduce the British preference to twenty-three and one-third per cent from thirty-three and one-third per cent. I do not think that any definite answer can be given before the trade is commenced.

Mr. FOSTER. Take it on last year's trade.

Mr. PATERSON. But you cannot tell what the effect will be. For instance, take the case of wines—I confine myself, as I have said, to articles under schedule 'C,' which, I think, are the only legitimate subject of inquiry—the change in the duty on this article does not affect Great Britain, nor will the change with regard to silk, as we do not import silks from Great Britain. There is only one item, that of embroideries and laces to which the hon. member (Mr. Foster) has called attention. But take the whole of schedule 'C,' and I think the changes under it will not affect to any great extent either British interests or Canadian interests. Perhaps, there may be some effect in the case of wine, so far as Canadian industry is concerned, but not so far as England is concerned.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am glad at least, of the admission of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) that some information has not yet been furnished that should be given. But his remarks, when he speaks of the action of the House last year with respect to the intermediate tariff, only serve to becloud the issue. The intermediate tariff, when it passed this House last session was a purely academic matter. It could only come into operation by order in council.

Therefore it would have been impossible at that time to discuss these matters because we had no definite proposal before us with respect to the trade of any particular country to which that intermediate tariff would apply. The government has now brought that tariff into operation. It undoubtedly cuts down the preference to Great Britain to a very considerable extent. What we asked in the first place was a statement from the government as to the extent to which that preference is cut down. Undoubtedly that could have been prepared upon reference to the trade returns of last year by comparison of the preferential tariff with the intermediate tariff, in so far as that trade was likely to be affected by the present treaty with France. It seems to me that there is another consideration in connection with the whole subject and that is the extent to which this government is prepared to abrogate the British preference, having regard to the trade of all countries with which Canada does business. We recollect very well that when the preference to Great Britain was increased from 25 per cent to 33 per cent the members of this House were all invited to arise and sing 'God save the Queen,' and we all got up and sang 'God save the Queen.' What particular air does the hon. gentlemen suggest we should sing on this occasion when we are cutting that preference down by about one-third? No appropriate music has yet been suggested by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

There is another consideration. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in the campaign of 1896, adopted Sir Charles Tupper's policy of a mutual preference between Great Britain and Canada, if possible between Great Britain and all the dominions of the empire, and said that if he were returned to power he would go to Great Britain and would be able to accomplish everything in reference to such preference that Sir Charles Tupper could have accomplished. He went to Great Britain and told the people of that country that we did not require a preference in the markets of Great Britain, we had given Great Britain a preference and we would not desire a preference in the markets of Great Britain because he said he did not desire to see Great Britain cursed by that protection which he himself was then maintaining in Canada and has ever since maintained. He said he gave this preference to Great Britain in consideration of the splendid freedom which Great Britain has conferred on us. Has Great Britain taken any of this freedom away so that we feel constrained now to take this preference away in part? What is the policy of the government in this matter? The intermediate tariff was passed last year, but the government gave us no idea of the principle on which they would proceed in applying that intermediate tariff to the trade of any country in the world. Not one iota of information on this point was afforded during that debate. It is therefore idle for the Minister of Customs to suggest that anything which took place last year could be of any great service to us in this debate.

My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has asked in the first place to what extent, by way of percentage, the British preference is cut down by this treaty which has been negotiated with the Republic of France; and in the next place, taking the actual trade conditions between Canada and France and between Canada and all countries to which this intermediate tariff must be applied by reason of this treaty with France, to what extent our trade with Great Britain will probably be affected in view of the smaller preference which the commodities of Great Britain will henceforth obtain in our markets so far as they are required to compete with these countries. That would appear to be a very reasonable piece of information to ask for and one which, having regard to the professed policy of the government in the past, the House is in a position to demand to-day. But it does not seem that the government are in a position to afford the information. However, the Minister of Customs has made the definite statement that so far as schedule 'C' is concerned, we are certainly entitled to this information, and if we are entitled to it, why is it not available when we are about to discuss the items of this treaty clause by clause? If it is not available, when will it be available? Because the admission having been made that it is essential, I presume the government will not feel like proceeding with the treaty until that information is forthcoming.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sorry I cannot follow the hon. gentleman in his conclusions. Last year this House, at the instance of the government, adopted a tariff policy which included a general tariff, an intermediate tariff and a preferential tariff. We had, in framing that tariff, to consider the prospects of trade with various countries. We had to consider what was a proper measure of taxation to impose on any goods imported into the country and what discrimination we should make between different countries. That was the time to have considered how these changes in the tariff might affect our relations with Great Britain and it was considered. Therefore the hon. gentleman is ony dreaming when he talks of some information being needed now on a matter that was fully discussed in this House a year ago. It was distinctly stated that by the intermediate tariff we reduced the British preference. It was fully considered then, at the right time. We did not need to go to Paris to inquire into the matter. The proper place to inquire was in this House a year ago, and this House, practically without division, established a tariff which it said we might properly apply as far as we could to the products of any foreign country. It was distinctly declared to be an instrument of negotiation. It was said that we wished to be prepared to apply it to such countries as we might deem proper to enter into negotiations with, having a desire to extend our trade. Therefore in giving to France, so far as we do give to France, the benefits of the intermediate tariff, we are giving the very tariff rates which this House last year, after full consideration, declared were fair and reasonable for such a purpose. So much for the intermediate tariff generally.

Now with regard to the few special cases to which the Minister of Customs referred. If schedule 'C' is examined carefully it will be found that the great majority of the things in it are articles not produced by Great Britain at all, and therefore no matter what rate you impose on these articles you do not interfere with the British preference. You have to have your tariff columns filled, you set forth that the duty on wines shall be so and so; but England does not produce wines, the chief item on which concessions are given to France—indeed the only important items are wines and silks. Wines and silks are the specialties of France. No matter what duties you impose on wines, you do not affect British trade in the smallest degree, because Britain does not produce wines. What difference does it make then to Great Britain if we grant a preference to France on wines? The question of the effect of the duty on the production of wines in Canada was referred to last night and may have to be discussed later. That of course has nothing to do with the British preference. The same thing applies in the case of silks. The first item is a certain class of canned vegetables which are peculiar to France. We produce vegetables in Canada but there are certain specialties which are produced in France and which enter Canada to a small extent. There is a reduction on them but there is still a substantial duty. It will be found in every case where a reduction is made on any article, manufactured in Canada, that there is still a fair duty, affording to the industry affected a reasonable measure of protection in proportion to what is extended to other industries in Canada. I think that statement may be made generally.

The first item, for instance :

Vegetables, tomatoes excepted, including baked beans, in cans, or other air-tight packages.

These are specialties of France in which Great Britain does not compete at all.

Then we find the item :

Anchovies, sardines, sprats and other fish, packed in oil or otherwise.

What concern is it of England that we give a reduction to France on that item ? That is not going to affect British trade in the slightest degree ; it has no bearing whatever on the British preference.

Wines of the fresh grape of all kinds, sparkling, imported in barrels or in bottles.

That is of no importance to Britain ; England does not manufacture wines. Therefore, it is not going to affect the imports or products of Great Britain to the extent of one single penny. With respect to champagne the same thing is true. The duty on champagne is set forth here, but no matter what rate of duty we may levy on champagne that does not affect the products of England in the slightest degree. In the case of books we give them the same rate as Great Britain. In that case the preference ceases. There have always been items in the tariff as to which there has been no preference. In the case of French books, although the rate is the same, there will be no competition because very few if any books in the French language will be imported from Great Britain in all probability.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the duty on books admitted into France ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yesterday my hon. friend raised an important point on that. He thinks the treaty is unfair in that respect.

Mr. DANIEL. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. I understood him to argue that this treaty is unfair in that while allowing books to come in at five per cent he has not seen that there is a corresponding reduction on books entering France. The reason why we could not ask any reduction on books entering France is that books are free in France.

Mr. DANIEL. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, my hon. friend was struggling hard yesterday to find some reason for condemning this treaty, which he knows to be a good one, and he drew upon his imagination to show that some great wrong was done because we actually gave a rate of five per cent on French books coming into Canada and he implied that we were going to pay a much higher duty on books going into France. It turned out that there is no duty at all. Now, there is the item of olive oil.

Mr. FOSTER. Take item 220.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the case of medical preparations, etc.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. We have in that case given France the same rate as we give to Great Britain.

Mr. FOSTER. You have given Great Britain fifty per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. No; last year there was no distinction between medicines containing alcohol and medicines which do not contain alcohol. Now we propose to make a reduction on those medicines which do not contain alcohol, allowing the rate to remain as before with respect to those which do contain alcohol.

Mr. FOSTER. You will have to provide for that by legislation.

Mr. FIELDING. This Bill deals with it. There are just two or three classes where the duties on British goods are the same as the duties on French goods. In the article of medical preparations and some other articles made in France and England there will be no preference. We give a reduced rate on olive oil. Is that going to injure a British industry ? Great Britain does not produce olive oil. Embroideries, laces, etc.—most of these articles—I think I might say all of them—are French specialties and there is practically no competition between Great Britain and France in the matter. France makes these articles of a special class, and I am informed by a gentleman in the trade that where an article with a corresponding name is made in Great Britain the article itself is so materially different that they are practically two different things and do not come into competition.

Mr. FOSTER. What is meant by 'embroideries, n.o.p. ; lace n.o.p.' in item 575 ?

Mr. FIELDING. In every case they are taken from our own tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. They are otherwise specified ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. One item about where there may be some debate is that of laces. There are laces manufactured in England, at Nottingham, but, I am advised that, although lace is manufactured at Nottingham and in France, there is a substantial difference between the two classes of goods. A gentleman largely engaged in the trade told me that from a practical point of view he did not consider that the French and Nottingham laces were the same articles and did not come into competition. But, there is the possibility of saying that this one article is made in England as well as in France. Take 'velvets of pure silk fabrics'; these are French specialties, as are 'ribbons of all kinds and materials,' and also manufacturers of silk or of which silk is a component part of chief value.' These articles, enumerated in schedule 'C,' are specialties of France and no matter what rate of duty may be imposed upon them they do not affect the British preference practically although nominally the rates may be the same. I have read all the items of schedule 'C' and I think I am correct in stating that as between French and British industry with respect to these articles there is little or no competition.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. One item the hon. gentleman has spoken of is silks and velvets. I find upon turning up the Trade and Navigation returns that we imported last year about $2,000,000 worth of these goods, or $1,929,385 from Great Britain, whilst from France we imported $678,000 worth. Surely, reducing the duty on these goods to within 2½ per cent of the British preferential tariff will have a very injurious effect on the importation of silks and velvets from Great Britain. We cannot expect to import anything like $2,000,000 worth from Great Britain in the future when we have the same duty on goods coming from France.

Mr. PATERSON. The great bulk of those goods did not come in under the preferential tariff. Of silk manufactures $1,057,000 came in from Great Britain but only $271,000 under the preference. Other countries have shipped these goods through Great Britain.

Mr. FIELDING. These silks that the hon. gentleman speaks of are very largely foreign silks. They come through Great Britain but not being British silks they are not entitled to the preference.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. In future that trade will come direct and will cut the British merchant out entirely.

Mr. FIELDING. No, my hon. friend did not hear the discussion yesterday between an hon. gentleman and myself. I point out that French goods could still be purchased in London or Liverpool and that if you proved the identity you could send them in under this treaty. French and other foreign silks may continue to be brought in by way of Great Britain.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Of ribbons we imported from Great Britain in 1906 $456,000 worth and from France $212.000 worth.

Mr. PATERSON. The same thing applies there.

Mr. FIELDING. There has been a very considerable British industry in ribbons. Coventry was the great centre of this industry, but it has not proved successful and it has ceased to be any longer a substantial industry. These goods come very largely from France.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there anything in this treaty that will prevent the government from making a similar one with any other nation that wanted to come in under this arrangement ? There is nothing in the treaty which would prevent the government from making new treaties ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is quite so ; we could make treaties with any other country subject to the condition that we will have to come to parliament and get concurrence in it.

Mr. BERGERON. Could we make an arrangement with Germany better than the one we have made with France ?

Mr. FIELDING. Not as respects the articles of this convention; we have to give France as good terms as anybody else in reference to these articles. If we should make a new treaty with Germany and give better terms with respect to any one of these articles we would be obliged to give those terms to France just as France would be obliged, should she give better terms to any other country, to give them to us.

Mr. PATERSON. In reference to ribbons, I find that $485,000 worth were imported from Great Britain during 9 months of 1907. That was a large item but only $9,144 worth came in under the preference. The others came from there but paid the general tariff. They were not British goods.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I would like to ask the minister if any of these countries could trade through England at the same rate of duty as goods may be admitted from France whether they are of French origin or not ?

Mr. FIELDING. They will get a better rate ; they will get the French rate.

Mr. BERGERON. It was said last year that nothing at all could come from Great Britain under the preferential tariff unless so much work has been put upon it by English workmen. Is my understanding correct as to that ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, that is in the regulations.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Customs said that comparatively few items in the tariff showed a reduction of as much as 5 per cent from the general tariff down to the intermediate, but I find on a reference to the tariff that these items are much more numerous than the Minister of Customs thinks. For instance, on blankets composed wholly or partly of wool, flannels, undershirts, draws, knitted goods; mats, door or carriage; Turkish or imitation rugs, the general tariff is 35 per cent and the intermediate tariff 30 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON. Are any of these articles in the French treaty?

Mr. HENDERSON. Some of them are. The statement was made by the Minister of Customs that it was not often there was a reduction from 35 to 30 per cent in the tariff, but I have enumerated some, and I could enumerate many others, to show that 5 per cent is a quite common difference between the general and the intermediate tariff. The Minister of Finance spoke of the protection given to the industries of this country, and I understood him to say he thought it had been fairly considered. I am not going to advocate any higher protection or increased duties, but if the Finance Minister was right in his tariff last year, then he would be supposed to endeavour to maintain the same level of protection to home industries under this treaty. On gloves and mitts of all kinds the preferential tariff is 22½ per cent, the intermediate tariff 30 per cent, and the general tariff 35 per cent. In future 30 per cent will be the duty on importations of gloves and mitts from France and from these thirteen other countries that may ship such goods into Canada under favoured nation treatment. I am not complaining so much about the reduction, but I do say that the government has not been fair to the glove manufacturer, because I submit that the moment they reduced the duty on the manufactured article they should have given a corresponding reduction on the raw material. I find in our tariff that on glove leather, tanned or dressed, coloured or uncoloured, when imported by glove manufacturers for use exclusively in their own factories in the manufacture of goods, the British preference is 5 per cent, the intermediate tariff 7½ per cent and the general tariff 10 per cent. The duty on the manufactured article is reduced under this French treaty, but there is no reduction on the raw material that the glove manufacturer must use. If the tariff of last year was fair, then I say that the present arrangement is very unfair indeed. On this raw material out of which gloves and mitts are made the British preference is as high as 50 per cent, but that was not much of a favour to Great Britain, because we all know that these glove leathers are largely imported from France and Germany, and therefore the preference given to Great Britain on glove leathers, and the low rate of duty on imports from Great Britain here in consequence, would not be of very great advantage to our glove manufacturers. The glove making industry in this country is one of considerable importance, and the glove manufacturer is handicapped under this treaty by having his protection reduced, while he is given no corresponding benefit by having a reduction made in the duty on his raw material. France is a large exporter of gloves, and the advantage of 5 per cent in the duty which this treaty gives her will naturally tend to increased importations from that country. I do not find fault with the reductions under the French treaty, so much, but I do find fault with the government, that they are giving no corresponding reduction to the Canadian manufacturer in his raw material. France produces the kid from which the glove is made, and it would be a great advantage to the Canadian glove manufacturer if the duty on this raw material of his were lowered.

An hon. MEMBER. What about the tanner?

Mr. HENDERSON. It would make no difference to the Canadian tanner, because these fine glove leathers are not made in Canada, and I doubt very much if they ever will be. Even in the United States these fine glove leathers are imported from Germany and France. I only wish there were some mode of remedying what appears to me to be an entire oversight on the part of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, because I can hardly believe that they would intentionally have dealt so unjustly with an important industry of the town in which I live.

Mr. FIELDING. There was no oversight in the treaty. If my hon. friend's criticism is just, it could have been made with some force last year, but it certainly cannot apply to this treaty. We are not imposing any new rate on gloves by the French treaty. The rate is the rate that was adopted last year in the intermediate tariff.

Mr. HENDERSON. Last year we did not know that the minister was going to apply the new treaty to the manufactured article and not apply it to the raw material. We were led to suppose that there was going to be an honest application of the whole measure, but, unfortunately, that is not the case.

Mr. FIELDING. It was our business to secure concessions—what value they are remains to be seen—as respects the products of Canada entering France. It was not our business to thrust concessions on the French authorities with respect to goods coming to Canada. If we want to reduce the duty on any article coming to Canada, we do not need to go to France to arrange it. This House could arrange it last year or this year.

Mr. HENDERSON. But the minister must surely see that when the French authorities asked for concessions on gloves and mitts, the answer should have been, we will give you that, but you must give us concessions on raw materials out of which they are made.

Mr. FIELDING. There would have been no use of our asking for concessions on glove leathers, because we do not make glove leathers and have none to sell.

Mr. HENDERSON. Our people make gloves and they have to import raw materials from France, and if there was a reduction on these it would be better for the manufacturer.

Mr. FIELDING. We can make that reduction if we want to do it, but we do not need to make it a part of a French treaty or to ask permission of the French authorities to do it.

Mr. HENDERSON. But when you bring down a measure to reduce the one, you should reduce the other at the same time. I think the minister had better be candid and say that it was an oversight.

Mr. PATERSON. I can relieve the hon. gentleman's mind by saying that we import no glove leathers from France, so that the question does not arise. Last year we imported from Great Britain $3,804 worth, from Belgium, $41 worth; from Germany, $8,245 worth, and from the United States, $327,000 worth. Therefore the treaty does not affect them, and they are in no worse a position now than they were before.

Mr. HENDERSON. I can tell the Minister of Customs that these glove leathers are not made in the United States. The United States imports them from France and Germany, especially from Germany. They may come to this country through the back door of Britain or the United States, but they are not kid-dressing countries and they import these goods from Europe.

Mr. PATERSON. That occurs in many cases. Many articles imported from the United States are not manufactured there, but are imported from Europe, but when they come here they must be entered as United States imports. I am not saying that the hon. gentleman is not correct in what he states about leather for gloves being tanned in France, but it pays no higher duty than it did before—that is my argument.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not following the trade returns in the statement I make; I am following information which I have apart altogether from blue-books. I have some practical knowledge of this matter, and I am guided by that. France manufactures enormous quantities of fine kid leather. The process is a very expensive one. I am told that it would take two years for the leather to pass through the process of tanning, and if it comes to Canada through the United States it comes originally from France or Germany.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (Wentworth). I wish to speak again of the wine duties. I can assure the Finance Minister that this is a very live question in the grape-growing districts, where the people feel very keenly upon it. Every organization of fruit growers in Canada has passed resolutions of the strongest kind asking the government not to ratify that clause of the treaty which reduces the duties on French wines. I have presented petitions to this House from hundreds and perhaps thousands of fruit growers in the Niagara district, and more are coming every day. I wish to read a resolution from the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, the leading organization of the kind in Canada, to whose views the Finance Minister paid so much attention last year in framing the tariff. This is the resolution they passed at the last meeting of the board of directors :

Resolved, that in view of the great importance and value of the grape growing industry of Canada, the directors of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association cannot but regard the proposed reduction in the duties on light wines coming from France under the provisions of the proposed French treaty, as a most serious blow at the industry, as fully one-third of the grapes grown in Canada are annually manufactured into wine, and these wines come into direct competition with the light wines proposed to be brought into Canada at reduced rates of duty, and respectfully urge that the parliament of Canada do not ratify the portion of the proposed French treaty that provides for reduced duties upon light wines coming into Canada from France.

In the southern part of the province of Ontario, we have an organization composed of the leading grape growers and whose membership is composed of almost every fruit grower in the district. About six weeks ago they passed the following resolution :

Whereas the grape growing industry of Canada is one already of large proportion, the annual product amounting to 60,000,000 pounds of grapes at least, and whereas approximately one-third of these are manufactured into native wine, we the grape growers of southern Ontario, view with alarm the provision of the proposed treaty with France which provides for a reduction of the duty on the cheaper grades of French wines coming into this country, that come into direct competition with the product of our vineyards, and we respectfully urge upon the government of Canada the importance of fostering this grape industry, rather than destroying or seriously crippling it, and hope that the parliament of Canada will not ratify that portion of the proposed French treaty which provides for a reduction of the duty on French wines, below the duty in effect under the old French treaty, which was greatly reduced from that under the general tariff.

I have here also a resolution from Niagara District Association which I shall not trouble the House with reading. It is on the same lines as the foregoing. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) also read a resolution the other day from another association to the same effect. These are practically all the associations in Canada of fruit growers and they all believe that this treaty will be very injurious to their interests. I would also point out that the spirits used to fortify these French wines do not pay any excise duty and therefore cost very little, whereas our Canadian producers, owing to the excise duty, have to pay ninety cents a gallon for the spirits they use in their wines. This difference alone is more than sufficient to counterbalance any duty remaining on the lighter grades of wine, as nearly all the wines in Canada classify under twenty degrees. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether there is any excise duty on the spirits used by the French manufacturers to fortify their wines.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend's statement is correct. There is no excise duty. Representations have been made to me on this line and they, as well as all representations coming from so influential a body are entitled to and will receive very careful consideration. But I am not prepared to say anything definite now as to what we will do with reference to excise.

Mr. FOSTER. How much alcohol is used by our growers in fortifying their wines ?

Mr. FIELDING. Some use a very considerable amount. They represent that the amount they are obliged to pay in the way of alcohol for fortifying purposes is very considerable. It is quite a tax upon them, at all events, and they seek relief.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. If they only use seven per cent or eight per cent, that would be equal to the whole amount of the duty.

Mr. FIELDING. We quite realize that the wine industry of Canada would feel very anxious on this subject, also that the gentlemen who represent these memorials ought to be the best authorities on the subject, and any opinions I would venture to offer would not be entitled to much consideration. Yet I am inclined to think that they magnify the difficulties of the situation. In one of the memorials they submitted they make the statement that the wines now imported from France do not compete practically with the wines of Canada, and they fear that a different class of wine would be imported under the new treaty. I think that statement was made was it not ?

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I do not remember but is not that the case ? But under the old treaty were not the wines on which duty was taken off sparkling wines and not non-sparkling wines under twenty-six degrees ? Whilst under the new treaty the thirty per cent ad valorem is taken off every quality as well as ten cents per gallon off the specific.

Mr. FIELDING. The memorial contains the statement that the class of wines hitherto brought in from France has not substantially competed with the wines of Canada, and their fear is that, under the treaty a different class of wines may be imported. I think that the fear of the wine growers is not so much that the treaty would injure them, but that it may be possibly violated. Well, we must take the treaty as we find it. The wines it deals with are the wines of the fresh grape. I do not think that contemplates adulterated wines, and I think the fears of the wine growers may be unfounded. However that is well worth remembering. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) will remember that when a similar question was up some years ago in connection with the treaty of 1893, there was a widespread alarm among the wine growers that the making of any concessions in favour of light wines was going to deal a serious blow to our wine industry. Representations were then made as strong as the ones made now, but these impressions have been proved not to have been well founded. Our wine growers were unnecessarily alarmed. The old French treaty was negotiated in 1893 and confirmed in 1894. I have here the figures of the importations of light wines for a series of years. Take 1893, the year when the old treaty was negotiated, our imports were to the amount of $100,780. The next year they fell off to $82,754. In 1895, by which time the treaty had gone well into operation, the imports were $79,740. Let me give the figures from that date on, and my hon. friend will observe that there has been little or no increase in the consumption of the light wines of France :

1896	105,763
1897	81,334
1898	70,527
1899	90,837
1900	91,711
1901	95,616
1902	95,121
1903	98,524
1904	108,197
1905	102,889
1907 (9 months)	83,765

And for the whole twelve months of 1907, $114,653. It will be observed that whereas, as far back as 1892, the importation of these light wines into Canada was a little over $100,000, last year it was only $114,000, notwithstanding the large increase of population and the large development of trade. In the same time the consumption of champagnes increased from 1892, when the value was $138,000, to $319,000 last year.

Mr. FOSTER. We have had more government steamers since.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, that had something to do with it no doubt. That shows very clearly that our people are not wine drinkers to any great extent.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Would not that show that the wines of our own Canadian growers have taken the place of the imports of the non-sparkling wines even under the old treaty, under which the duty was twenty-five cents a gallon? The increase in sparkling wines has been very great, but the non-sparkling wines have not increased because they are made in Canada, and that trade has been taken by the Canadian wine manufacturers. But had the importations of non-sparkling wines increased in the same ratio as the sparkling, there would have been a difference of over $200,000 against the wines manufactured by Canadians. But whereas twenty-five cents a gallon might enable our growers to meet the French competition, when you reduce the duty to fifteen cents, that might be the straw which breaks the camel's back. They thought that the twenty-five cents was going to break their back, but it turned out to be a sufficient protection. But I think it would be quite a different thing with a duty of fifteen per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend may be surprised to find that there is a larger protection to Canadian wine growing, even under this duty, than there is on most other Canadian industries. I have not the figures at hand, but I am advised that these lighter wines can be bought wholesale in Paris at from thirteen cents to twenty cents a gallon. If we take it at fifteen cents, this duty would mean a protection of one hundred per cent. Suppose we make every allowance that can be asked and count the price of the wine in Paris at thirty cents per gallon, that would mean a protection of fifty per cent. That is a pretty good protection.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. But how about the quality of the wine? At 15 cents, or even at 30 cents, it must certainly be adulterated.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) knows that adulteration of wines has been carried to such an extent in France that there has been almost armed rebellion among the grape growers. I understand that the French government enacted some legislation which prevents so much adulteration at the present time. But no doubt these adulterated wines are in store in large quantities, and our vine growers are afraid that the owners of those adulterated wines will regard Canada as a good dumping ground. Therefore, they ask, if this treaty must be ratified, that the government give us some positive assurance that the wine imported shall be the pure juice of the grape, not wine fortified, not wine sweetened with sugar. Of course, sugar sweetening is hardly required in France, though it is in this country. Our people might possibly compete under a duty of 15 cents per gallon if they are competing against the same article as their own and not an adulterated wine.

Mr. FIELDING. What has occurred in France, to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. E. D. Smith) has referred, should reassure him and the wine growers of Canada. The government of France found themselves much embarrassed through this question of wine adulteration. They had riots in the south of France in the early part of last summer, and this question of wine adulteration became one of the great questions of the day in that country. The government of France is anxious to do everything possible to prevent the adulteration of wine, and has passed some legislation to that end. I do not understand the nature of the measure, but certainly the object was to prevent adulteration. Under the treaty an analysis by the board of agriculture, a government institution, is provided for. Of course, the treaty must be carried out in good faith, but if it can be shown that wines that are adulterated are being brought in, my hon. friend the Minister of Customs can deal with them. But I certainly do not anticipate any trouble on that score, as the government of France are as anxious as my hon. friend (Mr. E. D. Smith) to prevent the adulteration of French wines, and will enforce their legislation, not to please us, but for the benefit of their own wine growers.

Mr. MARSHALL. Others are deeply affected by this treaty besides the wine growers. I notice that there is a reduction on canned poultry and also on canned vegetables. I do not know whether the hon. minister is aware that the canners are producing more goods than we can possibly sell in this country. I do not care so much about the reduction of the duty on poultry, but the reduction of the duty on vegetables seems to me a real hardship, and a mistake in the interests of the Canadian people. For instance, corn and tomatoes are reduced by 16 per cent. One thing that we do not like to see come into this market is French peas. These goods have a very pleasing appearance and taste, but they are coloured and sweetened. Our laws do not allow us to colour our peas, and we do not wish to do it in any case. But the process of putting up draws the colour and no packer can give to packed goods the natural colour without using colouring material. The canning industry is comparatively new in Canada. Those engaged in it have laid out large sums to put their business in shape to put out the goods, and we feel that this reduction in duty will be a hardship. I find that the imports for the last nine months were about $50,000, the greater part, I suppose, being the French peas. With the reduction of duty this would increase to $60,000 or more—it may be three times as great. This will simply mean replacing some of our Canadian goods. Who benefits by the presence of these canning factories in Canada? Is it not the farmer? The farmer produces the peas, corn, tomatoes and other things that are put up, and if you put the canners at a disadvantage it must react upon the farmers. If we wish to get in condensed milk from France, if we have to pay 18 cents a dozen, surely that is not right. If we are shipping preserved meats, canned poultry, and so on, we must pay 15 cents a dozen, if I figure it out correctly. This new tariff seems to be entirely against the canning industry of Canada, and I hope the minister will try to remedy it. Especially, we desire to be reasonably protected against the French peas. Our pea is a sweet pea, a wrinkled pea to start with, but this is nothing more than a common pea coloured and sweetened.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I wish to speak briefly in respect to the effect of this treaty on the grape growing industry which has been already referred to by my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith). Fully one-third of the product of that industry in Canada is converted into wines, so it is certainly a very important industry. We have 18,000 acres in Ontario which is devoted to the growing of grapes, and as one-third of that is devoted to the wine industry the question becomes very serious for the men interested in fruit growing. I would point out to the minister some figures in relation to the number of acres in certain counties devoted to the growing of grapes. I take these from the statistics of 1905 :

County.	Acres under grapes.
Lincoln	4,836
Wentworth	3,256
Essex	1,784
Welland	1,437
Halton	486
Kent	324
Simcoe	207

From this it will be seen that not only is the eastern part of Ontario deeply interested in this industry, but the western part as well and the people of the western districts are constantly increasing their acreage and taking more interest in this industry. I sincerely hope the minister will investigate this matter more fully and if possible try to stop the importation of the adulterated wines coming from France, and the still larger quantities that are likely to come owing to the reduced tariff that has been extended to that country. It is bad enough for the agricultural industry to find that the concessions in the French market that were supposed to have been secured for Canadian agricultural products by this treaty are practically of little use to the farmers of the Dominion and that our general export market is narrowed down really to Great Britain, without having an important branch of agriculture, subjected to this unfair competition in our home market. It is time that the government endeavoured to open up the markets of Germany and France for agricultural products from Canada and for their admission into these countries under more favourable conditions than exist to-day.

Coming from the western part of Ontario, in which a large number of grape producing industries are situated, I wish to impress upon the minister the importance of that industry and to urge upon him the necessity of making, if possible, some further investigation into this matter and trying in some way to relieve the wine industry of the Dominion.

Mr. FIELDING. Leaving aside the wine question, as to which I have spoken, my hon. friend says we should make some efforts to open up the markets of France, Germany and other countries. Would my hon. friend tell me any concession we could reasonably ask from France that is not included in this treaty? I am not discussing what we have granted to France, but I take the remark which he made that we should open up the markets of France and Germany. What concession could be reasonably asked from France that is not included in this treaty?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I can merely say that if the minister when asking for concessions had requested, in return for the concessions which had already been granted to the French people, that Canadian agricultural products should be allowed to go into their markets on better terms than are contained in this treaty, then I would have to say that he was practically getting something for the farmers of our Dominion, but when he allows the advantages to go to large manufacturing industries, practically ignoring the farming industry—because he must well understand that this tariff is practically of no use to the farmers of this country—the treaty is not an advantage. The idea of two cents a pound on cattle going into that country, 2½ cents on meat in tins, 2 cents on cheese, 2 cents on butter, 2 cents on fresh fish ! The minister knows well that we cannot expect to export these products into France with such a tariff wall against us. If the minister had asked and urged the French government to reduce the duty on these articles, then he would have been certainly giving a very great advantage to the farming districts of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not follow my hon. friend, that if I had asked that I would be giving a great advantage to the Canadian farmer. If I had received it I would have been accomplishing something, but I am afraid my mere asking would not have secured it. We are for the moment confining ourselves to the farmers' interests in respect to the admission of our products into France. Does my hon. friend expect that the French nation will grant to Canada terms which it refuses to grant to the rest of the civilized world ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If we are to grant to France privileges that will be a detriment to our country, we should have received some concession in return. I cannot understand the minister's position.

Mr. FIELDING. That is another side of the question, that is perhaps a matter of debate. My hon. friend thinks there is something we could have got from France. If he says that we do not want a treaty, then there might be room for difference of opinion, but I could understand my hon. friend's position. Suppose we had been content to rest on our old treaty, what would be the position? We would ignore France and would go to Germany and make a treaty with Germany. Then whatever we granted to Germany in return for concessions we would have been obliged to grant to France without concessions, that being the condition of the old treaty of 1893.

Mr. FOSTER. If it had been continued.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly. We would have denounced the treaty of course, but my hon. friend did not suggest that. I am assuming now that we had just rested where we were. We found that France would not give special concessions differing from what she grants to other countries. She might think that we were not big enough, and that she would stand by the treaty. Then our hands would be tied by that treaty of 1893. If we had gone to Germany and negotiated a treaty, as my hon. friend would desire, and had given large concessions to Germany and had received large concessions in return, we would have been obliged to grant every one of these concessions to France without any return whatever. Therefore, if we were to do anything in extending our foreign trade, the first thing was to come to the best possible understanding with France. This seemed to be the best possible understanding. My hon. friend will see that if France has adopted that policy of having a moderately high tariff on agricultural products, I am not sure that we can throw many stones at her in that respect, as we have a stiff tariff on agricultural products in Canada. However, France having adopted that policy of high tariff, if we call it high, upon her agricultural products, what could we do? We could not expect France to grant us concessions that she refuses to every one else, but we said: while your tariff is high, we are not sure that we will not be able to send some agricultural products into your country. You import many million dollars worth of agricultural products and we think we may have a chance; but then we ask you to give us the best terms that you grant to any one else, and if at any time you are asked to make a treaty with any other country on these lines, we want to be assured of the best treatment accorded to any nation—and that we have received. I think that is of immense importance. Hon. gentlemen do not think so ; they look at the matter only from the point of view of to-day. They say you are not getting any concessions ; the duty on grain under the minimum tariff is the same as under the general tariff and therefore your minimum tariff is no good. To follow that out a little, let us suppose that our American neighbours, who have been seeking to make a treaty with France, had obtained a new treaty that France had granted them concessions on their grain and we should not have had any condition whatever with respect to it. What would our position be? Surely it is better to say, as we do say : If you will not give us concessions now, we ask that, if at any time you grant concessions to any other country, you will give us the same arrangement. That, I think, was as far as we could expect France to go. If we had gone to them and said: We will not make a treaty with you unless you give us a concession which you will not grant to any other country in the world, that would be an unreasonable position and we could not expect France to accept it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then the hon. gentleman admits that in so far as this treaty is concerned, he has not obtained any concessions beyond what any other nations have been able to obtain from France.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly we do not profess that we have got a monopoly of the concessions. But, we have obtained concessions that we did not have before, which concessions a large part of the world had and which we did not have. But, we do not claim that France is going to give us a monopoly of her trade.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But we have given her special concessions in return for that?

Mr. FIELDING. We have given concessions. The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) last night said that these concessions meant the loss of millions of revenue. I think that his figures were exaggerated, but if it means the loss of millions of revenue it must mean the reduction of millions of taxation to the people of Canada, so that, while granting concessions to the government of France, we are at the same time granting a concession in the way of millions of dollars of reduced taxation to the people of Canada if my hon. friend's figures are correct.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. In so far as the treaty is concerned, I have no objection to entering into a treaty with France. I may say that anything that would bring our French provinces or any other provinces of Canada into close connection with France would be agreeable to us. But what I claim is that the minister, in being so liberal with concessions, gave away the rights of some of the industries of our country without getting any compensating advances for them.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister of Finance have any information in reference to the new treaty between France and the United States, which, I see by the papers, was concluded a fortnight or so ago ?

Mr. FIELDING. I saw some reference to it in the press, but I understand that it is a temporary treaty and only affects a few articles. One of the conditions in it to which the most importance was attached was that embodying an agreement to appoint commissioners to negotiate a larger treaty. But, I think, the treaty is regarded only as a temporary one.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it any more extended than the present treaty ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think not.

Mr. BRODEUR. The treaty with the United States concerns mainly Denrees Colonials and it has reference principally to sugar, molasses, &c.

Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to know if you are going to permit any French peas containing colouring matter to come in under the pure food laws of this country ? I understand that we are not permitted in this country to use colouring matter in anything. Are you going to allow these French peas to come in if they are coloured ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am not familiar perhaps as I should be with the pure food law. But, under our own Adulteration Act, with respect to the adulteration of foods, I should think that if it could be shown that any article imported into Canada was impure and unfit for food it should be suppressed. I must not answer too positively in regard to our pure food laws as I do not profess to be as familiar with them as perhaps I should be.

Mr. BRODEUR. As I had the administration of the Adulteration Act when I was in the Inland Revenue Department, I may be permitted to say that the Act does not make any difference between imported goods and Canadian goods. All goods which are offered for sale in the country may be examined and if they are found to be adulterated the person who offers them is liable to a fine.

Mr. FOSTER. That is if exposed for sale ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Exposed for sale.

Mr. FOSTER. You allow them to come in but if they are exposed and offered for sale they are subject to inspection.

Mr. BRODEUR. If they are offered for sale. If one of the inspectors goes into a store and finds on the shelves goods which are offered for sale he procures samples of these goods and if, on analysis, they are found to be adulterated the merchant is liable to a penalty. In the case which my hon. friend mentions, if these goods are adulterated, under the Adulteration Act, the man who offers them for sale will be liable to a penalty.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The minister says he is subjected to a fine, but the question is : Is he fined ? There have been scarcely any fined while the shelves of nearly every grocery store in Canada have upon them adulterated goods.

Mr. BRODEUR. When I was Minister of Inland Revenue we fined a good many people. They were forced to pay the cost of the analysis and sometimes it amounted to $15 or $20. They were also obliged to make good some other expenditure. In some cases actions were taken against these people to compel them to pay the cost of the analysis and this other expenditure to which I have referred.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. It does not amount to anything. If a manufacturer, sending out a large quantity of stuff, has one or two cases seized and the retail grocer is fined, the manufacturer pays a little fine of $5 or $15 but it does not amount to anything. He goes on his way and does the same thing next day, or next week, or next year. As a matter of fact the prevention of the adulteration of goods has amounted to nothing at all in years past. The fine is too small and there is only one case analysed out of 500 that are on the shelves. If a case is discovered of a certain manufacturer's goods being adulterated and the retailer is fined with respect to that one case no practical result is attained. To stop this thing the department ought to go on and hunt for the same goods upon other shelves and make the fines severe enough to stop it. At the present time the enforcement of the Adulteration Act is a perfect farce.

Mr. BRODEUR. Take the wholesale importer or merchant; suppose an inspector goes into his store and finds goods which are adulterated, it is a very serious thing for him. It is not so much the quantity of goods or the amount of money which he is called upon to pay that makes it serious for him, but it is because his reputation suffers. If the newspapers would be kind enough to publish the names of those who are mentioned in our blue books as having been guilty of adulteration or having being in possession of adulterated goods, I am sure it will be a very serious check on the practice of manufacturing and offering for sale adulterated goods.

Mr. FOSTER. But they do not do it.

Mr. BRODEUR. But even as it is, our blue books are spread over the country and in some cases commercial travellers representing a house whose goods were analysed are very glad to show to their customers that some of their competitors were selling goods which were found to be adulterated. The amount of money which is paid is not the most serious thing sometimes, but it is the injury that it causes to the trade of the person whose goods have been found faulty.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I quite agree that if these cases were published it would be a more severe punishment than the fine, but they are not and the bulletins lie pigeonholed in the department.

Mr. FIELDING. Usually it is not done and one must make allowance for the newspapers which do not want to have too many quarrels with their customers. I noticed recently in the Ottawa papers an account showing that a number of drug stores had been found to be selling articles which were adulterated. The hardship is that the man who has the goods in his possession is not the man who has been guilty of the adulteration.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I fancy the manufacturer would stand behind him.

Mr. FIELDING. I suppose if the merchant is made to understand the risk he is running he will fall back on the manufacturer, and I think some good is being accomplished.

Mr. BARR. The administration of the Adulteration Act has cost the country a great deal of money, but it seems to me that unfortunately very little has been accomplished. It is not so much in the drug store that adulterated articles are to be found, for we know there are canned goods coming in from other countries a great many of which have been shown to be impure. The Pure Food Act has not accomplished the object it was intended to accomplish. These impure foods are sent through the country, and the manufacturers of them know that if they are fined occasionally and it is hushed up, it will not affect them very much, because they make so much money by introducing the impurities that the fine is not felt by them, and so long as it is not known to the public it does not affect their business. Above all, the people should have pure articles to eat and drink. It seems to me that we should not allow the importation of impure wines from France or anywhere else. There is great danger from them, because, manufactured as they are from drugs, they are said to increase the appetite for alcohol more than pure wines do. Then again, these wines are so cheap that in place of buying cigarettes, boys on the streets buy a bottle of wine and go back to their resorts and drink it. Our efforts should be directed to securing pure food and drink for the people of Canada, and if the Act is contravened by anybody they should be exposed. In that way alone will a stop be put to adulteration.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is just a question whether colouring matter can be considered adulteration. I do not know that the colouring used in canned fruits or vegetables would be called adulteration.

Mr. SPROULE. There is colouring in butter, too.

Mr. MARSHALL. Now, I have no actual authority to say this, but I have been told that the colouring used in these French peas is copperas. We have experimented on peas ourselves, and we have tried copperas, and we find it is the only thing that will cause them to retain their colour. Our peas are just as green as the French peas when they go into the can, but all vegetables are cooked after the can is sealed, and that process draws the colour. I do not know whether or not there is sufficient copperas in the French peas to be injurious, but I do know that we do not use it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Can that be detected by analysis?

Mr. MARSHALL. I am not able to say, but I think it could. The large packers in the United States are not using copperas, because their pure food laws prevent them, and the colour of American peas in the tin is similar to the colour of the Canadian peas, because they are put up by the same process without colouring. If it be that the French peas are coloured, it is not fair to the Canadian canners to allow them to come in, because they look so much nicer than ours.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I may say that I have a letter here from one of the largest pork packers in Hamilton, in which he states that in 1903 the French government arranged treaties with several countries giving them a preference on hams and bacon and salt meats. At that time the Hamilton firm was doing a considerable business with France, but it immediately ceased when these treaties came into effect. Now, in view of the present Canadian treaty with France, the Hamilton firm is opening up communications with their old agents, and they hope in the very near future to do a very large business again with France. In regard to the agricultural implement manufacturers, we know that the International Harvester Company is the largest in the world, and they have a very large branch of that concern in Hamilton, employing about 1,800 men. At present the International Harvester Company is shipping from the United States to France about $2,000,000 worth of agricultural machinery per annum. Since this treaty has been under discussion I have communicated with the heads of that concern in Chicago, and three or four of the head officials of the company have been here on several occasions looking into the whole matter, and I am satisfied from the information which I have received that they will be compelled to come to Canada and manufacture agricultural machinery for export to France. The difference in the duty on a self-binder going from Canada to France as compared with the same implement going from the United States will be between $7 and $9 in favour of Canada when this treaty is ratified, and there is an advantage of $5 in favour of Canada on a mowing machine. I am satisfied that we are going to increase enormously our business with France in agricultural implements.

Mr. FOSTER. That would not hold if the United States gets a treaty.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The treaty has been passed between the United States and France, and it is of comparatively little value to any one.

Mr. FOSTER. But it is preliminary to another treaty.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Our treaty is very much fuller than the American treaty.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Is not the wholesale price in Canada a great deal higher than in the United States, and in consequence they can ship from the United States cheaper than they can from Canada to-day ?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The manufacturers claim that they can manufacture just as cheaply in Hamilton if they can manufacture in large quantities as they can any place in the world, and I have no doubt that the ultimate result will be that this agricultural implement company will manufacture in Canada for export to France. Now, with regard to laces and silks, I have had several interviews with dry goods merchants in Hamilton in order to get information on this point. They say that this tariff will be of especial benefit to themselves and to the consumers of laces, silks and velvets in Canada, as these goods come almost exclusively from France. Therefore they feel very much pleased, indeed, that there is a reduction of duty. They think it is going to enlarge their business very materially, owing to the reduced prices at which they will be able to sell these goods. So on the whole, as far as Hamilton is concerned, we are exceedingly well pleased with the treaty.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. May I draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that if these harvester people in Hamilton can manufacture as cheaply in Canada as anywhere else in the world, they are certainly not selling their goods to the wholesale trade in Canada as cheaply as they are in the United States.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I said that they they could manufacture as cheaply in Canada as they could anywhere else in like quantities. If they manufactured in larger quantities, they could of course manufacture more cheaply still.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the Minister of Finance if it is correct, as stated by the hon. member for Hamilton, that there will be a benefit of $9 on implements of the reaper class going to France ; and if so, will that not be equally applicable to machines exported to the Argentine Republic on account of it being in this combination of most favoured nations ?

Mr. FIELDING. That will of course depend on the tariff of the Argentine Republic. Canada has the same terms there as any other country.

Mr. PATERSON. While we are on the question of the effect of this treaty on the farming community, perhaps it would be as well to put on record what a farmer has sent to me namely, an extract from an editorial in the Breeders' 'Gazette,' a weekly journal for American stock farmers, established in 1881, and now in its fifty-third volume. This article shows how our American friends view this treaty, and it reads as follows :

France, it will be recalled, branded the entire meat supply of North America as unwholesome and barred it out of its markets. A short time ago Canada offered an intermediate tariff on French goods which the country of the beaver cannot produce, and the French fear of Canadian meats and live animals vanished like snow off a hedge in May. It is, however, still deathly afraid of all such goods emanating from south of the St. Lawrence, the great lakes and the forty-ninth parallel. You will observe it makes a vast difference from which side of the wholly imaginary boundary line the meat comes, alive or dead. France is wise to the fact that its people need more meat of a civilized order. It is stated that in 1906 no less than 56,000 horses were slaughtered for food in Paris alone, furnishing some 12,000 tons of meat. No self-respecting nation wants it-citizens or subjects to eat such low-grade food as horses and dogs, if it can be helped. Its influence must in the very nature of things be brutalizing.

Yet here there are nearly 100,000,000 of people in France and Germany awaiting food and we can supply but little of it, while Canada, into which country one may step at a stride from the United States, enjoys the privileges of one-half that market. Obviously, Canada does not believe its farmers may go hang. Under the ironclad provisions of our present tariff law our national officials can do nothing to provide satisfactory outlet for many products of our farms. Their hands are tied completely and the seigniors of the Senate announce that there must be no reciprocity legislation at this session of Congress. The probability is that while these political bosses are forcing us all to stand pat, Canada will beat us to the German market just as it has to the French, and then what we have to trade in the way of lowered duties will not do us much good.

Mr. FOSTER. What is all that ?

Mr. PATERSON. It is the view of an American journal of great influence among farmers.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that not a slightly satirical article ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I was just going to ask the hon. minister what his own opinion is of that article.

Mr. PATERSON. The article shows that Canada has secured a market in France for meats.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the minister think that we can afford to send horses to France to be slaughtered for food and pay $30 duty on them ?

Mr. PATERSON. Hon. gentlemen opposite are so oblivious to plain English that they do not understand the nature of this article. This paper recognizes the fact that there are certain meat products used in France which it would be better for the people to have replaced by hog products.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is hog any better than horse ?

Mr. PATERSON. The hilarity and laughter with which this is received by hon. gentlemen opposite will come very well when this question is discussed before the agricultural community. It will show how little value hon. gentlemen opposite attach to the great farming industry of this country and to the benefits that have been secured for it. I am very glad of these interruptions, and of the trifling manner in which these hon. gentlemen are taking this matter. The people will see that, with all their talk about the farmers and their interests, when something practical is being done, it is only received as a matter of jest.

Mr. FOSTER. Won't the minister kindly give us a word on pineapples as a farm product ?

Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. PATERSON. I think the pineapples were in the treaty negotiated by my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. Quite wrong as usual.

Mr. PATERSON. Castile soap was there.

Mr. FOSTER. That is quite different from pineapples.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman for a whole year was unable to say whether that meant soap or not. He differed with Sir Charles Tupper on the matter, but word came from Sir Charles Tupper that he had better put the treaty through. The hon. gentleman remembers also getting eels into the French treaty. I do not want to make fun of his treaty; it was a little treaty, but it was something. They said that Sir Charles Tupper had just the same power and that he had also a British ambassador with him. Suppose, for the sake of argument, we grant that, here was Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of the Conservative government, with the British ambassador, armed with plenipotentiary powers, negotiating a treaty. One British plenipotentiary is as strong in diplomacy as another. Therefore Sir Charles Tupper had the help of as valuable a man as my hon. friends, and the result was he got a treaty allowing us to export some eight or ten articles to France, among which were eels and some other things of that kind, but we were obliged to send these on a ship direct to France. We could not even have eels slip in under that treaty unless by direct shipment. On the other hand, French goods coming to Canada might come via Germany or Italy or the United States or any other quarter of the world. All that was required was that the goods should be of French origin. That was a treaty negotiated by Sir Charles Tupper, aided by a British diplomat, and as one British diplomat is equal to another, to whom should we give the full credit of this last treaty which embraces hundreds of articles, many of them very important to the industries of this country and which opens up to the producers and the manufacturers of these articles a market of $300,000,000. Many of these articles are the products of our farms and our factories. Why not give credit then to these two Canadian ministers, who had not greater assistance than had Sir Charles Tupper, but who accomplished so much more? Hon. gentlemen opposite show their utter incapacity when they scoff at this treaty which our American friends admit means a very serious blow to them. It is impossible apparently for these hon. gentlemen to learn anything with reference to trade matters. Yet, notwithstanding their jeers and laughter and their utter carelessness and disregard for our farming interests, they will find out that the people who will be benefited by this treaty will have to be reckoned with, and that a treaty which opens up a vast market for the pork industry of this country, to mention only one item, is one the value of which our people will soon appreciate. Of course, under constitutional rules, a treaty such as this must be submitted to parliament as a whole, and if there be a certain number of gentlemen who cannot understand its benefits, it is their privilege to laugh, but that will not improve their position in the eyes of the farmers and manufacturers of this country.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has given us a good laugh.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if it is not true that, after these goods are admitted to France, they have still a considerable duty to pay before they can enter such cities as Paris? I understand that these cities impose an octroi which will affect these products, and that these goods will still have to pay another duty after entering that country.

Mr. FIELDING. There are such duties, but we have guarded against any unfair imposition of them. Turn to article 12 of the treaty and the hon. gentleman will find that we have dealt with that very point.

Products of Canadian origin of any kind imported into France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China, shall not be subject to any other or higher duties of excise, internal consumption or octroi than those which are or may be charged upon like products of French origin.

The articles of Canadian origin must be treated in the same manner as articles of French origin. French goods, from the rural parts of France, entering their cities, are subject to such duty. This provides that no duty can be imposed on our goods that are not imposed on goods of French origin. More than that we could not ask.

Mr. HENDERSON. What are these duties?

Mr. FIELDING. They are duties imposed by the respective cities of France. They are usually on wines, provisions and spirits and include meats.

Mr. BERGERON. I thought the octroi was abolished on wine.

Mr. BRODEUR. They have not the same custom as we with regard to excise. In the districts where they manufacture spirits and brandy no excise duty is charged, but when these are brought into Paris or other cities they are subjected to the octroi before being allowed to enter.

Mr. FOSTER. That goes to the city revenue?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is divided between the city revenue and the general fund.

Mr. BERGERON. Was not the octroi abolished for Paris?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it still exists.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is the duty against Canadian hams, sides and bacons?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend from Grey asks what is the duty on meats. French mutton, under the French minimum tariff, is 6·75 francs per 220 pounds, under the general tariff, 9·65 francs. Pork, 4·82 francs under the French minimum tariff and 7·72 francs under the general tariff. Beef and other meats, 5·79 francs and 9·65 francs. Pork butchers produce, 5·79 and 9·65 francs. In these cases the reduction on the duty in the two tariffs is very considerable.

Mr. HENDERSON. What would be the ad valorem?

Mr. FIELDING. I would have to get the value of the article and I have not got that.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. What would be the extra duty on bacon on going into Paris?

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever they impose on the rural products of France we would have to pay. We could ask no more than that.

Mr. HENDERSON. The point raised by my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) is very important. It may make the duty almost useless.

Mr. FIELDING. Then it would make it useless to everybody else.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is no answer. If we are giving something to get something, and are getting nothing, what is the use of giving? The minister should, before 8 o'clock, be able to give us some idea of where we stand. That point does not seem to have been taken into consideration.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, to such a degree that we specially provided we should not be subjected to any other tax than is imposed on a French citizen.

Mr. HENDERSON. True, but the citizen of France may have a very high duty imposed on him.

Mr. FIELDING. No doubt.

Mr. HENDERSON. And that might nullify altogether what we are expecting to get.

Mr. FIELDING. It might be said of a citizen of Canada that he had to pay a high municipal tax. It is a matter of internal regulation.

Mr. HENDERSON. That seems to me a far-fetched idea. I do not see what bearing it has upon the question.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Referring to the article read by the Minister of Customs showing the large amount of horseflesh consumed as food in Paris, that may have an important bearing on the case. I know there is a heavy duty on food products going into Paris. Well, if our horses go into France under this treaty at $30 a head and our cattle at $20 a head, and if we have to face a large duty—the exact amount of which is not known to us—in order to get those animals into Paris for sale, that may seriously affect the trade. It would be well for us to understand the exact conditions. If a horse is imported into France paying duty under this treaty, does he go into Paris free of any local duty or not? I understand that horses used as draught animals in Paris, after they can no longer earn their keep in that way, are slaughtered for food. Is the possibility of that considered and the horse taxed as a food product before he can be taken to Paris for sale? And how about the other cities? I am aware of this food tax on food products entering Paris, but I believe that in Lyons and other large cities in France there is a similar local tax.

Mr. PATERSON. But it will apply to all our competitors, will it not?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It might. But we want to know what tax we have to face on these articles, and, until we know that, we cannot tell what our position will be.

Mr. PATERSON. We know that millions of dollars worth of horses and other animals are imported into France. And, even though this octroi, whatever it may amount to, has to be paid, it will have to be paid by our competitors also. Therefore, we are in as good a position as they. Of course, I am not arguing against ascertaining the facts, but only showing that the octroi manifestly does not operate to prevent imports into France, and that we should not be worse off under it than our competitors.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) does not quite understand the point I raised. We send a horse into France with the idea that he is to be used as a draught animal. Suppose it is desired to send that horse into Paris, is there a duty to be paid? If the horse is driven into Paris with a load, is he to be taxed as a food product? And must that tax be paid every time the horse is driven into the city? Or when a horse is once in Paris, must he stay there? And if he is driven in as a beast of burden without tax and is afterwards slaughtered and used for food, must the tax be paid? We have to pay $30 to get the horse into France. It may cost us $50 to get him into Paris.

Mr. FIELDING. But the octroi would not apply to a horse from Canada only—every horse exported to France would be in the same position. I understand that the octroi duties differ in different parts of France, and I fancy it would be difficult to learn exactly what they are, as it would be for the French Foreign Minister, if he desired it, to say exactly what was the municipal tax in Canada. He would be apt to conclude that as the products of his country are not singled out to their disadvantage it would not matter what this local tax might be. I think there is no octroi on horses, although I am not sure.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. That is the very point I wish to know. I know there is an octroi on food going into Paris, but I do not know if it would apply to a horse taken in as a beast of burden. Perhaps the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) could tell us.

Mr. BRODEUR. The octroi is mostly on such things as vegetables brought into Paris for sale. It is a tax much as we impose a tax on articles brought into the market for sale.

Mr. BARR. Like a toll-gate.

Mr. BRODEUR. In Montreal, for example, every one taking vegetables to be sold on the market has to pay a tax for the right of offering his goods for sale. In Paris they collect the octroi on such food products. I have no reason to believe that there is an octroi on horses.

Mr. BERGERON. I am sure that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) does not wish to leave the House under the impression that in Paris they import horses and dogs for food purposes.

Mr. PATERSON. I did not say that.

Mr. BERGERON. But what the hon. gentleman did say might be held to imply that. Though horses or dogs may be used for food, it is without the knowledge of the sanitary authorities. There is no open or lawful importation into Paris of horses and dogs for food.

Mr. PATERSON. I have not intimated such a thing.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I appreciate the remarks of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), but I do not think they cover the point. When people with produce go to sell on the Montreal market—and the same is true of other places I take it—they pay for the privilege of selling on the market. But if they drive to a greengrocer's and sell their stuff to him, they do not pay a tax. In any case, this market tax of which he speaks is a trifling matter, whereas the octroi, I understand, is an ad valorem tax and runs as high as 20 per cent. I remember distinctly having heard it referred to as affording a reason why the hotels and restaurants in Paris had to charge so much for meals furnished to their customers.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THE HAMILTON RADIAL ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 25) respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company.—Mr. Clarke.

Mr. GRAHAM. I might say to the committee, in accordance with my promise to give the opposition notice when this would likely come up again, that I think Monday, the day proposed, would be suitable. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. HENDERSON. The member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) is anxious to discuss this Bill but he cannot be here before six o'clock. I wish that his convenience could be consulted and that he would have an opportunity to discuss the Bill.

Mr. GRAHAM. I understand that the member who has charge of the Bill, Mr. Clarke, had a conversation with Mr. Lancaster, and I imagine that the discussion on Monday will last until he arrives at six o'clock.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Lancaster is interested only in the last clause about Hamilton, he wishes to be here to discuss that.

Mr. HENDERSON. As long as it is understood that he will have an opportunity to discuss it, there will be no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM. No advantage will be taken of him. The debate will probably continue until six o'clock.

Motion agreed to and progress reported.

BRITISH YUKON RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 21), respecting the British Yukon Railway Company.—Mr. Stewart.

On section 1:

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I feel like raising the objection which I have before raised on several occasions, that when Bills are amended in committee they should be sent to the House in the amended form. I think the Minister of Finance was rather inclined to agree with me on that.

Mr. FIELDING. In many cases when there are numerous amendments a reprint is made. If the amendments in this case are small, perhaps the rule would not apply.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How are we to know when Bills are amended?

Mr. FIELDING. That is a very fair question.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MONTREAL, OTTAWA AND GEORGIAN BAY CANAL COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 47), respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.—Mr. Stewart.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to have some information from the Minister of Finance. The original Bill in this case gave the company power to construct a work such as is usually constructed by a government and there is a provision in an Act passed session before last for the taking over of this canal by the government if they see fit. It provides in substance that the government may take over the work at any time on a week's notice of their intention so to do and that the government shall then pay to the company the value of the work actually done by the company in making plans and the value of any tangible property of which possession may be so taken. I do not know the policy of the government in reference to this matter. If it is proper work to be done at all it ought to be undertaken by the government and although it does not as yet present itself in as undesirable a light as the Quebec bridge project, yet it appears to me to be to a certain extent on the same line. The section which I have referred to is like the action of the heathen Chinee: it is almost too good to be honest. If we are only to pay what is stated there, I do not know why the company should exist at all. There is no provision even that they shall get interest on their money. We can take it over at any time on paying them for what they have actually done without interest or anything else. I do not think that is a sensible kind of business to go into. I do not think the government in the first place should have authorized the construction of this canal by a company. If it is a desirable work they should have undertaken it themselves and, without elaborating the argument at all, I wish at this early stage to register my opinion of the transaction that it is not an advisable one. I may change my mind on hearing from the Minister of Finance the reasons which have influenced the government in this matter. I was not in the committee when the Bill was reported.

Mr. FIELDING. I was not at the committee either and I am not in a position to announce the policy of the government in this matter.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister probably knows why the government has departed from its ordinary custom of retaining the waterways of the country in its own possession as a monopoly that should be preserved for the people, and handing the control of this waterway to a private company. It is not in accordance with the general policy of this or any other government. Why should we give these gentlemen control of that which should for ever be retained as a public highway for the people of Canada ? I quite recognize that there is a provision that seems to give it back to the government on easy terms but I have no faith in the working out of that in the interest of the people in the end. The minister probably could inform us why this departure from the ordinary custom has been adopted in this case.

Mr. FIELDING. I might also plead that I am not very positive on this point. I think my hon. friend might be able to get his information on his own side of the House. My recollection is that this charter was granted some years ago and probably before this government came into power. I know that we have been extending it from time to time but I think it had its origin some years ago and what entered into the minds of the hon. gentlemen who originated it, I would not like to undertake to say, Speaking from memory, I think the original charter was given to this company before this government came into power.

Mr. SPROULE. As one who opposed this Bill many years ago I can with perfect consistency oppose it at the present time. I held the view then as I do now that it is neither the part of wisdom nor good policy to give over any navigable streams to any private corporation. It must be, if ever built, one of the highways of commerce, and it is one of the important highways of commerce that we naturally expect the government will build at some time. It may be that the undertaking is of such a gigantic character that they would not likely commence it soon, but whether it is commenced early or late I can see no justifiable reason why we should give it over to a private corporation. I have opposed it several times and I do so still. This charter has been held by a private corporation for a long time. I share the fears expressed by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) that some way or other this private corporation will succeed in making up an expensive bill if work is ever taken over. Somehow or other these bills are always much larger than we expect them to be and although it is rather innocent looking and favourable for the government taking it over, in the sense of the wording of it which seems to stipulate that the country would not be required to pay more than what the work is actually worth, I think it is a matter which should receive general consideration. I remember the discussion that took place upon that clause when it was introduced as to the question of whether the company would be entitled to be paid what they had expended, or what the work was actually worth. I think it would be a safer principle to pay what it was actually worth than to pay the actual expenses, because people can make up expense bills in a wonderful way, especially engineers and promoters and men of that class. This has had a history of that character for quite a long time and therefore we are suspicious that whenever the government do take it over there will be a large bill for the country to pay. I have been opposed to the principle of giving into the hands of a private corporation so that they may make a monopoly of it, a work of this character, notwithstanding the fact that the government may have the right to control the tolls to a certain extent. I am opposed to the principle of giving into the hands of a private corporation that which must be one of the great waterways of commerce in our country. I think it is wrong, that it is very bad policy and I do not see any reason why we should continue. I think it would be better to buy them out and drop the company.

Mr. LENNOX. In reply to what the hon. Minister of Finance said as to the time when this company was first incorporated, I am aware that it was incorporated in 1894, but although that kind of thing seems to weigh with the minister it does not weigh with me in the slightest degree.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not now.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not care and never did care who inaugurates a thing if on further reflection and with greater experience, I come to the conclusion that it is not in the public interest.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend should not have asked me to explain why some one else did it years ago. That is all.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the government's policy ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is a fair question.

Mr. LENNOX. I have only asked the minister to say what their present policy is?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend went farther.

Mr. LENNOX. They came into power before the second session of 1896. That was the first unfortunate session we have had in modern times.

Mr. FIELDING. That does not seem to be the popular opinion.

Mr. LENNOX. The charter of this company was extended and has been extended ever since and without seemingly any careful consideration of the policy of it by the government. I shall not refer to the Minister of Railways because he has not come into contact with this matter much as yet. At all events I would like to know from the hon. gentleman who is promoting this Bill (Mr. Stewart) what position it stands in at the present time—what amount of money has been expended, and how far the scheme has advanced ?

Mr. SPROULE. And what will it cost to buy it ?

Mr. LENNOX. I think the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Stewart) has charge of the Bill.

Mr. STEWART. I am not aware as to the amount of money that has been spent but this company has been in existence since 1894. From that time up to the present time I know that a considerable amount of money has been spent, but how much I do not know. In 1896 when the Bill came before the House the matter was discussed along this line, and at the instance of the then Minister of Railways and Canals, a clause was inserted in order to protect the government should the work be taken over.

Mr. U. WILSON. I understand that the government have been spending during the last few years, a considerable amount of money on surveys and other work on this canal. If the case is that they have spent half a million dollars what is the sense of having a private company spending money ? If they have claims against the country we ought to settle the claims. There is no sense in renewing the charter of this company and allowing them to go on and expend money which will be wasted because the government have taken the matter practically into their own hands and if it is ever built and made a success of, it must be done by the country. We want no more Quebec bridges or public works of that character to be put into the hands of private companies which can only raise a small proportion of the money required, and who have in consequence to come to the government for aid. I think it is not good policy to renew the charter of these men if the government are going to take hold of it because I do not think it is possible for this company, without the aid of the government, to build this great work. Besides it is a work which will be used by the Canadian public and must be controlled by the government. I think that the government should first settle with this company, get rid of them and if they are going to do anything with the work let them do it themselves. I do not think the time is opportune to spend money on it at the present time.

Mr. LENNOX. Perhaps the minister will inform us if it is a fact, as stated in the press, that $500,000 has been expended on the government surveys of the proposed line of this canal. The promoter of the Bill says there has been a large amount of money also spent by the company on surveys, and we should know what that amount is and whether this expenditure is still going on.

Mr. SPROULE. And whether the company will get the benefit of that expenditure.

Mr. LENNOX. Now that they are getting a renewal of their charter we would like to know if the company is going on with the work next year or when.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Had my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) been at the meetings of the Railway Committee he would have been able to get all the information with regard to this Bill that he is so anxious to get now. All these details were given in the committee by the promoter of the Bill, and that is what the committee is for. While I do not say that my hon. friend has not the right to ask for the information now, it does seem he is a little captious in seeking detailed information which could be much better obtained in the committee.

Mr. LENNOX. With the greatest respect to my hon. friend (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) I must say that he assumes a good deal to himself when he undertakes to tell a member of this House what information he should seek and when he should seek it. I have not missed three sittings of committees since the beginning of the session, but as I am a member of two or three committees, when these committees sit at the same time I cannot be present at each. No member could distribute himself in that way unless he is a bird—and there are some birds in this House that we don't appreciate. However, I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) can say that there was one word of explanation given in the committee on the matters I refer to. I have a right and the House has a right to get this information, and if the hon. member for Pictou does not want to know he need not listen. I want to know from the promoter of the Bill what are the prospects of the company going on with this work and whether any arrangement has been made to repay the $500,000 which the government is said to have expended on preliminary surveys.

Mr. McCOOL. I quite agree with those hon. gentlemen who have said that the Georgian bay canal should be a government work entirely. But this company got a charter some years ago and in good faith they went on and spent a considerable amount of money. I do not know that there has been any expenditure by them on surveys since the government undertook the surveys three or four years ago. But nevertheless, I do not think it would be fair, that this parliament having given them a charter they should now be shut off and not be given a chance to do the work if the government should decide that they will not undertake to do it themselves. I think the Georgian bay canal project is too large a question to be allowed to drop for any such consideration as the present financial condition of the country, or anything of that kind. It is claimed by the company that a gentleman from London

(Mr. Paods, M.P.), who was over here last summer is able and willing to undertake the construction of the canal. Again, I want it to be perfectly understood that I am not advocating the giving of this work over to any company, or the giving of the control of a river like the Ottawa to any private corporation. This work is a work that should be done by the government, but if the government does not undertake it, it would be most unfair to snuff out these people at this stage and after their years of work in connection with the project, not to give them a chance. They claim that even if this charter is not renewed they have done sufficient work on surveys, &c., to have kept their old charter alive to the present time. But outside of that altogether I do not see what harm can be done by renewing this charter. I have no interest in the company nor do I wish to see any private company get control of the Ottawa river, but if the government does not do the work I would rather see this company or some other do it than not have the canal built.

Mr. SPROULE. If the Georgian bay canal is ever built it must either be undertaken as a public work by Canada or the country must subsidize a private company by guaranteeing its bonds, and after our experience of the Quebec bridge we can see what the fate of the country would be in such an event as that. Above all, it would be the height of folly to allow any private corporation to control the navigable waters of a river like the Ottawa. If the government have spent, as we have been told, nearly half a million dollars in surveys, is the private corporation to get the benefit of that expenditure for nothing? The work is too immense for any private corporation that we know of to undertake, unless it receives substantial aid from the government and it would be much better for the government to do the work itself. Every time this question has been discussed in the House we are told there is some mythical rich capitalist behind it. The first estimate of the cost was about $9,000,000; then it jumped to $14,000,000; then to $30,000,000, and now it is $100,000,000, and still this unspecified millionaire capitalist is behind the work and is going to build it. But he does not get very far with his operations although he wants to hold on to the franchise, and no doubt the day will come when we will be obliged to buy the concern out and pay a good round figure for it. It seems to me that this should be avoided now. I say that no private corporation should control such a great national work as this ship canal will be if it is ever constructed.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It is rumoured that the present company is not spending any money and that they just want to keep their charter alive so that they will have a claim against the government. If the company is spending money at the present time it is folly for them to do so, and I want to know from the promoter of the Bill whether this is the case or not.

Mr. STEWART. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. McCool) has stated that he did not think any money had been expended by the company since the government undertook the surveys, and I think that is correct.

Mr. LENNOX. How long ago is that?

Mr. McCOOL. They spent large sums of money just previous to the government making the surveys. They made a survey of the summit level about 1900 or 1902.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Has no money been spent since then?

Mr. McCOOL. They have been spending money.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What have they been doing?

Mr. McCOOL. They have had one of the most expert engineers of this country here a whole summer going over all the surveys, making plans and specifications and estimating the cost, which he put at $80,000,000 for a twenty foot waterway. The government decided to make a survey on their own account for a twenty-one feet of navigation or twenty-two feet depth in the locks. When the government started that work the company naturally ceased spending money on surveys. I do not suppose the government would have allowed them to continue if they had wanted to do so while they were looking into the matter themselves at such heavy cost to the country. The company are in the same position that they were in two years ago, when their charter was renewed, and if there was a good reason for renewing their charter at that time, there is just as strong a reason to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. Oh, no.

Mr. McCOOL. At any time within the last two years this company has claimed to be in a position to go on with this work if the government would give them permission to do so. That is the position they have occupied right along. They state to-day that they are ready to go on with the work.

Mr. SPROULE. Did they not want the government to guarantee a large amount of bonds?

Mr. McCOOL. I think they did ask for a guarantee of bonds, but that request was withdrawn. That, however, is beside the matter. I think it would be most unreasonable to refuse a renewal of this charter to these people. It cannot do any harm to this country or to anybody. If the government takes over the work, the country will be responsible to the company for its expenditure up to the present time, having granted it a charter in the first place. The charter having been granted, I think common honesty and good faith demand that a renewal of that charter should be given until it is definitely known whether the government is going on with the work or not.

Mr. LENNOX. This seems to me a very peculiar proposition in view of the state of the facts. When this company said they were ready to go on with the work, the government stepped in and undertook surveys, which have cost the country $500,000 or more. The government is still in the field, and as far as we know are going on with the work themselves. Under these circumstances, to renew this charter would be simply to encourage the company to undertake more expense. We would give them a kind of possession of this public highway which should be vested solely in the country. I understand from the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that notwithstanding the fact that the government has been making surveys, and is I presume continuing to spend money from year to year, this company is going on, keeping an office open in Ottawa, employing expensive skilled experts to devise plans and specifications, and making prepartions for the construction of this work. The cost of all this is to be paid for by somebody, and there is no doubt that it will have to be paid by the country in the end. We understand from the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that the plans proposed by the government are not identical with, though somewhat similar to the plans proposed by the company. So that in the end we shall probably have the government settling upon a scheme radically different from that proposed by the company, and on which the company is at present expending considerable sums of money, and the country will have to pay for both expenditures. I do not think anything could be much more indefensible than such a policy. It would be very easy for the government, without renewing this charter at all, to compensate these gentlemen for the money they have expended up to the present time, if they should ultimately get any benefit from the surveys they have made. This company, through misfortune or otherwise, have not at all carried out the contract which they entered into with the country on any of the occasions when the charter has been renewed. They would have no ground for complaint if they were paid nothing, so far as I can see. At all events, I think the government should take some definite action in reference to this matter, instead of renewing the charter from time to time and putting off the evil day, when we shall have to pay a very surprisingly large sum of money to this company. Not one gentleman has given us a hint of the amount of money that the company has expended up to the present time. They speak of it as a large sum, but there does not appear to be anybody who has stated to the government what it amounts to and the government do not appear to have thought it worth while to find out. So we are going it in the dark, and although it is not to be compared with the Quebec bridge for blundering stupidity, it is on similar lines, and is going to get there if we encourage it and keep it going long enough. I am quite in favour of building this canal as soon as the country is in a position to go on with the work; but I am not in favour of farming it out to any company which, will get all the money or all the guarantees from the government and take all or a large part of the profits.

Mr. TAYLOR. For the information of the government I want to give the opinion of one of the largest exporters of grain from the Northwest. This is a letter which I received the other day:

Kingston, Ontario, February 10, 1908.

Geo. Taylor, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—We note that you want information regarding the Welland canal v. Georgian bay. This is a pretty full question, and perhaps requires a good deal of correspondence to make it perfectly intelligible to you. However, I am going to make a pretty broad assertion in the first place; the proposed Georgian bay canal, if built according to specifications, when completed would be unable to compete with the present old fourteen-foot Welland.

Grain loaded in Fort William, going by Welland canal, on ordinary lake steamers, could be delivered in Montreal in five to six days after loading.

The Georgian bay canal with the number of locks and delays and cross currents, would take fully this time, if not more.

The season of the year when Manitoba grain goes out is late in the fall. Not much of the grain gets to Fort William before the 10th or fifteenth of October. In other words, we find it difficult to cover our requirements until that time in the year. On the height of land which the Georgian bay canal would have to go through, we would think that navigation would close early, much earlier than here, because we can get grain through to Montreal, and have done so, on the first day of December. We would think that the Georgian bay canal would close at least two, if not three, weeks earlier, and therefore, be of very little use for fall business, which is the bulk of the business.

The cost of deepening the Welland canal, estimated by the present engineer in charge, which is the only estimate we have ever seen, was put at about sixteen million dollars; this would mean virtually a new canal, with reduced locks and depth of 21 feet, capable of taking in the largest steamers that now travel the upper lakes.

Regarding the saving made by this enlarged and deepened Welland canal, it requires little or no figuring to prove that the present rate of freight from Fort William to Montreal would be virtually cut in two.

The large steamer travelling the upper lakes, carrying 350,000 bushels, is able, per bushel, to carry at very much less figure than the steamer coming through the Welland canal carrying 70,000 bushels. The cost of operating that large steamer is very little greater, except fuel, than the small steamer. Take nine days to make a trip to Buffalo and back, from Duluth to Fort William, and allowing the steamer 1½ cents per bushel to Buffalo, which is the ordinary rate of freight to that port, and that same steamer would carry her full load of 350,000 bushels to Kingston and return to the west, in eleven days. In other words, it would take her only two days more to deliver her cargo to Kingston and return to Fort William, than to deliver her cargo at Buffalo and return.

Now if you allow the steamer ½ cent per bushel more to Kingston than to Buffalo, she earns on the trip to Kingston better earnings than on any part of her trip on the upper lakes and you have the grain in Kingston at 2 cents per bushel.

With the ordinary river barge, grain has been carried to Montreal at 1⅜ cents; last year owing to no opposition whatever, just one company, the Montreal Transportation Company, they advanced their price to 1⅞ cents; their barges are mostly very small barges, and very much out of date. Large barges suitable for the river trade, carrying 48,000 to 64,000 bushels, could be built very cheaply and could deliver this grain in Montreal at not more than 1⅜ cents per bushel, and this would deliver it aboard the ocean steamer free of any other charge. Therefore this grain could be taken from the port of Fort William and place it on the ocean vessel at Montreal for 3⅜ cents per bushel, and the carriers would have a fair profit.

Last year we paid 7½ cents per bushel, today they are asking 7 cents per bushel, so you see what I said in the first of this letter, that if the Welland canal were deepened, we would cut the rate in two, and save 3½ cents per bushel on every bushel of grain from the west to Montreal.

Not only would we carry our western grain through, but we would carry American grain, because grain is like water, it is going to flow by the easiest channel, the cheapest route takes it.

Buffalo, strange to say, is shipping as much Manitoba wheat as Montreal. Why? Because the big steamers do this very cheap. The charges from Buffalo to New York are very high, 5 cents per bushel, in fact 5·90 cents to f.o.b. steamer, New York from Buffalo. When the Erie canal is deepened to the twelve or fourteen feet as they are now talking of doing, they will take this grain from Buffalo and put it in New York at probably 3 cents per bushel, perhaps 2½ cents. Trade that we are barely holding now, we will lose altogether, we will all be sending our grain through American channels a few years hence, unless the government gets wise quickly and deepens the Welland canal which is the only feasible way of taking care of our western trade; only twenty-eight miles of canal to make which is giving us the finest deep waterway on the face of the globe, and making our northwest land worth from two to three dollars per acre more.

We have given you a good deal, and could give a good deal more, but this is a busy day here, and I trust that I have made myself plain. The government knows of this, gave it to them last year; at the time they seemed convinced, but they never put a dollar in the estimates yet to make a survey to see what this proposed enlarging and deepening of the Welland canal would cost; in this they have been very slack; why should they go ahead with the Georgian bay canal and spend millions and not make an estimate of the cost of the other route? Any business man figures out every proposition before he finally determines which one he will undertake to do, and the same argument should apply to the government. I am loath to have the opposition take hold of this thing, it should come as a government measure, however, somebody has to act, and act quickly.

Yours truly,
JAMES RICHARDSON.

This firm are the largest exporters of grain from the west. They have been in the business a lifetime, and the proposition they make is the only feasible one and the only one with which the government should grapple. This Bill which is before us is for the extension of time of a charter which the company in question got fourteen years ago. They never put a dollar into the scheme, and every year they come for a renewal of their charter. It is not in the interests of the country that this charter should be renewed from year to year according to the letter I have just quoted, and the proposition suggested in this letter is a feasible one. If we are going into a large expenditure of money, we ought to make perfect the St. Lawrence and the Welland canal route, on which we have spent so much money, by spending a little more on them.

Mr. HAGGART. The question is not before us whether the St. Lawrence or the Georgian bay canal route is the best. I have heard with pleasure the letter which my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has just read, but I entirely differ in opinion from the writer. He is misinformed and does not know the facts. The question has been debated in this House again and again. We in this section have stood up for the Georgian bay canal and have proved conclusively that a canal built on the principle we advocate would be for the general advantage of Canada. I am not living on the line of the Ottawa river, and therefore am just as much interested in the St. Lawrence route, but surely those who live along the Welland and the St. Lawrence canals should not be so prejudiced against the construction of this other work. However, the work is not under consideration here at present. Neither is the question under consideration as to whether it should be built by the government or not. But the parties are before us who have a charter and who have performed the conditions of the charter which we gave them some years ago. They have prepared and filed their plans. These plans have been in the possession of the government for the last year.

They cannot do more. The parties who are interested in the building of this canal are the most successful and the richest contractors in the world. They have faith in the undertaking and intend to construct the canal. If they do not, let the government construct it. I perhaps am in sympathy with those who advocate its construction as a government work, but it is useless to tell us that all canals are properly government work and should be built by the government. All the canals in England are the enterprises of private corporations, and so are nearly all the canals on the continent. That should be no objection. What we want is the canal. These parties have kept the enterprise alive to the present. They have expended a large amount of money on it. They have had their engineers at work, they have filed their plans with the government and are willing to enter into a contract. If the government do not wish to have it built according to the plans, that is their option. The plans are not at the option of the contractor, but have to receive the approval and sanction of the government, and I suppose that the government, in its own interests, even if it entered into a contract with this company, would like to know from its own officers what the cost of the undertaking is likely to be. It is but a simple matter of justice to these parties that we should pass this Bill. They have expended a large sum of money on this undertaking and are prepared to enter into a contract, and they say to the government: If you do not enter into a contract with us, do what you agreed to do. Take over the work already done, and that work will be essential if you build the canal yourselves, and pay us only the actual expenditure for the material and work done upon it. They ask for no fancy rates, they ask for no profits at all, but they ask the carrying out of the clause which the Minister of Justice put into their charter two years ago, which binds the government to give them the actual cash expenditure they made on work which is essential for the building of the canal. It is within five minutes of the expiry of the hour allowed for private Bills, and I shall not detain the House any longer. The building of the Georgian bay canal is an undertaking in which this section of the country is vitally interested, and they do not want to see any obstacles thrown in the way of its progress.

Mr. LENNOX. I am sorry the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) did not give us himself this information which now comes from the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart), namely, that it is the government who are blocking the way, that it is they who are responsible for the delay in proceeding with this work, and that the government are in possession of the key to the situation and refuse to unlock the gate.

Mr. GRAHAM. How about the hon. member for Leeds?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am voicing somebody else's opinion.

Mr. LENNOX. I take it for granted that what the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) says is true, and that he has knowledge of what he is speaking about. He tells us that this company is one of the greatest financial corporations in the world, that it is ready to go on with this work, but that the government are so vacillating and uncertain that they cannot even tell us to-night what they are going to do. I believe this is a bad policy that the government is pursuing; I am confident that the future will prove it so. But I recognize the fact that the government are committed to it over head and ears and cannot turn back now. I shall not block the way.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not want my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) to vote under any erroneous impression. I am going to have him vote with the full knowledge that no company has proposed to build this canal without aid from the government, and when the statement is made that a company is ready to enter into a contract for the construction, I am confident that there can be no foundation for that statement. No company will build this work without government aid, and no company has ever pretended that it could.

Mr. LENNOX. That merely shows the necessity for the discussion we have had, for we have now some light on the subject that we had not before. As I said, I do not wish to block the way.

Mr. BERGERON. I may say at once that I am not opposed to the Georgian bay canal; on the contrary, it is an old friend of ours. I am one who have always believed that the Georgian bay canal, when it is built, will be built by the government of Canada and not by a company. I do not wish to say anything against this company. I knew the first promoters in 1894 and 1896 and they were very anxious to have this work built and very much in earnest. But we do not need to go outside the Bill itself for proof that this work cannot be built by a prviate company—and it would not be good policy for the government to have a canal built by a private company. This charter was granted in 1894, renewed in 1896, again in 1900, again in 1902, again in 1904, again in 1906—they come before us every two years. And if we grant this extension, they will be back in two years again. I do not blame them. I understand well that they cannot build this work. The government has spent nearly a million dollars for surveys of this canal route, and when they make up their minds—as I hope they will—to build the canal, how will they stand with this company? We have had other cases of this kind where private companies stood in the way. The government will have to deal with the company. The company will say: We have a charter to build the canal, and we have incurred certain expenses——

Mr. CONMEE. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) does he think we get rid of the claim simply by refusing this charter? Would not they advance the claim regardless of that?

Mr. BERGERON. No.

Mr. CONMEE. I think so.

Mr. BERGERON. That is where we differ. This company is dead, and if it is to live, it must be because this parliament revives it. I would not be unwilling to allow them legitimate expenses, but I do not want them to take us by the throat.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the Bill he will see that it provides, as the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) has said, that they will have only their expenditure.

Mr. BERGERON. But my hon. friend knows what that means—we have had it here often. We know the kind of claim that will be put in, and we know that the company will have plenty of friends on both sides who for sympathy, or otherwise, will help them to get all that they claim from the government. The government is a good milch cow and everybody knows where to find it. The government has had this matter before it long enough to be able to decide upon a policy, and it has undertaken expenditure which will give it the necessary information. Then what is the use of renewing this charter, leaving this company in the hope that they will be called upon to do something or that they may get something from the government? It is purely and simply a bait—I do not believe it is good policy for this parliament to revive the charter. When the company has a claim, let them make their claim; I would be one of the first to help them to get all they are entitled to. But for us, representing the whole people of Canada—not only those in this part of the country, but all the people—to say that we will revive the company is only to put the company in a better position to demand more from the government than they are legitimately entitled to. I do not believe in this policy, and I, for one, will vote against it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I have no objection to the government paying people what they have legitimately spent upon a work of this kind. But I do want the government to stop their spending, for it seems to me hopeless to expect these people to build this canal. If that canal is built, it will have to be done by the government. Meantime we ought to stop the spending of money for which a claim will be ultimately made against the country and for which the country will have nothing to show.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

The time for private Bills having expired, the House resumed in Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 57) respecting a certain convention between His Majesty and the President of the French republic.

Mr. BERGERON. As I understand, if there was a treaty of commerce between France and the United States of America, such as this treaty, goods could come through New York and be delivered in Canada, according to this clause.

Mr. FIELDING. No. The hon. member says if there were a treaty between the United States and France; that would not be the test, but if there was a treaty between the United States and Canada; if we were to extend the benefit of our intermediate tariff to the United States, then the United States would come within the terms of that clause and goods could be brought in as the hon. gentleman states.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not my interpretation of the clause. It reads:

To enjoy the benefits of the aforementioned tariff advantages, Canadian products shall be conveyed without transhipment from a Canadian port or from a port of a country enjoying the French minimum tariff to a port in France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China.

Mr. FIELDING. I was reading from the first part, the hon. member is reading from the second.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not criticising it. I am only pointing out this fact in answer to the criticism of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Claude Macdonell).

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend refers to the second part, to goods going out of Canada. If the United States should receive the French minimum tariff, that would be correct.

Mr. SPROULE. We have already, I understand, a line of steamers subsidized between Canada and France. Is it intended to have two lines of steamers and that we must have a direct line?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the proposal is to enlarge the range of the present line. We have at present a line operated by the Allans from Canada to Havre by way of London. The details of the new arrangement may perhaps be given by my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur).

Mr. SPROULE. Enlarge it how?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a contract to-day providing for a subsidy of $100,000, which is at the rate of $5,555 per trip. This sum of $100,000 represents 18 trips. It is proposed that we should increase that amount to provide for more numerous trips but not to increase the amount per trip.

Mr. SPROULE. What are you paying the line now?

Mr. BRODEUR. $100,000, sometimes a little more. We pay $5,555 per trip and the existing statute gives authority to give $133,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is $133,000 the total amount of the subsidy ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not sure of the amount, but it is about that.

Mr. DANIEL. That is it. $133,333.

Mr. BRODEUR. The contract would expire with the opening of navigation this year and the new subsidy is to replace the old one.

Mr. BERGERON. How many arrangements have been made for subsidizing lines of steamers to France? An arrangement was made some years ago to subsidize some French company.

Mr. BRODEUR. The Ligne Bossière.

Mr. BERGERON. That was the first one. After that collapsed was there any other?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no arrangement with the government of France with regard to this.

Mr. BERGERON. No I mean some subsidy paid by the Canadian government for this same service.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is to-day a contract by which we pay $5,555 to the Allans. There is no other contract. This contract, which was entered into in 1905, will expire in the beginning of the season of navigation of 1908, and the resolution of which I have give notice is to replace the contract now in existence.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that this subsidy is to be $133,000 on condition that they make so many trips.

Mr. BRODEUR. The resolution which is tabled declares that we will pay the sum of $100,000 for 18 round trips, that amount to be increased proportionately so that each additional trip would increase the subsidy by $5,555 each.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that this must be a direct service. Does the French government assist in subsidizing this line ?

Mr. BRODEUR. This subsidy would be given according to the policy adopted some years ago, I think in 1894. For many years the subsidy then voted was not taken up and consequently no money was spent under that statute. Some years ago the Allan people negotiated with the then government to take over that subsidy. A contract was entered into with them in 1905, and, as I have said, it would expire in a short time and the resolution which is to be submitted is for the purpose of renewing and expanding that contract.

Mr. SPROULE. To-day the Allans can call at an English port going each way.

Mr. BRODEUR. Under the new arrangement the first port of call and the last port of call must be French ports.

Mr. SPROULE. But in the meantime they could call at an English port.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is nothing to prevent them going to some other place. I do not know whether the company which will take over the contract will desire to go to London.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister state the difference in cost of the new and old contracts?

Mr. BRODEUR. Previous to the existing one?

Mr. ARMSRONG. What will be the difference between the new contract that we are entering into and the one which has expired?

Mr. BRODEUR. The only difference is stated in the resolution, which my hon. friend will see on the Order Paper. I will read it :

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company, for the performance of a steamship service between a port or ports in Canada and a French port or ports, on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council deems expedient, and to grant therefor a subsidy based upon a minimum service of eighteen round voyages a year, and a subsidy therefor not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars, and so in proportion for a more frequent service.

If the requirements of the trade should demand a weekly service instead of the service which is now in existence, consisting of fourteen trips during the summer and four during the winter, under this resolution the Governor in Council is authorized to enter into a contract for the purpose of paying the same amount per trip, namely $5,555 but for a more frequent service.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But the minister has to make some estimate of what the increase is likely to be?

Mr. BRODEUR. What shall be the increased service to begin with has not yet been determined? It must not be forgotten that it is provided by this treaty that goods, to get the benefit of the treaty, will have to be imported direct. There have been in the past large quantities of goods imported through different ports. As these goods now will have to be imported direct it will probably increase to a large extent the number of voyages required.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the estimated amount of the increase?

Mr. BRODEUR. Perhaps we will have a weekly service; I do not say immediately, but later on it will probably require a weekly service.

Mr. BERGERON. Will these vessels carry the mails from Canada to France?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. And they will be paid for it?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. BERGERON. That will be part of the contract?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. When my hon. friend was negotiating with the French authorities was there any question whether they also should subsidize a line of steamers between Canada and France? We all know that it has been the policy of France for many years to subsidize steamers to carry their trade all over the world. Was there any question as to whether they should pay their share of the subsidy in view of the fact that a treaty had been negotiated between the two countries?

Mr. BRODEUR. They have a different way of subsidizing their boats.

Mr. BERGERON. They pay money for the construction of ships?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. They do it in their own way, but it is a question whether they would not be willing to pay a share of the subsidy. Was that proposed? There would be no harm in asking them to do so.

Mr. FIELDING. It was thought best that that should not be a matter of treaty, but that each party to the treaty should be left entirely free. We are not pledged to grant a subsidy under the terms of the treaty and they are not, but we hope that the development of trade will be such on both sides that they will find it expedient to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. If we give them a market for $5 worth of their goods for every $1 they give us a market for, you would naturally expect that they would be more interested in stimulating this trade than we are. Therefore, it would be natural to expect that they would contribute their share towards keeping up a direct line of steamships. Then there is another thing; if you make the line of steamships direct the subsidy will not be as valuable to the company operating the line as if it were an indirect line and they were allowed to call at other ports. We are paying the whole of the subvention for the purpose of having the advantage of placing $1 worth of our goods in their market for every $5 worth that they place in ours.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the terms of the new contract be practically similar to those of others in so far as the choice of ports is concerned? If my memory is correct, I think that under the old contract the lines of steamers getting subsidies had it left to them as to the choice of a port on this side of the Atlantic. Will the new contract contain that as one of its terms or will there be any alteration as to that?

Mr. BRODEUR. The existing contract provides that the ports of call shall be Quebec and Montreal during the summer and St. John and Halifax, or St. John alone—I am not quite sure—during winter. The question of the port of call has not been determined yet. It will be a question for negotiation with the company interested.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. This matter of a bonus to a French line of steamers appears to me to be a very proper question to discuss for a moment. If the advantages of this treaty are to be mutual, and I believe they are, there should have been a proposition from our friends who negotiated the treaty that the French government should bear part of the cost of this line. We are doing about $1,500,000 worth of trade with France. You are going to bonus a line to the extent of $150,000 per annum, which is ten per cent on the goods that you are going to export from Canada. That is a very fair profit in itself and if this treaty is properly negotiated and is evenly balanced surely the transportation question should also be put upon the same basis. This line of steamers should have been assisted by the French government to the same extent that it is being assisted by this government.

Mr. FIELDING. The steamship subsidy and the treaty are two entirely different things. Of course, one has some relation to the other as these steamers will carry the trade, but it was thought best that each government should be left free to do as it chose. We are not bound to subsidize this line. The French government are perfectly free to subsidize the line if they wish. Their method of subsidizing their vessels is such that it is rather difficult to establish a joint line. They will only subsidize vessels sailing under their own flag and it was thought better that each party should be left free to act independently in that way.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It is not likely that there will be enough traffic to pay for the subsidizing of two lines and as the Minister of Finance states that these goods are to be carried directly to Canadian ports it becomes necessary to subsidize a line. We will require these ships if the goods are to be brought into Canada at all because we have no direct line at the present time between Canada and French ports.

Mr. FIELDING. We have a line at present which is subsidized running between Canada and Havre.

Mr. BERGERON. The Allan line flies the French flag, so that there would not be the difficulty that the minister suggests in carrying on negotiations.

Mr. FIELDING. The Allan and other lines fly a good many flags but the nationality of the vessel is what I referred to.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the meaning of the expressions in clause 10.

Mr. FIELDING. It means that we cannot impose any restrictions against France that we do not impose against all other countries; we cannot discriminate against France. We shall not prohibit the importation of any article from France unless in the public interest we prohibit it from other countries.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. With reference to the expression 'goods of French origin', are the materials that are to be used in these goods to be entirely of French origin or may a certain percentage of material be incorporated in them which is not of French origin, and if so what percentage?

Mr. FIELDING. We use the words of the old French Treaty declaring that all the goods must be of 'French origin,' and we have no such rule as is applied in the case of the British preference. I do not anticipate any difficulty. Of course if it is shown that an article is not substantially French we would have to use a reasonable interpretation of that clause.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think there is much danger of any trouble in that respect.

Mr. FIELDING. There never has been.

On clause 11,

Mr. BERGERON. What is the explanation of this clause.

Mr. FIELDING. We are guaranteeing to France favoured nation treatment in everything except as regards the tariff, where we reserve our right to discriminate. The proviso that the privilege shall not apply to border states arises out of the treaties between France and some of the adjacent countries by which a strip of territory fifteen kilometres or about ten miles on each side of the boundary is regarded as a sort of neutral zone and where they do not enforce the customs regulations. The other proviso relates to a treaty which France has with Monaco by which she regards Monaco for commercial purposes as part of France.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For a good many years the United States have modified the usual form of favoured nation treatment clause by providing that the concession shall not be given unless it is accompanied by the same compensation which is received from the foreign country.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the American interpretation of the favoured nation treatment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not only that but they make it an express provision in their treaties. I do not say that we should adopt that practice but it is a matter for consideration when we are negotiating these treaties as to whether after all that is not the most logical and advantageous course in the long run.

Mr. FIELDING. The United States have been very strenuous in insisting upon that point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to bring to the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance the following reference to commercial treaties in Schuyler's work on 'American Diplomacy,' at page 421:

> In such treaties it has been usual to insert what is called the 'most favoured nation clause,' the effect of which is to give to each party the same treatment and the same privileges which have been or may be granted to the most favoured nation without further specification or agreement. The form in which this clause has been inserted in most of our treaties is as follows, from our treaty with Italy:
> The United States of America and the Kingdom of Italy mutually engage not to grant any particular favour to other nations, in respect to commerce and navigation, which shall not immediately become common to the other party, who shall enjoy the same freely, if the concession was freely made, or on allowing the same compensation, if the concession was conditional.

In their recent treaty with Japan they have modified that a little, and put it in this way in Article xiv:

> The high contracting parties agree that, in all that concerns commerce and navigation, any privilege, favour or immunity which either high contracting party has actually granted, or may hereafter grant, to the government, ships, citizens or subjects of any other state, shall be extended to the government, ships, citizens or subjects of the other high contracting party, gratuitously, if the concession in favour of that other state shall have been gratuitous, and on the same or equivalent conditions if the concession shall have been conditional; it being their intention that the trade and navigation of each country shall be placed, in all respects, by the other upon the footing of the most favoured nation.

In both of these cases the minister will observe that the favoured nation treatment is to be on the same terms.

Mr. FIELDING. Favour for favour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Favour for favour, for example, if we made a treaty to-morrow with Germany, extending to Germany certain tariff concessions and receiving from Germany certain tariff concessions, then France would enjoy the same concessions from us provided she gave us the same concessions that we received from Germany. That point seems to me to deserve consideration so far as future treaties are concerned, because you can keep yourself straight in that way, otherwise you run the risk of being the loser in the future.

Mr. FIELDING. That point has been well considered in other cases, and the position of the British diplomatic service has been that the older principle is the safer and the better. I think all the British treaties without exception adopt the view that if a concession be granted to another country, whether it is granted for compensation or not, it must be granted to Great Britain. The principle works both ways, and there are many ways in which it works to the advantage of Great Britain and would work to our advantage. I am aware that the Americans take the other view and adhere strenuously to it; but the practice of the British diplomatic service has been entirely against it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I entirely appreciate what the Minister of Finance has said. I know that the British rule has been the other way, but it occurred to me that there might be a special reason for that. Great Britain being a free trade country, is not in a position to give any great tariff concessions except in respect of wines and a few other articles on which she imposes customs duties. The principle which has been alluded to may work very well for Great Britain, while the American principle may work better for the United States; and as our tariff system more nearly resembles that of the United States than that of Great Britain, being based on the protective principle, it is worth while for us to consider whether the American form of treaty stipulation might not be the better for Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. While that may be well worthy of consideration in the future, we are and must necessarily be bound by all the existing most-favoured nation treaties of Great Britain, which apply to Canada. So long as those treaties remain, we shall have to adopt the British view.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not contending for a moment that in a form of treaty stipulation of this character there could be much doubt about the construction. While the United States makes it perfectly plain the other way, I am not criticising the British construction. I would be prepared to accept that.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the Minister of Finance know what are the commercial arrangements between England and France?

Mr. FIELDING. England gets the benefit of the French minimum tariff.

Mr. BERGERON. When there is anything applicable to France in this treaty it always adds 'Algeria, the French colonies and possessions and the territories of the protectorate of Indo-China.' In the arrangement between England and France, does England mention all the British colonies in the same way?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will see that the difference is due to the fact that England's colonial system differs materially from that of France. For instance Great Britain does not undertake to make tariff arrangements for Canada, but France does make the tariff arrangements for most of the French colonies and possessions.

Mr. BERGERON. I like our system the best. I ask simply for information.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the hon. Minister of Finance explain just what is meant by octroi?

Mr. FIELDING. I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to answer that question.

Mr. BRODEUR. The octroi is a sort of excise duty collected on goods which are taken into a city or town for local consumption. It has to be approved of by the central government.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it is a municipal law to begin with, and it has to be sanctioned by the government.

Mr. BRODEUR. If my hon. friend will consult Maurice Bloch's 'Dictionnaire de l'Administration Française,' he will find a complete explanation of octroi.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Can the minister give us an idea of how many cities that system is applied to in France?

Mr. BRODEUR. All cities and towns—about 1,500, I understand.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Has the minister any idea of what percentage of duty is imposed on goods entering these cities?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not that information. I have got it on wines, and it is about 2 cents a gallon.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Can you give us any idea of the food products?

Mr. BRODEUR. No; we have not got that.

On article 16,

If importers of French wines furnish certificates of analysis thereof, issued by the scientific establishments under the control of the Minister of Agriculture of France and designated by him, such certificates shall be taken into consideration for determining the alcoholic strength of such wines by the Canadian customs authorities, without, however, restricting their rights of appraisement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the meaning of the words 'take into consideration'?

Mr. FIELDING. The French ministers would have been pleased if we would have agreed to accept these certificates as authentic, but we said that, although they should be entitled to much consideration, we did not wish to give up the right of our customs authorities to call them in question if anything should give cause to suppose that these certificates would be erroneous. We would treat them with every respect, but not regard them as final.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. This is simply with regard to alcoholic strength, but what about adulteration?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no reference to adulteration, because the question was with regard to alcoholic strength.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. What would the minister expect to do if he found that the wines were adulterated by the use of chemicals?

Mr. FIELDING. If that question were raised the customs authorities would have to call in experts.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How carefully will they be examined?

Mr. FIELDING. I am bound to suppose that the customs will do their duty efficiently.

On article 20.

This convention, after being approved by the French Chambers and by the parliament of Canada, shall be ratified and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Paris as soon as practicable.

It shall come into force immediately after the completion of that formality and shall remain in force for a period of ten years, unless, however, one of the contracting parties shall within such period signify to the other party its intention to terminate this convention, in which case this convention shall cease to have effect twelve months after the reception by the other party of the notification as above.

In case neither of the contracting parties shall have signified before the expiry of such term the intention of terminating this convention, it shall remain binding until expiry of twelve months from the day on which either of the two parties shall have denounced it.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the meaning of this?

Mr. FIELDING. I explained that on the introduction of the Bill. Although ten years is mentioned, the treaty may be terminated on twelve months' notice by either party. We had desired to make the treaty for ten years, but our French friends did not care to bind themselves to that term. They left the ten years in as a reference, but so worded the article that the treaty can be terminated on twelve months' notice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What it practically amounts to is this. During the first ten years after the treaty comes into force it shall be liable to be denounced on twelve months' notice, and after these ten years it shall continue to be liable to be so denounced.

Mr. FIELDING. Exactly.

Mr. BERGERON. It may run more than ten years?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes; but it may last only one. We left the ten years in, though legally it is meaningless. It implies, however, a sort of moral obligation.

Mr. DANIEL. Reverting to the subject of adulterated wines, is there any Canadian law at present making it illegal to import adulterated wines? Otherwise the customs would have no authority to analyse such wines.

Mr. BRODEUR. They will be in the same position as any other food products. If any article which is adulterated is offered for sale, the person offering it is liable to the penalty provided by the Adulteration Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as adulterated articles are concerned, the position will be the same after the treaty as it is at present. The only significance of the situation is this, that if the treaty is to increase the import of articles which are specially subject to adulteration, it is necessary to look into our laws and see what remedies we have. My hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Marshall) referred to the importation of pease which are said to be coloured by some injurious substance. Other hon. gentlemen familiar with the wine trade talk of adulteration as being prevalent in certain classes of wines. If the treaty is likely to encourage the importation of articles specially liable to adulteration, the government should look carefully into our laws and see that there is some remedy.

Mr. FIELDING. I feel more anxious on that point, because it is of importance. The French government are exceedingly anxious to guard against adulteration, and I should hope that, as we are acting in unison, that danger will be avoided.

Mr. BRODEUR. This clause with regard to analysis was added by the French authorities with the view of preventing adulteration and of preventing articles being offered for sale which are adulterated.

Mr. BARR. Seeing the position the minister is in, would it not be wise for him to propose any necessary amendments to the law in this respect? He does not appear to be at all clear on the subject.

Mr. FIELDING. If the Adulteration Act is found defective, certainly it should be looked closely into.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall I read the schedules?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose we could leave them to the end of the Act, and if any hon. gentleman wishes to call attention to any particular item——

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly.

On article IV:

Every reduction of customs duty granted by Canada to any foreign country whatever on any of the products enumerated in schedule 'B' shall apply to the fullest extent to similar products originating in France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask whether, under the law of France, it is necessary to have a provision of this kind, or does the government of France possess the necessary powers by decree to accomplish in respect to Canadian products entering France that which is accomplished by this section regarding French products entering Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. Their proceeding is similar to ours. They have submitted to the chambers a law which has been passed—I am not sure if it has been completed. So, the proceeding in the two countries is substantially the same.

Mr. DANIEL. I suppose this is a clause which will fix as part of the treaty all those articles mentioned in schedule 'B'——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Both 'B' and 'C'.

Mr. DANIEL. When I spoke of this treaty on the second reading, I mentioned particularly the importation of absinthe. If it is possible, I would like to see absinthe cut out of this treaty entirely. There is no need of Canada importing any such article. There is no benefit in it, and its importation will be accompanied by a great deal of evil, especially if it is used to any great extent. It has been considered in France, and especially in Paris, as a great injury to the youth of the country. As I said when speaking on the matter before, we have a sufficient number of means of getting artificial headaches and shattered nerves without importing another one from France, and I, for one, would like to see this liquor, absinthe, cut out of the treaty. If it is possible to do it, I will make a motion, but, if it is not possible, I will leave it to the minister to take action.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daniel) is under a misapprehension as to the effect of the treaty as affecting this article. He is under the impression, I take it, that we are making a concession in the duty on absinthe. There is no change in the duty on absinthe under this treaty. We are putting this article in a list of articles concerning which it is provided that the rates of duty granted to other countries by Canada, under the intermediate tariff must be conceded to France. For the present, the rate is exactly as it was. And, if we see fit, either for the reason given by my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel)—whose views as a professional man we are bound to consider—or for any other, to legislate so that absinthe should be prohibited from entering Canada, we have a right to do so.

Mr. DANIEL. I am not objecting to the rate of duty. So far as I am concerned, I should be better satisfied to see the rate higher than it is. What I object to is the absinthe itself, and, if my opinion has any influence, I would exert it in favour of having the article cut out of the treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. But cutting it out would not——

Mr. DANIEL. If that cannot be done, I would rather see the duty raised than lowered.

Mr. BERGERON. But this treaty puts us under no obligation to import absinthe or to admit it at any particular rate of duty. What my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) wants—and he may be right—is to prevent the importation, but that can be done by a different procedure.

Mr. BRODEUR. By a change in the tariff.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes. But it has nothing to do with the treaty before us.

Mr. DANIEL. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) would intimate to us now, that when he comes to make his budget speech he will put absinthe on the prohibited list, I should be entirely satisfied.

Mr. FIELDING. I could not undertake to do that, and, in any case, it will make no difference so far as this treaty is concerned. And we can prohibit the importation of absinthe without affecting this treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If we prohibit it from all countries.

Mr. FIELDING. Exactly. This treaty does not in any way interfere with the freedom of this House in this matter. If we wish to prohibit it altogether, well and good; the only thing to which we bind ourselves under this treaty is that if it is prohibited from France we will prohibit it from other countries also.

Mr. DANIEL. I take it that if absinthe were placed on the prohibited list we should be doing what France is doing with regard to our proprietary medicines. She totally prohibits them. I suppose, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) suggests, she prohibits them from every country. In that case, cutting absinthe out of the treaty would prohibit it from France, but I suppose it would require other authorization to prohibit it from other countries as well. I leave the 'how' of doing this to the Minister of Finance. But I should be glad to hear from him some statement that he would do it

Mr. FIELDING. Cutting it out of the treaty would not prohibit its importation from France. If we wish to prohibit it, it must be by amendment of the general law of Canada.

Mr. BERGERON. What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daniel) is asking the Minister of Finance is, when he prepares his budget, to propose the prohibition of absinthe. I think that is a suggestion worthy of consideration.

Mr. FIELDING. That is worth consideration.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course it has nothing to do with the treaty.

Mr. BRODEUR. In regard to absinthe I think the least danger would come from France because last year a Bill was introduced before the Chamber of Deputies asking the abolition of absinthe, and there has been a campaign against it in the press so that it is likely that in a very short time the manufacture and use of absinthe will be entirely prohibited in France.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it is prohibited in the French and German armies.

On section 4—Extension of advantages to Tunis.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course the French government would notify this government of any such desire.

Mr. FIELDING. This would have to be by agreement. Tunis has a somewhat different form of government; although it is a protectorate of France, the French government do not desire to make a bargain binding it, but they wanted to have provision for its admission to the advantages of the treaty should it desire to enter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which provision in the treaty refers to this?

Mr. FIELDING. 18. It is to be by an exchange of notes between the two parties.

On section 5:

The advantages granted to France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China by the said convention, with respect to the commerce of the said countries with Canada, shall extend to any and every other foreign power which by reason of the operation of the said convention is, under the provision of a treaty or convention with His Majesty, entitled, in whole or in part, to the same or to the like advantages with respect to its commerce with Canada, to the extent to which in the manner aforesaid such other foreign power is entitled thereto; and such advantages shall continue to so extend to such other foreign power so long as the said convention remains in force, or until the right of such other foreign power to such advantages under its treaty or convention with His Majesty is sooner determined.

Mr. BERGERON. What is that, in a few words?

Mr. FIELDING. That is to provide for the extending of the advantages of the treaty to countries enjoying most-favoured nation treaties.

Mr. BERGERON. With France?

Mr. FIELDING. Treaties with Great Britain which apply to Canada. Any foreign country which has a favoured-nation treaty with Great Britain applicable to Canada becomes entitled to the advantages of this treaty. Although that is covered by the treaty power, it has been thought that we should properly give effect to it by specific enactment of this parliament. That was done under the treaty of 1893. Although that treaty with France would also apply to the favoured-nation countries, it was thought proper that Canada should legislate giving effect to that. We provide by legislation of Canada that the benefits of this treaty should be extended to all countries having favoured-nation treaties with Great Britain. Canada being a part of the empire we are bound to give these benefits to all favoured-nation countries because we give them to France. I gave a list of these nations earlier in the debate.

On section 6:

The advantages so granted to France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China by the said convention, shall extend to the United Kingdom and the several British colonies and possessions with respect to their commerce with Canada, so long as France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the said territories continue to be entitled to such advantages; provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be held to diminish any advantage which the United Kingdom and British colonies and possessions now enjoy under the British preferential tariff.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the same thing on our side.

Mr. FIELDING. In the case of countries enjoying the British preferential tariff, this is hardly necessary because the British preferential tariff, except in a few instances, is more favourable than the rates now given. But take Australia or Newfoundland which do not enjoy the benefit of the preferential tariff, we give them by this legislation the benefit of the lower rates which we accord to France, it being a principle that no part of the British empire should be taxed at a higher rate than a foreign country.

Mr. LAKE. In order to obtain certain advantages from France we have to give considerable advantages to a great number of other countries, that is the position?

Mr. BERGERON. And vice versa.

Mr. FIELDING. That is one way of putting it. As the matter stood before, we were under obligations to give to France without compensation everything we might give to another country for compensation, and therefore we thought it better, as the first step in our foreign negotiations, to come to a good understanding with France. We could, of course, with the consent of the British government, denounce these old treaties, but I think that would be unfortunate. In the first place it would be embarrassing to the British government, it would be an international affair. It must be remembered that we get some advantage in return because each nation has to bargain with us that in no case will it give advantages to other nations greater than it gives to us. On the whole we get compensation.

Mr. BERGERON. On the whole does it not diminish our tariff?

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, yes, it extends the benefit of the diminished rates under this treaty to a large number of countries; it is a material reduction in respect of a large number of articles.

Mr. BERGERON. It makes the Canadian tariff lighter than before.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we took the rates set forth in the intermediate tariff of a year ago, and that did to some extent diminish the protection as between the intermediate and the general tariff. But below that were the rates of the British preferential tariff; so that generally the protection to Canadian products was not decreased, except it be on lines which are not produced in England.

Mr. BERGERON. It gives a benefit to countries enjoying the advantages of the French tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. But the British preferential tariff is below that and the preferential tariff is usually considered the measure of protection. Generally the manufacturer measures the protection by the British rate. In this case it will be found that the British rates will be below the rates given, and if the British rate is below the rate given, it will be no reduction in the protection on Canadian products. But undoubtedly there is a reduction in the protection on goods that are not made in Great Britain.

On section 9:

The operation of all laws inconsistent with the giving to the provisions of the said convention and of this Act their full effect shall from time to time be suspended to the extent of such inconsistency.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the meaning of that?

Mr. FIELDING. Supposing these reductions some country entitled to, should by some act of their own cease to be entitled to these rates, we only want to suspend the legislation so long as the present conditions exist. If these conditions should change, then we do not wish to suspend the legislation any longer. That was the object, and I think it serves the purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. If the minister will read that clause in French, perhaps we would understand it better.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a system for which there is precedent and which has been found satisfactory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You say here shall 'from time to time' be suspended. The expression 'from time to time' is never used in a matter of that kind, so far as I am aware.

Mr. BERGERON. It seems to me that 'for the time being' would be better.

Mr. FIELDING. There are varying conditions owing to the fact that we may be dealing with various countries. I think the draughtsman put it in for that reason. However, I do not think it is very important.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose it means that if a treaty between Great Britain and some other country should be denounced the words 'from time to time' would apply.

Mr. FIELDING. It meets varying conditions.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose these negotiations were carried on in French?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. This must have been a translation.

Mr. BRODEUR. This clause 9 was not in the treaty and was not discussed in the negotiations. It was something that was put in the law of 1893 or 1894, when parliament approved of the treaty of 1893, and it was thought advisable to put the same provision in our existing law, but it was never made the subject of negotiation between France and Canada. It is only a matter of following the language of our own statutes.

Mr. FIELDING. This is not in the treaty ; it is in the Act. I would suggest that we accept the words as they are drafted, and before the third reading I will have them submitted to the Department of Justice to find if, in their opinion, it is desirable to change them.

Mr. BERGERON. It is understood that any hon. member who wants to discuss any of these items may do so later on ?

Mr. FIELDING. On the third reading I have no objection. I think the discussion which has taken place has been very thorough, but if on the third reading any hon. gentleman wants to discuss the matter further I have no objection.

Mr. BERGERON. I have in my mind that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who was very anxious to discuss the Bill, but who, I am afraid, has been called away by sickness.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier wishes to speak on it, I have no objection.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will my hon. friend look at the top of page 21? Why do you say '6 quarts and 12 pints'?

Mr. FIELDING. That is the form of measurement in our tariff. Six quarts do not generally make a gallon. It is not 6 quarts, but it is 6 quart-bottles.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My suggestion was as to the grammar of the phrase. I do not understand why you should say '6 quarts and 12 pints.'

Mr. FIELDING. I have the treaty here in the original print, and it is 'quart' ; the letter 's' has been imported in the Canadian reprint. It will then be '6 quart bottles or 12 pint bottles.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You had better change it then.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I think that 's' had better come out.

Bill reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 24, 1908.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 103) respecting the Eastern Trust Company—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 104) to amend the Companies' Act—Mr. Guthrie.

CO-OPERATION.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that :

Item No. 7, Public Bills and Orders, for the second reading of Bill (No. 5) an Act respecting co-operation, be transferred to government orders.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

On the order for the introduction of a Bill to authorize the issue of government annuities for old age :

Mr. FIELDING. I ask that this order be dropped as the matter is covered by a resolution which is on the Order Paper.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Dropped.

PLACING OF BOOMS IN INTERNATIONAL STREAMS.

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 105) to regulate the placing and maintaining of booms in international streams.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. gentleman briefly explain the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the Bill provides that no boom or shear boom, shall be attached to the Canadian shore of any international stream or placed in the bed of any such stream upon the Canadian side of the middle thread of the main channel without a license therefor having been first obtained from the Minister of Public Works. It is also provided that such license may be granted by the minister upon such terms and for such length of time as he may deem advisable. It further provides that any person who attaches or maintains any such boom upon the Canadian side of the channel shall be liable to a penalty for every day that it is so maintained of not less than $100 and not exceeding $1,000. I may say that the immediate cause of the introduction of this Bill is a state of affairs which has arisen upon that part of the St. John river which forms the boundary between the state of Maine and the province of New Brunswick. Some two or three years ago a company was incorporated by the legislature of the state of Maine and they proceeded to the erection of a mill at Van Buren upon the American side of the St. John river opposite St. Leonard's. In connection with the mill they established sorting works, booms and piers, so that they practically closed the whole of the American side of the St. John river. Then, in order to facilitate their operations, they acquired some shore rights upon the Canadian side of the river and they have swung out shear booms from the Canadian side, the result of which is to divert into their sorting works on the American side all the logs going down the St. John river destined for mill owners below these works. The result of the construction of these works has been to cause very great delay and loss and damage to the mill owners of Woodstock, Fredericton, St. John, and other points on the St. John river. Under the present law the navigation of the river cannot be obstructed unless with the approval of the Minister of Public Works, but it may well be argued that the placing of these shear booms in the river does not obstruct the navigation and therefore the courts of our country would have no control over them. It has been thought advisable that the government through the Minister of Public Works should have some control over that portion of the international waters which are within Canada, and all that this Bill proposes to do is to place a certain control and a certain regulation of these booms in the Federal authorities. Under this Bill, if it should become law, the minister can make provision as to the description of sorting works and may take all necessary precaution to prevent delay and loss or injury to the mill owners down the river. It seems to be, in the case of an international stream, the only mode which can be suggested by which the large lumbering interests of a great river like the St. John can be protected. It has been thought best to make the Bill general in its application, although I may say frankly to the House that I am not aware of any case in which the difficulty has arisen except on the St. John river. The Bill has been presented in response to petitions which have been very largely signed by those conducting milling and lumbering operations on the St. John river, and I think I may say that the opinion of the people interested in these operations which are situate below these works on the river, is unanimous in favour of legislation of this kind. It is urgently called for, and if the measure becomes law it will prove very advantageous to the public interests there.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I presume the minister has considered the question of provincial jurisdiction in the bed of the river and shore rights.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, very carefully. This is a navigable river, and I think there can be no question as to the jurisdiction of this parliament to deal with it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 106) to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I intended to speak in French, but I am asked to speak in English. This Bill is a very simple one. Its first object is to amend section 270 of the Railway Act, which says that trains shall be run, as far as possible, on schedule time to be fixed by public notice. I propose to amend this section by striking out the words 'as far as possible,' and to provide that the railway company shall be subject to a minimum fine of $5 for each minute of delay to one of its trains. There is no penalty in the present Railway Act for the delay of trains, and it is perfectly useless to have a provision with respect to that matter without a penalty being attached. The railways of this country seem to treat the public with a great deal of levity; you sometimes know at what hour a train will arrive at a station, but you never know at what hour you will get to your destination, and there are quite a number of unnecessary delays without any reason whatever. My proposition is that the company shall be fined for delays unless they can prove force majeure.

The second object of the Bill is to amend section 343 of the Railway Act so as to compel steamship companies navigating in inland waters and receiving subsidies to give free transportation to members of the House of Commons and of the Senate. I see no reason why we should discriminate between railways and steamships in this matter. The steamship companies receive subsidies from this parliament and they come here seeking legislation just as the railways do; and while parliament discriminates between railways and steamships in this matter, the steamship companies in turn discriminate between members and give transportation to certain members who possibly favour their legislation, while they refuse it to others. If we are going to have the principle of free transportation by railway companies and steamship companies, it should apply to every member of the House and to every senator or to none at all.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FEDERAL INTERFERENCE IN PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Under rule 37 Mr. Foster wishes to discuss, as a matter of public importance, the following:

The interference of government employees in federal electoral contests by frequenting and addressing public meetings in the interest of a particular party. And, the promise of federal aid and subventions by members of parliament and by the government.

Shall the hon. gentleman have leave to move the adjournment of the House?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Mr. Foster moves, seconded by Mr. R. L. Borden, that the House do now adjourn.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). The House will remember that some days ago I put a question to the Minister of Railways based upon a telegram sent me, stating that employees of the Intercolonial in Moncton were interfering in the provincial elections which are being carried on in the province of New Brunswick. The names of two gentlemen, Leblanc, were mentioned, and it was circumstantially stated in the telegram that these gentlemen had been addressing meetings and taking an active part in the election in the county of Westmoreland. The Minister of Railways appeared a little doubtful that any of his tried and trusty employees would be engaged in anything so different from railway work, and he took the benefit of a day or two to make inquiry. Afterwards, in answering my questioning, he informed the House that he was not able to find that these gentlemen had been actively engaged in political work, but that he was still diligently prosecuting inquiry. He prosecuted the inquiry for another day or two, and a few days ago he informed the House, on a question of my own, that one of the Leblancs had been at his home over Sunday and had gone back to his work in Quebec, and that the other Leblanc had gone away somewhere, and he did not know where he was. I think he intimated that he had leave of absence. Then the minister said that he had notified the superintendent that the department did not wish its men to be engaged in active political work, although it accorded to them the fullest liberty of voting and exercising their franchise. I have received to-day circumstantial evidence in the way of the following affidavits, which will show that the information I had was correct in every particular:

Canada—Province of New Brunswick.

I, Antoine Bourque, of Cocagne, in the parish of Dundas, in the county of Kent and province of New Brunswick, farmer, do solemnly declare

That on the evening of the twentieth day of February, A.D. 1908, I attended a political meeting held in the interest of the local government candidates, at Cocagne, in the said county of Kent, which meeting was attended by a large number of the electors of the said county of Kent. That the said meeting was advertised as a political meeting by, and in the interest of the local government party, and Henri LeBlanc, of Moncton, in the county of Westmoreland, was one of the principal speakers at the said meeting, and spoke there at length. That the said Henri LeBlanc advocated in his said address at the meeting the election of the government candidates, and condemned the local opposition party, and asked the electors to vote against the opposition candidates. That the said Henri LeBlanc is an employee of the federal government and is employed in the general offices of the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton, Westmoreland county, and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

mark.

Declared before me at Shediac, in the county of Westmoreland, this 21st day of February, A.D. 1908. W. A. Russell, a commissioner to take affidavits to be read in the Supreme Court, and I certify that the foregoing declaration was first by me read over to the said declarent who affixed his mark thereto in my presence, and who seemed perfectly to understand the same.

W. A. RUSSELL,
Commissioner.

Canada—Province of New Brunswick.

I, Jeremiah S. Legere, of Robicheau, in the parish of Shediac, in the county of Westmoreland, and province of New Brunswick, farmer, do solemnly declare

That on the fourteenth day of February, A.D. 1908, in the evening, I attended a political meeting held in the school house at Robicheau, in the parish of Shediac, in the said county of Westmoreland, in the interest of the local government party. That the meeting was announced as one in favour of the said government party, and held as such, and the speaker at the said meeting was Henri LeBlanc, of Moncton, in the said county, who is an employee of the federal government, and who is employed in the general offices of the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton. That he advocated the election of the government candidates for this county. That the said meeting was attended by a large number of the electors of the county of Westmoreland. That the said Henri LeBlanc also spoke at a political public meeting at Dupey's Corners, in the said county, on the evening of the thirteenth instant for the government candidates, and I am informed he has since that time spoken at other public political meetings. That I know Alphonse T. LeBlanc in the employ of the federal government, in the service of the Intercolonial Railway, and he spoke and took part in a public political meeting held at Barachois, in the parish of Shediac, in the said county, on the evening of the twentieth instant, in favour of the local government party. And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

JEREMIAH S. LEGERE,

Declared before me at Shediac, in the county of Westmoreland, this twenty-first day of February, A.D. 1908.

W. A. RUSSELL,
A commissioner to take affidavits to be read in the Supreme Court.

These two affidavits can be supplemented by others if it be necessary ; but I think they quite establish the charge which was made, that these employees of the Intercolonial Railway have been, if they are not now, actively engaged in partisan work, openly and publicly speaking and assisting at meetings, not only standing up for their friends, which is a laudable thing in a man, but maligning and saying very harsh things of their political opponents, which is not right in an employee of the government, who is an employee of the whole country, and is paid by the money of the people of both political parties. We find that Henri Leblanc addressed political meetings at Dupey's Corners on the 13th of February, at Robicheau on the 14th of February, and at Cocagne on the 20th of February and the affidavit goes on to say that he has addressed other meetings. It would appear that Henri Leblanc is regularly engaged in the campaign. Alphonse Leblanc spoke on the 20th of February at Barachois, in the county of Westmoreland. This information was brought to the attention of the Minister of Railways, I think first about the 13th of February, and it was preceded by a debate in this House raised by my hon. friend the member for York (Mr. Crocket), who made similar allegations ; and I think it is rather peculiar that, having had their attention called to it at that date, and having at their disposal wires and all the resources of quick communication, these two gentlemen could have been speaking on the 13th, the 14th and the 20th of the month, and none of the argus-eyed officials of the Railway Department should have been able to have discovered this indecent exhibition of partisan work on the part of employees of the government, and have informed the minister of it. One does not care to jump at a conclusion ; but it would seem as if a leave of absence had been asked by Mr. Henri Leblanc, and that he had been sent out for the regular work of the canvass. It makes no difference to my mind whether he was on leave of absence or not. That a man employed by the government and paid by the people of this country to do the country's service, should, whether on leave of absence or not, be taking part in elections, standing up for his friends and accusing his opponents, praising a portion of his paymasters and depreciating another portion, is not decent or proper. What does the government propose to do ? Has it no sense of the incongruity of its conduct ? Is it simply jollying the people ? This government sails under very fine colours. It hoists its flag at the top of the mast and on that flag is inscribed in burning letters the policy that paid employees of the government should not engage in partisan work, either in Dominion or local elections. That is a fine thing for the religious newspapers and the independent newspapers to take notice of ; and the partisans of the government are quick to take notice and praise the Laurier government for this wonderful step in advance, for taking this high moral ground. But what does it mean when we find this government, standing right under that flag, allowing their employees, from day to day and whenever elections are on, to take exactly the opposite course, right in the teeth and by the side of the ministers and thus giving the lie to this solemn declaration of policy ? We find an employee of this government in Woodstock, N.B., attending a political rally, which is the most intimate kind of political work, and there with all the backing he has from being a Dominion government official and with what little patronage and influence that may give him, exercising both on the faithful to keep a certain government in and to prevent another certain party from being elected ; and the best the Postmaster General can say is that he was informed this man had not addressed a public meeting. Why, there is not the least doubt that Smith did attend a Liberal rally and did address that rally. I do not know what the minister has been doing about it since, but he owes it to his government and to himself and to fair and honest dealing, to discipline this man ; and he may rest assured that that Smith is not the Smith who sails under Conservative colours and is a candidate for election.

That is the offence of a lower official. But what shall we say of the offence of higher officials? We find the Minister of Public Works going down to the city of St. John, and by the deft use of imaginative forecasts and predictions as to what may take place in the future, dangling before the eyes of the electors the deep borings and dredging and other works around the city of St. John for the purpose of building a grand terminal for the Grand Trunk Pacific and other railways, and then stating that if the people interested want to strengthen his hands as a federal minister and have these predictions verified, they must put in the six men in the county and city of St. John whose elections he is advocating. What does that mean? Why, in the beginning, before 1904 we had a chosen vessel from Ontario, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth)—who was greatly desired by the Prime Minister in order to add dignity and strength to his cabinet and make up for losses the government were sustaining in that province—we find that that chosen apostle did not consider it beneath himself to go through Durham with an imaginary clock on one shoulder and one of the mouths of the Trent canal on the other and promise those great benefits to the country out of a well-filled treasury if the electors would only do what he wished.

I tell the right hon. gentleman, whether he knows it or not, that when the words were scarcely yet cold from his mouth, heartily endorsing the resolution we passed unanimously against the employment or participation of federal officials in elections, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), who is just now leaving the chamber, took one of these same officials, travelled with him throughout the country, put him up on every platform, and when interviewed about it said he thought that public officials had just as much rights as any other class. To-day, Sir, nineteen-twentieths of the officials in the Northwest provinces are simply party managers and participants, and whatever they do, no matter in what sphere, their first and principal disposition is to do what will help the party instead of what will benefit the public. Where is this man Leech to-day? There never was a more gratuitous insult given the good feeling and the good sense of this country than was given when this government appointed that man, who had defrauded thousands upon thousands of Liberal-Conservative voters of their votes in Manitoba, to administer the seed grain fund. After this man had performed that dirty work to the satisfaction of the ministers who employ such men as Wagner, Nixon and others, he was made administrator of this fund of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 which we voted in order to help the people in a great national crisis and on the promise of the government that the vote would be thoroughly, well and properly administered. What did Leech do in Manitoba? He hunted out every Conservative and drew his pen through every one he could disfranchise. Why? Because he was looking for advancement and because he thought—and it is not a thought that does credit to this government—that the surest road to advancement was to do something illegal, something wrong, something contemptibly mean for his masters. Yet that is the man they appoint to administer this fund. What may we expect him to do? When he comes to file the applications he will do exactly as he did in the case of the lists. He will say: This one is a Conservative, ah ! I will mark him off. This one is a Liberal, ah ! I will be good to him. So that the malign influence of this man is again at work in the Northwest and is given this great benefaction of the people as a fund to work upon. I say it is an insult to the opposition and to the good sense of the people, which, I hope, will be taken well to heart. We have brought this thing up time and again and we would like to hear from the First Minister what he is going to do about it. Is he going to continue to act the pharisee? Is he going to broaden the phylacterics and still make great pretensions? Or will he, for once in his life, be honest and take that declaration of his and tear it into ribbons and say that he made it in a moment of weakness?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Will he be honest enough to say that he never intended to carry it out? He is trampling it under his feet every day. Why then cling to this hypocritical pretense? Why keep it alive? It is not such a lesson as should be given the people by men in authority. The determination to carry out its every pledge should be a distinguished trait of a government that aims to be one of the foremost in the world. Does the Minister of Railways and Canals mean to say that if he had been really desirous of setting right this matter he could not have found out the facts between the 12th inst. and the present time? If he had been in earnest, he would have had his men after these employees and would have whisked them back into their proper places. Why does he not do it in this case? The impelling spirit is not there. Mr. Speaker, I have done my duty in bringing this matter to the attention of the House.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). It is a pleasure to the House, and must be a pleasure to the country, that public opinion has got to such a state that a mere suspicion about two minor employees on the Intercolonial will attract so much attention. Time was when, if the whole shops had turned out on a political campaign, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) would not have seen it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was in the day when 'shingles' were ordered by wire.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. As a matter of fact. one of the complaints I have had since I took over the Department of Railways and Canals from those who are in the employ of the Intercolonial is to the effect that they are not allowed nearly the latitude in political matters that they were allowed in the old days. Now, my hon. friend was unfair in the latter part of his remarks when he intimated that I had made no attempt to settle this matter from the 13th instant to the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that.

Mr. GRAHAM. It amounted to that. He said I did not make any practical attempt. Now, that is not fair, and I think he knows it is not fair. When he brought this matter to the attention of the House, I told him frankly that I had not heard of it. But I wired at once to find out if there was any truth in it. I am not going to charge men with doing something merely on suspicion that they have done it. I am not going to tell men they must quit doing something unless I know they have done it. I am not going to tell men who are as good citizens as I or my hon. friend that they must abide by a cast iron rule until I know that there is need to call that rule to their attention. I am not so full of suspicion as my hon. friend about people in general. I wired to the general manager and received word from him that Alphonse was then at his work in the province of Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. And where was Gaston ?

Mr. GRAHAM. He was following. Now, surely when I found that one of the men whom my hon. friend suspected, was actually at his work, my hon. friend would not expect me to tell that man. 'Now that I have found you at your work you must stay there.' The other gentleman, I found, was absent from his duty. I wired to find where he was and to inform him that, so far as the employees of the Intercolonial were concerned, the department wanted them to have the fullest liberty to exercise their citizenship and their right to vote as they pleased, but we did not want them to take part in either Dominion or provincial affairs. Since that time, I received a telegram that Alphonse had been in Moncton over Sunday. I wired asking that he be given the same information. Surely, my hon. friend cannot ask me to do more than that. Surely, in doing this, I am treating the House and the government and myself fairly. I have stated plainly that I am not in favour of employees of the government taking part in Dominion or provincial affairs. And I believe that the facts do not bear out the statement that, since I have wired, these employees have taken any part in those affairs. I do not see how I could do more. I state again that that is my opinion and that is what I wish carried out. On the other hand, my hon. friend gave us a telegram the other day the substance of which was that some one had heard one of the Leblancs say that he was going to open a committee room. I do not know that he has opened that committee room—in fact, I do not think he has. The hon. gentleman presents two affidavits. Well, it is not fair to condemn a man even on affidavits. Of course, I am not saying a word in disparagement of the men who made those affidavits ; but I think we had better wait,—perhaps affidavits may be made on the other side. Looking at the matter fairly, without attempting to make political capital, I think my hon. friend will see that, so far as the Department of Railways and Canals is concerned, it has done its duty in the matter.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I join in the expressions of pleasure of my hon. colleague (Mr. Graham) because of the fact that my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has so greatly modified his views as to what is proper in connection with political campaigns. I can well remember the time when he did not, at any rate, hold, though he may have sometimes expressed—if he will pardon me for saying it—the same views that he holds now. I do not wonder that, sometimes, gentlemen in the employ of the government who may have a warm feeling for either this government or the provincial government, may be tempted to take some little part in politics when they see so many Conservatives in the employ of the government in the various provinces—and I think now particularly of my own province —who have been allowed by this government, with impunity, for ten years, to take an active part in politics on the Conservative side. I agree that it is not desirable they should do so. Sometimes, it is exceedingly annoying and irritating to Liberals to find this going on, but at all events, they have allowed it to go on without taking very active steps to prevent it.

Now, so far as concerns the statements that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has made with regard to myself, I may say that it is also a pleasure to me that he has made these statements in my presence when I could have an opportunity of making some reply. In that respect, he has not followed the example of two gentlemen from the province which he formerly had the honour to represent, who made an attack on me in my absence, declaring that I had interfered in a provincial election—and then, forthwith, themselves hurried off to take part in that election on the other side. As to anything I have said in New Brunswick, I should not be afraid or ashamed for all the members of this House to see every word that I have uttered. I have held out no promise to the people of New Brunswick as an inducement to them to vote in favour of the provincial government. It was not necessary that I should do so. It was enough for me to point to the record of the Liberal party so far as Canada and the maritime provinces are concerned. I may say that the political course of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) who formerly represented my native county in New Brunswick and now represents North Toronto, gave me a very good text, and has always given me a very good text, on which to speak to the electors of that province. For many years, down until my hon. friend ceased to be a member of the government from New Brunswick and until the Conservative government went out of power, my hon. friend allowed a course to be pursued by that government that was greatly disapproved of by the people of New Brunswick and the maritime provinces generally. He never seemed to be imbued with what we down below are pleased to call the Canadian idea of developing Canada, of carrying Canadian trade through Canadian ports, but my hon. friend and his government permitted, year after year, the Atlantic mail steamers, to seek their terminus, subsidized though they were by Canadian money, at a foreign port and thus helped to build up a foreign city at the expense of the people of Canada. I was able to contrast the policy of the present government with the policy of their predecessors, and what I did was to show to the people that the policy of the present government was to do everything which was reasonably possible to build up Canadian ports and, in carrying out that policy, I was able to tell the people that I thought the city of St. John, the great commercial metropolis of New Brunswick which I have the honour to represent in this parliament, would be immensely benefited and that the result would be to greatly increase its prosperity and greatly add to its population. Well now, there is nothing wrong in that, it seems to me. It seems to me that it is entirely proper and right for a public man, when he goes before the people, if the party to which he belongs has anything to be proud of, to call the attention of the people to its record and to ask them, by their votes, to show their approval of that record.

But, what was particularly complained of was that I pointed out to the people that borings were to be made in Courtenay bay. My hon. friend rather gave this House to understand that I intimated that the work would be done by the department over which I have the honour to preside. So far from that being the case I distinctly stated to the people of St. John that my department would not and could not undertake this expenditure. I told them further that if they had faith in the city of St. John being one of the termini of the Grand Trunk Pacific they should be prepared to undertake that expense themselves, and it happened fortunately that the premier of the province of New Brunswick was in the city of St. John at the same time and he expressed his willingness to co-operate with the city of St. John for the purpose of carrying on this exploratory work of ascertaining where proper terminal facilities for the Grand Trunk Pacific could be provided at that city. Surely it is not holding out a delusive hope to the people when attention is called to the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific is now entirely under construction from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that it is going to open up a vast area of fertile country and that before many years there will be traffic carried over that road which will seek its Atlantic outlet in summer at Montreal and Quebec and possibly at other St. Lawrence ports, and that that vast traffic will seek a port in the winter season at St. John, Halifax and other maritime province ports. Surely I was not doing wrong in pointing out these facts to the people, and I felt it was my duty to do so. I am proud of the record which this government has made in that respect and in all other respects. To show that I did not express these views simply because there is an election on in New Brunswick, I may say, and I am proud to say it, that not long ago I paid a visit to the shores of the Georgian bay and I found the same Canadian feeling which can be witnessed down in the province of New Brunswick; I found there a desire to build up the ports through which the trade of our great Canadian west can be diverted from American ports and brought over by Canadian ships and railways to the ports of the Atlantic. That is a good policy, that is a taking policy, it is a Canadian policy and it is the policy which should be impressed upon the minds of our people so that every Canadian from the Atlantic to the Pacific, may realize that he is a citizen of a great and growing country and that as the years go by and the trade of the west develops so will all parts of Canada, particularly the eastern section, share in the advantages of that great development. That is all I have done. I have called attention to this splendid Canadian policy. I have called attention to the splendid results which are likely to flow from it and I have recognized that the contest which is going on in New Brunswick is a contest which, through the action largely of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and hon. gentleman who are associated with him in this House as followers and supporters, has become a party contest. For many years provincial politics were conducted upon non-party lines, but my hon. friend, who was then leader of the Conservative party in New Brunswick, called the party together and insisted that it would be in the public interest and in the interest of the Conservative party that provincial politics should be run on party lines. Although we had then supporting us many prominent Conservatives, men like Col. Chipman, of St. Stephen, and George J. Clarke, two of the most prominent Conservatives of the province and members of the provincial legislature.

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Fowler as well.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not speak of Mr. Fowler at the present time. I prefer to confine my remarks to the gentlemen I have named because they were very prominent members of the party and were always fair and consistent supporters of the provincial government. At the call of the hon. member for North Toronto, urged as they were to take ground in the interest of the Conservative party, they separated themselves from the provincial government —they reluctantly—I use the word advisedly—separated themselves from the provincial government, withdrew their allegiance from that government in which they had every confidence and which they believed was administering the affairs of the province in the most prudent, the most economical and, at the same time, the most progressive manner. Therefore, this contest is, to a large extent, a federal contest. So, I say to members of the opposition and to members of the Conservative party:

Was it improper that I should go down to my own native province as I did, was it improper that I should ask my Liberal friends to rally to the support of the party which represented the provincial government? I thought it was proper that I should do so and in doing so I have made no promises. I never said to the people that if they did not support the provincial government certain things would not be done or that certain things would be done. I have done what I was entitled to, I have pointed out what the policy of this government has done for the people of the maritime provinces and upon that policy I have asked for the support and confidence of the people.

Mr. G. W. GANONG (Charlotte). Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) is a gentleman of coincidences. We have known him as that for a great many years, and it certainly is an odd coincidence that he and the premier of New Brunswick .should have been at that particular place at the same time. It is certainly very odd that he should have talked so much about federal works. The hon. gentleman has forgotten his little talk about the dredging needed in the Miramichi. Perhaps he has also forgotten about double tracking the Intercolonial Railway from Moncton to Halifax. There are quite a number of things which it is very convenient for this hon. gentleman to forget. I do not profess to follow him in his meanderings, but there are one or two things to which I would like to refer. We know how easy it is for the Minister of Public Works to make promises in New Brunswick in connection with provincial election. We know what promises have been made.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What are the promises may I ask?

Mr. GANONG. Dredging on the Miramichi. The hon. gentleman may not have given his sign manual to it, but he knows that he spoke of the desirability of doing that work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend allow me?

Mr. GANONG. You might as well take your medicine; it is good for you.

Mr. PUGSLEY. So far as the dredging for the Miramichi is concerned, when I became minister I found that my predecessor, as long as two years ago, had determined to have that work done.

Mr. GANONG. That was done to get a few votes. But in the county of Charlotte, in which I am more particularly interested, I wish to know whether the First Minister has delegated through the Minister of Public works to Senator Gillmor the right to promise public works. I was there on Friday last and they have summed up $100,000 worth of public works already promised in that constituency.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose you would say that we brought on the great storm that destroyed the works.

Mr. GANONG. Senator Gillmor was so well known that when he was in this House, as some hon. members will remember, he was always known as 'Dan.' He is really a resident of Montreal, but he is senator for the county of Charlotte. If this hon. gentleman has no authority the people of Charlotte county want to know it, and would like to know it from the First Minister. If the First Minister thinks he can pose as the pattern of all that is good under heaven and not take responsibility for these things the electors of this country want to know. There are many instances that can be brought home to the First Minister but I will leave that to a later time.

I wish to refer particularly to the matter in connection with which I visited the county. I was solicited some time since, by the Ministerial Association of the River St. Croix, among other prominent gentlemen in that vicinity, to know if there would be a disposition to sign an agreement by which an election should be conducted according to the electoral laws of the province of New Brunswick, which were of course enacted principally by my hon. friends opposite, the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) and the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). A meeting was held a week ago Friday, that is on the evening of February 14. A large number of Liberals and many Conservatives were present and for a meeting of two parties with diverse political opinions, I do not think there was even a more harmonious meeting. An agreement was reached and I wish to read the resolutions passed for the information of the House. The resolution are as follows :

Whereas the Ministerial Association of the St. Croix valley has submitted to the two parties interested in the present political campaign that the coming election be conducted without resort to improper or illegal methods for procuring votes, be it therefore resolved:

First—We agree that in no instance shall money, liquor or any other consideration, directly or indirectly, be used by any of the candidates or any agent of the candidates, or any person representing the candidates or on their behalf for the purpose of procuring or preventing the attendance of an elector at the poll, or of influencing his vote; or for any purpose in connection with the election, beyond the payment of bills for necessary printing and hall rent and other legitimate expenses under the Controverted Elections Act.

Further resolved—That each committee will deposit in the St. Stephen's Bank a fund of one thousand dollars to be used for the prosecution of any and all offenders against this resolution or the election law; such fund to be under the control for this purpose of a committee of five to consist of two members to be appointed by the opposition committee, two members to be appointed by the government committee, and the president of the Ministerial Association of the St. Croix valley, subject to the check of a majority of the committee.

Further resolved—That all promises, if any, of reward, office or remuneration as a bribe to the electorate in this campaign, heretofore made, shall be cancelled and that no further promises or assurances of a similar kind be hereafter made.

Further resolved—That these resolutions be subscribed to by the representatives of the county of Charlotte in the Senate and in the House of Commons of Canada, and by each and all of the candidates now in nomination, and by twenty prominent representatives of each party, to be selected by the committee representing the opposite party.

Further resolved—That each party to this agreement will not send any but authorized agents of the candidates to the different polling stations for work on election day.

Further resolved—That each member of this committee and each one subscribing to these resolutions shall do all in his power to carry the terms of these resolutions into effect; shall report any violations of these resolutions to the members, or one of them, of the committee for the enforcement of the same, and shall do everything in his power for the prosecution and conviction of any offender.

Further resolved—That the signatures of the members for Charlotte county in the Senate and in the House of Commons and all the candidates in this election be obtained to these resolutions within seven days from the present date, and that the deposit of $2,000 be made and the signatures of the members of the twenty from each party be obtained within seven days from the present date; otherwise these resolutions shall be inoperative.

Dated at St. Stephen, New Brunswick, the fourteenth day of February, 1908.

That seven days elapsed last Friday night and I note by to-day's 'Gazette' that our Liberal friends, at least those representing the New Brunswick government, had all signed this, but Senator Gillmor had not. Several excuses were made, one being that the deposit was too large. They are very short of funds down there just now, and I presume will be until the minister visits that province again. They wished to have it reduced to $500; the opposition agreed to that but then there are excuses for evading that. What did my hon. friend say?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was merely a remark to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. Just an aside.

Mr. GANONG. My friend has all he wants in connection with his money friends in Montreal. Let him be as bold in the House as he is outside. Then his friend the ex-minister will have something to say about the $25,000 his friends sent from Montreal to beat him. There is lots of it, you can get all you want. I know something in the county of Charlotte that you will get——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very glad——

Mr. GANONG. The purchase price you made in order to get a candidate at the last election.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very glad if you will make a motion at any time on the subject.

Mr. GANONG. You can have all you want of it. This whole matter depended on the signing of this agreement by Senator Gillmor, the representative of the government in that county, the representative of the First Minister, as far as that is concerned, and the First Minister cannot shirk the fact, he must either repudiate here the promises made by Senator Gillmor, or stand under the opprobrium of having made this arrangement or permitted it to be made in order to influence the electorate in that county. The difficulty has been perhaps that Mr. Gillmor would have too much trouble between now and election time in cancelling all the promises he has made. He has been down there now three weeks working and he could not in one week cancel all the promises he has made in that time. One of the terms of this agreement was that he should take back all the promises made, and I imagine he would not have time, to get over all the county and do that in the interval before the election.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that one of the reasons that he would not sign the agreement?

Mr GANONG. Probably it is. At any rate the evidence is that the hon. gentleman has refused to sign that paper. The evidence is also without any question that the hon. gentleman has claimed to be acting under the authority of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr Graham) adopted a somewhat injured and pathetic tone with regard to the introduction of this matter to the House by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). It seems to me that the minister hardly appreciated the situation. He spoke of his answers as being especially fair. I think his answers, if he will permit me, were perhaps a little indirect on all occasions when this matter has been brought to the attention of the House, and there was even a tone of flippancy in them, on one occasion at least. That at any rate is the impression I received, and I trust that in making that statement I shall not be considered as being at all offensive. The hon. gentleman's manner, the spirit of levity with which he seemed to regard the whole question, indicated that he was not aware that a resolution had been adopted by this House, moved as an amendment to a motion to go into Supply, and accepted by the Prime Minister. That resolution declares :

That whilst it is desirable that every official in the employ of the government of Canada should enjoy perfect freedom of political opinion and the untrammelled exercise of his franchise in accordance therewith, no official should be engaged or permitted to engage in partisan work of any description in the election of a representative in the provincial or Dominion legislature.

A telegram was read in this House by a member of this House, upon his responsibility as such, stating that a man of credibility had informed him that two civil servants on more than one occasion had engaged in partisan work in the elections now pending in New Brunswick, and the Minister of Railways promised inquiry. He eventually, not of his own motion, but when the matter was mentioned again, declared that one of these men had returned to his work and that the other had been in Moncton. If the resolution of this House means anything one would suppose that the minister would have been prepared to state to the House, yes or no, as to whether these men had been engaged in partisan work, and that he would further have been prepared to state whether or not the government intended that the unanimous resolution of this House should be treated as a dead letter.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend has forgotten, or else I have forgotten what occurred. The first telegram said that one of the Leblancs made the statement that he was going to open up a committee room. That was the charge made against him, so far as I remember.

Mr. FOSTER. And that he was also engaged in political work.

Mr. GRAHAM. I wired to ascertain and gave the answer I got, that he was home over Sunday and had returned to his work in the province of Quebec ; he being a traveller, I could not do more than that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I appreciate all that, but that does not meet the question at issue. The question was not whether that gentleman was at home on Sunday or at church on Sunday ; the question of moment to this House was whether that gentleman did what he was charged with having done, and that was the question the minister should have answered. Although the government of this country has been apprised of this alleged interference of these employees, it has up to the present time given no satisfactory information, and it has been left to a private individual under oath to show that these men have been interfering in the provincial elections as charged. The question now remains: Does the government propose that its officials shall treat the unanimous resolution of this House with contempt, and is it to be enough when these employees are charged with violating that resolution, that the House should be informed that one of them is at home over Sunday and that the other is expected shortly to return to his work in the province of Quebec.

Mr. GRAHAM. I never made that statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What statement did the hon. gentleman make ?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is pretending to quote my statement and he should do so as correctly as possible.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am trying to.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What did the hon. gentleman say ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not say that one of them was at home on Sunday and the other was going to return to work ; I did not make any statement about the other man.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What did the hon. gentleman say about the other man ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, if the hon. gentleman is making my statement he should make it correctly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my hon. friend does not make his own statement I will have to make it for him.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have made it once already.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend does not see fit to correct me and therefore I shall have to leave the matter as it is.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am willing to have it left as it is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman is willing to have it left as it was, why did he interrupt ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Not as it was, but as it is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I see ; he does not see fit to correct the statement and he is willing to leave it exactly as I made it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is of serious moment that officials should disregard the unanimous resolution of this House in respect to an important subject. These men can be engaged for a week or ten days in an election campaign before any member of this House has become aware of it, and the Minister of Railways or some other minister can take four or five days or a week to procure information more or less satisfactory with regard to what these employees are doing, and then the only satisfaction the House and the country may receive is that one or other of these men has returned to his duty, without the slightest information as to whether he has engaged in political work and without the slightest information as to the course the government intends to pursue in respect to men who have deliberately engaged in partisan work contrary to the unanimous resolution of this House accepted by the government of the day. Upon that the Minister of Railways has given the House absolutely no information.

Now, with regard to the Minister of Public Works; he has been as smooth in this House with regard to the matter as no doubt he has been in the province of New Brunswick. He tells us he has made no promises. But the Minister of Public Works knows perfecly well that he can make what are in effect promises without using very explicit language; he can raise expectations in the minds of any community by doing just exactly what he did in Miramichi. He says that these issues are federal issues in the province of New Brunswick. Who made them federal issues. The Minister of Public Works sought to make them federal issues and he sought to make them federal issues by going into the province of New Brunswick and allying himself with the provincial government and seeking to influence the people with the consideration or the expectation that if the provincial government were sustained these federal works would be carried out and his hands would be strengthened. When I say he used the words 'his hands would be strengthened' I think I quote his exact expression. The Minister of Public Works need not suppose that anybody in this House or this country will be deceived by the explanation he has made to-day. It is too transparent altogether. He goes to Miramichi, he wants his hands strengthened, he points to needed dredging in the Miramichi river; he goes to the city of St. John and to the city of Moncton and elsewhere, he alludes to the necessity of double tracking the Intercolonial from St. John to Halifax, and he desires that his hands should be strengthened in all these matters. And his hands can only be effectually strengthened, as he declares, by the return of the provincial government and he points out the great advantages the city of St. John will receive if his hands are also strengthened by the return of five or six members from that city to support the provincial government. And then he desires the House and the country to understand that he is not making use of federal patronage and federal aid for the purpose of influencing the elections in that province. I can tell the Minister of Public Works, with all respect, that no argument of that kind will be accepted by the House or by the country. Furthermore, we have not yet had a distinct statement from either the Minister of Public Works or the Prime Minister, as to whether the Minister of Public Works has been authorized by the cabinet to go into the province of New Brunswick at this particular juncture, to explain the necessity of these public works and to promise in effect that they will be carried out—provided of course that his hands are strengthened by the return of a sufficient number of Liberals to keep the provincial government in power.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know my hon. friend does not wish to misquote me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can assure my hon. friend that I have made no such statement as that these important works will be carried out. All I have attempted to say was in reference to certain matters in my own department. And in regard to Charlotte, I might say that not long ago, within the last two or three weeks, there was a violent storm which did enormous damage there, and I sent my engineers, as I thought it my duty to do, for the purpose of seeing what the damage was and with a view of taking the necessary steps to repair as speedily as possible the great injury which had been done, and which if not repaired would be disastrous to the fishermen and the people of that locality.

Mr. GANONG. Would my hon. friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GANONG. I wish to remind the Minister of Public Works that the principal promise was made before the storm.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not so.

Mr. LENNOX. That is what brought on the storm.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That seems to have been a coincidence that went astray. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is capable of putting this in the most engaging and plausible manner. Let him not for one moment seek to minimize my appreciation of his ability in that regard. I thoroughly realize it; but even in the engaging way in which he has presented it to the House just now, what does it amount to? It amounts to this, that federal works will still go on in the province of New Brunswick, but that it is exceedingly desirable that the hands of the minister shall be strengthened and upheld, like those of Moses of old, by the return to power of the present provincial administration. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works knows exactly what that means; he knows exactly what he intended, and the Prime Minister knows exactly what he intended; and it is important that the people of this country should know and understand whether these promises—I call them promises, notwithstanding the statement of the Minister of Public Works—in respect of federal aid and federal interference in provincial elections, have been made with the assent of the Prime Minister, and also whether or not the promises made by a senator of this country in the county of Charlotte have been made with the assent of the cabinet, the Prime Minister or the Minister of Public Works. I understand from my hon. friend from Charlotte that it has been distinctly stated by Senator Gillmor that the promises he has been making in that county, involving a large expenditure of public money, have been made with the assent and sanction of the Minister of Public Works. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, in the course of his remarks, although he dealt with a great many subjects which were not very relevant to the matter under discussion, forgot to mention the statement made by the hon. member for Charlotte.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He spoke after I did.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Although the minister interrupted my hon. friend from Charlotte on other points, he did not interrupt him on that point or give the House any information upon it. Under these circumstances, I think the matter has been well brought to the attention of the House, and we will listen with some interest to a statement from the Prime Minister as to what the policy of the government is in respect to this matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I certainly have no complaint to make of this matter having been brought to the attention of the House, though I am sorry that many things have been imported into the discussion which are absolutely foreign to it. With regard to the blame which my hon. friend from North Toronto has sought to cast on the government in the matter, I have no objection to meet him fairly and squarely. The subject is not a new one by any means ; on the contrary, ever since I have been in parliament, whenever there has been a provincial election, I have always heard complaints made that the government in office, whether it has been Conservative or Liberal, has been taking part in the election and allowing its employees to do so. Let us first deal with the original question, that is the part which is to be taken by employees of this government in the provincial election in New Brunswick. My hon. friend from North Toronto, I am sorry to say, used strong language in speaking on this question ; and when he used such expressions as 'moments of weakness,' he perhaps forgot his own record. I think we might discuss a question of this kind without attempting to throw mud at either one party or the other. I agree with him, and I believe all the members of this House agree with him, that employees of this government or of any other government should not be allowed to take an offensive part in the elections so far as Dominion elections are concerned. As has been truly stated by the hon. leader of the opposition and by the hon. member for North Toronto, the employees of this government receive the money of all the people of Canada, and therefore, as has been affirmed by a resolution of this House, they should not be allowed to take an offensive part in Dominion elections. I know, from my own experience, that when they do so there is always created in the community a scandal, and worse than a scandal, a feeling of resentment against those officials. The feeling is that they are not in their proper place, that they should be attending to their official duties, and that the utmost that they should be allowed to do—and in this we are all agreed—is to cast their votes. The present is not a Dominion election, however, but a provincial election. So far as I am concerned, and so far as the Minister of Railways is concerned, our opinion is that the same principle should prevail in provincial elections as in Dominion elections. I am surprised that the hon. leader of the opposition should attempt to cast any reflection upon the Minister of Railways in this matter, because he stated, not only on one occasion, but on two occasions—and, I am sorry to say, I believe in the hearing of the hon. leader of the opposition—that he had given strict orders that all the employees of the railway were to take no part whatever in the election. What more can be done than this? The hon. member for North Toronto a few days ago brought to the attention of the House the statement that certain officials had taken part in the New Brunswick provincial election. The first step my hon. friend the Minister of Railways took was to seek information as to whether or not the statement in regard to these two employees was true. He stated that he had sent instructions to the manager of the railway, Mr. Pottinger, that these employees and all other employees on the Intercolonial Railway were to be told that they were not to take any part whatever in the provincial election. If, in the face of this injunction, these employees or any others interfere in the election against the orders given, they must do so at their peril. This makes the point as clear as it is possible to make it ; but hon. gentlemen opposite go very far in their contention as to the responsibility of the government in this matter. I have been told by my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) and also by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that in my capacity as First Minister I am responsible for the actions of Senator Gillmor.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not say that. I said that we would like to know whether or not the promises he was making were made with the authority or sanction of the government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose my hon. friend will say that I was responsible for them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If made with your sanction, certainly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend from Charlotte did not mince matters. He put it very distinctly, that I shared the opprobrium of Senator Gillmor's actions.

Mr. GANONG. If authorized by you, certainly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, I have only to say that Mr. Gillmor is an old friend of mine; I know him to be an honourable man; I have nothing to say against him. If he has been the author of good actions, I do not claim the credit; and if he has been guilty of bad actions, I do not accept the blame. As a senator he is perfectly independent of the government, and if he has made any promises in the county of Charlotte, I cannot accept the blame nor claim the credit.

Mr. GANONG. Not unless you have given him the authority to make them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have simply to say that so far as I am concerned, I have not for six or eight months spoken to Senator Gillmor nor communicated with him, directly or indirectly, in writing or verbally. I give this pledge to my hon. friend and hope he will accept it as I give it to him, I have no connection with Senator Gillmor and did not even know he was engaged in the elections. But that is as far as I would like to go in this matter. With regard to the conduct of members of parliament or members of this government, I believe that the rule which should apply to officials does not apply to them. I think that they are free to take part in elections either Dominion or provincial. That has been the rule since confederation, and no doubt will be to the end of time. Shall we be told that a member of parliament is not as free as any other citizen of Canada to take part in an election, whether Dominion, provincial, or municipal or any kind? Is he to be debarred, because he is a member of parliament, from expressing his views and exercising his rights the same as any other citizen? As far as the making of promises is concerned, I have the word of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), which I accept, that he made no promise whatever, but spoke as a citizen, as a child of New Brunswick. If so, he did not trespass beyond the rules of the House or beyond the reasonable influence which he could exercise as a member of this House and a native of that province.

Mr. GRAHAM. Let me give my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) before he replies the date he read that telegram. The date was February 17th, instead of the 13th, so that there was not very much time lost.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) rather intimates that I was unfair to him. I did not intend to be unfair and I do not think that when he reads my statement in 'Hansard,' he will find I was. However that makes it necessary to traverse the ground a little. On the 17th February I read the following:

Alphonse E. Leblanc, travelling passenger agent Intercolonial Railway, is out canvassing here for local government candidates.

I may set the minister right in that respect. He had the idea that all that was complained of in the telegram was that Leblanc was going to open a committee room at Dupey's Corner, but the telegram is explicit. It says further that:

He is out canvassing here for local government candidates, and has announced that he intends to open a committee room at Dupey's Corner and hold it open day and night until after election. Henry Leblanc is an employee of the Intercolonial Railway in audit department and general offices in Moncton, is also going out through Shediac and Dorchester parishes, from school house to school house, decrying and denouncing the opposition candidate.

That was on the 17th and I asked the minister if he had any information. The minister replied as follows:

I have made some inquiries and have not been able to ascertain if the two gentlemen named have taken part in the election. I cannot give the definite answer my hon. friend would like in that respect, but will not let the matter drop and will make further inquiries.

So far so good. Nothing happened after that until the 21st, four days after the telegram was read. On that date I asked the minister if he had any further information. I would like the First Minister to listen to the answer, because I do not think that the Minister of Railways went as far as my right hon. friend thinks he did. Here is what the Minister of Railways said:

I may say that I have some news, if not information. I wired, as I promised, to the general manager of the railway, and I was informed by him that one of the Leblancs, the travelling agent, who lives in New Brunswick, had been in that province over Sunday and had returned to his work in Quebec.

That is exactly what the leader of the opposition stated as his recollection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He made another statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, the Minister of Railways proceeded as follows:

I received another telegram from the general manager, saying that the other gentleman, Leblanc by name, was absent from duty, but he did not know where he was or if he was working in an election. I wired to the general manager to inform the Intercolonial Railway employees, including Mr. Leblanc, that while they were all at perfect liberty to use their franchise as citizens with the utmost freedom in whatever way they wished, we did not want the employees of that railway to take active part in election contests, either Dominion or provincial. I have not heard from him since.

That was the suaviter in modo of the hon. gentleman. My right hon. friend said the minister did all he could, inasmuch as he immediately sent a telegram instructing the manager of the Intercolonial Railway to inform Leblanc and all the other employees that they were not to take part, in any shape whatever, in provincial elections.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, there is a difference in the phraseology and a most decided difference indeed. I think that these gentle words that the Minister of Railways did not want the government employees to take part in any election contest were calculated to encourage the party implicated to go on. Of course the minister does not want any employee to take active part in elections but he does not forbid it. There is no telegram calling Leblanc back to his work or instructing him to take positively no part in provincial elections. That would have been justified and I think would have been effective. But take the answer as given coupling with it the minister's statement today that an affidavit does not settle the question as there may be counter affidavits, I cannot help coming to the conclusion that nothing definite will be done until a chance is given for counter affidavits.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will see that, he has not given us any information that any of these men have done any active political work since the last telegram was sent. As regards the affidavits, I was pointing out that the affidavit habit is not a good one.

Mr. FOSTER. What I was going on to say is that the minister holds out encouragement for a counter affidavit and that the Leblancs will likely, when that comes to their ears, say we have some days of grace yet and we will do all we can in the electoral contest. Does the minister doubt it ? The telegram of the 17th went into the newspapers of the 18th at New Brunswick, where both these men had the opportunity of reading it ? And on the 20th we find them both addressing public meetings. Does the minister not know where ? Any man with his wits about him could very easily tell where. It would have been easy for the hon. gentleman to find out where Henry Leblanc was if he wanted to. What I complain of is that the minister did not use his mandatory power and say to Mr. Pottinger that if these men were engaged in electioneering anywhere, he should call them off at once and they should comply at the peril of losing office. That would have done the business, but this sort of thing will not. When these gentlemen read in the newspapers that the minister hints at counter affidavits, I am afraid they will be willing to attend another little rally and keep the faithful in tune.

Mr. EMMERSON. You must have a pretty bad case when you make use of that argument.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the telegram was effective.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, I wish to say a word as to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). He is comparatively a stranger to most of the members of this House. However, the members of the House are old enough to sit up and take notice, and I think they are doing it. They will find that in certain things the Minister of Public Works is an adept. How delightfully shrewd it was of him to lay a foundation for the work of all these Liberals in the provincial election by saying that for ten years past several Conservatives, who are still being paid by the government, have engaged in partisan election work. But he took very good care not to mention the names of any such Conservative employee. Had he done so, evidence might be called in to rebut his assertion. Had he thought it possible to offset the charge that is made from this side by showing that Liberal-Conservatives had been working in an election, he would have been glad indeed to give the facts that would have maintained his statement.

Mr. SINCLAIR. With the permission of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) I would ask if he is not aware that hundreds of Conservatives were dismissed after 1896 for taking part in the election?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) is far behind the times. Is he not aware that a fortnight ago I made the same statement that he himself now makes, and the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) faced me down in this House, declaring that there had been no such number as a hundred or two hundred officials dismissed? I said that there had been hundreds of such dismissals and that I could prove it by returns brought down by this government. My hon. friend from Nova Scotia (Mr. Sinclair) had better ply his Prime Minister with these questions.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Why is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) asking for names of those taking part in elections if the records give hundreds of names of those dismissed for that very action?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think I understand the point.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understood my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) to criticise the Minister of Public Works for making the statement that Conservatives had taken part in elections, but had not the courage to give names. Now, the hon. gentleman admits that he knows of hundreds dismissed. Then, why does he ask for names?

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) has not been very attentive to his duty. The Minister of Public Works, if he had an argument at all, had this argument—that Conservatives had been at work in elections and that nobody had interfered with them. Does the Minister of Public Works really think that such a statement as he makes, even if he had given all the facts, could justify this Liberal government in allowing its partisans to go through the constituencies working in the elections? Surely he does not so far forget the old days of logical training in the University of New Brunswick, from which he has profited so well, as to stand upon an argument of that kind. But it was the strangest of coincidencies that the Minister of Public Works—with a large amount of business in this House to be attended to—with pestering calls for returns, keeping him busily engaged in hunting up people who were not so busily engaged, but that they could help him to get out these returns, with his estimates on in the House, with public Bills awaiting his attention, with the Grand Trunk Pacific hotel hung in midair because he is not here to push through his legislation—I say it is a wonderful coincidence that, with all these duties demanding his attention here, he found himself in the province of New Brunswick, that he casually met Premier Robinson of that province, and passed the time of day with him, and that it happened that they stood on the same platform together and that he spoke for Premier Robinson.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not remember saying that.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sure the hon. gentleman carefully laid out his plans. He does not act on impulse. Many days before he went down, they knew he was coming—they were all longing for his coming. They were assembled when he did come, and they all hailed him as one who had come back from the land of promise, bearing the grapes of Eschol on which they were hungering to feed, and the bringing of which, they hoped, assured them of four fat years in the promised land of office. Was it a coincidence? Or was it a well-laid plan calculated day by day for St. John, Chatham, Campbellton and all the others? Surely no one will be taken in by such sophistry as that of the hon. gentleman. He picks a quarrel with the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket), the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) and the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) because, forsooth, these cowardly members of parliament attacked him in his absence. Well, of all men, I should think my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) would not vaunt himself as so terrible that any man on this side would fear to criticise him in his presence. For he himself did not show the mettle of knightly courage and great daring when he was called to account again and again by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) for the brave sayings he had uttered on the platform when he was eight hundred miles away from the opponent whom he attacked. Why, he was not only eight hundured miles away, but he was in the Northwest at the time—three thousand miles away. My hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works—was he Minister of Public Works then or was he Minister of Railways and Canals in prospect?—when he had three thousand miles of distance between himself and the man whom he attacked, was very brave in his utterances, but when the distance was reduced to a rod and a half or something less, he sat under a castigation and under a presentation of facts such as have seldom been the lot of any minister and said never a word.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) allow me to ask him a question as an old parliamentarian? If I have made, outside of this House, any statements reflecting upon a member of parliament, the truth of which statement is denied, is it not the proper course for that hon. gentleman to produce in this House the paper reporting my utterances and to move for a committee to investigate my conduct? I will say that if that is done I am prepared to substantiate everything I have said in any place.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend felt that he would like to have a lawsuit, when he was three thousand miles distant from the hon. gentleman whom he attacked. He declared then: If the person whom I attack will bring a lawsuit, he will find whether I am stating the truth or not. But it does seem to me that if I were to attack the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on the public platform for a certain course, if I were to run him down the banks and talk of his 'unlimited corruption' and everything of that kind—being brave enough and strong enough to do this before the people of this country—when I met the right hon. gentleman in this House and was challenged to make good my words in his presence, I would make good my words or I would die in the attempt. My hon. friend has been cavorting round in a sphere of politics not quite so wide as this, where the light is not so intense, where methods of attack are tolerated that do not carry in a parliamentary assembly like this. Let me tell my hon. friend of many years—and my friend of to-day, I hope—that he never made a more serious mistake tactically or otherwise, than when he sat dumb in his seat before the challenge to make good before the people of this country a charge against the leader of the opposition in this parliament which was absolutely baseless. And yet, like the hon. member for East Assiniboia, he has an idea that when he gets up everybody cowers and runs away, gets under a barn, leaving nothing but the feet sticking out. He must not run away with that idea. If the minister runs away from his public duties to take an unwarranted part in a provincial election, he cannot complain if the business of the country is not brought to a standstill to wait until it pleases him to come back. It was an opportune time for making these statements and they were made, and it was the fault of my hon. friend, and he has no reason to find fault with any one else, if he was not here to meet those statements. He says he was in New Brunswick. What for? We heard his own statement, he was down there canvassing Dominion issues. Does he deny it? He stated that here this afternoon. He cannot deny it, because we have here the newspaper reports. I thought this was a provincial election in New Brunswick. Are they running a provincial election in New Brunswick on federal issues ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Have you forgotten the Moncton convention ?

Mr. FOSTER. No, I have not. I owe my friend a debt of gratitude for reminding me of it, I shall refer to it later. The electors of New Brunswick are fighting out the Highways Act and some very extravagant expenditures by the provincial government, some of them made when my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) was a member of that government; and yet he stands here to-day and admits over and over again that he was there discussing federal issues, the dredging of the Miramichi, the Liberal and Conservative trade policies for the Dominion of Canada—he has not mentioned a single question that was not a federal issue.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has not mentioned in this House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, I beg pardon.

Mr. FOSTER. Why was he bringing in federal issues ? Simply as he knows and as every one who heard him knows, in order that he might make these federal issues tell towards the election of a provincial government in New Brunswick. My hon. friend has lost a bit of his memory; perhaps several parts of his memory have suffered some slight damage. But my hon. friend brought to the attention of the people of St. John not one local issue, beyond the fact, as he calls it, that when I was a member of the Conservative government we permitted the Allan mail steamers to call at a foreign port and that he reprobated that policy, that they should not be allowed to make Portland one of their ports of call. Has he forgotten that before the Conservative government went out of power in 1896, it had arranged and had announced as its policy that on the lapsing of the existing subsidy the next subsidy to the mail steamers from the maritime ports should exclude the city of Portland as a port of call on this side of the water ? My hon. friend has also forgotten that when this government came into power, these gentlemen whom he pledged himself in 1896 in the county of Kings to fight and to foil with all the power at his command in the interest of the great Liberal-Conservative party and its honoured chieftain for whom he could find no words of applause and commendation too strong—this was after he stepped off to the independent step which was but one step to the convenient after-step of stepping to whichever side won in that election without any loss of prestige, he forgot that pledge and became a warm adherent of my right hon. friend who leads that government—and then that same government of my right hon. friend kept the Allan line steamers calling, for two years after their subsidy and contract had run out, at the port of Portland in the state of Maine.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is wrong now.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I am not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was only one season.

Mr. FOSTER. I had the curiosity to look it up and I had it ready for my hon. friend; I have not the exact dates here, but I can give them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. One season.

Mr. FOSTER. But the general statement is right, and I think he will find it is two years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend asked the voters in the city of St. John interested in a local election to approve of what policy ? The policy of the present Liberal government in the Dominion. That is what he asked them ; he said so in the House this afternoon, you will read it in the 'Hansard' to-morrow. What a lovely way that is of keeping issues distinct and not using federal influences in a local election. The hon. gentleman stands before 6,000 electors voting on the Highways Act and on provincial finances and politics and says to them : Behold, the policy of the Liberal party to-day; contrast it with the Liberal-Conservative policy of a few years ago, and voters, local election voters, when you go to the poll vote for the local men because of their federal policy; that policy is superior to the policy of the Conservative party of a few years ago, vote for them in order to strengthen my arms. Oh, that phrase! It has come down from the First Minister to my hon. friend. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) speaking in Ottawa, putting his hand on the shoulder of George W. Ross, said to the people of Ontario: here is my right hand, do not allow my right hand to be shattered. And, in a lesser way, the Minister of Public Works who was at that time not a very strong supporter of my right hon. friend, now says with all the zeal of a newly proselyted convert: Remember I must have my hand strengthened. The old Sunday school teachings came back to him, his mind went back a thousand years into the desert, to the wanderings of the chosen people; and he saw Aaron and Hur and all the imagery of that time, and appealed by all that sacred memory to the people of St. John; Strengthen my hand, uphold my arm. Where are my arms? In Ottawa—borings, dredgings, offices, post-offices—strengthen my arm and I will haul them down here for you; but beware if you defeat Robinson and his supporters, my arm will be so weak that I cannot pull even a third-class post office here for you. What was the object, the aim of my hon. friend? There was only one, there could only be one.

I have not been able just now to read again the speech made by my hon. friend and reported in the St. John 'Sun.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would really do you good to read it through.

Mr. FOSTER. It might do me good. It certainly would refresh my memory in some respects. But, I find here certain things which he has stated. He refers to Mr. Blair, his predecessor. But, does he refer to Mr. Blair in the line of provincial politics? Oh, no. He says:

> The government, while Mr. Blair was a member of it, took the first great steps towards realizing the expectations of the people that St. John would become one of the great winter ports of Canada by cancelling the contract under which the subsidized mail steamers made, in the winter season, the city of Portland, in the State of Maine, their Atlantic terminus.

Will my hon. friend be fair enough to state that the Liberal Conservative government, before this was done, absolutely wrote their conditions to the Allan people advising them that when their present subsidies ran out no further subsidies would be granted for any of their vessels which ran to Portland, that his own friends were the ones that extended the time, and that Mr. Blair, if he did anything at all, simply cancelled the wrong action of his own friends and carried out the policy of the Liberal Conservative party which preceded him?

> He obtained a large government grant——

From the local government? It might have been apropos if he had alleged that the local government, through Mr. Blair, had given a grant to the city of St. John. But no:

> He obtained a large government grant for the improvement of the northern part of the harbour in connection with the Intercolonial Railway.

Why did my hon. friend bring that in? Blair was the representative of the Liberal party in New Brunswick; he got large grants for the city of St. John; I am his successor, strengthen my arms and I will bring you down just as good a grant as Blair brought down!

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend allow me to interrupt him before passing away from this interesting subject of the mail subsidy? To show the treatment which the city of St. John received when he was in power, will he allow me to recall the fact of a delegation coming to Ottawa in 1895, seeing the hon. gentleman and also the Hon. Mr. Ives, who was then Minister of Trade and Commerce, and being informed that the government was about entering upon an agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Allan line of steamers to make Portland, Maine, for the next ten years, their Atlantic terminus?

Mr. FOSTER. No, sir; no such thing as that was ever contemplated by the Liberal Conservative government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can say to my hon. friend that Mr. Ives distinctly so informed the delegation from the city of St. John.

Mr. FOSTER. That is an absolute mistake. How does my hon. friend recognize that attitude as being consonant with what I have stated as the actual policy of the Liberal Conservative party?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The intense agitation which was raised in St. John resulted in the formation of the Independent party whose candidate I became in the following year.

Mr. FOSTER. And in being whose candidate you had such an immense influence that you lost your deposit in St. John.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is true, but I defeated your two candidates.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister wants to show that he had the enormous influence that switched off the Conservative government from that suicidal policy and put it on the right track, but the proof of the pudding is in the eating of it, and when the hon. gentleman ate his pudding as an independent candidate he lost his deposit.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. You had a hard job saving yours in the same election.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Duncan Ross) so often sets dynamite off. Then, having exploited that argument in reference to Mr. Blair he turns to another predecessor:

Mr. Emmerson followed by securing something which was never thought of as being possible when the Conservative party was in power, the dredging of the berth sides on the west side of the harbour. I am now but widening the trail and am moving on to the full performance of the duty which as your representative I feel that I owe you in this respect.

Is it not complete ? Arguing local politics down there, he discusses the Highways Act, introduces the argument that one of his predecessors (Mr. Blair) brought a great boon to the city, that another predecessor, who, by the way, was his immediate predecessor whom he most effectually ousted, brought down berth widening powers in the harbour of St. John and then he followed up with that smooth and most exquisite phrase 'I am but widening out the trail.' This is just the opening of a large vista. Mr. Blair has removed a little of the underbrush, Mr. Emmerson has been allowed to remove a little more, and if you will just strengthen my hands I will make you a pathway which will be like a great road! These are not local issues. Strengthen my hands for the local elections in the province of New Brunswick! Then he goes still further. He declares that the Grand Trunk Pacific will in all probability take over the Central road. Now, will you just look at that for a moment as an argument in local politics ? Here is a government which gives half a kingdom to the Grand Trunk Pacific and to the Grand Trunk together. They can get whatever they like. When they come for help from the lakes to the Pacific help is forced upon them from Moncton to the Pacific. When they come to talk about a railway station in the city of Ottawa a hotel is forced upon them and they are placed in the central part of the city. Anything that these people want they can get —presumably. Watch the peculiar way that it is approached—I am now a member of that same government: I am in the internal ring and I know how things are going on; Mr. Hays tells me that they will take over the Central Railway; it may be a matter of some delay but they are going to take it over. Is that a local issue, or is it a federal issue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Undoubtedly it is a local issue because one of the greatest issues that Mr. Hazen was raising was that the Central Railway would not be part of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. FOSTER. The great issue that Mr. Hazen was raising would be thereafter precluded. The hon. gentleman granted subsidies, issued bonds and spent money without the authority of this country, he subsidized that road until in that road, which is to-day worth almost nothing, as it stands, he has placed very nearly $1,000,000 of the people's money. Now he comes down as a federal minister and says: I have the promise of the Grand Trunk Railway ; Mr. Hays says that he is going to take it off of our hands; just strengthen my arm and the federal government will relieve the province of the burden that is crushing it. So I might go on all the way through. I have done sufficient to show up the hon. gentleman.

Now, I want, just one moment, in passing, with my right hon. friend the leader of the government. He had something to say about this not being a new issue. It is not a new issue. We are perfectly agreed upon that. He rather had a slap at me as to moments of weakness and my pharisaical pretensions and the like of that. That is all badinage and good humour, and I find no fault with the right hon. gentleman upon that account. But now, he says that my opinions and those of the hon. Minister of Public Works are exactly the same, that my opinions are the minister's opinions. In a debate on July 17th, 1905, what did the right hon. gentleman say? He said:

It may be said perhaps that we have no jurisdiction over provincial matters and that the resolution goes too far in including provincial elections as well as Dominion elections. But after reflection I have come to the conclusion that we would accept the motion as it reads. Political parties are not so differentiated between Dominion and provincial politics as to make it advisable that they should be treated in a different manner. We accept the services of all those who are engaged in the civil service of this country on the understanding that they shall give their undivided attention to their business. Of course, they are citizens, they have the right of franchise, they have the right to their opinion; they have the right, as I have said before, of citizens to express their opinions. But for my part I am strongly of the opinion I held when in opposition, that an official who takes an offensive part in election campaigns makes himself and his party a scandal, places himself at once at variance with a large portion of the community who contribute towards the payment of his salary, and minimizes to that extent his usefulness. Therefore he detracts from the service which he is expected to give.

And in another place, he thinks an officer should not act as a government agent or scrutineer, and he says :

I do not think any officer of the government should do anything else but record his vote and exercise the legitimate functions of his citizenship.

Now, these are sentiments we all believe in and I want to ask the Prime Minister : Has he given effect to these sentiments ? Will the right hon. gentleman tell me of one single instance in which a man who has proven over and over again to have interfered in elections, has been punished ? The right hon. gentleman knows the case of Wagner; a man who was twice in jail because of his defrauding the very immigrants whom he was placed in charge of; a man who after that was promoted by one of the ministers, and who after that again took open and scandalous part in the election in Edmonton, distributing whisky and herding whisky and voters together as proved by affidavit after affidavit. And to-day Wagner is in the public service at an increased salary. What punishment did my right hon. friend mete out to Wagner, what punishment did he mete out to Nixon, who was promoted and paid a higher salary ?

Mr. BERGERON. And Jackson.

Mr. FOSTER. What punishment was awarded Jackson?—who is not however a Dominion official—what punishment has gone to Leech. Is there a single instance where a Liberal who has been proved to have interfered in elections has received anything in the way of rebuke or punishment. What is the Prime Minister going to do about it ? To-day he has not expressed himself a bit less strongly than he did two years ago, but I challenge my right hon. friend to allow an investigation into the actions of these civil servants in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I tell him right to his face that they are partisans, that they have accompanied his canvassers and have been his canvassers in local and Dominion elections, that they have gone with his own ministers and interfered in every conceivable way, as can be most abundantly shown if an investigation is granted. But affidavit after affidavit has been produced in this House to show that these officials have been guilty of partisanship and active interference, and the Prime Minister has done nothing except to promote them and give them more pay out of the public treasury.

Motion (Mr. Foster) to adjourn House negatived.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to take advantage of the presence of the Minister of Public Works as he may go down to New Brunswick again at any time, to inquire about a return to an order of the House of December 16 as to dredging at Rivière à la Graisse at Rigaud. These are very short returns and although I have asked several times for them they have not been brought down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The return has just been handed to me by the Prime Minister and I lay it on the table of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. I did well to speak about it ?

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SEED GRAIN.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture has any agent been appointed by the government to see about the purchasing of seed grain in Prince Edward Island ?

Mr. FISHER. The officials of the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture have spread the information relative to this matter in Prince Edward Island, so that the people there may know the conditions generally. I think the people down there understand the situation.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The local people down there ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, the local people.

COLD STORAGE PAPERS.

Mr. FOSTER. I call the attention of the Prime Minister—I do not know how I am to get at it otherwise—that in the cold storage papers there is a letter sent by Mr. Williams to the then Minister of Railways, which incloses a memorandum which Williams asserts is a memorandum form of agreement between himself and Mr. Macoun at the dictation of the Minister of Militia and Defence. It is not private by any means, it was ordered by the return and it has not been brought down. The present member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) stated he had brought down all the correspondence that was public. I think that was altogether public correspondence because it has had to do with the cold storage business. The member for Westmoreland is now outside of our jurisdiction I suppose, and I would like the First Minister to think if there is any way by which I could get that document as ordered by the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understood my hon. friend the Minister of Militia the other day to deny the exisence of any such agreement.

Mr. FOSTER. No, he denied that he had dictated it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At all events, I do not know whether this document is in the department or in the archives or not. We will look into the matter.

HILLSBOROUGH BRIDGE CLAIM.

Mr. BARKER. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to direct attention to an order of the House passed on the 22nd January, for a return relating to a claim of M. J. Haney in connection with the Hillsborough bridge. This has been asked for again and again. I hope we shall soon have the papers.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have called the attention of my department to that once or twice, and the officials assure me that they are getting the return ready with all possible speed. It is a very large one.

Mr. FOSTER. The case will be over before it is ready.

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine that the case is over now, so far as the arbitration is concerned.

Mr. BARKER. The order of the House for the papers has been made, and I would like to have them produced.

Mr. GRAHAM. They are being produced as rapidly as possible. My officials assure me that there is no such communication in the department as the hon. member for North Toronto says there is.

Mr. FOSTER. That raises the question how far it is allowable to a retiring minister to take away public correspondence with him.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is public and what is private is a matter for the minister to decide.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that not a dangerous doctrine ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Let me discuss it with my hon. friend. The minister is in receipt of a certain document. Who is to determine whether it is public or private? I assume that there are documents which are in their nature public, others which are in their nature personal or private, and others which are on the border line between public and private. Who but the minister is to decide ? If the minister decides that a document is private, we have no authority over it. In this case, if the minister thought the document was private how can we get at it ? My hon. friend will agree with me that under such circumstances the government cannot be made responsible.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we have to take the context as a guide. This was an application from Williams for a subsidy under the Cold Storage Act. While he was pressing his application he came up, as he alleges, against the minister, who was also an applicant for the subsidy, and the arrangement, he says, was made at the dictation of the minister, which the minister denies, and put in the shape of a memorandum. That memorandum was dictated, in the presence of other persons, and he sent that by mail to the minister, not marked private at all. So the context should be taken into account ; and in this case it would seem to show that that was a public document.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not like to express an opinion just now.

Mr. GRAHAM.

PRIVATE BILLS.

HAMILTON RADIAL ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 25) respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company.—Mr Clarke.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know that the discussion of the clauses of this Bill ought to go on at present. There is a preliminary matter to be decided first. The other day the leader of the opposition said to the Minister of Railways, 'All I wish to ask is that we may be informed a few days in advance.' The Minister of Railways answered, 'Surely.' The matter stood over upon that understanding. On Friday night the minister mentioned that probably this Bill would be proceeded with to-day, but some hon. gentlemen have mentioned to me that they are not ready to proceed to-day, as they have not received the notice they anticipated would be given. But the preliminary question to be decided is whether this Bill should not be referred back to the Commitee on Railways and Canals, and that question might as well be disposed of now. I brought this matter up a week ago to-day, when the Bill was in committee of the whole. At that time the Minister of Railways had made a motion that the committee rise and report progress, and he said that I would have to make my motion when the Speaker was in the chair. When the committee rose and reported progress and the Speaker took the chair, I moved my motion.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I understand that the ruling was that this motion was not one that could be discussed in the committee.

Mr. LENNOX. I am quite aware that the motion cannot be disposed of in the committee, but what I propose to do—and I am acting in accordance with what the Speaker has told me—is to move as I did the other day :

That Bill (No. 25) be not now proceeded with, but that it be reported back to the House in order that it and the report of the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines thereon, be referred back to the said committee, with instructions to the committee to amend their said report by stating the alterations made in the committee in the preamble of the said Bill, and the reasons for said alterations, as required by rule 106 of this House.

I need not take up a great deal of time at this stage of the proceedings, nor am I disposed to do so in any case, for the responsibility for the conduct of the business of the House rests with the government, and particularly with the right hon. gentleman who leads the House. So I am pleased to have the opportunity to bring the matter up when he is present in order that he may take the responsibility of it and send it back to the Committee on Railways and Canals for an amended report. The rule provides that the alterations must be material alterations. If they are merely verbal or clerical alterations I apprehend that rule 106 does not apply ; but in the case of a material alteration, reasons for the same are to be stated in the report and such were the alterations made in this Bill. As originally brought in, the preamble, after the ordinary recital as to incorporation by the provincial legislature, said :

And whereas the said company has been advised that under and by virtue of the provisions of sections 306 and 307 of the Railway Act of 1888 and sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, its railway, on crossing the line of the Grand Trunk Railway at Burlington in the year 1897, became and has since been subject to the exclusive legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

Down to that point the alteration which was made was this. Instead of the words in the eighth line 'the company has been advised that,' these words were substituted in the committee 'doubts have been raised whether'. Then the preamble goes on to say :

And whereas applications have been made to the legislative assembly of Ontario for Acts extending the time for constructing the said company's lines of railways and such Acts have been passed.

Down to that point it was not changed, but these words were in the Bill as it went to the committee:

As the said company has been advised, without authority or jurisdiction.

These words of the preamble were struck out in the committee. Then, as introduced in the Railway Committee, these words were in the Bill:

And whereas the said company has by its petition asked for authority to carry out certain extensions and works beyond provincial jurisdiction; and whereas it is advisable that all questions as to jurisdiction should be set at rest.

Then these words were struck out commencing in the twenty-second line:

That everything done by the said company in pursuance of the several Acts relating thereto should be confirmed.

These were struck out in the committee. The importance of the first words I have referred to, those relating to the jurisdiction of the local legislature, will be all the more apparent, if I refer the House and the committee to the end of section 1 in the third line, which reads:

In this Act the expression 'the company' means the body politic and corporate created by chapter 88 of the statutes of Ontario, 1894, and continued by the said amendments thereof.

Referring to amendments made by the Ontario legislature giving the extension of time which has been recited above as being outside the authority or jurisdiction of the local legislature. As this conflicts with the first enacting clause of the Bill, it was very important it should be struck out. As to the other amendment striking out these words :

That everything done by the said company in pursuance of the several Acts relating thereto should be confirmed.

It was recognized by everybody that this was a very important statement particularly with reference to the concluding portion of section 1, namely :

And all rights, privileges and immunities which the company has heretofore been entitled to under its Acts of incorporation and amendments thereof, and not inconsistent with this Act, are hereby continued and confirmed.

So much as regards the importance. I think the importance is sufficiently apparent by the alterations made, and I am quite content to rest upon what the First Minister may think as to the materiality of those amendments.

As regards why that rule has been enacted, I have nothing to do with that question. At the same time I might refer the committee to two or three sentences which appear in Bourinot, the latest edition. At page 773:

As the preamble of a private Bill sets forth the facts upon which it is founded, it is necessary that they should be fully and truly stated and substantially proved and admitted.

Then at page 774:

The promoters or their agents will first address the committee on the preamble; and then, if required, proceed to call witnesses and examine them.

I read these extracts to show that the preamble is a most important part of a private Bill. If there be any question about the facts alleged, those facts must all be established. On page 775:

When the arguments and evidence upon the preamble have been heard, the room is cleared and the question is put: 'That the preamble has been proved,' which is resolved in the affirmative or the negative, as the case may be. If the committee decide the foregoing question in the affirmative the parties are called in and made acquainted with the decision, and the clauses are then taken up one by one and dealt with just as in the case of committees of the whole on public Bills.

That practice has not to my knowledge been followed in our parliament, although it is laid down as the British practice and may have been on some occasion followed here. On page 776 :

If the committee decide that the preamble has not been proven, no further proceedings will be had in the committee on the Bill, but the fact must be reported to the House in conformity with the following rule.

The committees on private Bills have reported against the Bills on various grounds.

Because no sufficient evidence was offered in favour of the preamble.

Because legislative interference is not desirable or necessary. Because the Bill would interfere with lawsuits pending or with existing rights. Or that the power sought for would not advance the interests of the locality. Or that the Bill asked for an extension of the powers of a certain company to purposes entirely foreign to its original charter. Or that it contained most unusual provisions. At page 778:

A committee will sometimes make changes in the preamble, and in such a case they must also report the fact to the House in conformity wtih the rules as follows:

The committee to which a private Bill is referred shall report the same to the House in every case, and when any material alteration has been made in the preamble of the Bill, such alteration and the reasons for the same are to be stated in the report.

Then it shows on page 780 that if the title to a Bill is changed, that must be specially reported to the House. If it appears to the committee that the consent of the Governor General is necessary for the passage of the Bill that fact must be specially reported to the House.

I have thought it my duty to call attention to this omission because it is recognized as of substantial importance in dealing with private Bills. It is very important that all the recitals contained in the preamble of a Bill as questions of facts should be proved to the satisfaction of the committee. The attention of the House should be called to the fact that the preamble has been changed and then the reasons for the change should be stated. It is most important that the alterations made by the committee should not only be stated to the House but also the grounds upon which they were made. My own opinion is that it will be a matter of some considerable difficulty to show logical reasons for the alterations in the preamble without going a good deal further, as I submitted at the time, and striking out that part that deals with questions of law. Therefore, I submit the resolution which I have already moved.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I must say that the matter is somewhat new to me. The point is evidently one of some importance, and, so far as the law affecting the present case is concerned, it seems to me that the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) are to the point. The rule is plain and cannot be controverted in any way that, if in a Bill of this kind material alterations are made in the preamble, they must be reported to the House with the reasons that have influenced the committee in coming to their decision. The rule has been stated by my hon. friend in the speech which he made the other day as follows :

The committee to which a private Bill may have been referred shall report the same to the House, in every case; and when any material alteration has been made in the preamble of the Bill, such alteration and the reasons for the same are to be stated in the report.

No reasons have been stated in the report. Therefore, it is for this committee to decide whether or not the alterations which have been made are or are not material. If the committee does not deem them material, the report is correct and should stand ; if, on the other hand, the committee is of opinion that the amendments are material, this rule must apply. I could have hoped that my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) would give more reason than he has given to satisfy the committee whether or not they are material. Let us look at the alterations. In the original Bill, the preamble reads in part as follows :

Whereas the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company has by its petition represented that it was incorporated by chapter 88 of the statutes of 1894 of Ontario, whereby and by subsequent amendments of the said Act the said company was authorized to construct various lines of railway from the city of Hamilton to different places in the province of Ontario as in the said Act and amendments set forth; and whereas the said company has been advised that, under and by virtue of the provisions of sections 307 and 308 of the Railway Act of 1888 and sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, the railway of the said company on crossing the line of the Grand Trunk Railway Company at Burlington in 1897 became and has since been subject to the exclusive legislative authority of the Dominion of Canada.

Now, this recital has been altered by substituting for the latter part the following :

—and whereas doubts have been raised whether, under and by virtue of the provisions of sections 306 and 307 of the Railway Act of 1888,——

And so on. So far as I am concerned, I say, with all due deference to my hon. friend, that I cannot see, until better advised, that the alteration that has been made is material. It seems to me to substitute one form of language for another but does not change the intention of the preamble as at first drafted. It seems to me very much the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. If the Bill had been left as it was, I think it would not have been in essentially different shape from that in which it is now before us. I come now to the other sentences referred to by my friend (Mr. Lennox) which, thus far, I have had no time to look into, but which I shall be prepared to discuss after recess.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GUTHRIE. As chairman of the Railway Committee and in that respect responsible to a greater or less degree for the report which was made to the House on the Bill now under consideration, I desire to make a few remarks on the motion now before the committee. It will be remembered that the preamble of this Bill was discussed at great length by the Railway Committee, the discussion occupying some seven or eight days, and at the conclusion of that discussion, before the preamble in its amended form was adopted, the usual motion was put 'shall the preamble as amended be adopted,' and it was carried. I submit that if any member of the committee or the committee had deemed that any alterations or amendments were material, some motion should have been made or some action should have been taken at that time. Before the Bill was finally reported the usual motion 'shall the Bill as amended as reported' was put. Once more there was an opportunity in committee to take any exception or move any amendment in regard to a special report on the amended preamble. No such action having been taken, and the Bill having been reported in its present form, we may safely assume that the Railway Committee in their judgment did not deem the alterations or amendments to the preamble material. All we have before us on that is the report, and the report being silent, I think we may take it for granted, that the Railway Committee, at all events, did not view the amendments as material. That is the first forum to decide on this question. It is true the question can be decided by this committee or this House.

I may say at the outset that I think the motion is highly technical and the discussion on it more or less academic in its nature, because whether or not the report be sent back to the committee with instructions to the committee to give a reason for their report, will not affect the Bill in its scope or operation.

The first amendment is in the eighth line, the words——

The said company has been advised that.

——have been struck out and the following substituted :

Whereas doubts have been raised whether.

I submit that this is merely a formal change, not a material change in any sense of the word. The preamble of the Bill, or the meaning of the preamble as it formerly stood, was that there were doubts, that the promoters of this Bill had been advised that they were a Dominion company and should seek legislation here. It was not well or concisely drafted and it was considered by the committee that the whole object which the promoters sought to achieve by the somewhat involved language they had used could be achieved by the simple statement that doubts had been raised. That applies to the third amendment as well as to the first, the third amendment being to strike out the words:

But, as the said company has been advised, without authority or jurisdiction.

It was simply a question of doubt and the language was greatly simplified by the clause as amended by the committee.

The second amendment is purely formal, the words:

Its railway.

are struck out, and the words:

The railways of the said company are substituted. No argument is necessary upon that point. The fourth amendment is to strike out the words:

That everything done by the said company in pursuance of the several Acts relating thereto should be confirmed.

That was simply to make that portion of the preamble conform to the language of section 1 as amended by the committee.

On the third or fourth day of the discussion it was pointed out that the advertised notice of this Bill did not make mention of the last portion of section 1, which reads:

And all rights, privileges and immunities which the company has heretofore been entitled to under its Act of incorporation and amendments thereof, and not inconsistent with this Act, are hereby continued and confirmed.

No notice had been given of that amendment, and it was the opinion not only of the minister but of the committee in general that that portion of section 1 should be eliminated; and in order to make the preamble conform to the section those words were struck out. They were struck out merely for the sake of conformity which makes the amendment purely formal.

The English rule corresponding to the Canadian rule 106 is somewhat different. It provides that all alterations to the preamble have to be specially noticed in the report and reasons have to be given for all alterations, the language being:

And when any alteration shall have been made in the preamble of the Bill, such alteration, together with the ground of making it, shall be specially stated in the report.

The language of our rule is:

And when any material alteration has been made in the preamble of the Bill, such alteration and the reasons for the same are to be stated in the report.

The question then becomes whether the alterations or amendments are material or merely formal. My contention is that in this case they are all purely formal. An alteration to be material must be more or less fundamental, one of substance and not of form. We contend that there is no substantial amendment to the preamble of this Bill. Anything we have done in the amendments does not increase or diminish, limit, curtail or advance, the powers of the company. Any difference is not fundamental or substantial; it is only formal. It has been pointed out by the clerk of the Railway Committee, a very experienced officer, that it has never been the practice of the committee in the last twenty-five or thirty years to give any reasons for any changes in the preambles of Bills. The fact that it has not been the practice may stand for nothing as the rule is there; but as a matter of fact it has not been the practice, and only in very few instances has it been done by any committee of this House. There is only one instance where the preamble has been amended and a special report presented to the House. There have been important changes in preambles by way of enlarging them by way of increasing their scope and only in one instance has a special report been put in where the amendment has been by way of eliminating some language in the original preamble.

The cases we have been able to find are as follows: There is one in 1891 reported in the Journals at page 414, where the Banking Committee amended a preamble, adding certain clauses practically reviving the charter of a bank which had ceased to do business; in that case a special report was made, giving reasons.

In 1894, the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee specially reported on another Bill where the preamble had been amended and words had been added more clearly to indicate the objects of the proposed Bill.

In 1900, the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee (page 202 of the Journals) presented a similar report, giving the same reasons for additions to the words of the preamble.

In 1900, again (Journals 174), the Private Bills Committee amended that preamble so as to more clearly express the facts upon which certain powers granted by the Bills are placed. These are the only four cases which I have been able to find where the preambles have been amended by adding words and in the report of the committee to the House reasons have been given and the reason in each instance has very clearly explained the object and provisions of the Bill. In 1883 there was a Bill of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Church in Canada in which some words of more or less importance were excised or eliminated and in that instance there was a special report, but the special report of the committee in that case was merely that 'words are unnecessary.' If this Bill were referred back to the committee I submit that a proper report for the committee to make is that the words which have been eliminated from this preamble are unnecessary. Upon this statement of facts and upon the precedents I have been able to give to the House I think the proper judgment of the committee should be that the amendments are formal and not material. They do not go to the root or substance of the matter; they do not enlarge or curtail the operation of the Bill and no report that the committee could make would have any effect upon it. As the matter is more or less technical, as the committee must be taken to have passed upon it, and as the report is silent in regard to reasons, I think this committee may well follow the example of the Railway Committee and hold that it is a matter of form and not material.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a few observations in reference to the present position in which this Bill is. My first observation has reference to proceeding with the Bill to-night. I think it was understood pretty generally by the members of the House on this day last week that a few days' notice would be given before proceeding with the Bill. The discussion relating to the matter on that occasion was as follows. On the opening of the House on Monday last the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) said:

> As this is a very important Bill and as there are certain matters in connection with it which are now under consideration, I would ask that it be laid over for the present. I move that the committee rise.

The discussion was concluded as follows:

> Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Railways has truthfully said that the Bill is an important Bill, and I would suggest that we have a few days notice of the time it is to be taken up. I understand that the present intention is to bring it on a week from to-day.
> Mr. GRAHAM. I want to meet the convenience of hon. gentleman as far as possible. It strikes me that it would be better to let it stand for a few days, so that everybody may be in a better position to discuss it.
> Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All I wish to ask is that we may be informed a few days in advance.
> Mr. GRAHAM. Surely.

The discussion dropped and that is the position in which it was when on Friday evening the Minister of Railways proposed that this Bill should be taken up to-day. I assumed, when speaking of a few days, as did my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and the Minister of Railways and Canals, that they intended parliamentary days. A few days in advance would be parliamentary days. There should be no two opinions upon that. Not one parliamentary day has intervened since. It is a matter of surprise to a good many that the Bill should be taken up to-day. Several amendments have been moved. These amendments have only recently been put on the Order Paper. I myself put an important amendment on the Order Paper to-day which I desire to have discussed and upon which I desire to have the opinion of this House. That amendment may not be dealt with because of the manner in which the Bill is being taken up.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will excuse me. I know he does not want to leave anything out. At page 3336 he will find the following:

Mr. LENNOX. I would ask the minister to let me know when this Bill is coming on again, as I would like to be here.
Mr. GRAHAM. It will probably be a week from to-day.

I was sure that I had named this as the day. The hon. leader of the opposition then, imagining possibly that we might be able to take it up sooner, I infer, asked that I would give notice before bringing it up. I said: 'Surely.' If we were going to bring it up before Monday I would have felt that I ought to give three or four days' notice, but that there should be no misunderstanding I said that we would bring it up on Monday and I anticipated that we would not reach it until Monday night when most of the members would be back. I not only mentioned to-day when we were talking about it a week ago, but on Friday last I called attention to the fact that we would take it up to-day.

Mr. LENNOX. It is quite clear that the minister was not sure when he would bring it up. In the discussion which took place on Monday last he said:

It strikes me that it will be better to let it stand for a few days, so that everybody may be in a better position to discuss it.

Then my hon. friend the leader of the opposition said:

All I wish to ask is that we may be informed a few days in advance.

Up to that there was no time definitely stated:—

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, up to that time there was a definite time stated.

It will probably be a week from to-day.

Mr. LENNOX. But no definite time had been fixed. A time may have been suggested, but neither the minister nor any one else was prepared to pin himself down to a day. What my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and I asked was that notice would be given. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition said:

All I wish to ask is that we may be informed a few days in advance.

We were not informed anything more about it until Friday night and at that time several hon. gentlemen who wanted to discuss the matter were not in the House and, of course, no day at all intervened between that time and to-day. But we have another point to deal with before we come to that.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) has made the very point that I was about to make, namely, the uncertainty of the day. The minister said himself that:

It will probably be a week from to-day.

The discussion concluded as follows:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All I wish to ask is that we may be informed a few days in advance.
Mr. GRAHAM. Surely.

A few days in advance certainly means a few parliamentary days. I repeat that in so far as many hon. members are concerned they are not prepared to-night to go on with this discussion. I doubt very much if it will advance the interests of the Bill, in view of the inadequacy of the notice given, to attempt to force the Bill on to-night.

Mr. CONMEE. We have heard that too often; that does not go any more.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Does the hon. gentleman desire to interrupt me for the purpose of interrupting me or for the purpose of getting some information?

Mr. CONMEE. No, but I desire to inform the hon. gentleman that that bluff is played out.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I think the hon. gentleman's language is unparliamentary. Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman should be obliged to take that back. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if the word 'bluff' is a parliamentary term?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman wishes you, Mr. Speaker, to rule on the point of order which he has taken. If he does not, I would suggest to him that at this moment we are engaged upon a preliminary objection whether the Bill can go on or whether it should be referred back to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. If the motion of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) carries, the Bill will have to be referred to the committee and my hon. friend will have an opportunity of moving the amendment that he wants to move. If the motion of my hon. friend from South Simcoe does not carry, then it will be time enough to urge the objection that he has made as to proceeding with the Bill on its merits.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Very good, I will take the right hon. gentleman's suggestion. I merely referred to this because the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution made this argument. Referring to the motion, the reasons given by the hon. member for South Wellington are not sufficient reasons why rule 106 should not apply. In the first place the hon. gentleman says that no objection was taken in the Railway Committee, that no request was made to have this preamble contain any special reference as required by rule 106. But, it is quite apparent on the very face of it that it was not for the Railway Committee or for any one in the Railway Committee to take objection there. There is no doubt that the Committee of the Whole is the first place in which an objection of that kind could be taken. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has given as a reason why the rule should not apply, that it has never been invoked for 25 years, and he tells us he has the authority of the clerk of the committee for making that statement. But a moment later he gave no less than four instances in which special reports had been made to the House from the Committees of the House in cases in which substantial alterations had been made in the preamble. If the rule is clear the fact that it has not been invoked in one special committee for years is no argument against it. The rule is there and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) has shown us that other special committees have taken advantage of it. I quite agree with the Prime Minister that the whole question is as to the relevancy of the alterations and as to whether they are material under rule 106. There is no doubt in my mind that the last two alterations are not only most material but that they are most vital. The right hon. gentleman was not in the Railway Committee and I would like to point out to him in what way these two alterations are relevant. The Bill as originally presented to the House contained the following statement in the preamble.

And whereas applications have been made to the legislative assembly of Ontario for Acts extending the time for constructing the said company's lines of railway, and such Acts have been passed, but, as the said company has been advised, without authority or jurisdiction.

In view of that recital in the preamble, that the company had obtained Acts from the legislature of Ontario extending the time for the construction of its lines and in view of the statement which immediately followed :

In the opinion of the company the said Acts were passed without authority or jurisdiction.

The Ontario government sent a representative to Ottawa largely to protest against that portion of the preamble which attacked the power of the legislature to pass these Acts. These Acts of the legislature had been passed years ago and had been acted upon by the company, and under them they had constructed their lines, and the legislature of Ontario said it was a very strange thing if a railway company could obtain an Act of incorporation from that legislature and proceed under it and its amendments, and then repudiate the legislation which gave the company its origin. Naturally the Ontario legislature very properly took the view that they would not permit any renunciation of their power without making protest. The promoters of this Bill had accepted the Ontario Acts for years, but when they had served their purpose they proposed by a statement in this preamble to say that these Acts were passed without authority or jurisdiction. Counsel for the province of Ontario was heard in opposition to that feature of the Bill as well as others, and finally the committee decided to strike from the preamble these words :

But as the said company has been advised, without authority or jurisdiction.

That was a very important, a very material and a very proper amendment to the preamble, indeed one can hardly imagine an alteration more material.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The words stricken out were : 'the company has been advised.' That is what raised a doubt.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. You were crystallizing that into the preamble and that was objected to. The Bill came into the committee with a statement that the province of Ontario had not authority or jurisdiction and it left the committee with that statement stricken out. Surely that was an important and material alteration. The next amendment made to the preamble, and it is a very important one, was that these words were stricken out :

That everytihng done by the said company in pursuance of the several Acts relating thereto should be confirmed.

It was argued by the province of Ontario and others in the committee that the committee should not confirm by such an omnibus declaration in the preamble every past Act of the company. This company had been incorporated for a great many years. and no one in the committee pretended to know what the company had done in the past, and most of the discussion which took place for half of the nine days that Bill was in the committee was over the preamble, and these important changes were made in it. I am not pretending to say that anything was added to this preamble, but a great deal was taken from it and surely whether you add to or take away, so long as that which you add to or take away from is material, it causes a material alteration to be made and if it is a material alteration surely rule 106 should apply. It does seem to me that this is a proper case for the application of the rule.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think the hon. member (Mr. Macdonell) does not quite understand the function of a preamble. Under the Interpretation Act it is provided by section 14:

The preamble of every Act shall be deemed a part thereof intended to assist in explaining the purport and object of the Act.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. So far as the application of the rule is concerned does it make any difference what the definition of a preamble is?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think it does.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I would like to know how.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The interpretation says that the preamble is a part of the Act intended to assist in explaining the purport one reason—to conform with that amendment to the preamble would have explained the last part of section 1, and that is no doubt the reason why it was put in the original preamble. But when the last clause of section 1 was struck out by the committee—because it was not advertised for one reason—to conform with that amendment, the fourth amendment was made to the preamble, and it was to conform with section 1, and it was not necessary to assist in explaining section 1; it is only a matter of form.

Mr. LENNOX. I would point out that although it is stricken out of the position it occupied before, the last part of section 1 is restored in the last part of section 2.

Mr. BRISTOL. So far as I am personally concerned I want to say that I thought we received most courteous treatment from the chairman of the Railway Committee in connection with this Bill, and in the objections at present raised we are not reflecting in any way upon the committee or the chairman. The real question is whether or not the changes made in this preamble were material. How is this materiality to be judged? We must assume that the promoters put these recitals in the preamble because they considered them material. That is one ground. That they were discussed for five or six days in the committee is another ground. We fought this preamble because we thought it a most injudicious and improper one. We thought it unwise to spread on the record that there was in connection with this matter a question of doubt as to whether or not this railway came under the Railway Act of Canada, because some small street car line crossed the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railway. Many of the gentlemen held that it would be ridiculous to assume that because the Toronto Railway crossed the Canadian Pacific Railway, as it does, in two or three places, it should be considered a railway for the general advantage of Canada. A great deal of discussion took place over the question of legal advice, the result of which was that the statement that a company had been advised was changed to the statement that a doubt was raised. The statement that everything that was done pursuant to certain Acts should be confirmed was considered so broad and sweeping that it was persistently attacked throughout. To-night for the first time I have heard that that was stricken out because of any informality in the notice. Certainly the argument presented to the committee was that it was an injudicious and improper recital to put in the Bill, and, after several days' discussion, I think it was the Minister of Railways who made the suggestions which were eventually accepted by the committee. So that if we are to judge of the materiality of the changes by the contest the promoters made over them, we must regard them as decidedly material.

Mr. BARKER. It appears to me very clear that the first alteration in the preamble is not material. It is merely a better form of expressing what was intended to be expressed as the preamble was drawn. The whole question raised is as to the preamble; we are not discussing any of the clauses of the Bill, but simply whether the alterations made in the preamble required any special report. As drawn, the preamble recited that whereas the company has been advised that under certain circumstances it occupied a certain position. I think that was a very bad form of draftage. I do not think we ought to have counsel's opinion introduced into Acts of parliament; it would only be necessary to get the opinions of half a dozen to have them both ways; and then they could have simply said in plain language that doubts had been raised. These words as to counsel's opinion have been very properly struck out, and the statement that doubts have been raised has been put in its place, and I think there is not a lawyer in this House who will not say that that is a better form of expression than the one originally used. In that I do not think there has been any material alteration, but there has been an improvement in the phrasing of the clause. The second change is this: 'but as the said company has been advised, without authority or jurisdiction.' That is, that the Ontario legislature has passed certain Acts, but, as the company has been advised, without authority or jurisdiction. The committee, I presume, thought again that it was not desirable to insert in the preamble of an Act of parliament counsel's opinion, and, for the same reason, that if they had got the opinions of two or three more counsel, they would have got opinions on both sides and doubts would have been raised. By striking out these words, the committee do not say that the two Acts that have been passed are either good or bad. They simply state the plain fact that the Ontario legislature has passed certain Acts. Can there be any objection to that? As to the third sentence which was struck out, namely:

That everything done by the said company in pursuance of the several Acts relating thereto should be confirmed.

I can quite understand that if these words were not in the preamble of the Bill but had been inserted by the committee, their insertion would be an important alteration. But the case is just the reverse. The promoters of this Bill asked for the confirmation of certain Acts. That has been struck out and consequently there is no confirmation. The Acts are left as they were and they are neither confirmed nor disaffirmed. Can it be said that by omitting these words, we have made a material alteration? I could quite understand the company complaining of their omission, but cannot understand why hon. gentlemen who are protesting against the Bill in toto should complain. How can they say there has been any material alteration requiring any special report? The company has consented to the elimination of those words. Where then is the Bill altered to the detriment of anybody, even the company? This is really a most technical form of objection. Suppose the company had inserted a provision in the preamble to enable it to deal generally with electric power, and on some question being raised they consented to that being struck out. Would it be seriously argued that that was such a material alteration of the Bill as regards the preamble, as would bring it under rule 106?

In my experience it has not been at all uncommon to strike something out of the preamble when the committee found more asked for than it was willing to grant. The preamble of this Bill asks us to confirm certain things. We strike out that request and thereby limit the scope of the preamble. Surely the objection raised that that is a material alteration which brings the Bill under rule 106 is the most technical form of objection imaginable.

Mr. LENNOX. A great deal of what the hon. member for Hamilton has said has proved the position I took, namely, that this is a very material alteration in the Bill. He says if we had enlarged the scope of the preamble, that would be a material alteration, but as we have restricted it, the alteration is not material. That is bad logic as applied to this rule, for the rule does not say that the alteration must be in the way of expansion or restriction but simply that it must be material. A technical alteration need not be reported, but any material alteration must be. The chairman of the committee has said that as the committee virtually concurred in these amendments, we should not go back on it.

Mr. BARKER. But the committee had nothing to do with confirming the report. On every question we voted. I moved to strike out the part beginning with 'whereas the said company has been advised' down to 'parliament of Canada.' I also moved to strike out the other two clauses that were struck out. This amendment was voted down. Then I moved to strike out the words 'that everything done by the said company in pursuance of the said several Acts and relating thereto should be confirmed.' Then the hon. gentleman who is promoting the Bill moved in amendment to that amendment that instead the words 'the company has been advised,' we should change these to the words 'doubts have been raised,' and strike out the other two clauses I proposed to strike out. It was argued that this had been framed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and would get over all the difficulty regarding the question of law. And then that we should enact as in section 1:

And for the removal of all doubts the lines of railway which the company is empowered to construct are hereby declared to be works for the advantage of Canada.

We argued that the effect would be to declare what was the state of the law as regards that and all other railways in a similar position. This amendment was made in order that we should not do that but merely say that doubts had been raised and therefore not commit ourselves to a distinct proposition of law as we would have been doing had the matter stood in the shape in which it was before. That is the position to-day. A material alteration has been made. Instead of parliament declaring that by reason of that railway crossing the line of the Grand Trunk at Burlington it is subject to the exclusive legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, we merely declared that doubts have arisen. That is a material alteration.

As to the next proposition, we have it recited in the preamble:

Applications have been made to the legislative assembly of Ontario for Acts extending the time for constructing the said company's lines of railway and such Acts have been passed, but, as the said company has been advised, without authority or jurisdiction.

These were Acts passed after 1897 when this crossing of these two railways was effected, and the suggestion is made there that these two Acts, the Act of 1900, chapter 12 and the Act of 1904, chapter 77, both being Acts of the legislature of Ontario passed after, this railway is said to have become subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of parliament, were void. It was pointed out that that was inconsistent with what the company wanted, because they asked, in effect that these Acts should continue in force. Section 1 provides :

In this Act the expression 'the company' means the body politic and corporate created by chapter 88 of the statutes of Ontario, 1894, and continued by the said amendments thereof; and for the removal of all doubts the lines of railway which the company is empowered to construct are hereby declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

Now, I point out to the Prime Minister that, had the words remained in the preamble stating in effect that the Acts of 1900 and 1904 were passed by the legislative assembly of Ontario without jurisdiction, it would not be consistent to pass section 1 which says that these Acts and amendments shall be continued. And section 2 says :

Nothing in this Act, or in the Railway Act, shall invalidate any action heretofore taken by the company pursuant to the powers contained in the Acts mentioned in the preamble, and the powers and privileges granted by the said Acts are hereby confirmed.

That includes these two amendments that are said in the preamble to have been passed without jurisdiction. So, we see that the statement in the preamble must be eliminated in order to pass not merely section 1 but section 2.

It was proposed in the original Bill to have a clause in the preamble providing that everything done by the company in pursuance of these Acts of the Ontario legislature shall be confirmed. This was most material for the railway company to get, but it was strenuously opposed and was, in the end, struck out and remained so. We have to look at this from the attitude of the company as well as from the attitude of the country. We have a right to have sent to this House a statement showing the reason why this was struck out. Analyse this and you will see whether it is material or not. The preamble of the original Bill contained these words :

—and whereas it is advisable that all questions as to jurisdiction should be set at rest, that everything done by the said company in pursuance of the several Acts relating there to should be confirmed——

—and so on. That is the gist of what is asked. This the committee refused, and it is struck out. Is it not material whether we do or do not in this Act affirm that we think it advisable that everything done by the company in pursuance of these several Acts be confirmed or not ? Surely it is as plain as anything can be. The importance of this matter does not rest on my shoulders ; the result of this discussion is not material to me. But it is most material to this House, and most material to the right hon. leader of this House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), that a plain rule shall be observed. No harm will be done to the company, and no great benefit gained to the country in this instance. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) says that for twenty-five years we have been ignoring this rule and sending from the Railway Committee, though not from other committees, amendments to preambles without referring to the fact that——

Mr. GUTHRIE. Will the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) allow me to ask him : Who should, in the first instance, judge whether the alteration is material or not ?

Mr. LENNOX. Probably the chairman.

Mr. GUTHRIE. As chairman, I decided that they were not material.

Mr. LENNOX. The chairman of the committee should have some supervision, and should see to it that his report comes in in proper form. He does not appear to have paid a scintilla of attention to the matter or to have thought of it at all. He did not think of it at all. The clerk of the committee did not attend to it, because this rule has been ignored persistently. But the people who have to decide absolutely in the end whether it is material or not are the people who fought persistently over this question for eight or nine days and who are here, and particularly the First Minister and leader of this House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who is responsible for our proceedings. I do not need to say more. I brought the matter up because it is important that the rules of the House should be observed The very fact that such a decided difference of opinion is expressed in the committee is good reason why the First Minister should send this back in order that the committee may give its reasons for these changes. If we infringe the rule in this instance, we shall be expected to do so in others. Is it not better that the Railway Committee should understand, as others do, that any except verbal alterations in the preamble of a Bill must be reported with the reasons for making them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the difficulty has arisen in this case for the reason that we do not conduct our private Bill legislation with quite the same system, or quite the same regard for the judicial nature of the proceedings, as prevails in Great Britain. The preamble is regarded as the foundation of a private Bill.

And the evidence—because evidence is usually given there upon these Bills—is given with regard to the preamble. The petitioners have the right under certain conditions to offer evidence. Persons may come in and petition against the Bill if desired, but they have to prove their status before they are allowed to oppose it. The question is then determined like a judicial proceeding. You do not have there an enormous committee of 100 or 160 people ; you have a small committee for the most part who deal with the question in a judicial manner, and they report that the preamble is proven or not proven and that must and does determine the fate of the Bill. They may report the preamble 'proven with amendments' and the English practice, as has been observed, requires that the reasons for these amendments shall in every instance be reported. They also report on many other matters. For example, in Great Britain, where a committee has to consider the applicability of some legislative enactment or some departmental regulation based upon the authority of legislative enactment, where they depart from any such regulation or enactment it is the practice—I do not know whether it prevails by reason of a standing order, but it is their practice—to report the reasons why they depart from the regulation. They are much more careful and particular than we are in regard to all these matters, and I trust that we may be a little more particular here in the future.

Of course with respect to the third alteration which seems to be the one of particular importance if one desired to look at the question strictly, under the words of the rule, it would seem to me that the reasons for striking these words out, should be alleged. The reasons have been mentioned by the chairman of the committee and by the hon. member for Hamilton; that portion of the Bill to which they apply have been omitted and they of course become unnecessary, irrelevant and out of place and therefore must disappear from the preamble.

It does not seem to me that the reason why that particular portion of one section of the Bill has been omitted, is very much in point one way or the other. It is sufficient to know that it has disappeared and that by reason of its disappearance certain words in the preamble must also disappear, and that would have been a good reason to be assigned by the committee as a ground for leaving out that portion of the preamble, and in strictness I would have thought that would have been the proper course. It has been truly observed by the chairman of the committee and other members that this rule has not been regarded. Matters have gone on for the most part so far as this House is concerned, as if no such rule was in existence; the matter has now been brought to the attention of the House and the House must deal with it. I would suggest, in the first instance, if any regard is to be had to the suggestion of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Claude Macdonell) it would be far the easiest way to send it to the committee and let the committee give the reasons, which are pretty obvious reasons but which as a matter of form should be stated in the report of the committee. It would be better instead of discussing this matter here, to send it back to the committee if the objection of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) is to prevail.

I may say to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) that I was not quite certain whether he would bring it on to-day, as the date was left somewhat indefinite, and on the suggestion being made that there were members on both sides interested and that they should have a few days' notice, the minister with his usual courtesy assented and I suppose some members depended on that arrangement.

Mr. HENDERSON. To my mind the whole question hinges on the definition of material alterations. Are these alterations material or not? I regard them as quite immaterial. I stated in the committee and I have the same view now, that it was quite unimportant whether there was any preamble to this Bill, the whole preamble might have been struck out, it might have been introduced without a preamble. Therefore I hold that the change made in the preamble was not at all material and consequently the rule does not apply.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a matter as to which it becomes my duty to state to the House what I think ought to be the rule which should guide it in a matter of this kind. Of course it is a matter which has to be approached solely on the judicial side and for no other consideration than the judicial interpretation to be given to this rule. I find that four alterations have been made to the preamble of this Bill. The first alteration substituted for the words:

The said company has been advised that.

The words:.

Doubts having been raised whether.

I stated before six o'clock and I repeat that in my opinion they are absolutely immaterial; they are merely, as stated by the hon. member for Hamilton, substituting a different drafting; they do not substitute any other line of thought than that first expressed in the Bill and so far I do not think the change there is material.

The second one is purely a verbal and therefore requires no consideration.

As to the third and fourth, I look upon them as one single amendment to carry on the same idea.

The object of this Bill was, among other things, to confirm two Bills which had been passed by the legislature of Ontario; it was doubtful whether the province of Ontario had jurisdiction to pass those laws and one object of this Bill was to confirm this legislation and give it the sanction of the Dominion parliament. The two alterations really effect the same object. These alterations are certainly very important but are they material? That is a question. An amendment may be a very important one, and yet not be material to the Bill. The view taken by the committee was evidently, as has been explained by the hon. member for Hamilton a moment ago, that the powers which were sought to be obtained by this Bill by the company promoting it, were curtailed by the committee and their powers having been curtailed, that is to say a provision which had been intended to be carried——

That everything done by the said company in pursuance of said Acts relating thereto is confirmed.

—was eliminated, and the amendment in this respect was very important, because it took away from the powers proposed to be granted by the Bill. But the hon. member for Hamilton argued, and I think with great force, that these amendments although important were not material, because they did not make any more charge on the public than was contemplated by the Bill ; on the contrary they removed charges which had been intended and therefore they were not reported, because in a Bill of this kind the rules which have been set down have been set down for the purpose of protecting the public. The alteration is admittedly not important, and does not involve a new charge on the public but takes away one which was sought to be imposed on the public and it may well be said that an alteration of that kind is not material. I take the view of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). I suppose he is one of those who fought the Bill. He fought it why ? Because it was an encroachment upon the rights of the province, because this parliament should not attempt to confirm an Act which had been passed by a province if it had not power to pass it, that the remedy should be to go to the province. He has succeeded in his contention, his view has prevailed before the committee, he has succeeded in getting that removed from the Bill and, therefore, if the Bill is sent back to the committee, what will he do ? Will he fight the Bill again to have this restored ? On the contrary the amendment is on the line of what he is seeking and if the Bill is sent back to the committee my hon. friend will not ask to have this restored.

Mr. LENNOX. It does not preserve one iota to the province of what the province would not have and has not always had.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, but does not my hon. friend agree with me that if this Bill is sent back to the committee he will not attempt to have these words restored ?

Mr. LENNOX. I could not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly; he does not find fault with them, he accepts them, he is satisfied with them. That is the reason why, I presume, the change was not considered material and that is the reason why it was not so reported by the committee. The committee thought that if a change was made taking away from the powers which were intended to be given to the company it was not material to the company or to the Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. But there was nothing taken away from the company.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the meaning of the words ? My hon. friend will not attempt to have these words restored to the preamble.

Mr. LENNOX. I cannot have them restored. All I ask is that the Bill shall be sent back to the committee in order that they shall make the full report that they are bound by the rule to make.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. After all is this not highly technical ? If you have simply to send back this Bill to the committee in order not to have anything altered but simply to give a certain reason, which the company say is of no importance at all, what do you accomplish ? If my hon. friend could say : I want this to be sent back to the committee in order to make changes to it that I want to have made, then I could understand his reasoning. Otherwise his reasoning has no meaning. But the question is not free from doubt. When you see eminent counsel disagreeing upon this point, the hon. member for South Simcoe arguing that the amendment is material and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) arguing that it is not material, when it is a matter of doubt the rule has been always to side with the committee and I would be disposed to do, as we have always done, side with the committee under similar circumstances.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The only thing we can do is to report progress.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. BRISTOL. The rule says that :

When any material alteration has been made in the preamble of the Bill, such alteration and the reasons for the same, are to be stated in the report.

Does the right hon. gentleman contend that it is to be confined to alterations that are material to the public only and not to the people who bring in private Bills ? Does the right hon. gentleman confine the meaning of the word 'material' to the public interest ? I would have thought that any change that was material, whether it was material to the promoter or the public, would be a material change ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOL. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) admitted that it was material to the company but he said it was not material to the public. I think it is very material to the public that they should have this word stricken out. I do not think it should be regarded as being material to one or the other but that if it is a material alteration the reason should be stated.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The argument of the hon. gentleman was that it was an important amendment but not material to the Bill because it was not such that anybody could suffer from it except the company.

Mr. BARKER. My statement was that it might be an important amendment but the company are not raising any objection. The only persons who are raising any objection are the gentlemen who have got what they wanted.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that we can report progress and make a motion when the Speaker is in the chair.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question is that the Bill be referred to the House and therefore we have to decide whether we shall refer it to the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Those in favour of the motion will please signify.

Mr. LENNOX. Let it go; they do not want to vote.

Motion negatived.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals if he is going to consider the matter that I raised about delay. I would like to remind the hon. gentleman that there are a number of amendments which have been put in before it was known that this Bill was coming up to-day. These amendments cannot be discussed to-night. They might be discussed to-morrow or at any subsequent day; but hon. gentlemen certainly relied upon the conclusion of what took place when this Bill was up, namely that a few days notice would be given and it was presumed that these would be parliamentary days. No parliamentary day has since intervened, and I take the objection that the Bill should not be proceeded with on insufficient notice in view of what took place.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think that the hon. gentleman's point that no notice has been given is sufficient. Notice, in the parliamentary sense, is two days. However, if my hon. friend says that he has been taken by surprise and that he is not prepared to go on with the Bill I do not think we should press it to-day.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I have prepared and handed in to the clerk of the House a very important amendment that I want to have discussed and that I want to obtain the opinion of the House upon.

Mr. BRISTOL.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the amendment be to the first clause ?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, to the first clause.

Mr. GRAHAM. I want to establish the fact that I have kept perfect faith with my hon. friend. A week ago to-day my hon. friend was prepared to go on with this Bill.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I took no part in the discussion a week ago and I gave no indication of my intentions one way or the other. My hon. friend himself immediately rose when the Bill was called and asked that it should stand.

Mr. GRAHAM. I was just remarking what took place and what was ready to take place. The matter came up. I suggested that we postpone the debate. The promoter was ready to go on with the Bill and every person understood it was going on until these questions were raised. I stated that probably we would go on a week from to-day. That was a week ago. My hon. friend has known for a week that the Bill was going on to-day. A little further on, after I had stated that probably it would go on to-day, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) suggested that I might give him three or four days' notice. Any one would have expected that if we were going to bring the matter up a day before that which I had mentioned I would certainly have given notice. So that there could be no idea that any advantage would be taken of any person on Friday last when I stated that we would probably go on with this Bill on Monday. My hon. friend understood on Friday last that we would go on to-day and it is only a technical point when he speaks of parliamentary days. He has prepared his amendments since Friday last and he could have prepared his speech along that line in that time. It is only technical to say that since Friday last we have had no parliamentary days. If any hon. gentleman says he has been taken by surprise I think that we should give fair consideration to that objection, but merely to say he is not ready is not a fair reason for postponing this discussion for another week. He might not be ready in a week from to-day. Could we not go on with some other clause to which my hon. friend does not want to move an amendment ? Let us do something.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I find that this Bill has not been reprinted in French. According to rule 71 all Bills should be printed in both languages before going to their second reading.

An hon. MEMBER. Read the rule.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The rule is this :

All Bills shall be printed before the second reading in the French and English languages.

The French version is more expressive still, it says :

Tous les bills doivent être imprimés avant leur deuxième lecture en Français et en Anglais.

I therefore raise this question of privilege and it is a very important one. I have fought this Bill strenuously in the committee; I have given a great deal of attention to it; I want to understand it thoroughly and it is my privilege to have it printed in the French language so that I may understand it thoroughly and give an intelligent vote on it. I understand that the objection will be taken to this question of privilege, that the question should be raised before the Bill came to a second reading, but I can find no rule to show that such is the case. There is only one decision by Speaker Blanchet in 1879, and that does not say that objection should be taken before the second reading. The rule says that the Bill should be printed in both languages before coming to a second reading, and Bourinot says it is the undoubted right of any member of the House to have a Bill printed in both languages before he votes on it. My objection is well taken, and I ask that the consideration of the Bill be postponed.

Mr. BERGERON. Hear, hear; until it is printed in French.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The custom, I understand, is that this objection must be taken before the second reading. After the second reading the objection is too late. The notices of the proposed amendments which I have here are in both languages.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The Bill I have here is only in the English language, and I asked for a French copy and I could not get it. I don't think the Chair can cite any rule to show that the objection must be taken before the second reading.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is the custom that this objection be taken before the second reading.

Mr. BERGERON. The objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) is well taken. The Bill has been greatly changed; it must be reprinted any way, and if it is allowed to stand the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) will be met.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not understand that the Minister of Railways was guilty of any bad faith whatever, but the member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) says he is taken by surprise, and the Minister of Railways and the First Minister have said that if any one is taken by surprise the Bill would not be proceeded with. The notices were given on Friday night and two days have intervened on which we could do nothing, so that we are in the same position to-day as we were on Friday night as regards giving notice. We could not give notice on Friday night; we could not give notice on Saturday; we could not give notice on Sunday; we could only give notice to-day. There has been a misunderstanding, and I hope the Bill will not be pressed now.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I wish to say that I am taken by surprise, but I am not asking for any favour special or otherwise, and I am not urging that as a reason for the Bill to stand. On Monday last the Minister of Railways concurred in Mr. Borden's request that a few days' notice would be given of the Bill being proceeded with, and not being in the House on Friday night I knew nothing of the intention to bring it up until this afternoon, when I immediately prepared my amendments and sent them to the clerk. I do want to discuss these amendments of which I have given notice and I am taken by surprise.

Mr. CLARKE. Do your amendments appertain to the second clause?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I have moved my amendment to clause 2 and it covers the objection to the whole of the Bill.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I rise to a point of order. It is only since the second reading that this Bill has been reprinted and therefore I could not take the objection on the second reading that it was not printed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have ruled that the objection is taken too late. You can appeal to the House if you wish.

Mr. BERGERON. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways have said that if any one were taken by surprise the Bill would stand. My hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell) is taken by surprise and if it is allowed to stand it can be reprinted in French before it is taken up again, and that will meet the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne).

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not want this Bill postponed on the ground that the members did not have notice. I said distinctly one week ago to-day that this Bill would be brought up on Monday next, and the leader of the opposition asked if two or three days' notice would be given, inferentially, if it were going to be brought up before to-day. So that there could be no misunderstanding I said last Friday that nothing intervening we would proceed with the Bill to-day. If there is some other reason for postponing it all right, but it cannot be postponed on the ground of want of sufficient notice, because I have kept faith absolutely with the House.

Mr. LANCASTER. I asked the leader of the opposition what was said about the Bill, and he told me and the inference I drew from it was that if it was to proceed to-day two or three days' notice would be given. I drew an inference opposite to that which the minister draws from what took place.

Mr. CONMEE. I hardly understand how the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) can be taken so much by surprise. That hon. gentleman discussed the Bill in the Railway Committee for a considerable number of days and he gave us his views and Macdonell law on the subject by the hour and by the yard, and if he now says that he is not ready to discuss the Bill of course I must accept his statement. But something very serious must have intervened to take his mind off this Bill, because he did not seem to think of anything else for two or three weeks. I do not wish to cast the slightest reflection on the good faith of any member of the House.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. You had better not do it on the member for South Toronto; you have attempted to do so already this afternoon.

Mr. CONMEE. I made a statement this afternoon which I thought was perfectly justified and under similar circumstances I would repeat it. I may be wrong in my idea, but it would appear to me that there are two or three gentlemen who are inclined to try and talk this Bill out. I have no objection to these hon. gentlemen discussing the Bill as long as they wish; I have no objection to them taking all the advantages which they think will accrue to them. They have had that already; they have been glorified to a certain extent in certain sections of the press, but I do think the time has come when these gentlemen ought to be constrained to realize that after all there is such a thing as a parliamentary majority and that a few gentlemen ought not to attempt to hold up a public measure or to hold up the House day after day and week after week. I think we have been held up on this Bill long enough in committee without being held up here.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Why are you so keen to pass it ?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend from South Toronto says that his amendment has reference to clause 2. Suppose we take up some other clause, and let clause 2 stand, could not we make some progress ?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The remarks I made were not intended to reflect on the minister. I do not think anybody could have extended more courteous treatment than the minister extended to us during the progress of this Bill through the committee, and I am not hinting that he has not given ample and just notice according to his view of the matter. I am not criticising him in the least. I am willing to facilitate the passing of this Bill in every possible way, but I would like to discuss the amendment of which I have given notice.

Mr. GRAHAM. Then we will go on with the other clauses and let clause 2 stand until my hon. friend can move his amendment.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. That is quite agreeable to me.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Am I to understand that I am to be forced to vote on a Bill that is not printed in French ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. My hon. friends take this matter with levity, but it is a most serious matter. By the British North America Act the French language is placed on a footing of equality with the English language, according to the declaration of the Prime Minister last year ; and yet I am now to be forced to vote on a Bill not printed in both languages on the technical ground that objection was not taken on the second reading. I think we are entitled to a declaration of policy on this point, which is a most serious and vital point, one based on the very essence of the constitution of our country.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minority are entitled to no rights here.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. It seems so, but as long as I have a breath I intend to claim the rights of any minority in this House. I think this is the most shameful treatment the minority have ever received in this country.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall we proceed with section 1 ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. No, certainly not.

Mr LENNOX. If the amendment of the hon. member for South Toronto is to be proceeded with on section 2, I know the nature of that amendment, and it will involve the same discussion that we shall have on section 1. Therefore I would suggest that we do not discuss section 1 at present, because if we do, we shall have to go over the same discussion again on section 2.

Mr. GRAHAM. If we go on with section 3 and let sections 1 and 2 stand, will that meet my hon. friend's objection ?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes.

Sections 1 and 2 allowed to stand.

On section 3,

Mr. BRISTOL. The object of section 3 is to give to a company which to-day has full power to construct and operate certain lines of railway under charters received from the province of Ontario, and various amendments, either the same or extended powers by the parliament of Canada. Now, so far as I am personally concerned, I desire to express my absolute disapprobation of this legislation. The present company get a charter from the Ontario legislature in the year 1894, under which they constructed certain lines of railway. In subsequent years they got two successive amendments from the local legislature giving them extended powers. The undertaking was and is a local undertaking within the province of Ontario, and I wish to present this proposition as the principle upon which we should deal with this and all other legislation of a similar character. I venture to think that the parliament of Canada, as regards all local undertakings that have had their origin within the province and are, under the terms of the British North America Act proper works for provincial legislation, should take the position that they should be left within the jurisdiction in which they have been brought into existence, except to such an extent as it may be necessary for the purposes of their business to give them legislation by the parliament of Canada. If that principle were adopted, there would be very little if any legislation needed for this company or the various other companies now seeking federal legislation; and as the principle is one of very great importance to all the provinces of this country as well as to the people of the country at large, I think it is only fair, as it is raised under this section, that we should give it the consideration which its importance deserves, because it goes to the basis of all the legislation which we are now or may be later called on to enact. As far back as 1883 this matter was up for discussion both in the parliament of Canada and in the legislature of Ontario, and I dare say other provincial legislatures. The Liberal party at that time was in favour of what are called provincial rights. As the question then arose, it was connected with our transportation system, at that time operated by steam. I think it arose over the passage by the parliament of Canada of the first Bill which dealt with the making of provincial railways, railways for the general advantage of Canada, by virtue of the fact that they might cross certain named Dominion railroads. The Ontario legislature at that time, in a very strong memorial, adopted after a very full discussion, took most decided and clear objections to the parliament of Canada taking any such course. The argument was made that while there might be under the British North America Act power to make existing railroads wholly within a province railways for the general advantage of Canada, under certain conditions named in the Act, it was not possible and was not proper to make a declaration which, if effective, would make railways which had not then been thought of, but which might later come into existence, railways for the general advantage of Canada, in case they later on were incorporated and crossed certain named railroads. The parliament of Canada passed that legislation, and the Ontario legislature objected to it. The question now is practically whether you propose to take the whole transportation system of this country and bring it down to Ottawa. Because if you do not pass this legislation on some broad principle of public policy, you will be leaving it open in the future for all classes of provincial undertakings, whether for the general advantage of Canada or not, to come here and seek legislation which is not in the interests of the people as a whole.

It might be a very simple matter, if we were going to continue a people of 6,000,000, to have all this class of legislation brought here and have these companies come under the jurisdiction of our Board of Railway Commissioners, more especially as we are about to appoint three additional commissioners, which will make six commissioners for a people of 6,000,000. But we are looking to a large increase of population. Would it not therefore be more wise and politic to leave local works and undertakings in the jurisdiction of the provinces rather than have them come before this parliament which has all the federal business it can attend to? If a railway company, which has a provincial charter, comes here to be brought under the jurisdiction of a federal parliament, we should be in the position of saying to that company: We do not propose to declare that you are a company for the general advantage of Canada simply because you ask it, but you must have grounds for your application, and the onus is on you to show the necessity for your leaving the jurisdiction of the province, under which you have operated for years, and bringing yourself under our jurisdiction.

In the State of New York they have a railway commission to deal with the state railways. Should we get the population in this country which we hope to get, should we later on have an enormous population in the various provinces, surely it is in the public interest that, so far as is reasonable and practicable, those various provinces should be allowed to deal, and deal absolutely, with local works and undertakings. What earthly gain is to be accomplished by bringing these local corporations under Dominion jurisdiction? The parliament of Canada has adopted, as a principle of legislation, that where a provincial railway crosses a Dominion railway, it comes under the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament only so far as that crossing is concerned. In the Railway Committee we had considerable discussion about the difficulties of divided jurisdiction. If it was necessary to give a company power to have a bridge at Niagara Falls or a ferry at Detroit river, it would be unwise to have divided jurisdiction. But if the Dominion parliament has seen fit to declare that local railways crossing Dominion railways are, only so far as that crossing is concerned under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, the same principle should be adopted as regards the crossing at Niagara river or Detroit river. In that respect the undertaking should be a work for the advantage of Canada but not otherwise. If you adopt that principle, you leave each province in absolute control of its local works and undertakings and save this parliament the necessity of supervising and passing upon the various regulations in the various provinces as regards these railways intended particularly to serve local needs. The parliament of Canada has enacted that where local works and undertakings of this kind desire to interchange traffic with Dominion railways, that portion of the work shall come under the supervision of the Dominion Railway Commissioners so that, under the present Railway Act, it is perfectly clear that if provincial railways desire to interchange traffic with trunk roads, they shall, as regards that traffic, come under the Dominion Railway Commission, but in other respects shall be left with the provinces.

I do not propose to argue the question of doubt. That could be very easily settled by a declaration that it was not intended to bring this company, and that the company did not in fact come under the general Railway Act by virtue of its crossing the Grand Trunk Railway in 1897. But I would point out this fact, that from 1897 up to 1907, this railway extended its lines, issued its bonds, borrowed money, and conducted its business without apparently the least trouble under provincial jurisdiction, and that it was only in 1908 that it became seized with doubts as to whether it should remain in Ontario or come here for legislation. In Ontario to-day there is a general electric Railway Act dealing with matters of this kind, and certain commissioners have been appointed to carry out the provisions of that Act. Under that Act, if an electric railway company does not give the people proper service, the commissioners have the right to take over the road and operate it under certain conditions so that the public shall at all times have a continuous and proper service. What would be a proper fare for an electric road to charge in Ontario might be a very unreasonable fare to charge in British Columbia, Quebec, Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. The province of Ontario has seen fit to fix this rate at the sum of 2 cents a mile. This railway took its charter subject to that rate, and now it asks to be made absolutely free from the jurisdiction of the province which gave it birth. There are besides many agreements which the municipalities made with this company on the basis that it was a provincial company and that there was an Ontario board which could enforce their rights. But the moment this company becomes a Dominion company, it becomes an absolutely new and different entity from that which entered into the contract with these various municipalities. I submit therefore that we should not give this creature of the province Dominion powers and change its condition, to the detriment of the interests of these municipalities, unless there be some ground of public policy which forces us to say that this is a road for the general advantage of Canada and we must bring it here. The proper policy for this parliament to adopt in respect to local works is to leave these works to the provinces and only pass such legislation regarding them as may be necessary for the purposes of their business and not otherwise.

If this is done, you have a fixed, plain principle upon which all these matters can be dealt with in the future. These people cannot possibly be hurt. Ten years ago they were satisfied to take their charter from Ontario. They accepted that charter; they floated their bonds and built their road. Well, why not stay there? Their attitude here is: We have the pull in this parliament to get this change and we are going to get it without rhyme or reason. I submit that they should give us the best of reasons why we should interfere with their provincial existence and bring them here and make them absolutely a Dominion company. If there are doubts we have a right to remove those doubts. But we should remove them in the public interest and not merely because these people want them removed, and as they want them removed. They want their railway to be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada, not because it is so, but because they have doubts whether it is so or not. If they have doubts, that is a matter for the courts and not an argument why parliament should assume jurisdiction over the work. The only reason they give is because there are these doubts about their business existence. But the fact that they have done their business for ten years since the crossing occurred which is said to raise the doubt, shows how immaterial these doubts have been until they raised them for their own purposes. So I say, with all the force I have, that I believe it in the interests of the country that all railways of a similar character should be left under provincial jurisdiction, where they got their existence, where they are carrying on their business, and where they will be amenable to the legislation of the province and to the control of the people who are affected by them, and should not be brought to this jurisdiction. In years to come, if this principle be not accepted, the pople of the whole Dominion will be legislating with regard to railways of a purely local character and which do not require Dominion legislation, except for the crossing of a Dominion railway or to build a bridge at one end or the other. If it was a sound principle to confine local works and undertakings to the province where they belonged, why should we declare a local railway to be a Dominion railway simply because it wants to build a bridge at one end of its line or the other ? If parliament was right in passing legislation ten years ago, and saying that these local works should remain in the province except so far as they cross a Dominion road, and should be brought under Dominion jurisdiction only for that purpose, on what principle can you distinguish and say that, if they want to build a bridge at one end of their road or have a ferry at the other end, the whole line should come under the jurisdiction of the Dominion for all time? Why, if this principle be admitted, this country will be paying commissioners to look after the electric railways of the whole country. When we have a population of fifty or sixty millions, as we shall have, we shall need a hundred or so of railway commissioners appointed under the jurisdiction of this parliament running all over the country supervising these local railways. The fact that a local railway is two hundred miles long and has some through traffic is no reason why the whole road should be taken over under Dominion jurisdiction. Suppose there were a practical amalgamation of all these lines, that fact does not make these lines works for the general advantage of Canada under the British North America Act unless parliament so declares them. The principle is that these roads should be left where the British North America Act put them, and should not be brought under the jurisdiction of this Dominion.

Now, under the British North America Act, the first provision relating to railways is in section 92. There is no general power given to the Dominion on the subject of railway legislation at all—it is by way of exception and not by way of a general provision that the Dominion has its rights. You find that under section 92 the railways as to which the provinces have exclusive jurisdiction are all local works and undertakings. The exception arises when the Dominion chooses to intervene because the railways connect two provinces or go outside the boundaries of one province, or, under subclause 3, under which this parliament is given power to declare any work it may see fit to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. I submit that if it were a wise policy at the time of confederation to make that distinction, it is a wise policy for us to-day, looking to the future, not to load up the parliament of Canada with various local works of any province or provinces, but to follow the British North America Act which lays it down, I believe wisely, that these local works and undertakings should be left with the provinces, and brought under the jurisdiction of Canada, only where it is necessary to do so in the public interest and to that extent only.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would point out that this Bill is essentially an evasion of the Ontario law which provides a two-cent a mile rate of fare over this and other similar roads. When an evasion of that kind is attempted and an attack is made on the public right of a province as under this legislation, some protection ought to be afforded to the people of that province. There are two ways to meet it. Perhaps the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) will come to my way of meeting it, and that is by making the maximum passenger rate in this country two cents a mile.

Mr. GRAHAM. That would cover it.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. That would cover, largely, my objection; for the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knows that I have often discussed across the floor whether we are gradually going in the direction of a legislative union or not. I believe we are going headlong in that direction. It may be in the interests of Canada that we should do so, but leaving that aside and coming back to the question, I rise in order to ask the Minister of Railways to state whether he thinks that we ought to pass legislation of this kind interfering with the operation of a provincial railway and enabling that railway to evade what it undertook to do under the Ontario Act. If there is any fact that is clear beyond a doubt, it is that these railways, created in Ontario, were satisfied to perform the duty of giving the people, are giving the people, a two cent a mile transportation. And they come here and ask to be brought under Dominion jurisdiction for the purpose of evading that obligation. We must deal with that one way or the other, either by making a maximum passenger rate of two cents a mile —and I hope that this will have the support of the Minister of Railways, for he must move in my way if he wishes to maintain his stand before the people as the friend of public rights—or let this legislation go through. For that reason, I call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) and of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to the issue raised, which certainly ought to receive attention from the House on this occasion.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM. (Minister of Railways and Canals). I did not know that my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) would put it in the form of a question, but I could guess what would be in his mind if he considered this Bill at all. Now, I will refer to the two cent a mile question before I sit down. What makes the difference of opinion, I find, in reference to this railway and other railways is this: During the last ten years—yes, during the last five years—there has been almost a revolution in the application of electricity to traction systems. A few years ago it was not thought that any railway except in some town or city, or for short distances outside would be run by electricity. But to-day we find railway trains being taken from New York city to Albany by electricity; we find the Grand Trunk trains being drawn through the Sarnia tunnel by electricity; we find trains in various parts of the continent run by electricity. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) surely will not say that these roads, because they are run by electric power——

Mr. BRISTOL. May I correct the hon. minister? I did not make any such argument. I took purely the provincial and local character of the work as a reason.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend mentioned electricity several times. I attach no importance whatever to the propelling power of a railway but rather to the functions that the railway will perform. If a railway is going to perform a duty to the public of such an enlarged character that it ought to be brought under Dominion jurisdiction, then it makes no difference what the propelling power is. In a few years from now, and it may be a shorter time than most of us think, we may and probably will find the American roads running across the peninsula of Ontario operated by electricity. Will any one say that these ought to be excluded from general jurisdiction merely because they change from steam to electricity?

We come to a very important question about this railway. It has been under provincial jurisdiction so far as it has been constructed, but the chief part of the construction, which will be the most expensive part, is bringing it into the city of Toronto underground. When the Bill was first discussed a year ago in this House and elsewhere this was not contemplated, but let me point out to my hon. friend that the question raised and raised as the paramount one both by the city of Toronto and others was that the municipalities were not going to be protected if this road were allowed to go from provincial jurisdiction to federal jurisdiction. To-day the city of Toronto, which raised many objections to this Bill before, has come to an agreement and given its consent to this railway entering that municipality on terms agreed upon. The city of Hamilton has done likewise. In order to protect other municipalities that did not take the pains to make any agreement, we have placed one clause in the Bill saying that this line, although a Dominion line, cannot run on the streets or highways of any municipality, township, village, town or city without first getting the consent of that municipality as expressed by by-law. We have inserted another clause which says that this company cannot distribute or sell power to any person in any municipality owning its own light and power plant. We have protected the municipalities, but my hon. friend says that we have not the machinery. I believe that when the Railway Commission, the servant of this parliament, is enlarged and has its duties fully outlined, in the amended Act, it will have all the powers necessary to enforce an agreement between any railway company under federal jurisdiction and any municipality or individaul. If that be the case my hon. friend must agree that the municipalities are protected.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Then the minister agrees that there is no existing or present machinery or powers vested in the Dominion Railway Commission to safeguard and protect these municipal rights?

Mr. GRAHAM. Oh, I have not said that at all because I think the experience of the last two or three years is proof to the contrary, but I am saying that when the commission is augmented and its duties are enlarged there cannot be any doubt as to the time and power of this commission being sufficient to attend to these duties and to enforce agreements as between the municipalities and the railway companies or between individuals and the railway companies. That being true, the municipalities are protected.

The greatest objection to this Bill as heretofore brought out, has been in this way removed. I might say to my hon. friend who is zealous in protecting the interests of the provinces, that he is no more zealous in that protection than I am. I think he will agree that even so far as his own city is concerned, I have gone to the extent of using my influence to protect it from encroachment by a province in provincial matters on several occasions. But we come to the point: Is this road entitled to Dominion legislation? If it is then any question as to provincial rights or federal rights must stand aside in the light of that fact. I have studied this question as carefully as a layman can; I think I have given to the subject as much attention as any one in the House possibly could, because I am very anxious that such friction as has arisen in the past shall not arise again between the Dominion and the provinces—not only Ontario but the different provinces. We ought to be able to arrive at some policy by which people who wish to invest money in these enterprises could be encouraged to do so, and the work expedited without our quarrelling as to who shall have jurisdiction. There must be some way of doing it and a right way. I am free to make an acknowledgement on behalf of this parliament, as to its past sins because I was not here. I am free to admit that in my opinion Dominion legislation has been given to enterprises that might well have remained under provincial jurisdiction. I am free to admit that; but if there was ever a road propelled by electricity that was entitled to federal legislation, this road now under consideration is one. I am not discussing for a moment the legal aspect, I know the force of the objection raised by hon. gentlemen as to passing an Act of parliament confirming a legal decision. I am not discussing that; but if there be force in that it would be one reason, small or great as we look at it. Some people have said this road is under Dominion jurisdiction per se by a certain court decision. I will not argue that, that is one reason small or great according to the point of view.

There is another reason, that is the international character of the road. Some hon. gentlemen say that is only advanced as an excuse to get the road under Dominion jurisdiction. I cannot bring myself to the point of believing that any person comes to this House seriously and presents a Bill not in good faith. I am prepared to take hon. gentlemen who discuss these matters and gentlemen outside the House who present these Bills as acting in good faith with us as fellow-citizens. That is another reason. If these two reasons do not weigh, I offer the opinion, humble as it may be, that the functions which this road will perform and the character of the road itself entitle it to Dominion jurisdiction. Originally these electric roads were run along the highways, they were built with a light rail, with a comparatively inferior car, not carrying freight to any extent; and these roads were the creatures to a certain extent of the municipalities, because they had to run along the highways, and had to get agreements with the municipalities. They were not well graded but were cheap roads, running up and down hill, with comparatively cheap rolling stock. I find that this road is altogether different. For almost its entire length it has its own right of way purchased; it will have an 80-pound rail equal to the rail on the great transcontinental roads. It has heavy rolling stock that can be exchanged with the rolling stock on the other great lines. In that connection it is a through road and its equipment and all these things must come under Dominion jurisdiction.

As to the question of rates, it is estimated that this road will expend $3,000,000 in its terminals and its entry into the city of Toronto. That takes it altogether out of the region of the ordinary electric road that runs along a highway and spends a few thousand dollars in its equipment. Does not that put it under a different classification? As to the rate mentioned, if this road is to perform the function of a Dominion road, if it is to have the rolling stock necessary, if it is to carry passengers like the other great roads, why is it not entitled to come under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board of Canada which can say, after thoroughly investigating the matter itself, because of the character of the road and the duty it performs, that the rates it shall charge both for freight and passengers, shall be the same as those charged on a like road which is not run by electricity?

Now, Sir, there is another question which my hon. friend raised that I think ought to be referred to. The Ontario government and this government has been discussing this question back and forth and I tell the House frankly that both sides are honestly endeavouring to come to some arrangement which will obviate any friction. This identical Bill has not been made the fighting ground for negotiations. It could not be made the fighting ground for negotiations between the governments because these negotiations will be of a far wider character than anything that is contained in this Bill. Possibly this Bill would not come under any arrangement that we would arrive at. But, the provincial government made certain suggestions. I could not agree with these suggestions. I am not at liberty, through courtesy, to tell the House what these suggestions were as the negotiations are still proceeding. We have in turn submitted a memorandum to the Ontario government. I can tell my hon. friend from Centre Toronto that, leaving out this Bill altogether, a great deal of the difficulties that he perceives as to what may happen as to a lot of small and purely provincial roads and street railways being brought under Dominion jurisdiction, if we come to an arrangement between the two governments may not be encountered and that may be his fears will be altogether groundless. Further than that I dare not go at the present time. This is not a government Bill. I am merely expressing the opinion I have formed on this Bill after studying it for hours. I believe this company is entitled to legislation at the hands of this House. I am firmly of the opinion that it cannot get the legislation that it requires from any other source than from the federal parliament.

Mr. BRISTOL. I do not want to delay this discussion merely for the purpose of discussing the Bill but I do not think I have heard, and I have listened very attentively to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, any statement as regards the policy I was endeavouring to suggest as a fair and reasonable policy upon which legislation of this kind should be granted. If an electric railway—and I am not using the word 'electric' in any special sense—but a railway of this character gets its powers from a province, I take it that it is essentially a railway which the province declares to be a local work and undertaking; therefore it cannot be said that it is not a provincial railway, and it cannot have any special object in coming here. The mere fact that it is going to expend $2.000.000 or $3.000,000 in terminals in the city of Toronto is no reason why we should grant it legislation.

Terminals in New York and other cities are provided at the cost of a great many millions of dollars. The only ground that the hon. gentleman suggested in regard to which there was doubt on the question of local jurisdiction was one which he said he declined to argue. The fact of a railway of this character being extensive and covering all parts of the province is no ground in the world for coming to this parliament for legislation. Why ?—because the powers of these companies are got from the local legislature and they can get legislation there as they are within the limit of the province. Upon what principle should we adopt this Bill? The only principle upon which we could adopt this Bill is that the company needs federal powers and I would say to that extent we should give it power, but not otherwise. Hon. gentlemen talk about agreements with provinces, but the question I am trying to argue is a question that has been long ago settled by the British North America Act which left this local work to the provinces. It gets its charter from the province and it can get its legislation from the province. If it is that it wants to cross the Niagara or the Detroit river that will not enter into the principle at all.

Mr. HARTY. How do you place your securities ?

Mr. BRISTOL. I will not object to giving it power to cross these rivers.

Mr. HARTY. You divide the jurisdiction and you make the bonds sell for less money.

Mr. BRISTOL. I do not want to repeat my argument to the hon. member for Kingston because I know he does not need it and I think that this question of divided jurisdiction is perfectly well understood. I think that we might as well place a street railway under Dominion jurisdiction because passengers get off a street car and get on to the cars of the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railways. But, they have dealt with this question in the Railway Act all through. Parliament has said that where a provincial road crosses a Dominion road only in so far as the crossing is concerned shall it be subject to the jurisdiction of this parliament.

Mr. CONMEE. Pardon me.

Mr. BRISTOL. Let finish my statement.

Mr. CONMEE. I want to ask the hon. gentleman a question.

Mr. BRISTOL. I object to the question until I finish my sentence.

Mr. CONMEE. I merely want to put the hon. gentleman right.

Mr. BRISTOL. I will let him put me right as soon as I finish my sentence.

Mr. CONMEE. All right.

Mr. BRISTOL. I say that parliament has, by the general Railway Act, declared that a local work or undertaking which crosses a Dominion railway only becomes subject to the Railway Act of Canada in so far as a crossing is concerned. Why should that principle be different or cause any trouble if you simply give this company power to cross the Niagara or Detroit rivers if it chooses to do so? If my hon. friend wants to ask me a question I will give him an opportunity to do so.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman, I remember, made the statement in the Railway Committee, and he has stated it here several times that the Railway Act provides that where another railway——

Mr. BRISTOL. Local railway.

Mr. CONMEE. Local railway crosses a Dominion road it becomes a Dominion railway as far as that crossing is concerned.

Mr. BRISTOL. Under Dominion legislation.

Mr. CONMEE. At the crossing only ?

Mr. BRISTOL. Yes.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend is wrong. The word 'only' is not there. The section has not any such meaning as that.

Mr. BRISTOL. The hon. gentleman is dealing with the Railway Act of 1888. It certainly is just as he says, but I am talking of the present Railway Act—the Act of 1906. The hon. gentleman is qute right as regards section 306 of the Act of 1888.

Mr. CONMEE. Does the hon. gentleman pretend that the Act of 1888 which was passed by this parliament and which brought local roads under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada by reason of connections and crossings has been changed by subsequent legislation ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, by the Act of 1903.

Mr. CONMEE. I would like some hon. gentleman to show that.

Mr. LANCASTER. The statute that we passed in 1903 does what the hon. gentleman says he wants to know about. I will read the whole section. It shows distinctly that that was the purpose and although the word 'only' is not in the section the meaning is quite clearly stated.

Mr. CONMEE. There are some gentlemen who can read any meaning into a statute.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the hon. gentleman who is asking the question is perhaps one of them. Perhaps he has been looking in a mirror and fancies others are like himself. I will read section 8 :

Every railway, steam or electric street railway or tramway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by special Act of the legislature of any province, and which connects with or crosses or may hereafter connect with or cross any railway within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, shall although not declared by parliament to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, be subject to the provisions of this Act relating to:

(a) The connection or crossing of one railway or tramway with or or by another, so far as concerns the aforesaid connection or crossing.

(b) The through traffic upon a railway or tramway and all matters appertaining thereto.

(c) Criminal matters, including offences and penalties; and

(d) Navigable waters.

We have here in section 8 an enactment saying how far and how far only these railways shall be connecting or crossing under this Act, and it is as plain as it can be that it is for these purposes only they are under the Act.

Mr. BRISTOL. That Act was not in force in 1897, and I am not claiming it was.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the point.

Mr. BRISTOL. I have too much respect for the feelings of my hon. friend to go into a long argument on that point. But I want to get some expression from the minister of his view on the question of policy. I am trying hard to argue as a matter of principle that the money expended, or the function, or whether it is run by steam or electricity, has nothing to do with the question. If it has its charter from the province as a local undertaking the principle we should adopt is the public welfare first, and for that reason only should we assume jurisdiction. As a matter of public welfare I argue that it is better now and in the future to leave railways which do local work as far as possible in the hands of the province which brought them into existence, and if they have outgrown their clothes and want to go outside of the province, we will look after them to that extent only, and the Railway Act does that to-day .

Mr. CONMEE. I cannot agree with the learned gentlemen opposite that this Act wipes out the legislation of 1883. There is nothing in the Act which repeals the previous legislation.

Mr. LANCASTER. It says: 'Which does or hereafter may.' The words 'which does' are surplusage if it does not mean roads which were then doing it.

Mr. CONMEE. After the passage of the legislation of 1883 was there not an action arose where a man got hurt and it was claimed that the provincial courts had no jurisdiction as the road was for the general advantage of Canada?

Mr. LANCASTER. Because it had a special Act of parliament afterwards.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is so, and it makes all the difference.

Mr. CONMEE. I have heard some pretty good lawyers for whose opinion I had respect, Sir Oliver Mowat and Christopher Fraser, discuss the question in the legislature, and the hon. gentleman will find if he looks back far enough that this enactment was because of the very fact that these doubts did arise. It was not that this parliament had not jurisdiction to declare a road for the general advantage of Canada by reason of its crossing a Dominion road, but that these minor details which are enumerated were not covered by the previous legislation.

Mr. LANCASTER. If these railways were under the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament that section would not apply to them. It applies to roads which are provincial in their character. If they were works for the general advantage of Canada they would be under the jurisdiction of this Act for all purposes, and it is only because they are not works for the general advantage of Canada that we say they should be under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission for these purposes.

Mr. CONMEE. Was that dealt with previously by any legislation ?

Mr. LANCASTER. In 1903 we said that these provincial railways should become subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission for the purposes enumerated in that section and for these purposes only.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman stated that the legislation of 1893 wiped out the legislation of 1883.

Mr. LANCASTER. I did not put it as broadly as that.

Mr. CONMEE. We have the opinion of the Minister of Justice, the guiding legal mind of this House to say that we cannot divest ourselves of the power which we took in 1903.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is a different thing altogether.

Mr. CONMEE. I say that the one Act is an elaboration of the other and to make the other more clear.

Mr. BRISTOL. It is conceded that if we once have legally declared that a railway comes under federal jurisdiction, it is here to stay. The legislation shows that on this question of through traffic and crossings we have exercised a divided jurisdiction, and I was arguing by analogy that you could do the same thing with the bridge at Niagara or the ferry at Detroit. This railway comes to us and says it has doubts whether it is under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada or not, and it wants this parliament to declare that it is. Well, that is not one of our functions in this parliament; that is a question that we have power to refer to our friends in the supreme court to let them decide. If the supreme court decides this railway is under our jurisdiction, the argument is concluded; if the Supreme Court says it is not, it is a question of policy, and as a question of policy I have been urging that we should not bring them under the jurisdiction except so far as it is necessary in the public interest.

On section 4,

Mr. BRISTOL. I might say, in order to avoid repetition, that the same objections which I have taken to section 3 I wish to be considered as taken to the Bill from beginning to end.

Mr. GRAHAM. The agreement with Toronto is all right?

Mr. BRISTOL. I am arguing from a provincial standpoint, as a matter of public policy.

On section 10,

Mr. HENDERSON. I have given notice of an amendment which I propose to move to this section. The section provides:

Nothing in this Act contained, or done under or by virtue of the powers hereby granted, shall alter or affect the provisions contained in any by-law of any municipality heretofore passed relating to the company, or to any portion of the company's railway heretofore or hereafter constructed, or contained in any agreement between any municipality and the company; but all such agreements and by-laws shall continue and remain in full force as between the municipality and the company as continued and incorporated by this Act; and in case of any inconsistency between the provisions contained in any such by-law or agreement and the provisions of the Railway Act, the provisions contained in the by-law or agreement shall prevail, and all such by-laws and agreements and all rights, franchises, privileges and exemptions of the company thereunder are hereby confirmed.

The question has been raised whether or not an agreement made between a railway company which is declared to be for the general advantage of Canada and a municipality, can be enforced, or whether there may be difficulty in enforcing such an agreement; and in order to make it more binding upon the company to observe the agreements and by-laws made with the different municipalities, I propose to move an amendment which would penalize the company if it failed to give effect to these by-laws and agreements. I may say that I have in my hands copies of by-laws and agreements made between the Hamilton Electric Railway Company and the village of Burlington and also the town of Oakville in the county of Halton. I am informed that the township of Nelson and the township of Trafalgar in that county also have agreements of a somewhat similar character. My desire is to provide beyond all doubt that these municipalities shall get all the benefits that accrue to them under these by-laws and agreements, even although the railway is declared to be a railway for the general advantage of Canada, assuming that prior to this it was not so. These agreements bear on different matters. I shall enumerate only a few. For instance, in the Burlington by-law provision is made that the railway company should run at least six passenger trains a day between the city of Hamilton and the village of Burlington, that it should run an early train about six o'clock in the morning; provisions with regard to the construction of sewers; provision that cars should stop at certain places, that the company should make certain street repairs, that it should remove snow and ice on certain conditions; provisions with regard to the running rates, whether four miles an hour or less, in the village; provisions with regard to the price of tickets, that from Burlington to Burlington canal the price should not exceed five cents, and from Burlington to the city of Hamilton and return not more than twenty-five cents; provision that the company was to employ careful conductors, and other provisions. In Oakville the company was to macadamize certain streets, pay certain damages, carry school pupils at a special rate from such places as Bronté and other points east of Oakville, the cars were to have certain headlights, and in Oakville they were to have a limited rate of speed. What I desire is to make sure that the company will carry out these agreements with the different municipalities, and I propose to penalize the company if it fails to do so. If the company carries out the agreements which it has made with these municipalities no harm can possibly come to it from my amendment; therefore I contend that I am not doing an injury to the company. At the same time, it would satisfy the people of the county who have given certain privileges to this railway company. With this provision I want to see this railway constructed from the city of Hamilton to the city of Toronto; I do not wish to block it in any way. I therefore beg to move, seconded by Mr. Blain:

That the following proviso be added to section 10 of the said Bill:

Provided that in the event of the company at any time failing to conform to, or carry out any of the provisions contained in any such by-laws or agreements as are herein referred to, or as may be hereafter made between the said company and any municipality, then the powers of operation granted to the company, or vested therein, shall cease and be null and void, so long as said company fails to conform to or carry out such provisions as aforesaid.

Mr. CLARKE. This section was very carefully considered by the committee, and the committee were of the opinion that the amendment was one which ought not to be inserted in the Bill ; and if my hon. friend will consider the amendment he proposes, in view of the paragraphs of the agreement which he has pointed out, I think he will find that the amendment would really defeat the object he has in view. For instance, one of the provisions is that the cars shall run six times within a certain length of time. Suppose there is a default in that provision ; his amendment is that if they do not run six times within that time, then their right to operate shall be null and void so long as they fail to perform that agreement ; that is, they would have no right to run the cars at all so long as they do not run them at that rate. That would be the effect of his amendment. I quite appreciate the desire of these municipalities to have the agreements carried out, but it seems to me that this amendment would seriously affect the powers of the company. Suppose anything should happen, it is always a matter of doubt whether there has been a breach of the agreement or not. The municipality may say there has been and the company may say there has not. Who is to determine whether or not the power of operation will cease ? The dispute will have to come before a court or some commission, and this amendment would lead to great confusion. Because of a dispute with one municipality, this road, which will affect a great many other municipalities, would have to suspend operating, and consequently the amendment proposed would not carry out what is desired. Either the powers already given are ample, or if not, there ought to be a general amendment applicable to all railways and which would affect all municipalities. Last year this clause 10 was offered to meet the views of the municipalities with which agreements had been made, and I understood it was satisfactory to them. Should there be a breach as regards the selling of tickets, surely, if there be no remedy in the Railway Commission, there is always a remedy to be found in the courts, and I do not think that the running of the road should cease on account of that dispute.

Mr. BLAIN. Does clause 10 cover the point suggested by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. CLARKE. I think it absolutely confirms all agreements that have been made. If there is a breach, there is a proper remedy, and it would be dangerous for us to say that the remedy should be the tieing up of the service to all the people because of a dispute with some particular municipality.

Mr. HENDERSON. The illustration given by the hon. gentleman is not a very happy one. In one of the by-laws, the provision is made that the company shall run trains, say from Burlington to Hamilton, six times a day every day. If they run a train five times a day, that would be undoubtedly a breach of the agreement.

Mr. CLARKE. Then you would compel it to stop running?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, until they run six times a day. If they run six times a day they are keeping up to their agreement. The breach then would be healed. There is only a breach so long as they fail to conform with their agreement. The same may be said with regard to the railway fares. There is a provision made for the carrying of school children at reduced rates, quite under 2 cents a mile. Should they exact a higher rate, that would be certainly a breach of the agreement, and they would have no right to run under their charter unless they ceased to charge the extra price.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. gentleman favour the tieing up of the road and depriving all the people of its use just because there is a dispute as to whether or not the tickets are sold at proper fares? I know a railway in Essex which had a dispute before the Railway Commission as to whether or not certain pupils of a certain age came within the privileged fare. Such a dispute might arise, and you would deprive the whole public of the use of the road because the company in good faith insisted on what they considered their rights.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no desire to block the road or to prevent it running. My desire is to see it built from Hamilton to Toronto, and I do not want at all to interfere with its operation. But the people in my county are apprehensive. They have certain agreements with that company, and say the company have not lived up to them, and this is the only way I could suggest to force it to comply with them. So long as the company lives up to its other agreements there is no danger of their power of operating being interfered with.

Mr. TAYLOR. Might I suggest that as the Bill has to stand over for clauses one and two, this clause should also stand over and let the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. GRAHAM. These clauses are not objectionable at all except this one. If we could clear up all the clauses except this one or two and adopt the others, we would make some progress. The question of railways being obliged to carry out their agreements and of providing some machinery for specific performance of their contract, is a large one. I am inclined to think that while my hon. friend's object is good, his method of carrying it out would not be effective. That was threshed out in the Railway Committee, and it was finally decided that that would not be a good remedy. My hon. friend can be assured of this, that when the clauses amending the Railway Act are introduced, he will, I think, see one that will provide so far as is practicable, for the cases he suggests.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no knowledge of what is in the mind of the Minister of Railways and of what provisions will be in his promised Bill. They may meet my approval and they may not, and my constituents want a safeguard of this kind, and it is better to be safe than sorry. I am willing to leave it to the committee to say whether this provision should be put into the Bill or not. True the committee is a small one, but I have no doubt it will do what is right and proper, and if the committee decides that this is a fair amendment I shall feel grateful.

Mr. CONMEE. I would ask the hon. member if he does not think the point he has raised is fairly well covered by section 10. That keeps alive all by-laws of the municipalities; it keeps in force all agreements as between the municipalities and the company. The company, if I understand that clause correctly, will not be in a worse position after the Bill is passed than it would be if the Bill was never passed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I quite understand that the intention of clause 10 is to keep in force all these agreements. But I want, beyond all doubt, to see that they are enforced, and I know of no better way than to say: If you do not live up to your agreement, you must lose your powers.

Mr. CONMEE. You want to put a new obligation on them.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think the company would allow themselves to get into default—they would have too much at stake. I noticed the other day an article on this resolution, I think in the Brantford 'Courier,' commending it as a splendid amendment, and stating that it was one that ought to be included in all railway charters. I do not know whether the Minister of Railways in the new legislation he proposes, will include it or not. But he will see that some of those outside this House regard it as a fair provision. As I said, if the committee think this a proper amendment, I should feel grateful; if they think it not a fair amendment, I must abide the consequences.

Amendment (Mr. Henderson) negatived.

On section 12,

The company may, subject to the provisions of sections 361, 362 and 363 of the Railway Act, enter into any agreement or agreements, for any of the purposes mentioned in the said section 361, with the Brantford and Hamilton Electric Railway Company and the Hamilton and Dundas Street Railway Company, or either of them; but it shall not, without the consent of the council of the city of Hamilton expressed by by-law, enter into an agreement or agreements for any of the said purposes with the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway Company, the Hamilton Street Railway Company, or any other street railway company whose railway may be constructed or operated in the said city of Hamilton.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have an amendment here of which I gave notice three or four days ago, and which is to be found in the Votes and Proceedings. I move that amendment as follows:

To amend section 12 of said Bill by adding after the word 'with' in the fourth line of the said section 'the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway Company,' and by striking out the words 'the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Company.' in the ninth and tenth lines of the said section.

We discussed this shortly in the committee just before adjournment on the day we reported the Bill. We did not vote upon it. I did not actually put the amendment before the chair, but I discussed the principle. But we were anxious to report the Bill as we had been several days upon it. If the clause were passed as proposed, the effect would be that the city of Hamilton could prevent this road from amalgamating with the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway. I am one of those who support this Bill, and I do it because the railway is to run to the Niagara river and the Detroit river, and I believe that we should not have two capitalizations for the same company, and as the extension would make at least part of the railway a Dominion road, it is better to have it all under one jurisdiction. Now, for twenty-one miles from Hamilton, the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway runs toward the Niagara river, within half a mile, or a mile at most, of the line over which this railway must build from Hamilton through the city of St. Catharines. This Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville road runs within twelve miles or St. Catharines. The ordinary way of dealing with this road would be to provide that the present railway might amalgamate with it and save twenty-one miles of building, subject, of course, to the consent of the Railway Commission. There is no reason why the city of Hamilton should have the say as to whether this amalgamation should take place or not. I do not wish to interfere with Hamilton, and section 5 of the Bill provides everything for the protection of that city within its proper limits. But there is no reason why the city of Hamilton should be able to say to the counties of Lincoln and Wentworth: This city must be the judge of whether amalgamation shall take place between these two electric railways which run far beyond the limits of the city. If Hamilton were to prevent this amalgamation, it would mean that this road would have to parallel that of the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Railway or might be compelled otherwise to submit to most unreasonable terms. They would parallel each other within half a mile or a mile at the most through that territory. If they are given that right in this Bill that city would have such a power in the matter that they could dictate to this railway the most undesirable terms.

As the Prime Minister stated, we are here passing legislation in the interests of the people. Surely here is an objection from the people's standpoint. We want the railway constructed and surely it is not in the interests of the people that the city of Hamilton should be allowed to usurp the powers conferred on the Railway Commission by sections 361, 362 and 363 of the Railway Act to prevent the amalgamation of these roads in this fruit district. If Hamilton has any valid objection the city could state it before the Railway Commission in the ordinary way and no one would suggest that the city would not be given justice by the commission. The city under this bill could prevent the road from building to St. Catharines and the Niagara boundary. My amendment, if it carries, even if there was an agreement, between the city of Hamilton and the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville road, would save the duplication of twenty-one miles of track that has been operated for years; and if such an amalgamation should be proposed, the city could go before the Railway Commission, present their argument and take care that the amalgamation shall not affect any right of the city of Hamilton. It is not proper that this road should be treated as if it were a street railway in the city of Hamilton and made subject to the arbitrary power of that city.

Mr. CONMEE. How far does the amendment go? Does it go beyond merely providing the machinery, leaving it to the parties to agree as to the amalgamation ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Under my amendment, sections 361, 362 and 363, of the Railway Act would apply to the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville road, while the Bill as it at present stands would not.

Mr. CONMEE. Does the agreement force them to amalgamate or does it leave it to them ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Oh no, it does not force them. The section as amended would read :

The company may, subject to the provisions of sections 361, 362 and 363 of the Railway Act, enter into any agreement or agreements, for any of the purposes mentioned in the said section 361, with the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway, Brantford and Hamilton Electric Railway Company and the Hamilton and Dundas Street Railway Company, or either of them.

These latter two roads are already mentioned in the Bill.

Mr. GRAHAM. And strike out the balance of the section.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is the last part to which I object :

But it shall not, without the consent of the council of the city of Hamilton expressed by by-law, enter into agreement or agreements for any of the said purposes with the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway Company, the Hamilton Street Railway Company, or any other street railway company whose railway may be constructed or operated in the said city of Hamilton.

Mr. CONMEE. Suppose your amendment carries and an amalgamation takes place, I understand that this railway is, under the by-laws of Hamilton or agreements, not allowed to do a street railway business within the limits of the city of Hamilton. Would they by this amendment acquire that right?

Mr. LANCASTER. No, they have to make their agreement and to make it subject to the Railway Commission.

Mr. CONMEE. I agree that Hamilton ought not to have power outside of the city but would they have that power ? Hamilton has a right to protect itself and I want to find out how you propose to give them that protection.

Mr. LANCASTER. In the first place section 5 of this very Bill deals with some rights of the city of Hamilton; if it has any other rights not covered by section 5, they are protected by the general amendment discussed here to-night which preserves all the rights of municipalities under agreements or by-laws which shall remain in force. What would be the position ? The worst that could happen to the road would be that the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville road would make an arrangement, which this company would be willing to make because they would save the building of 21 miles of unnecessary road and would go to the Railway Commission and would ask for ratification. The Railway Commission in such a case would fully protect the rights of the city of Hamilton. There is a general clause in this Bill that any agreements they make are to be held absolutely binding. That general clause applies to all municipalities, in addition to the clause which specially protects Hamilton.

Mr. HAGGART. Agreements made in the future or in the past ?

Mr. LANCASTER. In the past.

Mr. CONMEE. I understand that there is an agreement ?

Mr. BARKER. Yes, certainly.

Mr. LANCASTER. I understand there is too.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member is making the point that if the amendment carries, Hamilton would still be protected, because the Railway Commission in all reason would treat the city with justice.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman is asking something that the company never asked or applied for in this Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is no reason.

Mr. BARKER. You are trying to stick into a private Bill something of which the company never gave notice of application. The company did not ask it, the other company did not ask for it, it is the hon. gentleman, who has nothing to do with it, who asks it. This is a private Bill. The city of Hamilton gave the Grimsby road privileges that it would not give to this company, and yet the hon. gentleman, without understanding the situation or knowing anything about it——

Mr. LANCASTER. Oh I know all about it.

Mr. BARKER. You have no interest in it.

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, I have more than the city of Hamilton.

Mr. BARKER. The Hamilton and Grimsby road have a contract with Hamilton which the city would not give to the company that is applying here; and yet the hon. member says: Give it to them and you can enforce the agreement. That you could not do. The hon. member is seeking without notice to anybody to force on the city of Hamilton and on this company something that was never asked for at all. If that is the way that legislation is to go on here some gentleman might ask that any other company might be stuck into this and apply all the provisions of this Bill to it. These provisions are not drawn by either party with the view to amalgamation with the Grimsby road. The city of Hamilton would not grant to this company which is applying for this Bill privileges that it did once give to the Grimsby road.

Mr. CONMEE. Wherein would Hamilton be prejudiced if the hon. gentleman's motion carried?

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman want the agreement turned over to this company?

Mr. LANCASTER. All I want is that if you do make an agreement it shall be done by the Railway Commission.

Mr. BARKER. He is asking that the agreement which has been made with the Grimsby road shall be turned over to this company.

Mr. CONMEE.

Mr. LANCASTER. No.

Mr. BARKER. That is it if you amalgamate.

Mr. LANCASTER. You cannot amalgamate without you are granted the power to do so.

Mr. BARKER. If you give this company that is applying for this Bill the power to unite with the Grimsby company, and it does, it at once acquires for ever all that was once given to the Grimsby road, which the city would never agree to, and that is why this company, in agreeing with the city of Hamilton, expressly excluded this privilege.

Mr. LANCASTER. My hon. friend has not heard what I said. I am saying in my amendment that if these two railways do make an agreement it shall be subject to the control of the railway commission. If the hon. gentleman had not put this last clause in his Bill there might be some merit in his argument, but he has put in the Bill that if they do make an agreement the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission shall be ousted and the city of Hamilton shall be sole judge as to whether the agreement is good or not. Where is there any authority for any city coming and saying that it should oust the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission? He does not want this amendment because the company has not asked for it. Are we chartering railway companies because they want to be chartered or are we chartering them because the country wants them chartered? Surely the hon. gentleman will not say because the city of Hamilton does not choose to agree upon the Bill all precedents of this House must be set aside and that 214 members of this House shall have nothing to say as to the reasonableness or propriety of this legislation? The hon. gentleman is afraid that some agreement might be made between these two companies which would be violating an agreement with the city of Hamilton. He is afraid that a mile or a mile and a half of this road might be affected and he is willing to throw away the benefits of 21 miles by putting it all under such agreement. But it should not be forgotten that no agreement that these people could make could possibly have any effect except it received the sanction of the Railway Commission and of the Governor in Council. The Railway Commissioners can only recommend it and they have to go to the Governor in Council with the recommendation of the Railway Commissioners before the amalgamation of the two companies can have any effect. Would my hon. friend say that the Governor in Council is going to order that a wrong agreement be made and is not going to protect the city of Hamilton or that the Railway Commissioners are going to recommend to the Governor in Council to deliberately throw away the rights of the city of Hamilton? If the hon. gentleman's arrangement is carried out all I can say is that, the city having absolute power, can wantonly and without any good reason say we will not allow these companies to amalgamate. The Bill says that no matter how much the amalgamation may be to the benefit of the country it shall be of no effect except the city of Hamilton permits it. But has the city of Hamilton the right to usurp the powers of the Railway Commission? Surely the hon. gentleman can trust the Railway Commission to recommend to the Governor in Council not to allow the amalgamation to have any effect if Hamilton is going to be hurt by such an amalgamation. If they fully protect the rights of the municipalities then the ordinary provisions of sections 361, 362 and 363 shall apply to these two companies. The stock of the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railways is owned by the people who are building this road. My hon. friend says the company have not asked for it. What was said in the Railway Committee? They said that the only reason why they did not like my amendment was that they were bound in honour not to ask for it. The promoters of this road would like to have this amalgamation if it were properly made, but they said that the city of Hamilton would not agree except it was removed from the Railway Commissioners. Hon. gentlemen who advocated this Bill in the Railway Committee were honourable men. Colonel Gibson, who was one of the promoters of the Bill, frankly and honestly said not that my amendment was not the right one, but that it would be showing bad faith towards the city of Hamilton who had received the pledge of the promoters not to amalgamate with the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville road without their consent.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am astonished at the argument of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). We have listened to the hon. member for Lincoln for hours and hours at a time pleading for provincial and municipal jurisdiction. Now he comes to this House and asks this committee to deliberately break an agreement that was entered into between this company and the city of Hamilton.

Mr. LANCASTER. No.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I beg your pardon, that is just what you are asking to-day. The promoter of this Bill, Lt.-Colonel Gibson, was before the committee when this amendment was moved by the hon. member for Lincoln, and Lt.-Colonel Gibson positively declined to accept it. He said it would be breaking faith with the city of Hamilton.

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, if it is this agreement it is certainly. I objected to the making of the agreement.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I for one, as a representative of the city of Hamilton, ask this committee to vote that amendment down. I have a letter here from the city solicitor of Hamilton. I will not read it all as it is not necessary :

Should the Radial be allowed to amalgamate with the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Railway Company a system of street railways could be operated in the city of Hamilton by the Radial Company, irrespective of the Hamilton Street Railway Company, and the city of Hamilton would have an additional street railway system under the Dominion jurisdiction (for the general advantage of Canada) which company would operate on the streets of our city without paying any percentage to the city corporation.

I desire to impress upon you the fact that the provision in section 10 respecting the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway Company was inserted in the Bill pursuant to an agreement between the Radial Company and the city of Hamilton, the object being to safeguard the city of Hamilton in the operation of street railways in the city.

Mr. LANCASTER. At the expense of the whole Niagara district.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Not at the expense of any person, but to meet the wish of the city of Hamilton. This is a solemn agreement between the railway company and the city of Hamilton. The railway company has not asked it and the city of Hamilton has not asked for this amendment.

Mr. BARKER. Neither has the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Nor as the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Railway Company. I may say further to my hon friend that this Bill provides that the connection to be made with the radial railway shall be at the corner of Birch avenue and Wilson street, and consequently it is the intention of this company to build a through line on a different basis entirely from the lines of the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville.

Mr. LANCASTER. My amendment does not hurt you there.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I must ask the committee to keep faith in this matter with the city of Hamilton.

Mr. LENNOX. This is a matter of such importance that we ought to be very cool about it and we ought to have a larger attendance of members to deal with it than we have to-night. I have never before seen in a Bill a provision such as this—that we shall allow any city or any municipality to control the general policy of the Railway Act and that is what we are doing here. If Hamilton has rights which should be respected and which would make it improper that we should authorize an amalgamation between the Grimsby railway and this road we are chartering, we should know exactly what that agreement is ; we should consider the effect of that agreement and define clearly what the rights of Hamilton are. We should not allow the city of Hamilton, or any other city to say hereafter that although this parliament says that there may be amalgamation between certain lines, that amalgamation shall not take place unless the city sees fit to allow it. We are discharging our duty now and if there is to be any qualification engrafted on this legislation so as to protect the rights of Hamilton under this agreement, let us know what the agreement is, so that we may respect those rights ; or, otherwise leave it to what has been said to be the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. But it is not the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission ; it is the jurisdiction of the Governor in Council as the board can only make a recommendation, and so you have the cabinet as a protection for the rights of Hamilton.

Mr. BARKER. How would the hon. gentleman like it for St. Catharines ?

Mr LANCASTER. I would not be so unreasonable as to attempt any such thing in this House ; no one but a man from Hamilton would either.

Mr. LENNOX. We have been arguing ourselves hoarse about protecting the rights of municipalities and respecting the bargains they have made. We can go too far in that because if the municipality of Hamilton is to control the rights which shall be exercised by a railway through the county of Wentworth you can see at once it is unfair. We say in section 10 that the agreement entered into by the municipality shall be respected and where there is a conflict, and in case of any inconsistency between the provisions of any such by-law or agreement and the provisions of the Railway Act, the provisions of the by-law or agreement shall prevail. If we enact that we are doing something that is pretty far reaching. We are saying that if any municipality has contracted for rights with this railway beyond its own boundary its by-laws and agreements are to prevail ; and in that we are going too far with regard to the rights of municipalities. It is not right that we should indicate in this Bill that the city of Hamilton should have the right to say whether or not these railways should amalgamate. As regards the Hamilton street railway there is no question raised, but the question is raised on behalf of the Grimsby railway and I say the first point to consider is : what are the rights of a municipality through which a railway runs ? And the policy of the government is this : That inasmuch as rates must be paid for the carriage of goods in proportion to the cost of building a railway, we should not allow a duplication of a railway system if we can avoid it. It would be well to leave this over and consider it when we have a larger number of members present.

Mr. HAGGART. In my opinion the clause is a very harmless one. This Bill empowers the Radial Company to enter into an agreement with these roads but it does not empower the other companies to enter into an agreement with the radial road, and before they could do so they would have to go to the local government to get power. We have never given these companies power to amalgamate unless they have petitioned for that power.

Mr. LANCASTER. Have you ever passed legislation saying that if these companies want to amalgamate you won't let them amalgamate unless a certain city says so? That is what this section says.

Mr. HAGGART. We would not give the power to these other companies to amalgamate unless they petitioned and we are not giving them that power under this Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. The power amounts to nothing until they make their agreement.

Mr. HAGGART. I repeat that the clause is a harmless one. Perhaps the parties who are promoting the Bill have an understanding with these two companies that they intend to ask for power from the provincial government to amalgamate and that is the only way it can be done. The danger may be this : the railway company may say they have better means of entering the city of Hamilton, and if we make an arrangement with this company to amalgamate, this company may ask the power from the local government and may get it. That may be the difficulty ; but that particular clause of the Bill is perfectly harmless so far as the two other companies are concerned.

Mr. GRAHAM. After hearing the full explanation of my hon. friend the ex-minister, I see that his point is well taken. I think this provision is really harmless. I have a good deal of sympathy with the view of my hon. friend from Lincoln, and if I were carrying out my own personal view, I would not allow the city of Hamilton or the city of Toronto or any other municipality to make such an agreement ; but as the cities of Hamilton and Toronto think that by some back door we might give a road the right to run over their streets without their making the bargain themselves, we desire to meet their objection and not violate an agreement made between the company and those two cities. I think no harm and perhaps no good can come from leaving the arrangement as it is. We have left the Toronto agreement as it is, and we might do the same with regard to the Hamilton agreement.

Mr. LANCASTER. While the hon. minister relies on the agreement of the ex-minister, the hon. gentleman has taken care to say that he will not discuss the very vice of the section which is that no matter who may want this thing done, we will not let it be done unless the city of Hamilton says it may be done.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. minister says that the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is probably right, that this section is harmless ; but it is not, for this reason. The hon. member for South Lanark pointed out that although we give certain railways power to amalgamate with certain other railways, that is ineffectual until these other railways get power from the local legislature to amalgamate. That is quite true. One party is bound first to make the application. But we give this railway company power under the Railway Act to amalgamate with certain named railways ; but we say that so far as the Hamilton and Grimsby Railway Company is concerned, it shall not amalgamate unless the city of Hamilton consents. The Minister of Railways will see that here is where the hon. member for South Lanark does not meet the point ; that when this Hamilton and Grimsby Railway Company applies to the legislature and gets power to amalgamate, then there is power from this parliament and from the local legislature, but they are confronted with this difficulty, that on the face of this statute it is provided that they shall not amalgamate except with the consent of the city of Hamilton, and that blocks the way. So that the argument of the hon. member for South Lanark does not meet the difficulty, in fact he admittedly evaded it, saying that he was not dealing with that branch of the question. So I submit to the minister that although this side does sometimes help him over difficulties, the hon. member for South Lanark has not on this occasion helped him.

Mr. GRAHAM. Then I will have to withdraw my confidence.

Mr. LANCASTER. On the minister's own argument, the latter part of my amendment should prevail. We should not put in a clause saying that no matter what people want in the future, it shall never be done unless the city of Hamilton consents to it. By this Bill the city of Hamilton is protected in all the rights that its advocates in this committee are arguing for. It is also protected by the Railway Commission, who will not make any recommendation without hearing it ; and it is protected by the Governor in Council, who will not act on the recommendation of the Railway Commission if it would cheat the city of Hamilton out of any of its rights. This road runs for nearly twenty miles before it touches the city of Hamilton, and you would prevent it amalgamating for those twenty miles entirely out of Hamilton's jurisdiction without the consent of Hamilton, because it runs for a mile or a mile and a half through the streets of Hamilton. The hon. junior member for Hamilton railed me because I have fought for several years for provincial rights. But I have not fought to enable the city of Hamilton to control Montreal ; I have fought for each locality to have the right to control itself and to mind its own business. The hon. gentleman is complaining that Hamilton's municipal rights are interfered with if it is not allowed to control the county of Wentworth and the Niagara district as well as itself. I shall divide the House on my amendment on the third reading if it is not carried in this committee. The city of Hamilton wants the chance to hold up these two railways for something for which it has no right to hold them up. If the words in the early part of the section do no harm, those in the latter part, which say that no amalgamation can be made, no matter who asks for it, unless the city of Hamilton assents thereto, do a lot of harm. The city of Hamilton has a right to be heard on any such application, but it has no right arbitrarily to say that because a mile or a mile and a half of this railway runs through the city, it will prevent it running the other twenty miles through the Niagara district.

Amendment negatived, and section 12 agreed to.

On section 13,

Mr. LENNOX. I would ask the minister to let that stand, as I have given notice of an amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. What is the nature of the amendment ?

Mr. LENNOX. It is to make this section conform to the wording of several other sections in the Bill.

Mr. GRAHAM. There will be no departure from the principle of the section ?

Mr. LENNOX. No.

Section allowed to stand.

Progress reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. Third reading of the French Treaty, Bill respecting co-operative societies, then the several resolutions on the Order Paper and after that Supply with the estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur).

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 25, 1908.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Railway Act as respects the constitution of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. GRAHAM. The explanation is not very lengthy. This Bill is to provide for the enlargement of the Board of Railway Commissioners by three members, one of whom shall be called assistant chief commissioner and two of whom shall be members of the board.

Mr. SPROULE. The government has now a notice on the Order Paper to provide for the salaries of these commissioners, and I submit that this Bill cannot be introduced until that resolution is concurred in by the House.

Mr. GRAHAM. The resolution only deals with the salaries.

Mr. SPROULE. The Bill must be introduced by resolution.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It stands.

THE RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Having the consent of His Excellency the Governor General, I wish to give notice that on Thursday next I will move the House into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution :—

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Railway Act as respects the constitution of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, and to provide for the appointment of an assistant chief commissioner at a salary of $9,000 per annum, and of two additional commissioners at a salary of $8,000 per annum each.

Mr. SPROULE. Did I understand the minister to say he had not the assent of His Excellency.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He said he had.

Mr. BENNETT. And at the same time I give notice that I will move that the following words be added to the Bill :—

And that being a member of parliament or senator shall prove a disqualification to membership on such board.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask the government with respect to the Japanese as to whom habeas corpus proceedings have been taken in British Columbia, how it comes they obtained entrance into Canada in spite of the order in council recently passed by the government. And also, if it is intended to deport them, can they be deported in the face of the terms of the recent treaty with Japan.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I wish my hon. friend would give notice of his motion.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SEED GRAIN.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (P.E.I.). I wish to make further inquiry with regard to the purchase of seed grain for the west from Prince Edward Island. I was told by the Minister of Agriculture yesterday that there was no agent appointed for Prince Edward Island but that the officials of the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture had spread the information about this matter in Prince Edward Island. I can find no announcement of it in the island papers. nor do I know of any one who has been made cognizant of the arrangements under which the seed grain is to be bought, and whether it is to be bought by tender or otherwise. How was this information spread?

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend puts his inquiry in the regular form of a question it will give us an opportunity to get an answer to it.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I have heard that the purchase of 100,000 or 200,000 bushels of seed grain has been arranged for in Prince Edward Island. Is that true ?

Mr. OLIVER. The purchasing of grain is in the hands of Mr. Cassil, warehouse commissioner of the Trade and Commerce Department in Winnipeg, and we are not aware here, except from time to time as we get information from Mr. Cassil, as to what his transactions are. He has been attempting to purchase grain in Prince Edward Island, but at present I am not able to say to what extent he has been successful.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Has Mr. Cassil authority without any regulations from the department to act in the matter as he sees fit ?

Mr. OLIVER. The regulations which give authority to Mr. Cassil have been before parliament for about a month.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Well, I wish to know——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior when I may expect the return moved for about the 3rd of the present month with regard to colonization lands.

It is not a lengthy return and it should be brought down within a reasonable time.

Mr. OLIVER. I am unable off-hand to say, but I shall be able to tell the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

HORSE RACING ON SUNDAY.

Mr. PETER ELSON (East Middlesex). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice a question, and to make the question plain I would like to have the privilege of reading a short paragraph from a newspaper. It is headed 'Ice Racing on the Sabbath,' and is as follows :

At a special meeting this morning of the Methodist ministers of the city in conference with Rev. W. G. Hanna, of Toronto, provincial secretary of the Ontario branch of the Lord's Day Alliance, the question of prosecuting the parties engaged in holding an ice race meet on the Ottawa river yesterday, was fully discussed and action decided on.

Races, games and sporting practices were carried on there, it is alleged, in violation of the statute governing. Steps were taken yesterday to secure the names of the offending parties, one of whom is said to be a judge of one of the Quebec civil courts, and other evidence necessary to secure a conviction.

What I want to ask is this. Evidently horse racing and betting and gaming appear to have been carried on——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has merely the privilege of asking a question.

Mr. ELSON. I merely want to ask the Minister of Justice if the Lord's Day Act, which was discussed so fully in this House, will prevent a recurrence of events of this kind, as it happened just on the boundary line between Ontario and Quebec, a part of the race track being in Ontario and a part in Quebec? Does the Lord's Day Act cover a case like that, and has it sufficient virtue and strength to prevent a recurrence of such things?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I am not able to answer the question propounded by my hon. friend otherwise than by pointing out that parliament has enacted as a feature of the Lord's Day Act that infractions of its provisions can be proceeded against only with the assent of the attorney general of the province in which the infraction takes place. If there has been in Ottawa, or anywhere else in the Dominion, any infraction of the provisions of that statute, it is a matter which should be brought to the attention of the attorney general of the province in which the infraction took place. With his assent, and only with his assent, may a prosecution be brought.

MAIL SERVICE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the Postmaster General whether it would not be possible for him to improve the postal arrangements in British Columbia? I have a communication representing a number of people living in Hazleton, Skeena river, British Columbia, in which the following statement is made :

At present we only get a semi-monthly mail service, with a weight limit of 200 pounds for each trip. This necessitates leaving behind most of the newspapers and other bulky mail matter, until navigation opens in the spring, when we get all the back numbers of newspapers, &c. Consequently the news of the outside world is scarce during the winter.

Is it possible for the Postmaster General to improve that service in any way?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I think I answered the other day a similar question put by the hon. member who represents the Yukon district. In these far-away districts it cannot be expected that during the winter months, when navigation is necessarily closed, we can carry the same amount of mail matter as we do in the summer. We have adopted a certain scale for the winter, and up to the present time we have not received any complaints. However, if the hon. gentleman will send me that letter, I will see to it at once.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Will the hon., gentleman say who signed the letter?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not think there is any occasion for giving the name. If the hon. gentleman doubts the authenticity of the letter, I have no objection to letting him see it ; but I do not suppose that it is necessary for me to put the name on record or to state who is represented.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is not ready to go on with the third reading of the Bill respecting the French treaty. Can we set a date for it?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for North Toronto desired to say a few words on the motion for the third reading. He had to leave town this morning, and will be back Thursday evening. Any day after that will be agreeable to us.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In that case we might fix Friday.

Mr. FIELDING. While we desire to meet the convenience of hon. gentlemen opposite, there is an inconvenience in the matter being delayed too long. Business men have been writing to me asking when the treaty will go into effect. I only mention that as a reason why there should not be any delay that can be avoided. I shall be glad to fix Friday if that is suitable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Friday will be suitable, or Thursday evening.

Mr. FIELDING. Either day that will suit the convenience of hon. gentlemen opposite.

SURVEYS AND SURVEYORS.

Mr. OLIVER moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 9) respecting the surveys of public lands of the Dominion and the surveyors entitled to make such surveys, be now read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are the amendments? Are they material?

Mr. OLIVER. There is one material amendment. The Senate has struck out the clause which provided for the admission, on certain terms, of surveyors from other British colonies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why do we concur in that amendment if the clause was a good clause? The minister defended it, I thought, quite successfully here. Would it not be well to have a conference with the Senate, in the hope of bringing them to a better frame of mind?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no authority or jurisdiction over the Senate; and, of course, as we cannot pass the Bill without the consent of the Senate, and as they will not consent to it as it went from us, I suppose the only thing for us to do is to consent to it as it comes from them. I do not know any other way to get it passed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend has forgotten the method to which we resorted three or four years ago when we appointed a committee to go over and confer with a committee of the Senate and when we exercised our persuasive powers to some effect, because the Bill passed with certain concessions from each chamber. But the senate should give some reasons for rejecting this section. Does the hon. gentleman know what their reasons are?

Mr. OLIVER. Only indirectly and in a general way. They seem to have the idea that the section gave an undue advantage to surveyors outside of Canada, which they were not willing to concede, but which, in my estimation and that of the Surveyor General, were proper provisions and to the advantage of Canada. The other two amendments are merely verbal.

Amendments read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING.

LAND GRANTS TO SOUTH AFRICAN VOLUNTEERS.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolutions:

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant two adjoining quarter-sections of Dominion lands available for homestead entry to every volunteer who at the time of his enlistment for military service in South Africa under Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, in 1899, 1900, 1901 or 1902, was resident or domiciled in Manitoba, or in the provisional district of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan or Alberta, or in the Yukon Territory.

2. Resolved, that every such grant shall be subject to the conditions that the grantee, or his duly qualified substitute, shall select and enter for the said two quarter-sections in the Dominion lands office for the land district in which they are situated on or before December 31, 1910; that he shall perfect his entry by commencing actually to reside upon and cultivate the land within six months after the said day; and that he shall thereafter reside upon and cultivate the land for the period, and in accordance with the terms and conditions prescribed by the homestead provisions of the Dominion Lands Act.

3. Resolved, that any person entitled, under the foregoing provisions, to select and enter for either by himself or by his substitute, land as a homestead, may, in lieu thereof, if he or his substitute so choose, receive scrip for $160, which shall be received from the bearer at its face value in payment of any Dominion lands open for sale; provided that any person choosing to take scrip shall notify the Minister of the Interior of his choice on or before December 31, 1909.

4. Resolved, that every such grant of land or scrip shall be made by the Minister of the Interior, upon a warrant issued in favour of the volunteer entitled thereto, by the Minister of Militia and Defence, which shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, under section 94 of the Dominion Lands Act; and all such scrip shall be subject in all respects to the provisions of sections 94, 96, 97 and 98 of the Dominion Lands Act.

5. Resolved, that the entries made and the patents issued under the foregoing provisions shall be exempt from all fees and charges exacted in the case of an ordinary homestead entry.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not intend objecting to this, but why should we grant something to the volunteers of the western provinces when those of the other provinces are not given anything? Many went from the other provinces to South Africa as well as from the western provinces, and there seems to be discrimination against them. If the reason be, as I understand it is, that in the western provinces the lands belong to this government, the grant would seem to be a federal affair, and if so, it should be made by the Dominion government. If so Canada must do something, but whatever it does should be done for the volunteers from every province and not only for those from the west.

Mr. OLIVER. I would refer the hon. gentleman to his right hand neighbour (Mr. Sam. Hughes) for further information. The resolution now before the committee has been introduced in pursuance of a resolution of this House passed last session proposed by the hon. member for Victoria. That resolution was debated on the 10th December and was as follows :

That in the opinion of this House, grants of Dominion lands should be set apart for those who took part in the South African war of 1899-1902, residing in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The question was discussed very fully at that time and the resolution agreed to, I think, unanimously, and in pursuance of that resolution the present Bill has been drafted. If there be an error, the error was made by the House last session and not by this government, because we are merely following the direction of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. What I complain of is that Canada, as a whole, should do something for the men who went to South Africa from our western provinces and do nothing for those who went from the eastern provinces.

This is the first intimation we have had that something will be done. But this resolution applies only to some parts of the country. I believe that Ontario and British Columbia have made grants to the veterans from those provinces but the other provinces have done nothing. The Dominion government should do everything possible to encourage the man who, when called upon to defend the flag, does so cheerfully. The government of Canada should aid men who volunteered from any part of Canada, not from the west alone. If the government would do something for the volunteers from every province we would not be obliged to pass this resolution which applies only to one section of the Dominion, not to the whole country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) that there should be no discrimination, but there has already been discrimination; the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia have appropriated a certain amount of land to the volunteers from those provinces who served in the war. If the Canadian parliament were to-day to make a grant to the volunteers, those from Ontario would be receiving the bounty of Canada plus the bounty of Ontario and those from British Columbia would be receiving the bounty of Canada plus the bounty of British Columbia. These grants have been made in land and therefore my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) last year introduced a resolution providing that in those provinces in which the Dominion government is the owner of the land, the same policy should prevail, and that we should do for the volunteers of those provinces, what has been done by the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia with the lands owned by them. This might also be done by the other provinces which are the owners of the lands. This resolution is brought in in compliance with the mandatory resolution unanimously passed by this House last year and for which my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) voted. Therefore in this respect we are simply obeying the mandate placed by this House upon us.

Mr. BERGERON. I will vote three or four times, nay ten times, to do anything for these men. My complaint is that there seems to be discrimination. The Prime Minister seems to fear that if the Dominion government took action the volunteers of Ontario and British Columbia would share twice. I do not see any harm in that ; it might shame the local governments in the other provinces into doing what Ontario and British Columbia have done. But by this Bill it is not Saskatchewan or Alberta or the Yukon Territory as such that is making the grant, it is the Dominion government. Those lands belong to us, we are, out of our own assets, doing something for a few volunteers but not for all the volunteers of Canada. We need not consider whether the local governments will take action or not. They may say that they have nothing to do with rewarding the men who go to defend the country and the flag. But we have something to do with that ; the defence of Canada is a duty placed upon this parliament and the man who volunteers to go at the call of the country to defend either the country or the flag should be taken care of by this parliament. Something should be done for every man in Canada who volunteered and served in that war. I remember when the call came for volunteers to go to South Africa, in Montreal, English Canadians, Scotch Canadians, Irish Canadians, and French Canadians—French Canadians probably in the majority—offered their services. Are these men to be told to-day that we will grant rewards to the men in the western provinces, but that they will be abandoned ? It is a bad example. We should encourage in these men that sentiment of patriotism which we are proud to find when the call for men goes forth. That is the only objection I have to this Bill, that it is but a partial measure and that by it we neglect many of those who deserve recognition. Every man who did his duty should be rewarded, and no man should be discriminated against.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I agree with my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) that there should be no discrimination against any volunteers who served in South Africa. I have actually a demand from a man in the county of Montmagny who served in South Africa, for a grant of land in the west. As has been pointed out, it is our lands that we are giving, and I see no reason to discriminate against the provinces. Of course there is the other argument that lands have been given by some of the provinces to the men who have served. To carry out that principle, the man who resides in Manitoba should receive a grant of land in that province and those residing in other provinces of the west should receive their grants within the borders of the province in which they reside. The resolution is not so worded ; I understand that all the men are to have strips somewhere in the western territories. If you grant land to the western volunteers without the borders of the provinces in which they reside, you tear to the ground the reason for your discrimination against the men of the other provinces.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. The House will remember that about the close of the South African war I drew attention to this question. The First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) at that time declined to accede to my request on the ground that it was not yet decided whether the federal government or the provincial governments in the west should own the lands; and session after session the question was delayed on the ground that it had not been determined to whom the public lands in the west belonged. Finally the First Minister did determine in his own mind—I do not think he did it constitutionally, but that is neither here nor there now—that the lands should remain in the possession of the federal government, and the new provinces in the west were denied the right enjoyed by the other provinces to control their lands. I felt that there was no excuse for the First Minister longer refusing this request and I brought in my resolution. He then objected to it on the ground that Ontario was giving land to her volunteers and that the other provinces which controlled their lands were at liberty to do the same, and that thus, as the hon. member for Beauhornois (Mr. Bergeron) has pointed out, the volunteer would be getting scrip from two sources, the Dominion and his own province. At that time I did not see it would make much difference. The following year, willing to meet every objection of the First Minister, I brought in a resolution which was carried, that scrip might be given to volunteers from the Territories and provinces where the Dominion government controlled the land. That resolution carried. I knew at the time that it could not rest there, because the injustice of the arrangement from the viewpoint of the Dominion would be apparent to every one, and I felt that the first Minister would later on be brought to see the injustice of the position he had taken. What difference does it make to the Dominion what is done by a province or a municipality? The Dominion government should not bother about that. The proper attitudde for this government to take is to say: here are the boys who fought for the empire in South Africa, we are going to recognize them in some way; if they want scrip well and good, if they want to go on the land, well and good, but we will treat them all alike. I shall be glad to support the resolution with some amendments which I shall bring up when the occasion arises; but I will support it on the understanding that the First Minister has not heard the end of it, that he is going to have a hornet's nest about his ears and an agitation from end to end of this country, on the ground of simple justice to the volunteers who went to South Africa. What difference does it make where a man went from? They were all under one flag, they were all under the man who now claims credit from end to end of Canada for having sent them to South Africa—although he may remember that he was at first very emphatic in saying that not a man should go to the war.

I am delighted to hear my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) take the part of the volunteer who has been in active service for the defence of his country. I am told that during the war he was not so enthusiastic in encouraging the men who went to the field from his country.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) will allow me, it was the man's own affair who went to the war. I only did not approve of the country paying the expense.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am delighted to find that he is willing to do anything to assist the volunteer movement. This only goes to prove what I have previously told the hon. gentleman that as he gets older he will get wiser. And I am quite ready to believe that, if he lives long enough, he will become a very sensible man. I do not know whether it can be done under this resolution but I would ask the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to do justice to every volunteer who went to the field from Canada.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it could easily be done by simply inserting the words 'the Dominion of Canada' instead of these restrictive words confining this to volunteers from the west. The effect of this amendment would be to give compensation to every volunteer for the sacrifice he made when he went to South Africa.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. As coming from the west, I would like to make a few remarks on this subject. It seems to me that the resolution does justice to all parties who took part in the war. I do not understand that this Dominion has the absolute sovereignty over the land as hon. members would have the House believe. As I understand it, these lands are administered by this government, it is true, but only administered——

Mr. BERGERON. And sold.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) to the fact that, as soon as the land is alienated in any way, it falls under the jurisdiction of the province. And, in this particular instance, the province not having the land to give, the strongest plea we had was that the land was being administered for the province if you will, and the residents of this province had no rights outside of the province, and consequently we asked for an equal fair square deal in that particular for those residents of the province to get the same benefits as the residents of other provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. If my memory serves me well, the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. McIntyre) presented a schedule to this House showing what the provinces were getting in lieu of the land and made a comparison between what was realized out of Crown lands in other provinces and showed that they were getting ample out of the lands.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is mistaken. I was not here at that time. Moreover, that has nothing to do with the matter under discussion now. Whatever conditions were given in lieu of the land, surely the hon. gentleman does not conclude that the land should be given indiscriminately to people in all parts of the country. The land is to be administered, as I understand it, for the benefit of the provinces, and not for the benefit of the whole Dominion or for particular individuals in the Dominion. The administration of these lands is more particularly for the benefit of the people who are there, and, if you are going to alienate these lands on conditions under which they may remain unoccupied, I do not think the government is carrying out its full duty of administration. I think the provisions laid down here will give everybody a fair square compensation for the services rendered in South Africa, but to give to those outside the provinces would be to give these persons extra remuneration. For instance the province of Ontario, and also the province of British Columbia have already given lands to volunteers. These people having received remuneration in that way for their services, if you include them in this resolution, you will give them a double quantity as compared with that which is given to the residents of my province. I am exceedingly anxious that the men in the west who put up with the conditions there shall not stand at a disadvantage as compared with other citizens of Canada.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Could not we provide for that by amending the resolution so as to except from its provisions those who have already received lands ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). If the government of the Dominion of Canada is going to reward any volunteer who went to South Africa, it should reward all ; one volunteer should not be on a different footing from the others so far as this Dominion is concerned. It should make no difference if the provincial governments are in a position to supplement the grant. But there are provinces in this Dominion whence men volunteered for service in South Africa which provinces are not in a position to reward their men with a land grant. In what position would these men stand ? There is a good deal in the point raised by the hon. member for Strathcona. But if the Dominion of Canada is not in a position to give land grants in the Northwest to all, and, if they give these grants to some, possibly they might take into consideration the giving of an equivalent in some other way. But it strikes me very forcibly that all should be treated alike.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a little difficult to follow the argument of my hon. friend from Strathcona, when he says that these lands are being merely administered by the Dominion government for the benefit of the provinces. If that were so I should imagine that the proceeds of any lands sold would go at once to the provinces. But that is not the case.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. If the hon. member will excuse me, I would refer him to the argument of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) a moment ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know to what the hon. gentleman is referring, but I am dealing with what the hon. gentleman himself (Mr. McIntyre) said—that the Dominion government was administering these lands for the provinces, and therefore this grant was to be regarded in the same way as if the lands had been handed over to the provinces. If that argument were true, it would follow that the proceeds of any lands disposed of by this government must be handed over to the province or accounted for. The hon. gentleman knows that that is not the case. Moreover, how can his argument have any effect when he is aware that under the constitutional Act of each province, compensation for these lands was, in terms, made, a certain subsidy being allowed to each province in lieu of the land, the ownership, for that reason, being retained by the Dominion government. If there is any foundation for the argument it is in the imagination of my hon. friend alone.

The government, in reply to my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) took a rather extraordinary position having regard to certain events of the past. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) placed the responsibility for this legislation upon the House. He said the House had passed a certain resolution and that on account of that resolution it became incumbent upon this government to bring in this legislation; therefore, the House and not the government is responsible. Might I recall to the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior that about three or four years ago this House unanimously passed a resolution to prohibit the sale, manufacture and importation of cigarettes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not unanimously.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, by a very large majority. My right hon. friend knows that according to the doctrines of his government a minority has no rights in this House; therefore it is exactly the same in his view as if it had been passed unanimously. So, the House upon that occasion passed that resolution. We have not seen any Bill up to the present time. I would like to know what distinction between that case and the present one is in the mind of the Minister of the Interior. About four or five years ago the House, unanimously this time, passed a resolution that the British preference would be extended only to goods coming into Canada by Canadian ports. There was no division of the House at the time, it was unanimous, but up to last year, we had never seen any legislation upon that line, and when we did get legislation it was merely placed upon the statute-book as an academic matter, and it will not go into force, according to the declarations of the government, for several years. Every one who is familiar with constitutional history knows that on a dozen occasions at least within the last 15 or 20 years the British House has, by large majorities in some cases, unanimously in other cases, passed resolutions calling for legislation, and that in no one of these has the resolution of the British House of Commons been followed by any legislation. Ten or twelve years ago the British House of Commons passed a resolution by a large majority favouring an indemnity to members of the House. Up to the present time no such legislation has been introduced, nor is it likely to be introduced in the very near future. And so in regard to many other subjects. Legislation of this character must depend upon the government of the day, for the reason that only the government of the day can come to the House and announce that His Excellency the Governor General has given the necessary consent for the introduction of the legislation.

Well, what is the present situation of this matter? The present situation is that the government, after having hesitated and vaccilated from time to time until the matter became complicated by provincial intervention finds itself now in front of a rather difficult situation. If the government had dealt with the subject immediately after the South African war as it should have done, there would have been no question at all about it. That would have been before any of the provinces had felt called upon to make a grant of land to any one of these men. As far as I am concerned I do not see that any intervention of any of the provinces could make the slightest difference. Each province in Canada which owns its public domain is at liberty to deal with it, as it sees fit, to withhold or to give, and it is no concern of this government whether that particular province has dealt more or less generously with the men who went to South Africa to fight for the British flag. But, when we come to deal with these men it seems to me that we should deal with them upon terms of equality, that we should reward them out of the public resources of this country according to the services they have rendered to the country and according to their willingness to go to the front. These men who enlisted should all be treated alike according to their rank and services. and I say that a feeling of very great bitterness indeed might be engendered in the minds of some of these men who went to South Africa if the government treats them otherwise, with the result that some of them shall have received land, whether from a province or from the Dominion, and others will not receive any such reward. I think it would be a very disastrous precedent to create, a most unfortunate precedent, and I for one would very strongly urge upon the government to treat all the men alike. Why should a volunteer from Prince Edward Island, from Nova Scotia, from New Brunswick, or from Quebec go absolutely without any recognition whatever of his services in South Africa and men in other provinces, in British Columbia and Ontario, from the provincial governments and in the three provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, from the Dominion government, receive that recognition which every one of these men deserves as much as any other. I would regard it as a very unfortunate incident indeed if any discrimination were allowed to prevail by reason of the hesitation and vaccilation of this government which has resulted in an unnecessary complication of the situation.

It is impossible for any hon. member on this side of the House to move any amendment to this resolution because the resolution, having been assented to by His Excellency the Governor General, can only be amended at the instance of the government and it can only be amended by obtaining the consent of His Excellency the Governor General. But I think it is a matter of very grave consideration on the part of the government as to whether they should take a step which undoubtedly will create dissatisfaction and ill-feeling in the minds of some of these men. And, we cannot say that that ill-feeling will be at all unreasonable. I trust that before this resolution passes the government will take the matter into their consideration.

Mr. TURRIFF. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the idea advanced by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) will get us out of all the difficulties by any means. Supposing that the government did agree to do as suggested you would have dissatisfaction in all of the provinces except Ontario and British Columbia. The western prairie provinces and the eastern provinces would come back at the government and say: Why should we be discriminated against; why should we not be treated as well as the volunteers from British Columbia and Ontario?

Mr. BERGERON. They could not come here. They would have to go to their respective governments.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) understood me. All I suggested is that the government of Canada should treat all the men alike, so that as far as we are concerned there could be no complaint.

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, but I am just pointing out that that would not do away with the dissatisfaction throughout the Dominion of Canada because that would result in two different treatments, or in one condition for the western prairie provinces, Quebec and the lower provinces and another condition for Ontario and British Columbia.

Mr. BERGERON. It would be better than what we have to-day.

Mr. TURRIFF. That is a question. To my mind it would not be nearly as good, and for this reason: The volunteers engaged under certain agreements and these agreements were carried out. The provinces of British Columbia and Ontario undertook to give them additional compensation in the way of land grants. Then the volunteers from the western provinces applied to have the same treatment given them, and the government decided that in those provinces where the provincial governments do not hold and control the land it would be advisable to give a grant of land to the volunteers who fought in the South African war in the same way as British Columbia and Ontario had done. If the other provinces of the Dominion which own their lands, with the single exception of Prince Edward Island, want to do something for their own volunteers, well and good. This puts the other provinces on the same footing exactly as Ontario and British Columbia with regard to making a land grant and everybody is satisfied. There was no demand from Ontario and British Columbia to this government for a land grant. Prince Edward Island has no land, but that province can do exactly as it is proposed in this resolution to do; it can give a cash bonus in lieu of land if it so chooses. It seems to me that the proposal in this resolution will cause the least difficulty in the future of any solution of the matter. The government here proposes to give the volunteers a land grant in these provinces which do not own their own land. I would see no objection to amending the resolution so that the Manitoba volunteers should get their land grant in Manitoba, the Saskatchewan volunteers in Saskatchewan, and the Alberta volunteers in Alberta. That might simplify it and there could be no objection that I can see to that proposal.

Mr. SPROULE. The first starting point is that the Dominion owns the land, and the volunteers were volunteers of the Dominion of Canada and not of any particular province. The Department of Militia and Defence is maintained by the Dominion out of the consolidated revenue, and the volunteers went to South Africa as Canadians and not as men from a particular province. Every South African volunteer, no matter from what province he be, is entitled to equal recognition from Canada for his services to the country and the empire. Canada takes the land that belongs to Canada, and is not the Ontario volunteer or the Quebec volunteer just as much entitled to the land of Canada as is the volunteer in Saskatchewan or Alberta? I therefore say that all should be treated alike. If any particular province wishes to show an additional recognition of the services of her sons, let that province do so and it is not our concern. But it is our duty to see that equal justice is meted out to all Canadian volunteers. It may be that the volunteers from Ontario and British Columbia will fare better than the others, but that is a matter which can easily be remedied by the other provinces recognizing the services of their men just as Ontario and British Columbia have done.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. It seems to me that these volunteers might very well be satisfied with the glory they got. It may be a patriotic action to give them lands or money, but it cannot elevate their idea of the profession of a soldier. However, there seems to be a general desire to give a land grant to the South African volunteers and I need not discuss it. I can answer my hon. friend (Mr. Turriff) that if his province has no land to give the volunteers his province can give them a cash grant in lieu of the land. However, it seems to me that the best resolve is to say that those who have already received lands from a province shall not now receive lands in the Northwest, and then there will be no discrimination.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I think that would be the worst form of discrimination.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens) I support the idea that all the South African veterans should receive some recognition from the Dominion of Canada, and I submit that it is not fair to discriminate against the others in favour of the men from the western provinces. The land belongs to the Dominion and the men in the western provinces have no more right to it than the men in the other provinces of Canada. The hon. member from East Assinboia (Mr. Turriff) said that the province of Prince Edward Island could give a cash bonus in place of land. But I would ask him to take that advice for his own province and let Saskatchewan give a cash bonus of $160 if she chooses to do so. These volunteers were sent by the Dominion of Canada to South Africa and they should all be treated alike by the Dominion. I believe, Sir, that is the sentiment of every man in this country to-day. Even if Ontario and British Columbia have made some recognition of the services of the men from these provinces, the other provinces can do likewise if they wish, and that does not make any difference in the recognition which the volunteers should receive from the Dominion parliament.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) said that the volunteers should be satisfied with the glory they got. I do not know if the hon. gentleman had himself gone to South Africa that he would have been satisfied with the glory alone.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I would not go ; I am in favour of liberty.

Mr. LENNOX. I quite agree that the hon. member would not have gone and in that respect I do not know that he will be any more sensible in his future years than he has been in the past. As to the men who did go we can only deal with them from the Dominion or national aspect of the question; and we should recognize all the men who fought for us equally or not at all. We have been shamed into action by the example of Ontario and British Columbia, who, because of the neglect of this government to do its duty have been driven into doing something in recognition of the volunteers. It is up to the Dominion parliament now at this late date to do tardy justice to our South African volunteers and they must render that justice to all or to none. No more unsatisfactory method could be adopted than is suggested by the resolution submitted to us. The lands are not the lands of the western provinces, they are the lands of the Dominion of Canada. The sacrifices made by the South African volunteers were not made for a particular province but for the glory and in defence of Canada and the British empire, and Canada must recognize that. What the leader of the government should do is to withdraw this resolution for the present and frame it upon broader and more statesmanlike lines. How absurd it will be if the relatively few volunteers in the western provinces are favoured by this government and the larger number throughout the other parts of Canada are not recognized at all. This is tardy action of the Dominion government ; they have failed to act within a reasonable time and they have compelled some of the provincial governments to act so that now they cannot complain if the volunteers from Ontario and British Columbia receive greater recognition than the others. It is also true that the provinces which have not yet recognized the services of these volunteers can very readily follow the example of Ontario and British Columbia. This is a question for the Dominion parliament and it is the duty of the Dominion parliament to recognize equally the services of the Canadian volunteers, and not to discriminate against the men who came from one province or the other.

Mr. BARR. It is gratifying even at this late hour to find the government taking up this question, notwithstanding the fact that they are at least ten years behind the times. In looking over the different provinces of Canada, we find that Ontario was the first as she is the first in almost every movement, to substantially recognize the services of the veterans of 1866, which was done when I had a seat in the legislature of that province. We have before us at present a measure to recognize the services of one section of the volunteers who served in the Boer war—those who came from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—while we are leaving out in the cold those from all the other provinces. I am surprised to find hon. gentlemen opposite taking the ground at this late hour that this government do not own the lands of the Northwest provinces. Only three years ago the First Minister took the ground that those provinces did not own the lands, and were paid by this Dominion a substantial amount equal to their full value. With that evidence before us, I think hon. gentlemen opposite cannot go back on the record of the present government and say that this parliament does not own those lands and is merely holding them and disposing of them for the benefit of those provinces. Now, as this Dominion owns those lands and proposes to give the right to these volunteers to take up 320 acres each, or to take scrip in lieu thereof, I would ask what better claim have the volunteers in those provinces to that land or scrip than the volunteers in the eastern provinces? I think it would be most unjust discrimination between the different provinces to proceed along these lines. I do not know why all should not be included. I think it is of the greatest importance to this fair Dominion that we should recognize the rights of those young men who took their lives in their hands and went to fight the battles of their country. We do not know when the time may come when their services will again be required, perhaps in some foreign land, and we should show that we appreciate their efforts and sacrifices and deal with them in a liberal manner. We have nothing to do with the different provinces. Manitoba may yet recognize her young men who went out; the other provinces may also do so, and I think they would be doing nothing more than their duty, even if the Dominion had done the same. But to leave out some of the provinces I think would be a most dangerous principle, as it would place the volunteers in one part of the Dominion in a different position from those in another. Therefore I think the government had better withdraw this measure and bring down one that will do full justice to all parties.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Although there can be no doubt, I presume, as to the ownership by the Dominion government of the lands in the Northwest provinces, it seems to me that this is an occasion on which we should recognize the sovereignty of those provinces over the lands. This is not a question of immigration or colonization; it is a question of rewarding men for a specific service, and it seems to me that we have a right to ascertain the views of the governments in those provinces where the lands are to be given away. Now, I remember very distinctly that the government of the Northwest Territories, before the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were organized, passed a series of resolutions asking the Dominion government to give lands to the men residing in those territories who went to the war in South Africa. They did not ask that those lands should be given to volunteers who went from all the provinces, but specifically limited their request. This is the resolution :

Be it resolved that this assembly do urge upon the Dominion government the advisability of making a grant of land from and in the Northwest Territories to each volunteer, a resident of these territories, who engaged in such war.

Mr. LAKE. What is the date of that?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not the date here, but I think it was in 1901 or 1902. I think also that resolutions were passed by the governments of the respective provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba since that date. Therefore the government had a specific request from the Northwest to reward the men who went from the Northwest to the war in South Africa, and it was with this view that the resolution offered by my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) was unanimously accepted by this House, and, with one single exception, without any dissent in the House, and my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior was perfectly correct in saying that he had the authority of this House for the introduction of these resolutions.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. minister this question: Does he not think that if Canada rewards a portion of the men who went to South Africa, it is equally in duty bound to reward the others as well?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is another question. I am pointing out that we have a direct request from the authorities in the Northwest to give these lands in a certain way and to limit them. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has disclosed to us to-day what he did not when his resolution passed. He has told us to-day that he was then only getting in the thin edge of the wedge.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I know that would be the result.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend, when moving his resolution, made use of the following language :—

I do not know that I would be justified in asking scrip for the men from Ontario and other provinces which gave them land from their own territory, but I certainly think that the soldiers from the provinces which have no land, the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, are entitled to the consideration of this government.

And I agree with him absolutely.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the hon. gentleman mind reading what I said about the other provinces ? Does not every speech I ever made show clearly that I thought they were all entitled to compensation ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot read all the hon. gentleman's speeches, but I am reading from this particular one. It so happens that the province of Ontario and, I think, the province of British Columbia dealt with this matter themselves and gave scrip to the volunteers who went from those provinces. It is open to the other provinces to do the same. The province of Quebec has enormous areas of government land, also New Brunswick, and I think Nova Scotia has some public lands left. I am not sure about Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BERGERON. But if they do not.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Then must you go to the Dominion ?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think that is a very dangerous doctrine.

Mr. BERGERON. Who called for these soldiers—the provinces or the Dominion ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It was the British empire called for them. Our militia was not sent as such, but volunteers came from every part of the Dominion.

Mr. BERGERON. If the frontiers of Canada were assailed, who would call for soldiers ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Dominion gave extra pay to those volunteers who went to South Africa. It seems strange to me that after the policy embodied in this resolution was unanimously accepted by this House, we should have to-day exception taken in this way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The argument of the Minister of Militia apparently is that the Dominion is doing this as a delegate of the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly, these provinces could not do it themselves.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a most remarkable argument. This is either a provincial or a Dominion matter. So far as the sending of these troops to South Africa is concerned, that was a Dominion and not a provincial matter.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The provinces of the Northwest do not own their public lands, and they requested this government to give to the volunteers who went to South Africa, and who are residents of these provinces, some recognition in public lands.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I shall come to that before I get through. My hon. friend's argument is precisely another form of the argument of the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre). Does the hon. gentleman say that we are holding these lands as trustees for the new provinces and that we are acting in this matter as delegates of the new provinces ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There was no other means, except through this government, by which those provinces could give those lands.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not an answer to my question. I asked whether or not we are holding those lands as delegates and in trust for the new provinces. When the hon. gentleman meets that, he will meet the question fairly.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have given the only answer I can.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No doubt, but it is not an answer at all. The question we are dealing with is this. Is this a matter for Dominion or for provincial action ? So far as it is a matter concerning the people of Canada, it is a federal and not a provincial matter. It was the Dominion which took charge of the sending of those volunteers to South Africa. It is quite true that the enlistment was perfectly voluntary, but when these men did volunteer they volunteered at the call of the Dominion and not at the call of any of the provinces. The Dominion sent these troops to fight for the British empire, and no province sent any man of them. If there is to be any recognition, it must be federal recognition. The government has decided on federal recognition, but it has limited that recognition, and the reason given why it has limited that recognition to the volunteers residing in the western provinces is that the public lands in these provinces are being dealt with by this government as a delegate or agent of these provinces although these lands are in the sovereign right of the Dominion and were retained by the Dominion when the new provinces were constituted. But if these lands are held by the Crown in the right of the Dominion, in trust for the new provinces, then every dollar of profit derived from the sale of them would belong by right to the new provinces. But every one familiar with the constitution knows that there is not a shadow of a foundation for such argument. These lands, under the constitution, belong as much to the Dominion as any dollar of public money in the public treasury. I protested against that policy but protested in vain. The government retained the right to these lands and has the right to dispose of them without consulting the provinces. And they do so every day in the year. They pass timber deals under regulation in which the people of these provinces have no voice or word in so far as their provincial administration is concerned. Therefore it is idle to say that the government is dealing with these lands as the delegate or agent of the provincial governments. If there were any foundation for such argument, where would it land this government ? Just in this position—that, if it is not equitable for you to reward all these men who went to South Africa out of the lands in the Northwest, still you should reward them all alike, those who cannot get lands being rewarded in some other way. The lands in the Northwest, if they are to be regarded in the light suggested from the other side of the House, are not the only assets of this country. The government can, if it desires, treat all these men alike. What I am protesting against is any discrimination so far as the action of the government is concerned. It is open to any of the provincial governments to grant or withhold any remuneration to the men from that province who served in South Africa—that is a matter with which this parliament is not concerned; it is a matter within the sphere of provincial jurisdiction. The provinces own their assets and their lands, and they have a right to grant them or not as they see fit. But when we consider the question, we must consider first whether there shall be recognition or not. Having decided that there shall be recognition, I protest against the discrimination under which some of these men will be given recognition, while from others, equally entitled to it, that recognition will be withheld.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I think this discussion ought to be a lesson to this government never to accept any resolutions offered by hon. gentlemen opposite, or supported by the leader of the opposition ; for, if we are to take this as a precedent, the government can expect to be attacked if it accepts that resolution and tries to carry it into effect. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) moved a resolution in this House on December 10th, 1906, as follows :

That in the opinion of this House grants of Dominion lands should be set apart for those who took part in the South African war of 1899-1902, residing in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta .

A little while later on he accepted the suggestion to amend the resolution so as to provide that these grants should be given only to those volunteers who had resided in the province at the time of enlistment. That resolution was supported by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton in a speech in which he stated, as pointed out by the Minister of Militia :

I do not know that I would be justified in asking scrip for the men from Ontario and other provinces which gave them land from their own territory.

That resolution was supported by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron), the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and others on that side of the House. It was supported by the vote of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), who applauded the sentiments expressed by his supporters. The House, very foolishly, accepted the resolution of hon. gentlemen opposite. But now that the attempt is made to implement that resolution by legislation, the government is attacked and accused by the leader of the opposition of blowing hot and cold. Let us see who was blowing hot and cold. Why, the hon. gentleman himself supported last year the resolution to which he is viciously opposed to-day.

What are the circumstances under which this resolution is introduced? Surely hon. gentlemen would not argue that the volunteer who enlists to fight for his country expects 160 acres of land when he returns. The province of Ontario gave to each of its returned volunteers a grant of 160 acres. British Columbia did the same. Municipalities also made grants to show their appreciation of the valour of our volunteers. I know clubs that gave life memberships to these men ; everybody sought to show appreciation of the sacrifice they had made and the service they had rendered the country. The people of the Northwest wanted the same thing done for their returned volunteers. In the year 1901 the legislative assembly of the Northwest by resolution petitioned this parliament on the subject. This was the resolution :

That this assembly do urge upon the Dominion government the advisability of making grants of land free in the Northwest Territory to each volunteer, a resident of these territories, who engaged in the said war.

The people of Ontario had given lands, and nobody had found fault. The province of British Columbia had done the same. The people of the Northwest had not the lands to give, but they were extremely anxious that the volunteers of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan should be treated as generously as the volunteers of Ontario and British Columbia. And hon. gentlemen opposite supported that view, bringing in this resolution in favour of giving effect to it. This government accepted that resolution, and is now introducing legislation in accordance with it, and to-day every one of these gentlemen is opposing the very thing they asked to have done.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. BENNETT. We are putting an addition to it.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Let us see about that. Surely, if the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia give land to their volunteers, it is not unreasonable that the people of the Northwest would ask that the same be done for their volunteers. We are only doing for these provinces what the provinces are unable to do for themselves, not having the lands. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) suggests that we should do it for all the provinces, that there may be no discrimination. May I suggest to the hon. member who comes from the province of Quebec that if he thinks it a patriotic thing to do to give lands to the returned volunteers, he should suggest that the people of his own province make such a grant as the people of Ontario did. Surely Quebec has enough valuable land to make a grant to its returned volunteers, and surely Quebec is as generous as Ontario. This is not a matter of legal payment; it is a matter of showing gratitude for and appreciation of invaluable services that have been rendered. If the people of Quebec want to do this, why do they not do it ? And when they have refused to do it, surely it will be time enough for the hon. member for Beauharnois to come here and say that the people of Quebec will not treat their volunteers as generously as the people of Ontario and British Columbia have done and so call upon the Dominion parliament to do what the people of Quebec might have done. So far as the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are concerned, there is no reason why they should not, if they wish, show their appreciation. They have lands, and if they have not they can show their appreciation in some other way than by giving a land grant. So it is idle for these gentlemen, after forcing this resolution on the government and inducing this government to present this legislation in accordance with that resolution, to criticise the government for doing what they asked it to do.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have been charged with taking a different course last year from that which I now take. Let me direct the attention of the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) and the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to my position in the matter. Having for years tried in vain to induce the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) to take this mater up, having done my best to obtain recognition for the volunteers all over Canada, and having been put off with one excuse after another, year after year, I decided that I would meet them on their own ground, and I asked a grant for the men who came from the very regions in which this government claimed to have jurisdiction over the public lands. You will search in vain for any statement by me indicating that the men in the other provinces were not entitled to the same treatment. On the contrary, in my remarks last year I said :

> Every session since 1900 I have brought this matter in one form or another to the attention of the government. In the earlier sessions, the First Minister and the Minister of Militia received the proposal very courteously, and pointed out that until autonomy was granted to the Northwest provinces, it was not certain whether this government would be in a position to make these land grants without being liable to the provinces for the lands given. I will not enter into the question of the reasons which induced the government to retain control of the lands in granting autonomy to the Northwest provinces; but I do not think the government have now any valid excuse for not making these grants to the men who served in South Africa.

I did not say what province they came from. I was endeavouring to make the government do something ; if I could not get a whole loaf I would take a half loaf.

Mr. CONMEE. I, I, I.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have written letters to the boys all over the country asking them to urge the minister to take a certain line and adhere to it. Was there anything in this resolution to prevent the First Minister extending the provisions of this grant? The First Minister could have brought in a resolution granting aid to every volunteer who served in South Africa, aye and to the thousands of British volunteers who had been brought to this country since the close of the war. Talk of the North Atlantic Trading Company and all the money squandered on it? Give the volunteers a tithe of the money wasted in advertising through that company and the volunteers will be satisfied. The best advertisement the Dominion of Canada ever received was the soldiers who went to South Africa. That action brought to us thousands upon thousands of men, not the offscourings of the continental countries of Europe but the best blood of Great Britain.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And I am satisfied there would be no objection throughout the country to having these men included so that they would get 320 acres instead of 160.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Do they not get free homesteads now ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I said 320. If he would keep his ears open and not let his brain buzz so he would hear better. In discussing the resolution which was adopted on December 10, 1906, I asked the First Minister and the Minister of Militia if they had not had hundreds of applications from the boys all over the country to make it general and to include the boys from all over Canada. The newspapers have been full of it and every member has had letters from the boys and their organizations, praying that the grant should be extended. I am not finding fault with the ministry for not doing this. But the ministers are in duty bound to extend this principle. What was in my mind, after having obtained recognition for the men from the west where the government retained control of the land was that it would be a short step until the government would be forced to give it to the boys from all the provinces. The government could have enlarged the scope of this resolution but they did not, although they had received ample notice and many requests from volunteers during the year and a half since the resolution was adopted. I am delighted to see the boys in the west obtaining recognition and I give the First Minister warning that this will be followed up by the boys in the other provinces. Had the government taken this matter up immediately after December, 1906, when the resolution was passed instead of delaying action for over a year while the best homesteads were taken up they would not have been so blameworthy.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) in the observations he has addressed to the House called to my mind a piece of advice given to me by my old friend Joe Rymal in this House years ago. It was never to have anything to do with a Tory, because if you did, he would be sure to go back upon you—and I have an instance of it at this moment. Last year, when I accepted the resolution of the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) whom I would not offend if I should call him a Tory of the Tories, I accepted it in the innocence of my heart, but I should have remembered the Latin words 'timeo Danaos et dona ferentes'—'I fear the Greeks even when bearing gifts.' I should have feared the advice given by my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) who I supposed was a guileless Briton, but I find he is a wily, elusive Greek. When he gives advice it is not sincere. it is not British advice on which we can rely, but I find by his own words that there is something at the back of his head that he intends to use when opportunity presents itself. Last year his resolution was in these words:

That in the opinion of this House, grants of Dominion lands should be set apart for those who took part in the South African war of 1899-1902, residing in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why was that resolution worded that way?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know why.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The First Minister knows.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not know then, I know now. It was a trap, it was simply a catch resolution; it did not conform to his own views. He did not say last year as he says now: Enlarge it, make it applicable all along. No hon. gentlemen opposite took the ground they now take: enlarge the motion, it is not sufficient; but one and all assented to the resolution that the grants should apply only to those from Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister to some remarks which I made last year to the effect that it should be extended to the whole Dominion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I except my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey). He wanted to extend it to the whole Dominion,—but he could not convert one on his own side, he was like the last rose of summer, blooming alone. We therefore assumed, since the voice of my hon. friend was being raised in the desert, that he might be left aside. I am sorry for it, I must say my hon. friend showed more sincerity than others on that side, who holding the views they have expressed to-day did not then announce them. Had they done so we might have reconsidered our course, but finding them all siding with the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam Hughes) who wanted the lands to be given simply to those enlisting from Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, we acted upon that recommendation; and now that we have acted upon this recommendation all the gentlemen on the other side of the House, the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) himself the very first, stand up and say, no, that is not sufficient; more, do not limit this to those from the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta but extend it to the volunteers from all over the Dominion. My hon. friend, however, forgets that when he used that expression he said: I do not know, I am not sure you could give aid to those from Ontario. These are the very words which he made use of:

I do not know that I would be justified in asking scrip for the men from Ontario and other provinces which gave them land from their own territory.

My hon. friend was not sure last year. He had some scruples of conscience—well, no, he had no scruples of conscience, but he had some reasoning power left in him and he used it. But this year he has discarded it altogether and he has said: Do not mind what I said last year; extend it to all; do not apply it to three provinces only, but apply it to every one. Why did we accept the suggestion of my hon. friend? We accepted this resolution—I must pay my hon. friend this compliment—because there was some common sense in it. The reason why we accepted the resolution was that he was undertaking to ask us to give lands to those volunteers who had enlisted from provinces which had no lands to give and in which we had lands to give. Therefore, we thought that the object of his motion was that we should put the volunteers coming from these provinces which had no land to give on a footing of equality with the volunteers from those other provinces which had land to give—those from British Columbia, those from Quebec, those from Ontario and elsewhere. Now, Sir, there would seem to me to be sense in that. We want to place all the volunteers on the same footing. The volunteers on this continent have been rewarded for their services either by lands or by pensions. If we were to give pensions to the volunteers we would be able to give them to all, but if we are to give land I think it is at any rate quite fair and reasonable that the land should be given by those who have land to give. We can give land in the prairie provinces, but we cannot give land in Ontario or Quebec or Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island. I am reminded by my hon. friend of the case of Prince Edward Island. Prince Edward Island has no land to give and this government has no land to give. This land never belonged to the Dominion and that is a case which may have to be disposed of in some other way. But Prince Edward Island is on a different footing from some of the other provinces. We have lands to give in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, while we have no lands to give in Prince Edward Island. Notwithstanding the objection which is made, I think the resolution is well and that it should prevail. If we are to give more to the volunteers of these new provinces, if we are to give a money compensation, that is another consideration which should be debated on its own merits. but I think that as far as the land grant is concerned the position that we took on the advice of the hon. member from Victoria and Haliburton was a sound one after all.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has asked the question why I had the resolution worded in the manner in which it was. Need I answer him that for years, from 1900 onward to last year, the right hon. First Minister advanced one plausible excuse after another for putting off the duty of recognizing the men who went to South Africa to serve their country. He put it off from year to year. I determined last year that I would test his sincerity and I worded the resolution exactly as it was worded in order to meet the very argument that he had advanced year after year. I took that position without stultifying myself in the least. I took half a loaf when I knew that I could not get a whole one. Is there anything wrong about that? There is no one who can possibly contend that there is anything objectionable in taking a course of action in the hope of getting a half loaf nor is there anything objectionable in going out to secure the other half. We know that we cannot amend this resolution, but the right hon. gentleman, who professes to be so proud of the British institutions under which he lives, knows that all he has to do is to get the sanction of His Excellency to another resolution declaring that he shall extend this concession to every volunteer in Canada who served in South Africa. I rose, not as the right hon. gentleman says, to demand something more than this, but I rose in response to the remarks he made when he spoke in answer to my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). I spoke of being justified. Do the facts of the last six or eight years justify me in the course I took? Would I have been justified in pressing last year for a certain defeat when the right hon. gentleman had so often urged that he could not bring in legislation providing for a grant of land, and that Ontario and these other provinces ought to make it. Would I have been acting in the interests of the volunteers of the country if I had brought up a resolution which had been thrown down by the right hon. gentleman repeatedly and when we had no new arguments to advance in favour of it? Therefore, I met the right hon. gentleman on his own ground and he dared not oppose that resolution with any consistency or honour. He could not have opposed one line of it. Therefore I worded the resolution so as to leave him without one solitary argument to advance against it and he had to accept it. Now, I am going farther and I purpose in future asking that this consideration shall be extended to all volunteers all over Canada who served in South Africa. There is nothing inconsistent in that; nothing can be turned back upon me with regard to my conduct from start to finish.

Mr. BARKER. I am certainly extremely surprised at the tone of the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in addressing the committee upon this subject. The right hon. gentleman seemed to treat it as a trifling subject, as a matter in regard to which the government has no duty and with which it has very little concern. He says he is introducing this resolution as a compliment to the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes). What in heaven's name is he doing about the unfortunate men that Canada would like to honour and reward? Is it to be that the government of this country will deal with a subject of this kind according to a resolution moved by one gentleman in the House and that the government has nothing to say as to what the resolution is to be? The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) says that the government has been forced into this position and he asks with a sneer: Are these volunteers who went to Africa to fight for the country's flag asking for 160 acres? The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) says that they ought to be content with the glory. I think that the volunteers of Canada will be somewhat surprised to know the position taken by the government on this subject and they will even be surprised to know that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) thought that the men who went to South Africa have been well treated. There are many of them who do not think that they have been well treated. At all events, it does not look well for the government to boast how well they treated these men. The right hon. gentleman perhaps thinks that he has done sufficient, if he has done all that the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton asked at a particular time. If the hon. gentleman had asked much less presumably there would be less to do. He seems to base the whole position he has taken upon the resolution moved and carried at the instance of the hon. member for Victoria and Halburton. Surely in a matter of this kind the government and the right hon. gentleman have a duty to the men who went away to fight for their country even if no resolution had been passed. Where is the right hon. gentleman? Has he no duty to perform? If he has not why does he move any resolution at all and if a resolution has to be proposed why is it not a fit and proper one? The resolution, most unfortunately, in my opinion, casts a slur upon every volunteer from any of the provinces except those from the Northwest.

Let any man in after days look at the statutes of this country to find out what the Dominion of Canada did for the men who went to South Africa, and he will find a declaration that the only men who deserved any recognition were the men from the Northwest. The men from Ontario and Quebec; what about them? They are not noticed. Surely that is a subject which ought to have had a little more consideration from the right hon. gentleman. But, not caring to reward these men from the other provinces he did not care how the resolution was worded and so he puts upon the records of this Dominion a recognition of the men from a few of the provinces utterly ignoring those from other provinces. There are men who went to South Africa who do not consider they have been well rewarded. The Minister of Militia knows what happened to the last mounted regiment we sent there. Those men were sent to the Cape of Good Hope in a troop-ship with 400 horses in the ship with them; they crossed the equator with all the suffering that entails; they arrived at the Cape and if they had landed at their destination they would have been at the seat of war, but it suited the British general in command to order the ship to Durban and these regiments landed there, and crossed Natal, and rode northward to Newcastle and Majuba Hill, and having done their duty they returned home. During their journey from the Cape to Durban the preliminaries of peace were entered into and they were told that they were not at the seat of war and that they would get no medal and no recognition, and the men from Ontario and Quebec who were in that contingent do not even get the land grant under this proposal. And they are well treated, forsooth. Had they landed at the Cape as was intended they would have passed through the seat of war, but it suited the general in command to send them by sea to Durban and some of them returned ruined in health and absolute wrecks, others of them proud of having done their best to fight for their country, but all of them received no recognition. I do not blame the Minister of Militia that these men did not get medals for I presume he did his best to obtain them from the Imperial authorities, but all the more should these men be recognized by the Dominion parliament now that we are giving land grants. It is not to the credit of the government that they are treating these men in that way. The hon. gentleman from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) says they should be satisfied with glory, and another gentleman sneers that they are not asking for 160 acres. And so it is; men who went 6,000 miles to South Africa and 6,000 miles back again in the cause of their country are passed quietly over, and all we hear from the Prime Minister is a rather trifling and somewhat flippant speech in reply to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam Hughes).

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to advise the Prime Minister to withdraw this motion and to get His Excellency the Governor General to give his assent, as I am quite sure he will, to a motion which will treat all the volunteers alike. I appeal to the Prime Minister to include in that resolution a class of volunteers of which no mention has been made so far. I had a letter a few weeks ago from a lady now living in Vancouver who is the daughter of an old friend of mine living in Fredericton, New Brunswick, and who was one of the 40 ladies who went out to teach the Boers after the war had been concluded. I put a question on the Order Paper asking if it be the intention of the government to make any recognition of the services of these 40 lady teachers who volunteered for service in South Africa, and the Prime Minister answered that it was not the intention of the government to do so at the present. I sent 'Hansard' containing the reply out to this lady and I received a letter from her this morning in which she says:

14 Williams Building,
Vancouver, February 15, 1903.

My Dear Mr. Taylor,—I thank you very heartily for so promptly bringing up the case of the South African teachers in the House, and especially for putting the question in such a flattering form. I am sure the girls will all join with me in being very grateful to you. . . . It may be of interest to you to know that the greater part of the teachers were true to their love for Canada and came home. From my point of view many of the girls that went out suffered much more hardship than the last military contingent, who only landed at Cape Town and never went up country at all, and got a good grant for that. Speaking for myself, Miss McLeod and I lived for over four months in a marquee at Setlagoli and Mafeking. In the terrific storms it came down on our heads and left us to crawl out in the wet to seek shelter. We then went to Ottoshoop, where Miss McLeod stayed while I went on to a farm school, thirty-five miles from a town, post office, doctor, white English neighbours, or even an onion or a mutton chop; for six months I could not buy fresh meat, and had to grow thin on bully beef and Australian canned mutton. We had no vegetables for three months of that time. If we had been taken ill there was no doctor within thirty-five miles, and no means of sending for one. We could not even hire a horse or a trap to drive into Zeerust. I had to depend on the Repatriation Department to get us in. We lived in a thatched roof house; two girls by themselves, among Boers none too friendly to us. The roof leaked and every time it rained we had to move our things all over the place to escape the drops, and sleep with waterproof sheets over the beds to prevent being soaked. Altogether, I consider the risks we ran were very great indeed, and we deserve some recognition where the men got substantial grants for taking a pleasant sea voyage. No one who has not been in South Africa could realize the isolation in which we were placed, cut off from all English among those lonely kloofs. All the girls who are married in Canada have the problem before them of helping their husbands to work up in some business or professions and surely they deserve government recognition as much as some United States or Galician widows who may settle on western lands.

Yours very sincerely,
WINIFRED JOHNSTON PLOWDEN.

I hope, however, that the government which has treated outsiders with the greatest generosity will see its way clear to a recognition of the first forty Canadian women who went half way round the world to impress upon a country shortly after its second birth into the British empire, something of the acknowledged excellence of the Canadian public school system.

Thanking you again for my own part and on behalf of the girls now widely scattered, I remain

Yours very truly,
WINIFRED JOHNSTON PLOWDEN.

Now, I am quite sure that the gallant Minister of Militia will ask the Prime Minister to withdraw this resolution and include in it these forty ladies who sacrificed their lives more than some of the soldiers who went to South Africa, and went at the call of the country—because this country did call for volunteer lady teachers to go there—and on their return received no medal, no brass band, no recognition of any kind; and they think that now, after ten years, it is high time that this government should deal with them in a generous spirit. I fully agree with the suggestion in this letter that they should be recognized in some way, either by a grant of land, a medal, or a money grant.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has got into bad habits lately. I notice that he never rises to address the House or the committee without in a fatherly way taking charge of everybody, including the right hon. gentleman who leads the House, instructing him what should be done, and he invariably reads a letter. The cause of distressed females seems of late to have enlisted his sympathies.

Mr. BENNETT. There is no monopoly over there.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has about him so many hon. gentlemen interested in matters of that kind that I suppose he falls into the habit very naturally. But the extent to which my hon. friend has gone in his suggestions shows how ridiculous this discussion has got to be. Why can we not discuss a serious problem of this kind calmly and seriously? Why should the gallant colonel who represents Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) become so ungenerous whenever he strikes a question of this kind? Last year he was frank, square and straight in dealing with this question. He laid down the simple proposition, in which he asked this House to concur, that the volunteers who went to South Africa from the three western provinces, not being in a position to receive from them the recognition which had been extended by other provinces——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD—this House should practically do what the legislatures of these provinces would have done.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I must protest against the hon. gentleman putting words into my mouth. I never suggested that any of the provinces had the right to recognize these men. It was this Dominion that sent them, not the provinces.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend may be right in that, I will deal with that question in a moment. But I am not misstating my hon. friend's proposition one iota.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, you are.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. He suggested that the province of Ontario and the province of British Columbia having chosen to recognize the services of the men who went from those provinces to South Africa by giving them grants of land, we should do for the volunteers who went from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, what the legislatures of these provinces were not in a position to do, by giving to those volunteers grants of land similar to those given by these other provinces. That was the proposition of my hon. friend last year; and the legislative bodies in those provinces asked the federal authority to supply the omission by doing what they could not do, and from the lands which form part of the territories of those provinces to make grants to the men who lived there at the time they went to the war, which they themselves would have done if they had had the power.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. You must not put those words into my mouth.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I do not wish to put words into the hon. gentleman's mouth which he would not stand for; but I think that all the hon. members in this House will agree that I am not distorting what my hon. friend proposed to the House last year. All of us accepted that view, and when the government this year propose to implement that proposition, why can we not attend fairly and squarely to the consideration of the question ? The only questions before this House are these : Are the resolutions of my hon. friend the Minister of Militia wise and proper resolutions for this House to adopt? and : Was the resolution of my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton last year a wise and proper resolution for this House to adopt ? If it was, then these resolutions are proper resolutions. When we come to consider whether we are going to give federal recognition to the boys who went to South Africa, we shall deal with an entirely different question. Not a word has fallen from the premier or the Minister of Militia that would indicate that the government had made up their minds that there would not be that recognition. This resolution does not in the slightest degree involve that question.

Mr. BLAIN. If my hon. friend will refer to the debate of last year, he will find that the Prime Minister did intimate that there would be no federal recognition.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I will call my hon. friend's attention to a remark made by the Minister of Militia, in which he asked the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton to amend his resolution so as to limit the recognition to those living in those provinces at the time of their enlistment, in which he said :

If it is to go further, that is a question to be considered at a later date.

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend permit me ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Perhaps my hon. friend had better discuss it later, as I have not the full debate before me. I say if we want to discuss the question of federal recognition, let us discuss it frankly. Do not let our friends opposite attempt to confuse the attention of the men in this country who are interested in this question by endeavouring to create the impression that this proposition is one which absolutely and completely settles this whole matter. I did not understand the ministers speaking here to-day to say that because they were giving effect to the resolution which the House adopted last year, by practically dealing with an extension of provincial recognition to the men who went to South Africa, they are by any means closing the door to some procedure of a federal nature that will recognize the men from the other provinces. For myself, I desire to say that I think the men who went to South Africa from provinces from which they have not received recognition, on account of the failure of the provincial governments in some cases to grant lands because they had not the lands to grant, should be considered by this government when they come to the point of deciding whether there should be federal recognition or not ; otherwise the men from those provinces would be placed in the anomalous position of having received no recognition at all. The province from which I come is not in a position to make grants of land of the character of those proposed to be made by this government to the boys from the Northwest. They are not in the same position as British Columbia because our Crown lands of a cultivable character are not to be had. But the question whether or not that should be done is a matter which hon. gentlemen should press on the attention of the government. If the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) had not been so disingenuous, if he had frankly said to the government : You have done what you ought to do and I accept that, but over and above that I am going to ask recognition for the volunteers from the other provinces——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Did I not make that an issue ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend beclouded the issue. He did not make it as clear as he ought to have done. Had he said : This government, doing what I asked it last year to do, is entitled to full credit——

Mr. LEFURGEY. Is all legislation to be initiated from this side ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman does not initiate so much that he need take any credit for it. If the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) had been frank and had said : The government having done what I asked them to do last year and what these provincial legislatures would do if they were in a position to do it, we will go on and press for federal recognition for the men all around, he would have been taking a course which we all could appreciate. But my hon. friends have been confusing the issue. To my mind, this resolution is one which should be adopted without hesitation. I have no disposition to say that, on a proper motion and under proper conditions, we should not press for federal recognition for all the men who went to South Africa and not simply for those who came from the new provinces. On the contrary I have no hesitation in saying that I would join in supporting a proposition of that kind, but I do protest against this beclouding of the issue by endeavouring to prove that the government are not doing what they ought to do because they are simply doing what they were asked to do last session.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Judging from the remarks of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr.

Macdonald) I am quite satisfied that he is willing to support the opposition in the position they are taking. That position is a sound one. The hon. member for Victoria merely placed on record, as far as I can learn, his wishes with regard to the men who fought in South Africa, and was ready to urge upon the government the necessity of granting them a reasonable recognition all around for their services. In dealing with this to-day, we are merely asking the government to include in their resolution a recognition of the men in all the provinces who went to South Africa. That is a very reasonable request, and the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Macdonald) practically admits that such a resolution would be the proper kind of one to bring in. Then is it unreasonable that we should ask the government to bring a resolution down in a proper form, one which would include all the men who served their country in South Africa? The volunteers from the other provinces have just as much a right to a say in the distribution of the lands in the Northwest as any one in this House. They have just as good a right in those lands as the men in the western provinces, because the lands referred to are under Dominion administration, and it is our duty to administer them in the best interests of the people as a whole instead of in the interests of a small section. In rising, I wished particularly to say a word in favour of Trooper Mulloy who lost his eyesight during the war. His name has been before this House several times. Time and again the government have been urged to give him some recognition for the services which he rendered and the severe injury he sustained. He is only one of the many men who have sacrificed their health and their future in support of the flag we all honour. I also want to say a word on behalf of the wives and children of the men who lost their lives in defence of that flag. I do not see anything in this resolution that touches this part of the question, either in the Northwest Territories or our eastern provinces. I know of some families even in my own county, who need some help for having given up their bread winners in support of the empire in South Africa. I sincerely hope that their claims will also be considered when the government are framing a resolution in the manner in which the opposition say it ought to be framed.

Mr. DANIEL. I think it does not matter so much to us to-day what was said in this House during previous sessions. When the matter was up on those occasions, there was no such resolution before us as we have to-day. The resolution now before us is precedent to a Bill to put it into effect. Any resolution which came before us before was more of an academic nature and was not at all precedent to an actual Bill. The resolution we are discussing this afternoon is very much more important therefore than that which we had before us in a previous session. The question is one of recognition of the militia who went to South Africa to fight on behalf of the empire. It refers indeed only to a portion of that militia, but by that very fact it affects the whole body of the force who went abroad. And there can be no doubt that while all of us would be very glad indeed to see those volunteers who enlisted in the three prairie provinces rewarded by a homestead in that country, should this parliament confine its action to those men alone a great deal of discontent will be created among the other volunteers who did not come from the prairie provinces. It is said that we are giving these lands to the men from the prairie provinces because these lands form part of these provinces though they are being administered by us. But it must be clear to every one that this is not a provincial but a Dominion matter. We all know that before confederation the various provinces had to look after the militia the same as after their tariffs and those other things which after confederation were passed over to this parliament, but since that time the Dominion has been entrusted entirely with the raising and equipping and with the administration of the militia force of this country. It is said that as the prairie provinces have no lands of their own, they requested the Dominion to grant lands to the volunteers in South Africa who enlisted from those provinces.

In other words, the prairie provinces ask the people of the Dominion to pay what might be considered the prairie provinces' debt. It is true that the prairie provinces have no ownership in the public lands. But, if these lands were not given to them, the provinces were given a quid pro quo, the subsidies from this parliament being made proportionately large. If, then, these provinces wish to give a present to their volunteers they should provide that present. This, I take it, is the crux of the whole question. If these provinces wish to recognize the services of the volunteers from within their own territory, let them do it at their own expense. But if this Dominion does it for one portion of the volunteers alone, it will create dissatisfaction in other parts of the Dominion. While I should be pleased to see these men given due recognition of their services, I think it would be an unjust discrimination for this parliament to give the public lands to a certain number only. It seems to me it would be a political and tactical mistake on the part of the government. While it would please the men from the prairie provinces who enlisted it would very much displease the others because of the discrimination shown against them. Therefore, I quite agree with those who have asked the government to withhold this resolution for a time, in its present form at all events, and until it can be so rearranged that, if the government recognizes the acts of any part of the militia, it will recognize all suitably and equally.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I wish to reiterate the opinion I expressed on this question when it was before the House last year. I took the ground then that if a reward was to be given to the men who went to South Africa, the scheme should be a comprehensive one and should include the volunteers from all parts of the Dominion. I have not altered my opinion. The resolution upon which the present action is said to be based was introduced by a private member on the opposition side of the House last year. I did not cause a very active or general discussion. The right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) took no part in the debate. The resolution was introduced simply as an expression of the gentleman who presented it. I do not think that resolution necessarily implied that no reward should be given in tangible form to those volunteers who came from provinces other than the prairie provinces. My recollection is that the motion was not treated in a very serious manner by hon. members on the other side of the House. The resolution now before the House stands by itself and is not a mere continuation of the resolution passed last year. The lands proposed to be given belong to the Dominion of Canada. But, to my mind, if a reward is to be given to the volunteers from the west to South Africa, either equal land grants or a cash equivalent should be given to the volunteers from the other provinces. It has been stated that other provinces gave lands to their returning volunteers. Ontario, for instance, gave lands worth perhaps $50 to each volunteer. But the lands in the west which it is proposed to give, 160 acres to each volunteer, would represent a grant of something like $1,000 at present value. If we are to introduce a measure of justice in these grants to those who went to South Africa, all should be treated equally. We ought to deal with this subject, not piecemeal, but by a comprehensive scheme. And, if this cannot be carried out in fairness by means of land grants, let us use other means, if necessary cash compensation, in order that all may be treated with equality. The maritime provinces are the only provinces that are not able to give land. There is no way by which the Dominion can give a land grant to the volunteers from those provinces except by giving them land in the Northwest. Large slices of rich territory in the west are being apportioned to the provinces there. Ontario is to get a good slice, and Quebec is looking anxiously toward Ungava. In all these provinces are lands from which rewards can be given for such services as we are endeavouring to reward to-day. If we of the maritime provinces have access to these rich territories, we could remunerate our men in the same substantial way. But we have not these lands. That does not alter the fact that the men from the maritime provinces rendered the same service as those from other parts of the Dominion, and should be treated on an equality with them. Let us deal with this matter in a statesmanlike way, on a scheme that will cover the whole Dominion. When the subject was before the House in a previous session, I proposed, in view of the importance of the question, that some compensation was due to the men who had fought for the Empire and that we should recognize their services in a way that would suitably reward every man who had rendered service. I can only hope that the Prime Minister, who gave expression to some such idea will give further thought to the subject with a view to recognize the services of the volunteers from every part of Canada. The objection to the present resolution is that you may give 160 acres of land in the west possibly worth $1,000 and then if you are to carry out an equitable scheme, you must put a valuation on this land and give the same remuneration in cash to the men from the other provinces. I think, however, that the more statesmanlike and the better way to deal with this would be to treat all alike, on either a land or a cash basis.

Mr. LAKE. The Prime Minister endeavoured to twit gentlemen on this side of the House with not endorsing the proposals put forward by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Lefurgey) last year. I can assure him that if I had had an opportunity of speaking after he made that proposal I would have endorsed everything he said. He said:

> While I do not at all wish to dissent from justice being done to the men from the Northwest Territories who did their duty in fighting the battles of the empire, I desire to say a word for those volunteers in the same service who came from the maritime provinces.

He went on to say:

> I think that if the government intend to take up this matter seriously and do justice to the men from the Northwest, it should be only as part of a comprehensive scheme which will result in justice being done to all.

I would be prepared to endorse every word of that statement. The volunteers of every province should be treated with like generosity ; all offered their services at very great sacrifice; all underwent great hardships in doing their duty to the empire and they should be generously rewarded by this government. I would be glad to see these men from all the provinces granted their land in the west; they are just the kind of men we wish to have settle amongst us. I would ask whether the government is prepared to implement the suggestions made on that side of the House that after the adoption of these proposals, which I hope will be made a little more generous than they are, with further suggestions for the purpose of rewarding these volunteers from other provinces in Canada who went forth to take part in the battles of the empire.

I am more concerned, of course with the people of the west and with the proposal now before us. I trust that that proposal will be put through although in a somewhat modified form. The resolution cited by the Minister of Militia this afternoon is the one which I myself called to the attention of the House during the debate last year. That resolution was passed in June, 1901, when the South African war was still in progress and when there was great enthusiasm throughout the country and a feeling of great gratitude, especially in the Northwest, to those volunteers who had gone forward to fight the battles of the empire for us. The resolution was based on the feeling that the people of the Northwest were the only people in the Dominion of Canada who at that moment had not possession of the lands situated within their borders. It was based on the belief that the people of those provinces were entitled to and would receive their lands, a unanimous belief at that time. The resolution asked for a grant of land and we are told that a grant is to be made to these volunteers. The resolution seems to me to provide for a grant of land accompanied by regulations which will prevent a great number of volunteers from accepting the benefits it is proposed to confer upon them. If the regulations under the Dominion Lands Act are followed, a homestead is only to be granted to those who have not already obtained homesteads. If that is not the intention the wording of the resolution must be altered. Many of those who volunteered from the west were actual farmers who had homesteads of their own and these men who were prepared to sacrifice their lives certainly should not be called on to sacrifice their reward in the way of a land grant. Then many men working for farmers returned to the west and have subsequently obtained homesteads of their own. These also should not be deprived of their reward. Then many men engaged in other occupations in that country, store keeping, &c., will according to this resolution have to throw up their business and everything they have in order to hunt up land which may be in many instances hundreds of miles away from their homes, to uproot themselves from their present places of residence and to settle in new country in order to avail themselves of this resolution. The only alternative is that they should take money scrip for $160. It is clear that the majority will find themselves bound to accept the money scrip under these regulations as they are now framed, and will have to dispose of that money scrip as best they can. The result will be that the money scrip will be disposed of for a fraction of its real value. The men whom it is proposed by this resolution to benefit for the services they have rendered will not be the real beneficiaries, but the people who buy up the scrip and use it from time to time as payment on Dominion lands. I strongly urge that a change be made in the resolution in regard to the money scrip, and that instead of granting $160 of money scrip as an alternative to the first resolution, a free grant of 160 acres of land should be made. That would be a substantial and a real implementing of the resolution passed by this House last year and the resolution adopted by the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories in 1901. I sincerely trust that this will be so amended that each of these men will receive his patent for 160 acres of government land.

Mr. TURRIFF. If the hon. member (Mr. Lake) had read the resolution more carefully, he would have found that it does exactly what he said should be done. As I read it, each volunteer entitled to participate under this resolution will have the right to select a half-section of land on which he has to perform settlement duties; and these settlement duties would give him a half-section instead of the homestead to which he would be entitled in the ordinary way. This gives the volunteer the right to secure a half-section whether he is entitled to homestead or not. Each man receives under this a free patent to 160 acres of land which my hon. friend suggested that he should receive.

Mr. LAKE. Under the proposed Bill to amend the Dominion Lands Act, which was introduced by the Minister of the Interior last year, the same privilege of taking preemption was granted to an ordinary settler. I do not know whether it is to be included in the Bill which is to be introduced this year, but this gives to the beneficiary of this resolution very little more than he would get as an ordinary citizen of the country. In the future he will be able to get that land without paying for it.

Mr. TURRIFF. Supposing that the Bill is introduced by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior and it becomes law, it would not affect this resolution. Under this resolution every volunteer who is entitled would have the right to locate a half-section of land, and the very class of men that my hon. friend says will not be able to take advantage of this will be able to take advantage of it. It will not be necessary for each man who is entitled to locate a half section to go himself and locate it. He has the right under this to sell to a substitute who may locate and earn patent to the half-section. If this resolution passes, every one of the volunteers from the three provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will be entitled, in addition to what he does by way of homestead duties, to earn a quarter-section, to a bonus from the government or to a free patent to 160 acres of land. Those who do not care to go and do homestead duties themselves have the right to dispose of the scrip, and their substitutes will be in the same position as themselves. Those who do not wish in any shape or form to either take up the half-section by themselves or through a substitute have the right to take cash scrip which will have a value of $160. I think this resolution covers the ground very completely, and will be absolutely satisfactory to volunteers from the western provinces.

PRIVATE BILLS.

HAMILTON RADIAL ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 25) respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company—Mr. Clarke.

Mr. LENNOX. The notices have not matured, and I suppose this Bill will not be proceeded with to-night.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I did not anticipate that the notices of motion would be matured to-night, and so I did not expect the Bill would be proceeded with.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no objection if my hon. friend wants it to stand over till to-morrow.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be better, as some who desire to speak on it are not prepared to go on to-night.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is hardly a good excuse, that some gentlemen are not prepared. This Bill has been on the Order Paper for a long time, and I do not think we should have public business held up just because some hon. members are not ready. We have only an hour for private Bills to-night, and I am quite willing to let it stand over.

Mr. SPROULE. The government resorts so often to an excuse of that kind that they ought to be the last to object to it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would like the Bill to remain at the head of the list.

Mr. LENNOX. It will, as a matter of course.

Mr. HENDERSON. When will the Bill be taken up again?

Mr. FISHER. Friday at eight o'clock.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will it be thrown over again?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not trying to throw it over.

Mr. HENDERSON. Friday night is not a good night for a Bill of a contentious character.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am quite willing to go on with it now for an hour if hon. gentlemen opposite are.

Progress reported.

GEORGIAN BAY CANAL COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 47) respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company—Mr. Stewart.

Mr. LENNOX. This Bill was discussed very fully the other night, and I do not want to delay its passage, but I would ask the hon. gentleman in charge of it to state briefly what amount has been expended by the company up to the present time.

Mr. STEWART. I have no further information than we had the other evening.

Mr. SPROULE. The government have been carrying on surveys of this route for nearly two years, and only a portion of the report has been presented to parliament. Until we have the whole of that report it is impossible to tell what the undertaking means and what is likely to be the cost. Can the Minister of Railways say when we may expect that report?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am at the disadvantage that this work was done by the Public Works Department.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Bill had better stand until the Minister of Public Works comes in. I object to Bills going through in the absence of the minister who should be here to give us the fullest information, and it is not fair to ask the House to commit itself to such an important Bill in his absence.

Mr. MONK. It does not seem to me to be altogether fair to delay the passage of this private Bill because the Public Works Department is not represented this evening to tell us what the government has done in the way of surveys. The petition of this company satisfied the Railway Committee that they were entitled to a continuation of their powers and to a delay in the commencement of their work, and that is invariably granted to companies under conditions of this kind. We saw fit to incorporate the company, we always grant delay when it is asked, and I do not see why this company should be discriminated against. This is a gigantic work and to my knowledge for the past few years the company has shown some diligence and incurred expense. Under these circumstances, I do not think the absence of the government representative should be a reason for refusing to pass this Bill.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I do not see why this Bill should be delayed because the Minister of Public Works is not here. There are two distinct propositions. One is for the construction of a 14-foot channel, and it is on that basis that the money has been expended by this company. The scheme the government has in hand is an entirely different one. It is to construct a 22-foot channel. These private individuals have done a splendid work in keeping this matter continually before the public ; they have expended a large amount of money in the interest of the general public as well as their own ; and I do not see why they should not be allowed to carry on their scheme until we see what the government are going to do.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the best answer to that is this. If the government have reached the conclusion that to construct a 14-foot canal would be only throwing money away, then they would be justified in stating to the House their policy and in refusing to grant further delay to this company. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) says we have never refused a similar request to any company. I remember distinctly when we did so in the case of the Chignecto Ship Canal Company, which had a charter for years and was promised government support. It was afterwards believed that it would be throwing away public money to give that support, and it was refused ; and when the company asked for an extension of time for their charter, that also was refused by parliament on the ground that it would be improper to keep alive a charter and to endeavour to get support for a scheme which parliament considered indefensible. We might reach the same conclusion in regard to this charter ; but I am not particularly taking that ground. I think this is too important an undertaking and too valuable a highway of commerce to be in the hands of any private corporation. I think the government ought to have a policy in regard to it, and be prepared to announce that policy, and not keep this private company working and piling up an expenditure which will all have to be paid by the country at the time the government takes over the undertaking. We had a discussion the other day with regard to doing away with tollgates in the neighbourhood of Montreal. We shall be practically establishing a system of toll-gates along the highway of commerce if we leave the matter in the hands of a private corporation, because every toll it will impose on vessels passing through that canal will be a toll on the commerce of the country. It is an undertaking that the country should own and control. I think the Minister of Public Works ought to be here to give us the information we have asked for, so that we may be in a position to decide whether it would be wise to continue the life of this corporation or not. The Minister of Railways, if not prepared to lay on the table the information we desire, cannot complain if we ask that the Bill be allowed to stand until some member of the government is prepared to give us the information.

Mr. LENNOX. The position taken by the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Wright) to-night is very different from that announced the other night when we were discussing this Bill. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. McCool), who seemed very familiar with it, referring to the company, said :

> They have had one of the most expert engineers of this country here the whole summer, going over all the surveys, making plans and specifications and estimating the cost, which he put at $80,000,000 for a twenty-foot waterway.

The hon. member for South Renfrew tells us to-night that what the company is working at is a scheme for a 14-foot waterway.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I know that my hon. friend does not want to misrepresent me. I spoke of what they originally undertook to do.

Mr. LENNOX. We do not care what they originally undertook to do. We want to come up to date if we can, and find out where we are to-night. Then the hon. member for Nipissing said :

> The government decided to make a survey on their own account for twenty-one feet of navigation, or twenty-two feet depth in the locks.

Certainly we ought to have information as to how much has been expended by the company on this work. The hon. gentleman promoting the Bill has not been able to give us that information. On the other hand, the government have been asked to give us full information as to what they have expended. I think it is reasonable that the Bill should stand until we get that information.

Mr. SPROULE. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, until the Minister of Public Works is here.

Mr. GRAHAM. Before that motion is put, I might say, in order that hon. gentlemen may understand, that this is a pretty large undertaking, and I am not at all of opinion that money is wasted in getting all the information that can be obtained in a scheme of the gigantic proportions of this scheme, both as to the cost and the results. My hon. friend says that the government must announce its policy. I think it is wisdom for the government to thoroughly investigate any large enterprise of this kind before they make a definite announcement. This company was chartered in 1894, not by the present government, but by the late government, and all the objections which could be raised to a private company would hold good when the company was chartered. After a thorough discussion, it was thought wise to charter this company. It is now too late to discuss the advisability, because it has been chartered, and its charter has been renewed time and again. Has the time come when we should stop renewing that charter? I am inclined to think, in the present state of affairs in Canada, when it is no exaggeration to say that the entire world is looking on Canada as being enthusiastic and energetic in opening up waterways and improving our channels of communication in every respect, that we ought to hesitate before we refuse to grant the mere extension which this company has enjoyed for years. Last year, I think it was, a clause was put into the charter protecting the parliament of Canada. It enables the government to take over this work, I think, on a week's notice, on paying the company its actual outlay of money. On the financial side of the question, the cost cannot be very much enlarged by another extension of time. That clause is being inserted in this Bill, although it does not appear in the printed Bill. Personally I do not want to urge that we should go on with it at present, but I see no objection whatever to extending the time, as we have done before, for another term, as suggested by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think the hon. gentleman should understand that any one suggests this Bill should not go through but we ought to have reasonable information before it does go through. We should have the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) in the House and get some information from him, which we must assume he has.

Mr. GRAHAM. What information?

Mr. LENNOX. Information as to the amount the government has expended so far, what steps they have taken, what they propose to do, why these two organizations are at work at the same time, and why the government should not do the whole work itself of preliminary surveys and making the necessary inquiries.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I have some information which I can give the House:

Department of Public Works,
Ottawa, January 16, 1908.

Dear Mr. Wright,—Replying to your inquiries this morning. I beg to state that the total cost of the Georgian Bay ship canal survey, from commencement to December 31, 1907, is $654,390.42.

I wish to say a word or two more with reference to this. I believe that this ship canal, when constructed, should be owned by the people and operated in the interests of the people. Whether the government should construct this canal itself or not is a different proposition. But here is a company which has a charter for doing this work. They say to us: Allow this charter to be extended, then if the government decide to construct the work themselves, we will step out, but if the government think it advisable to engage us to do the work for them and then own the canal, we are prepared to do it. Therefore we would like to have our charter extended, so that if the government do not choose to undertake the construction themselves, we shall carry it on, and if required own it ourselves. I do not see anything unfair in that, and I consequently cannot see why the charter should not be extended.

Mr. J. D. REID. Before this Bill is allowed to pass, we should know what amount the company claim to have expended up to the present so that we may know exactly how we stand. From the letter just read by the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright) the government have spent some $654,000 up to December on surveys and preliminary information. That is a very large amount, and for that expenditure they ought to have all the information necessary to enable them to come to a decision. But the hon. gentleman says that this company want to be kept alive so that they may undertake the construction, if necessary for the government. Well, I do not think the government are going to give any company the expenditure of $150,000,000. If this work goes on, it will be divided up into sections and not given to any particular company. So far as this company is concerned, I am in favour of their being repaid any reasonable and just expenditure they have made; but before we consent to keep this company alive, we should have a statement showing exactly what they have expended. We shall then be in a position to let the Bill go through, and if necessary add a clause to remunerate them for anything they may have sepnt.

Mr. MONK. What my hon. friend requires is that we should do here the work which, I presume, was done by the Railway Committee. I was not in the committee when the Bill was discussed, but it is fair to assume that the preamble of the Bill was proved before the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. No.

Mr. MONK. I quite agree with my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that this large work should be undertaken by the government. I have never had any doubt about that myself. I knew that the government had spent more than half a million dollars on the preliminary surveys, and any one who reads the report of the Transportation Commission must come to the conclusion that sooner or later this is a work which must be undertaken by the government. I am not in favour, as insinuated by my hon. friend from East Grey, of placing in the company the power to levy tolls on our commerce. But this is a different proposition. Here is a company which has long been in existence and which desires a prolongation of its corporate existence, and we, after having received the report of the Railway Committee, are asked to stop the progress of this Bill until the government have not only made known exactly the amount it has expended but what its policy is. I do not think that is a fair proposition. I think we should have a declaration of the policy of the government, but do not think that their failure to make that declaration should interfere with the extension of a charter of a private company, when the Railway Committee has reported that it is entitled to such extension. I do not think it fair that we should block this Bill on the ground that we have not received a declaration of the policy of the government.

Mr. SPROULE. I have not taken that ground but only the position that that information was not given in the Committee of Railways. I was there when that committee agreed to an extension of the charter, and I know the information was not given.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member who is promoting the Bill cannot give it to-night.

Mr. SPROULE. No. We should know in what position we stand but no one can give the information. Here are two sets of men going on incurring expense at one and the same time, and both for the same purpose, but not amalgamating the information they are acquiring. We were told the other night that this company is still going on doing work and increasing the expense, and that expense, according to a clause we put in the Bill the last time the charter was extended, we shall have to pay when we take the work over from that company. Is it businesslike to allow that to continue? The government are going on making preliminary surveys in order to determine what the work will cost. To that we do not object, but why should a private company at the same time be continuing a similar expenditure from month to month and year to year, when that expenditure can serve no good purpose, so far as the government is concerned, because the government would no doubt rely on its own surveys and data should it determine to go on with the work? If this corporation desires to keep its corporate powers alive, it should be prepared to tell us what it has spent up to the present, so that we may know what we may be committed to by keeping it alive. and we are also entitled to have the full report of that government commission. A portion of that report only has been laid on the table and we were promised the balance very soon. We have not yet got that balance, and therefore can pass no judgment on the work as a whole or estimate about how much it will cost. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) says he is not in favour of putting a toll on commerce, but how is a private company to recoup itself for its outlay, if it is not allowed to charge so much a ton on every ton of freight that passes through the canal? Therefore we shall be putting a tollgate on one of the great arteries of commerce. That should not be. We should rather undertake to make it as absolutely free as possible and make commerce as cheap and free as possible. For these reasons, we ought to have that information. When I move that the committee rise for the present, I do not wish to stop the Bill entirely, but only to put it off until this information is available. We cannot do our duty in the consideration of this Bill until we have this information, and the government ought to see to it that it is afforded us.

Motion (Mr. Sproule) negatived—yeas 25; nays 58.

Mr. J. D. REID. It would not take the president of this company five minutes to tell what has been expended up to this time.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Would he accept the figures submitted by this company in such a matter? I would not accept their figures until they had been verified.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am sorry the hon. member (Mr. A. A. Wright) has so little confidence in this company.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I do not think that any man of business experience or common sense would accept the figures of another party in such a matter without the opportunity to criticise them.

Mr. J. D. REID. When the hon. gentleman has so little confidence in the company I wonder all the more that he is so willing to allow this Bill to pass without any information. I think we should have the figures showing what the expenditure of the company has been and also what their annual expenditure is. The government are surveying this great waterway at heavy expense. I feel that this company should be recouped for anything they have really expended on this great work, but I do not think that the government should allow the expenditure to be increased while the government itself is on the work. Another thing is that the minister in charge of this work, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) is not present to give us the information we require. If this Bill is not sufficiently important for the hon. gentleman to attend to, I do not see how it can be regarded as so important that it must be rushed through to-night. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) is taking a pretty active part in it, and I think he should be looking after the interests of the St. Lawrence on which he lives.

Mr. GRAHAM. But my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) is never satisfied with the way that is done.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am satisfied with the St. Lawrence channel so far as the work has been done. But I want it made a 20-foot channel, including the deepening of the Welland canal, so that steamers can come down to Kingston and Prescott. I think that such a channel will suffice for many years to carry the grain of the west. I think the Minister of Railways and Canals should allow this to stand until his colleague the Minister of Public Works is present.

Mr. LANCASTER. I, for one, am not prepared to vote for this Bill in view of what I have heard. The gentleman in whose name the Bill stands gives us no information about the expenses, for which, it is admitted on all hands, this company would have a moral, if not a legal, claim to be recouped by the government if the work is done by the country instead of being left to the corporation. I confess that I begin to grow suspicious that there is something wrong. This company asks us for a favour, an indulgence. I have been in the Railway Committee for seven years and have seen these renewals made periodically. This company is to be given an opportunity to mark time until the government decides upon a policy, and then it will have as big a bill as possible against the country. I want to be perfectly fair to this corporation. If the expenses were not increasing, it would do no harm to grant this company a renewal of its charter, but when there is no means of knowing what the claim of the company may be two years from now, we are asked to then pay, I grow suspicious, as I have said, that the bill may be a good deal larger than the country will think it ought to be. I am like my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. A. A. Wright) in desiring a verified bill, but I am unlike him in that, if I cannot get a verified bill, I would at least rather have one to which we can hold this company for the future. I am not with the minister in what he says about wanting all the information before stating the policy of the government on this matter.

Surley the same rule ought to apply to us in dealing with this private charter, and we should have information before we decide that it shall be the policy of the House to renew this charter. No. hon. gentleman who is anxious for the passage of this Bill, not even the hon. member of Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) who urges it so strongly, holds out any encouragement that this company will carry out the work if the charter is renewed. They do not believe that the people incorporated by the Bill have any real intention or ought even to be allowed to carry on the work. Yet they say the Bill should go through as a matter of course. We have to remember that some day we will probably have to pay these people a large amount of money expended in connection with this work and we ought surely not to be asked to grant a renewal without any information as to what this amount of expense is likely to be. I do not admit that a company which obtains renewals of its charter on condition of doing a certain thing at a certain time, and fails to do it, has any legal claim upon the people of this country. But it is suggested that a clause is to be put in the Bill which is not in any copy of the Bill which was before the committee or which is in the hands of any hon. member here to-night.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend does not mean to mislead the House, but he understands that the Bill went through the Railway Committee on the distinct understanding that it should be made subject to the clause safeguarding the rights of the government which was inserted in the Bill of last year. That clause was to be inserted by the clerk of the committee. This is the clause which was inserted last year:

His Majesty, his heirs and successors, may at any time assume the possession of, and the property in, the said canals and works, and of and in all the rights, privileges and advantages of the company on giving to the company one week's notice of intention to do so; and thereupon all property in the said canals, works, rights, privileges and advantages shall become, and thenceforward shall be, vested in His Majesty, his heirs and successors; and by way of compensation His Majesty shall pay to the company the value of the work actually done by the company up to the time of the giving of such notice in surveying, and in the making of plans and otherwise upon the ground, together with the value of all tangible property of the company, of which possession may be so taken, such values to be fixed by three valuators, or the majority of them, one valuator to be chosen by His Majesty, another by the company, and the third by the two so chosen.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not understand what the minister means by saying that I do not wish to mislead the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM. He said that the House was being asked to vote that amendment to this Bill without that having been seen by the committee.

Mr. LANCASTER. They have heard it now for the first time since the minister rose. It is all very well for the minister to read it but it is not in the Bill as placed before the members. I do not think the minister was right in suggesting that I was misleading the House intentionally or unintentionally. I was absolutely correct in my statement and the minister proved that by reading the section he proposes to have inserted in the Bill.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is wrong, the Railway Commission of which my hon. friend is a member did that. The Bill passed that committee with the understanding that a clause was to be added by the clerk of the committee making that clause from the Act of last year effective as regards the renewal and the chairman of this committee has a copy of the Bill before him with the clause in it.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is in the Bill before the chairman but not in that upon the desks of members. It was not in the charter when the promoters brought it before the committee and they attempted to get it through without having it in.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. That was in 1906.

Mr. LANCASTER. Suppose it was, I am speaking of this session. It was there without the clause.

Mr. GRAHAM. We put it in in the committee.

Mr. LANCASTER. It was ordered to be put in and it is before the chairman, but no hon. member in the Railway Committee saw it unless by referring to an existing statute. You have to do this to see what the minister was having the clerk of the committee insert. At the time that the Railway Committee dealt with the Bill there was no such provision in it. That is what makes me say that I have no sympathy with these people in asking for this indulgence now. They are taking all they can get from the country and they are taking it without any condition whatever unless it is forced upon them. Although the committee has shown them the necessity of having such a clause to protect the people and although they have agreed to put it in they will not give us any information as to how many dollars and cents that contract may involve. I do not know that there is much use of my going on with any extensive remarks because the hour for private Bills has about elapsed although I have a good deal more to say about it when the occasion arises.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) takes exception to the Bill because an expropriation clause is not included in it. The Bill provides for that.

Mr. LANCASTER. It did not before the Railway Committee.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, it does; you have not read the Bill through. There was no necessity whatever for this subsequent clause, but the government, in order to make assurance doubly sure, provided for it in the amendment which has been handed in. Provision is made that all the safeguards of the former Bill shall apply to this particular Bill. The Bill provides that the company:

> Subject to the provisions of this Act, may in connection with such construction and operation, exercise all the powers granted to the said company by its Act of incorporation, chapter 103 of the statutes of 1894, and amendments thereof; and if such construction is not so commenced and such expenditure is not so made, or if the said canals are not finished and put in operation, on or before the said respective dates, the powers granted to the said company by parliament shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the canals and works of the said company as then remain uncompleted.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where does that bring in that clause about expenses?

Mr. HAGGART. It brings in all the Acts upon which the expropriation power is founded. There is no necessity at all for that clause, but, in order to remove all doubts, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) thought it would be better that that particular expropriation clause should be put into this Bill. The hon. gentleman asks about bringing down the amount of the expenditure. How could any company do that? They are limited, under the expropriation clause, to certain claims against the government. It is only the actual work done, the machinery that is on the work, tangible property, that can be made the basis of any claim. They have no prospective profits. They have no expenditure for incorporation or for like purposes. The company are limited under the expropriation clause such as no other company was limited that applied for a charter.

Mr. LANCASTER. All the more reason for giving the figures.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman asks for figures. There may be very little expenditure in actual construction.

Mr. LANCASTER. Let them say so.

Mr. HAGGART. The gentlemen who are promoting this charter are the foremost men in construction companies in the world. One of the parties who is interested in this construction company is Mr. Perks, a member of parliament in England, who believes fully that the undertaking will be a benefit to the country. We may all differ from that; we may think that this is a work that the government ought to undertake. What has this to do with the extension of the charter of this company? Nothing whatever. The parties who are applying for this Bill say they have complied with every condition, and if they are not going on with the work now and if the conditions embodied in the last Bill have not been fulfilled it is through no fault of theirs, but for other reasons. They say that they have made surveys of the ground and that, according to their charter, they have furnished plans and specifications of this particular work, which have been in the hands of the government for a year. The government are making surveys. The government have not determined what their policy is in reference to this particular work. Are these people to be refused an extension of a charter when they have performed every condition? This is getting a little monotonous. Parties who have fought their Bills before the committee to which, for the convenience of this House, they are referred, and where they should get all their information—if they are not there they ought to be—come before this House and, in the Committee of the Whole, ask for that information. I never heard of it before. It is something novel to us. Why the objection to this Bill? Is it on account of this particular company, or is it that they are afraid that they will build the canal? Is it that a great many of these gentlemen do not want the Georgian Bay canal to be built at all? As stated the other evening, we in this section of the country want the canal built. If it cannot be built by the government, we are anxious to grasp at any opportunity of having it built by a company or any one else. Hon. gentlemen object that it is not the province of a company to build canals in this country. That was the objection the other evening. Every canal that is built in Great Britain is built by a company. Who built the Manchester ship canal, who built the whole of the canals that are at present in Great Britain and a great many of them on the continent? Who built the Suez canal? It was built by a corporation, and although I may doubt perhaps in this particular instance if a corporation ought to have an opportunity of collecting tolls upon this canal, and although it may be said that it more properly is a work which the government should undertake, I would at the same time point out that the powers of expropriation that the government have enabling them to take the work into their possession show that they are as fully protected as if they had made the expenditure themselves, I cannot see any possible objection to this Bill.

LAND GRANTS TO SOUTH AFRICAN VOLUNTEERS.

The hour for private Bills having expired, House resumed in committee on the proposed resolution of Mr. Oliver providing for land grants to South African volunteers.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to prolong unduly discussion on this resolution in which I fully concur as far as it goes, but I wish to offer a few observations to the committee in regard to the extent of it. We have had no valid reason given by the government why this recognition should not be extended to all Canadians who took part in the South African war. These lands belong to the Dominion and our contention is that there should be no discrimination whatever, and that all the South African veterans should stand on the same footing and receive the same reward from the Dominion. One supporter of the government alleged that the reason this resolution had taken its restricted form was because in a former session a private member had moved that the volunteers who reside in the Northwest should have recognition. Surely if a private member saw fit to bring the claim of the volunteers in his particular locality to the attention of the government, the government is not bound by such a restriction, and the moment it undertook to reward these volunteers it should extend the reward to all indiscriminately. Nothing can be more true than the remark of my hon. friend (Mr. Barker), that in future years it will be considered as a reflection upon all the other volunteers of Canada that they have not been included in this legislation. Another supporter of the government advanced the contention that we are administering the lands of the provinces of the Northwest as trustees for the provinces where these lands are situated. I have never heard that view put forward before. On the contrary, when Alberta and Saskatchewan were organized as provinces it was maintained by the government that we should keep these lands exclusively under our control, and when we acquired them we granted a very large indemnity to the provinces and that indemnity is paid yearly by all the citizens of Canada without distinction. The argument of the Minister of Militia, that the western provinces still exercise a kind of sovereignty over these lands and that the government had been guided in the preparation of this resolution by the wish expressed by these provinces, has no foundation in fact. If the resolution is not made wider in its scope, it will create a well founded feeling of dissatisfaction throughout the country. There is a cognate question which calls for some consideration before this matter is disposed of, and I would like to be enlightened upon it. The claims of our veterans have been before the House many a time and the strange thing is that on this as on other questions the government does not seem to have any fixed policy at any particular time. In 1903 Mr. Walter Scott, then a member of the House, asked whether the government would recognize the claims of the South African volunteers who were residents of the Northwest Territories, and the Minister of Militia answering on behalf of the government, stated distinctly (Hansard, 1903, page 820) that it was not the intention of the government to ask parliament to vote any recognition of the services of these volunteers. In 1906 we had a very interesting discussion in this House in reference to a petition made to this government by the veterans of 1866 and 1870, and upon a motion which I then presented. Let me say that I do not understand why we should reward the South African volunteers and totally ignore the veterans of the forces that were engaged in 1866, and 1870, and in the rebellion of 1885 in the defence of the country. I do not think it is possible for us to make a better distribution of the lands in the Northwest then to grant special favour in the settlement of these lands to all our veterans. They are our own people ; as a very general rule they are qualified to settle those lands, and their claims should be acknowledged without any discrimination whatever. In 1906, as I have said, I moved that the services of the veterans of 1866 and 1870 should be recognized and that they should be given an opportunity to settle in the west. The Minister of Militia admitted the claim was well founded but he asked me to withdraw my motion promising to give it consideration. The member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) thought it was a most reasonable proposition, declared he sympathized with it, and that undoubtedly if the motion were withdrawn consideration would be given to it. The Prime Minister concurred in the suggestion and he, too, promised to give it consideration, but he urged that the policy of the government was that the Northwest lands should be given to settlers only and on condition that they should settle there, and so the government did not see its way clear, as it would not depart from that rule, to recognize the claim of the men for whom I was pleading. The right hon. gentleman said, that although the motion came late and although the petition of the veterans of 1866 and 1870 had only been brought to the consideration of the government since 1896, yet times had changed and the conditions of the lands in the Northwest were different. I quote the right hon. gentleman's words from page 636, 'Hansard' of 1906 :—

Time moves and evidently the ideas we have in 1905 are not the same as they were in 1866 or 1870. The government of the day thought they were discharging their full duty to the veterans and the volunteers to those who had risked their lives, by simply providing for the widow and the orphans of him who was no more and providing as well a pension to him who had been disabled. But, we have moved since that time and now we are told that we should recognize in some substantial manner the services of these men. As I have said, the government will be prepared to consider any resolution of that kind. But, if it be insisted that the veterans should receive land simply to speculate in it, that is a thing that requires further consideration from the government before we agree to it.

At that time it was established by the statement of the Minister of Militia that there were about 5,000 veterans of 1866 and 1870. There is no doubt that times have moved even since 1906, and there has been a great deal of speculation in Northwest lands. There has been a great deal of alienation of lands to companies who have obtained them under peculiar circumstances and realized immense profits from them. There is no doubt also that our policy in regard to the settlement of those lands has been largely influenced by immigration agents, booking agents associated together, and transportation companies having large interests at stake. There are two things that we see to-day: companies who succeed in obtaining very extensive grants of land and realizing large profits on the re-sale of those lands, and immigrants from foreign countries who are brought out here under special conditions of favour and succeed in obtaining the best of those lands under the most favourable conditions that our own fellow citizens do not seem to be able to obtain. Under these circumstances, though approving of this resolution, I say we cannot do better, if we adopt the principle of rewarding our veterans, than to adopt the policy of making no distinction whatever. Do not let us give them lands to speculate with, but let us give them all indiscriminately the same chance of obtaining under specially favourable conditions those lands in the Northwest which other people seem to be able to obtain from this government under conditions of special favour. I do not think it would be fair in any sense to confine the resolution to the volunteers resident at that time in those three provinces. I do not think it would be fair to adopt the suggestion made by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) to confine our recognition of merit to those provinces in which no recognition has been made by the provinces themselves. That would be unjust. We should extend the condition of favour to all our volunteers, without any distinction, and I feel satisfied that those of 1866, those of 1870 and those of 1885 who have expended their strength and their courage, not, it is true, in defending the empire in another dependency, but putting forth all their efforts at a time of great peril and under conditions of great difficulty in the defence of their own land, should all be put on the same footing.

Mr. GALLIHER. Speaking for myself, I would like to see all the Canadians who took part in the South African campaign granted recognition. The point is how that can be brought about. Certain of those soldiers have already received recognition from some of the provinces. The province of British Columbia and the province of Ontario, which control their lands, have to my mind taken the proper course in granting recognition in the shape of land grants to the soldiers who were residents in those provinces and enlisted from them. I think the same course should be followed by every province in Canada which has control of its own lands. In the province of Quebec and the province of New Brunswick, at all events, there are large tracts of land that will be opened up by the construction of the new Transcontinental Railway, and those two provinces are in a position to treat the soldiers who were residents of those provinces in the same manner as the soldiers in the province of Ontario and British Columbia have been treated. Then, let us come to the question at issue in this resolution, which proposes to deal with lands owned by the Dominion government in the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. In those provinces, as we all know, there are three clases of lands—school lands, Indian lands and lands owned absolutely by the Dominion government. In regard to the first two classes the government occupies only a fiduciary relation; the other lands, over which the Dominion government has absolute control, are not only the property of the citizens who may reside in the district where the lands are situated, but are the property of all the people of Canada. To that extent such provinces as can be shown to have no land at their disposal have an equal right to share with the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I believe there are Crown lands in the province of Nova Scotia, but I do not know whether there are sufficient for this purpose or not; that is a matter on which the government can satisfy themselves. I am satisfied, however, that there are absolutely no lands at the disposal of the government of Prince Edward Island, and, therefore, it strikes me as a fair proposition that the soldiers who enlisted from Prince Edward Island should be dealt with in exactly the same manner in regard to Dominion lands as the soldiers from provinces which had lands to dispose of. I take that position because the soldiers from Prince Edward Island are not recruited by that province, but by the Dominion of Canada. The resolutions presented to this government from the Northwest provinces indicate that if it were within the power of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan to grant those lands, as had been done by the provinces of British Columbia and Ontario, they would do so, but not being in a position to do so themselves, they asked this government to set aside certain lands under certain conditions for the volunteers who were residents of and enlisted from those provinces. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has referred to another class, the veterans of 1866. I would refer still to another, in whose behalf I have already spoken on one or two occasions very briefly in this House. I refer to the men who were the original pioneer foreign service men in the service of the British government. I mean the body of men specially selected from Canada in 1884 as being particularly qualified for a special kind of work, that of conveying the troops up the river Nile to the relief of General Gordon at Khartoum.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. GALLIHER. I never had the opportunity of bringing this matter up so directly before because there was no occasion in which the government proposed to give land to Canadian volunteers as a reward for Imperial service.

Mr. BERGERON. It was not a war.

Mr. GALLIHER. The men who went up that river and did that special work were as fine a body of men as ever left the shores of Canada and they took their lives in their hands.

Mr. BERGERON. That is true, and the hon. gentleman is a good sample of these men.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not speaking for myself though I was one of them. Many of those men lost their lives in that undertaking, many have died since, but there are scattered throughout this country many of them to whom a grant of this kind would be a great deal of assistance; and on their behalf I would ask the same consideration as we are giving to the men who served the empire at a latter day. Because that occurred twenty or thirty years ago is no reason why the claims of these men are not as just to-day as the claims of any others who fought in the Imperial service. I do not wish to add any more to this debate but simply to reiterate that I believe the provinces which have lands at their disposal should take the same course as has been taken by British Columbia and Ontario. As regards the provinces which have not public lands, let the government take that fact into consideration and treat them in the same way as they propose to treat the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. HERRON. Before this resolution is disposed of, I wish to obtain a little information. I am very much at sea regarding the meaning of one or two clauses in this resolution. To begin with, I am not going to quarrel with my other friends on the other side of the House regarding how far the benefits of this resolution should extend. If the government should be satisfied to grant land to the South African volunteers throughout the Dominion, no one would greet that decision more heartily than I. I do not think that we could bring any men from any part of the empire to the Northwest who would make better settlers than those who took up arms to defend the empire in South Africa. But if this grant should be extended to men from other provinces, some slight difference should be made in the conditions. The hon. member from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) this evening said that a substitute could perform the resident duties for the applicant for these free homesteads. In the first two lines of the second clause of the resolution, namely :

That every such grant shall be subject to the conditions that the grantee, or his duly qualified substitute, shall select and enter for the said two quarter-sections in the Dominion lands office for the land district in which they are situated.

These are quite clear to me. I suppose they mean that a substitute may make entry for the applicant in the Land Office as was the case in days gone by. But the first part of clause 3, I do not understand. It says :

That any person entitled, under the foregoing provisions, to select and enter for, either by himself or by his substitute, land as a homestead, may, in lieu thereof——

The words 'entitled to' are what I do not quite understand. Under the provisions of this Bill, if a man has already availed himself of the privilege of homesteading, can he take 320 acres of land, 160 acres as a second free homestead and another 160 as a pre-emption or free grant ? If in the first case, he is allowed to take 320 acres provided he has already had a homestead, I am satisfied with the Bill. But if he is not allowed to do that, what condition applies to the other quarter-section? Will he have to reside on it or could a substitute perform the duties for him, or will the duties have to be performed ? I would like to impress on the minister and the House the great importance that that will be to the members of the volunteer force from the Northwest. The House is well aware that most of these men volunteered from the settled portion of the country, where the land was practically at that time pretty well taken up, and where the men were either engaged in farming or in stock raising or other business in the country. When the men returned from South Africa the land was practically all taken up in the country where they resided. If these men have to comply with all these conditions as regards residence for six months in the year for three years, for one or even two quarter-sections of land, I do not think that many of them will be able to avail themselves of the privileges contained in this resolution.

These men are engaged in some line of business in settled parts of the country, where they could not get two quarter-sections adjoining—that is unless they are allowed to take a second homestead. Not one man in twenty would be willing to leave his present place of business to go to a new part of the country and take up a quarter-section of land. Even if the terms of the grant allowed them to have the duties performed by somebody else, it would probably cost them as much as the land is worth to engage somebody else to do those duties. Another point which I mentioned two years ago when the Bill was introduced and accepted by the House was that the land or scrip should be issued to the nearest of kin to those who were killed in South Africa or who have since died. I mentioned two cases when the Bill was before the House. One was that of a young man who was killed in South Africa. Since then, his father has died, leaving the boy's mother a widow. Another South African volunteer in the same town was killed in the war, leaving only a sister. These relations, of course, could not comply with the conditions required for the ordinary homestead patent. Another case that I have in mind is that of a man who received injuries or who contracted illness during the South African campaign, and who has been in the hospital almost constantly since he returned, and is now in a hospital in Vancouver, B.C. Special provisions should be made for a case of that kind. I know another instance which should be included within the scope of this measure. A young man who was born in the Northwest was in the employ of one of the banks. He was transferred from the Northwest Territories to Ontario a few months before the war broke out. He volunteered in Ontario, went to South Africa, and remained there during the war. He then returned to the Northwest and resumed work in the employ of the same institution as before. Though this young man did not actually enlist in the Northwest, I think the benefits of this measure should be extended to him. I hope that liberality will be shown in matters of this kind.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). I should be very much pleased if the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should see his way clear to withdraw his resolution. The discussion we have had shows that the consensus of opinion is that this is a very sectional, one-sided proposal. Volunteers went from all parts of Canada to risk their lives in defence of the empire, but the government will divide these men into two classes, according to the section of country in which they live. Surely this is not the teaching of the Prime Minister. I remember reading with great pride that, when in England, he told the people there how he was uniting all sections of Canadians making this people into one great nation. But what is he doing under this resolution ? He is setting section against section ; he is declaring that, if a volunteer lives in one section, his services should be rewarded, but the volunteer who lives in another section should be ignored and his services disregarded. The Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) tells us that this resolution is introduced because the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) made a speech last year. The great government, forsooth which is supposed to have a mind of its own, must come forward with such a resolution as this because a member opposed to them has made a speech. I have heard an argument from the Prime Minister also which, if he sat on this side of the House, he would be the first to condemn. If the government of Manitoba, or Alberta, or Saskatchewan came here and asked this Dominion to give its volunteers some land, what would be the reply? The reply would be: True you have no land, but we gave you a quid pro quo for your land; we satisfied you completely; you cannot expect to have both your lands and the money which was given as compensation for withholding those lands; if you have not the lands you have the money, and, if you wish to reward your volunteers, you have the means of doing it. In any case, these lands are lands for which every province in Canada assisted to pay. I have heard how generous Ontario and British Columbia were to their volunteers. They might well be generous for they had been given large slices of this land for nothing. And now the province of Quebec wants more, the province of Ontario wants more, the province of Manitoba wants more. And you propose under this resolution that if a man lives in Prince Edward Island he shall have no share of this land for which his province helped to pay, but land shall be given to men who happen to live in another section of the country. I can imagine the leader of the government speaking on such a resolution as this if he were on this side of the House and the resolution had been proposed by his opponents. I could not say it in the way he would say it, but I can imagine his speech. I can imagine the cheers that would be raised by those surrounding him on this side when he would ask the leader of the government sitting where he now sits: What are you doing? You say you are trying to unite the people of this country, but this Bill is going to divide them; you are going to draw lines which will divide east from west and throw the apple of discord between the different provinces; you are going to say that the man in little Prince Edward Island is to be treated differently from the man in Manitoba. He would say: I will stand up for the minority, I will not see a small province or any part of this Dominion trampled under foot.

I say to the leader of the government in all seriousness withdraw this resolution; do not throw an apple of discord among the provinces. Those men, the bravest men in this country, risked their lives and do not draw a dividing line between the men coming from Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or Manitoba.

I could understand one thing if you would say it. You might say: We have lots of land in the west though the grafter got large shares which we desire to see settled by patriotic people. If we want patriotic people, those of our own country who served in the wars are patriotic men. But what does this resolution say? It does not propose to give them the land, but to give them scrip. If you are going to act in the interest of this country, give them that land if they will settle on it, and do not allow the advantage to go to the man who buys the scrip and makes money out of it.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) was kind enough to say: Oh, well, the people of Prince Edward Island can pay their volunteers in money. The hon. gentleman has been very kindly dealt with by this government, I believe, as far as I can learn, he would like the government to be generous to himself, but I do not know about his own generosity.

I could not imagine, if I had not heard this discussion from both sides of the House, that such arguments would be used as have been used to prop up such a one-sided proposal as this Bill contains. I am not here to discuss what was done last year and the year before. Some hon. gentlemen say there was a vote on this matter, but no. I do not remember the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) making that speech; I did not hear it, and if he did make it, I do not wish to be responsible for the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes), and I am sure that this government is not going to take their cue from him. The Minister of Militia says that he heard the hon. member for Victoria. I believe they are very good friends, but I did not think that the minister had such influence that he would induce his leader, the Prime Minister to go with him and adopt the view of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes), making it the policy of the government. Such arguments, in my opinion, are on a par with the other one, that because Manitoba and these other provinces wanted something therefore the government must give it to them, simply because they asked it. Have they always been that generous to Manitoba? Have they always given to Manitoba what that province wanted? The people of Manitoba have for years asked to have their boundaries extended so that from being a mere postage stamp on the map it would be a province of a size commensurate with that of the western provinces. But this government turned a deaf ear. In this case Manitoba wanted something else, and they could not resist the appeal; they could not tell them what any government with any kind of judgment would tell them: If you have not lands to give these men as Ontario and British Columbia have done, under the settlement which we made with you you have money, and you can give them some of that. If the government wished to be patriotic, let them now come forward with a resolution which will do equal justice to all sections of the country. I have faith enough and confidence enough in the Prime Minister to believe he will withdraw the resolution and introduce one more patriotic, equitable and fairer to all the provinces of Canada.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) and the member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) placed a great deal of dependence on the fact that they had a mandate from the territorial assembly in the shape of a resolution passed by that body declaring that the lands should be disposed of to the residents of those two provinces who had served in South Africa. Both of these hon. gentlemen made that a special reason why this government should follow the course they are now following in the resolution before the House. Those hon. gentlemen are not always so anxious and eager to follow the mandates of the people. As the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. A. Martin) has rightly pointed out, this government for many long years has turned a deaf ear to the mandate of the province of Manitoba. That province has asked to have certain lands added to its territory. This was a universal demand unanimously passed by the legislature on many occasions, but still this government has not responded to that demand. The resolution passed by the territorial assembly asked that the lands should be given to the people resident in those provinces. But was there not also prior to this time another mandate to which this government turned a deaf ear years ago ? Is it not a fact that when the Autonomy Bills were up for discussion and before that the people of the territories formally asked that all the lands be handed over to the provincial governments to be controlled by them in the interests of the provinces and of the settlers? Did the government act on that mandate? Did they not reject it, notwithstanding the fact that when the Bill was before the House resolution after resolution was presented from boards of trade all through the province to the same effect? Indignation meetings were held in the two provinces, and very strong expressions of opinion were made. The government were not anxious then to obey the mandate which was unanimous on the part of the people of those territories. One hon. gentleman stated that these lands are undoubtedly owned by the Dominion. No one will question that. It was, however, questioned by the hon. member for Strathcona, who took the exception that these lands were being administered by this government as trustees for the people of the two provinces of the west. He is one of the hon. gentlemen who, in conjunction with his colleagues in the late provincial election, impressed on the people that the arrangement entered into by this government that they were to pay a dollar and a half on an estimated number of acres in each province in lieu of lands, by way of compensation, was a much better bargain for the people of those provinces than to have the land in their own possession. And still to-day he would, in addition to that, desire not only that they should have the money, but that the lands should be administered here with a certain amount of provincial jurisdiction. That hon. gentleman, I also think, made use of the argument that when once these lands are alienated from the Crown they pass under the jurisdiction of these provinces. For what purposes do they pass? For taxation purposes alone, and is it going to make any difference after these lands are handed over as to the powers of the provinces in so far as taxation is concerned? Will not these lands be subject to taxation immediately they pass and are alienated from the Crown, no matter where the person resides, whether in Saskatchewan, in Alberta, in Quebec, or in any of the eastern provinces? The jurisdiction of the provincial government only exists in so far as taxation is concerned.

It has been claimed that because the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia have also given some special consideration by way of land grants it would be an unjust discrimination to these other provinces if we acted upon the same principle. Carry that argument to its logical conclusion and where will it lead? In the province of Ontario, for instance, the provincial government have given a certain number of acres of land to the veterans who went to South Africa. But special considerations have also been given by municipalities and various small towns. For instance, some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side to-day stated that. I think that the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) stated that certain municipalities have granted certain considerations to these veterans. Would that have been an excuse why the Ontario government, for instance, should refuse to grant land to the veterans of that province, that because, within the borders of the province, in certain towns and municipalities certain considerations of a special character had been given and because all the towns and municipalities did not do the same thing therefore they should withhold this consideration from all? Neither would it be just for this Dominion government to withhold their land simply because a province had been generous enough to give this land grant. If there is any fault to be found with the province of Quebec the residents of that province have to settle with the provincial government. Let them apply there if they desire to be on an equality in that regard. But this is not a sectional question. The brave and patriotic men from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta who went to South Africa to contend for England's honour went as Canadians, as Canadians they should be dealt with and they should be dealt with by the government with reference to the whole country.

I think that the government are taking entirely too sectional a view of this matter. I think the people of the west would be the last to take exception to having these lands handed out to the veterans no matter from what part of Canada they might hail. The fact of 320 acres of land being handed out to a resident of another province of the Dominion, to a man of the stamp who has served his country in South Africa, will be the means of encouraging these young men who are now resident in the eastern provinces to come and locate on these lands, because, under the present homestead laws, all they can get as a land grant is 160 acres, whereas under this Bill they can get 320 acres by performing settlement duties. I think that, viewed from that standpoint, although a sectional standpoint it probably is, the people of the west would be desirous of seeing a number of our own young men offered some inducement to take up this land and make their homes in the west.

The opposition are not opposing this resolution, but they are not standing on the strict literal interpretation of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) last year. I do not think that he or any other gentleman on this side of the House, when that resolution passed, thought that it was going to tie us down to a strict literal interpretation, but that we might expect that a Bill would be submitted which would include not only those of our fellow Canadians who were resident in these western provinces, but also those who were resident in the provinces which owned their lands notwithstanding that they might have given a land grant to the veterans such as they have in the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia. If those provinces have acted in advance of this government they have done so while this government have dilly dallied with the question year in and year out, and have turned a deaf ear to the pleadings of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. It is much better that our fellow Canadians in other portions of the Dominion should have land grants than that the public domain should be parcelled out to Saskatchewan land companies and Robbins irrigation companies.

There is another question in reference to this matter. If provision is made that veterans may accept scrip for $160 in lieu of doing their settlement duties, the likelihood is that those who should be advantaged by receiving it for their services in South Africa will not get very much out of it. The scrip will pass into the hands of scrip speculators who will reap the greatest benefit, men who are in a position to hold the land until it becomes more valuable, whereas these gentlemen who, by reason of being unable to perform their settlement duties, will dispose of their land, will no doubt do so for a small consideration. On the contrary this would not take place if the government would adopt this suggestion. The government propose that those veterans who perform their settlement duties shall be entitled to receive 320 acres of land. The alternative I have to suggest is that instead of giving scrip, give 160 acres of land free without any settlement duties at all. That would be very much better than to allow the beneficiaries to sell their scrip and allow speculators to reap the benefit. I would be in favour of this resolution if it were extended as I suggest. I only object to the resolution at all in so far as it is too curtailed, and I feel confident that those who reside in the west would be the last to object to Canadians from other portions of the Dominion enjoying the same privileges that are to be enjoyed by the residents of these provinces.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer my support to the resolution which is now before the committee and to express my approval of the government's course in so far as it goes, but at the same time to enter my protest that the government is not extending its benefits to the South African veterans who are to be found in every part of Canada. It was stated here this afternoon that the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia have been more generous than the other provinces to the volunteers. May I be permitted to point out that the government in the province of Ontario were not particularly generous to the volunteers. It is true that they did give to them a grant of 160 acres of land, but in giving them that grant they reserved the pine timber upon the land. A large number of the volunteers who accepted this 160 acres of land from the province of Ontario have sold it for $50. Therefore, I do not think that that should be any reason why the government, when they are setting apart a portion of the public domain for the volunteers, should not include all who are entitled to this regard whether they are in the province of Ontario or in any other province. I was a little surprised at the argument which was used this afternoon with respect to the motion of my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes). The resolution presented to the House on December 10, 1906, reads as follows :—

That in the opinion of this House, grants of Dominion lands should be set apart for those who took part in the South African war of 1899-1902, residing in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

It will be seen by this resolution that the hon. gentleman was rather more generous than the government. I am sure my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton is always prepared to support a grant of land to those volunteers who reside in different parts of Canada. The government, on the suggestion of the Minister of Militia, restricted it to those who enlisted from the provinces in the west, and therefore if the resolution does not go further the responsibility rests with the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is nothing said in the resolution about residents in other parts of Canada. The resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) as first introduced included those who might have gone into the Northwest after the war, but it did not refer to those residing anywhere else than in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. BLAIN. The point is that the limitation in the resolution was on the suggestion of the minister himself.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, but as between those who were actually in the Northwest when they enlisted and those who had gone to the Northwest afterwards but were living there at the time the resolution was moved. That was the only distinction.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand the suggestion for the amendment came from the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The limitation was to the three provinces named.

Mr. BLAIN. The resolution introduced by my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) was broader than that afterwards adopted by the House on the suggestion of the minister.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There was practically no difference.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The resolution as introduced would have included any one who subsequent to enlistment moved into the west.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Exactly.

Mr. BLAIN. Then the restriction in the resolution was introduced at the suggestion of the Minister of Militia. The resolution introduced was broader.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The resolution would have excluded any who might have left the Northwest in the meantime and gone elsewhere. It is not fair, to say the resolution was any broader or any narrower; it simply defined what was meant.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, I leave the facts to speak for themselves and I will not discuss that matter further. This is the first time the government has presented a tangible resolution to aid the veterans for the consideration of the House and I am in favour of it but I think it should go further. A discussion took place in 1906 and some suggestions were made on this matter, and it is strange to hear the supporters of the government assert that the opposition is responsible for the restriction in that resolution because there were only four members of the opposition who took part in the discussion, namely, Colonel Hughes, Mr. Lake, Mr. M. S. McCarthy and Mr. Lefurgey, of Prince Edward Island, the last-named gentleman suggested that the resolution should be broad enough to include every volunteer in Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. How many took part on the government side?

Mr. BLAIN. Very few. The Minister of Militia spoke, the Prime Minister said a few words, and the member for East Assiniboia, and it is very strange that gentlemen opposite should suggest that the responsibility for the restricted resolution passed at that time rests with the members on this side.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It rests with the House.

Mr. BLAIN. At all events this is the first time the government has brought the question fairly before the House, and as I have said I am fully in accord with it so far as it goes and I advocate that it should go very much further and include all our South African veterans. I do not think there should be any discrimination made. I do not believe that the veterans who get these land grants should be asked to settle there; I think that if the parliament of Canada gives this small recognition to those who fought the battles of Canada and the empire, the men should be free to settle on the land or not as they please; they should have the right to dispose of the land if they wish, and put the proceeds in their pockets. I believe the people of Canada would uphold the government in adopting a policy of this kind. I do not think the government of Canada is doing itself justice when it suggests that only a sectional part of the South African veterans should receive recognition. I believe that every South African veteran, no matter from what province of Canada he comes, should have the same liberal fair-play at the hands of the Dominion government.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) when he said that this government is not doing itself justice in introducing this very partial measure. Not only is the government not doing itself justice, but it is not doing justice to the members of this House, to the people of the country, or to the veterans to whom Canada ought to be grateful. I am in thorough accord with the resolution. I think it is long delayed and tardy justice and only partial justice at that, because it only includes a portion of those brave men who in my opinion are entitled to fair consideration from Canada. Surely, this is above all a national question. For many and obvious reasons our country has not yet been forced to the necessity of a pension system and we trust we will never be involved in war to the extent that will make a pension system necessary in this country. But we have taken other means to reward those who have fought for their King and their country, and we now propose to give to some of our veterans a grant of land. Surely, where a number of soldiers have served in the same war we cannot say that because one man comes from a certain district and another man comes from another district that the service of one man is to be recognized by the government and the service of the other man is not. Is that not especially the case where the length of service is the same ; where the service is equally arduous, and where the results have been equally glorious to our country. I cannot see why there should be any discrimination between the provinces in this matter. I believe that this question should not be viewed or argued from any provincial standard ; it is national in its essence and the fact that it is national is the best feature of it.

It has been said to-day in this debate that because Ontario and British Columbia have rewarded their troops with gifts or partial gifts, they have been sufficiently rewarded, and that this national parliament should not give them anything further. You might as well say that because one soldier had a rich father who rewarded him for his services when he came home, he should not be rewarded, while the man who had a poor parent should be rewarded, as to say that because one province, out of its bounty and pure generosity has made a gift to the soldiers coming from that province, they should not be rewarded by the national parliament. I happen to know that the Ontario veterans were rewarded very partially. They were given what are called grants of land. In reality, they were grants of 160 acres of wild lands, less the timber upon it. The government selected certain townships which were not fit for settlement, and permitted the veterans to make their selections from these areas. The result has been that a very large number of these veterans have sold their right to their scrip for $50 and in some cases less. Surely that is a very partial reward. I merely mention that to show that the province of Ontario has not gone to the full extent of rewarding the veterans of that province, who fought for their King and country. The reward proposed to be given to the veterans of the west, under the resolutions now before the House, are very much more liberal. I am not at all saying that they are too liberal. I think they are reasonably fair. But a grant of 320 acres of land open for settlement in the west, even with the requirement of settlement duties upon it, is a very handsome reward compared with a grant of 160 acres of wild land in the province of Ontario, which the veteran has been in the habit of selling for $50. It seems to me that the government could do nothing wiser than to give to all the veterans who fought for their country the same opportunity of taking up homesteads in the west. This discussion has not brought out the number of veterans entitled to participate in these grants, or the number there would be if the government allowed them all to participate. My own idea is that the total number is in the neighbourhood of 5,000, of whom nearly one-half came from the west. The Minister of Militia will know. They included the Strathcona Horse, the Mounted Rifles and the Second Contingent. So that I think nearly one-half of the total number of veterans came from the west.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, if you include British Columbia.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. So that you are to-day rewarding practically one-half of these veterans ; and surely it would not be an extravagant thing, but a fair and wise thing, to include them all. This would practically double the area of land that would be given, and there are ample lands in the west to include all the troops. Many of these young men who went to serve their country in South Africa left occupations in which they were permanently employed ; many of them became unhinged and unfitted for regular business ; many have not recovered their situations ; many have not had permanent employment since ; the life of a soldier in South Africa for a couple of years seems to have given many of them a roving disposition ; and it seems to me that nothing would be more desirabe than to afford all these young men an opportunity to take up homesteads in the west. Consider the past history of this country. The best men who settled in this country of old were the United Empire Loyalists, English, Irish and Scotch, who came here in 1776 and 1812, and preserved this country as a British country—fought for it and were rewarded by their King with grants of land. And who among all the people of this country made better settlers, built it up, and really formed the backbone of it, than these loyalists of old ?

Mr. TALBOT. There are others, far ahead of them too.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The hon. gentleman is inaudible, for what reason I do not know. If he will keep himself in order, there will perhaps be a better chance of hearing what he says. I say the United Empire Loyalists were given grants of land, and that would be a good precedent for us to follow, by giving to all the veterans who fought in the late war an opportunity to take up land in the west. While agreeing with the principle of this resolution I disagree with its scope, it does not go far enough. Some fault has been found with the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) because of the character of this resolution. That hon. member has again and again in this House for five or six years past endeavoured to persuade the government to consider the claims of all the veterans of Canada to some reward. Failing in that, he succeeded in getting the government to present this resolution. From the manner in which it has been received, I think the government will see that the feeling of this House and this country is in favour of extending the same measure of justice to all the veterans of the country. I hope that the government, realizing how much in accord all the members of this House are on that subject, will at an early day see their way to extend the scope of the resolution so as to include in its benefits all those who fought in the late war, whether they came from the east or the west, and whether or not they were partially rewarded by the provinces in which they lived.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure that our friends on the other side are to be congratulated on the generosity with which they have expressed themselves in regard to the recognition of the services of the volunteers in South Africa. They are to be congratulated on the number of excellent speeches in that line that have been made to-day—might I suggest, perhaps rather with a view of influencing the opinions of the voters than for the purpose of influencing the issue of land grant. Might I suggest also that their speeches have been made about a year too late to have that desirable effect. Our friends have suggested that the government has not assumed its proper share of responsibility in regard to the proposition before the House. I would like to say that the government is prepared to absolutely assume the fullest responsibility, but it is not more possible for a member of parliament to relieve himself of his responsibility than for the government. And when this matter was up before the House for discussion last session, our friends, who now find fault with the action of the government, had then the opportunity to express themselves on the subject and did not, and they must be held to their record as not having at the proper time and in the proper place given expression to those generous views of which they have been so lavish to-day. The government was not impelled to take the action it did because of the resolution submitted to the House last session, although that of course is a factor to be seriously considered. Any resolution passed unanimously by this House must have some recognition and some effect in shaping the policy of the government, but it is no secret to the House that this matter is one which has been up for consideration, in one form or another, for a number of years. Pressure has been brought to bear on the government from various sides on behalf of the volunteers, but for reasons which have already been stated, it was not thought desirable to deal with the question until the present, and it is now being dealt with, not only in accord with the resolution of the House last year, but also in accord with the resolutions of the Legislative Assemblies of the two western provinces more immediately concerned. As to what further resolutions may be passed, that is a matter which may be fairly considered. They are not excluded from consideration because of the passage of this resolution and may be taken up in the proper place and at the proper time, and if taken up I trust they will receive the fair measure of consideration which this has received. It has been said by some of our friends opposite that this is either a Dominion or a provincial matter. I would like to say that it is both. The services rendered were rendered to the empire rather than to the Dominion, but they were, I am free to say, to the Dominion rather than to the provinces. But the question of a special grant of land in recognition of these services naturally and necessarily pertains to that authority which owns and controls the land. That ownership and control rests in certain provinces in the provincial government and in others in the Dominion government, and the Dominion government is dealing with this question to-day, not as the government of the Dominion, but as the holder of lands in certain provinces, and is dealing with this question, therefore, as it has been dealt with by some of the other provinces which are the holders of their own provincial lands, and as the legislatures of the new provinces in the west have expressed themselves as desirous it should be dealt with. We are not dealing with the question of the distribution of land generally for services in South Africa, but with the question simply from the standpoint of these particular provinces in which this government owns and controls the land, and are dealing with it from a provincial rather than a Dominion point of view.

It will be somewhat surprising to some of our friends in the west when they read the report of this debate and find that the gentlemen who have during the past several years loudly and strongly proclaimed the absolute rights of these western provinces to the ownership and control of their own lands declare here that these lands are absolutely the property of the Dominion, paid for by the Dominion, and to be used for any purpose this government may choose. This doctrine will grate rather harshly on the ears of a good many of the friends of the opposition in that western country. They will be rather surprised when they find what a right about face our hon. friends opposite have so suddenly taken..

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the hon. gentleman not distinguish between a question of doctrine and a question of law? It is not a question of doctrine at all, but the minister's own law for which he obtained his portfolio.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Does the minister deny that these lands are the property of the Dominion?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. What then does he mean?

Mr. OLIVER. I mean that my hon. friends opposite have campaigned up and down the Northwest declaring that these lands were not the property of the Dominion.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I never heard any one making the statement that these lands were not the property of the Dominion. On the contrary it was held by every one that they were. I mean since the Autonomy Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know just exactly how my hon. friend wants to draw the line between the campaign his friends made in the west before or after a certain date. I am aware, however, that I saw my hon. friend who represents Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) taking part in a political campaign in the west, only some three or four months ago, and one of his strong points was that the people of the west had been robbed of their lands.

Mr. LAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. That is to say that the control which this government exercises over those lands was unjustly acquired and unjustly exercised.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. That is not the statement we have heard to-day so frequently from hon. gentlemen opposite, and I repeat that I am afraid that the position so strongly taken and so repeatedly announced by our friends opposite will jar harshly on the ears of their friends in the west when they read the reports of this debate.

I do not presume at the moment to define just what the relations are between this government and the people of the Northwest in respect to the lands of the Northwest. But I do take issue with the position I have heard stated to-day that the lands of the Northwest were paid for by the terms of the Autonomy Bill. They were not paid for, or pretended to be paid for, by those terms. The Autonomy Bills provide that there shall be certain money paid by this government to those new provinces in lieu of lands for the expenses of government. That is in lieu of the revenue which might be derived from lands, which money should go towards the expenses of government in these provinces. That is quite a different matter from paying the price of the land, and it is in regard to the value of the land that the discussion has gone on to-day. For it is the value of the land, or the actual price of the land, that goes to the volunteer and not the mere taxable value, which was the transaction between this government and the government of the provinces. It is a doctrine that will not be received by our friends in the west when they are told that the subsidy which is agreed to be paid by this government to their governments is a price in payment of their land. That is not an understanding in accordance with the facts and will not be received.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a price in lieu of their lands because they did not receive those lands from which they might get an income ?

Mr. OLIVER. It was in view of the revenue which might be derived from the taxation or other disposition of the land, but not in lieu of the value of the land.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not the resolution declare that it was in consideration of the fact that these provinces did not get their land and could not realize revenue from their land, that they were given certain subsidies in lieu of it ?

Mr. OLIVER. In lieu of the revenue to be derived, but not in lieu of the value of the land.

Now, that point being settled, I wish to deal with another feature of the case. The question of the value of the lands of the west is one that is of interest, no doubt, to every resident of the Dominion ; but I think every one will admit that it is of paramount interest to the people of the west themselves. The method, the distribution and the prospects of settlement, and the system of settlement, are matters of paramount importance to the people there, and particularly the question whether there should enter into the handling of the lands the element of speculation. And, as an element of speculation certainly must enter into any transaction such as has been placed before the House to-night—any transaction in the way of land grants or scrip for lands—it is natural that the people of the west should look with some degree of care upon any proposition involving the alienation of any considerable portion of Northwest lands on any condition instead of actual settlement.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you provide for settlement in this case?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. So, when the people of the west, through their legislative assembly declare themselves in favour of the granting of scrip for lands to a certain class and a certain number of people, that binds them to that principle only so far as they ask it to be applied. and does not bind them to the principle of granting scrip or lands to everybody whom any person might think should be entitled to receive land. Therefore, while I say nothing whatever on the claims which have been put forward here on behalf of those not included in the resolutions before the House, I desire to say that there is a radical difference between the resolution of the Northwest assembly in this regard and the propositions or suggestions that have been made from the other side of the House, and that will have to be considered or, I think, in reason ought properly to be considered, entirely separately from those we have placed before the House.

Mr. BERGERON. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) be kind enough to tell the House how many in the three provinces will get the benefit of this resolution ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is only an estimate, of course but I believe it is placed at between 1,500 and 2,000. While there is every desire to deal with every possible liberality with those who have made sacrifices in the interests of our country and of the empire, it is necessary, of course, always to consider the difficulties of dealing with the situation and the possibilites that are involved in that dealing. As I said a few minutes ago it is impossible to give special concessions to any person or class of persons without introducing an element of speculation, and, as everybody knows, that element is not a desirable element in so far as it can be avoided. Therefore, in approaching this question, and in undertaking to deal with, as we think, a fair measure of liberality, with a certain proportion of the volunteers who went to South Africa, we thought it well to go cautiously and to put ourselves in a position that we could not with fairness be criticised as opening the door more widely to speculation than was absolutely necessary to meet the case. If it be so that the mind of parliament goes further and would justify the government in going further, and ignoring the possibilities of speculation in this regard, that is a matter for further consideration at some other time, but it does not interfere with the position of the present resolution, or the discussion of it.

I wish to refer for a moment to the question mentioned by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) to the effect, as I understood, that the province of Manitoba had not received justice at the hands of this government in regard to its lands. I have not the exact words of my hon. friend, but I think I understood the point he sought to make. The House should know that, at the present time, the province of Manitoba, as represented by its government, has under consideration a proposal to extend the boundaries of that province, and is declaring through its members on the floor of parliament that, unless a cash subsidy is given to the province on the same basis as was given to Saskatchewan and Alberta,—as my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has said in lieu of the lands—it would be a vile imposition upon the province and a most unjust discrimination against it. In regard to the terms of the resolution, I would like to say that the resolution only contains the salient features of the measure, but that the details will be contained in the Bill, and I think my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) who has asked certain questions, will find those questions fully answered in the Bill if and when it is brought down.

Mr. LAKE. Can the substitute do anything more than select and enter for ? Must the actual applicant himself perform the duties ?

Mr OLIVER. We have had in mind the previous land grants in recognition of military service in the west. The first of these was in respect of the expeditions in 1870 and 1871 in the Red River Rebellion and the next in the case of the rebellion of 1885. In the first case the scrip was for 160 acres; it was transferable and no settlement duties were involved. In 1885 it was thought desirable that advantages should not be given without settlement accompanying these grants. It was provided in 1885 that the person entitled by his services should receive a homestead of 320 acres instead of a grant of 100 acres. The preemption law was then in force so that the practical result was that the person entitled to scrip received a free pre-emption. He had also the privilege of assigning his right to this homestead of 320 acres so that any person who wished to do settlement duties in order to acquire a homestead and preemption could acquire that right by buying from the volunteers and fulfilling these duties.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister propose that now ?

Mr. OLIVER. We are going on the principle that grants of land should not be made unaccompanied by settlement and cultivation. We adhere to the principle adopted in 1885, by giving a homestead of 320 acres, requiring the same settlement conditions as in the case of a homestead of 160 acres and allowing the right of assignment so that the volunteer may dispose of his right to another person who, by settlement on the land and fulfilment of the requirements, can acquire a patent to 320 acres.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the minister not introducing another Bill giving a homestead of 320 acres ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He did last year.

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He had one quarter-section and could acquire another.

Mr. OLIVER. By paying for it.

Mr. LAKE. The grantee can assign his right to any one whether he has had a homestead or not, absolutely free of the regulations in regard to the first and second homestead.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the intention as the Bill is drafted and in that it differs from the Act of 1885, which did not permit that privilege. In that case the person who already had a homestead only had the right of pre-emption in addition. In this case we do not take cognizance of the previous standing of the assignee. He buys a right and if he fulfils the requirements he gets that right without any question as to other rights he may have under other circumstances.

Mr. GALLIHER. How many assignments can be made under that? If the volunteer assigns to Jones and Jones assigns to Brown, then if Brown performs the duty can he acquire the homestead or can there be only the one assignment direct to the man who proposes to do the duty.

Mr. OLIVER. I would have to get a legal opinion, but my impression would be, and I think the intention is, that the volunteer can assign to whoever he pleases and that person can assign to another, passing on the right to assign; but once the last assignee has made his entry for the land he cannot assign and will have to fulfil the duties.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what you call a substitute in the regulations?

Mr. GALLIHER. That would open the door to speculation.

Mr. OLIVER. We cannot disassociate this from speculation; when you give a privilege it involves speculation.

Mr. GALLIHER. You could curtail speculation by allowing only one assignment.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not say that we will not be guided by opinions given in the committee. We desire to deal with these volunteers with the utmost liberality, consistent with absolute settlement aud cultivation. We do not wish to prevent the volunteer getting out of his land its fullest value. For that reason we give him the full right of assignment and I think it would be just as well to give the free right of assignment until the actual entry has been made.

Mr. LAKE. Will this grant go to every volunteer or his legal assigns? For instance, if the volunteer had died in the meantime?

Mr. OLIVER. While there is no provision to that effect in the resolution, that could be dealt with and such a clause inserted in committee if it is agreed to by the House.

It may be of interest to the committee that there were 1,558 issues of land grants in the case of the Red River rebellion, and in the case of the Northwest rebellion 1,068 land warrants and 5,125 money scrip notes of $80 each. In the case of the rebellion of 1885, the volunteer was allowed to exchange his right to the land for a scrip note of $80 which he could use in a payment for Dominion lands. We have followed that provision but we have changed the amount to $160.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the minister think that land scrip to the amount of $160 is a fair proposition?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I have been following the precedent of the previous arrangement, and I thought that $80 was certainly too small. I thought it would be fair, at any rate, to double it, and I think there is a good deal to be said against increasing the amount of the scrip to any great degree. What we want is settlement on the land, and if we give a reasonable value for the exchange between land and scrip, I think we are doing fairly well.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We can discuss that when the Bill comes down.

Mr. HERRON. Would it be possible to insert an option in the Bill. If a volunteer did not wish to take 320 acres under the homesteading conditions, could it not be arranged that he might be permitted to select a quarter section and get the patent for it in a few months? There are men who would prefer that to receiving 320 acres with settlement duties.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a matter that can be discussed in committee on the Bill. There is no doubt that the matter was considered fully in 1885, and, for the reasons which are apparent, it was decided then that it was not advisable to follow the precedent of the scrip land of 1870 and make a grant of 160 acres clear of all duties. If, in 1885, it was not thought advisable to follow the example of the scrip of 1870 giving a free grant, I think it would be looked upon with very much less favour to-day. I think the demand to-day is more strongly for actual settlement in making any land grant than it was even in 1885. We have, at any rate, followed the precedent of 1885 in making this provision and in drafting the Bill.

Mr. HERRON. I disagree with the minister's statement that the sentiment in the west is in favour of settlement. Of course, it is in favour of the general settlement of the country, but in reference to the volunteers I do not think it is. I think the sentiment of the country has been or would be in favour of giving a free grant to a man who has served in South Africa. The bulk of the men who have served in South Africa and who are alive are residents in that country to-day. These men have served about three years for their king and country, and I think that should be ample service in lieu of a residence of six months each year for three years on a homestead, and I believe that if any man wishes to have the option of taking 160 acres he should be allowed to do so without being hampered by any conditions whatever. I am quite sure that this would meet with the approval of the people of the Northwest, and I think it would be a reasonable provision to make in the Bill.

Mr. TURRIFF. I think that the volunteer who gets a warrant enabling him to locate 320 acres of land, with the right of assignment, would be able to sell that to fully as good advantage as he would be able to sell a quarter section of land if he had the patent for it. There are a large number of men in the older settled parts of the west who have not the right to second homestead and who would be very glad to buy an assignment that would enable them, by doing the homestead duties for three years, to secure 320 acres. A man who has a homestead is not debarred in any way from purchasing the assignment of any of these volunteer's rights and locating an additional 320 acres. The volunteer is going to have fully as much advantage under this arrangement as if the suggestion of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) were adopted and he were given a free patent to a quarter section.

Mr. LAKE. Excepting that if he had a patent of his quarter section he would always have security if he made a sale, whereas he would have no security beyond the real cash he got if he made a sale under this, because he would have no hold upon the land. There is another point in reference to the desirability of making a full grant of 160 acres, and that is that it will simplify the matter for the widows of those volunteers who have unfortunately died, in a great many instances, as a result of the privations which they suffered during the campaign, and also in cases such as that which was mentioned by my hon. friend from Alberta, in which a man, who was permanently disabled during the campaign, has been obliged to remain in the hospital ever since. It would be a very great relief to him if he had a free grant of land. Under the present conditions it will mean that a large number of these options will be on the market at the same time. They have to be exercised within three years, or within less than three years from the present time, in order to make them effective, and it will be a pretty difficult matter for a good many people who are not on the spot to dispose of them in this way. I had a letter only a day or two ago from a gentleman who is a member of the provincial police in British Columbia wanting to know what was going on. I do not think he can leave his duties to go hunting for land or to find purchasers of his rights. I think it would be a great benefit to all these grantees if they could have the option of taking full title to 160 acres of land.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say a few words in regard to some of the observations made by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). He said that further resolutions could be taken up at the proper time and place. Does it not occur to him that there could be no more proper time than the time when we are considering the resolution for granting land to a portion of the volunteers to consider a resolution for granting to the balance of them a similar consideration? It seems to me that there can be no more proper time than that to consider it. The hon. gentleman said that the opposition must be considered responsible for this resolution, because they assented to it as well as the supporters of the government, although they may not have expressed themselves in favour of extending it to all, it must be assumed that they were in favour of extending it to all those who have been resident in that country. I want to say that that was neither my intention nor desire. My feeling was this: It had been several times brought to the attention of the government and they had always refused, upon one pretext or another, to consider it. Therefore, I believe that most of the members of the opposition thought that it would not be accepted or considered by the government. Therefore they refrained from wasting the time of the House talking upon a question which they believed would not be considered. But the government accepted it. The minister said as well: We had a memorial from the Northwest, and that memorial only requested that this right should be granted to residents of that country; it did not request that it should be applied to all. He said the government did this because the others were likely to be granted some compensation by their respective provinces. The natural selfishness of human nature prompted them to make a request to this government, believing it was the only power which could grant them compensation, but had the question been submitted to the people of the province, whether they were willing that the same rights should be extended to all volunteers outside Manitoba and the Territories as well as those that resided there, I venture to say very few would have objected to extending the grant to every volunteer who served in South Africa.

Mr. WARD. The Minister of the Interior said it was almost impossible to eliminate the principle of speculation from transactions of this kind, but if the Dominion government were to follow the example of the government of Ontario under like circumstances, that element would be eliminated. Past experience has shown that fully one-half of those who received warrants for land take up the scrip instead, and if this government were to do as the Ontario government did and issue no scrip at all, it would be in the interest of those who receive the grant. I may tell the Minister of the Interior that the Ontario government in connection with the 160 acres of land granted by it, has provided that during the last two years any one who is entitled to that land can surrender his right to the land and accept from the government $50. Why not give to these South African veterans the sole right of any advantage the government intends to give them, as can be done by adopting the Ontario system. If a veteran is in need and wants to dispose of his scrip he will take almost anything he can get for it, and the speculator in the end really gets one-half of the scrip. But if the Ontario system were followed the veterans would get the sole benefit and the speculator would get nothing. The government is surely not so poor that they cannot pay in money instead of giving scrip. It really amounts to the same thing in the end because the government has to honour that scrip as so much cash in payment for land. I would ask the Minister of the Interior to consider this suggestion so that no matter whether the South African veteran takes the land and asigns it or takes the payment, he will get the whole benefit of whatever the government is giving and thus the placing of one-half of it in the hands of speculators will be avoided. I concur in what has been said by hon. members on this side of the House ; I approve of the resolutions so far as they go, but I would like to see their scope extended so as to include every Canadian who served in South Africa.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that while the Bill would be on the lines of the resolution it would be materially different from the resolution.

Mr. OLIVER. The resolution contains the salient features of the Bill. There is nothing in the Bill as drafted that is not covered by the resolution, but the details are elaborated in the Bill. I have stated that the amendment suggested was by an oversight not included in the Bill, and as it goes further than the resolution it will have to be considered separately in the committee on the Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister has suggested that he might probably increase the sum of $160 in scrip mentioned in the resolution, but I do not think the Bill can deviate from the resolution in that respect.

Mr. OLIVER. If it be the view of the House the change could be made but it would have to be done by another resolution.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the minister understand by the statement in the resolution that the grant shall be exempt from all fees and charges exacted in the case of an ordinary homestead entry ? Is it the small $10 fee or does it apply to taxation ?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course the question of taxation would stand in the same position only fee contemplated here is the ordinary entry fee.

Resolution reported and agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 109) respecting grants of Dominion Lands to certain Volunteers for Military Service in South Afica.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read first time.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

QUESTIONS.

CLAIM OF JAMES MAHER.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens)) asked :

1. Has a claim been made on behalf or, or by James Maher for payment of damages on account of land expropriated in connection with the construction of the Montague branch of the Prince Edward Island Railway?

2. If so, why was this claim not paid or sent to the Exchequer Court at its recent sitting in Charlottetown?

3. Has James Maher's claim for damages for laying water pipes across his property adjoining the Montague branch of the Prince Edward Island Railway been paid?

4. If not, why not, and why has not this claim been sent to the Exchequer Court, with other claims, at its recent sitting in Charlottetown?

5. What steps does the government propose taking to have those claims paid?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. No land has been expropriated from James Maher; but the right of laying water pipes through his land was expropriated for which he agreed to take $70, but has since claimed $150.

2. The investigation into the claim of James Maher was not completed in time to permit its reference to the Exchequer Court to be heard in October last. Unless a settlement can be effected an information will be filed in that court for the purpose of determining the compensation.

3. No.

4. Answered by No. 2.

5. Willing to pay $70.

4. The government has no complete record of the number of immigrants sent to Canada by each agent.

5. The agents report the names of those on whom bonus or commission is claimed.

GLENCOE, ONT.—NEW POST OFFICE.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked:

1. Is it the intention of the government to build a new post office building in the town of Glencoe, Ontario?

2. If so, has the contract been let, who received the contract, and what is the estimated cost?

3. Has a site been purchased? If so, from whom, and what was the purchase price?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. A petition praying for the erection of a public building at Glencoe was received at the Post Office Department and transferred to the Department of Public Works on the 15th April, 1907.

2. No. Plans have not as yet been prepared.

3. (a) Yes. (b) P. D. Keith. (c) $1,250.

CANNED GOODS INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. J. D. REID asked:

Are sections 26 and 27 of the Act respecting the inspection of meats and canned foods being enforced by the department? If not, why not?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Evidently the question would not apply to section 26 and 27 of the Act, but it would apply to section 26 and 27 of the regulations. These sections of the regulations are being enforced in so far as regards the products of establishments designated by order in council as those in which inspection is to be maintained under the Act.

INLAND REVENUE SEIZURES.

Mr. BARR asked:

1. Who made the seizures under the Inland Revenue Department in the fiscal years 1906 and 1907, in Cornwall, London, Ottawa, St. Catharines, Toronto, Joliette and Montreal, and what did the seizures consist of?

2. What was the name of the party or parties from whom the material was seized?

3. What was the amount realized by the sale of such seized material?
4. How was this seized material disposed of, and was it by public auction or by private sale?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). The answer to this question will take a full week to make out. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Barr) to let it stand as a notice of motion for return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as notice of motion for return.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES IN COUNTY OF QUEBEC.

Mr. ROBITAILLE asked :

1. What moneys have been expended by the government for a local advantage in the county of Quebec, for the last eighteen years?
2. For what special purpose have these amounts been appropriated?

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion for return.

IMMIGRATION—INFORMATION FORMS RETURNED FROM WEST KENT.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked :

Out of the number of information forms sent to West Kent to farmers whom the department supposed had received immigrants through the agents appointed, how many farmers have returned forms or informed the government they never received any of the immigrants through the government agents?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Copies of all replies received from farmers in West Kent are contained in return No. 109.

CANNED PEAS—IMPORTATIONS FROM FRANCE.

Mr. MARSHALL asked :

How many pounds of canned peas were imported from France into the Dominion in the fiscal year ending 1907, and what was the value of the same?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I regret that I shall not be able to furnish the hon. gentleman (Mr. Marshall) with this information. In order to learn separately the imports of these articles, which are included with others in the returns, we should have to collect the information from the several ports, and could not collect the facts during the present session I fear.

ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. During the year ending October 31, 1907, was target practice suspended with the Ross rifle by the Royal Northwest Mounted Police?
2. If so, by whose orders, and for what reasons?
3. Have the Ross rifles with which the R.N.W.M.P. were armed been called into stores?
4. If so, for what reason?
5. With how many and of what varieties of rifles or carabines is the force now armed?
6. Is it the intention of the government to arm this force with the Ross rifle?
7. If so, when will the issue be made and of what mark or description will the rifle be?
8. Have there been any complaints in reports of the R.N.W.M.P. of the inferiority of pistol ammunition?
9. If so, by whom was this ammunition manufactured?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Minister of Militia) :

1. Yes.
2. They have been recalled into store to be exchanged.
3. Yes.
4. To be exchanged for an improved pattern.
5. 804 Winchester carbines, 220 Lee Enfield, 204 Lee-Metford.
6. Yes.
7. Undecided.
8 and 9. Yes, but only with respect to the 'capping' of one trial shipment manufactured by Eley Bros., England.

MR. H. J. MOBERLEY.

Mr. LAKE asked :

What payments have been made to H. J. Moberley, of Prince Albert, in connection with the census or other services, from January 1, 1905, to the present time, by the Departments of Agriculture or the Interior, giving amounts, dates of payment, and services for which made?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Mr. H. J. Moberley was engaged by Mr. James Flett, one of the enumerators of the census of 1900, as guide. He received from Mr. Flett, July 28, 1906, $59.75, and from the department, in closing his account on his being recalled from the work, $34.25, June 11, 1907.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). So far as the Department of the Interior is concerned the answer is, No.

BAIT FREEZER AT NORTH SYDNEY.

Mr. SPROULE asked :

1. Did the government assist in the construction of a bait freezer or cold storage building at North Sydney?
2. If so, to what extent, and to whom was the money paid?
3. Who was in charge of the erection of said building?
4. Has the government any lien on the land or building?
5. What did the building cost?
6. On whose land is the building erected?
7. Is all the material and labour paid for?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.
2. $2,000. To the North Cape Breton Fishermen's Bait Association.
3. Peter Macfarlane, the officer in charge of the establishment of fishermen's bait freezers.
4. No.
5. $4,142.39.
6. On land arranged for by the association.
7. Yes, so far as this department is concerned. The association is responsible for individual accounts.

DOKIS INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked :

1. Have the Indians surrendered or agreed to surrender their title to the Dokese or Dokis Indian reserve?
2. If so, for what consideration, at what date, and under what arrangement?
3. Who negotiated the surrender on behalf of the government?
4. Did any person or persons acting on behalf of private individuals or corporations assist in negotiating the surrender?
5. Has the government made any inquiry into the circumstances in this connection?
6. What is the area of the reserve?
7. What quantity of timber and of what character is supposed to be on this reserve?
8. Has the government made any survey or estimate of the value of timber thereon? If not, does it propose doing so?
9. Is it the intention of the government to dispose of this reserve? If so, in what manner and under what conditions?
10. In what way is it intended to safeguard the public interest in the timber on this reserve?
11. What is the estimated value of the reserve and of the timber thereon?
12. Where is this reserve situated?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. The Indians have not surrendered their title to the reserve. They have signed a surrender of the pine timber thereon, but the surrender has not yet been accepted by the government.
2. The Indians to receive ten per cent of proceeds of sale, payable after sale effected.
3. The local Indian agent.
4. No.
5. No.
6. 30,000 acres.
7. The government has no recent information as to this.
8. The government has made no recent survey or estimate of timber, but before sale will do so.
9. The government intends to dispose of surrendered timber by public competition.
10. The government's obligation is to safeguard the interests of the Indians, and will do so by endeavouring to obtain the largest return possible from the sale of the timber.
11. The government has made no recent valuation of either the reserve or the timber.
12. The reserve is situated on the French river, near Lake Nipissing, in the province of Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT. In what form will the competition be, by auction or tender ?

Mr. OLIVER. Assuming the surrender is accepted, the sale will be by auction.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all inquiries, applications, leases, contracts, agreements, assignments, correspondence and papers of every description, in connection with or referring to the granting of coal mining privileges in section 11, township 8, range 4, west of the fifth meridian.—Mr. Ames.

For a copy of all correspondence, leases or other papers in connection with the leasing or proposed leasing of Kananaski falls, on the Bow river.

A copy of all correspondence and other papers in connection with the selling or otherwise disposing of 1,000 acres or any lands to the Calgary Power and Transmission Company, Limited.

A statement showing an estimate of about the number of acres and territory owned by the Stony Indian reserve, held in trust for the Indians, the said statement showing the quantity of each side of Bow river.—Mr. J. D. Reid.

For a return showing what sums of money were paid during the fiscal year 1905-6 and 1906-7 by any department of the government to the Steel Concrete Company, Limited; for what purpose such payments were made; what orders for work or material to be done or supplied by that company are now being filled, and the aggregate amount payable for same.—Mr. Boyce.

For a copy of all applications to homestead or purchase, reports, agreements of lease or sale, correspondence exchanged between the Department of the Interior and any person whatsoever, and papers of every description dealing with or treating of the sale or lease of surface, mining, timber or any other rights in respect of the northwest quarter of section 8, township 53, range 4, west of the fifth meridian.—Mr. Ames.

For a return showing what lands, if any, have been reserved for grazing purposes or for acquisition by means of irrigation within the tract described as follows: townships 12 to 19, inclusive, in ranges 15 to 21, west of the fourth meridian; and when such lands were so reserved, and for how long it is the purpose of the government to continue such reservation.—Mr. Lennox.

For a return showing, in respect of each of the undermentioned blocks disposed of as coal lands by the government, viz.: sections 2, 4, 9, 15, 17 and 28, of township 7, range 3, west of the fifth meridian, when and by whom the first application was made for right to acquire; when and to whom the original grant of mining rights was made; what transfers of rights have been recorded, when such transfers were dated, and when registered with the department; who the present owner or occupant is, as known to the department; and the name and address of each company or person above referred to.—Mr. Ames.

For a return showing, in respect of each of the undermentioned blocks disposed of as coal lands by the government, viz.: section 13, of township 9, range 4, west of the fifth meridian; section 16, township 10, range 3, west of the fifth meridian; section 15, township 11, range 4, west of the fifth meridian; section 20, township 12, range 4, west of the fifth meridian; section 5, township 13, range 4, west of the fifth meridian; section 21, township 19, range 7, west of the fifth meridian, when and by whom the first application was made for right to acquire; when and to whom the original grant of mining rights was made; what transfers of rights have been recorded, the date of transfer, and date of registration of same; who the present owner or occupant is, as known to the department; and the name and address of each company or person above referred to.—Mr. Ames.

For a copy of all applications, leases, assignments, correspondence and papers of every description in connection with or referring to the granting or sale of the mining rights in sections 17, 20, 21, 28, 29, 32 and 33, of township 8, range 4, west of the fifth meridian.—Mr. Perley.

For a return showing the number of seizures under the Inland Revenue Department in the years 1906 and 1907; the name of the party or parties making the seizure; the description and quantity of material seized; the name of the parties from whom the material was seized; how the seized material was disposed of, whether by public auction or by private sale, and what the amount realized thereon was.—Mr. Barr.

For a return showing a list of timber berths awarded between June 1, 1904, and July 15, 1896, with the number of tenders in each case, the amounts of each tender, the name of the successful tenderer, the area of each berth, the dates of notice and opening of the tenders in each case.—Mr. Crawford.

GRANTS OF TIMBER LIMITS IN PEACE RIVER REGION.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES moved :

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, reports, recommendations, tenders or communications of any kind in relation to the granting of sixteen townships and certain timber limits in the Peace river region, as referred to in a motion of the 15th January ultimo, reference 102.

He said : I would like to add 'orders in council' before the word 'letters' in the second line, and change the words 'Order of the House' to the word 'address.'

Mr. OLIVER. I think that all the papers in connection with this case, or at least all until some date of the last session, have already been placed before the House. I think it would be in order for my hon. friend to amend by saying, 'those not already brought down.'

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I accept the suggestion.

Motion as amended agreed to.

MONEY AND SCRIP RECEIVED FROM LAND SALES.

On the order :

For a return showing how much money and scrip the government has received on account of the lands, mines, minerals and timber, in each of the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, during the following periods: from July 1, 1896, to June 30, 1905, and from July 1, 1905, to December 31, 1907.—Mr. Lake.

Mr. LAKE. When this question was asked the other day, the Minister of the Interior desired that it should be put in a different form, and I have put it in a different form which I think will give no trouble at all to the department. I ask that a distinction be made in the different provinces, so that each land office will be simply returning its own accounts.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to say that the Battleford agency extends into Alberta, and by asking for a return of all agencies, in that case it will not give the division between the provinces.

Mr. LAKE. I understand that, but I want it by agencies.

Motion as amended agreed to.

SALE OF DOMINION LANDS IN WESTERN PROVINCES.

Mr. LAKE moved :

For a return showing the approximate total area of Dominion lands disposed of by the government in each of the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan between the 1st July, 1896, and the 30th June, 1905, distinguishing between lands for agricultural purposes, grazing, irrigation, timber and coal; and also from the 1st July, 1905, to the 31st December, 1907.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to point out to the mover that the information called for will require a great deal of time to compile. I merely wish to point that out. Although it is a very easy question to ask, it is a very difficult question to answer, but if my hon. friend, knowing that, still desires the information, of course I will try to get it for him.

Mr. LAKE. I am willing to make this by agencies also.

Mr. OLIVER. That would not make any difference.

Mr. LAKE. Let it stand, and I will see about it.

Motion amended and agreed to.

EXPENDITURES AT MONTREAL, QUE., ETC.

Mr. ROBITAILLE moved :

For a return showing how much money has been spent in the port of Montreal for the past fifty years, (a) for wharfs ; (b) for dredging in port; (c) for transportation facilities by grain elevators, railway tracking, &c.; (d) for dredging between Montreal and Quebec; and also, showing how much money has been spent in the port of Quebec for the last fifty years.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Robitaille) whether he thinks it is desirable to have this motion carried. It involves a large amount of labour.

Mr. FIELDING. It goes back fifty years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Long before confederation. Perhaps my hon. friend would amend his motion so as to limit the time to recent years, at all events within confederation.

Mr. HENDERSON. Say the last ten years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The last ten years or the last fifteen years.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. If I could get the estimates as voted it might not take very much time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will see that his motion goes back to a considerable time before confederation.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Make it since confederation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it is limited to that we can get it.

Motion as amended agreed to.

EXAMINATION OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS.

Mr. AMES. Before the motions are taken up may I be permitted to ask a question for the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to answer? I wish to know whether the Minister of the Interior has issued instructions to the department in effect that none of the documents which may be asked for by the Public Accounts Committee shall be produced for the examination of members except while the Public Accounts Committee are in session?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

ALCOHOL FOR INDUSTRIAL USES.

Mr. D. W. BOLE (Winnipeg) moved :

That, whereas the regulation requiring two years' storage of alcohol after distillation, tends to create a monopoly in that article and increase the price, without increasing its usefulness in the manufacture of medical and pharmaceutical preparations, perfumes, chemicals, dyes, and scientific research; and that the potable article costs in the Canadian market over twenty-five times more than the primary cost of production, and therefore tends to restrict development in the lines mentioned, and prohibits its use as an economical agent in the wider field of industrial activity, in the opinion of this House the government should appoint a commission to inquire into and report upon a method by which alcohol can be generally used in legitimate scientific and industrial operations, without increasing the danger of its use as a potable spirit.

He said : Mr. Speaker, I desire to engage the attention of the House this afternoon for about ten minutes on the question of cheap alcohol for medicinal, pharmaceutical and manufacturing purposes. In bringing this subject forward for discussion I appreciate the fact that I am up against a prejudice in the minds of a great many people against alcohol, people who think that alcohol is the active, evil spirit of all intoxicants and that having no other use, it should be relegated to the safest place possible. I am well aware, as well as the rest of the members of this House, that alcohol is a dangerous article if abused. At the same time it must be remembered that pure alcohol, properly used, is one of the most useful agents in the hands of man. It is at once dangerous and useful. It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to advocate the wider use of alcohol as a beverage. It is not my intention to discuss the question of alcoholic beverages such as whisky, brandy, gin, but I intend to confine my remarks solely to pure alcohol such as is used, and might be used to a much larger extent in pharmaceutical and chemical enterprises, and generally in greater industrial development. There are two declarations in the resolution which I have moved which I understand have been attacked since the resolution was placed on the Order Paper by some outside interests. The first is the declaration set out here that two years storage tends to create a monopoly. I think the statement is true that the storage of a manufactured article for two years would tend to create a monopoly because it could be manufactured only by people who are strong enough to carry it for two years previous to marketing it. The other declaration is that the price of alcohol in Canada to-day is twenty-five times greater than the cost of production. When I tell you that alcohol can be purchased in Germany at 22 cents a gallon, that it can be purchased in Cuba at 25 cents a gallon—I regret that I have not the documents to prove that it can be purchased at this price in Germany, but I have a statement from a reputable house in Cuba quoting this article at 25 cents a gallon—and when I tell you that the wholesale price at the distillery in Canada is $4.43 a gallon, or $4.75 a gallon retail, you will see that my statement is correct when I say that the price in the market is twenty-five times greater than the cost of production. Assuming that the article can be purchased in Germany for 22 cents and that the distillers will have a profit of 4 cents a gallon, 18 cents may be put down as the cost of production of this article in Germany.

In respect to the position of alcohol in Canada, I would like to state to the House that the price in bond in 1880, twenty-eight years ago, was 59 cents a gallon. In discussing this question of alcohol I am not, of course, talking about proof gallons but about alcohol as we understand it in commerce, namely, 65 over proof, or about 90 per cent pure alcohol; and when I speak of a gallon I, of course, refer to an imperial gallon. The price in bond in 1880, was 59 cents a gallon at the distillery before the duty was paid. The excise duty at the same time was $1.28 per gallon, making the price wholesale at the distillery, duty paid, in 1880, twenty-eight years ago, $1.87 per gallon. The price to-day in bond is $1.39 as against 59 cents twenty-eight years ago; the excise charge to-day is $3.14 a gallon, making the price at the distillery wholesale, $4.43. The customs tariff at the present time in Canada is about $4 per gallon on alcohol 90 per cent strength, or more correctly speaking, $3.99, or a protection to the distillers in Canada of 85 cents a gallon more than the excise charge.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman stated that in 1880 the price was $1.87 a gallon and the price quite recently $4.43; can the hon. gentleman state the prices in the intervening years so that we may see when the advances were made?

Mr. BOLE. I have that information. There has been a general increase from 1880 up to the present time in jumps of 10 cents, 15 cents, 25 cents. Of course the increase in the excise charges could only be made by an Act of Parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. When the hon. gentleman quotes the price of alcohol in Germany does he refer to the same kind and quality of alcohol as we use in Canada?

Mr. BOLE. No. The alcohol generally used in Germany is distilled from potatoes, but there is the same duty on potato alcohol coming into Canada as on grain alcohol. I am free to admit the grain alcohol is the better article, but for all manufacturing purposes the potato and the molasses alcohol is quite as good. There is no difference as far as I am aware, in the quality of these articles for manufacturing purposes. As I have said, the customs tariff, which is about $4 per gallon, gives the distillers of this country a protection of 85 cents a gallon beyond the excise charge. Now, we are allowed in this country to manufacture in bond, that is, we can manufacture from duty paid alcohol and by producing evidence of exportation there is a rebate allowed. But for home consumption the duty must be paid on alcohol and of course any that is manufactured for home consumption is manufactured from duty paid spirits. In England the price in bond is 43 cents a gallon for the same kind of alcohol, I understand, as is manufactured in Canada at the present time—43 cents in England as against $1.39 in Canada. The excise charge is 21 shillings a gallon for 90 per cent pure alcohol and the customs charge is 9 pence per gallon more, or a protection to the English distillers of 18 cents a gallon as against 85 cents in Canada. In England the manufacturers are also allowed to manufacture in bond as we are in Canada, namely, from duty paid spirit and upon proof of exportation a rebate is allowed. I wish to point out that for a number of years in England there was a strong agitation in favour of free alcohol for manufacturing purposes. The government woke up to the fact that it was absolutely necessary some regulations of this kind should be made, and legislation was passed to encourage the home manufacturer, but the whole question was relegated to the officers of the department to make the regulations and the officials created a code of regulations so stringent that it was practically impossible for the manufacturers to proceed with the manufacture in England and they were obliged to go to Germany. The result is that the English officials have driven out of England some of the very brightest minds in scientific chemical research. For a great many years England led in the development and manufacture of aniline dyes and coal tar products and things of that kind, but I am safe in saying that now hardly any of these are manufactured in England; they are all manufactured in Germany. The price in bond in Germany is 25 cents a gallon. The excise charge is 70 marks per 100 litres or about 70 cents per imperial gallon. For burning and mechanical purposes the excise charge is 6 marks per 100 litres or about 6 cents per gallon, and for scientific purposes in the universities and scientific research generally there is no charge at all, except a very small premium, the amount of which I have not been able to learn, but which I understand is a nominal figure. In consequence of this great freedom in the use of alcohol in Germany no less than 82,000,000 gallons were used last year for manufacturing purposes, 95,000,000 gallons of denatured alcohol were used for power and 67,000,000 gallons or about 9 pints per head of the population were used for drinking purposes. You will see therefore that it is possible to give wider range to the use of alcohol without increasing its danger as a potable or drinkable spirit. The result of this freedom in Germany has seen the development of a tremendous business as the figures which I have given will show. In fact, the Germans control the markets of the world with respect to dyes, small chemicals, coal tar products and many heavy chemicals. Then as to the denatured article, 95,000,000 gallons being used in Germany shows the great usefulness of this article outside the question of pharmaceutical purposes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what do I want by this resolution. I want:

1. The abolition of the two years' storage regulation as far as it applies to the manufacture of pharmaceutical products.

2. Alcohol free from excise duty for manufacturing purposes and for the purposes I have named.

3. The reduction of the customs tariff to 25 cents per gallon for manufacturing purposes only, and,

4. A commission or committee to inquire into and report upon the methods by which this can be done without increasing the danger of its use as a potable spirit.

I will consider for a few minutes these various subjects in the order in which I have named them. The storage system is I claim absolutely unnecessary as far as the uses of alcohol for the purposes I have indicated are concerned. It is absolutely unnecessary to store alcohol for manufacturing purposes. It is very true, and no doubt the minister will point it out, that manufacturers at the present time have the privilege of using non-potable spirits direct from the still if they so desire. But it must be under government supervision. The result is that large manufacturers can avail themselves of this privilege by getting alcohol direct from the still at a reduced cost, but not reduced so far as the customs and excise charges are concerned—only at a reduced cost as far as the price of the article in bond is concerned. But only large manufacturers can avail themselves of that privilege. The druggists, 3,000 of whom live in Canada and have shops open every day, and the hospitals in all parts of the country are deprived of this privilege. The result is that they are obliged to pay for this article in barrels, in carload lots at the distillery, $1.43 when it can be bought in other countries at from 25 to 30 cents a gallon.

Mr. SPROULE. How it it kept this length of time?

Mr. BOLE. It is now stored, I believe, in copper tanks. I will not at present discuss the propriety of storing. My own opinion is that it does not do the alcohol any good. There may be some reason for storing it in wood, by which there is a chance for the absorption of the oil; but for the purposes of manufacturing pharmacists, it is of no use to store this article. But the fact that it is stored for all purposes tends to increase the price and to restrict operations in the way I have stated. Of course, the department will raise the objection that the removal of this storage arrangement will have a tendency to cheapen alcohol and therefore increase the danger of drinking habits among the people. I appreciate that danger. At the same time I think you can trust the druggists of this country not to abuse the privilege; but if any do, punish them just as you would those who manufacture alcohol in an illicit way.

With respect to making alcohol for manufacturng purposes free of excise taxes. I understand that it is the policy of both political parties to make the raw material of all manufactures as free of taxes as possible. Alcohol is the only raw material I know of that is taxed at the present time in Canada. It is only used as a raw material; and when I state that the British pharmacopœia contains over 3,000 articles that are recommended by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Great Britain, and that of these 2,000 have alcohol, either used in their manufacture or as a component part of the finished product, its usefulness can be understood. Take, for instance, such an article as chloroform. Nobody will deny the usefulness of this article. It has been stated that chloroform is the greatest boon medical science has given to humanity; but at the present time it is impossible to manufacture chloroform in Canada, although we have the facilities for doing so, the capital, the enterprise, and the brains. We are obliged to import it from foreign countries. There are other articles in the same position, such as ether and spirits of nitre. The medical gentlemen in the House will appreciate the usefulness of all these things; yet they cannot be manufactured in Canada to compete with the foreign article. Spirits of nitre cannot be manufactured in Canada for less than fifty-five or sixty cents a pound, but it can be bought in Germany for from fifteen to seventeen cents a pound. I am safe in saying that if we had in Canada free alcohol for manufacturing purposes, we would increase our trade in five years by at least $5,000,000; because we would manufacture not only for our own country, but for the West Indies, South America, and South Africa; in fact, we could compete with the German manufacturers all over the world.

I know that the objection will be raised to all this that it would somewhat decrease the revenue. The revenue which the government derives at the present time from alcohol used for the purposes I have mentioned amounts to about $120,000 a year; but I venture the statement that if alcohol for these purposes were made free the wealth of this country would be increased by ten times that amount in five years.

Mr. FIELDING. Do you mean free as to both excise and customs duties?

Mr. BOLE. Free as to excise and a reduction as to customs. If alcohol for these purposes were made free, and denatured if the government thought fit, I believe that within five years the people all over this country would be using pure alcohol for industrial purposes instead of benzine or gasoline. Last year there were imported 3,294,759 gallons of benzine for use in motor cars, elevators and small engines. The customs duty should be reduced to twenty-five cents a gallon, that would be equivalent to 100 per cent of protection, which I think ought to be sufficient for the distillers of this country. Very few of our manufacturers enjoy so large a protection as that.

I have no doubt that the objection will be raised that it is impracticable to import alcohol purely for manufacturing purposes, as it is likely to lose its identity and go into general consumption as a drinkable article; but I think the government has already furnished examples of the practicability of admitting an article used for certain purposes at a lower rate of duty than when used for other purposes. For instance, printing presses for newspapers are allowed to be imported free of duty, while, if imported for job printing purposes, they are charged ten per cent.

With respect to the fourth suggestion I make, namely, that a commission be appointed for the purpose of inquiring and reporting to the government by what means the object of the resolution can be carried out, I would be quite willing to relegate the whole subject to the department, but that I am a little afraid that the department, who are accustomed to consider only the requirements of the revenue, and have no experience in industrial development, would report only with respect to the effects of the change on the revenue. This was the experience in England, when the parliament there passed legislation which gave to the manufacturers all the privileges they asked for; but when the matter was referred to the department for regulation, the regulations were such that it was impossible for manufacturers all the privileges they asked measure, and the result was that they went holus bolus to Germany. If the suggestions I make are carried into effect, I think it will be reasonable to expect a tremendous increase in trade along the various lines that I have mentioned, and I do not see why the people who use medicines, the hospitals and many other interests are not entitled to have this matter inquired into.

There are a great many small chemicals imported at present from Germany that do not contain alcohol but require a large amount of alcohol in their production. The result is that in Germany the people who employ alcohol for this purpose can afford to lose it. But we have to pay an excise of $4.15 per gallon and $1.39 for the alcohol itself in bond, it is impossible for us to do that and the result is we are obliged to pay tribute to the Germans in so far as these articles are concerned. If the government adopt the proposed policy, and I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) made some suggestions in his last budget speech with respect to the development of denatured alcohol—if that policy and the suggestions I make be carried out, we will all appreciate the great benefit that will result to the farmers from the use of a larger quantity of grain for the production of alcohol. I have already taken up more time than I intended, but to a considerable portion of our people this is a very important subject. With 3,000 druggists scattered over the land, it is a most important subject, because it is impossible for a druggist to buy alcohol at present and manufacture in the way he is trained to do. He is obliged by law to learn how to do it but is prevented by the price of the alcohol. These men all over the country could use a very large quantity of pure alcohol. The subject is therefore a very important one, and I hope the government will see the necessity of giving it consideration.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) has spoken, not of denatured alcohol, but of the various uses to which pure alcohol may be put and in respect of which he thinks a duty should not be imposed and no excise revenue collected. During last session I spoke on the subject of denatured alcohol and its use for many of the purposes for which the hon. gentleman advocates the use of pure alcohol under favoured conditions. For these purposes the denatured alcohol may be as well and as profitably used. I have followed with some interest the legislation and regulations of the United States Congress since I spoke on this question last session. The first legislation in the United States respecting denatured alcohol was an Act passed in June, 1906, and which came into force the 1st January, 1907. Another Act was passed by the American Congress giving greater liberty of action in the manufacture of alcohol. That Act was passed in March, 1907. Under it the door was more widely opened for the manufacture of alcohol for denaturing purposes. Many of the restrictions imposed upon the larger distilleries were, by the consent of the commissioner of internal revenue and the seretary of the treasury, removed in respect of distilleries producing alcohol on a smaller scale and for denaturing purposes only. A distillery producing not more than 100 gallons per day is free from many or most of the restrictions which apply to the larger distilleries. A distillery having a capacity of not more than 50 gallons per day is called a first-class distillery, and a distillery having a capacity of more than 50 gallons, but not more than 100 gallons per day, is called a second-class distillery. The only distinction between the first and second class is this. In the case of the first class, it is provided that no revenue officer need be stationed in the distillery unless under special circumstances, which make it appear necessary to the collector of the district to have him there. The distilleries of the second class are to have stationed in them one revenue officer unless the collector of the district reports that, for special reasons one is not required. These distilleries, having a capacity of not more than 100 gallons per day and which use the product for denaturing purposes only, have to provide bonds in order to protect the revenue against any loss through any infringement of the laws. Not only does the latest legislation of the United States permit these small distilleries to distil alcohol free from the restrictions imposed on the larger, but it also provides for what are termed central denaturing warehouses for the use of which any one may purchase alcohol from any regular licensed distillery for the purpose of denaturing. That is, he need not manufacture the alcohol but he may purchase it, and he too must give bonds to protect the revenue against any loss by fraud.

I would like to point out the manner of denaturing alcohol as practised in the United States. I believe that our Inland Revenue Department has until a comparatively recent date, used a large portion of wood alcohol for the purpose of denaturing what is called ethyl produced in this country from grain. In the United States completely denatured alcohol is produced according to either one of the following formulæ. First to 100 parts in volume of ethyl alcohol, of not less than 180 degrees strength they use ten parts by volume of approved methyl alcohol, commonly called wood alcohol and one-half of one part by volume of approved benzine. The second formula is this. To every 100 parts in volume of ethyl alcohol of a strength not less than 180 degrees, they add two parts by volume of approved methyl alcohol and one-half of one part by volume of improved pyridine bases, this being a product of distilled coal tar. In France the general denaturing process followed consists in adding to 90 per cent alcohol 10 per cent of wood spirit (methyl alcohol), which contains 25 per cent or acetone and 2·5 per cent of various impurities. In Germany the general denaturing agent authorized consists of one part pyridine (obtained by distillation from coal tar) and four parts wood alcohol, to which may be added to each quart approximately 1·7 ounces of lavender oil or rosemary oil. In other words, the German denatured alcohol contains 2 per cent of alcohol and 0·5 per cent of pyridine, with optionally 0·125 per cent of lavender or rosemary oil

I would like to call attention for the moment to the large use of denatured alcohol in France and Germany and the particular purposes for which it is there used. In France, in the year 1905, there was used of denatured alcohol the following quantities for the following purposes :

	Gallons.
Heating and lighting..	8,326,084
Varnishes..	305,222
Polishes, &c..	46,415
Plastic materials..	562,497
Manufacture of hats..	6,023
Dying and colours..	14,635
Rennet..	3,910
Collodion..	11,016
Chloroform..	4,914
Choral..	10,091
Canning materials..	14,978
Chemical and pharmaceutical products..	178,843
Scientific uses..	31,515
Ethers, fulminates, explosives. ..	2,961,900
Total..	12,478,043

The following are the figures showing the consumption in Germany :

Year ending September 30—	Denatured.	Partially denatured.
1900..	20,665,887	8,975,281
1901..	18,616,826	9,137,482
1902..	23,780,319	9,529,405
1903..	25,998,819	10,195,535
1904..	25,889,056	10,353,615

Thus we see that in the year 1904, the last one for which I have the figures, the quantity of alcohol used in Germany, wholly or partially denatured, was over 36,000,000 gallons. I notice that in France, where the use of denatured alcohol is very large, the government pays a bounty of 5 cents per gallon on that produced there. In France, the source of production mainly is the sugar beet, while in Germany it is the potato.

As to the progress in the use of denatured alcohol in the United States, let me quote from a United States government bulletin published in 1906.

Mr. DANIEL. Could the hon. gentleman tell us the prices in Germany and France ?

Mr. MILLER. The prices vary from season to season according to the crop of beets or potatoes from which the material is produced. The following is from the United States government bulletin of which I spoke :

With the vast agricultural resources of this country, there will be no difficulty in increasing the consumption of industrial alcohol in the United States to equal or exceed that of Germany.

I call your particular attention to the last paragraph, which says :

This increase, however, must come slowly, and probably after many disappointments both of an agricultural and a technical character.

So that, while I claim that the question of denatured alcohol is one to which our government may properly give a great deal of attention, I do not think the facts warrnat us in supposing that the use of denatured alcohol is going to accomplish any sudden revolution in mechanical devices or in any other way. It will be rather a steady growth as the machinery in which the industrial or denatured alcohol is used is from time to time improved and the cost of alcohol is reduced from year to year as we become more accustomed to its production and learn to make it in the cheapest way.

Now, I would like to take up the time of the House for a few minutes in reading from certain conclusions arrived at by the United States Inland Revenue Department as given in a bulletin published by the United States government and dated February 16, 1907. These conclusions are the result of the experience of the United States department subsequent to the legislation of 1906 :

Storage of alcohol and its use in engines is much less dangerous than that of gasolene, as well as being decidedly more pleasant.

The exhaust from an alcohol engine is less likely to be offensive than the exhaust from a gasolene or kerosene engine, although there will be some odour, due to lubricating oil and imperfect combustion, if the engine is not skilfully operated.

It requires no more skill to operate an alcohol engine than one intended for gasolene or kerosene.

There is no reason to suppose that the cost of repairs and lubrication will be any greater for an alcohol engine than for one built for gasolene or kerosene.

There seems to be no tendency for the interior of an alcohol engine to become sooty, as in the case with gasolene and kerosene.

The fact that the exhaust from the alcohol engine is not as hot as that from gasolene and kerosene engines seems to indicate that there will be less danger from fire, less offensive in a room traversed by the exhaust pipe, and less possibility of burning the lubricating oil. This latter point is also borne out by the fact that the exhaust shows less smokiness.

In localities where there is a supply of cheap raw material for the manufacture of denatured alcohol, and which are at the same time remote from the source of supply of gasolene, alcohol may immediately compete with gasolene as a fuel for engines.

It strikes me, in reading that clause, that, in our own western provinces, especially Alberta where there is no large production of kerosene, and where the climate and soil are admirably suitable for the raising of the sugar beet, they may produce alcohol for light, fuel and motor purposes to great advantage and with great economy.

If, as time goes on, kerosene and its distillates become scarcer and dearer by reason of exhaustion of natural deposits, the alcohol engine will become a stronger and stronger competitor, with a possibility that in time it may entirely supplant the kerosene and gasolene engines.

By reason of its greater safety and its adaptability to the work, alcohol should immediately supplant gasolene for use in boats.

By reason of cleanliness in handling the fuel, increased safety in fuel storage, and less offensiveness in the exhaust, alcohol engines will, in part, displace gasolene engines for automobile work, but only when cost of fuel for operation is a subordinate consideration. In this field it is impossible to conveniently increase the compression because of starting difficulties, so that the efficiency cannot be improved as conveniently as in other types of engines.

In most localities, it is unlikely that alcohol power will be cheaper or as cheap as gasolene power for some time to come.

Our government, at the present time, has a monopoly of the production of denatured alcohol. No one save the government is permitted to denature alcohol or to use alcohol free from excise duty for that purpose, and that is, perhaps, wisely so. I am glad that our Inland Revenue Department is using today the same quantity of wood alcohol as is being used in France and the United States for denaturing purposes ; that is, they have reduced the amount to ten per cent. I say I am glad of this because the smaller the proportion of wood alcohol used for denaturing, the lower the cost of the denatured product. The Inland Revenue Department is now paying a very large price for the wood alcohol it uses for denaturing purposes, owing to the fact that it entered into a contract for the supply of wood alcohol at a time when the price of that article was very high both in the United States and Canada. As a result of changes and of new legislation in the United States, the price of wood alcohol has become very much reduced on the other side, and, in sympathy or, it may be of necessity, this has reduced the price on the Canadian side.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) know the figures ?

Mr. MILLER. Our department is paying $1.29 per gallon, which was the ordinary price when the contract was made. The price of wood alcohol now is about 50 cents. The present contract will expire next month, and we shall be free to purchase wood alcohol at the cheapest price at which it can be sold. I think it would be well for our Inland Revenue Department not to go rashly as to licensing persons to engage in the manufacture of denatured alcohol. It is better that we should be content to await the figures and experiences of the United States and be guided to some extent by what is accomplished in that country, where they take such a deep interest in the question.

There is only one thing that I would ask of the Inland Revenue Department, and that is that the denaturing place should not be confined to the city of Ottawa. While denatured alcohol cannot now be used perhaps profitably as a motive power, or for fuel, or for lighting purposes, throughout the greater part of Canada, I believe that denatured alcohol can, at the prices at which it can now be produced, be used with great advantage and profit in many of the manufacturing industries, and so to that extent we will reap the benefits that have been pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg. If a varnish manufacturer, or a hat manufacturer, or a manufacturer in many other lines in which alcohol is used, operating say in Toronto or in Montreal, desires to use the denatured product, he will have to pay a larger price for it if the denaturing takes place in Ottawa only, because the government must pay the freight carriage from the distillery where it is produced to the denaturing establishment at Ottawa, and the manufacturer using denatured alcohol must pay the freight from Ottawa to the point where he uses it. I would like to see the Inland Revenue Department establish a denaturing warehouse, say in the city of Toronto, as an experiment. They will be able to buy their alcohol in Toronto and do the denaturing there, and sell the denatured product at a considerably lower figure than they would be able to sell it in Toronto if it were denatured only in this city. I would like also that the Inland Revenue Department should, as soon as they are released from their present contract as to wood alcohol, and whenever their contract expires in March, and as soon as they are able to manufacture denatured alcohol at the lower prices which will then be possible, I would like to see them send out circular letters to the manufacturers advising them of the price at which they will be able to supply the article, making the price as low as it can be made without loss to the department. If they will make the price as low as it can be made, and if they will do their denaturing in various centres, beginning at Toronto or one of the other cities as an experiment, I believe denatured alcohol will be immediately used by the manufacturers in many manufacturing processes, not only with great economy, but because it will provide material of a quality better for their purposes than the wood alcohol they now use. For instance, in the manufacture of varnish, denatured alcohol will produce a much better article than that made with wood alcohol. Such varnish flows much more freely, and in every respect it is better and gives a better lustre. I trust the matter will receive the earnest attention of the department.

Mr. L. ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). The hon. gentleman has pointed out a similarity between the use of denatured alcohol and grain alcohol. No doubt there is a great similarity from the fact that denatured alcohol is a product of grain alcohol to the extent of 90 per cent of the mixture, and of methylated spirits,which is wood alcohol, to the extent of 10 per cent. These two mixtures of 90 per cent and 10 per cent make what we call the denatured alcohol. I may mention that in France they have a method of denaturing which is found very effective. The great difficulty in denaturing alcohol has been this, that no denaturning agent has been found that could not be eliminated by redistillation, or any other method of separating the denatured alcohol, and thereby enabling it to be sold without control by the excise law. In France there was a prize offered to all the scientific world of Europe for the most efficient denaturing agent, and I understand that at different intervals the French government change the denaturing agent so as to prevent individuals from copying the formula.

I am in full sympathy with the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole). I may say that I belong to a family which is interested in the alcohol business. For my part I see no reason why the two years storage should be exacted. There is no economical reason why the government should oblige manufacturers to keep spirits two years in storage. The only reason I can discover at present is that such an arrangement was found politically advantageous during the Conservative regime, it was found advantageous to the whisky trust, and the regulation was made to reward certain services of a monetary character which were given to the Conservative election fund at different times. I have been told that certain gentlemen of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec used to make trips to Toronto every four years to the Messrs Gooderham and get substantial gifts of half a million or so to carry the province for Sir John A. Macdonald.

Mr. BRISTOL. What does the hon. gentleman mean ?

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Well, I understand that Mr. Blackstock, one of your leaders in Conservative circles, and probably one of the whisky trust, during the Conservative regime, would have been glad to see them back in power.

Mr. BRISTOL. Mr. Blackstock was not interested in the whisky trust.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. But I understand that he is a brother of Mr. Blackstock, who was secretary of the trust.

Mr BRISTOL. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that George Tait Blackstock had anything to do with the whisky trust ?

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I am saying that he was a brother of one that died and he was married to a Miss Gooderham. At all events, the Customs Department of the Canadian government to-day makes a great difference between foreign spirits and Canadian spirits, the reason being that Canadian spirits have to be kept two years in bond, while the foreign spirits are sold as they are sent over to Canada. That is a great handicap on the Canadian trade, which has a huge capital invested. There is a difference also in the cost of manufacturing European and Canadian spirits. The raw material of European manufacture is beet sugar or beet root, grapes, the residue of grapes, and potatoes ; whilst in Canada they have to take good rye which costs $1.25 a bushel. or corn at $1 a bushel, and our good friends of the Customs Department exact 7½ cents duty on corn. These things must be taken into consideration by the committee who will study this question ; they must also consider the figures given by the German manufacturer as showing the difference in the cost of production.

The difference between the excise in 1880 and the excise at present, which is $1.90, has increased the selling price of grain alcohol. Grain alcohol is sold to chemists at something over $4 per gallon and to the wholesale trade at $3.50, and deducting $2.10 or $1.90—it depends on whether it has reference to the proof gallon or not—you will find that 100 per cent protection exists to-day without reducing the selling price. It might be well to legislate with respect to the spirit which goes into pharmaceutical preparations. To-day, on account of the enhanced value of grain alcohol, methylated spirits have taken its place in the manufacture of different goods in which ethyl alcohol might be more advantageously used from a hygienic standpoint. Methylated spirits is used in the manufacture of goods such as bay rum, witch hazel, corn cure, tincture of iodine and some essences and extracts. Several extracts, such as vanilla, are made from methylated spirits, and from a pharmaceutical and hygienic standpoint I do not think the use of methylated spirits is desirable. Many chemical changes take place in the destructive distillation of wood, and if I might be permitted to offer a suggestion, it would be that the law be so amended as to provide for granting licenses to manufacturers to purchase ethyl alcohol without any excise duty, or at a reduced excise duty, for use in the production of pharmaceutical supplies intended for human consumption. I would suggest that you prohibit the purchase of methylated spirits in the drug stores in order that there may be no chance of substituting methylated spirits for ethyl alcohol or that one may not be used for the other. I would also suggest that denatured alcohol might be purchased under license by varnish and paint shops. I am in full sympathy with the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg. Although I am not myself directly interested in this business, some of my family are, and we find that the unjust legislation which is now on the statute-book prevents more capital from engaging in this line of business. It also prohibits the utilization of alcohol for industrial purposes, lighting and motive power, rather than gasolene. The manufacture of alcohol in Canada to-day utilizes the product of the farmer, whilst gasolene is an imported article. The adoption of the proposal in the resolution, from that standpoint, would assist and develop the Canadian industry and would help the farmers to dispose of their products in industries which could utilize them if the excise duty and customs tariff are not antagonistic to them as they are at the present moment.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). Mr. Speaker, the resolution as proposed by my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) practically asks for duty free alcohol to be used in the manufacture of medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations, perfumes, tinctures, essences and articles of that class. It seems to me that there are two branches of the one subject, or rather that the discussion has proceeded with regard to the question of denatured alcohol, which is one question, while the subject introduced by my hon. friend from Winnipeg of duty free alcohol —that is pure ethyl alcohol for medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations—is an entirely distinct question. The difficulties surrounding the proposition of my hon. friend, a proposition which has been made to the department very many times, I am informed, during the last thirty or forty years, are very great indeed. The department thus far has thought that the difficulties were so great as to be practically insurmountable. It has been thought to be impossible to permit the use of pure ethyl grain alcohol in the manufacture of pharmaceutical preparations without endangering the revenue. The direct loss of revenue and the expense of the supervision of establishments licensed to use duty free spirits would no doubt be considerable, but that would not give us much concern if the resulting advantages would be anything as great as my hon. friend argues that they would be. The real objection is that after the pharmaceutical preparations are manufactured and sent out all over Canada they would be no longer under supervision, and the alcohol in these preparations could, by redistillation, or by some chemical process, be made drinkable again and the revenue would suffer to that extent. I might give the House a little history of what has been done in the past and what efforts have been made to utilize free alcohol for this purpose. I want the House to distinctly understand that I am dealing with the question separate and distinct from the question of methylated spirits or denatured alcohol. Denatured alcohol is alcohol which is made so obnoxious that it is not drinkable. It could not be used in the majority of preparations or in pharmaceutical manufacturing establishments, and particularly in chemical compounds and medicines. Between 1868 and 1879 by order in council permission could be procured for the manufacture in bond of all the articles that our chemical manufacturers put up, such as extracts, essences, perfumed spirits, ethers, chloroform, collodion, tinctures, cordials, bitters, syrups, compounds of brandies, gin, proprietary preparations, patent medicines, resinoids, chemicals, pharmaceutical preparations, powders, vinegar, varnish, etc. Permission could be obtained during these years for the manufacture of all these articles by the payment of eighty cents per gallon on the alcohol used. This list comprises nearly all the articles to which reference has been made by my hon. friend. I take it that it includes all these articles, and these are the articles that he now asks shall be manufactured with duty free alcohol. It was during these years that the greatest frauds were perpetrated upon the Inland Revenue Department, and in one instance a licensed concern, through the assistance of a dishonest official, defrauded the revenue of the country of a very large sum. In 1879 another order was passed permitting the manufacture of practically the same articles, but provision was made that tinctures, extracts, essences and all articles from which the alcohol could be extracted in a potable state, should be subject to the excise duty on the alcohol contained therein. In 1891, the following articles were allowed to be manufactured under a bonded manufacturer's license, the previous orders in council being of course repealed. Manufacturers were permitted to manufacture a long list of articles, such as vinegar, fulminate, soap and any other article of commerce in the process of manufacturing which the alcohol is destroyed and from the resultant products of which it cannot be recovered. That is practically the law in Canada to-day. Any manufacturer can obtain from the department permission to manufacture any article in the process of manufacturing of which the alcohol is destroyed and from the resultant product of which it cannot be recovered. In 1892, the manufacturing in bond of perfumed spirits was authorized, the alcohol used being subject to a duty of 75 cents per proof gallon. That is the law to-day. In 1894, an order in council provided for the manufacture from duty paid spirits of goods for export and for the refunding of the duty paid on the alcohol used when proof of exportation was furnished. That is the law to-day. Now, for the information of the House I might quote exactly what the law is. Section 252 of the Inland Revenue Act reads :

> Spirits used in any bonded manufactory in the production of such chemical compositions as are determined by the Governor in Council, for every gallon of the strength of proof by such hydrometer 15 cents per gallon.

Under that authority the regulation of the department says :

> Subject to the provisions of the Inland Revenue Act, to these regulations, and to such further regulations as may hereafter be made by competent authority, licenses may be granted to manufacture in bond the articles herein enumerated, namely, vinegar, fulminate, soap, and any other articles of commerce in the process of manufacture of which the alcohol is destroyed, and from the result of the products it cannot be recovered.

That is the policy of the department, and if any manufacturer can show us that in the process of manufacture the alcohol disappears or is changed into another substance —as I believe is the case with vinegar—and is not recoverable, that manufacturer can secure all the alcohol necessary at fifteen cents a gallon. But the department does not license any manufacturing establishment to use alcohol when that alcohol can be recovered and made potable again. There are in Canada to-day under the present regulations, using free alcohol, some eighteen vinegar establishments, three fulminate of mercury establishments in the manufacture of which the alcohol is non-recoverable——

Mr. GANONG. Can United States alcohol be brought in bond free for that purpose ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No. No alcohol can be used free for this purpose. Canadian alcohol cannot be used free for this purpose.

Mr. GANONG. I understood the minister to say it was free for that purpose.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No. Alcohol is used in the production of transparent soap and the manufacturers get a reduced rate of duty of seventy-five cents per gallon instead of $1.90. Perfumed spirit manufacturers pay seventy-five cents a gallon and there are eight such establishments in Canada.

Mr. BOLE. That is a proof gallon.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, I think it is. Now the manufacturers of pharmaceutical preparations for export get a rebate of the duty they pay on alcohol and there is one large establishment in Ontario which practically pays no duty, all their manufactures being exported. There are certain products of alcohol such as chloroform, ethers, and other like articles in the production of which the alcohol is practically destroyed or so far changed chemically that to reproduce it the cost involved would rob the venture of a great portion of its profits. There are others in which the component drugs are so costly that it would not pay to tamper with them in this way, and the Canadian manufacturer can get the alcohol for these articles by paying fifteen cents a gallon. But in the bulk of tinctures and essences the alcohol can be recovered at a cost which would bring about a repetition of the frauds which existed some years ago.

Mr. BOLE. Do I understand the minister to say that you can manufacture in Canada chloroform from spirits at an excise duty of fifteen cents a gallon.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am so advised.

Mr. BOLE. That is contrary to the information I received from the department.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My notes are prepared by the deputy minister and I am advised that the products of alcohol, chloroforms and ethers and so forth, in which the alcohol is destroyed or so far changed as to be non-recoverable, may be manufactured in Canada by paying fifteen cents a gallon. I am quite sure the policy of the department will be that wherever it can be demonstrated that the article to be produced destroys the alcohol in such a way that it cannot be recovered again for drinkable purposes, the alcohol will be allowed to be used on payment of fifteen cents a gallon. I have made some inquiries about what is done in other countries and I am in a position to say that there is no country which permits the employment of other than duty paid alcohol in the manufacture of pharmaceutical preparations where the alcohol remains as a spirit after the manufacture and may be recovered. There are several countries, in Europe and particularly Germany which permits the use of duty free alcohol in the manufacture of pharmaceutical articles in which the alcohol is either so changed chemically as to destroy it or from which the alcohol is removed before the product is put on the market, but not otherwise. In all other cases they charge whatever their excise duty may be on the alcohol consumed. My hon. friend from Winnipeg in moving the resolution referred to Germany, and the quotation which I will cite is not cited for the purpose of refuting any statement he made but rather with a view of giving information to the House, because we know that whenever the question of free ethyl or denatured alcohol is under discussion the example of Germany is always quoted. In 1905, the imperial parliament appointed a commission to inquire into the existing facilities for the use without payment of duty of spirits, in arts and manufactures, and to advise further measures to be adopted without prejudice to the safety of the revenue derived from spirits and with due regard to the interests of the producer of spirits in the United Kingdom. This was an exceedingly influential commission; it was composed of some of the leading manufacturing chemists and others in England who were well informed on the subject. They made a most elaborate investigation which is printed in a blue-book and among their recommendations they say:

> That in the manufacture of fine chemicals and pharmaceutical products, spirits specially denatured should be allowed only where the manufacture is kept entirely separate from the manufacture of tinctures and other prepartitions in which spirit remains as such in the finished product.

In England to-day free alcohol is not permitted for the manufacture of the medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations referred to by the mover of the resolution, and the situation in Germany is practically the same as in England. My hon. friend made a comparison between England and Germany, arguing that in consequence of the greater liberality of the German law than the English law with regard to the use of alcohol, many of the best and brightest minds in England have been driven to Germany, where manufactures have increased at a very rapid rate as a result of free alcohol. Let me quote from this same commission's report, which they make after having examined every prominent manufacture in Germany. They say this:

> After having the advantage of discussing this aspect of the general question with many persons well qualified to express an opinion, we have little doubt that the pre-eminence of Germany, in these particular branches of applied chemistry, is due to the same causes which have contributed to her success in the so-called coal tar colour industry. Alcohol in that industry has played at most a very subordinate part in its development, and although it is true that it plays a relatively much more important part in the manufacture of 'fine' chemicals and of pharmaceutical products, the extraordinary development in Germany, which has occurred during the last fifteen or twenty years, in the discovery and utilization in medicine of synthetic organic substances, is primarily due to the influence of the school of chemistry to the ardour and success with which organic chemistry in its highest developments is cultivated, and to the skill, energy and resourcefulness with which it is sought to turn the results of investigation to immediate practical account.

In Germany to-day duty is paid on the alcohol used in the manufacture of most of these fine chemicals. I have before me a report to the effect that the celebrated firm of Merck, I believe one of the largest and most celebrated in the world, consumes some 2,000,000 gallons of duty-paid alcohol in the manufacture of their special preparations. The United States also does not permit the use of duty-paid alcohol for medicinal preparations. I do not think it permits the use of duty-free ethyl alcohol for any purpose whatever. The United States Congress did last year pass a law for the removal of the duty from alcohol used for mechanical and industrial purposes, but not for the purposes my hon. friend has in view in moving this resolution. The view of the Department of Inland Revenue is that in so far as we can aid or encourage the use of alcohol in the manufacture of articles or products from which the alcohol cannot be again taken and used as a potable substance, the department is willing to assist; but it does not think, as my hon. friend suggested, that all the druggists in Canada, some 3,000 in number, should have access to alcohol on which the duty has not been paid, for the purpose of manufacturing their pharmaceutical preparations. We would soon cease, it seems to me, to collect very much revenue from alcohol if it were dealt with in that way. If my hon. friend would eliminate the last few lines from the resolution, we would have no objection to it; but we do not think any commission to inquire into and report upon a method by which alcohol can be generally used in legitimate scientific and industrial operations, without increasing the danger of its use as a potable spirit, or the danger to the revenue, is necessary. We do not think there is any person better qualified to judge what injures the revenue than the officers of the Inland Revenue Department, who are there especially charged with the duty of guarding the revenue. A commission might inquire into the purposes for which alcohol could be used and how it could be used; but to suggest a way by which alcohol could be permitted to be used without abuse is something which we think can be better managed by the department itself. If my hon. friend does not object to eliminating the words, 'appoint a commission to,' and leave the instruction to the government to inquire into and report, I think the resolution would be quite acceptable.

Mr. G. H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). Mr. Speaker, this is one of the cases in which I am very glad to be able to side with the minister. It seems to me that the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) has proposed a rather extraordinary resolution regarding alcohol to be used for medicinal preparations and patent medicines.

Mr. BOLE. I wish to state emphatically that I never mentioned patent medicines. If the hon. gentleman reads my resolution, he will see that it refers to pharmaceutical preparations only.

Mr. PERLEY. Do not medicinal preparations cover patent medicines?

Mr. BOLE. I have not mentioned patent medicines. They are separate and distinct from pharmaceutical preparations, and are so regarded in the trade. I do not think the resolution should be read as including patent medicines.

Mr. PERLEY. I am only an amateur in the drug business, but according to my reading the term medicinal preparations would cover patent medicines, and I certainly think it would be an extraordinary thing for the government to allow alcohol to be used free of duty for any such purpose. We all know that there are many medicinal preparations—not to offend my hon. friend from Winnipeg by using the term patent medicines—that contain so much alcohol that they are used by many people in place of those refreshments which some of us take when the House is in session too late at night. If the hon. member for Winnipeg could bring pressure on the government to get this resolution passed, I wonder if the prices of any of these medicines would be reduced; because some of us who are amateurs in the drug business think that their price has very little to do with their cost. I must congratulate the minister for resisting the demand of his followers in this instance. The question of denatured alcohol for the arts and industries of this country—as the minister has properly stated, for such purposes that the alcohol is practically destroyed when used, that is, that it cannot be put back into its original state as a spirit except at extreme cost—is of such great importance to this country that I am sorry to see it perhaps prejudiced by being mixed up with other things in this resolution, which asks for free alcohol for purposes for which it should not be allowed to be used free. While on this subject, I would like to ask the Minister of Inland Revenue if he would be good enough to give us a little information as to what has happened in regard to denatured alcohol since we discussed the matter last session, when I believe it was stated that the government got from 65 to 80 cents a gallon for the different kinds of denatured alcohol?

I think it was stated then that the price was perhaps a little higher than it might otherwise have been, if the government had not had a contract in force which was to last some little time. In the United States it is stated that with corn at 30 cents a bushel, grain alcohol could be produced for 15 cents a gallon, which seems to us a pretty low price, and I have no doubt lower than that at which it could be produced in Canada. At the same time there was a lot of evidence to show that denatured alcohol could be produced in this country from inferior articles for the price of some 40 or 50 cents a gallon. By inferior articles, I mean the refuse of the farm, for instance. In the Customs Act which we passed last year, the government took power to admit free of duty alcohol for the purpose of making it into denatured alcohol. The explanation then given was that if the distilleries of this country saw fit to charge the government too great a price for their alcohol, the government could bring it in from other countries free of duty, but only for the purpose of making it into denatured alcohol. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) said it was being sold in Cuba at 25 cents a gallon. In other words, if the government saw fit, they could bring alcohol from Cuba at 25 cents a gallon for the purpose of making it into denatured alcohol and thus force our distillers to sell it to them at that price or go without the business. It is of the utmost importance, especially to our farmers, that some arrangement should be made by which they may get denatured alcohol at the lowest price possible. Not only should the government make arrangements to allow this alcohol to be brought in as low as possible and denatured here, but they also ought to arrange to have it denatured in other places than Ottawa. My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) has spoken about that already, and it is not necessary that I should speak of it at any length. We all know the government could provide denatured alcohol in Toronto very much more cheaply than to ship it from Ottawa. It is so essential that we should make inquiry regarding denatured alcohol, that I would like to ask the minister to give some little explanation as to what has happened since last session and what steps the government have taken to carry out the wishes of the House and provide the people with as cheap denautred alcohol as possible.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the minister takes up that point, I would like to say a word with reference to the use of alcohol for industrial purposes. It seems to me that there is something more to be found out as to the possibility of obtaining alcohol cheaper, when it is absolutely ascertained that it is going to be used for medicinal purposes solely, without any danger of its being used for any other purposes. And with regard to the industrial side, I had some correspondence with the Department of Inland Revenue last year. We have in Montreal some very important manufacturers of furniture and some establishments where old furniture is remodelled, repolished and preserved in that way. Two or three of those establishments are very important. I have been informed that it is impossible to polish furniture properly without the use of alcohol. It is impossible to polish it properly with denatured alcohol. You must use pure alcohol, and it is impossible to use the pure alcohol and put a suitable polish on the furniture, at the prices at which alcohol is sold. The possibility of allowing the use of pure alcohol at reasonable prices for industrial purposes is a fit subject for inquiry at present. I do not remember exactly what was the result of the correspondence I then had, on behalf of one of these important manufacturers, with the department, but it was impossible to comply with the conditions, and the manufacturer had to give up the prospect of obtaining pure alcohol for industrial purposes. He had to give it up on account of the great price which, under the present system, is put upon that article. Where it is possible to make sure that the pure article only will be used for other purposes than drinking, some machinery ought to be provided by which the use of alcohol could be obtained at less ruinous prices than at present.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend is not quite correct in his conclusion regarding myself.

Mr. PERLEY.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is only with the consent of the House that the hon. gentleman can speak.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understood my hon. friends opposite asked me to say something on this question. My information is that, in the polishing of furniture, almost exclusively wood alcohol is used. Until a year ago there was no other alcohol used in the United States except the wood alcohol for the purpose of polishing furniture. If it can be used for that purpose, surely our methylated spirits, one of the acids being 90 per cent ethyl and 10 per cent wood alcohol, can be used for that purpose. Methylated spirits, manufactured by the Inland Revenue Department, is almost altogether used by furniture manufacturers throughout Canada.

Mr. MONK. The stains come back invariably.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Even if it were possible to permit pure ethyl alcohol to be used for that purpose, I cannot conceive of any government inspection or supervision which would safeguard the revenue. The greatest frauds imaginable would be perpetrated on the revenue. Very little change has taken place with respect to the production of methylated spirits by the department since a year ago. As then explained, the cost of wood alcohol to the department, under contract, was $1.29 per gallon, and that contract expires March 1, next. The cost of the grain alcohol at present is 25 cents per proof gallon. The cost to the department for that class of alcohol, methylated spirits, is about 41 cents per gallon.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the Imperial gallon?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes. We make three classes of methylated spirits or denatured alcohol, and one grade is openly sold on the market without restriction. Ninety per cent grain and 10 per cent wood alcohol is sold to manufacturers who enter into a bond that they will use it for special purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. What does that cost them ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. From 60 cents and upwards. That is pretty nearly cost price. It is quite true that the cost of methylating or mixing is unduly high. We do not do enough for the force we have, we bring the wood alcohol and the grain alcohol to Ottawa, paying the freight on it, and I think that probably it costs 10 cents to 15 cents per gallon to bring it here and mix it, which is a high charge. No change was made in the practice of the department, because very little could be effected until after March 1, when the price we pay for wood alcohol, now $1.29, will drop, probably to 50 cents or 60 cents. In the United States, the price is 40 cents per wine gallon. It seems to me that it will be possible to put on the market denatured alcohol at a saving of a good deal of the expense now incurred in mixing. By using more economical methods, and, by turning out ten times the quantity, it will probably be possible, in a few months, to put it on the market at a price in the neighbourhood of 50 cents. But I cannot understand how, paying 41 cents for grain alcohol, we can sell it for much less than 50 cents per gallon, unless we sell it at less than cost.

Mr. PERLEY. I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) to say that alcohol could be bought at 25 cents per gallon.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Per proof gallon. It depends on the strength. We use 65 over proof at 41 cents per gallon. When we buy proof spirits at 25 cents per gallon from the distillers, we are buying it very cheap. We do not buy first-class alcohol, but a grade of alcohol which remains in the distilleries after certain operations and the distillers do not think it better to put it through another distillation, but would rather sell it to us at 25 cents a gallon.

Mr. BOLE. Could the government bring in alcohol free of duty for this purpose?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes. But we do not want to take that step for some time to come. We want to use the wood alcohol produced in Canada. In reducing the price of methylated spirits, hon. gentlemen will see we come into competition with the wood alcohol manufacturers of Canada. The more we force down the price of methylated spirits, the lower they have to sell wood alcohol which does not command so high a price as methylated spirits. So, we are between two fires. The public want cheap methylated spirits and the wood alcohol manufacturers do not want us to put it on the market cheaper than at the present time.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What progress is being made towards giving to the farmers and industrial classes of Canada a cheap grade of alcohol for use in driving their machinery?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I thought my explanation was along that line. I was pointing out that, with alcohol bought from the distillers at 41 cents a gallon, in my opinion, the denatured alcohol cannot be made to compete with gasolene or petroleum for fuel purposes. It will be remembered that the United States, a year ago, introduced a law with regard to denatured alcohol. They never had denatured alcohol or methylated spirits in the United States until a year ago. But they are trying to emulate Germany in this matter in providing a cheap alcohol for farm and industrial purposes. After a year's trial, it has not worked out as successfully as they anticipated, though I am not saying it will not work out successfully.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Can the minister give reasons why we cannot manufacture this cheap grade of alcohol in Canada as they manufacture it in Germany?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In the first place, the farmers of Canada will not grow potatoes as cheaply as do the farmers of Saxony and other German states. Then, petroleum is heavily taxed in Germany, in order to protect the alcohol. The German government subsidizes industrial or farm distilleries to the extent of 7 cents or 8 cents a gallon on the product. So, in Germany, alcohol is produced at a relatively cheap rate. But the conditions are different in Canada. Would the farmers of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Armstrong's) county, for instance, grow potatoes at 8 cents or 10 cents a bushel to sell to an industrial distillery?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Is there a particular variety of potato best adapted to this purpose?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes. The lower the grade of the potato, I believe, the larger the product per acre and the higher the percentage of alcohol. Referring to industrial or farm distilleries, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States, in his report for the fiscal year, ended June 30, 1907—a very recent report, it will be seen—says:

> No large number of these industrial distilleries seems probable under existing conditions. While these distilleries are now permitted to use any material whatever in the production of industrial alcohol, the alcohol so far manufactured has been produced mainly from corn; and until a cheaper distilling material is found and its practical use demonstrated, it may be doubted whether this class of alcohol can successfully compete with gasolene or kerosene in this country.

I do not think we can produce alcohol in Canada at as cheap a rate as in the United States. The cheapest alcohol in the United States is from corn, and I think that most of the alcohol produced in Canada is from corn imported from the United States. These are the reasons why, for my part, I doubt that, even growing potatoes or any other material for the production of cheap alcohol, it would be possible to produce denatured alcohol at a price to compete with gasolene or petroleum at present.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). In regard to this resolution, I have received a good many letters from people who are in the proprietary medicine business, and those who use alcohol in different ways for manufacturing purposes, and these people appear to be very much in favour of the resolution brought forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole). I am satisfied that if something could be done to reduce the cost of alcohol for manufacturing purposes, while it might have the effect for a time of reducing the revenue, which for all purposes appears to be more than ample just now, it will result in great benefit to the country by giving employment to more lobour. Of the letters I have received I have picked out a couple which I will read. One of them is from Lyman Bros. & Company, Limited, who I understand are wholesale druggists, and are also manufacturers of certain kinds of proprietary articles. They say :

We take the privilege of calling your attention to a great injustice to the drug trade, and in fact all manufacturers who use alcohol, namely, that a necessity like alcohol should be so highly taxed, whereas it is supposed to be the policy of both political parties to encourage manufacturers by putting raw material on the free list, or on a very low basis of taxation.

We understand that one of the reasons given for the high cost is the fact that the regulation requires two years' storage of alcohol after distillation. This, of course, tends to create a monopoly as well as increase the price without increasing its use in the manufacture of medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations, perfumes, chemicals, dyes and in scientific research.

The potable article costs in the Canadian market over twenty-five times more than the primary cost of production, and, therefore, tends to restrict development in the lines mentioned, prohibits its use as an economical agent in the wider fields of industrial activity. Further, we are very much handicapped in Canada at the present time for the reason spirit can be bought at very much cheaper price in other countries, thereby giving them a decided advantage in manufacturing.

We would be glad if you would look into the matter, and we think it would be wise for the government to appoint a commission to inquire into and report upon a method by which this source of detriment to Canadian manufacturers can be remedied.

Mr. BOLE. I wish to correct the hon. gentleman. These are not patent medicine proprietors, they are wholesale druggists, they do not manufacture patent medicines. There is a tendency in the minds of many people to associate wholesale druggists with patent medicine manufacturers, which is an entirely erronous idea.

Mr. KEMP. I do not know that I designated these gentlemen as patent medicine manufacturers, I did not intend to. In their letter head they claim to be manufacturers of chloroform, sulphuric ether, and several other chemical articles.

Mr. BOLE. These are pharmaceutical.

Mr. KEMP. The other letter which I have is from the Toronto Pharmacal Company, Limited.

There is a matter of very considerable interest to ourselves as well as to the drug trade generally that has already or will in the very near future be brought to the attention of the House by Mr. Bole, wholesale druggist, of Winnipeg, and that is the question of the exorbitant prices we are obliged to pay for alcohol for use in the arts. The manufacturers are obliged to keep this article in stock for three years in order to comply with the regulation. We consider this absolutely unnecessary when the alcohol is used for manufacturing purposes and this fact adds practically fifty per cent to the actual cost of the spirit, without, of course, considering the question of government duty. A denatured alcohol is manufactured and sold in the United States at thirty-nine cents per gallon which illustrates the fact that a spirit can be manufactured and sold, if there were no duty to pay and it had not to be kept for three years, at from forty to fifty cents per gallon, imperial measure, with a very good profit. Of course the government duty is placed high enough so as to prevent any spirit being imported.

We readily recognize many of the difficulties that would appear in a discussion of this nature but feel sure that this question of allowing spirit to be used immediately after it is made would make a very material difference to manufacturers such as ourselves and we cannot understand for a moment why there should be the slightest objection raised to an arrangement being made whereby this would be made possible. We will esteem it a favour if, when this matter comes up for discussion, you will give it your earnest thought and use your influence in seconding this very just claim which the manufacturers are making.

I do not intend to say anything further on this subject, because I feel that all the points have been well covered by hon. gentlemen who have spoken previously.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It seems to me that the resolution aims at two purposes. One to reduce the cost of alcohol by doing away with the restrictions which make it necessary to keep it two years in storage before it is used. That will reduce the monopoly, if there is a monopoly, and to that extent I presume it is a monopoly. But I would be afraid that if you reduce the cost you would increase the chances of a much larger consumption for drinking purposes. If you made it cheaper, people would be likely to drink more of it ; therefore I do not think that temperance men will be pleased with this proposal from their standpoint. On the other hand, it is proposed to reduce the cost when it enters into medical preparations. It seems to me that could be easily accomplished by the government providing that alcohol used for those purposes might be alcohol which was distilled yesterday and could be used to-day. I do not see why it should be kept so long for that purpose. I agree largely with the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole). I cannot understand what great improvement is made in alcohol by keeping it two years, unless it is kept in something else than copper tanks, because if you keep it in copper tanks they prevent evaporation. The evaporation of the fusel oil through wooden barrels is supposed to make the whisky better, and that is the reason why the law was changed which required it to be kept five years. Originally the time was five years, and I think it is five years still before it can be used. But it had to be kept in wooden vessels, not in copper vessels. If you keep it in copper or glass vessels, they do away with evaporation, and therefore cannot improve it to any great extent. In those vessels certainly the fusel oil could not be taken out of it. I always thought that the amendment to the law, whether it was or was not calculated to benefit those who were then in the trade, had the result. I never could see the wisdom of it, because I did not think it desirable that alcohol or liquors should be improved very much by age, because if they were improved very much, people would be likely to drink more of them. I think the worse you made them, the better it would be for those who are in the habit of drinking them, unless you desired to make them so bad that they would kill off the drinkers. The other feature of the resolution is the appointment of a commission to make an inquiry. Well, the government say, We can inquire ourselves. I suppose the inquiry could be made as well by the government as by a commission. But even after the inquiry, it seems to me it would be a difficult task for the government to make such regulations as would enable those who require alcohol for the purposes mentioned, to get it at a much lower cost than it is procurable to-day. At least they could get that alcohol at whatever reduction could be made by using the newly made article instead of that a few years old. But they could go further still; they could reduce the Inland Revenue tax upon alcohol if they desired to those who required it for that purpose. It seems to me that it would not be a very difficult matter to make that arrangement. I agree with those who claim that it is desirable for these legitimate purposes that alcohol should be as cheap as possible. It is not to be used for beverage purposes. It is for the purpose of making medicinal preparations and for use in the arts. The minister said that when he allowed the use of alcohol to manufacturers, for instance, furniture manufacturers, they abused the trust very much and converted it to other uses. If I understand correctly what they require it for, it is for the purpose of making varnish.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend misunderstood me. When I said there were frauds on the revenue twenty or thirty years ago when grain alcohol was used in these pharmaceutical preparations I did not know exactly what the manufacturer was making who perpetrated the fraud to which I referred. I am rather inclined to think it was methylated spirits which was then made by outsiders.

Mr. SPROULE. It did not apply to the use of alcohol in the arts?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I misunderstood the hon. gentleman and I withdraw what I said. I think the whole thing could be easily accomplished by the government if they made an effort to do so. Give it to the trade at a reduced price while at the same time keeping up the price to those who would be likely to use it for beverage purposes.

Mr. BOLE. In respect to the observations made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the withdrawal of the regulations requiring storage for two years would decrease the cost of alcohol and would therefore make it more susceptible to consumption for beverage purposes, I have to state that I do not think that the people would commence to drink alcohol even if the regulations were abandoned for the reason that if that regulation were abandoned, and assuming that in consequence of the abandonment alcohol is reduced in bond to, say, 75 cents, from $1.39 a gallon, you will have to add to that $3.14 a gallon excise tax, so that the people will not pay $4 a gallon for alcohol when they can buy whiskey for $2 a gallon. Therefore I think that the objection does not stand. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) asked me if I had the particulars in respect to the price of alcohol from 1890 down to the present. I wish to state that I have the price in bond and the price duty paid for every year. The list is a long one and I do not care to weary the House with it at this time. Perhaps I might take every four or five years. The prices are as follows:

Year.	In bond per gallon.	Duty paid per gallon.
1880	$0.59	$1.89
1885	1.00	2.65
1889	0.91	3.06
1892	1.13	3.62
1895	1.15	3.53
1897	1.13	4.27

I am not quoting proof gallons as the minister has been all afternoon. A proof gallon of alcohol contains 57 per cent of pure alcohol. The article known in commerce contains about 90 per cent of pure alcohol.

Mr. SPROULE. Proof spirits is about half and half?

Mr. BOLE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What strength is the hon. member quoting?

Mr. BOLE. 65 per cent o.p. which is about 90 per cent pure alcohol. For this, as I stated, the price is $1.39 in bond and $4.15 excise duty. The hon. member for South

Grey (Mr. Miller) quoted some figures from Germany which appeared to be out of joint with the figures I quoted. I think he quoted figures for the years 1900. There has been a tremendous development in the alcohol business in Germany since then. I have a report which states that there was an increase of 104,000,000 litres of alcohol used for burning purposes over the year before. The last figures I have are for 1906-7. An increase of 104,000,000 litres is an increase of about 20,000,000 gallons. So, I think that the figure I stated is correct. The minister has stated that difficulties existed in respect to making alcohol cheaper for the purposes which I have designated this afternoon and he points out that if goods are manufactured from alcohol they will be taken out, redistilled and the alcohol recovered and used for beverage purposes. I acknowledge that there is that danger but it does not follow that because people are liable to perpetrate frauds of that kind industrial development should not go on. It does not follow that I should not carry money in my pocket because there is a danger of some one on the street knocking me down and taking the money from me. There is bound to be sin committed as long as human nature is human nature and I think this parliament should rise to the occasion and mete out punishment sufficient to deter people from doing that kind of thing and allow industries in Canada the same chance that they have in other countries that I have named this afternoon. I think it is unfair to assume that because people will commit fraud we should not have the privilege of making those things which are manufactured in such large quantities in other countries and imported into this country.

Mr. SPROULE. Now, they carry on illicit distilleries.

Mr. BOLE. Yes. It is just as unfair to say that nobody should grow corn or rye because some one is going to take a bag of rye or corn into the woods and distil whiskey from it. You can punish the man who abuses the privilege he gets when he asks for alcohol for pharmaceutical preparations and distils alcohol from it. The minister has been advised by the departmental officers, perhaps very properly, but I am afraid they are too susceptible to influence of this kind and that their minds are bent entirely on the collection of the revenue. They do not think of the development they are retarding. They think only of the revenue and I think the objection which is urged is rather far-fetched. The minister has stated that the manufacturers of vinegar, fulminate of mercury and soap have certain privileges under the regulations. I do not see why the manufacturers of pharmaceutical preparations do not enjoy the same privileges. The minister has stated that under the present law the manufacturers of pharmaceutical preparations can get alcohol at 15 cents per gallon if they comply with certain regulations; pay $100 a month to an inspector and all that kind of thing. But I do not understand that these regulations are now in operation. I understood from a conversation I had with the deputy minister that these were withdrawn in consequence of the frauds that were perpetrated against the revenue some 25 or 30 years ago.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No; they are in force.

Mr. BOLE. Then there is energy enough in Canada to have taken advantage of these regulations were they known to exist. I am very glad to hear the minister say they do exist, and I hope I will be able to quote the minister's statement to the officers of the department when I make further representations to them.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOLE. The minister has asked me to amend this resolution in such a way that he can support it, and as I would prefer to have some inquiry rather than none at all I will comply with his wish, although my inclination is to leave the resolution as it is. I will amend it by commencing at the fourth line from the bottom and saying:

In the opinion of this House the minister should inquire and report, &c.

Thus striking out the phrase which says that the government should appoint a commission to inquire. I feel that if the minister makes this report he will go about it in earnest, and that he will give us some information which will enable parliament to deal intelligently with the matter. But if the report is to be made entirely by departmental officers, I feel that they will do everything to safeguard the revenue and place that object before any idea of industrial development. That is what they are trained to; they know nothing else except the gathering in of the revenue and the protection of every avenue by which the revenue shall be preserved.

Mr. SPROULE. Why say the minister should inquire? Why not amend it so as to say the government should inquire?

Mr. BOLE. That would be satisfactory to me. I am disappointed that the minister does not accept the resolution as originally drafted, but I am willing to amend it as suggested.

Mr. SPROULE. Who would the report be to?

Mr. BOLE. To parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is proposed that the resolution be amended by striking out the words 'appoint a commission to.'

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton) moved :

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports, memoranda, resolutions and any information in the possession of the government, relating to changes in postal charges or regulations within the past two years, between the United States and Canada.

He said : I urge upon the Postmaster General the necessity of bringing down these papers so that the people of the country may understand what the reasons were which induced the minister to change the regulations last May so that Canadian newspapers and periodicals were placed at such great inconvenience, expense and loss of revenue. I feel confident that the United States government is quite willing to allow our weekly papers or daily papers or periodicals into their country under the regulations which existed previous to the 8th of May last, and I urge upon this government to restore these regulations. A change has already been made by the Postmaster General under which there is interchange of the American and Canadian daily newspapers under the regulations which previously existed and without restriction. The weekly papers are wondering why they should not be put in the same position, and the Postmaster General gives the excuse that he objects in some way to the advertising matter which would come into Canada. If the Postmaster General has any fear on that score, I would advise that he should appoint a board under which there would be a censorship of all publications that come into this country, and on the advice of whom objectionable periodicals would be excluded. I feel satisfied the Post Office Department of the United States would not object to such censorship. The present regulations have caused a serious loss of revenue to hundreds of Canadian weekly newspapers and periodicals on account of the increased cost, which amounts to about fifty cents on each annual subscription, and the consequent cancellation of many subscriptions. I would also call the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that if he has made a mistake in this matter he has also made a mistake in his policy with regard to rural free mail delivery. Surely he does not take the stand now that he did a few months ago, when he said we would have to wait for rural free delivery until the population of the Dominion was 20,000,000.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member will see that he is reviving a discussion which has taken place during the present session.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then I will direct my remarks to the mistakes which the minister has made in another direction. He has frankly admitted that he made a serious blunder when he changed in May last the postal regulations affecting daily papers, and I think he will see now that he has made a mistake with regard to the weeklies and periodicals. He has never been able to give any satisfactory explanation to the House why, if it was right that the daily papers should be shut out last May, he has changed his attitude and is allowing them in at the present time. I am sure that the minister will admit that our weeklies and periodicals are doing a lot of splendid advertising in the United States in regard to our Dominion and its resources. They are going into that country by the hundreds and thousands, and there is not an objectionable feature in these publications. We are spending over $900,000 in advertising the advantages of this country throughout the civilized world ; but no more advantageous means of advertising can be conceived of than that which is done through the Canadian weeklies and periodicals which go into the United States, but which are now practically barred from that country by the restrictions which the Postmaster General has placed upon them. I ask for this return in order that we may have a full and complete investigation of this matter and of the reasons why the government took the action they did last May, particularly in regard to the daily papers, which have suffered a loss of circulation as a result. I believe it is the duty of the Postmaster General to explain this matter fully to the whole country, so that the people may understand the position which Canada occupies.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I must apologize to my hon. friend for not being here when he introduced his motion ; I was receiving a delegation in my office on a question affecting my department. However, as I read the motion, I find no objection to its being voted unanimously by the House. I have nothing to conceal regarding the action taken by the department and by myself on the question of postal relations between the United States and Canada. As you are aware, we had a postal convention with the United States, dating as far back as 1875, under which the United States post office authorities arranged with the Canadian post office authorities to send to this country letters mailed in the United States at their domestic rate, and we were to distribute them through the post offices all over the Dominion and they, reciprocally, ours. A similar clause existed with regard to newspapers and periodicals. There was no serious objection to that convention. At that time there were very few daily newspapers published in Canada, and hardly any periodicals or magazines. In the United States there were only a limited number of magazines published and they were of the best class.

But since 1875 the development of the printing and publishing industry, especially in the United States, has been so great that in a few years the number of magazines, periodicals and daily newspapers increased to an enormous degree. The result was two-fold: first, the post offices were made the dumping ground of all that literature. The postal authorities could not check this sudden influx; they could not enforce the spirit of the classification established. The publishers of legitimate periodicals protested in vain during twenty years against this abuse of the mails. There are many sheets published in the United States under the cover of a newspaper or a periodical which are nothing else but mediums of advertising. There is a novelette in the paper, but the rest is covered with advertisements. Sometimes these novelettes are of the worst kind. As I said a moment ago, there were very loud complaints in the United States against the abuse of the postal privilege. Several conferences were held, and commissions were appointed by Congress, but the commissions never reported, or if they did, the influence of the politicians with the government at Washington was so great that when the moment came of putting into force the recommendations of the commissioners nothing was done. But what was the result as regarded Canada? Our frontier extends over 3,000 miles from one end of the country to the other. It is a purely artificial boundary line.

The result of the convention of 1875 was that our country became the dumping ground of American literature, good, bad and indifferent. The question became quite a vexed one, and I thought it my duty to face boldly the issue and come to some understanding with the United States Post Office Department. I had not been in charge of the department two months when I was the recipient of numerous protests directed against the objectionable magazines which were being read by the young in our large cities and towns all over the country. These protests came, in the first place, from the clergy, and besides several of the very loyal associations of this country also protested against the spirit of this literature as affecting especially the loyalty of the new settlers in the Northwest Territories. Some people wrote to me—and they were very important people on both sides of politics—that we should not allow the Americanization of our new settlers by this literature. We know that many Americans settle in our west every year. Was it not better and more in the interests of Canada that I should follow the advice given me and at the same time protect Canadian journalism as against American journalism? I am told that in literature there are no boundaries and no frontiers. No doubt that is true in the most intellectual sense, but we must, as much as possible, create a national spirit from one end of our country to the other. Is not the press and the literature published in this country a great instrument of nationalization? That is my opinion, and it was with that end in view that last year I took the step I did when I went to Washington. My hon. friend has a grievance against the department on that subject, and it is quite natural he should air it in this House. Many subscribers to the American press have also asked some explanations; but when the explanation was given, which I am now giving frankly, when I told my fellow-countrymen that the reason we took that attitude last year was, in the first place, to stimulate the national idea, and, in the second place, to protect our youth in our large cities and towns against an objectionable literature which was being sold at every station, on every news stand, they confessed that the action of the department was wise and timely. But the amendment was only in the nature of an experiment as regards the daily press. We found after a while that the large dailies published in the United States had only a limited circulation in Canada. As regards the periodicals—and the amendment last year was specially directed against the periodicals—we found that we were the mail carriers of some advertising firms in the United States. Would you believe me, Sir, that in small towns like Cobalt and New Liskeard the postmasters spent all their time in distributing that literature to the public. It was the same all over the country, especially in the Northwest and the large cities. When we increased the rate on periodicals and weeklies we practically purged the mails of this country of all that objectionable literature. I do not suppose my hon. friend is objecting to that. No one will cavil at the action of the department as regards that immoral literature, and it was only by raising the postal rates that we could obtain that result. My hon. friend wishes to know what have been the changes made this year. Last year, when I went to Washington, both departments agreed to raise the rate from one-half cent a pound, which was the rate in existence until that time, to four cents a pound. This year, as the American dailies have very little circulation in this country, and as some of the Canadian dailies have a very large circulation in the United States, especially in the eastern and in some of the western states, we thought we should relax the regulation, and instead of charging four cents a pound charge only one cent a pound. But my hon. friend says: Why discriminate against the magazines and weeklies? Well, if I were to revert to the one cent a pound rate for the magazines, the periodicals and the weeklies we would simply reopen the gates which were closed so effectively last year against the yellow literature. We have not given the rate of one cent a pound to the magazines and the weeklies, but we have practically cut the figure in two by giving them the benefit of the remailing privilege, and instead of charging four cents a pound, they will pay, between the express company and the United States post office, only two cents a pound. I would not have yielded if I had not made this other arrangement with the United States government. Under the old convention we were obliged to accept the classification of the United States Post Office Department. The United States post office, as I explained a minute ago, gave indiscriminately the mailing privilege to all newspapers, magazines and all periodicals. On many occasions the Postmaster General in the United States made an effort to stop the flood of this pseudo-literature, but he was simply compelled to recede before the influence of American politicians. This year, however, our agreement with the United States is that while we give their periodicals the remailing privilege, we shall accept only those which come under our own classification. That is to say, we now are what Rudyard Kipling has described in his 'Lady of the Snows,' a mistress in our own house, which we were not formerly. Under the old convention we had to accept any paper, periodical or magazine which came under the classification of the Washington office. We will give the remailing privilege to any weekly newspaper or periodical, provided it comes within the definition of our classification.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Why does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) put it back to the same old rate ? He says his classification protects the public from this objectionable literature ; now, why cannot the classification be worked under the old rate ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lefurgey) had followed my explanation, he would know that the arrangement is reciprocal—if we make a reduction in Canada, they will make it in the United States.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understand the minister to say that he recently reduced the rate on weeklies and periodicals from four cents to two cents. When did that go into force ? The reason I ask is that the impression the minister gave the other day was that the weeklies and periodicals were still charged four cents a pound.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, I think the change was made about January 7, but I have not the documents before me, and cannot speak with certainty. I hope I explained clearly the reasons for the change brought about a year ago. The effect of that change was to give a measure of protection to our own periodicals. Coming from a Liberal minister, I think that was a good move. Another most important one, is that we have purged our mails of all objectionable literature. I have a report, which I will lay on the table, written by the able superintendent of post offices for the Dominion, Mr. Ross, of Toronto. Mr. Ross travels from end to end of the country visiting every post office. He has noted what changes have taken place as regards the yellow press exchanged between the United States and Canada, and he has reported to me that the change had been simply marvellous, in the removal from the mails of objectionable literature, and noticed the encouragement given to that which is sound and pure. There is another important point which hon. gentlemen should not lose sight of. Last year when we amended the convention existing between Canada and the United States, we obtained at the same time from the Postmaster General of Great Britain a very substantial reduction in the postal rates. The rates on newspapers, magazines and periodicals from Great Britain to Canada, up to May 8 last, had been eight cents per pound. This was reduced to two cents per pound. And the result has been most gratifying. With the shutting out of the objectionable literature coming from the United States, we have noticed a substantial increase in the number of British periodicals, magazines and newspapers coming to Canada. The quantity of this matter in January last, as compared with January last year, shows an increase of no less than 347 per cent. The other day I received from the Postmaster General in Great Britain a blue-book published by that department accompanied with this letter :

February 7, 1908.

Dear Mr. Lemieux,—I think the inclosed will interest you as showing the number of magazines which have registered themselves under the Canadian magazine post.

That is a new department which was created last year at our request when that reduction took place.

I am glad to find also that the better class magazines are especially in request in Canada.

Yours very truly,
SIDNEY BUXTON.

I have here the blue-book referred to and it bears out what I have stated that we have replaced the objectionable literature which formerly burdened our mails, with this sound and patriotic literature coming from the old land.

Mr. KEMP. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) be kind enough to explain what he means by the objectionable literature from the United States.

Mr. LEMIEUX. For instance, these novellettes, dime novels, the ' Police Gazette ' and all that yellow literature which was simply dumped in our post offices in tons.

Mr. KEMP. But the Act is not directed against that kind of literature, but against all kinds.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is true in a sense ; it was pretty hard to expect from our postmasters under the old convention, that they could do much to stop this flood of undesirable literature which was thrown into our mails by the carload. But now we have completely stopped it. And I should receive the help of every good Canadian in continuing that policy. Of course, legitimate newspapers and magazines will be welcome. For instance, the 'Literary Digest,' 'Munsey's,' the 'National Review,' the 'Century,' 'Colliers,' 'McClure's,' 'Harper's,' the 'Ladies Home Journal'—of course, we are pleased to read these magazines and glad to see them in every home. I cannot name all the objectionable papers, but thousands of them have disappeared from our mails since we have inaugurated this policy movement.

Mr. SPROULE. It is more due, I presume, to the right acquired of making a classification instead of allowing the Americans to make it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) that by increasing the rate from one cent to four cents we stopped pretty much all that was objectionable.

Mr. SPROULE. Could not the hon. minister stop it by the classification ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Both of these have worked in the same direction. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) said that we had formerly in the United States an advertising medium for our own manufacturers. My hon. friend need not be afraid. I think we serve much better the interests of the country by preventing the patent medicine manufacturers and other from advertising at our expense, their goods in Canada. These advertising sheets that were coming through our mails in the guise of newspapers encouraged the purchase of American goods by Canadians. Well, we have stopped that. Is it not better to encourage our own manufacturers, our own goods, than to open, practically for nothing, this whole Dominion as a great advertising ground for the foreigner ? From every point of view, from a moral point of view, from a national point of view, from a commercial point of view, the change which was made last year was most beneficial to the country. I do not take the credit to myself. The whole House gave me a free hand on the question, and encouraged me, as I thought last year, to take that action. The change that has just taken place will not affect the future. We will have the same results except that our daily newspapers will benefit, by being able to send their issues to the large Canadian population in the United States, while in return we receive very few American daily newspapers. The United States are now bound to accept our own classification, and we will accept from the United States only such periodicals as we believe should be circulated among our people. These are the explanations I have to give, I will be able to give more when my estimates come up. Suffice it to say, again, that from a moral point of view, from a national point of view, and from a commercial point of view, the change which took place last year was most beneficial to the country.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince). I understand the position of the Postmaster General to be that he is trying to rid the country of an objectionable class of newspapers. To accomplish this he has made a trip to Washington, and so far as he has gained his object we will give the Postmaster General due credit. But when he went down to Washington last year, he claimed that he had raised the rates on all periodicals from the United States from half a cent a pound to four cents a pound. But when he came back to this country he found that the arrangement was absolutely unworkable, was an absolute injustice to the newspapers of this country. Under pressure of the newspaper men in this country, he apparently changed his mind, with regard to the daily papers, as he informed us on the 14th of February. But the Postmaster General did not tell us on the 14th of February that he had reduced the rate on weekly periodicals from four cents, to two cents for he distinctly said that the rate remained the same. Mr. Armstrong said :

When the minister took steps towards allowing the American dailies to come into Canada, what was the objection to including the weekly or semi-weekly newspapers of both countries in the arrangement?

The Postmaster General replied :

There has been no change made with regard to the weeklies or the semi-weeklies. The alteration last year affected only the daily papers, and the periodicals still remain at four cents a pound.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, they did not come under our classification. I think the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) asked me a question on the same lines, except that he gave a concrete case to which I made an answer. I think my answer to the member for Sherbrooke corrects the impression which may have been conveyed by my first answer.

Mr. LEFURGEY. If the change was made before that, it would seem that the minister wanted to cover it up. The whole of the discussion on that day went to show that no alteration had been made with regard to weekly newspapers. Apparently the great thing the minister wanted to accomplish was to get clear of these objectionable publications that were being dumped into Canada, and for that purpose his mission to the United States was a laudable one. But at that time we had not the right to our own classification, as the minister said ; since that time this right has been given to us, and therefore I cannot see why, if he can reduce the rate now to two cents, he cannot place the weekly newspapers back to the half cent rate, because after all he says it is a matter of concurrence between the two governments. His trip to Washington in May last year was to secure concurrent action, and that concurrent action brought about the four cent rate. The United States is allowing us to go back as regards daily newspapers to the half cent rate, as under the old convention. They have been willing to meet the minister on the two cent rate with regard to weeklies, and I would like to know if the minister approached the United States government as to the half cent rate with regard to weekly newspapers, and if they refused to go back to the old convention and allow our own classification.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I could not answer offhand. The negotiations this year were not carried on by myself, but by the acting Postmaster General, Sir Richard Cartwright, when I was away from Canada. But when the papers come down the hon. gentleman will get further information. At all events, I may say that if we were to revert to the half cent a pound rate, we might just as well open the gates.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The hon. member said it was a matter of concurrent arrangement.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It was a treaty.

Mr. LEFURGEY. If the minister cannot tell us that he tried to get these concurrent rates for half a cent a pound that we had under the old convention, then we will presume he was satisfied to take the two cents, and failed to get justice for our weekly newspapers. Now this really means more to our weekly newspapers than to our dailies. Our people who are living in the United States do not want the daily newspapers of Canada nearly so much as they want the weekly newspapers published in the localities from which they emigrated. And it is a manifest injustice to these people if the weekly newspapers cannot be put back to the half cent rate per pound, so that they can get them at a reasonable cost. It seems to me this could readily be done under the regulations, as the minister says that we have control of our own classification at the present time. If we can reduce the rate to two cents under this classification, I see no obstacle in the way of reducing it to the half a cent rate per pound on weekly newspapers. I trust, as the minister has seen fit to make these changes from the position into which he got himself last year, he will go further and place the weekly newspapers back to the status they enjoyed before.

Mr. KEMP. I would ask the minister if he knows what extra revenue this regulation brings to the United States. They all get the extra postage, do they not? It really amounts to a protective measure. Would it not be better for us to regulate it by tariff than by an arrangement of this kind, so that we may get the revenue rather than the United States, who are getting it now?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We have a convention which was made between the two countries in 1875 and it is under that convention that we are working.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it not the Canadian who is paying that extra postage to the United States government? I know of cases where a magazine was $3 a year previous to this arrangement and now it is $4.50. The subscriber is paying that extra postage to the United States government.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Similarly there were newspapers published in Canada circulating in the United States charging $3 a year and which, under the amendment have charged the Americans $4.50. The Americans are paying for it. It cuts both ways.

Mr. J. D. REID. But it is a very small proportion that goes to the United States from here.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No. 'La Presse' of Montreal has a circulation running from 30,000 to 35,000 a day in the eastern states. The Toronto 'Globe,' I think has a circulation of between 5,000 and 6,000 a day in the United States. All the newspapers of Toronto—my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) knows them very well—the 'World,' the 'Mail and Empire,' the 'Daily Globe,' the 'Daily Star,' the 'Daily News,' and the 'Daily Telegram' have large circulations in Buffalo and the cities across the boundary. The papers published in Winnipeg, Vancouver and all the border cities have very large circulation in the United States, now that the reduction has been made I do not think that there will be any more complaints.

Mr. KEMP. That does not apply to magazines.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It does not apply to magazines, it is true, but we had to take the position and stand firmly by our guns in order to obtain the result that we have achieved. People may think it is displaying too much patriotism to put a restraint upon American literature coming in such great quantities in this Dominion of ours, but my hon. friend who comes from the good, loyal city of Toronto must know that by encouraging our own national literature, by encouraging our own periodicals and our own newspapers, we are working to the best interests of Canada. The people who can afford to read periodicals and magazines published in the United States do not care two pins whether they pay forty cents or thirty cents more a year. If they can enjoy that luxury they are quite willing to pay twenty-five or thirty cents a year. I, for my part, believe that we should not begrudge the twenty-five cents we pay if we choose to read American literature in preference to our own.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would it not have been possible last May when the inspector to whom the hon. gentleman has referred undertook the inspection of literature coming into our country to have made a satisfactory arrangement with the American postal authorities. I think it is going to come to the establishment, as I said a few moments ago, of a board of censorship which will inspect all the papers and periodicals coming into the country.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, a board of censorship exists to-day in my own department. According to the Postal Act I can examine every newspaper and periodical which is being circulated in the country and pass judgment upon it. But I am not a superman; I am only a man. I cannot devote all my time to the work of censorship, and it would take such a large staff that it would probably cost the country too much money. No, I believe we have attained results which the future will justify. We have in our department the necessary power to stop the circulation of objectionable literature. The Post Office Department is in itself a bureau of censorship, but we do not need to exercise our own powers. There are enough intelligent, honest people in this country belonging to both creeds and to both nationalities to inform our department if objectionable literature is being circulated. I trust that the public will always help us, and I must thank those who in all parts of the country have heretofore helped the department in that arduous task.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). I appreciate very much the action of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) in excluding literature of a questionable character. But he has not made one point sufficiently clear to my mind. Since this convention between this country and the United States, was entered into the minister, a few months ago, had made some relaxation of its terms in regard to the postage rate on daily newspapers. There is a feeling in this country that that should be extended to weekly newspapers. There are many Canadians in the United States. We want them not to cut loose from us altogether. We want them to have our Canadian papers, not only Canadian dailies, but Canadian weeklies. Some of the best papers we have in Canada are weekly papers, and I cannot see why the Postmaster General has drawn the line between the daily and the weekly newspapers. He told us that the increase in the rates has excluded some questionable periodicals and next he quoted Kipling as saying that we were masters in our own house, that we made our own classification, and he went on to say that it was the classification that excluded those questionable periodicals, and next he quoted the postage and then he goes a little farther and says that it was the classification. I think he would do a good deal for this country if he would extend to weekly papers the privilege that he has extended to daily papers. I do not want for one moment to jeopardize the action which he has taken against the flooding of this country with doubtful literature. But I think that he should include the weekly newspaper with the daily in the reduction.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. HAGGART. Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to know from the government what business will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. FIELDING. Several of the resolutions which stand on the Order Paper; the first relates to the battlefields of Quebec, and perhaps one or two others, and then Supply.

Mr. TAYLOR. What Supply?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 27, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 110) respecting a certain patent of Frederick C. Rehm, Elias Frank and Isidore Frank.—Mr. Beland.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Steamboat Inspection Report: Supplement to the 40th annual report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the fiscal year 1907.—Mr. Brodeur.

QUESTIONS.

DREDGING WORKS.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. What are the total amounts spent from December 1, 1904, to February 1, 1908, on dredging works; (a) at or near the entrance of the Nicolet river; (b) at Port St. François; (c) at River Godfroi; (d) at the wharfs of Ste. Angèle, Bécancourt, Gentilly, and of St. Pierre-les-Becquets?
2. Was the dredging done after tenders had been called for publicly through the newspapers? If so, what newspapers?
3. Was the said work executed by the lowest tenderer?
4. What was the name of the dredging contractor in each case, and the amount received by each contractor for the work done?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) to kindly put this in the form of a motion for return, as it embraces a number of different works.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand as notice of motion for return.

EXPERIMENTAL FARMS.

Mr. LAPOINTE asked :

1. What is the number of experimental farms organized and worked by the federal government?
2. Where are they situated, and in which provinces?
3. What is the date of the establishment of each of such farms?
4. What amount has been paid out by the government for each farm during the year 1896-7?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. Seven.
2. At Ottawa, Ontario ; Nappan, Cumberland County, Nova Scotia ; Brandon, Manitoba ; Indian Head, Saskatchewan ; Lethbridge, Alberta ; Lacombe, Alberta ; and Agassiz, British Columbia.
3. Ottawa—November, 1886.
Nappan—May, 1888.
Brandon—July, 1888.
Indian Head—April, 1888.
Lethbridge—August, 1906.
Lacombe—March, 1907.
Agassiz—September, 1889.
4.

Ottawa	$36,441 24
Nappan	8,515 73
Brandon	7,156 34
Indian Head	4,429 08
Lethbridge	8,213 61
Lacombe	11,179 09
Agassiz	5,256 83

Other expenditures not classified by farms :

Expenses in selecting new farms.	$ 603 66
General expenditures connected with all the farms, including distribution of seed grain, &c.	20,759 54

I should add that the expenditure in connection with Lacombe and Lethbridge include considerable capital expenditures.

BROCKVILLE CHEESE CURING ROOM.

Mr. BRODER—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

Is the government cold storage or cheese curing room at Brockville under lease? If so, to whom leased, at what rent, and how long does the lease run?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The government cool cheese curing room at Brockville is under lease to A. A. Ayer & Company, Montreal, at a rental of $300 per year. The present agreement will expire December 31, 1908.

WHARF AT POINT PRIM, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Has the government completed the construction of a new wharf at Point Prim, Prince Edward Island?
2. Was the contract let by tender? If so, to whom?
3. If by tender, (a) how many tenders were received, (b) the names of the tenderers, and (c) the amount of each tender?
4. What is the depth of water at outer end, at low tide and at high tide?
5. To what length will it be necessary to construct the wharf to get sufficient water for cargo vessels?
6. Is it the intention of the government to extend the work?
7. What amount was expended on construction of work to date?
8. Who were the inspectors of the work, and how much was paid to them?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes.
2. (a) Yes ; (b) Coffin & Quinn.
3. (a) Six ; (b) and (c) :

Kimble Coffin & John Quinn	$4,160
Alexander Compton & Wellington Compton	4,750
D. W. B. Reid & Lewis Archibald	5,840
Hugh Macdonald	5,875
Lyons & White	5,990
Thomas Campbell	6,200

4. Dry at low tide ; 7 feet at high tide.
5. 1,000 feet, or 720 feet more, to obtain 6 feet at low water and 15 feet at high water.
6. Matter under consideration.
7. $4,526.08. I may say that amount of $366.08 has been paid outside the contract for such services as inspector, advertising, &c.
8. Inspector, John Campbell, $2.50 per working day.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Did the government or the Minister of Militia, or any department of the government, have any information from any source, a communication, directly or indirectly, from the Imperial War Department or War Office, by letter, cable, message or otherwise, that while the Ross rifle would take the same ammunition as the Lee-Enfield rifle, 303, it differs so much in mechanism that the different parts of the two rifles would not be inter-changeable, which would be a great drawback?
2. Was the government or the Minister of Militia, or any department of the government, in or about the year 1903, or at any time since the year 1901, informed of any report, or had they any information as to a report respecting the Ross rifle made by the officers of the school of musketry, Hythe, or by any other British officers representing, that two or other number of Ross rifles had been tried in competition with the Lee-Enfield rifle and that the test disclosed a marked inferiority of the Ross rifle?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. There is, in the Department of Militia and Defence, a communication from the War Office, through the Colonial Office, dated May, 1902, marked 'Secret,' referring to the Ross rifle; but such correspondence does not admit of the construction implied in this question. Nobody ever pretended that there could be inter-changeability of parts between two rifles of different patterns.

It is a fact, however, that no serious inconvenience can result from the use by two forces co-operating in the field of rifles of different pattern but firing the same ammunition.

2. The same 'secret' correspondence referred to an alleged trial at Hythe of two rifles said to have been supplied by an agent of Sir Charles Ross; but subsequent correspondence established the fact that an error had been made, as no such rifles were supplied either by Sir Charles Ross, his agent or any one on his behalf.

HOUSE OF COMMONS EMPLOYEES.

Mr. OWEN asked:

1. By whom are appointments and increases of pay made in the clerk's and sergeant-at-arm's departments of the House of Commons in regard to permanent and sessional employees?
2. On what recommendation are such appointments and increases of pay made?
3. What changes have occurred in above services since July 1, 1907?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Appointments in the Clerk's and Sergeant-at-Arms' Departments of the House of Commons, in regard to permanent and sessional employees, are made by the Speaker of the House.

Increases of pay are made on the recommendation of the Board of Internal Economy of the House.

Mr. Speaker accepts such recommendations as he deems advisable in making appointments.

No record is kept of recommendations.

Increases of pay are generally made on the recommendation of the Clerk of the House or of the Sergeant-at-Arms, as the case may be.

Question No. 3 had better be made a notice of motion for return.

Mr. SPEAKER. The third question will stand as a notice of motion for a return.

PROPRIETARY AND PATENT MEDICINES.

Mr. BERGERON asked:

1. Was a committee of the House appointed to inquire into proprietary and patent medicines within the last five years?
2. If so, who composed the committee?
3. Did the committee sit, and did they examine witnesses?
4. How many witnesses were examined?
5. Where are the testimonies to be found, and if in the Department of Inland Revenue, will the minister bring them down to the House?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue):

1. Yes.
2. The committee was composed of Hon. Wm. Templeman, chairman, and Messrs. Stockton, Fisher, Bole, Beland, Sproule, Maclean (Lunenburg) and Bergeron.
3. Yes.
4. Fourteen.
5. The evidence is in the hands of the clerk of the committee, Mr. L. C. Panet.

MONTREAL 'GAZETTE' BUILDING.

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

1. How much did the government pay for the Montreal 'Gazette' building for post office purposes?
2. Who had the contract for demolishing the building, and was it done by contract?
3. Who has the contract for the erection of the new building on said premises, and were tenders asked for?
4. Who were the tenderers and what was the amount of each tender?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Public Works):

1. $200,000.
2. Removal of building forms part of the contract.
3. (a) Peter Lyall & Sons. (b) Yes.
4. Peter Lyall & Sons.. .. $487,537 00
   James Ballantyne.. .. .. 499,000 00
   G. W. S. Nicholson.. .. 520,000 00

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to renew the inquiry regarding which the right hon. the First Minister wished to have some notice. It had reference to the two Japanese immigrants who have been recently referred to by the press as having entered Canada from the United States. How did they come into the country in contravention of the recent order in council? If they have been deported, under what law and by whom? Is there any system of immigration inspection along the western border between Canada and the United States, as I am informed there are over 20,000 Japanese who have entered American territory within the last year?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Up to the present we were not prepared to enforce that order in council at railway points. That order in council was passed with the view of meeting conditions at ports of landing, but we are now in the course of preparing to inspect and exclude immigrants at railway points on the border between Canada and the United States. The two Japanese referred to were deported under the authority of the immigration officials at Vancouver. Finding them in the country in defiance of this exclusion order, these officials called upon the railway company, as they are entitled to do under the Immigration Act, to take these people out, and they were taken out. There has not hitherto been a system of inspection with a view to the enforcement of the exclusion order along the American border, but we are providing the necessary machinery for that purpose. I am not able to answer definitely the last question. The department may be aware, but the information has not come to my knowledge yet.

RAILWAY SERVICE BETWEEN TORONTO AND SCHOMBERG.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to a statement made to me last night, which I believe to be accurate, that there has been no railway service between Yonge street and the village of Schomberg the last two weeks.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will have to put his question on the Order Paper.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COMMISSION.

Mr. BARKER. I have been told that the government have received the report of the Bridge Commission. When will it be laid on the table?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The report is just received, but the appendices are not yet completed.

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into committee to consider the following resolution :

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the sum of three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000) be appropriated towards the preservation, in a suitable manner, of the historic battlefields of Quebec, in connection with the tercentenary of the said city of Quebec.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

He said : I am prepared to give an explanation to-day, but I have received word from my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that he was obliged to be absent to-day and wanted to take part in the debate. If agreeable, I shall introduce the resolution without debate, and reserve discussion on the second reading of the Bill. It is important that this legislation should be advanced a step to-day.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolution.

Mr. LENNOX. I presume that when we go into committee on the second reading of the Bill, we will have the opportunity to discuss it as fully as if we discussed it now?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would also take this opportunity of asking the Prime Minister, in connection with these monuments at Quebec, whether an effort will be made to restore or recover the burial place of Champlain. He was really the founder of that city, and was buried there, and he had a grave and monument which in some way have disappeared. If there is to be a restoration of these monuments I should think the government could well afford to devote some attention to the recovery of the grave of Champlain, which has been entirely lost, according to history, and not only to recover it, but to erect some kind of a monument on that very spot.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume that the right hon. the first minister, if he does not give his explanations at this stage, will give them later on.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. ARMAND LEVERGNE. I would ask the First Minister if the government has received any petition from the city of Quebec asking that certain latitude should be given to the commission in expending the money voted by the government ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no communication of any kind.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 111) respecting the Canadian Battlefields of Quebec.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I wish to draw the attention of the First Minister to a point in connection with this matter. I do not know the terms of the Bill, but he will remember that last year when the matter was mooted, I drew attention to the fact that Champlain had traversed the Ottawa river, Lake Nipissing, the French river, the Georgian bay waters, and made an expedition to the Trent waters. I also drew attention to the fact that all Canadians would be delighted to have the government make some recognition of that trip taken by Champlain. The First Minister promised to look into the matter, and erect some suitable memento at some point along the line. The Postmaster General also appeared to be much impressed with the idea, and between the two I think they promised to give the matter consideration, and to make some memorial of Champlain's trip to the Trent waters. I propose at the proper time to make a suggestion to the First Minister in regard to that expedition.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Does my hon. friend think that the government should do something in memory of Champlain at Quebec ?

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Certainly.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE ROSS RIFLE FACTORY.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). I would like to ask the First Minister to bring down some papers in connection with this matter before we deal with it again. In the session of 1903, Mr. Casgrain moved for papers and correspondence in connection with the establishment of the Ross rifle factory upon the Plains of Abraham, and on the 3rd of April, 1903, an order was made for the papers to be brought down, as will be found on page 2109 'Hansard.' Mr. Casgrain called attention to the fact that a petition of prominent residents of the city of Quebec had been presented, but did not appear in the return; and the right hon. gentleman said that he would see about it. I have examined the returns to-day, and I am not able, or the official who is in charge has not been able to place his hand upon it. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would make a note of it, so that we may have the papers when this matter comes up for discussion again.

THE RAILWAY COMMISSION.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Railway Act as respects the constitution of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, and to provide for the appointment of an assistant chief commissioner at a salary of $9,000 per annum, and of two additional commissioners at a salary of $8,000 per annum each.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the Minister of Railways ought to give us an explanation of what this Bill intends to do.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The object of this Bill are comprehensive yet few in number. The first is to add three commissioners, three members to the board of commissioners, one of whom shall be called Assistant Chief Commissioner, and whose qualification must be that of a Superior Court judge, or of a barrister of at least ten years standing. He will receive $9,000 per annum. The other two additional members of the board will receive $8,000 each. The board will have power to hold more than one sitting at the same time. The Bill will require that each company shall have at Ottawa an agent upon whom notice may be served if desired.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that all the outline the minister is going to give ? Surely we ought to have something about their respective duties. This appears to be a sort of double barrelled commission. I presume that there would be certain lines of inquiry that it would be proper for one to take up, and certain lines for the other to take up ; otherwise they might both be doing the same work.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Mr. GRAHAM. They might both be doing the same class of work, but not the same work. The object of the Bill is that whatever portion of the commission is sitting it is a board, and its decisions shall have the effect of decisions of the board, no matter how many members may be sitting upon it. But we are not dividing the board, the Bill is not cutting the board up into divisions. It is all one board, and any part of it is a board.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do you state what proportion of the board shall be a quorum?

Mr. GRAHAM. We are not in this Bill requiring any certain number to be a quorum because the board can divide itself into two different numbers and you cannot say how many will be a quorum.

Mr. BARR. If a decision is given by two will there be a right of appeal to the majority ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Under the Bill there will not be a right of appeal to the majority of the board.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would a decision by one member constitute a decision of the board ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The minister is increasing the number and also, I imagine, greatly increasing its power. I think he should take the House and the country into his confidence and tell us what the increased duties of the board are to be. We are all in favour of largely increasing the powers of the Board of Railway Commissioners; I believe the whole country favours that, and I think the minister should tell us his intentions in this respect. We have been told that he intends to take jurisdiction over telegraph, telephone and sleeping car companies and other branches of railway service. I have discovered still other branches of the railway business that ought to be covered by the Railway Commission. It may be that they are covered now, but I would like to have an explict statement. For instance, many freights consist largely of cartage charges and it is a question whether cartage companies should not be covered. Then too, the transfer companies which handle baggage in cities make charges which are becoming very monopolistic and ought to be regulated. It is a question whether the railway news companies, as well as the express companies should not be controlled. We should also know whether the board are to have jurisdiction in connection with the question of demurrage which will certainly open a wide field of activity to it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I hope to introduce the two Bills together but unfortunately we were not able to have the other Bill ready for presentation to-day. However, I can assure my hon. friend that before this Bill passes the stage where investigations and explanitions can be made, the other Bill will be introduced and fully explained.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to impress on the minister at this stage, so that we may have a broad measure when the Bill is introduced, the necessity of very much enlarged powers being given to the Railway Board. When measures are crystallized by the government and brought down it seems very difficult to change that at all, and therefore I would impress on the minister the importance of making this a broad and comprehensive measure. We have great trouble about making connection between roads that are incorporated by the provincial legislation and these incorporated by federal legislation, and in appearing before the Dominion Railway Board, we are met by the difficulty that they say they are not sure that they have entire jurisdiction and a similar difficulty is met in appearing before the Provincial Railway Board. This applies to electric roads and to other roads under provincial jurisdiction. There should be no great difficulty in framing an Act to provide for joint action between the federal and provincial boards in such cases so that shippers depending on an interchange of traffic between roads so situated will have the same protection as others enjoy. This question has actually arisen in several cases and will arise again. I hope the minister will endeavour to bring in a measure that will remedy that. When actual physical connection is made I do not understand that there is any very great difficulty as the Railway Board have jurisdiction to control the interchange of freight; but until actual physical connection is made I believe there is great doubt as to their jurisdiction.

The minister promised the other day that he would see that ample provision is made and justice done in regard to demurrage. Other matters of difficulty have arisen and doubtless the present members of the board can make many valuable suggestions as to what is required. It may be necessary to amend the Act with reference to the classes of persons who may initiate proceedings before the board extending its provisions.

Mr. TAYLOR. I approve of the minister's suggestion that this measure go through committee pro forma on the understanding that there will be full latitude of debate on the third reading after the introduction and explanation of the other measure. I would suggest that in the other Bill provision be made that the Board of Railway Commissioners shall have power to compel a railroad to deliver goods handed over to it by another road at the rate agreed on by the railroad that first took charge of them. If I purchase a car on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway the Canadian Pacific Railway issues a tariff rate and signs a bill guaranteeing to deliver the car at my place at a certain rate per 100 pounds. When it comes to my town the Grand Trunk Railway, having taken charge of it at Brockville or some other point, demands sometimes $10, $50 or even $200 extra charges. I have had cars come in with $200 overcharges, over and above the signed contract rate of the shipping company. The Railway Board should have power to compel the railway delivering the car to carry out the contract at the rate agreed on by the first company. Every manufacturer has had heavy overcharges of this kind, the rate being increased either by mistake of clerks or some other cause. The only way to get the car is to pay the freight and put in a claim, but the claim may lie sometimes three or four years before it is adjusted. I had to pay charges in April of last year of $103. I had a contract signed by the railway to ship the goods at a price, but the Grand Trunk would not deliver the car unless I paid the amount. I paid it and put in my claim, having first objected to receiving the car. The Grand Trunk wrote asking me to receive it, and saying they would settle in a month but it is now over a year. In several cases since that I refused the cars and let them lie there until the matter was adjusted, as I have become tired of receiving cars and waiting until the claims were adjusted by the adjusters. This is very important as goods are sold delivered and knowing the through rate to any point, say on the Intercolonial Railway, we credit the retail merchant on the invoice with the amount of freight he should pay, according to the tariff rate; but he may write back asking for an additional credit of $2 to $5 on a small lot, owing to these overcharges that he has had to pay. Every manufacturer has the same experience. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) told me that he had much trouble in this way. The Railway Commission should be empowered to adjust and settle these matters and to bring the railways to time.

Mr. KEMP. The only explanation I understood the minister to make was in regard to the qualification of the assistant chief commissioner, who would have to be a lawyer. What qualifications are required of the other two gentlemen?

Mr. GRAHAM. We hope that the qualifications of the other two gentlemen will be such as to meet the approval of all classes in the Dominion of Canada. Almost every class in the community, the Manufacturers' Association, the commercial travellers, the shippers, and the farmers ask to be represented as a class. Every class in Canada appears to believe that it has some man in its ranks who would fill that position better than a man selected from any other class. The idea of the government is to select two men who will be broad enough to view these questions from the various sides from which they will be presented and adjudicate upon them in a way that will be fair to everybody.

Mr. BARR. Will they require to be lawyers or laymen ?

Mr. GRAHAM. They will not require to be lawyers or laymen—they will require to be good men.

Mr. HAGGART. We have not had a statement from the minister as to the necessity of the appointing of these three new commissioners, whether the work is too heavy for the present commissioners; nor has he stated why he appoints an assistant chief commissioner and why this gentleman is to get $1,000 a year more than the others. The minister says he hopes to appoint parties who are well qualified, whether they are mechanics, agriculturists or members of any other class. He is indifferent about that. But what is extraordinary in this case is that one of these gentlemen must be a lawyer and a lawyer of ten years standing at that. What is there to necessitate the appointment of such a man on the Railway Board ? Surely there are enough good prizes in the grasp of the lawyers already. To fill nearly every public and political appointment, you have to be a barrister. And not only is it a pre-requisite that a .railway commissioner should be a lawyer, but the representative of this distinguished class in the community must receive $1,000 a year more than the other men. If there is a chief commissioner who knows the law there is no necessity in the world for a lawyer assistant chief commissioner, and as to the duties of the other two men the Minister of Railways seems to be in perfect ignorance regarding that point. The minister is now asking for appointments which will mean $30,000 a year, and of course other officials will have to be appointed which will bring it up to $50,000 a year, for there will be two or three new clerks and two or three new messengers.

Mr. BENNETT. And a new car.

Mr. HAGGART. When the minister makes such a proposition to this House he ought to be able to show the necessity for it. I for one enter my protest against the appointment of another lawyer to the Railway Board. The lawyers are perfectly well taken care of by the public already.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). Is it the intention of the government to make this law apply to the government railways ?

Mr. GRAHAM. This Bill simply applies to the appointment of commissioners. That would come up under the next Bill if it would come up at all.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). In my opinion the time has come when the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission should be extended to government railways. I have recently received communications from business men not only in the maritime provinces but in Ontario and Quebec complaining that the freight charge on goods from the maritime provinces to the west is excessive. The opinion of those with whom I have come in contact is that the Railway Commissioners should have power to deal with freight rates not only on privately owned railroads but on government railroads and on all steamships which are subsidized by the Dominion. Let me give an instance of the disadvantage shippers labour under. A gentleman in Toronto wished to obtain some goods in Charlottetown and he was told that the freight rate would be 40 cents per 100 pounds whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway will carry goods from Montreal to Sydney, which is a slightly less distance, for less than 6 cents per 100 pounds. Here is an instance of great discrimination and the proper tribunal to remedy it is this Railway Commission which is supposed to be an independent body. It would take all this work out of the hands of the Minister of Railways and lessen his labours and responsibility. I would suggest to the minister that he provide in the Act that it shall be the duty of these commissioners to regulate the freight rates on the government railways and the subsidized steamers.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that the old Act provides that in the absence of the Chief Commissioner the Deputy Chief Commissioner may act as Chief Commissioner ? Under the new law who will act in the absence of the Chief Commissioner ? Will it be the assistant or the deputy ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think my hon. friend will find that the assistant will act.

Mr. SPROULE. We have no information except what the minister gives us, and we are only endeavouring to ascertain what the provision will be. I understood the minister to say a short time ago that there would be no quorum of the commission. The old Act provides that a quorum should consist of two. What will be the quorum of the commission under the new Act, or will there be a quorum at all ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine that in reference to the quorum the old Act is not changed.

Mr. SPROULE. The old Act provides that on questions of law the decision of the Chief Commissioner shall prevail. What status will the Assistant Commissioner have on questions of law, provided both he and the Chief Commissioner are present at a sitting ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Chief Commissioner would have the status he has now. In his absence, if the assistant presided, he would have all the powers of the Chief Commissioner.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose there is a difference of opinion between them ?

Mr. GRAHAM. If the two were present, as the Act provides, the ruling of the chief would prevail.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have a suggestion to make to the hon. gentleman with the view of increasing the usefulness of this Bill to the country ; it is in regard to the delays now involved in cases before the commission. I do not think these delays are the fault of the commissioners ; I think they are rather because the statute too much limits their powers. The very matter mentioned by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), that on a question of law only the Chief Commissioner can give a decision, causes a lot of trouble. A railway company deliberately raises a question of law which there may be nothing in, which a man of common sense without being a lawyer would see that there was nothing in, but because the statute requires that questions of law must be dealt with by the Chief Commissioner alone, none of the others can deal with it, and it is wantonly raised by the railway company in order to hold up, perhaps for months, an application that ought to be granted and granted promptly. I would say to the hon. minister, who has not the disadvantage of being a lawyer in this discussion, that in any court in any British country to-day, a suitor cannot delay a matter for five or six months before the trial takes place, simply because he disputes it, but he has to show that there is a bona fide dispute on the merits of the case ; but a matter before the Railway Commission, which ought to be dealt with at once, may be held up for months, by a railway company, while elaborate proceedings are gone on with, questions are raised and replies given, witnesses are subpoenaed and everything else is done as if it were a matter seriously in dispute as to the right of the applicant to obtain an order, when it is simply a matter of arranging details in an hour or so. I think the commissioners are rather handicapped by the rules which they have to make under the statute. It is expedition that people want in dealing with railways ; it is not a delay of six or seven months, during which perhaps the crop which should be moved is all lost. I would therefore suggest to the hon. minister that he should allow any one of the commissioners to deal with the matter, unless in his opinion it is so serious that it requires a quorum of the board. I do not think any harm would result from such a provision. There ought to be in the Railway Commission, as in every court of justice, a summary way of dealing with these matters. There is certainly a great deal in the statement that justice delayed is injustice, and although finally people probably get from this commission the order to which they are entitled, they get it so many weeks or months after they should get it that its efficacy is largely lost.

The present system gives the railway companies the power of blackmail. They have their lawyers paid by the year and their witnesses are in their employ the year around, so that it costs them no special expense or additional trouble to go to litigation before the commission, and the party who gets a decision in his favour and is found to be entitled to what he asks is not indemnified for the damages he is caused by the delay. A railway company says to him: We will give you so much; if you do not take that, we will put you to all the expense and delay of going before the commission, and if you should win you will be out all your costs. The applicant ought to be able to get summary justice from the commission and ought not to be burdened by a lot of multifarious proceedings such as marked the old chancery suits some forty or fifty years ago. This Railway Commission ought to be able, just as a city police court is, to deal with a thing, which is probably only a trifling matter, at once. I submit that it is well worth while considering whether there should not be a power in any one member of the board to deal with any matter which he think does not require any delay and which need not go before the whole board. If the party against whom he decides thinks the decision is not a good one, we might give him the right to appeal to a quorum of the board. But the appellant should be bound to pay damages as well as the expenses caused the respondent, if it was afterwards found that the respondent was entitled to what he claimed.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Inasmuch as the hon. minister does not intend to give his views regarding the widening of the powers of the board to-day, this may be an opportune time to give him information with regard to some other things concerning which the board might have its jurisdiction extended. But first I wish to refer to the question of having two lawyers on the commission. I would prefer having the highest class of railway man on the board. We want to see on the board the best railway traffic man in the country. I have two or three such men in my mind who could give the public the benefit of the knowledge which they have acquired by long service in connection with railway traffic. We ought to have a railway expert on a board of this kind just as well as a legal expert.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would my hon. friend favour the putting on this board of an experienced railway man?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Certainly. I want a man who knows the traffic requirements of the country, and you can get such a man.

Mr. GRAHAM. One of the difficulties would be that we would have to pay such a man a good deal more than is provided in this resolution in order to get the best man.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. We ought to pay that and the country would be quite willing that we should. I also want to suggest that the minister should take into consideration what my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has said in connection with what I propose to tell him now regarding speedy enforcement. When that board gives a deliverance it ought to go into force immediately. Take a case in which I had some interest, in which the board found that the Grand Trunk Railway was in duty bound to give the people a penny a mile service. The company went from the board to the Supreme Court and propose to go from the latter to the Privy Council. The commission should say: You may go to the Supreme Court and the Privy Council, but pending that appeal you must accept our decision.

Mr. LANCASTER. And pay all damages.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes. There ought to be no such appeal. The whole object of this commission was to give speedy findings and give the shippers relief. I think the commission to-day, in view of the decision given by the Supreme Court, should say to the Grand Trunk Railway: You can only go to the Privy Council provided you give the penny a mile service that we have found you are bound to give. Just to give another piece of information to the hon. minister, I want to tell him of another grievance against which he ought to make provision when widening the powers of the commission. Here is a letter which I have received from Burlington:

Burlington, February 23, 1908.

My Dear Sir,—You have been fighting the Grand Trunk Railway so persistently that even another instance where you might do some good would not be out of place. I live in this village and have to go to Hamilton every day. The Grand Trunk Railway fare is 35 cents, but they will not issue any commutation tickets, while people in Oakville can buy commuter's tickets to Toronto and from Waterdown to Hamilton and from Grimsby to Hamilton. These places and intermediate stations are all given cheaper rates to those who have daily and other tickets good for a year. From here we can get only ordinary fare. It is rumoured that this is on account of an agreement with the Hamilton Radial Company, which company pays the Grand Trunk Railway for not running trains on the beach and not issuing reduced tickets. By this means the Radial Electric Railway have increased the commutation tickets 60 per cent, so that now there is no difference. In fact we have no commutation tickets between Burlington and Hamilton. The Grand Trunk Railway do not run trains over eleven miles of the northwestern division—that is passenger trains; and I believe this road was bonused by either the Dominion government or the provincial legislature. The Radial Railway does not now carry out the by-law as agreed between them and the village of Burlington as regard the issuing of tickets between Burlington and the canal. We cannot buy them, nor will they issue them.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does the hon. gentleman say that the municipality made a contract with the Radial Company which is not being kept?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The writer says so.

This is the road which is applying for a Dominion charter. They had better be left alone under provincial rights, or at least before they apply for other powers they should carry out the promises they have now agreed to.

The great point is that some jurisdiction must be placed somewhere to regulate this. The great railways assume to themselves the right to give suburban service where they think fit. Montreal has a very excellent suburban service, over which a system of commutation tickets prevails. Toronto, almost as large, has no suburban service and no general system of commutation tickets. There commutations are a matter of grace on the part of the railway. The railway companies distribute their favours where they please. Oakville to the west has a regular commutation system and cheap tickets, but to the east, to such places as Pickering and Whitby, there is no commutation service. I do not know if even Brampton has such a service.

Mr. GRAHAM. You do not compare Brampton with Oakville?

Mr. HENDERSON. That is owing to the Hamilton Radial.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. If it is J. M. Gibson who is to give relief, I do not expect a great deal in that direction. The point I want to come to is this, that this is a duty which must be assumed either by the minister or the commission. There should be provision for equality of treatment, so that if any railway gives commutation service at any point, it should treat similar points similarly. Now, I do not say that a small place is entitled to a commutation or suburban service. It may pay or it may not. But I do say that if Montreal has a first-class suburban service as it has by both railways the same should be given to Toronto. And also if the Grand Trunk choses to give the town of Oakville a commutation service it should give it to Whitby to Brampton to Newmarket. This Act has been in force for three or four years. Above all it was to secure equality of treatment. I trust the minister will find a way to empower somebody to speedily and effectively secure equality of treatment to the different places, as of right, and not through the mere grace of the great railway companies. And again,

I say that it is a crying shame, and a blot on the record of the Railway Commission, that, after we have spent all this money upon it, it has allowed the Grand Trunk to continue its refusal to carry out a specified duty placed upon it by the law of the land while an appeal from the decision of the board on the subject is taken to the courts.

Mr. GRAHAM. Do I understand that the commission have given the Grand Trunk until a certain date to begin the penny-a-mile service ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The commission made an order that the railway should give this service, but withheld the enforcement of the order until appeal could be made to the Supreme Court. When the Supreme Court made their deliverance, and a motion was made that the order of the commission should then go into force, but the commission, in their wisdom, saw fit to withhold the enforcement of the order until appeal might be made to England. Now, that is contrary to the spirit of the railway law, and it disappoints the reasonable expectations of the Canadian public. The people thought that if a finding was made, enforcement would follow, and not that enforcement would be suspended pending appeal. I trust that the minister will see to it that this commission, which is doing good work, does not get into this way of hanging up decisions, but that speedy enforcement will be characteristic of the commission in contradistinction to the ordinary action of the courts. I think the minister should be glad of suggestions, and I hope that, in widening the duties of the commission his Bill extending the duties of the commission will be at least co-extensive with the additional expense he is putting the country to in increasing the number of commissioners. Again, I say to the hon. minister that if the best man in Canada—or in the United States for that matter—can only be induced to give his time and abilities to this work by a salary of $15,000 or $20,000 a year, I, for one, would be prepared to vote that salary. They are giving a very fair salary to the commissioners in New York state, higher, I think, than those at Washington. You have to pay a good salary for a good judge.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that what the country has been led to expect from this proposal of the government is not going to be realized. I do not see that under this resolution, or the Bill to be founded upon it, there will be any greater expedition than under the present commission. The whole complaint is that the commission is overworked, and that its work is in arrears. I thought the government was going to provide means by which the work would be caught up, and that by appointing new commissioners with an assistant commissioner at their head double work could be done. I thought that one division of the board could sit in Vancouver, while another was sitting here in Ottawa. I fail to see where we are going to be one bit better off in this respect with this enlarged board than we are now with three commissioners. It is often said that half as many members of the House of Commons would do the work just as well and more expeditiously than a House of the present size. I apprehend that the same thing would apply to the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. GRAHAM. Perhaps the hon. member (Mr. Henderson) will allow me to interrupt him with a view to saving time. The object he desires is the one to be attained by appointing additional members of the board. The commissioners can sit in twos or in threes. Half the board may be sitting in Vancouver, while the other half is sitting in Halifax.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the hon. minister (Mr. Graham) had made that statement half an hour ago, I think his resolution would have gone through by this time, and we could have proceeded with the other business of the House. But either his desire to withhold information or his failure to understand just what the House desired to know has led to this long discussion. I am glad to hear his explanation, because I think the plan he indicates is the only one by which the country can be compensated for the expense of three additional members of the board.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has brought before the Minister of Railways and Canals the complaints of his part of the country, so I think I may speak of some things that we need in the province of Quebec. As the minister (Mr. Graham) is aware, some days ago, I introduced a Bill providing that in the province of Quebec the French language should be given equal treatment with English in relation to public utilities. Some may think that I am a little late in introducing this Bill. I waited to give the government a chance to introduce it if they desired to do so, as they did not move, I have done so myself. I would urge the Minister of Railways—in whom I have every confidence; I think he is one of the best Ministers of Railways we have had since confederation, and a true Liberal—to give us an effective interpretation of the Railway Act in the province of Quebec. There are two articles of the Railway Act which apply to the French language. The first is that the regulations of the company shall be published in French in the stations of the railway. The railway company seem to make some effort in the direction of compliance with this provision, but I would ask the minister to see to it that the companies publish these regulations in French and not in Iroquois. In fact, the present publication seems to be a mixture of languages which has not a name so far as I am aware. Another provision is that the publication at the stations of the arrival of trains shall be in the French language. As a matter of fact it is always in English. I myself have written twice to the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway and have received very nice letters from them, but nothing has been done. At the Windsor station in Montreal, the Place Viger station, the Bonaventure station of the Grand Trunk, and most of the stations in the province of Quebec the arrival of trains is bulletined in English only. Now, my Bill does not cover that, it is already in the Railway Act. But I would like to see the rights of the people of the province of Quebec respected in that matter, as I think the spirit of the constitution requires. At the same time, I think the administration would do well if they accepted the Bill and passed it as a government measure. To-day in the province of Quebec when a man has to sign a contract or a bill of lading of the railway company, he has to sign invariably in English. Most of the time he does not know English, and yet he signs a severe contract which binds him, and his goods are not delivered or his freight is not transferred if he fails to carry out a contract which he did not understand and which he had not an opportunity to read. The Minister of Railways is to be congratulated upon the steps he has taken in having time-tables on the Intercolonial printed in French. I know that the people are very grateful. I think that the Railway Commissioners should compel all the railways to have their time tables in the province of Quebec printed in French as well as in English. I think the two languages should be put on an equal footing in this regard in order to carry out the spirit of the constitution. It would also be a great convenience to the people in the province of Quebec.

Mr. GRAHAM. In regard to what my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) has said, the government road has set a good example, as far as example counts, and it is a matter worthy of consideration whether information should not be given in French to those who do not readily understand the English language, particularly in regard to notices of trains and to bills of lading. That is a matter worthy of consideration. I am glad that my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) and myself understand each other as to the division of this Railway Board. I thought I made it plain in my first explanation, but perhaps I did not. The board can sit in three divisions if necessary, or in two. The Act merely says that they can hold more than one sitting at the same time in different places. My hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean), who always has something interesting to say when we approach the subject of railways, has given me some information which is valuable, as he usually does. Of course we cannot be held responsible for the variation of the rates or for the contents of that letter concerning the Hamilton Radial across the park. As those matters will come under the Dominion board, I am sure their powers will be large enough to look after them. In the meantime we cannot be blamed, as they are not under our jurisdiction, or they are under it, according to the point of view from which you look at it. But the necessary powers have not formally been obtained in this House. I believe consequently that our board has not had jurisdiction over local rates, but they come properly under the provincial board.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But these suburban rates and these commutation tickets are on federal railways.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am coming to that. I had reference to the electric route across the park, and it was stated in the letter that the Radial had brought some person to do something in order that they might raise their rates, with which we have nothing to do at the present time, as I think. Now, as to the commutation, I think the House will agree with me that the broad powers held by the commission as to tolls of every description must be applicable to the tolls to be charged either for a long haul or for a short haul, or for places near large cities or places remote. I think if any injustice is done the commission have absolute powers to control the tolls at any place on Dominion railways. Further, in regard to the powers of this board, I think I am not making too broad or too extravagant a statement when I say that the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada possesses wider powers than any court in the Dominion of Canada; I think there can be no question about that. I might give you the opinion of one or two prominent legal gentlemen who have told me that this Board of Railway Commissioners is the most competent court, if you will allow me to put it that way, or the best court, in the Dominion of Canada. I dare not go any further along that line or I might get into trouble with the Justice Department.

I am glad my hon. friend from South York modified his request before he sat down, and proposed that at least I should take some of the suggestions he made. I fear that if we endeavoured to place everything in the heavens above or on the earth beneath under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board we might not be able to accomplish what we started in to accomplish, that is, that railways should be controlled in the main in the public interest. We must not add too many minor details, but let us work out what we have undertaken to work out as rapidly as possible. It is true there may be delays, but in the establishment of this board the Dominion of Canada took an advanced step, and the little difficulties that may arise, or the impediments that may come in the way, will disappear as time goes on and as the people become more conversant with the practice and the machinery gets properly oiled and running. Only by practice can difficulties be found and remedies applied. In fact, the Bill that I hope to introduce in a few days is founded on information gleaned from the practice of the past two or three years of the board in which certain difficulties or certain doubts have arisen as to their jurisdiction and their powers.

Now, as to the necessity of the enlargement of this board. I admit that in my earlier remarks I made an oversight. But my only reason was that I thought the necessity for enlargement was universally accepted throughout the business portion of the Dominion of Canada. One of the things that has been urged on this government perhaps more than any other is that the Board of Railway Commissioners should be enlarged. The reason is that the work has now so accumulated that they are at least three months behind, fully three months. The work does not all appear in public hearing. Scores, and I think I may say, hundreds, of what I may call petty or small applications come to the board of which the public know nothing, but they are straightened out by correspondence and an immense amount of work is thrown upon the board in this way. It is acknowledged by business men that the board has done excellent work. It is overworked. Now, even if we were not adding to the duties of that board, I believe it would be necessary to add members to the board in order to keep up with the duties now incumbent upon it. Being about to add a considerable amount of work to the board, it is absolutely necessary, if we are going to get the good which it was designed we should get from its establishment to enlarge the board, so that the members can hold more than one sitting at the same time and keep the work more up to date. I realise the force of the suggestion that decisions long delayed may become an injustice, and they may go beyond the point where there is any necessity for a decision at all. Prompt decisions are needed just as well as just decisions. Now, we hope that this board will be able to catch up with the great amount of work, some of which is now behind, and be able to perform the new duties. But let me give this note of warning. Let us work out this problem gradually. Do not ask us to add a multiplicity of duties to this board that will make their work insurmountable, and smother, if I may say so, the real object for which the board was established. Let us keep the main objects in view and add to their duties as necessity arises in order to work out what we first undertook, namely, the control of public utilities in the interest of the people.

The necessity of having a legal gentleman arises from the fact that the board may sit in more than one division and it has been found absolutely necessary that the head of that board, the chairman conducting its affairs, should be a legal man with power to grasp the legal situation, with a firm grasp of the Railway Act and all that it means. Then, in addition to him, of course we would have good practical men. Because a man is a lawyer does not mean that he cannot be a practical man as well; we hope to get that combination.

The hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean)—to be honest, I wanted him to say what he did—urged strongly the placing of a big railway man on the board. One of the difficulties, as I pointed out to the House, that has arisen, is that almost every class in the community suggests a name out of that class, the Manufacturers' Association, the business men, the shippers, all say: Do not put a railway man on the board.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GRAHAM. The reason they give was advanced by Mr. Maclean on another branch of the argument. I will not say whether it is a good or a bad reason, because I want to have an open mind to select the best man we can from any calling. The reason given by the Manufacturers' Association, the shippers, is that the railway companies are invariably represented before that board by the best legal talent they can employ, that their interests are never going to be sacrificed for the want of full representation before that board; but if the shippers' and the manufacturers' interests are to be fully maintained before the board it must be by having a man conversant with their side of the question on the board as they will not be represented by counsel before it. That is their argument which I give for what it is worth. The hon. member (Mr. W. F. Maclean) will have to make peace with them when he goes to Toronto.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The remedy for that is for the government to appoint the best possible counsel to take the side of the people in all these cases before the commission, exactly as is provided by the New York State Act and the Interstate Commerce Act. In other words the Attorney-General of the United States is charged with the duty of enforcing the law in regard to the Interstate Commerce Act and the best counsel they can get in New York state has been appointed to take the side of the people in all cases before the commission.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does my hon. friend not see that the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr.

Haggart) would object to another good office for a big lawyer.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Not as counsel for the people.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why should not a good lawyer be appointed to the place—if you can get a good one.

Mr. GRAHAM. If we are going to appoint one, it should be a good one of course, but the question arises as to the necessity of a lawyer.

I have pointed out the main features of the Bill. I am obliged to hon. gentlemen for suggestions as to the Bill I am to introduced in a day or two, and these will have full consideration.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the Bill provide for the control of rates where the system is part railway and part water and possibly railway again ?

Mr. HAGGART. It does already, I think.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will see that that will properly be discussed in connection with the next Bill, and I would not care to take it up now.

Mr. THOMPSON. I may say for the minister's information that in the Yukon we are in a unique position in regard to railway rates and transportation facilities. We are supplied by the White Horse Pass and Yukon Railway. This company has one terminus in Alaska and the other at the headwaters of navigation in the Yukon. The service is carried on by one company incorporated under the laws of Alaska, another incorporated under the laws of British Columbia, a third incorporated under the laws of the Dominion of Canada applying particularly to the Yukon Territory, and a fourth a navigation company whose boats ply on the Yukon river between Dawson and Whitehorse. When we come to work out the problem of transportation we find that our Railway Commission is absolutely powerless to either control or interfere with the rates charged by that company. Not long since I addressed a letter to Mr. Justice Killam, chairman of the Railway Commission and in reply he practically admits they are powerless to control either a through Bill of laden or freight rates from Alaska to the Yukon ; first because they have not been able to work in harmony with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and second, because there is a further question as to whether the Interstate Commerce Commission has power to control the railways in Alaska which is not a state of the American union. It is the fact that along our border these railways cross and recross at Duluth, at the Soo, at Seattle, at Spokane, and it seems to me that in drafting this legislation the Minister of Railways might very well get in touch with the Railway Department of the United States and see if the two nations cannot work in harmony when it comes to controlling freight rates on through bills of lading. Another point is that the chief commissioner informed me that while he had some doubt as to the power of the commission to control a railway company that was incorporated under the laws of British Columbia, he had no doubt that the powers of the Railway Commission at the present time prevented them from having any control whatever over the rates charged by boats on the Yukon river. I suggest to the Minister of Railways that it may be possible in framing this legislation to include cases of that kind. Some two years ago the railway commissioners went to Dawson, they sat there and took evidence from the people of that city; they also sat at Whitehorse and in Alaska, but they have not reported yet. I verily believe their report is delayed because they have not power to deal with the question, and indeed Judge Killam told me that himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. They should have known that before they went up there and lost all that time.

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, there are the facts, and if the Minister of Railways and Canals would at this juncture get into communication with the Railway Department in the United States it might help solve this problem which I can assure you is rather an accute one in the territory I have the honour to represent.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I wish to call to the attention of the minister the situation in the maritime provinces, especially as it affects Prince Edward Island, with regard to the railway haul on the Prince Edward Island Railway, the railway haul on the Intercolonial, and the intermediate haul by water, on freight shipped from Prince Edward Island to other parts of Canada. For my part I can see no reason why the Intercolonial and the Prince Edward Island Railways should not be under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, so that the shippers along the lines of these railways may have the same opportunity to present cases of injustice and excessive rates before the board as have the shippers in other parts of Canada. There are very serious grievances with regard to the freight rates charged in Prince Edward Island. A return was brought down, on my motion, some two years ago by which it would appear that the rates from Montreal to St. John, 735 miles, on carload lots was 9 cents per 100 pounds, and from Montreal to Halifax, 832 miles, 9 cents per 100 pounds, while the rates on grain in carload lots from Tignish to St. John, 428 miles, was 26 cents per 100 pounds, from Tignish to Halifax, 309 miles, 23 cents per 100 pounds, and from Tignish to Sydney, 380 miles, 26 cents per 100 pounds.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not conversant with that locality, but am I right in understanding that there is a haul by rail on Prince Edward Island, then by water, and then by rail again on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Yes. There is a haul on the Prince Edward Island Railway which belongs to the government, then on the winter steamers which belong to the government, and then on the Intercolonial Railway which belongs to the government, in all three short hauls. I mentioned this to show that the situation is entirely under the control of the Dominion government because the three carriers in question are owned and controlled by the government and so an entirely different situation is presented from that to which the hon. member for the Yukon has alluded. It is very easy to see the disadvantage under which the shippers of Prince Edward Island labour in sending their products to the market in competition with places that are hundreds of miles further away from the point of consumption. Then, in regard to our local rates on Prince Edward Island Railway, as compared with the rates for somewhat similar distances on the Intercolonial Railway it will be found that we have to pay quite a percentage more per 100 pounds than is paid on the Intercolonial Railway. I might point out that from Tignish to Charlottetown, 117 miles, compared with goods carried from Halifax to Amherst, 138 miles, there is a discrimination of 3 cents per 100 pounds against Prince Edward Island on first-class goods, 2 cents per 100 pounds on second, third, and fourth-class goods and one cent per 100 pounds on fifth sixth, seventh, eight, ninth, and tenth-class goods. I can see no reason why the local rates on Prince Edward Island should be greater than they are on the main line of the Intercolonial. These instances go to prove that the Railway Commission should have control over these rates so that justice may be done to the Island. As I have said, the rate from Montreal to Halifax, 832 miles, is 9 cents per 100 pounds, and I have here a letter from a gentleman residing at Myrtle about forty miles east of Toronto who is trying to get grain from Prince Edward Island, and the House will be surprised to know that the rate from Prince Edward Island to Myrtle is 40 cents per 100 pounds while the distance is only about 330 miles further than from Montreal to Halifax. There is something radically wrong in this and it is certainly an unfair discrimination against Prince Edward Island in shipping its grain to the west. I might give further instances of this discrimination. The freight rate from Charlottetown to Pictou, 70 miles, is 11 cents per 100 pounds while from Pictou to Myrtle, over eleven hundred miles, it is only 29 cents per 100 pounds, so that for a distance that is seventeen times as great, the rate is only three times greater. I have several letters from residents of my province with regard to the shipment of seed grain to the west and they point out that it is impossible for them to ship grain to the west in competition with Ontario points because the freight rates against them are prohibitive. Therefore, unless the government give the shippers a through rate in this particular case the people of Prince Edward Island will be unable to do any of this grain business with the west. This whole question of freight rates between Prince Edward Island, and the maritime provinces and the west, needs to be gone into thoroughly and the only way it seems to me by which the people can get justice is that they should have an opportunity of laying their grievances before the Railway Commission. I should like to hear from the Prime Minister what the intention of the government is with regard to bringing the freight rates on government railways under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. It has been mentioned several times in the House and it is certainly a matter of great importance to the people of the maritime provinces and to the people of the Dominion as a whole. Can the Prime Minister tell me what the government intends to do about it ?

Mr. KEMP. As I understand the Minister of Railways, it is the intention of the government to make the six commissioners experts in all questions, and that there is going to be no division and classification of the work assigned to them. I would suggest that the commission would be facilitated if the work assigned to the commissioners were classified. There are questions coming before the board regarding the construction of railway crossings, and disputes between railways, and there is another class of questions respecting transportation and freight rates in which the public are very greatly interested. It seems to me that if these two classes of work are not divided and a portion of the board assigned to deal with one class and a portion of the board with the other, you will not facilitate as you otherwise would the work of the commission. It seems to me it would be far better to subdivide the work and assign a certain part of it to some members of the commission and a certain part to other members. The Minister of Railways said that representations had been made to him that it was unwise to put railway men on this commission. I have seen a reference made to these representations in the press but I would not go so far as to say that because a man is a railway man he should be debarred from being on the commission. I would point out that as the commission is at present constituted, the business men and business interests of this country are not represented.

I recognize that it is necessary to have the chief commissioner or the assistant chief commissioner a man of high legal attainments, and in the present chief commissioner we have such a man. If the men to be appointed to this board are of the standard of the present chief commissioner I do not think any one would have any cause to complain. I admit that the present commissioners have been over worked; certainly the present chief commissioner has been tremendously overworked and I am sorry that such is the case because I fear his strength will not be equal to the enormous task imposed upon him. I therefore see the necessity of something being done towards dividing up the work. We must remember however that a very great number of the questions which come before the commissioner are really elementary business questions and while I recognize that business men are not any more clever than men of legal attainments, yet, when a man's mind has been directed in a certain groove for a number of years he can sometimes grasp and settle difficulties much quicker, and he can give advice to professional men which would be of value, and thus facilitate and help to perfect the work of the commission. I hope that the government will see its way clear to appoint of the six commissioners at least two men of business experience capable of properly filling a position of this kind, if such men can be secured, as I have no doubt they can be. It seems to me that the representations which have been made to the government, if carefully looked into, will be found to have gone no further than that. I certainly would not go so far as to say that a railway man should be barred from serving on the commission. I think such a man would be a very valuable member of the commission, if his services could be secured; but I hope that the government will, at any rate, try to facilitate the work of the commission by appointing two of its members from the ranks of the business men of the country.

Mr. LEWIS. I think the minister will agree that most of the cases that come before the commission are cases between large corporations and companies on the one hand and railway companies on the other or between railway companies; but a number of cases arise between railway companies and poor men. For instance, a farmer has an underground or overhead crossing on his farm and the timber breaks down; the railway company, contrary to its charter or agreement with the people, fills that up. What is the poor man to do in these circumstances? He is not able to employ a prominent solicitor to appear for him before the Railway Commission. Then there are such cases as those of small telephone companies who desire to cross railway lines. There should be some officer at the beck and call of the Railway Commission, to whom the commission could say, when they are notified by any person that he has a grievance against a railway company and is not able to press it before the commission: Prepare this case for us to look into further. This matter was brought to my attention some time ago by one of the Railway Commission, and if the minister confers with the present Railway Commission, I think he will find that they agree that there should be some such officer. He need not be an expensive officer. The commission, standing between the people and the railway companies, would then see that justice was done in such cases.

Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to ask the minister when he proposes to appoint these commissioners. I am quite in sympathy with the move. Being connected with a large shipping industry, I know the difficulties we have to contend with, principally in making our claims against the railways. We have in our office a staff occupied almost wholly in looking after these claims. I would like to see the commission have full power to settle such claims. I quite agree with what has been said by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) about the difficulties in shipping over two lines of railway. For instance, there is an overcharge at the other end; the railway asks us to put in our claim; we put it in; sometimes it is not settled for six or eight months, and sometimes not at all. This is very unsatisfactory, and for that reason I would like to see the commission given full power to settle these claims. I do not care who are on this commission so long as they are practical men. What is keeping this parliament back to-day is the fact that there are too many lawyers in it. My idea is that we want more practical men, business men, commonsense men. I quite understand that this business could not be carried on without lawyers, as we are up against law here all the time, and an ordinary man like myself does not know where he stands. For that reason I would like to see practical men appointed on the Railway Commission. I have no objection to the salary at all; often the dearest man is the cheapest. I think we should have a railroad man on the commission, because a good smart railroad man is familiar with all the details of the matters that come before it. I hope the minister will consider this very carefully before he appoints the additional commissioners.

Mr. HAGGART. Just a few words before the resolution passes. The hon. Minister of Railways has explained why he proposes to appoint three additional commissioners—that the work of the commission is at present three or four months behind, and that he intends to put new work upon them. Before arranging for the appointment of the additional commissioners, I think he should have introduced the Bill providing for the work they have to do. At present we know nothing at all about that. The salary proposed, with the retiring allowance, is a very handsome salary for any man in the community, and fully sufficient. One of the powers of the chief commissioner ought, I think, to be abridged. I would suggest that no commissioner should have the sole power of deciding a case on a question of law. At present the commissioners other than the chief commissioner can be put out of court at once by the chief commissioner simply saying, This is a legal question which I will take upon myself to decide. It is an extraordinary power. As the minister says, the powers given to this court are greater than those given to any other railway commission in the world; and this is an extraordinary power to place in the hands of one man because he is a lawyer. It does not require any extraordinary knowledge in a man, if he is full grown and of age, to decide a legal point as a railway commissioner.

There should be no exceptional powers given any commission to decide on questions of law. When a question comes up between two railways, the points at issue are nearly always technical; but if the point to be decided is both legal and technical, we leave the decision entirely to the Chief Commissioner. He decides on the law point, subject to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court and Privy Council. Such power ought not to be vested in any one man. No man on the commission should be so much superior to the other members of the board, that to him is solely given the decision of legal points. There is not a man on the board, there is not a man of ordinary intelligence, who cannot decide the legal points just as well as the Chief Commissioner. I would therefore suggest that the powers given the commission should be given to all its members alike and that no one should have any special power vested in him over the others. I protested at the time against this discrimination. We were told that a distinguished lawyer was to be put at the head of the commission. Well, giving him such special power, virtually gives him the control of the board. In no railway commission in any country in the world is there a favoured commissioner who has the power of taking the jurisdiction out of the others and deciding a question because it happens to be a legal one. Any discrimination of that kind is an anomaly. When you appoint a man to the commission, all that you should require of him is that he should have first class intelligence, and such intelligence you will find diffused in abundance in this country, and the government can get it at any time for the handsome salary they are paying and the retiring allowance. The minister can get men of first class requirements fit to fill the position, and it is not at all necessary that he should confine his selection to men of technical knowledge. It is not at all necessary that any commissioner should have been for twenty or thirty years in control of a railway or engaged in trade. The requisite ability can be acquired without anything of the kind. When the minister introduces his Bill, we shall have an opportunity of discussing its various points, and I would suggest an alteration of this kind.

Mr. BENNETT. Will there be a clause providing that a certain class of persons shall be ineligible to become members of the board, for instance, members of parliament or Senators who have been members of either body during the past two years ?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no such clause.

Mr. BENNETT. There will be no such clause in this Bill ?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. BENNETT. We shall discuss that when it is brought up.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). The hon. minister does not appear to pay much attention to the point brought up by my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Lefurgey). It is an anomaly that we should appoint commissioners to regulate railway freights and other difficulties and exclude the Intercolonial Railway from their jurisdiction. What do we find at present ? We find the greatest anomaly in freight rates over that line. For instance 100 pounds of grain is charged 40 cents from Prince Edward Island to the west, or about 13½ cents a bushel for a distance of a little over 1,000 miles. Yet you can take a barrel of flour, which is twice the weight, from Toronto to Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, for the same sum. The freight on a barrel of flour from Toronto to my province by the car load is 40 cents or about half the freight that is charged on the same weight from Prince Edward Island west. Is there any reason why the Intercolonial Railway should not be placed under this railway commission ? I have no hesitation in saying that if this independent board had jurisdiction, those anomalies would disappear. We have letters every day protesting against them, but the trouble is that the Intercolonial Railway is altogether run, and always has been, in the interests of the party in power ; and when there is any grievance to be remedied, the first thing to be looked at is the politics of the party who complains. If his politics are not of the right kind, he has no remedy. I think that the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is a very necessary one. In increasing the number of the board, I think the government are doing right ; but when they double the number, they should bring the Intercolonial Railway under the jurisdiction of the Board and then a great deal of the injustice existing at present, especially as regards my province, would disappear. The only reason why the Intercolonial Railway is not made subject to the Railway Commission is that the government want to keep it under their own control so that they may make its rates to suit their party purposes. It is time that should be remedied, and I would ask the minister to give us an expression of policy on that point. And if he thinks he can treat the representatives of my province with contempt, I think he will find that he has something to do before the session is over. I would advise him to state to this commission, while we are making these changes, why he does not make the proposition to have the Intercolonial Railway, as well as the other railways, under the charge of the Railway Commission.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) does not mean that I am treating any representive from any place, or any suggestion from any representative, with contempt. But I cannot answer a question until it has been asked, and I must allow an hon. member to have the floor until he has finished his speech. I want to answer in the frankest manner, so far as I can answer at all. Now, the cry in this country has been partly in favour of one policy and partly in favour of the other. One policy is government ownership and control; the other policy is private ownership with government control. Most of the railways are privately owned, and our object now is to bring them under government control. But the Intercolonial is already both owned and controlled by the government. By means of this commission we secure only indirect government control over the other railways, but the Intercolonial is under government control direct. And those who control the Intercolonial are responsible to the people's representatives. A question of freight rates, for instance, is a matter for my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) to bring before the governmental management of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island railways. The freight rates of the other railways could not be brought before the government in that direct way, and we have this Railway Commission before whom these grievances can be brought.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). I do not think the argument is very sound. For the other railways the government have appointed an independent commission, men who are not influenced by political considerations. But I do not know that I can so far compliment the Minister of Railways as to say that he will act in these matters outside of political lines. We want to have the Intercolonial, as well as the other railways, under an independent body. We have been taking these grievances before the Railway Department for ten years, but they turn a deaf ear to us. But if their friends were to go to them a remedy would be found. I have a letter here, which I shall not detain the House by reading, but I think if I were to read it the minister would see that there is too much truth in what I say. The people have no confidence in the Intercolonial, for it is run on party lines and for party purposes. We want to place it under the control of some independent body, such as I believe the Board of Railway Commissioners to be.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I think this legislation is on proper lines, if proper officials are appointed on the commission. I desire to call attention to a class of cases which should come within the scope of the Railway Commission. There has been a good deal of complaint in my district by wholesale liquor merchants who import liquors in case lots from the old country. In almost every shipment certain proportions of the shipment are missing. The railways refuse to accept the responsibility and the loss falls on the merchant. But there should be some responsibility either on the Railway Company or Steamship Co. I cite this so that the minister may make a note of it, to provide for it under this proposed legislation or at some future time. Another case is one which I think properly comes before the Railway Commission, in fact I have this case before the Railway Commission. There is a line of railway running from Chatham to Detroit which was originally the Great Western Railway of Canada. It was chartered by Canada, and the people had their privileges under that charter. The Great Western Railway Company sold to the Grand Trunk, and the Grand Trunk saw fit to lease running rights to the Wabash, I believe, without the sanction of parliament or of the old Railway Committee of the Privy Council. At first, under this arrangement of running rights, the citizens of Chatham and vicinity were allowed, on purchasing a ticket, to ride either on a Wabash or a Grand Trunk train. But after about two years some petty quarrel arose between the concerns, and now we may ride only on the trains of the company whose ticket we hold. Therefore, we are deprived of the privileges we used to have under the Great Western charter. I believe the Railway Commission have the matter before them, but if the minister could do something to give us our rights it would be highly appreciated.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) has gone over a number of classes from which it might be desirable to make selections for the Board of Railway Commissioners. I would suggest that he should take into consideration the question of the appointment of at least one commissioner who would have a thorough knowledge of the position of the railway employees. I understand that the number of railway employees in Canada is something like 30,000. Of course, the efficiency of a railway finally rests upon the men who operate that railway. It does seem to me that a man in touch and sympathy with the railway men, one, of course, possessing also the other necessary qualifications, would be a very desirable addition to this commission. The army of railway men is large, there are many able men in its ranks, men of education as well as of practical every day experience. It seems to me the government might well consider the appointment of one such man, so that among the six members of the board of commissioners there might be one in touch and in sympathy with the interests and the duties of the large body of railway employees in Canada.

Mr. KEMP. I desire to say a word with reference to the matter of claims. The present Railway Act is insufficient in respect to the matter of claims made by shippers for goods that are lost. It is one of the most aggravating things that shippers have to contend with. The railway may lose part or whole of the goods, or may overcharge, and the railway says to the shipper, whenever part of the goods are delivered : Pay the charge whatever it may be, and send in your claim. There is no provision in the Act by which the railway is obliged to deal with a claim within a reasonable length of time. My experience in dealing with railways is that sometimes they seem to pursue a policy by which the shipper, or the man making the claim, will be inclined to drop it rather than follow it out. They drag the matter out sometimes one or two years, perhaps longer sometimes a claim is settled within a year. But I appreciate the fact that this question I am now dealing with, and which was referred to by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) does not come within the scope of the present Bill. But the Minister of Railways intends to introduce another Bill to amend the Railway Act, in which he might deal with this question. In looking through the Railway Act I see no provision with respect to this matter. I think it is very essential that some law should be laid down with respect to it. It is not a practical question for a shipper to take to the courts, all such claims, the matter may be a small one, too small to make it worth his while. But some law should be enacted whereby the railroads should be forced to deal promptly, within a reasonable length of time, with claims by shippers. As I say, it is one of the most aggravating questions with which shippers have to deal in their transactions with railways.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is another matter with which I think the commissioners should have power to deal, if they have not already and that is where railway companies send their carloads of freight all in a bunch. I have had experience of this kind. So many carloads of goods are to be shipped each week, but something happens by which they are kept in transit a month, and then they are all brought along together. Then you cannot unload them without some demurrage, and the railroad companies won't deliver the goods unless you pay that demurrage. Then you have no way of collecting from the railway. Again, if you put in a claim it is referred to this man in Toronto who represents all the railways, and if he says no, as he generally does, there is no way of collecting the money. I do not know whether the Railway Commissioners have power to act in a case of that kind; if they have not, I think the Bill should contain a clause empowering them to act in questions of this kind.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to put in a word on behalf of the farmers. I was glad to hear from the Minister of Railways and Canals that in making up his board of commissioners the farmers would not be overlooked. I have not heard a great deal about the farmers during this session, and I was pleased to hear that the government were not going to overlook them. I cannot agree with what has been said here this afternoon by some hon. members, that a railway expert should be appointed to that commission. I do not think we need any railway expert. What we need is every day businessmen, men with broad minds, men who are not tied to any railway corporation, men who will be free to act justly between the railway companies and the people. I was glad to hear the minister say that men would be appointed who would be acceptable not only to business men but to the farmers. I think the farmers' interests should be considered in this House, as well as those of other people. Great care should be taken in making these appointments to make them on the ground of fitness, and not from political considerations. I do not think a man should be appointed merely because he has been a good party man. Appoint men who, as I say, will keep in mind the interests of the people, and at the same time will deal justly with the railway companies.

Mr. CHRISTIE. In connection with the enlargement of this Railway Commission, I wish to mention a case that has occurred in the town of Oshawa, in the county I have the honour to represent. Oshawa is situated about thirty-three miles from Toronto. The railway companies formerly charged us 3½ cents a mile as passenger rate, and now they have reduced the rate to 3 cents a mile. This reduction means a difference of between $3,000 and $4,000 in favour of the town of Oshawa. But now I understand that the people of Oshawa have been notified by the Grand Trunk Railway that after the 1st of April next they will charge 10 cents additional per ton for bringing in coal. That will mean between $3,000 and $4,000 in increased freight to the people of Oshawa, and will wipe out all the advantage they have received from a decrease in the passenger rate. The new rate will make the freight on coal about equal to that which is paid by the city of Belleville, which is a great deal further away. This is a matter that the Minister of Railways might well bring to the attention of his commission. Now perhaps it was through me that the question was brought up of bringing freight from Prince Edward Island to the western provinces. I wished to bring up a lot of oats, and wanted to know what it would cost. I spoke to one or two members about it, and they told me that the freight was 40 cents a hundred pounds, or 13½ cents a bushel. Now that is almost half the price of the grain itself, and is too much money to pay for transportation to the west. If it is going to cost that much to take seed grain from the eastern provinces to the west, it will be a pretty expensive thing to get it through.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would that be by car lot?

Mr. CHRISTIE. Yes, an hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island tells me that it was by car lot. Certainly 13½ cents a bushel is an exorbitant price to charge for bringing grain from one province to another. Now in regard to these additional Railway Commissioners, I would like to see the minister appoint a practical farmer; if he does so, I do not think he will ever regret it. I am satisfied that no other class in the country are imposed on to the same extent as the farmers.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I wish to call the attention of the minister to the fact that while the amount stated is charged for sending grain from my province up to the point mentioned by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, you can send oats or grain from points thousands of miles west of Halifax, for 6 cents a bushel. You can load a carload of oats in Toronto and send it to Truro or Halifax at a charge of 6 cents a bushel; but when you send it west you are charged twice as much. If that is a fair proposition for the east I do not know what fair play means.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister has not replied to the question raised by myself and referred to by Mr. Kemp. Mr. Kemp said that the present Railway Act does not authorize the Railway Commissioners to deal with this question. Will the minister deal with this question of compelling a railway delivering goods to deliver them at the contract price agreed on by the railway, whether in Canada or the United States, that made the contract? Suppose the Grand Trunk takes over a car at Chicago, it should not take it with any back charges. I have a letter which I sent to the Grand Trunk saying that some railways do this intentionally so as to get possession of the money and have the use of it for two or three years. This is a serious matter and one which would be properly dealt with only by the Railway Commission. When I spoke of it the other day a railway man who was in the gallery told me that it was a grievance and it should be dealt with. The board should compel the delivery of the goods at the contract rate.

Mr. GRAHAM. The matter will be considered. It has a good many difficulties. To say that a railway shall be liable to specific performance of a contract made by another in the United States and that it shall not accept shipment until it knows all the details of the charges, may be harder to work out than it looks. Then, too, we pile a lot of work on the commission that does not properly belong to it; we will deprive ourselves of the good we want to accomplish.

Mr. KEMP. There are other features besides that in connection with this same question.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend gets close to what might be called a claim for damages, which should not come under the commission. We are prepared to go pretty far but to ask the commission to deal with claims for damages, beyond the penalties provided by the Act, would be going too far.

In answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Christie), Dr. Mills, of the Ontario Agricultural College, was apointed on the Railway Commission at the request of many farmers' associations throughout this country as the representative of the farming interest.

Mr. LANCASTER. The minister did not reply to the question when he expects to appoint the commissioners?

Mr. GRAHAM. They will be appointed in due course without undue delay.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that Dr. Mills was appointed at the request of many farmers' associations. I would not like to find fault with the judgment of the farmers on that question, but I must confess that I could never see what special qualifications Dr. Mills had to act on that board in the interests of the farmers of this country. He was a professor in a college with no knowledge of railway crossings or farm crossings or the practical shipment of farm products. If a practical man was wanted, Dr. Mills was not the man to fill the bill. If he is the nearest representative to the farming community the minister can give, I fear the farmers will still think they have not representation on that board. I am reminded that Mr. Bernier is a farmer. He may be something the same kind of a farmer as the Minister of Agriculture, a theoretical farmer, a man who never goes between the plough handles. The First Minister shakes his head. I am surprised to know that the Minister of Agriculture ever did any ploughing. I thought he was a theoretical farmer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, no, I have seen him at the plough.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, if the Prime Minister had been in my county 40 or 50 years ago he might have seen me between the plough handles, but it only occurred on one occasion and then only part way across a field when I gave it up.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not put you on the commission either.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think we are on a par. But I am under the impression that either of us is more of a practical farmer than Dr. Mills. If the farmers are to have a representative on the board let him be a practical man and not a theoretical man.

Mr. MILLER. I was considerably exercised over this matter and I thought perhaps there ought to be a farmer on the board, but since the hon. gentleman from Halton has assured us that Mr. Bernier is as good a farmer as the Minister of Agriculture, I am perfectly satisfied.

Resolution reported, read a second time, and concurred in.

Mr. GRAHAM moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 112) to amend the Railway Act as respects the constitution of the Board of Railways Commissioners.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. When will the minister bring down the other Bill amending the Railway Act ?

Mr. GRAHAM. In two or three days ; it is about completed.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood from the minister that this Bill would not be proceeded with until the other Bill was brought down.

Mr. GRAHAM. What I said was that we would not press it beyond the debatable stage.

Mr. LENNOX. It ought not to be set for second reading until the other Bill is before us, because we are voting money to enlarge the Board of Railway Commissioners and we ought to know what the government proposes which will extend the scope of their duties.

WINDING UP ACT.

Bill (No. 102) to amend the Winding Up Act—Mr. Aylesworth—read a second time, considered in committee, reported, read a third time and passed.

A six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY—PELAGIC SEALING IN THE NORTH PACIFIC OCEAN.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. WM. SLOAN (Comox-Atlin). Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the notice given a few days ago, I desire to discuss a matter of public importance, viz.: the seizure of the Canadian schooner 'Carlotta G. Cox' on May 29, 1907, and other matters concerning the Canadian pelagic sealing operations in the North Pacific ocean.

This question is one which has long been a source of irritation and conflicting interest between the United States and Canada; the United States for years endeavouring to control and assert jurisdiction over the high seas in the interest of the seal monopoly on the Pribyloff islands; Canada, on the other hand, following what she claimed for her citizens to be a legitimate and honourable calling in the pursuit of the fur-seal at sea.

The Canadian sealers, known as the Canadian pelagic sealers, have followed with varying success their hazardous occupation, severely handicapped by the persistent efforts made to drive them off the Pacific ocean. They have been interfered with and molested from the very commencement of their enterprise. Seizures, arrests, imprisonment, confiscation and other high-handed acts were of common occurrence on the part of the United States, assisted by Russia.

Great Britain strongly protested against the treatment of her Canadian subjects, claiming for pelagic sealing that it was 'the legitimate development of the original method of taking seals practised by the Indians on the coast of America.' Great Britain further claimed for her subjects 'the right to come and go upon the high seas without let or hinderance, and take therefrom at will and pleasure the produce of the sea.' Russia and the United States paid substantial sums to Great Britain for assuming to treat sealing in the open sea as 'piracy.'

Restrictive regulations have also been imposed upon our sealers, but without having the effect desired. Recently, however, Japan, not being subject to any such restrictions, has engaged in pelagic sealing. This new condition is one which I propose to discuss later on in my remarks, but before doing so I desire to give a brief review of the main incidents connected with this industry in which we are so directly interested.

The historical features in connection with this question date from the exploration and discoveries of Behring who was dispatched by Russia in the year 1728 on a voyage of discovery to the North Pacific ocean. It was not until 1786, however, that the important discovery of the Pribyloff seal islands was made by Russia. From that time on and up to the date of the purchase of Alaska by the United States, Russia enjoyed a practical monopoly of the fur-seal industry. Following the acquisition of Alaska by the United States in 1867, legislation was adopted on the 1st of July, 1870, under which the Alaska Commercial Company secured a lease for a term of twenty years from the 1st day of May, 1870, for the exclusive right to take seals on the Pribyloff islands. Prior to the transfer of this territory from Russia, the seal hunting conducted by British subjects was practically confined to the West Coast Indians, but about that time, and for some years after, the business began to attract attention and some attempt was made to hunt seals by the method now known as pelagic sealing. About the years 1878 and 1879 several vessels were engaged therein; the number was gradually increased, although the operations were confined to the North Pacific ocean, outside of Behring sea. It was not until about the year 1885 that anything like a concerted movement to Behring sea commenced, although in previous years some vessels had entered these waters with interference occurring to, but two or three United States vessels, which approached close to the islands. The attention of the lessees of the Pribyloff islands was attracted to this menace of their hitherto practical monopoly of the sealing business in this locality, and strenuous efforts were made by them to discourage and prevent the growing industry of pelagic sealing.

In the summer of 1886 the United States government for the first time sought to exercise as against foreign nations exclusive jurisdiction over Behring sea, outside the territorial limit (three miles), by the seizure of three British sealing schooners and the warning out of a fourth. Great Britain immediately remonstrated against these extra territorial claims and reserved all rights to compensation.

In 1887, while diplomatic correspondence was proceeding, six additional British sealers were seized and one was ordered not to enter Behring sea by United States authorities. All the vessels seized were condemned, and the masters and mates were fined and imprisoned. Renewed protests were filed and diplomatic correspondence resulted, having in view the settlement of the main question as to the right of the United States to territorial claims in the Behring sea.

In consequence of pending negotiations, no attempt was made during 1888 to prevent British vessels from participating in the seal fishery of Behring sea.

In the year 1889, negotiations not having resulted in a satisfactory solution of the questions at issue, the United States government issued a proclamation against sealing, and five British vessels were seized in, and three ordered out of, Behring sea.

A conference was held at Washington in the spring of 1890, resulting in a proposed convention providing for a mixed commission of experts to report on regulations on land and at sea, pending which a spring and fall close season was to be observed on land and at sea north of a line to be drawn; the pelagic sealers to be prohibited from approaching within ten miles of the islands, &c. This proposal was eventually rejected by the United States, and orders were issued for the seizure of log books and seal skins of vessels found sealing in Behring sea. Great Britain formally protested.

During the pendency of negotiations, for the purpose of avoiding difference and with a view of promoting a settlement of the questions existing between the two governments touching their respective rights in Behring sea, and for the preservation of the seal species, a modus vivendi was effected on the 15th June, 1891, by which it was agreed that Great Britain should, on the one hand, until May, 1892, prohibit seal killing in that part of Behring sea lying eastward of the line of demarcation described in the treaty of 1867 between the United States and Russia, and that the United States should, on the other hand, prohibit seal killing for the same period in the same part of Behring sea and on the shores and islands thereof, in excess of a stipulated number—7,500—for food for the natives. This prohibition was strongly protested against, and claims were filed, which resulted in the payment by Her Majesty's government of compensation to the sealers for loss that season through insufficient notice, to the amount of $100,234.

On the 29th of February, 1892, a treaty between Great Britain and the United States, providing for arbitration respecting the seal fisheries in the Behring sea, was signed, and it was deemed expedient that a similar arrangement to the modus vivendi of 1891 should obtain during the period necessary to secure the award of the arbitrators. Consequently a formal convention was concluded on the 18th April, 1892, which effected such a purpose, and under which the sealers were debarred from entering Behring sea during the sealing seasons of 1892 and 1893.

Thus forced from the eastern half of Behring sea in 1892, the sealers, instead of returning to Victoria from the Aleutian passes and abandoning their voyages, exploited the Asiatic waters, and six were seized and four were interfered with by the Russian authorities.

During 1892 the steamer 'Coquitalam' was chartered by the sealers to convey their coast catch home and to supply them for a continuance of their voyage in Asiatic waters. Before she had fulfilled her mission and after she had made a few transfers of provisions and collected about 6,000 skins, all of which took place outside the territorial limit in the North Pacific ocean, she was seized by the United States authorities for unloading cargo within four leagues of the coast. This case was defended in the United States courts, until finally a decision was given adverse to the United States, resulting in claims amounting to $107,446.14. This claim has not yet been paid.

In 1893, growing out of the Russian seizures of the year previous, Great Britain entered into an agreement with the Russian government, providing protective zones of 30 miles around the Russian seal islands and ten miles along the Russian coast, from which limits the Canadian sealers were debarred. During the year the award of the Paris arbitration was reached. In the first five questions of right which had been raised, the claim to any extra territoral jurisdiction in Behring sea by the United States was disallowed, and the second branch of the award provided concurrent regulations for the protection of the seal fishery.

The operations of the pelagic sealers during the year 1894 were conducted under new conditions imposed by the Paris award and legislation of the respective governments for its application. At the outset the prevailing opinion in Canada, especially among the sealers themselves, was that the restrictions were severe and the legislation unnecessarily penal. These views were corroborated by the United States authorities connected with the commission, who were of the opinion that pelagic sealing could no longer proceed with profit under the new condition of affairs. Although the catch that year proved to be the largest in the history of the industry, being 95,048, 57,000 skins were taken in Asiatic waters, which number alone was larger than the total take in all waters of any previous year except the one immediately preceding. This year the supplementary arrangement for the sealing up of implements during the close season, entered into by exchange of notes between Her Majesty's government and that of the United States, was put in force, but instead of protecting the sealers from unnecessary interference as intended, it proved only another excuse for seizure, and two vessels, the 'Wanderer' and the 'Favorite,' were seized for the possession each of one unsealed gun on board.

In 1895, for reasons previously explained, Great Britain was unable to agree to the renewal of the arrangement of sealing up of arms, and complaint was made of the excessive interference and boarding of vessels. This year strenuous efforts were made by the United States government to bring about a revision of the Paris regulations, the inefficiency of which it was stated was shown by the results of 1894, and the closure of Behring sea from America to Russia was asked and a resort to a quadripartite convention, including Russia and Japan.

In 1896 practically the same proposals were renewed, to which Great Britain was unable to accede. But in view of conflicting and indiscriminate contentions touching the effect of pelagic sealing, scientific inquiries on the islands and at sea were undertaken by Great Britain and Canada, as well as by the United States. This year also a convention for the assessment of the claims growing out of the seizures previous to arbitration was signed, and the work of inquiry thereinto begun.

An adjustment of Great Britain's claims to compensation followed, the award of $437,145.44 rendered by the claims commissioners in December, 1897, after full and exhaustive examination of witnesses by counsel on both sides, thus finally disposing of United States obligations attending unlawful seizures of British vessels in the open sea.

In 1897 contiued proposals for supplementary arrangements for the sealing up of firearms during the close season in Behring sea and the examination of seal skins at Victoria by United States officials were received. Her Majesty's government finally consenting to the sealing up of arms. This year the schooner 'Kate' was seized in Behring sea, two fur-seal skins being found on board bearing evidence of having been shot. She was afterwards released, as she did not have any guns on board.

The sealers continued to press for relaxation of the Paris regulations, suggesting the reduction of the protective zone from 60 to 30 miles and the permission of pelagic sealing in the Pacific until 30th of June instead of 1st of May, the protection of vessels from unnecessary boarding and searching and consequent delay, and some other amendments in the regulations to prevent unnecessary seizure, while the United States government insisted for the revision thereof looking to greater restriction.

The United States proposed that the government of Great Britain and the United States agree at once to a modus vivendi providing for the complete suspension of the killing of seals in all the waters of the Pacific ocean and Behring sea for one year from the 31st December, 1897, and for suspension of all killing of seals on the Pribyloff islands for the same period.

To this proposition Canada was unable to agree.

By the terms of the Paris award, the regulations for the government of the seal fishery were to be subjected to a new examination every five years, so as to enable both interested governments to consider whether, in the light of past experience, there was occasion for any modification thereof.

The year 1898 concluded the first five-year term of the regulations; the time, therefore, had arrived for any revision that might be considered necessary. The representations made to the Canadian government by those engaged in the sealing industry in British Columbia were to the effect that no modifications of these regulations should be agreed to in the nature of further limitations to the business, but that, on the contrary, the successful prosecution of the industry demanded that the existing restrictions should be curtailed alike as to the close season and as to the protective zone around the Pribyloff islands.

Summarized, these restrictions are: Under the regulations provided by arbitration and the arrangement entered into with Russia, as well as under admitted principles of international law, the sealers are to-day operating under the following prohibitions:

1. They are excluded at all times from the three-mile limit along the coast of the United States in the north Pacific ocean;
2. They may not at any time approach the Pribyloff islands within a zone of 60 miles;
3. They may not at any time use firearms in Behring sea;
4. They may not use rifles, but are confined to shot-guns, in the open season, in all that water area situated north of the 35th degree of north latitude, and eastward to the 180th degree of longitude from Greenwich till it strikes the water boundary described in the treaty of 1867 and following that line up to Behring straits, comprising approximately 5,000,000 square miles;
5. They are precluded from using nets or explosives in the above area;
6. Within the above area they cannot take seals in any manner whatever between the 1st day of May and the 31st day of July;
8. They may not take seals within a zone of 30 miles around the Kommandorski islands and Copper islands;
8. They may not take seals within a zone of 10 miles along any of the Russian coasts on the mainland in the north Pacific ocean, and these restrictions have been extended by legislation to give them effect and application.

The Behring sea question was also one of those that received the consideration of the Joint High Commission, which formally opened at Quebec, August 23, 1898. A proposal was submitted, in effect, that pelagic sealing be prohibited in the North Pacific ocean, and that the government of the United States pay to Great Britain a certain sum in full compensation for the relinquishment of the rights of her subjects to engage in sealing in that ocean. This proposal was not favoured by Canada, as it was felt that our present rights should not be further relinquished.

Up to the year 1902, pelagic sealing had been recognized mainly as a Canadian industry, but during this year, as a result of a bounty of $10 per ton given by the Japanese government to encourage the development of the deep-sea fisheries, including pelagic sealing, there were nineteen vessels flying the Japanese flag sealing off the Japanese coast. Since that time the Japanese operations have extended over the North Pacific ocean, without regard to the regulations imposed upon Canadian subjects, with the result that their untrammelled operations are proving disastrous to Canadian interests. Recent despatches from Japan state that there are now some thirty-five pelagic sealers under the Japanese flag, who are operating without interference or restriction.

This point was emphasized and brought very forcibly to the attention of the people of Canada by the seizure of the Canadian schooner 'Carlotta G. Cox' by the United States revenue cutter 'Rush' on May 29th, 1907, while in north latitude 59° 10″ and west longitude 141° 19″. This locality is known as the Fairweather Grounds, and the point of seizure is about 40 miles from the shore. The seizure was made for an alleged violation of the regulations of the Paris Tribunal of Arbitration, the offence claimed being sealing in the closed season, namely, May 1, to July 31.

The humiliating feature of this may be more fully understood when I state that there were in that immediate vicinity, when the seizure was made, no less than five Japanese sealing schooners pursuing their calling unmolested. The only schooner seized was the one flying the British flag. Further comment upon this incident would appear unnecessary.

Such, in brief, Mr. Speaker, is an outline of the history of pelagic sealing up to the present time.

I have referred briefly to the treaty between Great Britain and the United States for the arbitration of the seal fisheries in the Behring sea, signed at Washington 29th February, 1892, and I wish to consider the last paragraph of Article VII. of this treaty, reading as follows:

The high contracting parties furthermore agree to co-operate in securing the adhesion of the other powers to such regulations.

Great Britain in the outline of argument presented to the Tribunal of Arbitration was also emphatic on this point at this time, as on page 9, British case, I find the following:

Great Britain has throughout been favourably disposed to the adoption of general measures of control of the fur-seal fishery, should these be found necessary or desirable with a view to the protection of the fur-seals, provided that such measures be equitable and formed on just grounds of common interest and that the adhesion of other powers be secured, as a guarantee of their continued and impartial execution.

Again, on page 9 of the argument of Great Britain:

So long as the claim of the United States to impose regulations on pelagic sealing is based on the assertion of a legal right, that claim is strenuously opposed, and the right as strenuously denied.

But when the question is put on the lower and practical plane of common benefit to all the nations interested, on the recognition of the right of the pelagic sealers as well as of that of the island sealer, then the British government will cordially co-operate in giving effect to such measures as may be found necessary for the preservation of the fur-seals.

Should any regulations be the outcome of this arbitration, it is confidently expected by Her Majesty's government that they will be such as not to protect only the United States in the manner which their present contention urges, but to protect an industry in which all the nations of the world have an interest.

It were useless to make regulations which should bind only the citizens and subjects of the United States and Great Britain. As in the case of the Jan Mayen fisheries, so in the case of the Pacific fisheries, the subjects of all the nations who now participate in them, or who may be reasonably expected to do so, ought to be equally bound.

With special reference to this, I am going to read to the House some correspondence which passed between the two governments interested and the other powers also, and propose to make some comment upon the apparent indifference displayed in securing this adhesion. This correspondence is taken from a United States Senate return, dated 11th February, 1895. The first note is from Mr. Gresham, Secretary of State, to Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British Ambassador at Washington :

Department of State,
Washington, May 7, 1894.

Excellency,—The two governments having provided by legislation and regulation for the enforcement of the award of the Paris Tribunal under the treaty of February 29, 1892, the time appears to have arrived for carrying out the stipulation of article 7 of the convention. I am therefore directed by the President to invite the attention of Her Majesty's government to the matter, to the end that with all convenient speed the two governments may co-operate in securing the adhesion to the award of other powers, especially Russia and Japan. .

I have the honour to be, &c.,
W. Q. GRESHAM.

Again, on not receiving a reply, on May 22, 1894, another note was addressed to Sir Julian Pauncefote as follows :

Excellency,—Referring to my note to you of the 7th instant, regarding the joint invitation of foreign powers to adhere to the award of the Behring Sea Tribunal, I beg to inquire whether you have received instructions from your government on the subject.

In the judgment of the President prompt action is very desirable.

I am, &c.,
W. Q. GRESHAM.

These communications remained unanswered until the 30th July, when Sir Julian Pauncefote wrote to Mr. Gresham the following :

Washington, July 30, 1894.

Sir,—With reference to the identic note which it is proposed that the government of Great Britain and of the United States should address to the maritime powers inviting their adhesion to the Behring sea regulations, I have the honour to submit for your consideration the accompanying list of powers to whom it is suggested by my government that the identic note should be addressed. I should be glad to be informed whether the list meets with the approval of your government, and, if so, of the date on which you would propose that the identic note should be issued.

I have, &c.,
JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

Inclosure.

Argentine Republic, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Brazil, Chili, China, Colombia, Costa Rico, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, France, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Hawaii, Havti, Honduras, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Peru, Portugal, Russia, San Salvador, Spain, Sweden and Norway, Turkey, Uruguay, Venezuela.

This list was approved of by the United States, and August 20, 1894, was agreed upon for the dispatch of the identic note. I have here a United States draft of the identic note to the maritime powers :

Sir,—I have the honour to address you, under instructions from my government, on the subject of the regulations established on the eastern side of the north Pacific ocean, from the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude to the Behring straits, for the proper protection and preservation of the fur-seal species.

Those regulations which are at present applicable only to the subjects or citizens of Great Britain and of the United States are prescribed by the award of the tribunal of arbitration constituted under article 1 of the treaty concluded between those two powers at Washington on the 29th day of February, 1892. The preservation of the fur-seal species, however, being an object of interest and concern to the whole of the civilized world, the high contracting parties agreed, by article 7 of the above-mentioned treaty, to co-operate in securing the adhesion of other powers to such regulations as the arbitrators should deem necessary to carry out the purpose in view, having regard to the particular condition of fur-seal hunting in the waters referred to.

The governments of Great Britain and the United States of America have given effect by suitable legislation to the regulations prescribed by the award, and the time has therefore now arrived for inviting the adhesion of the other powers thereto. Accordingly, I have the honour to transmit herewith a copy of the award setting out in substance the provisions of the treaty and prescribing the regulations in question. I have also the honour to transmit a copy of the United States Act of Congress passed to give effect to those regulations as regards United States vessels and citizens.

It only remains to me, on behalf of my government and in execution of my instructions, to invite the adhesion of your government to the regulations prescribed by the award with a view to their application to the vessels and citizens of your country and to their enforcement by appropriate national legislation.

My government will be much gratified to learn that your nation is willing to support the efforts made by Great Britain and the United States in so beneficent a cause.

All the replies received have not been made a matter of public record so far as I can find, and the subject appears to have received no very great consideration from the various powers. For the information of the House I quote from a few of these replies. Belgium, for instance, stated that:

As no Belgian vessel ever visits the regions in question, my government thinks—and it has instructed me to so inform Your Excellency—that there is no reason for proposing any special measure to the legislative body of Belgium. It adds that it nevertheless renders sincere homage to the efforts that are made by the United States, together with Great Britain, in behalf of a cause which interests the entire world.

Germany's reply was to the effect that:

Upon investigation, it is shown that German shipping has never taken part in seal hunting in Behring sea and that under these circumstances the imperial government does not consider it sufficiently important to resort to imperial legislation for the protection of seals in the manner proposed. The imperial government, however, will gladly take occasion through public notices, and by executive means, to issue warnings to its people interested in shipping, in conformity with the laws enacted by Great Britain and the United States.

Italy's reply was more satisfactory, as the following will show:

His Majesty's Minister of Foreign Affairs, to whom I hastened to communicate the contents of the note of your honourable department of the 30th of August last, instructs me to thank your excellency for this communication, and at the same time to announce the adhesion of the King's government to the rules established by agreement between the federal government and that of Her Britannic Majesty for the regulation of seal fishing in Behring sea.

Portugal also was favourable, stating:

The government of His Majesty, however, desires that it be distinctly and clearly established that its adherence is restrictive simply as regards the taking of fur-seal, and in the waters comprised within the limits traced by the tribunal of arbitration of Paris.

Russia could not agree unless the restrictive measures were applied to all the waters of the Pacific north of the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude, the reply being:

That Russia having to the same degree as the United States an interest and an imperative duty to equally assure in her waters the preservation of fur sealing, the imperial government could not give its adhesion to the Paris regulations and to the legislative measures adopted in consequence thereof at Washington and at London unless the totality of those measures be applied likewise to all the waters of the Pacific situated to the north of the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude.

As a matter of fact Russia's reply could be well anticipated for when the agreement between the United States and Russia for a modus vivendi similar to the agreement of the year previous between Russia and Great Britain, was ratified at Washington on May 4, 1894, the Russian ambassador in signing this agreement on behalf of his government, April 22, 1894, sent a communication to Mr. Gresham, Secretary of State, of which the following is an extract:

In signing to-day this essentially provisional arrangement, I hereby reiterate to you in writing, the declaration that the imperial government is, for is part, prepared to negotate and sign with the United States, England and Japan, a treaty in virtue of which the principles and regulations of the Paris tribunal of arbitration shall be applicable, indifferently, to all the waters of the Pacific ocean situated north of the thirty-fifth parallel of north latitude.

Japan acknowledged the receipt of the identic note through her representative at Washington, stating that, the matter would be brought to the attention of the government and a formal reply would be given at an early date. The attitude of Japan was, however, well known from correspondence of a few months previous, which it may be well to incorporate. Reports having been circulated that certain United States and Canadian sealing schooners would be placed under the Japanese flag, in order to evade the Paris award regulations, the following telegram was sent to Mr. Gresham, Secretary of State, to Mr. Dunn, the United States representative at Tokio:

Department of State,
Washington, November 22, 1893.

It is reported that American and Canadian seal fishery vessels may be placed under the Japanese flag next season. Comity will naturally counsel Japanese government to defeat any such attempted abuse of friendly flag to evade results of Paris arbitration.

This telegram was answered by wire as follows:

Tokio, November 27, 1893.

Japanese government agrees to take measures to prevent foreign vessels using the flag of Japan to evade seal fisheries regulations, but declines to require bona fide Japanese vessels to observe regulations unless protection asked for should be given Japanese seal fisheries.

(Sgd.) DUNN.

A few days later this was followed by a communication from Mr. Dunn to Mr. Gresham, as follows:

Legation of the United States,
Tokio, Japan, December 1, 1893.

Sir,—On the 24th ultimo, the day following the receipt of your telegraphic instruction dated November 22, 1893, I sought an interview with Mr. Matsu, His Imperial Japanese Majesty's Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Owing to the illness of Mr Matsu, I was received by Mr. Tadasu Hayashi, vice-minister of foreign affairs, to whom I communicated the reading of your telegram and expressed the hope that Japan, in the spirit of friendship that has always governed the relations between the two countries, would meet the wishes of my government in respect of requiring the observance by vessels flying the Japanese flag of the regulations proposed by the Paris tribunal.

I said to Mr. Hayashi that this action on the part of Japan would not in my opinion, weaken her claim for protection for her own seal fisheries; that the regulations of the Paris tribunal could not be extended to the waters near the Japanese islands except by special arrangements between Japan and foreign powers; that, although I was not authorized to say what position my government would take in the premises, I felt confident that the United States was favourably disposed to meet Japan's wishes in regard to reasonable proposals for the protection of her seal fisheries; but that however well disposed the other great powers might be toward Japan's proposals for the extension of the principle of protection to her seal fisheries, it would necessarily take time to complete the negotiations and determine upon a reasonable zone within which that principle should apply; that in the meantime the regulations of the Paris tribunal of arbitration had been announced to the world and it was the intention of the United States and Great Britain to put them into operation next season; that Japan was invited, as a matter of comity and good neighbourhood, to adhere to those regulations in order that her flag might not be used to evade them.

I also pointed out to Mr. Hayashi that Japan had not yet, submitted to the United States and Great Britain definite proposals for the protection of her seal fisheries; that no zone had been defined within which the taking of seal should be prohibited; that the Paris tribunal having completed its labours, any arrangement that might hereafter be made for the protection of Japan's seal fisheries must be separate and distinct from the finding of that body; and that such being the case, it appeared to me to be hardly in accord with Japan's well-deserved reputation for fairness that she should make her adhesion to the regulations formulated by an international tribunal of arbitration, for the protection of an American interest, conditional upon the favourable reception by several foreign powers of her proposals not yet sufficiently matured to admit of definite consideration.

At the close of our interview, Mr. Hayashi said he could not say what action his government would take in the matter until he had consulted with Mr. Hatsu.

On the 26th ultimo Mr. Hayashi called at this legation and informed me that he was authorized by the minister for foreign affairs to say that the Japanese government would do everything in its power to prevent the use of the Japanese flag by foreign sailing vessels to evade the regulations of the Paris tribunal, but that it could not, pending present negotiations, issue an ordnance requiring bona fide Japanese vessels to observe them unless the proposals submitted to the United States and Great Britain for the protection of Japanese interests in the same direction were favourably entertained.

On the 27th ultimo I had the honour to convey to you the substance of this response from the Japanese government in a telegram.

As a matter of fact, bona fide Japanese vessels have not hitherto been engaged in hunting for seal beyond the immediate waters of the northern islands of Japan, and the fear of disastrous consequences will doubtless, prevent this class of vessels extending their operations hereafter to waters where the regulations of the Paris tribunal apply.

I have, &c.,
(Sgd.) DUNN.

In the meantime the Japanese government, in view of the representations made by the United States regarding the report that foreign vessels proposed to use the Japanese flag to evade the seal fisheries regulations, under date of December 1, 1893, sent out the following caution concerning the granting of temporary certificates of registration to their various consuls at the ports on the Pacific.

Department of Foreign Affairs,
Tokio, Japan, December 1, 1893.

Having recently heard that there are certain foreigners abroad who, with the object of carrying on illicit fishing, may attempt to make use of the names of Japanese in the sale and purchase of vessels and the transfer of registration of the same to Japan through the recognition at the imperial consulates, and thereupon to proceed directly to the various localities in pursuit of such purpose, you are instructed in the issuance of temporary certificates of registration of vessels to act in the matter with strict caution, so that no certificates shall be granted to parties carrying on such dishonourable business.

(Sgd.) HAYASHI TADASU.
Vice-Minister.

A notification was also sent to the governors of territories and prefectures on the sea-board of Japan, as follows :

Department of Communication,
Tokio, 1893.

I am instructed to inform you that an agreement has been concluded between Great Britain and the United States concerning fishing in Behring sea, and that report has reached here that since Japan is not a party thereto, and not bound thereby, some attempts were likely to be made to have vessels belonging to nationals of both countries registered under the names of Japanese and fly the Japanese flag for the purpose of following the pursuit of fishing in Behring sea.

As the control of fishing by the different countries has become strict, no doubt these designing schemes are contrived to evade the law. In cases, therefore, of the purchase of foreign vessels, if the transfer of registration is requested, you are, upon strict examination, to act in the matter so that no such malfeasance as the above may arise.

(Sgd.) SAITO HIDE-AKI,
Chief Marine Bureau.

The treaty between Great Britain and Japan, ratified July 17, 1894, marked, as has been recently stated in this House by the hon. the Postmaster General, 'a new era in the history of Japan.' The negotiations leading up to this treaty occupied months, during the very time that the Behring Sea question was prominent, and although I have read the published correspondence which took place between Great Britain and Japan at this time in reference to this treaty I fail to find where Great Britain had even suggested, much less urged, upon Japan the desirability of her adherence to the Paris award. On the contrary, although the United States had written Great Britain as to the urgency with special reference to Japan and Russia of despatching the identic note on May 7, and again on May 22, it was not until after the treaty with Japan, signed on July 17, that any attention was paid by Great Britain to the request of the United States. Japan at that time would, no doubt, have readily consented to respect the regulations adopted for the protection of the fur seals if requested to do so by Great Britain, rather than jeopardize the treaty which was to give her a new status in the world's nations.

It is difficult to understand Great Britain's failure to protect the Canadian pelagic sealers and the regulations for the protection of the fur seal with so favourable an opportunity presented, especially when I remind you that she was emphatic on this point both in the case, and in the argument presented to the tribunal.

The United States also concluded an important treaty of trade and commerce with Japan on November 22, 1894. But the United States did not exhibit the aggressive spirit which we generally associate and credit her with possessing. They, too, appeared to have been as indifferent as Great Britain in securing Japan's adhesion to the identic note.

The Hon. Elihu Root, the present Secretary of State, has stated on many occasions his friendly interest in Canada, but by exacting from Canada a strict adherence to the regulations for the protection of the fur seal, in view of the inability of the United States to make the same operative as against Japan, it cannot in any sense be construed as sympathetic to our interests.

Especially is this so when it is apparent that while the United States is patrolling over 5,000,000 square miles of the North Pacific Ocean as against the Canadian sealer, yet as I will show they are evidently powerless to protect even the Pribyloff Islands and their territorial waters there from the Japanese sealers, who have taken thousands of seals within the three mile limit around their islands and actually landed and killed seals on these same islands, proving conclusively to that extent that the concurrent regulations are now useless and their enforcement against Canada by the United States is inconsistent to say the least.

It is doubtful, at this time, if the people of the United States would be prepared to concur fully in a policy which discriminated against the Canadian sealers and in favour of the Japanese sealers.

In support of what I have just stated let me quote briefly from a report of Mr. Edwin W. Sims, dated 31st August, 1906, of the Department of Commerce and Labour, on the Alaska Fur Seal Fisheries, to the United States government, page 4:

The vessels of the Japanese fleet not only took thousands of seals within the territorial waters of the United States surrounding the Pribyloff islands during the past summer, but during a period of two days—July 16 and 17—the crews of four of the schooners committed a series of unlawful acts which terrorized the native inhabitants and injuriously disturbed the seal life on the rookeries of St. Paul Island. Raiding parties from three of these schooners actually landed on the island. One of the parties which landed killed 185 seals and got away with 120 skins before it was discovered.

As a result of the raids, five of the poachers were killed while attempting to escape arrest, and twelve, including two wounded, were captured. Three small boats and some arms and paraphernalia for killing seals on land were also captured. The force protecting the islands suffered no casualties, although it was subject to a rifle fire from the decks of a schooner anchored close inshore while making arrests on the second day.

On page 12:

The Japanese pelagic sealing fleet which operated in Behring sea during the summer consisted of at least 16 vessels, each of which carried a crew of about 30 men and from 5 to 7 small boats for sealing. It is evident from the number of vessels sighted from the islands that the entire fleet operated exclusively in the waters surrounding the islands, and on many occasions killed seals within the three-mile limit. The seals which breed on these islands have been undisturbed in the waters surrounding them for many years, and they undoubtedly fell an easy prey to this unexpected onslaught. In view of this fact, and in view of the further fact that large numbers of breeding females are continually passing from the islands to the feeding grounds about 150 miles southwest, and from there back to the islands, the seal herd has without doubt suffered a heavier blow as the result of the operations of this fleet during the past season than has been administered to it for many years past.

Wholly aside from the fact that this fleet of vessels engaged in pelagic sealing at the very doors of a reservation which has been set aside by this government for breeding purposes, the crews of some of the vessels engaged in a series of high-handed and outrageous depredations within the land and water territory of the United States which included repeated violations of expressed provisions of its laws. They used shot-guns to kill the seals in the water, and used cannon, probably for signalling. The reports of shot-gun firing and the boom of cannon, which were continually heard on the shore nearly all of two days, were so close as to disturb injuriously the rookeries. The crews killed seals in the water close to the shore, easily within the three-mile limit, and landed on St. Paul island. They killed seals on land, 95 per cent of which were females. At the time of these depredations the entire armament of the 38 men over 21 years of age on St. Paul island consisted of 12 rifles. On the other hand each schooner probably carried a crew of more than 30 men. If the four schooners which were seen hovering around the islands on these days, and which were undoubtedly acting in concert, had united their crews in a raid they could have mustered a force of upwards of 120 men.

Again on page 18 :

Upon making an examination of the rookeries at the point where the small boats were first seen, the government agents discovered that the raiders had practically wiped out of existence one section of a breeding rookery. More than 183 seals had been killed. Of this number, 120 had been skinned and the skins loaded into the boats, which had unwittingly been permitted to return to the schooner. It was apparent that the raiders had been frightened away in the midst of their raid, because 63 dead and wounded seals, some partially skinned and others untouched, were found. That part of the rookery which was raided was what is known as a breeding rookery and was occupied by several hundred female seals, new-born seal pups, and a few breeding bulls. Bachelor, or young male seals do not frequent these breeding grounds.

All of the seals killed with the exception of two, were females. When it is remembered that the killing of female seals is universally condemned, was prohibited by the Russians as early as 1835, and has never been permitted by this government, the fact that over 95 per cent of the seals killed on the island by the marauders were females stands out as especially malevolent.

No doubt the incident which I have just given to the House was responsible for the recent utterance in another place that pelagic sealers were a 'horde of pirates.' If it was intended to include Canadian pelagic sealers and brand them also as pirates, then Mr. Speaker, I must protest on behalf of the Canadian sealers who are law-abiding, upright and loyal citizens of this Dominion carrying on a legitimate occupation in pursuit of the fur-seal at sea, in conformity with the regulations imposed by the Paris award. The statement could have been made only in ignorance of the industry carried on by British subjects.

Japan being an ally of Great Britain, it might even be reasonable to suppose that she would respect the regulations entered into and which were binding upon the subjects of Great Britain. But Japan, on the contrary is ignoring these regulations entirely, while British subjects are labouring under the disabilities imposed upon them by the regulations which I have previously summarized.

When the attention of Japan was called to the report that efforts would be made by the Canadian Pelagic Sealers to evade the regulations by the use of the Japanese flag, prompt measures were taken to prevent this, and it was characterized as 'dishonourable business' and, 'designing schemes contrived to evade the law.' I do not know if the report was well founded or otherwise. It is now immaterial. But the attitude of Japan was and is that it was dishonourable for the Canadian sealers to use the Japanese flag to evade the regulations; but it is not dishonourable for the Japanese flag to ignore the regulations. It was dishonourable for the Canadian sealer to evade the regulations ; but it is not dishonourable for the Japanese sealer to ignore the regulations. It was dishonourable for a subject to evade the disabilities imposed upon him by his nation ; but it is not dishonourable for the subject of another nation to take advantage of these disabilities. It is, however, apparently perfectly legitimate for the subjects of Japan to not only set aside the regulations but to even invade also the territory and territorial waters of the United States in their pursuit of the fur-seal, as I have just pointed out.

The advent of the Japanese sealers operating without restriction has materially decreased the catches of our sealers as the following figures would indicate :

1905 Average skins per vessel.....725
1906 Average skins per vessel.....596
1907 Average skins per vessel.....359

For instance, this can be more readily understood when it is remembered that there is a 60-mile zone around Pribyloff Islands which Canadian sealers may not enter, and outside of this zone they are confined to the use of spears. The Japanese sealers operating within the zone area and using fire-arms make the seal more wary and impossible to approach within spearing distance. The final result is not difficult to foresee. This government is in no wise responsible for the bringing into existence of these discriminating restrictions, but I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this government will not be saddled with the responsibility of their further continuance, and that an earnest effort will be made for an arrangement of a more equitable and satisfactory character.

What I contend for, is this, Mr. Speaker, that so long as unrestricted Pelagic Sealing is to be recognized, as in the case of Japan, then Canada must have equal rights.

Mr. SPROULE Would it not have been an opportune time to make representations before the treaty was finally accepted by Canada ?

Mr. SLOAN. I think I made that clear, that it was done on the part of Great Britain. Some proposals have been submitted by the United States looking to a settlement of the question. One of the first was in the form of a Bill, introduced in the United States House of Representatives in 1892, which provided that if the President should fail to secure a suggested modus vivendi with Great Britain, then authority be granted for the destruction of all seal life on the islands, except 10,000 females and 1,000 males. A Bill of a similar nature was introduced by Mr. Dingley in 1894. To my mind this proposal was unworthy even of criticism.

In 1895-6 the United States made strong efforts to get the other powers, viz.: Great Britain, Japan and Russia with herself into a conference, to be known as the quadripartite convention. From the fact that Russia and Japan being owners of seal islands, and having already expressed a desire for the extension of the Paris regulations to the whole of the North Pacific ocean north of the 35° of north latitude, and their interests at this time being identical with those of the United States, it can readily be seen that Great Britain acted wisely in not committing herself and her Canadian subjects to what would have most assuredly resulted in a further abridgement of our privileges on the Pacific ocean.

In 1898-9, originating at the Joint High Commission, was a proposal to prohibit pelagic sealing; the United States government agreeing to compensate in full the pelagic sealers. If, as is understood, this proposal meant the abandonment of our birthright for all time to kill seals at sea, then, Mr. Speaker, it is one which this government could not well entertain.

In the speech from the Throne at the opening of this session of parliament it was announced that an agreement had been arrived at to submit, in conjunction with Newfoundland, to the Hague Tribunal for interpretation Article I. of the treaty of 1818.

I have no intention of making further allusion to this proposal at this time, other than to say that any abridgement of Article I. of the treaty of 1818 may have serious results to our fisheries on the Pacific coast, as it is by virtue of this treaty that our fishery rights are secured and maintained.

W. F. MACLEAN. Does the treaty refer to the seal fisheries?

Mr. SLOAN. What treaty?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The treaty of 1818.

Mr. SLOAN. I have not so contended.

The submission, however, of the fur-seal fisheries, which I have been discussing to the Hague tribunal would I think, be received with favour. And I would suggest the total prohibition of killing seals, both on land and sea for a term of years, or until such time as the various herds had recovered from their present depleted condition. This would involve the compensation of the pelagic sealers by their respective governments.

When the herds had again recuperated the killing could then be supervised and the skins divided pro rata among the four nations interested until such time as they had been recouped for the amounts expended on compensation. The other maritime powers, in the meantime, agreeing to the above proposal. Afterwards, if desirous of sharing in the industry, they could not be denied.

This proposal will preserve to Canada equal rights to the seas with the other nations of the world and relieve us of our present disabilities.

Unless commercial and monetary considerations are elimated and some such arrangement entered into, there will in a few years be nothing left for which to negotiate. It is fruitless to rely upon concurrent regulations as between individual nations, or even groups of nations, for a settlement of this question. The only permanent solution in my judgment is the adoption of a universal law of nations and the Hague conference is the tribunal to give it a definite expression.

With further reference to this, Mr. Whitlaw Reid, United States ambassador to Great Britain, on the eve of his departure to London, in publicly speaking on matters relating to the two countries is reported to have said:

> We have little list of other matters unadjusted between our two countries. They relate chiefly to Canada. Peoples who have large interests along three thousand miles of frontier, as well as around the globe, must constantly have outstanding questions; but we rely upon the fairness of our Canadian friends, headed by the accomplished statesman, whose services they enjoy as premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to get most of them equitably adjusted between ourselves, and what we cannot settle the Hague conference surely can.

Because Mr. Speaker, we refuse to recognize the property rights to the fur-seal in the open sea, which is claimed by the United States, our attitude has been referred to by them as 'unneighbourly, in that it is destroying a valuable industry of our government.'

We have in Canada a parallel case in the important salmon fisheries of the Fraser river which have been for many years recognized as a Canadian industry.

Yearly, we have the runs of salmon coming in from the ocean through the Straits of Fuca and ascending the Fraser to the spawning grounds. During recent years the United States fishermen have in their territorial waters trapped these salmon in extravagant quantities with the result that it has almost destroyed our industry. And, although these salmon spawn in Canadian territory and are returning to Canadian rivers when caught, we do not characterize the action of the Americans as unneighbourly; but on the contrary we are adopting more stringent regulations upon our fishermen. We are yearly spending increasingly large sums even in artificial propagation and taking every means possible to preserve the industry to the benefit, not only of Canada, but of the United States.

Before resuming my seat I shall give briefly some figures showing the commercial importance of the fur-seal industry under discussion. The figures submitted are also taken from the report on the Alaskan fur-seal Fisheries, made 31st, August, 1906, by Edwin W. Sims, from the most authentic data obtainable :

The total number killed on the Pribyloff Islands from the years 1868 to 1906, inclusive, was 2,464,248.

The revenue paid to the government of the United States by lessees was $9,311,-054.77.

Price obtained for raw skins, (London sales) was $36,935,639.

The figures relating to pelagic sealing for the same years and from the same source are as follows :

Total number pelagic catch in the North Pacific ocean 877,331.

Total price obtained for the raw skins (London sales) was $10,307,359.

These figures do not include fur-seals killed by Russia on the Kommandorsky islands, Copper islands and Robben reef, or by Japan on the Kurile islands.

Having referred to the depleted condition of the seal herd frequenting Pribyloff islands during the breeding season, a few further remarks might also be of interest.

When the United States took possession of these Islands in 1868 the approximate size of the seal herd was 2,000,000. It will be seen from these figures that the herd had not been depleted by Russia ; Russia's average killing for the previous ten years being 35,039, while during the first year of the United States' possession, no less than 242,000 seals were killed.

The exclusive lease given to the Alaska Commercial Company, for twenty years allowed this company to kill 100,000 seals per annum. On the expiration of their lease in 1890 it was estimated that the herd had decreased to 900,000.

In 1890 an exclusive lease was given to the North American Commercial Company, with restrictive regulations—as to the number of seals to be killed. This lease expires in 1910.

The last estimate of the herd was made in 1906 and it is given as under 200,000. At the present ratio of decrease the herd will be practically extinct in five years.

I have shown that Canadian pelagic sealers are victims of discrimination, fatal to their industry.

I have shown the value to the world of the fur-seal fisheries of the North Pacific ocean.

I have pointed out the urgency of action being taken to save this valuable animal from total extinction.

I have suggested the Hague Tribunal as competent and unbiased to deal with this question.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the destruction of the fur-seal species would be unwarranted ; furthermore it would be an unnatural, immoral and unpatriotic policy.

The protection and conservation of the fur-seals of the North Pacific ocean is an obligation due posterity by the nations of to-day who are directly responsible and directly interested.

This question is not one that can be settled on lines of selfish consideration. It can only be settled by compromise and generous broad patriotic statemanship.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I did not quite follow my hon. friend's reference to the treaty of 1818.

Mr. SLOAN. In reply to the right hon. gentleman, I stated that as the treaty of 1818 applies also to the Pacific coast, I claim that any abridgement of that treaty would affect equally the Atlantic and Pacific fisheries.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON (Yukon Territory). The facts which have been placed before the House by the hon. member (Mr. Sloan) show the position in which Canada finds herself to-day on the seal question, the Japanese can fish for seals while the Canadians cannot, and if I understood his remarks correctly if Great Britain had pressed for the protection of this very important industry it would now be preserved practically intact for Canadians. That being so, I think the time is auspicious for us to look over our position as a colony of this great empire of Great Britain. We have just come through a diplomatic incident with Japan and there are other questions of a similar nature looming up with China and India. It does not require the vision of a prophet to see that China will very soon resent the head-tax and the Indians will ask why British subjects cannot enter a British colony.

Speaking from a Canadian standpoint, the next decade will be one of the most important in our history.

At the present moment it is well for us to consider the position of Canada as being a colony of the British empire and a neighbour of the great Republic of the United States. In discussing this question I shall trace the chain of events which have led up to Canada being a colony of the greatest empire and a neighbour of the greatest republic. Our geographical position is such that we become of prime importance as between Great Britain and her ally Japan. What is the history of these great colonies which now cement and adorn the British empire. They were established by Great Britain under what is known as her colonial system, and France established colonies under the name of the Pacte Coloniale. The colonies were close corporations for the mother country. The colonial system in England was administered under three heads (1) to produce raw material and send it only to the motherland; (2) to consume manufactures only of the motherland; (3) to provide room for the surplus population of the motherland. In return the motherland undertook to protect the colony from foreign invasion and the colony undertook to protect herself so far as local defence was concerned. Spain was the first of these great colonization nations and her career in the new world is well known to all; the great republics in South America to-day are a remnant of her power and her colonial empire only ceased at the close of the recent war with the United States. Holland was also a great colonizing power and as the power of Spain lowered the Dutch became more powerful. England did not become a great colonizer until Spain began to wane under Dutch antagonism. England's greatness was based on the mercantile system which had its origin in the middle ages, but was systematized in Cromwell's time. The basis of that system was a long series of navigation laws which prevented goods being carried in other than British ships, and these laws existed from Cromwell's time until 1849. They were changed constantly but only to make them more prefect, the object being to cut down the carrying trade of Spain and Holland and build up the mercantile marine of England. The coasting legislation of Canada and the United States are remnants of these laws. All the colonies of England on the Atlantic seaboard were under the colonial system and those that remained loyal after the United States revolution were under it until 1845 (and under the navigation laws until 1849). France also planted her colonies under the Pacte Coloniale and New France and New England marched under different flags for fur trade of a continent until the battle of Quebec in 1759. That battle excluded France from the American continent with the exception of Louisiana. Then came the great revolution, the Napoleonic wars, the improverishment of France and the final sale of Louisiana to the United States in 1803 for a mess of pottage, and the great French colonial empire vanished to a few islands in the Atlantic and few trading posts in India. As some one said:

> For attempting the empire of Europe she lost the empire of the world.

It is interesting to note that France is to-day again a great colonial empire; that she has 56,000,000 of colonial subjects and governs an area twenty times the area of France. All the colonizing schemes of Spain, Holland, England, and France were trade schemes and all were on the same basis, and because England placed restrictions on trade she lost the thirteen colonies and half the continent of North America. Her maxim from Cromwell to Victoria was:

ships, colonies and commerce, and of recent years her maxim is free trade. Up to 1846 when the colonial system was replaced by free trade, the trade advantage was with Britain because we had to send and receive our goods in British ships. In 1836 Great Britain's trade with Upper and Lower Canada doubled that to Russia with her 60,000,000, and exceeded by $2,500,000, Great Britain's trade with France, Spain, Russia, Sweden and Denmark, which combined had a population of 65,000,000 people. I might mention, to show the importance at that time of the colonial trade of Great Britain, that in 1836 the Hon. John Beverley Robinson wrote that there were more British goods consumed in Toronto and its near vicinity than were consumed in the whole of Prussia with a population of 14,000,000. About this time the legislature of Upper Canada felt the restrictions placed upon trade and they passed a resolution asking that the duty be removed from wheat, and in 1836 the same legislature passed a resolution asking for a relaxation of the colonial system and for reciprocity with the United States. We did have a slight preference in the British market, but because we had to carry our trade in British shops and the freights being higher the preference was really destroyed. The Canadian market was so valuable to the British manufacturer at that time that Great Britain threw every obstacle possible in the way of the Canadian manufacturers. In Nova Scotia, in 1768, the Governor received orders to prohibit coal mining in Cape Breton, to prevent manufacturing, and to discourage settlement near the coal mines, as will be found in Campbell's history of Nova Scotia, page 159. In 1846 Britain adopted free trade. Our policy was immediately reversed and as you know there was an annexation movement in Montreal and in New Brunswick. We had spent $35,000,000 on our canals to carry our trade east and west and when the British government reversed their policy we found ourselves in a moment without any railways to carry our trade north and south and with our canals of no use to us. The wheat we were shipping to Great Britain and buying in the United States became a drug on the market and the milling industry of Montreal was paralyzed. In 1846 the Cunard line was subsidized and the idea set forth was that it was for the purpose of developing Her Majesty's possessions in North America. The Cunard ships were to call at Halifax on their way to New York and they did so for three years. The Allan line was established a few years later and it was refused a subsidy. Quite recently the British government has bonused the 'Mauretania' and the 'Lusitania,' and the British government are to-day making an expenditure of about $750,000 a year for that purpose. About this time the people who were governing Great Britain, Disraeli for instance, referred to the colonies as being mill stones around the neck of the empire, and the Queen herself referred to Canada as being a source of weakness to the empire. Our fiscal freedom dates from 1859 when our first tariff Act was passed. Great Britain at that time threatened disallowance but Sir A. T. Galt told the British government that if they did not allow the Act to pass they would have to be responsible for the whole government of Canada. About this time, as you will remember, Lord Durham in his report compares Canada and the United States to the disparagement of Canada, and he frankly admits the failure of the British policy.

That was the time when we first began our fiscal independence, in 1859, when the Tariff Act was passed, and it is rather interesting to know that about forty years later we gave to Great Britain a preference of 33⅓ per cent in our markets, not for Upper Canada only, but for the whole of Canada. This ends our commercial account with Great Britain. While under her colonial system we were exploited for her benefit, our trade was in her hands and our merchandise was carried only in her ships ; our manufactures were prohibited in favour of her own and our coal mines were condemned to idleness. We had chronic discontent, eternal government disorders, rebellions in two provinces and nearly rebellion in three more.

A great deal is said about the protection of Canada by the military arm of the British empire. Let us note, in passing, the military account of Canada with Great Britain. Has Canada been loyal to the empire? We shall see. Canada was taken over in 1763, and since that time we have helped Britain in many of her wars with our men and money, and we have had some internal troubles of our own ; but never since that time has a British soldier fired a gun in a Canadian quarrel. The revolutionary war occurred in 1776 because of what Lord Beresford called the savage stupidity of the British government, and Canada helped England against the United States. Although only seventeen years after Quebec, the French stood loyal. The Bishop of Quebec issued a mandement urging the people to stand loyal to the Crown, and to their credit they did so, notwithstanding the blandishments of Franklin, who came over to Canada to get them to join the United States. While in Washington a few days ago I saw a copy of a letter which General Washington sent to the people of Canada at that time asking them to join the United States against Great Britain.

The next war was that of 1812-1814. This was no affair of ours. Napoleon's Berlin decrees prohibited commerce between Great Britain and Europe, and as a reply Britain passed orders in council prohibiting commerce between Europe and any place else. She also declared her right of search of any vessels, and searched those to the United States. The United States objected and war ensued. It was no quarrel of ours, but we took the side of Britain as against the United States. We fought for three years, thousands of our men were engaged and many were killed, and our progress was retarded for many years. We protected Britain, not Britain us ; and our legacy from that war is a glorious one of Lundy's Lane, Chrysler's Farm, Detroit, Queenston Heights and Chateauguay.

The next incident was the Trent affair. Fortunately, we did not go to war on that occasion, because England did not ; but we were ready again to assist in protecting the empire. One of the results of that affair was a pamphlet written in 1867 by two British officers, Bolton and Webber, advocating the giving away of all of Canada west of Montreal, and showing how indefencible it was.

Next we had the Fenian Raids of 1866 and 1870. These were England's fight again, no quarrel with Canada. But Canada was the nearest piece of British territory accessible and the vulnerable part of the empire. We were attacked and we defended ourselves. The only reason we were attacked was because we were a colony of the British Crown, and a little later on I will try to show how we fared when we pressed our claims against the United States for the Fenian Raids.

The next was the Boer war, which was not our war ; in it we protected Britain instead of Britain protecting us. We sent to her aid 8,400 men at a cost of $3,100,000 ; but according to a statement submitted by Mr. Chamberlain to the Colonial Conference of 1902 (per British blue-book No. 1299, page 43) our proportionate share to that of Great Britain would have been 51,000 men and about $159,000,000. In the same blue-book, at page 45, you will find a note addressed by Mr. Chamberlain to the Defence Committee asking that committee to give him some basis upon which to calculate the forces the colonies would send to help the empire in the event of a European war. The reply is obvious. Of course, Canada said : When the event arises we shall decide ; but we shall not anticipate the event or pledge our forces in advance. If England were involved in a European war it would be a very delicate question for us to decide whether we would send troops to help her or not. We have had one or two rebellions which, of course, we have settled ourselves. That closes the military account of Canada with the empire.

There remains, Mr. Speaker, the diplomatic account, and the story from Oswald to Alverstone is one of continuous and ignominious surrender of Canadian rights. After the Alaskan boundary award, the 'Literary Digest' published a cartoon representing a huge lion of dejected appearance, his ears and tail touching the ground, hauling northwards a rail fence marked 'boundary line.' This tells our diplomatic story in a sentence; it tells what the diplomacy of Great Britain has done for us. In 1882 Mr. Blake said that the history of the diplomacy of Great Britain with regard to Canada was a history of error, blunder, wrong and concession.

The first treaty was the treaty of Paris at the close of the United States War of Independence in 1783, when the British lion hauled the rail fence north from the junction of the Ohio and the Mississippi, including the whole of Lake Michigan and one-half the other lakes, and gave to the United States a territory which to-day comprises the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, and has a population of 17,500,000 people. If Britian had kept this territory for us, we would have had the foreshore, so to speak, of the great middle west, and, having that, would have been the natural successors to the hinterland reaching to the Pacific. After the War of Independence the United Empire Loyalists could have moved into this territory and made it a second Ontario. Great Britain in this treaty abandoned the Indians who had been her allies, and Canada had eventually to remove them to Brantford, in Ontario. Not only that, but the United Empire Loyalists were never adequately compensated for their losses during the war or for their subsequent removal. If that territory had been preserved for us, what a difference it would have made in the link that connects our east and west. We would not have had to carry our commerce along the bleak, inhospitable north shore of Lake Superior with no settlement between Kenora and North Bay—no people, no commerce—nothing but rocks and the dead haul for our railways. If we had that territory, we would have continuous settlement from the east to the west, and every pound of freight from the east to the west or from the west to the east would have been carried at a much lower rate because of the local population.

Another legacy we got from that treaty was the fisheries dispute, which we are still fighting over, with our modus vivendi and reference to the Hague Tribunal. The fishery concessions of the treaty of 1783 were abrogated by the war of 1812. During the negotiations for peace the United States tried to get a re-acknowledgment of the fishery rights. England refused to grant it without compensation. There was no agreement. In 1818 new negotiations for a commercial treaty were launched, and the United States got a renewal of those fishery rights. This gives them the right to fish within the three-mile limit of some shores in some places; and now the United States claim that we have no right to make regulations to govern this industry, and, according to press reports, the question is going to the Hague Tribunal. Lord Shelburne, who was at that time in power in Great Britain, believed that by giving them those rights over our fisheries he was preserving the friendship of the United States. Franklin's remark, 'You know that we shall bring the greatest part of the fish to Great Britain to pay for your manufactures,' was too much for him, and we have suffered from that day to this for his credulity. Colonel Coffin wrote a pamphlet on this question. In it he says:

> Canada, like a rabbit vivisected in the interest of science, has over and over again been placed on the table of diplomacy and vivisectetd in the interests of the empire.

The next treaty is the Ashburton Treaty of 1842 to settle the boundary between New Brunswick and Maine. The lion hauled the rail fence north once again, and a perusal of the correspondence shows that Ashburton did not have the interests of Canada at heart or have any idea of the value of the country he gave away. When his attention, after the treaty, was called to Franklin's red line on what is known as the Jared Sparks map, he said he was glad his attention had not been drawn to an overwhelming bit of evidence in his favour so that he did not have to consider it at the negotiations. If this piece of Maine had not been given away, the Canadian Pacific Railway could have run through an all Canadian route, and the Grand Trunk Railway would have been two hundred miles shorter to say nothing of our own road the Intercolonial Railway.

Let me now give you the opinion of one whom nobody would consider an anti-imperialist, on this question. Sir Sanford Fleming, in his history of the Intercolonial Railway, on page 234, says:

> The boundary question, no pleasant page in our records, might have been briefly passed over: The consideration of it adds little to national pride or national satisfaction. But when we find that railway connection with the nearest British Atlantic port is now attained by traversing twice the distance which, under a just settlement of that question, would have been necessary, the subject prominently presents itself; and the events which led to this condition of affairs claim investigation that could not be avoided.
> At this date we look back with bewilderment at the extraordinary series of negotiations which ended in the establishment of the Maine boundary—a result which converted undoubted British territory into foreign soil, which alienated the allegiance of thousands of British subjects without their consent, and which made a direct connection on our own soil between central Canada and the Atlantic an impossibility.... No Canadian can reflect, without pain and humiliation, on the sacrifice of British interests in the settlement that was made.

Sir Sanford Fleming can hardly be charged with not being an imperialist. When the Ashburton Treaty was completed, a large number of Canadians had their allegiance changed in a single night to the United States, without a word of say in the matter.

In 1846, when the Oregon treaty was negotiated, the lion again pulled another section of the rail fence northward. We should have had the whole of the country west of the rockies and north of the Columbia river and could have had it in 1818, as any one who has read Twiss on this question can see. The United States practically offered that in 1818, but Great Britain did not accept and from that time on the United States, in the word of Twiss 'increased their claims and reduced their concessions while Great Britain 'decreased her claims and advanced her concessions,' until in 1846 they surrendered the whole contention and gave the United States the magnificent state of Washington and the most of Oregon including the whole of Puget Sound, a territory which to-day has 1,500,000 souls.

The next treaty is that of 1871. There were general negotiations with Sir John A. Macdonald as Canada's representative. The United States put forward the Alabama claims, and after a good deal of talk England paid fifteen millions. At this time Sir John insisted on payment of claims for the Fenian raids, but was overruled by his colleagues, who said these claims were distasteful to the United States and that insistence on them would prevent ratification of a treaty by the United States because of the Irish vote. England offered to pay these claims herself. Sir John, of course refused, but he compromised with England by getting her to endorse Canadian bonds. I just mentioned this to show that we got no protection from England against the United States, and that England acknowledged herself unable to obtain any for us. At this time Sir John wanted to use our fisheries as means of getting trade reciprocity with the United States, but his policy was overruled by his English colleagues who sold our fisheries for a term of years to the Untied States for a cash consideration.

In the life of Sir John Macdonald by Mr. Joseph Pope. volume 2, page 105, will be found some correspondence which passed between Sir John and his government. Sir John wrote as follows :

I must say that I am greatly disappointed at the course taken by the British commissioners. They seem to have only one thing on their minds—that is, to go home to England with a treaty in their pockets, settling everything, no matter at what cost to Canada. I was at first a good deal encouraged because both Northcote and Bernard stood by me against any permanent cession of the fisheries, but the four have since gone together against me.

Again, on page 108, I find he wrote:

We had rather a warm discussion on the subject, in which, as usual, I stood alone.

And on page 117 :

That was intolerable that these New England fishermen should say they were resolved to fish in our waters right or wrong, and if not allowed would force on a war between the two nations; and we ought not to sacrifice our property by reason of such threats. That, as there was an anti-colonial party in England, so was there an annexation party in Canada; and if we were told that England was afraid or unwilling to protect us in the enjoyment of our undoubted rights, not from fear of the American government or the American people, but from fear of the Gloucester fishermen, that party would gain great strength in Canada and perhaps imperil the connection with the mother country. That in case such connection was severed, the consequence, in my opinion, would be annexation to the United States.

Again on page 124:

The absurd attempts of the United States commissioners to depreciate the value of our fisheries would be ridiculous if they were not so annoying. They found our English friends so squeezeable in nature that their audacity has grown beyond all bounds.

These extracts give the opinion of the then First Minister of Canada. The order in council which his government passed, shortly after his return from Washington, contains his opinions on the subject and shows how completely the rights of Canada were disregarded even when we had our own representative, for the first time in our history, treating, in concert with the British with the United States representatives. The dealings of Canada with the United States through Great Britain remind one very much of the story of the prodigal son. The son that stayed at home and did everything he should, got nothing. but for the wayward prodigal son they killed the fatted calf, and we might say with the elder brother : Though I have stayed at home for years, you never killed a fatted calf for me or even gave me a kid that I might make merry with my friends.

We had another treaty—the Russian treaty of 1825. In this the Russians followed their traditional policy and captured all the sea coast down to the Portland canal, the net result of which is that nearly a hundred years later I find myself in parliament representing a Canadian constituency, but unable to reach Ottawa without crossing that strip that Great Britain gave to Russia. There is no doubt in my mind that a little attention to the wording of the treaty at that time would have given us a seaport on the Lynn canal instead of the northern part of British Columbia and the Yukon being closed out from direct access to the sea. And this treaty of 1825 laid the foundation for that treaty of 1903 and the Alverstone award, and again our interests were sacrificed and the Lion drew our rail fence a little farther northeast and stretched it so far that it was near the breaking point. One more instance of that kind, and the fracture could not be repaired. Great Britain accepted the tribunal of six—an impossible court, three on each side—and it was left to the Chief Justice of Great Britain to throw us down. It is fresh in the memory of all that the tribunal was to consist of three impartial jurists of repute on either side. And you remember whom the United States sent. One was Mr. Root, who had said that the United States case was so clear that the United States would not send it to court. The second was Mr. Lodge, who said that the President should be praised for not making concessions. And the third was Mr. Turner, who was from the state of Washington, the state most deeply interested. Canada objected to this tribunal and the men the United States appointed, and asked reconsideration of the whole subject. But Great Britain paid absolutely no attention to the protest, and proceeded to exchange ratifications, and replied to Canada's protest by saying that arbitrators appropriate to the altered conditions should now be named. Canada refused to adopt the suggestion and the original idea of appointing three judges was carried out. These were Chief Justice Alverstone, Chief Justice Armour and Sir Louis Jette. Judge Armour dying, Mr. Aylesworth, who had been offered a judgeship and declined, was appointed in his place.

Mr. LAKE. May I ask the hon. gentleman: Who nominated these three arbitrators and why did Canada, 'of course,' refuse to follow the advice of Great Britain?

Mr. THOMPSON. I said that Great Britain refused to follow the advice of Canada. Canada objected to the court, and asked that the whole subject be reconsidered. But Great Britain paid no attention, exchanged ratification and went on. Then, Canada appointed the three judges as she had originally intended. I may point out that in every one of these cases where we have gone against the United States, we have lost. It may have been our own fault, but I do not quite see it.

Mr. LENNOX. It was in this last case.

Mr. THOMPSON. The United States are still playing the same old game. All they have to do is to get Great Britain to appoint the arbitrators and the case goes against Canada. There were three points involved in this case.

1. Did the boundary cross the inlets or go around the heads?

2. Did the boundary go north or south of four islands at the mouth of the Portland canal?

3. What distance was the boundary from the coast?

Now, regarding the islands, there was no argument, written or spoken, that the boundary could be anywhere but north of all four islands or south of all four islands. Compromise was not thought of. Yet this is what Chief Justice Alverstone did—he divided the islands, giving Canada two and the United States two, and the two he gave to the United States stand guard over our territory to the south command the Portland canal, and the approach to our new city, Prince Rupert. He did this without consulting his colleagues. In the interview which was given on October 1, 1903, by the Canadian commissioners, Mr. Aylesworth and Sir Louis Jette, and which will be found in the London 'Times,' these gentlemen make the absolute statement that Chief Justice Alverstone had sided with them and that he changed his judgment without consulting them. Here again Great Britain had an opportunity to protect us and give us a port on the Lynn canal. But she again sided with the United States, and we have for ever lost our outlet to the sea at that point.

We hear a great deal about the protection afforded to Canada by the British army and navy. Well, we have done our own protecting. Had it not been for our loyalty to the empire, we should have long ago become part of the United States as Great Britain wanted us to do. We helped Great Britain instead of her helping us. And if we had to-day the territory which she gave away, we could afford to build a navy as good as her own. This may seem a strong statement. But when I tell you that these five states have a population of seventeen and a half millions, and that the section of the Pacific coast which she gave away has a million and half, you will see what it means—five of the most populous states in the Union and perhaps five of the wealthiest. Every time we have had a quarrel with the United States, Great Britain has decided against us. There cannot be a doubt in the mind of any man that if we had negotiated the Oswald-Franklin treaty, we should not have lost the five states of Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. Or, if we had negotiated the Ashburton treaty, we should not now be hauling our goods around the dog tooth of Maine. Or, if we had been negotiating the Oregon treaty, we should not have been shut out of Puget Sound, or in the Alverstone award, we would have come away with a free port on the Lynn canal. Our fisheries claims were mixed up with the Alabama claims, and I have shown the results. Great Britain's policy has necessarily been a world policy, while that of Canada, of course, has been a Canadian policy, and must be a Canadian policy for a long time to come. That is where we lose—Great Britain takes the world view while we take the Canadian view. What is the position in which we find ourselves to-day? We are a colony of Great Britain and Great Britain is an ally of Japan. The United States, a few weeks ago, was on the verge of war with Japan. What would be our position if that war should take place? There cannot be any doubt in the mind of any Canadian where we should find ourselves. We could not fight against the United States to allow the Japanese to come into Canada. People who think realize that things are approaching a crisis. This nation of Japan is just awakening. She is armed with the most modern weapons of warfare; she has an army organized on the plan of the German army; and navy, armed, munitioned and planned on the lines of the British navy. She is not to be ignored, and our treatment of her shows it. We say we will tax every Chinaman who enters Canada $500. Do we say that to the Japanese? Of course, we do not. Why? Our premier told us practically why—we cannot afford to. Japan has an army and a navy; she is a live factor in the forces of the east. The United States policy and the Canadian policy with regard to the Japanese are identical. Neither country can afford to allow these orientals to enter their shores. I do not object to the merchant or the student, but the Japanese labourers shall not and must not come to Canada. Nor can they come to the United States. Suppose that the United States and Japan were to go to war, we are a colony of Great Britain and Great Britain is the ally of Japan. The treaty says that these two great powers join to keep Corea inviolate for Japan, and to keep England's sphere of influence in China inviolate. And, in the future we can see the possibility of England looking to her Indian frontier, and, if necessity arises, she would expect Japan to help her to protect it against Russia. Of course, we would not necessarily be drawn into war if the territory of the United States and that of Japan were kept intact. But it is also very probable that, in case of such a war, Japan would attack Alaska in order to secure a base on this American continent.

The United States government are expending some $80,000,000 to-day in making a great naval base at Cavite, in the Philippines. These are actual facts. If Japan attacked that base, Mr. Speaker, the United States and Canada would be at war, because Canada is a colony of Great Britain and Great Britain is an ally of Japan. Now in that event, is there a man in Canada who would side with Great Britain as against the United states? There may be one man, there may be a very few men, but the great majority of Canadians would side with the United States, not necessarily to join the United States, not necessarily to become annexed to the United States, but to form an alliance with the United States to protect our Pacific coast. These are facts. You may say that Great Britain does not mean anything by her alliance with Japan, and that if Japan and the United States were to go to war she would immediately withdraw from her alliance with Japan. I do not know, but I think the treaty would preclude her from doing that, if she were to live up to it. Now how is Great Britain protecting us to-day? We have not a British soldier on Canadian soil, and not a British warship in Canadian waters. She has withdrawn her fleet from our shores and her garrisons from our land. Has the British navy ever defended us? Mr. John S. Ewart discussed this question in a very ably written pamphlet entitled 'A perplexed Imperialist.' On page 33 he says:

> Our growth has been rapid in proportion to the extent to which we have ousted Downing street and been permitted to manage our own affairs. The navy has had no share in the making of us. And if the suggestion intended is that the British navy took Canada from France, the professor is very much mistaken.

He is replying to Prof. Leacock:

> Our forefathers who used to live in the American colonies had much to do with that. The British army, too, had some share in it, but should we still pay tribute to the British army?
> In what sense does the British navy defend us? Twice only in the history of British North America has the British navy taken part for us or against us, and on both occasions it was against us—siding once illegally with the French against the Newfoundlanders, and siding again with the Americans against the British Columbia sealers.
> 'Defend us!' When and where? Not in time of peace. And not in any war that we were in the slightest degree responsible for.
> We have never had a war, although we have fought several (including two in Canada) which the United Kingdom got itself into. We have had indeed various quarrels with the United States, but the British navy never helped us in one of them—British diplomacy always settled them for us, and usually by the easy process of concession of our rights.

Again, in a letter to the Toronto 'Globe,' discussing the Japanese invasion, he says:

> In the summer of 1886, when Canadian vessels were being seized by United States cruisers, for no cause in the world but taking seals in the open ocean among the waves that Britannia rules, 'military friends' and others were not wanting to point out what a very comfortable possession the British navy was—what would Canada do without it? The answer, apart from familiarity with Canadian history, was difficult; but to those who knew the past, the situation was perfectly simple—it was but another case to be settled, not by British warships at all but once more, by British diplomacy.
> And so the seizures went on, and the British navy bobbed comfortably at anchor at Esquimalt. Our schooners were swept from the sea and sent to Sitka, and the captains fined and imprisoned, while Lord Salisbury protested, and the rear-admiral sent him such news as came to his ears.
> In the following year (1887) the rear-admiral telegraphed that the seizures had recommenced. Lord Salisbury expressed surprise, and told his ambassador at Washington to 'make a representation to the United States government'; while Canadians did as best they could without the British navy.
> By 1888 diplomacy had gone so far towards surrender that the United States cruisers were instructed not to seize but to threaten merely, and that they did, while the British navy bobbed at Esquimalt.

Diplomacies having halted a little, the seizures began again in 1889, the British navy still continuing to enjoy itself at Esquimalt. Canada however, was becoming a little restive, and her Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir C. H. Tupper) told Lord Salisbury that he failed 'to appreciate not merely any reason for the long delay in obtaining satisfaction for the aggressive and hostile action exercised against British subjects and British property by the United States, but also for the wanton continuance of this treatment.' Lord Salisbury was immovable, and told Canada that he 'proposes to wait Sir Julian's report before deciding as to what further steps should be taken in the matter,' beyond 'discussing the question with Mr. Blaine.'

Diplomacies proceeded, and Canadians, becoming at length thoroughly exasperated, openly threatened to defend themselves as well as they could, in that way hoping to put some end to an intolerable situation. Lord Salisbury thereupon formally warned the United States that he would 'leave to the United States government the responsibility of the consequences of further interference,' and the United States in return entered a protest against the course of the British government. Diplomacies were hurried, and, surrender being well in sight, the United States cruisers were once more told to frighten us (if possible) but not to seize. Out again, in 1890, went the sealers and the United States cruisers; while the British navy continued to bob at Esquimalt.

In 1891 diplomacies produced a British Act of parliament enabling Lord Salisbury to prohibit Canadian sealers from operating in certain parts of the ocean, and away went the British warships to help the United States cruisers to seize our schooners. The British navy had at last been called into active service—probably it was not as active as it might have been, for the job was a mean one, and the Nymph reported that 'the fogs greatly aided the sealing schooners in escaping observation.'

The rest of the diplomacies are well known. Lord Salisbury agrees that the question of British rights in the open ocean (a matter too clear for argument) should be referred to arbitration, and he agreed, too, mark this, what the arbitrators held that the United States had not right to interfere with Canadians on the high seas, then the arbitrators should regulate the manner in which Canadians should exercise their rights. (I was going to say, 'Was there ever such a surrender?' But I should have had to add, 'Yes, several of them').

The arbitration proceeded. Of course it was held that Canadians had perfect freedom to do as they wished on the open ocean; but, of course, the British arbitrator agreed in imposing limitations upon the way in which Canadians should behave themselves—limitations against which the Canadian arbitrator fruitlessly protested.

Now, observe the result of all this diplomatizing. To-day Canada cannot go sealing at certain seasons of the year, or in certain places, or with certain apparatus; but Japanese, with a fleet half the size of the United States, and quite negligible as compared with the British navy, can do as they please, and do it.

As the hon. gentleman from Comox-Atlin (Mr. Sloan) has told us to-night, that is the way we have been defended by the British navy. Mr. Speaker, let us be honest about this matter and acknowledge the corn. The British navy has not protected us; we have been protected by what is known as the Canning doctrine in England and the Monroe doctrine in the United States. The doctrine is one of the great national doctrines of the United States, and has never been dissented from by Great Britain who originated it. Secretary Root attended the Pan American Conference at Rio de Janeiro, in 1905, as the representative of the United States. In an address he gave at that conference he said:

> We (the United States) wish no victories except those of peace, no territory except our own and no sovereignty except sovereignty over ourselves, which we deem independence. . . He congratulated the conference on the near approach of the time 'when the recognized possessors of every foot of soil on the American continents' could be represented with acknowledged rights as equal sovereign states at the great world congress at the Hague, and this he added: 'will be the formal and final acceptance of the declaration that no part of the American continent is to be deemed subject to colonization.'

This Monroe doctrine or the Canning doctrine, originated by George Canning, was directed as much against Russia at that time as it was against Spain in the South American continent whose colonies were rebelling against her and making towards independence and Russia because she was pushing her claims down the Pacific sea coast. To-day we have no British warships nearer than the China station in the far east or the channel station in the near east. But the United States fleet is creeping up the Pacific, passing Chili and Valparaiso and there is very little doubt in my mind that the Japanese question is settled as it is to-day because of that fact. It is the greatest armament I suppose that has put to sea since the Spanish Armada. It has traversed the Atlantic coast, passed through the Straits of Magellan and is now going up the Pacific. That fact I think has had a very salutory effect upon our friends the Japanese.

We say we make our own treaties! We do not make our own treaties, nor can we. You will find that the French treaties of 1907 and 1893, are made between the Monarch of Great Britain and the President of the French Republic. The historian will not refer to any treaty made by Canada. We can never act in anything but a subservient capacity so long as we are in our present position. Would we make such a treaty with Japan as Great Britain did? I do not think so. Europe is still an armed camp and yet Mr. Chamberlain asked us what we would do in case Great Britain went to war with a European power. Mr. Ewart in his book speaks of four different kinds of treaties, war treaties, commercial treaties, extradition treaties, and settlement of disputes treaties. There is no doubt that we cannot make a war treaty. We may send representatives to negotiate a commercial treaty but other people sign it. Of course we sign it too but it is not our signature that complete the treaty making, it is the signatures of the representatives of Great Britain. Our extradition and settlement of disputes treaties are made for us by Great Britain. We cannot enforce a treaty, and how can we make a treaty if we cannot enforce it.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the objection to Great Britain signing if the treaty suits us ?

Mr. THOMPSON. There is no objection if the hon. gentleman is satisfied. I think there are many people in Canada who are not quite satisfied that it suits us. If we are content to go on in this position for ever, it is all right, but there are some of us who are not content.

To-day we find ourselves in possession of the northern half of this North American continent, and from here to the Straits of Magellan there are only four other countries, on the North and South American continents, holding allegiance to any European power. These are British Guiana, Dutch Guiana, French Guiana, and British Honduras. I am not referring to the West Indies, the islands in the Gulf or to Newfoundland. The population of thsee combined countries is less than half a million souls. We see the republics of North and South America getting on very well without navies or armies because they are protected by the Munroe doctrine of the United States. Has the United States taken any of them? What about Cuba and the Philippines. Secretary Taft recently wrote a report for the Senate. This report is referred to in Collier's 'Weekly' as follows :

President Roosevelt has definitely set up Philippine independence, or at least the liberty of the Filipinos to determine whether they shall be independent or not, as the goal of our efforts in the islands. In transmitting to Congress an elaborate report by Secretary Taft upon the state of our Asiatic colony, he observes that when the islanders have become fit for self-government it will be their duty to decide 'whether this self-government shall be accompanied by complete independence.' But he thinks that they have yet a long way to travel before they come to that stage, and that 'it will probably be a generation, it may even be longer, before this point is reached.' Still he considers the end desirable, and hopes that it will be reached as soon as possible 'for the sake of the Filipinos and for our own sake.'

We know the history of America, north and south ; it is from colony to republic, to independence of European power. We must remember that Great Britain of to-day is not the Great Britain of twenty-five years ago, is not the Great Britain, is not the England of the time of Disraeli and Gladstone, it is the England of the suffragette the radical, the labourite, the socialist, with her House of Lords question, and we know from our own bitter experience and that of Newfoundland that we cannot hope for very much from Great Britain in the way of protection as against the United States. She values the friendship of the United States to such an extent that it seems to me she is prepared to sacrifice our interests every time to those of our great neighbour. Of course, when you consider that these two nations are great commercial nations, that one has 40,000,000 people and the other 80,000,000 people, that their interchange of commerce is enormous, that they belong to the same race and speak the same language, and between them practically control the world, while we are only a colony of some six millions struggling along, perhaps it is not strange; but it seems to me it is a mania with England to protect the United States as against Canada. Mr. Ewart in his book sums up the question. He says :

Summarizing thus far, we have ascertained (1) that Canada holds her power as the gift of a parliament which may augment, diminish or abolish it, at will; (2) that she has no power at all over a great variety of subjects; (3) that she has no part in the declaration of war or peace; (4) that, practically, she can make such commercial arrangements with foreign nations as she pleases; (5) that extradition treaties are made for her, and (6) that her situation with reference to settlement-of-disputes treaties be unsatisfactory. But our survey of Canada's powers is yet incomplete, for we have still to notice the control which our Federation Act gives to Downing street over those subjects of legislation which are within our legislative jurisdiction. Even as to them we are far from sovereign.

I consider that our present position is absolutely untenable and that it is impossible for any length of time. It is a position of subserviency and a very irksome position to many Canadians. To use Parkman's words :

If the colonies are permanently content with their present political status they are unworthy of the source from which they spring.

I say it is absolutely impossible for a section of the Anglo-Saxon race to go on as we are in this Dominion. We are a martial race and the martial spirit of the race is waning here because we are depening on the British navy and depending on the British army and not depending on ourselves. I say that the time has come when we should have a navy of our own; not a great navy like the United States, nor Germany, nor Great Britain, nor even Italy, but the nucleus of a navy which in time will protect our shores against intrusion. What is the remedy? The remedy is that we should be lifted from this position of subserviency and placed in a position of absolute equality, as we have a right to be, with any nation on the face of the earth. And so long as we remain in our present dependence upon the British empire we shall never have that quality. If we can work out a scheme of independence within the empire all right, but it must be independence in some form. The position we now occupy is an ignoble one; it is unworthy of the people of this country. The independence I would like is the independence that would give our laws their final sanction here, and under which our own law courts would be the final tribunal of appeal. If you could work out a scheme like the Greeks worked out in the Archean League it might do; if you could work out a scheme such as Norway and Sweden worked out under which we would be joint powers that might do or the present system of Austria-Hungary. But at the present time what I object to is that a Canadian should be in a subservient position to an Englishman, or an Irishman, or a Scotchman, or a Welshman. It is a position nature did not intend we should hold. It is not for me to work out a scheme for this empire; it is for the men who are in charge of the various branches of the legislature in Canada and in Great Britain. But I see that the present condition is an absolutely impossible one. Austria-Hungary has a working alliance of two states of equal power with one sovereign. It might be possible to give effect to that system here; I do not know. Hermann Merrivale, quoted by Mr. Ewart in his pamphlet, says:

> The mere political link of sovereignty may remain by amicable consent long after the colony has required sufficient strength to stand alone. Existing relations may be observed by very slight sacrifices on terms of mutual good will, but this can only be done by the gradual relaxation of the ties of dependence; the Union must become more and more less of a protective character and more of a federated character.

If a scheme could be worked out whereby we could be the equal of the Britisher at home and not be considered a colonial any more, whereby we could go to the capital of the empire and be considered the equals of the citizens of the United States, I am willing, but to continue the present position of subserviency goes against my grain as it does against the grain of many other Canadians.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The speech which has just been delivered by my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) has opened up very wide vistas. He has presented what he calls the inferiority, but which I would rather call the anomaly of the position we at present occupy in the British empire. That there are many anomalies I am prepared to agree, but my hon. friend has refrained from suggesting any remedy for the conditions which he now deplores. If he and I were for a moment to review British history together we would find in the course of many centuries anomalies of all kind in the British constitution, and we would also find that these anomalies were allowed to remain unremedied until such time as they had become an actual grievance. I would therefore suggest to my hon. friend, and in this I think I will be endorsed by every member of the House, that although there are many things in our present relations with the empire which are inconsistent and which are anomalous, yet on the whole our position is very satisfactory, and we have no grievance whatever in respect to our relations with the mother country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I agree with my hon. friend that in many things it would be possible to make amendment without going the length of any radical measures. For instance, in the treaty-making power I am not prepared to agree with my hon. friend that our position is one of subserviency. It is true that our position is not one of paramount power, and so long as we remain as we are at present under the British Crown the treaty-making power must remain with the British Crown. That is to say, that since we are not an independent or a sovereign power, negotiations and treaty making between Canada and other nations must be carried on through the instrumentality of the British Crown, and it is the British Crown in the last resort which must be responsible to the foreign nation with which we deal. But we must reflect that under the present conditions, in all treaties which effect us we are either consulted or we are not involved in any treaty unless our assent is given previously to it, and in connection with the commercial treaties we are allowed to negotiate absolutely with a foreign power and prescribe the terms under which we wish to deal with her. When we consider this I do not know that there is any serious grievance. Indeed, for my part I would go further and say that there is no grievance whatever; certainly there is no subserviency. The position may not be an ideal one, but again, let it be remembered that there are many things in the British constitution which though they may not be logical are essentially practical and which have saved the British people from the revolutions and from the turmoil which have desolated other lands. However, we have had a very interesting discussion on the subject brought before the House by my hon. friend, and we can well take his remarks to heart and reflect upon them, especially that part which he has devoted to the new conditions which have arisen on the Pacific ocean. What he has said with respect to that is food for thought; very serious thought. The events which may arise on the Pacific ocean cannot escape the attention of any man who is a patriot and deems it his duty to give consideration to matters which concern his country. Luckily I do not take the very serious view which my hon. friend takes of the impending danger which may threaten our relations on the Pacific ocean. I believe on the contrary that the diplomacy of Great Britain in this matter has been far-seeing and that it will exempt us from the many troubles which my hon. friend anticipates. I believe moreover that it is probable that in this matter of the relations between the Oriental races and the Caucasian races in America we will gradually in the future, as we have when occasion required it in the past, evolve a system which will be satisfactory to all and which will maintain our dignity and the dignity of our new neighbour, the Japanese empire.

My hon. friend from Comox-Atlin (Mr. Sloan) earlier in the evening called our attention to the subject which is of great and immediate importance—of very immediate importance I might say. He has spoken of the position of the British pelagic sealers on the Pacific ocean. Our position in this respect is very unsatisfactory at this moment as has been stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Sloan). In 1886 the American authorities took the ground that they had the ownership of the seal; that they belonged to them exclusivey; that nobody but them had a right to take the seals whether on land or on sea, and then proceeded to seize the boats of several Canadians who were engaged in the very legitimate occupation of taking seals on the high seas.

The pretension which was set up by the Americans was untenable from the first. The matter was referred to a board of arbitration which sat at Paris, and the position which we took, that the Americans had no right of ownership in Behring sea, was upheld to the full. At the same time the tribunal laid down regulations for the catching of seals. The Americans represented that if pelagic sealing were allowed to be carried on unchecked and unrestricted, the result must be the destruction of the seal herds in a very few years. The Americans have this advantage over us with regard to the killing of seals. They are the owners of certain islands which are called the rookeries of these animals, and, exercising the right of killing seals on these islands, they can select the animals and kill only the young males, whereas in pelagic sealing the killing must be indiscriminate. It is impossible for the sealer who kills at sea to see whether the animal he kills is a male or a female, so that he often kills females, and gravid females at that. Therefore, the contention of the Americans at Paris was that unless pelagic sealing were restricted, the indiscriminate destruction would result fatally to the herds. With the view of preventing the indiscriminate destruction of seals, the Paris tribunal made certain rules which were intended to preserve the herds. The sealers were not to be allowed to approach the rookeries of the Pribyloff islands nearer than sixty miles; they were not to be allowed to kill seals on the high seas in the months of May, June and July; they were not to be allowed to use firearms. By means of these restrictions it was thought that the herds would be preserved. But since then something has taken place which was not at all contemplated. At that time it was not supposed that anybody but British sealers would engage in pelagic sealing, especially those coming from British Columbia, to whom, up to that time, the industry was confined. But since that time the Japanese have gone into the business, and now have some twenty-five vessels engaged in that occupation; and they can, with impunity, seal all the year round without observing any of the restrictions imposed on British sealers. While the British sealer is not allowed to go nearer than sixty miles of the Pribyloff islands, the Japanese sealer can go within three miles of the same islands. While the British sealer cannot pursue the industry in the months of May, June and July, the Japanese sealer may do so without any restriction all the year round. While the British sealer is not allowed to use firearms, the Japanese sealer is not restricted in his weapons, but can use any kind that he pleases. In these respects the Japanese sealer has an immense advantage over the British sealer. I may say that the Americans do not allow pelagic sealing by their own people. It is evident that if the Japanese are allowed to carry on the industry unrestricted, as at present, the day is not far distant when the whole herd will disappear. In fact, it has been said by the hon. member for Comox and Atlin (Mr. Sloan) that at the present rate of killing the whole seal industry will be destroyed in five years. There is only too much ground for apprehension of this contingency. Under the present circumstances, what is to be done? It has been suggested that Canada should go in with the United States to have some restriction put upon pelagic sealing and even upon the killing of seals on land. This is a matter on which I am not prepared at this moment to offer any observation; it is a matter that may come up for negotiation between Canada, Great Britain, the United States and perhaps some other nations. I may say to my hon. friend from Comox that the matter is engaging the attention of the present government, but more than this I do not think I would be justified in saying at the present moment.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, having listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion which has taken place this evening, I would like to point out to my hon. friend from Comox and Atlin (Mr. Wm. Sloan) something that seems to follow from the very clear exposition he has made to us. The hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Thompson), after having discussed the particular question treated by my hon. friend from British Columbia, went into a lengthy exposition, which, I must say, interested me greatly. He has drawn the attention of the House for the first time since I have had a seat in it to very important questions ; and many of the grievances which he complains of are, in my estimation, matters of history. It is difficult, however, to suggest a remedy for the very serious problems which he has placed before us. Nor has he suggested any special means of reconciling what he very properly calls the Canadian interest with the world interest of the empire. Anybody who has followed public events in this country during the last ten years must have been struck with the distinction between that interest which is essentially ours and the interests of the empire at large ; and however attached one may be to the empire, the possibility of clashing between these two interests must have suggested itself very often to the minds of many of us during that time. While much has been said in the way of statements of fact by my hon. friend from the Yukon, he has, I think, failed to attach that amount of blame which necessarily belongs to us in the failure of many of these negotiations. I believe that we have very often suffered in the negotiation of treaties either through too much confidence in the Imperial government or simply through neglect of our own interests. We have not brought to bear on the negotiations that pressure which it was our duty to bring to bear in order to secure fair treatment.

If you take up Hodgins' very able exposition of all that has taken place in the way of treaties between Great Britain and the United States since the first negotiations in Paris after the revolution, you cannot help concluding that since confederation at least, we have been wanting a great deal in our own efforts to attend to our own interests. Leaving for the moment aside, what my hon. friend from the Yukon (Mr. Thompson) has referred to, because he has opened up the consideration of some very vast questions which I shall not take up the time of the House in dealing with to-day and which require serious reflection and consideration. —I must say that although my hon. friend from Comox and Atlin (Mr. Sloan) has exposed the difficulty in which our sealers are situated and has very properly given no political colour to his argument, it must have occurred to any one who listened to him that on that very question we ourselves have been most negligent. He almost said so himself when he blamed very severely the British government for having concluded a treaty with Japan in 1894 without having endeavoured to secure the adherence of Japan to the regulations laid down, under the award of 1896, in the arbitration between the United States and Great Britain. Was Great Britain at fault in not, at that moment, having endeavoured to carry out her own guaranty that she, as well as the United States, would do her best to secure the adhesion to these regulations of all the great powers interested in the Pacific ? I subscribe willingly to the allegation that England should not have concluded that treaty without making at least some diplomatic effort to secure that adherence which means so much to Canada, and which have saved our sealers from the distress in which they now find themselves. But, as my hon. friend from Yukon (Mr. Thompson) has said Great Britain at that moment had far larger interests to serve than were bound up in the business of our sealers or the interests of British Columbia. Her whole eastern empire was involved in the arrangement with Japan, and it is natural to believe that, having secured what was most vital, she may have overlooked a matter which, viewed from the imperial or world standpoint, was of comparatively of little consequence. But what shall we say about our own adherence, twelve years later, to the treaty of 1904 ? To my mind, without wishing to give in any sense a political colour to the discussion, that ought to be a lesson to us. Twelve years after 1894, after the grievances of our sealers had been intensified, after the Japanese had entered fully into the sealing industry, after they had, according to the statements of my hon. friends from British Columbia, practically refused or at any rate given evasive replies to the pressure and demands made upon them to adhere to these regulations. after they showed that they were not willing to be bound by those regulations, and consequently could go within three miles of the shores of the Pribyloff islands, whereas we ourselves were kept by the regulations sixty miles outside—after all that, what did we do ? We gave our adherence to that treaty without making a single request or making the slightest endeavour to obtain as consideration that Japan should give her adherence to those regulations.

Mr. SLOAN. Does the hon. gentleman maintain that Canada was in a position to demand the freedom of the seas to Canadian subjects ?

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend must have heard what the first minister said a few moments ago. We negotiate through Great Britain. Before negotiating with regard to the treaty made with Japan, could we not have called on Great Britain to make these representations to the Japanese ? Who was it desired our adhesion to the treaty—we or Japan ? There can be no doubt it was Japan. It was she desired our adherence to the treaty of 1894. Japan desired to develop commercial relations with Canada and to have her subjects given free access to Canada. By whom were the great efforts made for the conclusion of the British convention of 1906 ? By the Japanese Consul here. It was Japan which wanted that convention of 1906. And it seems to me that after having suffered during twelve years the grievance which my hon. friend has exposed, we should have taken up this position. We should have said to Japan : We are prepared to treat amicably with you and will make a commercial convention which will ensure the freest interchange of commerce and also enable your people to enter our country under certain conditions, but you must first accept those regulations. Would not that have been a logical position for us to take ? What did the United States do some years ago when we began negotiations for the settlement of all difficulties between the two countries ? The commission which was appointed to settle those difficulties was told that before proceeding any further, the Alaska question must be settled. And we had to accede to that condition, and that question was referred to arbitration, with the result we all know.

What is the position to-day as regards Japan? Under terms of the convention of 1906, the Japanese have free and unrestrained access to Canada just as if they were Canadians. Modifications by diplomacy, and visits and requests, I understand, have been made; but the restriction to that number which is named in the treaty depends upon what? Upon the good will of Japan itself. And Japan has stated, in answering our requests—because we have gone begging to them : We will endeavour to restrict emigration to Canada, in so far as our dignity and the terms of the treaty will warrant. In other words, we are dependent upon them. It is true that we have passed a regulation. But, Mr. Speaker, it remains to be seen what force that regulation has. We have passed that regulation in imitation of the United States, which country passed a law forbidding indirect immigration. They are able, under the law, to exclude Japanese who come from Hawaii. But what gave them the power to pass that law? We all know it. If my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) wishes to see an explanation of it better far than any I could give, he has only to turn to one of the latest numbers of 'La Revue des Deux Mondes,' where it is clearly shown that the Americans derive that power from the terms of their treaty, in which, as hon. members will recollect, it is stated that they keep the power to make police and restrictive regulations in regard to immigration. This, as the author points out, is a police regulation. They have made a police law which obliges the Japanese to come directly from their country. We have no such restriction under our treaty. And I, for one, doubt very much if, even with the best intentions on the part of Japan, we shall be able to enforce an order in council which has no basis whatever in a treaty, since this treaty subsists. But, in regard to the particular grievance which my hon. friend (Mr. Sloan) has brought out this evening, it seems to me that we are led inevitably to the conclusion, that it was our duty, before concluding that treaty, at least to have made some effort, to have taken some tentative action at least, to obtain what would have cleared the situation—the adherence of Japan to the regulation made in Paris in 1896. The government, I am sure, can show no diligence whatever in that regard. No attempt was made. There was not even a demand or representation made to Japan, to this effect: You want to make a treaty with us; our own people are suffering because you will not adhere to reasonable regulations ; now, accept these regulations, and we will conclude a treaty with you. If my hon. friend from Yukon (Mr. Thompson) is right, when he says that we must have a more important part in the future in the conclusion of all treaties both of commerce and of settlement, surely this should be a lesson to us that, in the regions of diplomacy, we have very much to learn, and should not in future conclude treaties of the nature of this one which has been so criticised during the present session, without giving to them full consideration and making sure that we have secured from the nations dealing with us all possible advantages and the cure of all reasonable grievances.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I do not rise to deal with the observations made by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) on the Japanese question. But I cannot refrain from expressing regret that my hon. frined from Yukon (Mr. Thompson), in the very interesting speech he gave us, seemed to reach a conclusion which, I am afraid, might be misunderstood abroad, and which might receive an interpretation which he himself would not be willing to have given it. I wish to say frankly that the question is too big to be approached in a hurried way. But before the debate closes, I would like to say, that, notwithstanding that misunderstandings have from time to time existed between the imperial government and the government and parliament of Canada; notwithstanding that friction occasionally arises—and how could we expect to avoid friction in the affairs of such a vast empire as the British empire—notwithstanding irritation that may occasionally result from these treaty negotiations to which my hon. friend has referred; still, after all is said and done, it is my judgment that there is no number of persons in this Dominion of Canada who look for any radical change in our situation; there is no number of persons in this Dominion who do not feel that it is our intention to continue as we are, a portion of the British empire. Now, that should be a mere truism. And yet I have a fear that, when an hon. gentleman rises in this House and raises a doubt as to whether or not it is wise for us to continue in our present condition, though we understand that he is raising a very interesting question and discussing it in a very fair way—and I am far from saying that these questions should not be discussed—yet there is a possibility that the speech of the hon. gentleman may be misunderstood and misinterpreted and create the impression that, in this Dominion, there is some section of our people, possibly, that is dissatisfied with our position in the empire. My opinion is—of course I do not pretend that it is more than an opinion—that there is no such number of people; and, though these misunderstandings have existed in the past, and may exist in the future, they will not affect the determination of this people to be as they have been, a portion of the great British empire. Changes undoubtedly will come; but not radical changes. The British constitution has proved its marvellous adaptability to the changing conditions of the people; and, from time to time, as new conditions arise, the statesmen of the empire have proved that they can adapt themselves to these changes of conditions. It has been so in the past; it is so to-day; it will be so in the future. I only rise to say what, I am sure, must be in the mind of every hon. gentleman in this House, that while we are glad to see any hon. gentleman deal with these questions, looking at them fairly and pointing out causes of difficulty, yet we should regard it as a misfortune for the impression to get abroad that there is any considerable portion of the people of this Dominion who look for a change in our position. Irrespective of party, we are proud to belong to the British empire, and there are none who look for change in that respect.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). So far as I might be permitted to voice the sentiments of some people of Canada, I can heartily agree with the expression of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding). I frankly declare that I believe this to be the sentiment of the Canadian people as a whole. Reflections may be made upon the government of the time—and I do not apply this to one party or the other just now—for I believe that our difficulty is rather from the negligence of the government for the time being than from any action of the British people. For, while they have a world-wide diplomacy to keep in mind in carrying on these negotiations, we have a greater interest than they have. In carrying on these negotiations, we had a greater individual interest than they had, and yet we have not always shown as great an interest in our own affairs as the British people have done.

Mr. FIELDING.

It did seem to me when we were invited by Great Britain to agree to that treaty with Japan, that it was the best opportunity we could have had to make our representations with regard to fur sealing in the Pacific ocean, and with regard to immigration from Japan and from China. But notwithstanding the great interest we had at stake, in the negotiations for the treaty in 1892, which were finally concluded in 1906, I think there is not on record a single letter or representation to England showing the desirability of drawing Japan's attention to these questions that were of such vital importance to us. We had a valuable trade in the fisheries out there ; we had such an interest, one would imagine, as should induce the Canadian government to make strong representations to England that our rights should be preserved and protected. A similar effort might have been made to get Japan to agree with the other powers that were interested in the seal fisheries, to some regulations that would preserve this important trade in the future. But nothing was done by the Canadian government. So I think we have ourselves as much to blame as we have the British government.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). With regard to the point which has been made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), I think they are entirely mistaken. The negotiations with regard to the Japanese treaty between Great Britain and Japan took place in 1893 and 1894, and if I remember right, the treaty was signed early in 1894.

Mr. SPROULE. The negotiations took place in 1892, I think.

Mr. BRODEUR. But the treaty was signed early in 1894. At that time there was no question of the Japanese going into the islands of the Behring sea to catch seals. They had not begun to take part in that industry ; it was several years later that they started in to take part in the seal fisheries.

Mr. MONK. That is not what we heard from the hon. member for Comox-Atlin (Mr. Sloan).

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think the hon. member for Comox-Atlin stated that the seal fishery was carried on in 1894 by the Japanese.

Mr. SLOAN. In 1902 they gave a bonus to encourage pelagic sealing.

Mr. BRODEUR. No sealing had been carried on before, so when the treaty was negotiated between Japan and Great Britain the question of sealing could not have been considered because it did not exist as regards Japan.

Mr. MONK. I understood the hon. member for Comox-Atlin to say that Sir Julian Pauncefote's attention had been called to this matter by Mr. Gresham, before the treaty of 1894.

Mr. BRODEUR. No. My hon. friend will remember perhaps the negotiations that took place after the Paris award, which was made in 1894. As a result of the Paris award, the governments of the United States and Great Britain undertook to get all the nations, I think there were thirty-four of them, not only Russia and Japan, to participate in that treaty and to declare that seal fishing should not be carried on within sixty miles of the Pribyloff islands. Therefore, I say that my hon. friend has no right to state that British diplomacy has been remiss in failing to settle that question with Japan, because there was no such question then in existence, it began to appear later on.

Mr. SPROULE. I referred more particularly to the time when Canada was invited to come in under that treaty.

Mr. BRODEUR. Coming to that point, the hon. gentleman asks why did we adhere to the Japanese treaty in 1905 and 1906, and get it ratified by parliament in 1907? And why did we not then ask the British government to invite the Japanese government to assent to the proposition which had been made previously? Well, in the first place, this matter had to be undertaken jointly by Great Britain and the United States. It was a condition of the Paris award of 1894 that these two countries jointly should approach all the maritime countries, France, Russia, Norway, Sweden, Belgium, Germany, Italy, in fact nearly all the countries in the world asking them to accept the Paris award. This was one of the conditions of the treaty. It could not have been undertaken by one people only, it had to be undertaken by both the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. MONK. The hon. member for Comox-Atlin explained to us that the United States had communicated with Japan.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think he quoted a despatch signed by the two countries, asking the other countries to adhere to the treaty. Among the answers given by the other countries I remember the one given by Belgium, replying that they had nothing to do with the seal business, that they had never sent any vessel there, and did not understand why they should be called upon to participate in a treaty in which they had no interest whatever. Then the hon. gentleman asked, Why did you not take up the question with the Japanese authorities when you accepted the treaty in 1904? We had to accept this treaty as it had been drawn, or to reject it. This treaty concerned certain subjects, it had to be accepted with regard to those subjects in toto or rejected in toto. Was it advisable for us to accept that treaty as it was? I think it was, and that was the unanimous opinion of this parliament. This parliament declared unanimously last year that it was right for Canada to accept the treaty as it was. Of course, it would be much better if all these treaties could be negotiated by representatives of Canada. I do not say that they should be passed in the name of Canada, for we have no right to make treaties, all treaties have to be made by the King and signed by plenipotentiaries appointed by the King. My reason for saying that it would be better if these treaties were negotiated by Canada, is because we know exactly what would be best for Canadian interests, what we should concede and what we should get. We knew very well what we should ask. Something in those trade treaties which might be very useful for Great Britain might not be so useful for us. However, if the treaties made by Great Britain provide that they will have to be accepted by the colonies later on, the colonies have to accept or reject them in toto. We have no discretion to insert new conditions and clauses.

Mr. SPROULE. Surely you would have the right to make representations.

Mr. BRODEUR. Suppose we should make representations, would that change the condition whether the treaty should be accepted or not? In the treaty with Japan we find a stipulation that it will not apply to Canada unless there is an exchange later on of ratifications between Great Britain and Japan. If Canada could have negotiated with Japan, well and good; but they had no right to negotiate, they could simply accept the treaty as it was. I think my hon. friend was wrong when he declared that Great Britain in 1894 should have made it a condition of that treaty. The treaty did not at all concern the question of fisheries, but had reference to the political and trade relations between the two countries. So I declare that Great Britain should not be blamed for not having discussed this question then with Japan, because, according to the Paris award, this question was to be settled by joint note from Great Britain and the United States. Besides, when we came to accept the treaty with Japan it was a question of accepting it in toto or rejecting it in toto.

Mr. MONK. Did they make any representations to Japan, before accepting the treaty, as to this matter?

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh yes, negotiations took place concerning the seal fisheries, representations were made to the British government to have this question settled.

Mr. MONK. Before accepting the treaty of 1894 this government made no representations to Japan as to the advisability of accepting it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am quite sure there were representations to Great Britain several times concerning this question. We have represented to Great Britain the advisability of settling this question.

Mr. MONK. It does not appear in the correspondence.

Mr. BRODEUR. And there were negotiations with the United States on that point.

Mr. MONK. We had all the correspondence in reference to the treaty and there is no mention of it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly; I did not say it was in reference to that treaty. I said that representations had been made again and again to have this question settled in the most expeditious way possible and this treaty did not refer at all to the question of seal fisheries. It was another question which was dealt with in another way.

Mr. SPROULE. When the minister says we had to accept it or reject it, were we not advised by England that we might consider the question of restricting immigration? That was a variation from it, therefore it was not a fact that we could not import or suggest other questions that might be settled without finally accepting that treaty.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know exactly the purport of the correspondence exchanged between the two governments but I do not think it goes as far as my hon. friend suggests. I see by the treaty itself that we have to accept it in toto or reject it in toto. This question of seal fisheries is one that has always been dealt with between Great Britain and Canada and between the United States and Great Britain and Japan and the United States and Great Britain in a different way.

My hon. friend has referred to the seizure of the 'Carlotta G. Fox.' This was a seizure made by the United States authorities under the provisions of the Paris Award Treaty. It was made because this boat was supposed to be fishing in violation of the treaty. If I remember rightly the facts brought to the knowledge of the department, it was stated that the boat was about thirty or forty miles from the Pribyloff Islands.

Mr. SLOAN. She was probably nine hundred miles from the Pribyloff islands.

Mr. BRODEUR. They were supposed to be fishing in violation of the Paris Award Treaty.

Mr. SLOAN. That was the charge.

Mr. BRODEUR. Under the dispositions of that treaty a vessel found fishing in contravention of the treaty may be seized by the American authorities and is handed over to the British authorities to be dealt with by the Court of Admiralty. In this case the vessel was handed over by the United States authorities to the commander of the 'Quadra,' who put her in the hands of the customs authorities at Victoria; and I understand the trial is going on as to whether that vessel has been seized legally, or, in other words if there was a violation of the treaty of 1894. This case is taken charge of by the British authorities and the Canadian government has nothing to do with it. The only connection we had with the case was that the vessel was handed over to one of our vessels and was given up to the British authorities to be dealt with in the ordinary course.

Mr. THOMPSON. Might I be permitted to say a few words in reply to the Minister of Finance?

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course it will be only with leave of the House. The only motion before the House is the motion to go into Supply and on that the hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. FIELDING. Go on.

Mr. THOMPSON. I realize that the subject which I brought to the attention of the House is in what might be called the academic stage. The present position of the British empire is the result of evolution. I brought up the discussion, having in view the imperial conference which will again take place in a few years, and having in view also the fact that this evolutionary process is going on. The question having been brought up, may be thought out by men in and out of the House so that at that conference and afterwards, Canada may have her place among the nations of the world as the fathers of confederation intended she should.

Mr. SLOAN. May I be permitted to offer a word of explanation in connection with the seizure of the 'Carlotta G. Fox.'

Mr. SPEAKER. It would have to be in the same way, with the permission of the House.

Mr. SLOAN. The minister stated that this vessel was seized for sealing during the closed months, May, June and July. She was not seized in the act of sealing, she was seized after an inspection of the skins on board her by an American officer, on May 29, the point being that some six of these skins appeared to this officer to be too fresh to have been caught before the commencement of the twenty-nine days which had elapsed since the beginning of the close season, that is that six of the skins seemed to have been caught after the 1st of May.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister of Finance intend to do much work to-night?

Mr. FIELDING. I thought my hon. friend came in fresh and was anxious to work.

Mr. FOSTER. He came in, but he did not come fresh.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no desire to sit late, but I thought we might make a moderate amount of progress and then adjourn.

To provide for the maintenance of vessels employed in patrolling the waters in the northern portion of Canada, also for establishing and maintaining police and customs ports on the mainland or islands as may be deemed necessary from time to time, $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The discussion on the 'Arctic' will come under this item.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a little dispute on the item for the maintenance and repairs to government steamers and ice-breakers, but we may let these items pass, with the exception of the one now called, on the understanding that a general discussion will be allowed on the items later.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The others are passed.

Mr. FOSTER. The resolution is not passed. So far as I am concerned, all I would require is to hold over that item and let the others go through, on the understanding that there should be a general discussion allowed later, and especially with reference to the 'Arctic.'

Mr. BRODEUR. We have been three days on this resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. If the minister wishes he can take three days more, but there is information we ask for, and we cannot allow this item to be passed until we get that information.

Mr. BRODEUR. What is the information?

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the minister's travelling expenses and the reorganization of the accountant's department. The minister has simply jollied us along promising and promising this information, but his promises have not come to performance.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend has not been here, and he does not know that my travelling expenses have been brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. Which ones?

Mr. BRODEUR. My travelling expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Three returns were asked for, and one has been brought down and the others have not.

Mr. BRODEUR. The return with reference to the travelling expenses of the different ministers at the Colonial Conference has not been brought down, I understand, but the return as to my travelling expenses has been brought down, and in it are included my expenses at the Colonial Conference. The information with reference to all my expenses is brought down, and it is no reason why these estimates should be held up that the returns with reference to the travelling expenses of other ministers are not brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. Three important returns affecting the minister and his department have been asked for, and only one has been brought down. It could have been brought down in five minutes, but they have been held for nearly two months now.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is mistaken. All the information with reference to my travelling expenses and the travelling expenses of my secretary and of the messenger has been brought down. As far as I am concerned, the hon. gentleman cannot be any better informed if the other returns were brought down.

Mr. SPROULE. There was another reason why I made the request that this item of $50,000 should stand. I said that we had got no information in regard to what the vessel patrolling the northern waters of Canada was doing, what it had done in the past, what it was costing, and what good purpose was being served by it. I know that some of our friends desire to get that information.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am ready to give it. It has not been asked of me, because we are asked not to let one item pass. I want to know whether we are going to proceed in that way. We have been four days in three weeks on this resolution 209, and we have not passed one item yet.

Mr. SPROULE. We have passed a good many items of the resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has not correctly stated the case. What I said was true, that there are three orders by the House, and the minister has brought down the answer to one, but not the answers to the other two. They all refer to himself and to his department. The return with reference to the accounting has been asked for, for two months. He tries to have his estimates passed because he brought down the statement with regard to his travelling expenses for a certain limited period, but not for an entirely different period.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not for a different period. The hon. gentleman's first resolution asked for my expenditures for the last two or three years, and the statement has been brought down. In addition to that, he has made another motion for the expenses of the ministers who attended the Colonial Conference.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not discussing that to-night at all.

Mr BRODEUR. I know that it is well understood that hon. gentlemen opposite will not let us pass any of these estimates, and I want to put the facts fairly before the House and the country. My hon. friend has been asking for a statement of my travelling expenses in connection with the Colonial Conference. That statement is included in the return which has been brought down. He has probably not read it. He will find there a statement of all the travelling expenses incurred during the last two or three years, in accordance with the motion he made. I do not know what other information he could get so far as I am concerned, if the other return were brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. The other returns include a different period entirely.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Will the minister explain an item in the Auditor General's Report at page P—7: 'R. A. Wiallard, private secretary, advance, to be accounted for, $1,000.' Perhaps the minister will explain the details of that—whether it was for money in France, in England or in Canada.

Mr. BRODEUR. At the Colonial Conference.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Then how is it that that $1,000 is charged to the year ending March 31, 1907? I believe the minister did not leave here until after March 31.

Mr. BRODEUR. The money was advanced during the fiscal year 1906-7, and was charged to that year. We started for the Colonial Conference two or three days after this money was advanced.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I think the minister should explain how that $1,000 was expended, and why it was expended.

Mr. BRODEUR. The money was advanced just before the close of the last fiscal year, and when the Auditor General prepared his report he had to state that it was to be accounted for, because my secretary was then absent.

Mr. FOSTER. I have here the record of the two motions with reference to the expenses. To one of them an answer has been brought down; and to the other no answer has been brought down, and they cover different periods. One is for travelling expenses of the minister and his private secretary to December 31, 1907. To that no answer has been brought down. The other was for travelling expenses of Mr. Wiallard, private secretary, and the messenger Potvin since June 30, 1906. To that an answer has been brought. The second one has been brought down but not the first.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was not then Minister of the Inland Revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to discuss the minister's travelling expenses from the time he began his wild career of expenditure. It is all of one piece and had better all be discussed together. The whole expenditure is what I consider the most extravagant ever made by any minister in this House. We had a force of men imported to prepare an accounting system. We had men imported from New York to do this at enormous expense, and the minister who incurs such expense should put the information before the House before he asks the House to pass his estimates.

Mr. MONK. I am anxious to advance the work of passing the estimates, but to ask the House to vote large sums of money, when we have not the returns ordered long ago, when we have not the return with reference to the manner of accounting and the return with reference to the travelling expenses of the minister, is unfair.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am surprised to see my hon. friend so much exercised. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said a few minutes ago he had asked for the travelling expenses of the minister and they had not been brought down. I was sure they had been. He said he had asked for them long ago and had not yet seen them. Now he finds that the expenditures from 1906 to the 31st December 1907 have been brought down, but he finds he made another motion for two years before that and he wants that return brought down. I was not aware of it. If it is so important that these two years expenses, which do not concern the Inland Revenue Department, should be brought down, I will see that they are brought down at once. As regards the accounting system, my hon. friends have no idea of the amount of work done. The report is ready.

Mr. FOSTER. You told us that two or three weeks ago.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I said it was being copied, and I found out, when it was brought before me on Saturday, that some of the reports were missing. There were forty-seven reports in all. I asked where the missing ones were and they have been searching for them in the department in order to complete the lot. I will bring those down which are copied, if absolutely necessary, to-morrow.

Mr. MONK. We have had over $40,000 spent in the organizing of this new system of accounting. We ordered the report to show what was done, and we insist on seeing that report before proceeding.

Mr. BRODEUR. But why not pass the items which have absolutely nothing to do with that system of accounting? The reason is because hon. gentlemen opposite do not want to let any items pass.

Mr. MONK. That is not the case so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BENNETT. The following items appear in the Auditor General's Report:

Advance to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself on his departure for the old country, $2,915; paid Nap. Potvin, messenger, $150; paid E. A. Willard, private secretary, $1,000; paid a lump sum of $4,000 to the minister on the occasion of the Colonial Conference; paid cabs, &c., $733; total, $8,798.

Time and again the minister promised to explain this expenditure, of $8,798 but every night we are in the same position and have no information. The minister should give a full account of this whole expenditure.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am ready to do it, and it has been brought down too. My hon. friend will find in the return all the details he requires.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister ought to be reasonable enough and intelligent enough to see this. By his own confession, he declared before the House and the country that his whole department was disorganized and in such a mess, so far as the accounting was concerned, that he had to bring in a force from abroad to get the thing right.

Mr. BRODEUR. I never said that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what the hon. gentleman did and acts are more emphatic than words. That confession came as a surprise. With our Finance Department, with our old accountants, with our men trained in our methods, it was extraordinary that we had to go to New York and import high priced men and give them a blanket contract, under which they went to work and got third-rate men and paid them first-class prices. It cost about $50,000 to the department, not one cent of which should have been spent. We ought to have men enough in the department to put our books and accounts in the best of shape. In any case we need not have gone to New York for them but could have found them easily in Ottawa. Three weeks ago the minister told us the report was ready to be copied, and now it is in just the same position and we have not got it. The minister's personal expenses are the essence of the whole matter. They furnish a criterion of his whole administration just as the system of accounting is equally an indication of efficient or non-efficient business management and proper administration or the reverse, because it is only by an effective system that we can trace the expenditure of the millions we vote. We would therefore be perfectly right in refusing to pass a single item until we have these two essentials fully explained to us. More than that, according to the information we have—and all the information has not yet been brought down—the minister himself is in the habit of drawing large sums and keeping them in his own pocket for months and months and using them for his own purposes, and then when called to book by the Audit Department making a refund. Why should he carry around the people's money? The very moment he has spent what he needs, he should give back to the treasury what he does not need. In doing what he has done, he is setting a vicious example to every accountant in every branch of the service. He is setting them the example of over drawing and keeping the money and using it for their own purposes and only refunding when compelled to. That sort of thing touches the minister and his department so vitally that we would be perfectly justified in objecting to voting him another dollar until he has cleared it up.

The minister began his extravagant course the moment he got into the saddle—boosted into it by some circumstances unknown to me. And, as Speaker of this House, his expenditure was on a scale of extravagance which had never been equalled by any man who preceded him, and certainly has not been copied by his successor. As head of a department, he has gone on in the same way. We on this side have been careful not to be picayune in discussing minister's expenses. But the thing has reached a pitch at which it must be discussed and this extravagance stopped. It is becoming a scandal. Ministers have been, in effect, adding to their salaries by taking expense money more than they could reasonably require. For a minister is not to live like a nabob. He has to maintain a fair dignity, but not to supplement his salary by extraordinary expenses. It may not have been done, but it looks like it. And we want to see these things and know whether there is a basis for it or not. I think there is a basis for it.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) makes the statement that I have been in the habit of taking money from the public chest and using that money for my own purposes, and have been obliged to refund a part of that money. That is the charge he has made.

Mr. FOSTER. You are pretty close to it.

Mr. BRODEUR. That charge is entirely unfounded, and the hon. gentleman knows it.

Mr. FOSTER. I can prove it, and I will prove it to the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a statement that is absolutely incorrect. And the facts before him show conclusively that he is not correct, the insinuation he makes is wholly unworthy of him. When I was to leave for England, no money had been voted for the colonial conference. But there was another vote upon which I could properly draw for travelling expenses. I drew money from that vote, and when the vote for the colonial conference was given to me. I handed back part of the money which had been drawn from the other appropriation. I was going abroad to represent my country in an important matter. My belief is that, when a minister of the Crown goes abroad on such a mission, he must represent his country in a dignified way. If I were going again, I would do the same thing, for I would not represent my country abroad in such a way as to bring discredit upon her. That may be the policy of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) but it is not mine, and I believe that the country will approve of my policy in this matter.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the $4,000 vote from the conference money made prior to the vote of $2,915 that appears at page P—29 of the Auditor General's Report?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but long after. The vote for the colonial conference was made several months after we left.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as I am concerned, I propose to stand by what I said, but not by what the minister said I said. I said the minister has been in the habit of drawing on account of expenses, larger sums of money than he needed to use, keeping that money for months and then giving it back into the treasury. What he uses it for, I do not know. But I say that a minister has no right to draw more money than he is going to use for the occasion on account of which he draws it. He has no right to draw $2,000 when he needs only $1,000, and keep the extra $1,000 for months before putting it back in the treasury. And the minister has just told us, in plain English words that he took $4,000 voted by parliament for a different purpose, and then, when he got the money from the right appropriation, he paid it back. Surely he must see into what inextricable confusion it would drag the public accounts if other ministers were to follow his example. Money is voted by parliament for a purpose duly described in the vote, and the minister has no right to take that money for a purpose entirely different. The more the hon. gentleman speaks about it the deeper he gets in the quagmire.

Mr. BRODEUR. Not at all. The money that I took was voted for a purpose in connection with which I had to go to the other side of the Atlantic. So, I had a perfect right to take it. I took $2,000 out of that vote, and, when the other appropriation was given, I reimbursed the first account. So, it was a mere question of bookkeeping.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. BRODEUR. A mere question of bookkeeping, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows it very well. He tries to throw some dirt upon me to discredit me in the country.

Mr. FOSTER. I am trying to brush off what the hon. minister has thrown upon himself.

Mr. BRODEUR. I never used for my own purposes the money of anybody else entrusted to me. The money I took I had a right to take. It was used in the public interest. I did not use it for any illegitimate purpose and I have not been obliged to reimburse any money. My hon. friend wants the country to believe that I have been keeping in my pocket for months money which I did not need. He knows very well that his statement is entirely incorrect. I spent for the public interest all the money which I got.

Mr. FOSTER. The more the minister reasons about it the worse he makes his case. Does he stand up as a minister in parliament and say that if parliament makes a vote of $150,000 for ice breakers, he has a right to take $50,000 of that and devote it to an absolutely different purpose, provided that some time in the future he repays it? Does he say that?

Mr. BRODEUR. What I say is this: There is a sum of money voted for ice-breakers. I have to go to Europe to look after the construction of an ice-breaker, and am I not entitled to get out of that vote a certain sum of money for travelling expenses? I say I have, and that is what I did. When my hon. friend goes so far as to charge me with dishonesty in this connection, he does a most unfair thing, a thing entirely unworthy of himself. Now he insinuates that I have kept some money in my pocket, that I have been using for a speculative purpose or some thing of that kind, money that was put into my hands. If there is anybody who can do that, it is not myself; perhaps my hon. friend knows somebody who can do it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend puts to me this question: If I have $150,000 voted for ice-breaking and if I have to go to Europe, can I take two or three thousand dollars of that to pay my expenses to the colonial conference?

Mr. GALLIHER. He did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. He said he had not a vote available for his expenses to the colonial conference, and so he took it out of the $150,000 that was voted, not for expenses to the colonial conference but for ice-breaking, and he tries to justify it because he had got a vote of money for ice-breaking. He had a right to take out of that just as much and no more than he spent on his trip with reference to ice-breaking machinery. But the minister himself stated that he used the money because he had not a vote available for the conference.

Mr. BOLE. Then how otherwise could he go to the conference ?

Mr. FOSTER. He could stay at home. There was a way in which he could get the money, but he did not get it, because he has been used to do that sort of thing.

Mr. BOLE. That is an unfair statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) tell me why it is unfair ?

Mr. BOLE. You have been making unfair statements right straight along. You stated that the minister had taken money out of his pocket to do a certain thing, and has used it for his own purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. I never said the minister had taken money out of his pocket and used it for any purpose. I stated that he took it out of another vote and used it for an entirely different matter.

Mr. GALLIHER. What the minister said when he was last on his feet was this, in answer to the charge that he had no right to use any of this money that was voted for ice-breaking. If a sum of money has been voted for ice-breaking, and if in connection with that work I have to go to Europe, am I not justified in taking the expense out of that vote ?

Mr. FOSTER. The minister said that not having any money with which to go to the conference he took it out of this ice-breaking vote. I ask my hon. friend whether he spent on travelling expenses, or intended to spend on travelling expenses for the ice-breaking business, $3,000 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not take $3,000, I took $2,000 and I spent $1,500.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I ask the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) if there is not some quibbling in this discussion. My colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was going to Europe to the conference. He has told us also that apart from the conference he had to look after an ice-breaking patent, a new system. If he had not gone to Europe for one purpose he would have had to go for another purpose. Therefore he had two objects in going to Europe. He had a special vote authorizing him to go as a member of the conference, and he had a general appropriation for ice-breaking. Now my hon. friend the minister is not a millionaire ; he had occasion to go to Europe and he had no money in his pocket. The vote for the conference was not available, and so he took the money out of the vote for ice-breaking. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) objects to that. If the minister had gone to Europe on the ice-breaking business alone, my hon. friend would have had nothing to say.

Mr. FOSTER. Not as to the principle. But if he took $4,000 and only intended to spend $1,000, I think he took too much.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My colleague went to Europe for two purposes. If he had charged for the two purposes so much out of one vote and so much out of the other, he might have been open to criticism. He did not make two trips for the two purposes, he made only one trip, and what did it matter whether he charged the expenses to one appropriation or to the other ? I do not see anything wrong in that. The hon. gentleman may criticise the amount, but as to the manner in which the money was expended, I think my hon. friend from North Toronto is quibbling. If the money had been available when my colleague left Canada for the conference, probably he would have taken his expenses out of that money, but it was not available, and he took it from another source.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend does not see the point. I do not think there should be any laxness or any elasticity shown by a minister administering a department. He takes an appropriation list as it is made for him by an Act of parliament, and finds $100,000 devoted to the building of a wharf at a certain point, and $50,000 for the building of an armoury. I do not think there can be too much scrupulous care taken by a minister administering a department to see that he does not take one dollar out of the vote for the armoury and subvert the will of parliament by using that money for any other purpose whatever. I think that is proper ground to take. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries does not seem to see the distinction. He would have a perfect right, if he had a vote of $100,000 for ice-breaking, to take out of that what was necessary for his expenses to Europe in regard to ice-breaking. For the minister to take $2.000 or $3,000 out of the ice-breaking vote and devote it to an entirely different purpose is, to say the least, to introduce a very loose system into the supervision of the expenditure. When he paid his travelling expenses by telling the transportation companies to send in their bills to Ottawa what did he need of $2,000 cash to take him to London ? He did not need it to take him over nor did he need it while he was in England at the conference. The British government paid all bills and treated him like a prince. He talks about his dignity and my lack of dignity. I do not think that a lavish expenditure of money is very much of a fountain of dignity or a proper means of showing dignity. There is no reason for the minister in the months he was the guest of the British government in London having or spending $2,000, and he never spent $2,000 of that on legitimate expenses connected with this country. Why did he need to take so much ? He would not be away from all money centres, he would not be in Central Africa, or even East Africa. He would be right alongside the Bank of Montreal, he could step into the Bank of Montreal any day and get $50, or $100 or $500. His vote would mature the moment parliament rose and he could check out from the vote the amount he had drawn. There was no excuse for his taking so much or taking it from a different appropriation. I, as a member of the opposition, and the Prime Minister as leader of this House, should stand squarely on the ground that when parliament appropriated money for a certain purpose, that is the only purpose for which the money should be used.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The principles laid down by my hon. friend are right. I agree with him that whenever an appropriation is made for a certain purpose, it should not be diverted from that purpose; but my hon. friend goes so far on that principle that he falls into another error. Not only is he hypercritical but he lays down a doctrine which I believe on reflection he will not be prepared to carry out. He says if the minister wanted money in advance of his vote in London, he could go to the Bank of Montreal and get money. Will my hon. friend tell us that the minister can, in advance of a vote get money from the Bank of Montreal?

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that. If the Prime Minister understood me to say that he understood me to say a thing I did not mean. A minister has no more right to get money as a minister than a private party has. What I said was that suppose the minister had reasoned that after having paid all transportation bills, after having landed himself in the heart of London as the guest of the British government for a month or a month and a half or two months with all expenses paid, would it not have been the proper thing for him to have taken say $1,000 out of the ice-breaking vote, which he would probably have to spend making his ice-breaking investigations, and if he did not spend it all he could have refunded the rest. Before the expiry of the two months his own vote would be through and he could then have drawn on that vote in the bank for the conference purposes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am glad my hon. friend did not persist in that statement and that I did not understand him correctly; but when he reads 'Hansard" to-morrow I think he will see that he went perilously near to saying what I understood. I would ask my hon. friend to place himself in the position of my honoured colleague. He was summoned by parliament to go to London for the conference, but if he had not gone for the conference he would have gone in connection with the ice-breakers. He is not blessed with much surplus cash, he wanted money voted by parliament. The money for the conference was not available, but the money for the ice-breaking was. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) says that if he had taken only a portion of this $2,000 from the ice-breaking appropriation and the balance from the conference vote, that might have been right. My hon. friend will see that this is hypercritical. The minister did not want to break the law and therefore took money from an appropriation which he had a perfect right to take at that moment. Therefore if he did it, it does not matter much whether he took $1,000, more or less. The principle that when money is voted for a certain purpose, it should be devoted to that purpose only, is perfectly right, but my hon. friend is carrying his criticism quite beyond the limits of fair and legitimate criticism.

Mr. FOSTER. We will each have his opinion on that point.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. LENNOX. The principle has been clearly defined that the minister can take from the ice-breaking fund whatever amount he can fairly charge to it, and no more. The main purpose of his trip was to attend the conference. From that he went to Germany to investigate ice-breaking and whatever money could be fairly charged to the ice-breaking fund could be so charged and no more, allowing of course a fair margin. He could not honestly take from any vote anything which must necessarily be refunded; he could take what would be enough and ample, but must not take an amount of money that would involve a necessary refund to that particular source.

Mr. FOSTER. What he knew would be a necessary refund.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes. It cannot be said that when we voted $150,000 for ice-breaking we contemplated that the minister would draw from that fund such expenses as we find on page P—29:

Advance to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for trip to England, $2,000; ocean fares of ministers and party, Canada to England, $890; sleepers to St. John, $25.

Will the First Minister say that was contemplated? That is where the quibbling comes in.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is a further sum of $1,150 charged to the same vote for other travelling expenses.

Mr. LENNOX. Can it be said with any degree of common sense that $3,000 could be honestly taken out of this vote to pay the expenses of a trip to England for the minister and his party? Surely it was never contemplated by us when we voted the appropriation for ice-breakers that the money would be applied to any such purpose as that. The Prime Minister will have to look to the Minister of Marine to find the quibble. If the minister said squarely that he had not the legal right to do this we might be disposed to view it more leniently, but we cannot but protest when he seeks to defend it on indefensible ground.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The whole thing seems to me to narrow itself into very technical limits. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) laid down a principle which the hon. member (Mr. Foster) will agree with me that he cannot maintain when he said the Minister of Marine could not draw one cent more than he needed.

Mr. LENNOX. I expressly took care to say nothing of the kind. I said he should draw what he reasonably contemplated he would spend and if $800 were required he might draw $1,000. but he must not draw what he knew would not be required.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the minister drew too much and did not expend it he would refund it. When a vote of that kind is taken the amount is placed in the hands of the minister and if he spends it all well and good, but if he does not spend it all he refunds the balance. It seems to me that my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) is too hypercritical. As to the manner in which the minister drew the money he endeavoured to obey the law and the only question remaining is as to whether the amount of the expenses should be criticised. I do not pretend to be an authority on financial matters and I have great respect for the opinion of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) on such questions, but it seems to me that he has exceeded the limits of fair criticism in this matter.

Mr. BLAIN. When this money was voted for the ice-breaking service there was not a word said about the proposed trip of the minister to the old country. I do not believe that the minister had any right to take a dollar of that money to be expended on such a trip. It is a dangerous policy and one that will lead to a great deal of criticism in this House and will not be endorsed by the people of the country. To say that the minister can take the expenses of a trip to England out of a half a dozen different appropriations made for other purposes is a dangerous principle, and I do not think it can be found in the history of this parliament that such a thing was done before. It does not come suddenly to a minister that he has to leave Otttawa and go to Europe, and if a minister has to take a trip there to look after the interests of the Dominion the parliament of Canada has a right to vote him a liberal amount so that he may discharge his duties with honour to himself and the country. But no right thinking men will endorse the principle that because he has to discharge duties connected with different branches he should divide up his expenses and take it out of different votes which were never intended for that object. Such a thing should not be tolerated.

Mr. MONK. I am not as old a parliamentarian as many gentlemen who have spoken on this question, but if the principle laid down by the Minister of Marine is adopted I can see that there is not a single vote in the estimates of the department out of which he could not take his expenses for a trip to Europe. This vote was taken for the purchase of ice-breakers and not one word was said when the vote was going through as to the necessity for a trip to Europe.

Mr. GALLIHER. This ice-breaking business is a new thing in this country and surely my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will admit that this fact could be taken into contemplation by the House when the vote was assented to.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister should have explained what he was asking the money for.

Mr. GALLIHER. Surely it might be considered by the House when the vote was taken that whatever was necessary to make the new enterprise a success might be done by the minister. Let me give as an example, a city which is entering upon some municipal work, a new sewer system we will say. A by-law is passed, a certain sum is voted for that purpose, and surely it is in contemplation of the citizens who vote the money that it may be necessary for the mayor and some of the councilmen to go to other cities to obtain information in order that the best possible system may be obtained.

Mr. MONK. Well, it is a matter of appreciation. Although I do not think our administration in Montreal is a model one, it does not send people to visit American cities without special authority. A few dollars are not to be seriously considered; but when we authorize a sufficient amount to purchase an ice-breaker, I do not think that involves a special trip to Europe in connection with it. This is a dangerous principle and one which I would never admit in the case of the present minister. When these estimates are put before the House, they should always be accompanied, as is the case in England, with a short statement of the purposes to which the money is to be devoted. I thoroughly coincide with the contention made this evening that we ought to have full explanations of the large expenditure made in connection with the reform of the accounting of this department. The absence of information regarding the expenses of the minister is to my mind a valid reason for postponing these estimates. Indeed, I think it is a piece of impertinence and cheek for the minister to ask us to vote $50,000 without giving us these reports. Let him give them to us, and he will find me at any rate perfectly willing to go on with the estimates.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I find that the item of $1,000 charged to R. A. Willard, private secretary, is charged in two places, at page P—7 and page P—29. I think there should be an explanation by the minister why that is charged twice.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not charged twice. At page P—7 the details are given of the charge made at page P—29 ; but it is only one charge.

Mr. TAYLOR. That $1,150 never should have been taken out of the money appropriated for the purchase of the steamer. That is on a par with the money he drew for himself. It is contrary to all the rules of parliament. The item we are discussing is this $50,000 for patrolling the northern waters, which comes under the general item 209 of maintenance and repairs. All the other items under this head have been passed except these two, and these will not be passed until the minister brings down the papers ordered by parliament. These two items are the ones with reference to the minister's travelling expenses and the system of accounting, the return regarding which the minister said was ready a few days ago, but when the latter came before him there was something wrong in it and it had to be revised.

Mr. BRODEUR. Some reports were missing.

Mr. TAYLOR. No doubt it had to be revised and will have to be many times before it meets the approval of the House. The minister has an item in the Auditor General's Report indicating that a gentleman from Montreal, Mr. Kenneth Falconer, expert, is the party who did this work. And he is put down at a remuneration of $40 a day, on page 77 of the Auditor General's Report. The next item is James N. Gunn at $75 per day and W. B. Richards at $75 per day. I have in my hand the firm name of the gentlemen who began this work. They are Gunn, Richards & Company, production engineers and public accountants, First National Bank Building, Chicago. But this item is put in here to show that it was a Montreal man, Mr. Falconer, who did the work. Why, it was done by little bits of boys worth $10 a week, and we are paying $40 a day for these besides travelling expenses and hotel bills. Nearly every one of the staff was allowed travelling expenses from New York to Ottawa and his board bill. The whole thing is a swindle from start to finish. And it is put down in the Auditor General's Report in such a way as to make us believe that a man from Montreal did the work at $40 a day.

Mr. FOSTER. Another example of the middleman getting the rake-off.

Mr. TAYLOR. And they had a boy, who was paid $500 a year, drawing $30 a day from this government for doing the work. I know the boy well and the company well. I know the parties who made the bargain with this minister, and the expenditure is smuggled into the Auditor General's Report as if the work was done by a man from Montreal at $40 a day.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is a reflection on the minister. We should have an investigation.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a reflection on the department. I do not know whether it was the present minister or his predecessor who began this deal, but there is evidently a rake-off in it for somebody. We want the papers down, and until he complies with the order of the House and produces these papers, we shall not pass the item.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have said that to-morrow I will bring down everything that you need.

Mr. FOSTER. Then let the item stand.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have always been very anxious to produce all the papers in connection with the expert accounting. The circumstances which originated this are these. During the investigation in the Public Accounts Committee in the session of 1906, it was shown that in some cases there were discrepancies in the accounts. I am not sure whether they were mistakes made by the officers of the department or whether they were due to the system of book-keeping, but it was established that the accounts were not properly kept, and I was anxious that the book-keeping system should be as good as possible. Besides that we are manufacturing in Sorel and at Prescott and we have agencies in different parts of the country, some of which are on the British Columbia coast and the Pacific coast and the eastern coast as well. I found that where we were carrying on manufacturing, the accounts were not kept as they are in most business establishments. My hon. friend, who is a manufacturer, knows how important it is to know exactly, not only what is manufactured, but that every piece of machinery should be made as cheaply as possible. It is important not only that we should show the sums we had paid for the running of the establishment and that we had spent so much in the year out of the vote given us, but that we should know exactly that all the work done was done as cheaply as in other places. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) finds that laughable.

Mr. MONK. I find it laughable that it cost $47,000 to enable the minister to find out such a simple thing.

Mr. FOSTER. Merwin was allowed to charge double on the things he sold.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have had no dealings with Merwin.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister is mistaken. Merwin's name is here in the accounts.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, that is one of the charges which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) seems anxious to make against me. And it shows the hon. gentleman's idea of fairness.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, the Auditor General's Report is wrong.

Mr. BRODEUR. The orders were not given when I was in the department.

Mr. FOSTER. But the minister is responsible for the minister.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not shirk any responsibility. In that respect I think I am as proud as anybody can be. It was absolutely necessary for me to know exactly what the expenses of the department were. That is why I had the investigation and this new system of accounting prepared. I believe it will bring good results in showing where expenses are too high. The hon. gentleman says that I made an arrangement with Messrs. Gunn and Richards. He is mistaken.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I am not.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sure the hon. gentleman will accept my statement. The only man I knew in connection with this matter was Mr. Falconer, who was recommended to me by persons in Montreal. I learned from Mr. Falconer that he got the advice of outside experts who were doing such work elsewhere.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister (Mr. Brodeur) says that in the Public Accounts Committee it was shown that mistakes had been made in the bookkeeping. Nothing of that kind was shown, but what was shown was that men were getting rake-offs on their sales to the department—Brooks & Co., Merwin & Co. and so on. And the minister wanted this investigation not so much to prepare a new system of bookkeeping as to prepare for him a brief on which he could answer in case of matters being brought up in the Public Accounts Committee or here. I know something about this thing from start to finish, and my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) will hear a great deal more of it before he gets through. Now, we want this correspondence. I put a question on the order paper last year, asking if Gunn and Richards were doing this work, and if he would lay the report on the table. He said he would, but he has not presented this report so far. I want to know where this $47,000 of public money has gone and whether the services of boys whom Gunn-Richards engage at $500 a year are being charged up against this country as expert service at $20 a day with board at $4 and $5 a day and full expenses from New York.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have been asked to bring down a large number of papers and have engaged special clerks to copy them. I have already brought down many returns. In this case, the papers were prepared, but I noticed that some letters and reports were missing, and I called the attention of the deputy to it, as I wanted to have the file as complete as possible. This is one of the things for which I take complete responsibility. I thought it was necessary before I took full charge of the department to find out how the department had been administered. Hon. gentlemen opposite will remember that, two years ago, they were denouncing the department as the most corrupt in the government and the worst administered. I wanted to find out about these things. Perhaps I took too much stock in what these hon. gentlemen said.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister has shifted his ground. In the first place, he said that this work was made necessary because he found 'discrepancies' in the book-keeping. Now, he says that it was because it was charged that the department was a corrupt department. We found out that it was a corrupt department. But the minister still deals with Brooks and Merwin—$70,000 or $80,000 was paid them last year, though it was shown that they were getting a rake-off on every thing they purchased. He says the only person he knows in this matter of accounting was Mr. Falconer. Were not Mr. Gunn and Mr. Richards both in his office consulting him during the time this work was in progress ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember having met these gentlemen. I know of one man who came one day with Mr. Falconer. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) seems well informed of what goes on in my department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know anything from the department but I know something from the gentlemen who were doing this work.

Mr. BRODEUR. How can he know then, that these gentlemen came to my office ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I believe these gentlemen will be prepared to swear to that fact when they come before the Public Accounts Committee. But suppose they did consult with the minister, that is all right. What I am calling attention to is the fact that the minister said he knew nobody in this matter excepting Mr. Falconer in Montreal. Mr. Falconer did not do the work, it was done by Messrs. Gunn and Richards of New York, and they got $75 a day for hire of staff.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Here is what I find in the Auditor General's Report:

Board of experts and staff: 4 men at $5 per day each, 5 men at $4 per day each, 9 men at $3 per day each, for various periods between November, 1906, and March 31, 1907, $4,059; travel of expert and staff: New York to Ottawa, Montreal to Ottawa, &c., 18 men, $1,533.

I do not now where they boarded. I think it is very extravagant for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to import men from New York when we have better men in Canada to do this work, and paying them such enormous accounts for board. I understand they boarded at a hotel which did not charge $2 a day.

Mr. TAYLOR. Two of them boarded in a boarding house in this city where a couple of members of parliament were boarding, and got a good deal of information.

Mr. BENNETT. No volume will be read by the public with greater avidity than the proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee for 1908, when they read the stories told by witnesses under oath who say that there is nothing wrong in stealing from the government. That has been established by two witnesses in the Public Accounts Committee, men who were paid by the people of Canada for doing no work at all, and yet putting the money in their pockets on the ground that when everybody was stealing why should they not steal. The minister places the blame on the unfortunate officials, when he is himself the head and front of all the offending in that department. To-morrow there will be ventilated in the Public Accounts Committee a case in his own department where accounts are certified to that are on their face a palpable theft, certified to by an officer of his own department. Everybody knows that the official of the department does not certify to these accounts of his own free will and accord, but he does it at the dictation of the minister, due to political leverage exerted upon him by hon. gentlemen opposite. Let me give the House a sample of one case that will be ventilated to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Wait until the committee reports.

Mr. BENNETT. If the First Minister will come up to the Public Accounts Committee to-morrow I think he will hear a case of which it can be said ab uno disco omnes, as regards the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. I want to ask the minister if it is a fact that besides paying these experts certain wages per day, he was paying their board in the city of Ottawa?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. Well, I think it is up to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to give some information with regard to their board. Was this government to pay these men a certain sum per day for their board, without regard to what they actually paid themselves?

Mr. BRODEUR. They had to produce vouchers.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. I think we will find that if they produce vouchers from their boarding house keepers they will not correspond with what is in the Auditor General's Report. Three of these men boarded with me last session, and I pledge my position here that they did not pay more than a dollar a day for their board.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose my hon. friend will be able to give me their names?

Mr. WM. JACKSON. I will give the names when the time comes. When I see the vouchers on which they were paid, I will put in evidence to establish everything I have said.

Mr. BRODEUR. If there has been robbery of the government by these men I am just as anxious as my hon. friend they should be punished. If they have been obtaining money under false pretences, I am not going to stand anything of that kind.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister says he is not going to stand for men obtaining money under false pretences. Was it not proved in the Public Accounts Committee that a man took oath that he drew a couple of hundred dollars on account of doing a certain work, and he was never near the work at all?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Was he not discharged?

Mr. BENNETT. He was discharged, but why was not the money recovered back from him that he had stolen from the country? In the case of the census enumerators for the riding of East Simcoe, was it not proved by me in the House that the men never paid $3 a day for their board, and yet was any attempt ever made to recover the money? The government dare not go after these men because they know too much.

Mr. J. D. REID. In the Merwin case the minister fought the committee tooth and nail. There was an invoice produced by Merwin examined and certified by an official of the department, saying that the prices were fair and just. The minister fought us tooth and nail when we desired to have an investigation, although he knew in the bottom of his heart that Merwin was robbing this country. But when he saw we had the case in such a way that we could expose it, then the minister had to retreat and allow an investigation. We proved that he was making a profit of 187 per cent. Here is another case of men with whom the minister made a personal agreement. He agreed with these men that he would pay some of them $75 a day and their board in the city of Ottawa. The minister knows in the bottom of his heart that there is not a place in the city of Ottawa where they would have to pay $5 a day for their board, yet they came forward with their accounts and he paid these men $5 a day for board. When he paid this account the minister knew in the bottom of his heart that it was false, and the country has been robbed by these men of what the government paid them over and above what their board cost them. The minister knows that when he was allowing these men $30 a day for their board, they were not paying $2 a day. It is an outrage to pay such an amount. These men were allowed $5 a day for board in Ottawa when there is not a place in the city where they would have to pay it.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are no vouchers; it is simply an account for so much a day certified as fair and just by an officer of the department.

Mr. BRODEUR. No vouchers for the account?

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is the first time I have heard there are no vouchers.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister should not make a statement unless it is correct.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not see how the Auditor General would pay accounts without vouchers.

Mr. TAYLOR. On the certificate of the officers.

Mr. J. D. REID. Merwin was paid in the same way.

Mr. BRODEUR. In that case the Auditor General would pay the account as it was certified fair and just unless he had reason to think the prices were not fair and just.

Mr. J. D. REID. There was no question that there was a rake-off or a robbery of that kind in this case. We have had similar cases in the Marine Department before, but there has been no change either as to the officials or as to the men who sell goods to the department. We have the same officials, the same men.

Mr. FOSTER. And the same rake-off.

Mr. TAYLOR. At the Auditor General's Report, P—95, it will be seen that Brooks & Co. sold $56,000 worth of goods and George Merwin $51,000 worth, over $100,000 without tender and certified by the same men. These men were brought from New York just as Falconer who is the agent for Gunn, Richards & Co.; he is sent to Montreal for the rake-off, but every one of the men is an American. Here are the same scallywags, and they are proved to be scallywags, here are Brooks and Merwin selling $100,000 worth up to the 31st of March. The minister cannot expect us to pass items until he brings down the information in reference to this $40,000.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House except the item of $80,000 for maintenance of vessels, &c.

Mr. FOSTER. The question before us is much more important than the item, it is whether the minister should have anything given to his department at all.

Mr. MONK. I for one am not prepared to give anything until the returns are brought down.

Mr. BRODEUR. Let us understand what returns are to be brought down; about 15 have been asked for and I am having them copied as rapidly as possible. I brought down several in the last few days.

Mr. MONK. I am ready to vote other estimates.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will bring down tomorrow everything that is copied so far.

Mr. MONK. I am willing to take another department.

Mr. BENNETT. Take the Justice Department.

Mr. J. D. REID. We voted these estimates without explanation last year and now we find the money is used for another purpose.

Mr. BENNETT. The government must recognize that the opposition have some rights in this House. Here is the head of one of the largest spending departments in the government, the affairs of which are before the Public Accounts Committee day after day, and will be for the next two or three months if the session lasts, and we are not to have the report on which this expenditure is based, and in connection with which one hon. gentleman has charged open fraud and wants to see the vouchers. Surely the First Minister will see that our contention is right.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I see no reason why we should not on this occasion follow the course which is generally pursued. The opposition want certain information and they are entitled to it and must get it, and in the meantime we can reserve an item so that the question at issue may be fully discussed. The money must be voted and the public service carried on.

Mr. FOSTER. The course suggested by the Prime Minister is followed when it is a mere matter of information that is wanted, but if our contention is correct here grave matters are involved, and the right hon. gentleman will admit that a state of things might arise in the administration of a department by a minister which would justify the refusing of supplies to that minister. We have asked for information which has not been brought down and we have a perfect right to say that we must have that information before we entrust this minister with any more money. If any other minister is ready let him bring his supplies on. The papers when they come down may be so grave that the House might refuse to grant further supplies to the minister, and therefore it is not fair to say that this discussion can arise on an item which may be reserved.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman cites a very extreme case of the House refusing to vote money to a particular minister ; but the public service must be carried on and the money must be voted, and if the opposition thinks they should not entrust the minister with any more money they can follow the English practice and move on concurrence that the salary of the minister be reduced, thus expressing want of confidence in him. If hon. gentlemen opposite object to the expenditure altogether, that is another matter. But if they say they will not trust the minister, the recourse is open to them which I have pointed out. If we are not prepared to sit here until Doomsday we should make some progress. It is no pleasure for my hon. friend opposite to stay here ; I am in a different position from him, for I live in the city of Ottawa and it does not matter whether I am here or not.

Mr. FOSTER. You have got an unfair advantage in that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But I would like some day to see the blessing of prorogation and to take a breath of fresh air outside the city of Ottawa. Let us make some progress.

Mr. FOSTER. We must be fair as to who is stopping the business of the country. It is not the opposition. Two months ago the House ordered that a certain report should be brought down and the minister is trying to get his estimates through without complying with an order of the House. We think that should not be allowed. Concurrence is all very good, but my right hon. friend knows that when concurrence comes the items are very apt to be forgotten.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend has only to look at the estimates to see that there are a great many items yet to be passed on which discussion could take place. I think we have been three weeks on these estimates, and we have not yet passed a single item.

Mr. FOSTER. Just about three weeks we have been delayed because the minister is behind with his report.

Mr. SPROULE. The first minister says we should vote the items, but in every case we find that there is something radically wrong in the principle of the expenditure or that the money is being dishonestly expended. In the Merwin case the minister and his friends endeavoured in every way to prevent the information being brought out, but it was brought out at last in a round-about way. The result was that we found that parties were buying goods for the department and receiving a rake-off of 150 to 200 per cent on everything they purchased, and they purchased nearly $1,000,000 worth. When that matter was brought to light, we thought the practice would be stopped ; but this year we find that the same firm is purchasing on the same principle as before. Then we come to the furnishing of an ice-breaker for the same department, and we find that ten prices have been paid for the articles furnished. Now, were those prices ever paid ? We know the goods could not have been bought at those prices and been bought honestly, and the minister must have known it. The minister has been reorganizing the book-keeping of his department, and paying men as high as $75 a day and $5 a day for their board. When we inquired into that matter we found that these parties had never paid any such sum for their board. In the face of this condition of affairs in one branch after another of this department, why should we pass a single item of these estimates until we get the fullest information from the minister ?

Mr. BLAIN. I think we have had rather a strange exhibition of the minister to-night in respect to the accounts in his department. He has said on more than one occasion that he had a first class business system in his department. After an expenditure of $42,000 we had reason to expect a greatly improved system. We do not object to a liberal expenditure of money to bring the system up to date. But what do we find ? The minister, in the face of a criticism of his accounts, did not know whether he had a business method of doing business, and his assistant informed him that no vouchers had been put in for these accounts. Would it not appear to the minister himself that this one statement would arouse suspicion on the part of the members of the opposition, and cause them to refuse to vote any more money to this department until all the papers in regard to this and other items should be brought down ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are several resolutions each composed of several items, and if the House would give me the opportunity of explaining these items, I would be willing to leave one item of each resolution for further discussion, so that we might make some progress.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me that the minister is wholly unreasonable. Under ordinary circumstances the proposition of the Prime Minister is one that might be accepted ; but to-night is not the first time the information has been asked for. I must confess that the system of passing items and reserving one is not a very good one. It results in items being passed without full or proper discussion, and generally the reserved item comes up when everybody who wants information is absent. The hon. minister owes this committee an apology for having kept us several hours to-night when he had ample notice from several members that in order to make progress with his estimates it would be necessary for him to give this information. It is something that concerns himself personally and the system of keeping accounts in his department. We notified him that until we got that we would not go on.

Mr. BRODEUR. The last time my estimates were before the House nothing was passed because the opposition said they wanted some papers in connection with the Interior Department. But there was no question about these reports being absolutely needed.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will read the 'Hansard' he will find that the other day, when I asked for these reports, particularly the accounting one, I told him plainly it was necessary they should be brought down if he wished to pass his estimates.

Mr. MONK. When the hon. minister was told that we want the report giving an explanation of this expenditure of $50,000 in changing the system of bookkeeping in his department, he should have been prepared to take up some other item. But it is a different proposition for him to propose at one o'clock in the morning to pass certain portions of his estimates which need explanation, and that seems to indicate that he does not seem to realize the position we have taken. I would rather sit here right through until to-morrow afternoon than give way on that principle. I am ready to pass any other estimates, but not these.

Mr. J. D. REID. This item of the services of the experts refers to every item of the department. It is absolutely necessary to have it, and the minister is very unfair in asking us to proceed before he brings down these reports which he promised.

Mr. TAYLOR. This item is for the expenditure of the steamer which patrolled the northern waters of Canada. I quoted from a speech made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) not long ago in which he said: Why should any Reformer be ashamed of anything connected with that expenditure, when in 1894-5, the year in which great complaint was made of the expenditure, $105,000 was spent, in 1895-6, $12,830, and in 1896-7, $11,588. That shows how little you can depend on statements made by ministers. I have here the expenditures on that steamer and for nine months they amount to $63,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Which steamer?

Mr. TAYLOR. The 'Arctic.' If you add a third to that it comes to nearly $84,000 for the year, and yet the minister said it was only $11,000. Let me take up the items making this amount. They will be found on page P—34 of the Auditor General's Report:

Remuneration of technical or professional staff—Fabien Vanasse, historian, nine months to March 31, 1907, at $125; arrears for 1905-6, $200. $1,325.

What is the necessity of carrying a historian on the steamer 'Arctic' while patrolling the northern waters? The Minister of Agriculture said in Sherbrooke that the expense was only $11,500, but the Auditor General's Report shows it was $63,000 for nine months. What was the necessity of carrying a historian on that boat?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do you object to the historian?

Mr. TAYLOR. I think Captain Bernier was sufficient historian.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there a report of the historian?

Mr. BRODEUR. He is preparing one. We employed a historian because discoveries have been made by the 'Arctic.' Not only discoveries, but she also visited islands which were discovered some years ago. We have to make a research into everything connected with a discovery and have a complete history of those islands.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they archives in each of those places?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are cairns which have been found there, showing the time those islands were visited formerly and the things left there. In most of the cases reported to me, those things they have found correspond entirely with the reports published.

Mr. FOSTER. What did Vanasse do with a cairn when he found it?

Mr. BRODEUR. Everything in connection with the finding of the cairn he investigated.

Mr. FOSTER. When Mr. Vanasse is approaching a cairn what does he do?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether he was always himself in charge of the expedition.

Mr. FOSTER. The vessel stops at certain places and immediately Vanasse goes out to look for cairns. Show us how he approached one, what he did after he found it, and what he did with it when he did find it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose he would look to see what was the nature of that cairn.

Mr. FOSTER. What would it be made of?

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose he would tell us how it was made, in what condition it was and all the facts in connection with it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Toronto 'Star,' which is a government organ that received patronage of $150 yesterday for advertising something about some summer resort, has given a better history of the trip than Mr. Vanasse could do. Here is what the Toronto 'Star,' the government's own organ, said about Captain Bernier's trip. I know it will be interesting to the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to hear it:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Let me hear it.

Mr. TAYLOR (reading):

Captain Bernier is back from the Arctic regions. He brings with him a cold in the head and a large number of interviews for the reporters. The real treasures he leaves behind in the frozen seas, properly ticketed so that there will be no mistakes about ownership.

For many years now Captain Bernier has cherished the desire of finding the north pole, but the north pole is obdurate, although the world agrees that if ever the pole were going to reveal itself it would be to the indomitable courage of Captain Bernier. Such was the perseverance of this noble man in high endeavour that, until his efforts were placed on a government footing, hardly a year passed that he did not take up a collection. Undaunted was he by wreck and hunger and darkness and horrid cold. He could not pick up a newspaper without reading disaster, but he looked these terrors gaily in the face, and, humming a merry song the while, passed the hat with undismayed zeal. This went on for years, and every year Captain Bernier brought out a new scheme for reaching the pole, enduring the hardships of the dreadful voyage in the most jocund spirit. Presently his explorations brought him to the House of Commons at Ottawa, and there the captain made a great hit as a vote discoverer. It was a sight for sore eyes to see the brave navigator seated in No. 16, his pipe in his hand and a thrilling sea tale on his lips.

Mr. BENNETT. I rise to make a correction. The captain does not smoke. It is only fair to make that statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. (Reading):

To behold him there, surrounded by the dangers he was prepared to encounter—the Arctic silence, broken only by the seals gargling the long Arctic night, so long that a poker game once started has to last six months, the northern lights with their fierce blinding glare untempered by lamp shades—to behold him thus, girdled with perils, was, we repeat a heroic spectacle. No. 16 melted to this bold spirit. The captain sailed clean through the ice of reserve which besets most governments and secured an appropriation. With the appropriation was bought and stocked the 'Arctic.' The 'Arctic' was brought across the Atlantic under her own steam, the captain handling her as if to the binnacle born, ably assisted by a crew of French journalists. The voyage was a great success. There were four meals a day, and the main brace was spliced every hour. It was felt that the captain had established his right to take his ship anywhere that a man may go on pemmican, pâté-de-foie-gras, truffles, and certain other bare necessaries of life. The pole has not yielded to the captain. It still keeps its secret just as the end of the rainbow still hides its pot of gold.

The captain has not been able to put into effect his ingenious plan of sailing three hundred and fifty miles northwest of the pole, and then drifting back to it. He has never realized his dream of climbing the blamed thing, striking a fine attitude and waving a Union Jack from the top of the world. He has done none of these things, but the Arctic is, nevertheless the wonder of the northern seas. Captain Bernier may not have found the pole, but he can find an island with his eyes shut. Let it disguise itself how it will with wrappings of ice, there is no fooling Captain Bernier. He just scrapes the rind off with his knife, and there's the island underneath, and, sooner than you can say Jack Robinson, swifter than second base can put in on the runner, quicker even than Toronto University can tack an LL.D. on a distinguished visitor, Captain Bernier has the island down on the chart, latitude and longitude noted, and the British flag flying from the highest iceberg on the part of the map. Captain Bernier is the greatest island namer and claimer in the business. With its terrific speed—four knots an hour under forced draught—the 'Arctic' can overhaul any island that was ever made. When the 'Arctic' is seen in the offing, bearing down on an island, the island feels at once that it cannot get away from such a relentless pursuer as Captain Bernier, to say nothing of the fact that islands in those waters are generally weighted down with ice, which interferes even more than barnacles to prevent them showing an enemy a clean pair of heels.

There is an editorial article from the Toronto 'Star'.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) was reading from a Conservative pamphlet.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am reading from a copy of a speech of my own in which this article is reproduced. But I have the 'Star' in my desk containing this article.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) was discussing the salary of Mr. Vanasse, the historian of this expedition.

Mr. TAYLOR. We were discussing the expenses of patrolling the northern waters, and Captain Bernier's salary and the expenses of the expedition of the 'Arctic' come under that. Now, as the minister has explained this payment to Mr. Vanasse—

Mr. FOSTER. No, we want some further information. When did Mr. Vanasse's services commence? How much has he been paid? How much longer is it contemplated that this cairn-seeking and recording shall be continued?

Mr. BRODEUR. The salary of Mr. Vanasse began September 17, 1904, at $1,500 per annum. The amount paid him thus far is $4,808.33.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he still in the employ of the department and if, so, how long is it contemplated that his services shall continue ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, he is now preparing a report in connection with the last expedition.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he prepared a report of the first expedition ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, there is a report in the department.

Mr. FOSTER. I had supposed that this report was of great historical value. Why did the minister not think it worth while either to reprint it in his annual report or bring it down to this House ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I thought it would be well to have the two reports come together.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the minister to bring down Mr. Vanasse's report before this goes through. Now in all seriousness, I ask what historical work of value Mr. Vanasse has done. I asked the hon. minister and he struggled and almost toppled over himself in trying to explain.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) object that we should have this record ? Does he object that we should have more information on this subject ?

Mr. FOSTER. Bless you, no. I do not object to the information ? But does the right hon. gentleman think that the captain and officers keeping a record of every days proceedings, could not put down the record of a cairn being on such a place ? That is all Mr. Vanasse can tell about it. Does it require a high salaried man to give a description of a cairn ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. $1,800 is a great salary.

Mr. FOSTER. Because it is an absolutely unnecessary salary. Now what has Mr. Vanasse done in those three years? How many cairns has he dissected, and what information has he got about them? What has he done to justify his employment for three years, and paying him $4,800 for work that could be done by the officers of the ship, and done just as well?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have the greatest respect for Captain Bernier as a navigator, but I do not think that in wielding the pen he is the equal of Mr. Vanasse. $1,800 is not a very high salary for Mr. Vanasse. My hon. friend implies that it was a political appointment. The hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Vanasse is not a friend of ours, he is a friend of his.

Mr. FOSTER. What else has he done except examining cairns?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Vanasse was appointed as a historian to visit a large number of islands. Those islands have been described previously in other books, and it is essential that we should employ a competent man to examine them and review previous descriptions of the islands, and to state whether such descriptions are correct.

Mr. FOSTER. If you have a historian and he does his work, why don't we have his report? You ask us to vote his salary for another year. Let us have a sample of his work. Do you propose sending him back next year?

Mr. BRODEUR. That was the intention; but in view of the criticism of my hon. friend, I will consider whether we shall retain the services of Mr. Vanasse. He is a gentleman of good education, has been a newspaper man for many years, and has taken a good deal of interest in historical matters.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not criticising Mr. Vanasse, but I am criticising the policy of employing a historian for the purposes stated. Let the minister bring down the historian's report, and we will be able to see whether it is worth anything.

Mr. BUREAU. The criticism which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has made of Mr. Vanasse, might be applied to himself. Mr. Vanasse for many years wrote the history of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec, and wrote it so successfully that the people in that province abandoned that party and voted for the Liberal party. Now he asks for the head of Mr. Vanasse and when the minister suggests his removal, he says : Oh, stand up and fight like a man. It is simply the hon. member's desire to criticise something or nothing.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to call the attention of the minister to the equipment of the first Arctic expedition as he was not minister at that time, and to ask him if the next expedition will be as thoroughly equipped. Take, for instance, candles. I find the Arctic had 36 pounds of candles. Has the minister there the estimate for candles for this expedition ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not the estimate for candles. In consequence of seeing such highway robbery in connection with the 'Arctic,' it was enough to make one think that there was something of the kind going on in every department.

Mr. BUREAU. Highway robbery is a favourite expression of his.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, it is quite an ordinary thing to hear it in the country in connection with public expenditures.

Mr. BUREAU. The country does not share your views very largely.

Mr. BENNETT. That may be. There are many things that are not shared because many members draw one indemnity and my hon. friend draws two.

Mr. BUREAU. I deny that. I draw my indemnity according to law.

Mr. BENNETT. As my hon. friend is in the Justice Department his opinion must be taken on a point of law.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are getting away from the item.

Mr. BENNETT. That is on account of the untimely interruption of the Solicitor General.

Mr. BUREAU. It was because of the unfounded accusation you made.

Mr. BENNETT. I see in the accounts for 1906 : Mr. Jacques Bureau, of Three Rivers, 72 days absences, $1,420, and then 96 days absences, $1,030.

Mr. BUREAU. Add these two together and you will see they do not amount to two indemnities nor to one full indemnity.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman was on strike for a very considerable time last session and he was absent, but I must protest against even such a genial gentleman as the Solicitor General drawing me away from this trip of the 'Arctic.' Can the minister say how many photographs were taken by photographer McKeen ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Can he say how many were taken by photographer Lancefield?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr BENNETT. Has the minister seen them?

Mr. BRODEUR. Some of them.

Mr. BENNETT. Will they be published in a book ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Some of them may.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it is not carried.

Mr. BOYCE. The patrolling of our northern seas is a matter of great expense and of great moment to the country. We have our interests up there to protect and police, but the expense in doing this has been lavish, and in 1907 there was attributable to this account $132,697.52. Would the hon. minister give me the names of the vessels which patrol these waters?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Arctic' was the only one.

Mr. BOYCE. The 'Arctic' is pretty well known throughout the country and it has given the public considerable information regarding the internal workings of the Marine Department. Might I ask the minister how long the 'Arctic' was engaged on her last cruise?

Mr. BRODEUR. She started on the 27th July, 1906, and came back the 19th of October.

Mr. BOYCE. Were any customs posts established on the mainland or on any of the islands during the last cruise and what mounted police posts were established ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Minister of Customs would be the proper one to give information about the customs ports.

Mr. BOYCE. How many customs ports were established?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is one now at Fort Churchill.

Mr. BOYCE. As far as we can see, there has been nothing done for all this expenditure. During all the time the 'Arctic' was patrolling the northern waters nothing appears to have been discovered, no patrol work done, no patrol or police posts established and no customs ports. It must be discouraging for the minister to ask another vote, when so far the only result from this patrolling of the 'Arctic' has been the discovery of a few cairns. That is what has been gained by this expenditure of $63,845.

Mr. FOSTER. We have asked the minister for information which it is proper and constitutional we should receive, but, that information has not been furnished. There is no brute force in this chamber that can force a vote through unless that information is furnished. Not one-tenth or one-fiftieth of the questions that have been asked the minister has he been able to answer.

Mr. BRODEUR. When hon. gentlemen are prepared to seriously consider the items, I shall give answers to questions if I have the information here.

Mr. SINCLAIR. In answer to a question I was informed that the printing of 'Hansard' cost $5.43 a column. I have calculated that since the obstruction indulged in by our hon. friends began, we have used up about fifty pages of 'Hansard,' or about two hundred columns, which would cost $1,086. That is the cost of these hon. gentlemen's obstruction and there is no pretense that they are asking seriously for information.

That is the expenditure the hon. gentlemen opposite have indulged in to-night. They are not making any pretense themselves that they are asking any information. One gentleman asks what a canoe is, and another gentleman wants to know what a hot water bag is, and another says he won't agree to pass the item until he knows what customs duty is collected at Fort Churchill. The hon. gentlemen opposite are obstructing the business of the House at a great deal of cost. As one of the quiet members I protest against that. While gentlemen opposite talk about the prices of one and a half dozen shirts for $16.50 they have spent thousands of dollars in obstructing the business of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) will turn round to the minister in front of him and read him that lesson that will be a proper application of that homily. I put it to the members on both sides whether if the returns were brought down as they ought to have been and as the minister thinks they ought to have been there would not have been this discussion to-night. We want that information before the minister's estimates get into his hands. These are vital points and we emphasise them and we have to judge of what we consider vital points. It is our constitutional right to get the information. If there has been any obstruction it is due to the course of the Minister of Marine.

Mr. FIELDING. The Prime Minister gave a proper answer to that to-night, when he said that the information is proper information and should be furnished, but we are not disposing of the entire estimates of the Marine Department to-night. There will be hundreds of other opportunities of obtaining that information, but it must be remembered that day after day and week after week these estimates have been presented to the House, and while I will not say that there has been obstruction, I can say that we have not made any progress. It is in the public interest that the opposition should exercise its right of criticism but after that the public will expect that this parliament of Canada will do business. Reasonable progress being made with the estimates to-night does not prevent criticism and I appeal to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that he should assist the government in making reasonable progress with the business of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot admit the principle that the government must choose our time for making our criticism.

Mr. FIELDING. I admit that.

Mr. FOSTER. We have been put off about this information time and time again and when we are told to wait for concurrence, every one knows that no criticism can be made in concurrence. The Minister of Marine has not been diligent in bringing down this information. To tell the truth, what we do think is that he is wanting to get through his estimates before these matters have been brought down and can be thoroughly examined. We cannot stand for that. Bring on any other estimates of any other department and we will help you to make progress, but at this point in these estimates we must have information. We cannot consent to the Minister of Marine getting these items through unless he gives the information he is asked for. I am sorry to have to state that so frankly.

Mr. FIELDING. If we were now dealing with the estimates of the Minister of Marine in a way that would shut out reasonable criticism the position of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) would be well taken. But when we consider that the Minister of Marine has page after page of estimates yet to be discussed and criticised, that puts another face on the matter. It cannot be pretended that the passage of these particular items will restrict the opportunity of inquiry by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot make an effective protest unless we do it at the time.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has made his protest.

Mr. FOSTER. The only effective protest is one that brings the desired end. We may be a litle more sensitive than we otherwise would be because there has been an attempt to override the rights of the opposition in the matter of original documents and in other respects. We have had to try to substantiate our position and uphold our rights. If the government wants to make progress, which we are anxious to help them to make consonant with our rights, the Minister of Marine will give us the information or the government will take some other estimates. I protest against this sort of all night warfare if there is any way of avoiding it.

Mr. FIELDING. I agree it is very undesirable.

Mr. BENNETT. No part of the public expenditure will be more bitterly opposed than this $50,000 for the accounts in the Marine Department.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend think that by passing this item he interferes in the slightest degree with the opportunity to criticise these estimates.

Mr. BENNETT. Not at all, but the Minister of Marine week after week has tried to evade bringing down the details of these Bills. When a minister deliberately defies the opposition the Minister of Finance knows that the opposition will take the bit in their teeth and make that minister come to time. The Minister of Finance knows what this trial of strength means. We who are here can talk for two or three hours and there are a dozen men in the building who will take their turn later on and there are 20 who are willing to come up at eight o'clock.

Mr. BUREAU. As a matter of information might I ask the hon. gentleman if he will let no estimates go through unless this particular return is brought down ?

Mr. BENNETT. For my part I would insist that not one cent be voted to the Minister of Marine until he does the decent thing by the House. I want to be friendly with the Minister of Marine but I do say that he defies everything and everybody and treats us all in a cavalier way.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is very unfair to say that I want to defy the opposition. I may tell the hon. gentleman that as soon as these papers were asked for I gave instructions to the department to prepare the report immediately. I have been pressing the officers of the department and since the hon. gentleman has put it on that ground I will have to protect myself because I am not at all responsible. I may say that four days ago I prepared a memorandum to the deputy and I said: I want all these returns brought down. I knew that the hon. member (Mr. Foster) was asking for these returns every day and he was in his right. It is not fair to say that I am responsible. I have never tried to defy the opposition in any way, quite the reverse. I want to throw the responsibility where the responsibility should be thrown. These papers should be brought down. They were sent to me the other day and they were not complete, and I was as anxious as any one else to have the documents brought down. It is not my fault they were not brought down. I have been doing my best. There is someone who is responsible for that and they will suffer the responsibility.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister has been pressed day after day to bring this report down, and when it was intimated to him to-night that it was required why did he not consent to have the other estimates gone on with. The Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General were here and I have not a doubt but that almost all the items of the Justice Department would have been passed. Talk about Horatius on the bridge holding back the whole crowd of them; why any opposition can hold up any government. In the Remedial Bill debate a handful of men kept the House not for two or three days but for weeks and now it is only a question till next Saturday night.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to draw the attention of the committee and the country to the peculiar doctrine which has just been announced by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not propose that should pass without being emphasized. The Minister of Marine says he is not responsible for his department as he ordered the return to be prepared and it was not prepared and he is not responsible. The minister is absolutely responsible. The minister who does not take the responsibility for his department and shoulder it in the House is not a brave man. You will find no responsible minister in any responsible governed country that will dare stand by a doctrine like that. He can discipline his department. He has to take the faults of his department along with its virtues. He has got to shoulder the responsibility in this House for his department, and it is a petty thing, it is a cowardly thing for a minister to step out upon his officer and declare that he himself is not responsible.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The word used by the hon. gentleman is unparliamentary.

Mr. FOSTER. I will take back cowardly, and say it is not a manly thing. It is not constitutional. The merest tyro in parliamentary life knows that to have a minister get up and wreak his petty spite on some official because he has failed in his duty to get the information to parliament. If he cannot get the information the minister should hold his estimates. To state to us that we are to be punished for the faults of his department and in that petty way to throw it upon his subordinates is an example which fortunately this parliament has never before seen and I hope never will again.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have several times tried to explain to the hon. gentleman how this occurred, and the hon. gentleman has no right to say that I have shirked any responsibility for my department. Large number of returns have been asked for and some have been brought down and some have not, and I have been told there was no time in the department to prepare them all. And now in face of this declaration of mine the hon. gentleman attacks me and says I am defying the opposition. I repeat that that statement is not correct. I am shirking no responsibility so far as a minister ought to be responsible. However, these lessons will serve me and teach me to protect myself, and as I understand the hon. gentleman it is that I should punish those that are responsible.

Mr. FOSTER. I should not think that a minister would stand up in parliament to boast that he was going to decapitate his subordinate because of his own failings. Why has he not got his office in proper control? If I were a minister I would leave it to the opposition to attack my department. If there is any honour in a man he defends his own department and if there is any trouble inside his department he washes his dirty linen within the department. It is the last resort of a certain kind of man to do as this gentleman has done to-night and I hope such an example will never again be shown by a minister in the Canadian parliament. In all my experience I have never yet heard a minister get up and attack his own department in the House.

Mr. MONK. The action of the opposition to-night is entirely justified. The House was moved into Committee of Supply at 3 o'clock, and the afternoon was largely occupied in a discussion by supporters of the government. The Minister of Marine had stated that he intends cutting out some one in his department who is responsible for the delay about these documents. It is he himself who is responsible. When at 10 o'clock the House went into Committee of Supply the member for North Toronto stated our position in such a way that a man with ordinary tact would have seen that these estimates of the department should not be proceeded with. The Minister of Marine should have had the information produced long ago, and having failed to do so he says he intends sacking the man who has not had the papers ready.

Mr. BUREAU. He never said that.

Mr. MONK. He said he intended punishing the man.

Mr. BUREAU. He said he would lay the blame where he believed it belongs.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) makes a calculation of dollars and cents that are being spent in this obstruction. As far as I am concerned, I have no scruples in incurring expenditure for the maintenance of a right which is at the very root of this institution, and without which we might as well go home and go back to the old days when estimates were not voted at all. I am ready to pass votes in other departments, but it would be beneath the dignity of the opposition and its sense of duty for us to give way. My right hon. friend suggested that we should practically give in and vote sums of money after the position we took at the very beginning that this item should be reserved. My hon. friends opposite, when they sat on this side, have often had to resort to this means, and would never, under similar circumstances, consent to an adjournment.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sorry to hear the hon. gentleman putting this on the ground of anybody giving in, like two school children having a quarrel. I do not think there need be any question of giving in. These items have been discussed at great length for days and weeks, and I can see no reason why the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should not ask that the remaining item, which has been before the House a long time, should be passed. Every hon. gentleman opposite knows that he has a thousand opportunities of continuing his criticism of the department. Several weeks have elapsed since my hon. colleague submitted his estimates, and all we ask the House is to pass the item and reserve the fullest opportunity of discussing the expenditure of the department on the many items which will still come up. We ought to give some assurance to the country that we are trying to do business, and we can do that without in the slightest degree minimizing or diminishing the right of the opposition to the fullest criticism. Let us pass this item, which has been hanging so long a time, and let the minister hold up his other estimates until he has brought down this return which hon. gentlemen say they regard as essential.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman admits that, he admits the whole thing. One little item does not make the least difference.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the remaining item of a group, which has been before the committee for weeks.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend ought not to forget either that if this minister has been days and days without getting any of his estimates through, he has been the same number of days without giving us the information we are entitled to.

Mr. FIELDING. He answered a great many questions and gave a lot of information.

Mr. FOSTER. The very things we wanted, he did not bring down.

Mr. FIELDING. What he did bring down you wanted, but you want more.

Mr. FOSTER. Not very much more.

Mr. BRODEUR. Neither I nor my colleagues will be able to pass the estimates this session if each item must wait until every return is brought down. There are some ten to fifteen returns which I have not yet brought down but which are being copied. The hon. gentleman said to-night that the last time he brought this matter up, he said that if the return was not brought down, my estimates would not go through. I have been looking through 'Hansard' and I do not find that.

Mr. FOSTER. I said that not once but many times.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then it is not reported in 'Hansard.'

Mr. FOSTER. I certainly said it several times.

Mr. BRODEUR. Just to show there is something behind this obstruction, the hon. gentleman wanted the other day some returns concerning my travelling expenses. By what he has read to-night, there were two motions made—one for my expenses from 1906 to date, since I have been Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the other not only for the expenses from 1904 to 1906, but also for my expenses from 1906 to date, thus asking twice for the same information. I brought down the information he wanted in one case, but he said he wanted the other two and if not brought down, my estimates would not proceed. That is not fair.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not?

Mr. BRODEUR. Because most of the information the hon. gentleman wanted was brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. Most of the information is never the information. How does my hon. friend know that the most important information is brought down ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Why then did the hon. gentleman duplicate his request ?

Mr. FOSTER. If it is duplicated, that is done over and over again. No minister is bound to duplicate a return which he has already furnished. He need not give in the second return what he gave in the first. But the information from 1904 to 1906 is just as important to me as the information from 1906 to 1907, and it would not have taken my hon. friend fifteen minutes to have got it.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have not got it in the department. We would have to go to some other department.

Mr. FOSTER. How long would it take to walk over to the other department and find out the state of the cheques ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It might not take very long but the information the hon. gentleman wanted was already before the House. If he will consult the Auditor General's Report for 1904-5, he will there find the information.

Mr. FOSTER. I can go through the Auditor General's Report if I choose to wade through it but it is just as easy for some employee of the minister to do that. There is scarcely a return we ask for which we could not make up ourselves in the same way, but that is not the theory of the practice. Besides you cannot get all I ask for in the Auditor General's Report because I want the history of the minister's refunds.

Mr. BRODEUR. Everything appears in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FOSTER. If the minister wants to chop straws, he can do it. I am not going to wade through the report. The House granted the motion for the return and we should have it.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman was asking for a report, which he did not ask for until the House sat to-day. These returns were asked for long ago. The other report is a very substantial one, and I made every effort possible to get it.

Mr. MONK. If this were merely a little question of criticism, what the Finance Minister says is perfectly right; but I lay down the principle that if we are to get through the estimates when two returns are ordered having reference to his department and the serious phase of the administration of that department, and when we say that we will not continue voting money for that department until the order of the House has been complied with, the duty of the minister is to comply with that order. The demand is a perfectly reasonable one. Under ordinary circumstances, we should reserve the right of criticism as the minister suggests, but the case here is altogether different.

Mr. J. D. REID. This very item we have before the Public Accounts Committee. The papers are there and we are going to have an investigation there. We want the result of that investigation before we can discuss this item properly. I do not think it is fair to press an item like that through the House before we have an opportunity of investigating it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Why not have said at once that you do not want to proceed with my estimates until the Public Accounts Committee has finished its investigation?

Mr. J. D. REID. This is the reason why I think the item should stand. We have the papers before the Public Accounts Committee for the 'Arctic' expenditure and that is the reason why we should allow this item to stand. As far as I am personally concerned, I would have no objection to our going right on with other departments. But it is not fair for the government to try and press through the estimates of the Department of Marine which is being investigated a great deal in the Public Accounts Committee. There are other departments, such as the Department of Finance concerning which there is not the same investigation going on. Why are not the estimates of the Department of the Interior brought down instead of taking up a department which is being investigated ? We shall be glad to help with the estimates if the government will take up some other department. The Finance Minister should take the situation into consideration and let this stand.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend must not forget that this House has now been sitting nearly three months and it is rather late to say now that we will stop the estimates until we have an investigation by the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. J. D. REID. There are other departments.

Mr. FIELDING. The passing of these estimates will not stop investigation. It is a question whether the expenditure has been wise or extravagant.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is a question whether we shall vote the amount.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman knows that this estimate is put in to be voted. He may say that in his judgment it is extravagant, but he cannot say that the House will not vote the money.

Mr. J. D. REID. We might take a vote.

Mr. FIELDING. You have that right on concurrence. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) smiles. No doubt he is thinking of the days when he pleaded for concurrence and then slipped things along. I quite agree that there are times when the members are not here on concurrence, but when there is a grave and serious question to be voted, no one would lose the opportunity of putting himself on record, and we cannot deny the opposition the opportunity to criticise and vote and put themselves on record. But I do believe we should make some progress with the estimates.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. These estimates should not pass unless we are assured of the correctness of every item. Take for instance the item of turnips, which is a small one if you like, but it illustrates my point. They are charged at $3 a barrel in the Auditor General's Report. When any one in Canada can buy them for at least 35 cents to 50 cents a barrel.

Mr. FIELDING. I would despise not small things, but does my hon. friend imagine that if we pass this item he will not have an opportunity a hundred times before the session is over of waxing eloquent on the turnip question ?

Mr. BOYCE. Here we have an item of $50,000 concerning which the minister is asked very cogent and relevant questions. For instance, he was asked if he had established any customs ports out of this expenditure and was unable to answer. He referred me to the Minister of Customs for that information. Then I asked him what was the classification of the crew and he said he would bring that information down before the vote passed.

Mr. BRODEUR. If I had thought for one minute that my hon. friend was serious, I would have referred him to the Auditor General's Report where he will find the names of the crew—page P—34.

Mr. BOYCE. When I asked him for particulars as to where these mounted police posts were established, the reply I got was that he was not going to answer such silly questions.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call the attention of the minister to some of the occasions on which I inquired for these returns. On February 11, I asked :

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), and in his absence of the right hon. the First Minister, to the fact that the hon. gentleman has not brought down a single return asked for, by myself at least, during the whole session, and has pleaded on several occasions that he was hard up for time and clerks. On December 8, and December 18, and later on certain papers—not very important, many of them—were called for and the returns ordered, but I have not yet received a single one. Among these were papers with reference to travelling expenses which could be got up in fifteen minutes. The estimates of Marine and Fisheries are to be on this afternoon, and I will urge the hon. minister to have more expedition used in his department.

Later the Minister of Marine and Fisheries entered the chamber and said :

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has inquired whether the return concerning the accounting of the books of the Department of Marine and Fisheries has yet been brought down. I have had inquiries made again, and find that it has been written and a comparison is now being made. It is a very voluminous report, but it will be ready immediately.

Mr. BRODEUR. If you read on you will see.

Mr. FOSTER (reading).

Mr. FOSTER. There are three or four others which are not voluminous.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have one here.

Mr. DANIEL. There is no desire on the part of any one on this side of the House to engage in obstruction, but we do and must protest against the extravagant manner in which the 'Arctic' expedition was fitted out. Goods were bought without any request for tenders; they were bought at excessive prices, and the receipt of goods was taken in such a slovenly manner that the officers whose duty it was to see that the goods were there were not in a position to say whether the goods were delivered or not. That is not the way in which a ship owner or a ship outfitter does his business; he must look closer into his business arrangements than that or else he would have no ships and no means of living. It is wrong that the money of the people of the country should be wasted in such a manner when there are so many legitimate ways in which that money could be spent to advantage. In looking over the crew of the 'Arctic,' I find Fabien Vanasse, historian, had $125 a month. I do not know what are his qualifications, but if he is acquainted with the peculiarities of the country and knew what to look for and what he should record, I think he would be very cheap indeed at that price. As my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. McLean) suggests, if this historian went into particulars and gave us a history of what really took place, we would have one of the most interesting books probably issued since the time of Jules Vernes.

Mr. CARON. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the historian engaged on the 'Arctic' was an unjustifiable expense ?

Mr. DANIEL. It is impossible to answer that question, because no one has ever read any history he has yet written. We have no report as to what he has done.

Mr. CARON. If the hon. gentleman had listened to the remarks of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he would know that the report of Mr. Vanasse is now being produced and will probably be in print by the end of the session or next session.

Mr. DANIEL. I am very glad to know that in a year or two at least we shall get that report.

Mr. CARON. I said that he was writing his work.

Mr. DANIEL. Then it is utterly impossible for us to judge its value.

Mr. CARON. But my hon. friend should wait until the report is produced before passing any judgment.

Mr. DANIEL. I shall look forward to receiving a copy of the report with a great deal of interest, because if we take the cruise of the 'Neptune' every one must admit that that is a very interesting and instructive little book. If Mr. Vanasse is able to give us a history as interesting and valuable as that, I am quite sure no one will find fault with his having been made one of the crew of the 'Arctic.'

Mr. LANCTOT. The hon. gentleman will admit he is a very intelligent man and worth the price we pay him, because he belongs to the hon. gentleman's party.

Mr. DANIEL. I think that that is a point in his favour, although I would not take that as any special reason why he was employed by this government. If, when Mr. Vanasse's report comes in, it is at all equal in value to the report of the cruise of the 'Neptune,' I shall be very well satisfied that the money has been very well expended. I would not consider at all that $125 a month was anything more, to say the least, than he was entitled to. The next gentleman on the list, I notice, is J. P. Pepin, physician. He only gets $100 a month.

Mr. LEONARD. He has no diploma.

Mr. DANIEL. I was going to find fault with the Marine Department for paying so small a salary, but I understand he is not a qualified man.

Mr. CARON. Does the hon. gentleman say that the salary ought to be increased?

Mr. DANIEL. I do not know that it will be necessary to increase them all, but in the case of a professional man, I think that if qualified he is entitled to a larger amount.

Mr. LANCTOT. I know Mr. Pepin. He comes from my county, and he is perfectly satisfied with his salary. I may add the government is well disposed to Mr. Vanasse if his own party do not make too much trouble.

Mr. DANIEL. If Mr. Pepin is satisfied, I think probably he is getting enough. With regard to the other men, no doubt their wages are such as are paid under ordinary circumstances. Then there is the question of the new system of bookkeeping in the Marine Department. That cost us $50,000. That seems a large amount to pay for a new set of books and we should have the fullest particulars. The idea of paying an accountant $75 a day, another $50, another $30, and so on down to $15. I do not think you will find in any other department of the government any such extravagant prices paid accountants. We have had no explanation why such large salaries were paid. Was any arrangement made with these gentlemen as to the amount they should receive for their services, or were they employed and then allowed to make any charge they pleased? Were these accountants paid individually by cheque or in what way were the payments made? The only information we have had so far is that there are no vouchers in the department for these payments at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. The accountant is out just now. If my hon. friend will ask me some questions pertinent to the item under discussion, I will give him the information.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. minister will look at page P—35 of the Auditor General's report he will find that Captain Bernier drew besides his wages travelling and small outlays, $113.66. Where did he go and what was the outlay?

Mr. BRODEUR. Capt. Bernier does not remember exactly.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the hon. gentleman should allow the item to stand. The Captain is here and we want to know where that money was spent. Right alongside this item is an item of hotel expenses, April, May and June, $691. At what hotels did the Captain stay and how much a day did he pay?

Mr. BRODEUR. As far as I can remember that was in Ottawa here.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is a charge for storage batteries, $234.60, where did the Captain purchase that?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was got for a motor boat. He does not remember the name, but those accounts are before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest as it is now almost seven o'clock that we should make progress with some other item in Marine and Fisheries and if my hon. friends are so anxious to have this particular item stand we will allow it to stand. The facilities of the House for refreshment are not good at this early hour in the morning, although they are good later in the day.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not another item in Marine and Fisheries. Let us take an item in Northwest Mounted Police; we will ask very little information in regard to Northwest Mounted Police.

Mr. FIELDING. But the Prime Minister is not here and we have not the information. The officials of the Marine and Fisheries Department have been here all night.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see that he has not made any progress. He has been very brusque with the members of the opposition. I hope that some person will learn a lesson.

Mr. J. EMILE LEONARD (Laval), (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I think I would be lacking in courtesy if I did not endeavour to meet the wishes of the hon. gentlemen on your right who several times have called upon the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) to speak French, in the course of the eloquent remarks he has just addressed to the House.

Mr. J. B. T. CARON (Ottawa), (Translation.) The hon. member may rest assured that we have perfectly understood what was said by the hon. member for St. John.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) The hon. member for St. John read the report of an investigation made by a committee of this House in connection with the 'Arctic.' It was a minority report.

Mr. CARON. (Translation.) What was the date of that report?

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) 1906. I understand that the hon. member for Ottawa is not aware of what occurred here in 1906. I notice the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not in his seat; I shall await his return, as I have a few questions I would like him to answer.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE (Kamouraska), (Translation.) May I draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he has not as yet made any inquiries?

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) No, I shall await the return of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. CARON. (Translation.) The hon. Minister of Finance is in his seat and will answer all questions which the hon. member may put.

Hon. J. BUREAU (Solicitor General). (Translation.) If the hon. member will put his questions, we are in a position to answer them.

Mr. A. LANCTOT (Richelieu). (Translation.) If the hon. member will put his question, the hon. Solicitor General may be in a position to give him an answer.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) As the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not here just now, and as I notice the hon. member for Richelieu in his seat, will he kindly state who are those men that a Mr. Chapdelaine engaged at Sorel, as shown at page P—35 of the Auditor General's Report?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) They belong to the crew of the 'Arctic.'

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) When the hon. minister left the room a few minutes ago, I was about to refer to the report of the minority, which I alluded to above; it was for the benefit of the young member for Ottawa (Mr. Caron). That report is to be found at page 6678 of 'Hansard' for 1906. (And the hon. member for Laval read numerous quotations from said report.)

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We ought to have some information to show what the country has gained by this expedition of the steamer 'Arctic.' What is the number of fishing licenses issued and what is the amount collected?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have issued ten whaling licenses. We thought it necessary to insist on licenses being paid by those who want to fish. Otherwise these people, if left alone for many years, would consider themselves the proprietors of these islands and ignore Canada entirely. I do not know if the hon. gentleman objects to that, but we consider it is one of the duties of this country to look after our own territory and have every part of it visited and surveyed. Would my hon. friend let the Americans, for example, take advantage of our supineness and take possession of that country; if so, I am not of his opinion, and I think I would be supported by the House when I ask for the necessary amount of money to show that Canada has jurisdiction there.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am sure that everyone on this side is anxious that we should maintain our jurisdiction over these islands, but we are entitled to know what is being done in return for the large amount of money we are expending by sending this boat out there. The hon. minister tells us that only ten fishing licenses were issued last year, which is all that the expedition has accomplished. The House is entitled to know the amount collected from the licensees and the names of the men who took out fishing licenses.

Mr. BRODEUR. The amount of money collected last year for licenses was $1,500. The names of the men are Miles, Mackay, Adams, and Motche, and the charge for each license is $50.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Are they British subjects?

Mr. BRODEUR. I could not say. They might be American citizens.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Surely you do not charge Canadians the same as Americans.

Mr. BRODEUR. The law does not make any difference, and my hon. friend is equally responsible with myself because he supported the government which passed the law.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. What privilege does the license give?

Mr. BRODEUR. The privileges granted by the law concerning whaling fisheries.

Mr. BLAIN. When this subject was up for discussion last year, the revelations of government extravagance that were brought out created a great deal of interest in the country. We thought that surely the minister, after last year's experience, would be more economical and pay greater attention this year, but I was very much surprised to be told by some people who are suppliers of pemmican, that an excessive price was paid last year to the concerns supplying that article for the crew of the 'Arctic.' An expert connected with the William Davis Company, of Toronto, made the startling statement in a letter over his own signature that the pemmican so-called furnished the 'Arctic' expedition could be furnished by his firm at 35 cents per pound freight prepaid. One would have thought that this would have been a lesson to the minister. Surely the new system of accounting, introduced in the department at a cost of $42,000, ought to have enabled the minister to look more closely after the expenditure of his department and prevented his paying these ridiculously extravagant prices. One would have thought also that the loss to the government which resulted from its system of sending out circular letters to a few of its friends instead of giving business people generally an opportunity of tendering would have induced him to change that system, but we find it still followed, and followed no doubt for party gain. Three weeks ago the minister had his attention drawn to the fact that the report in respect of the examination of the accountant system would be laid on the table, and I am surprised that the minister has failed to bring down that report and practically tells the House that he will only give it what information he thinks proper.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How many police stations have been established ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman was here when I have already answered that question.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Excuse me, you did nothing of the kind.

Mr. BRODEUR. The question was asked by my hon. friend from Lambton, a few moments ago, and I answered it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He asked about the customs ports.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does the hon. gentleman say on his responsibility as a member, that he was not present when I gave the answer ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I object to such an impertinent question being put to me by any man. I am not here to be catechized by a gentleman of his record. What the member for Lambton asked, was regarding to customs ports, and I am asking about police posts, and I want the minister to answer my question.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have given that information at least twenty times since last night. I appeal to the sense of fair play of the members, if it is right that the same question should be asked by the opposition dozens and dozens of times ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is their business.

Mr. BRODEUR. If we are going to have time wasted, hon. gentlemen opposite might waste it by putting same questions. I do not think I am obliged to answer the same question over and over again. If my hon. friend thinks I am too weak to stay here, I can tell him he is mistaken. I don't care about the bravadoes of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Even suppose I was present in the House, I have the right to ask the question again.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think hon. gentlemen have the right to ask a minister to repeat the same answer half a dozen times. If the minister has answered all these questions again and again, I do not think it is his duty to reply.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am told the minister has not answered the question yet.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the minister makes a statement from his place it ought be a statement of fact. The Minister of Marine says he has answered the question 20 times during the night, and I say that is not so. I have been here all night, except from four o'clock until six o'clock, and the minister did not answer.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend has not been here the whole night, but will he, occupying the important position of chief whip of the opposition and being now leader of the opposition temporarily, will he state that I have not several times answered that there were police posts at Fort Churchill and Fullerton ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I have been here almost the entire night and believe the statement is not true that the minister has answered the question 20 times.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sorry to see the acting leader of the opposition making such a statement. I will not undertake to judge him; I leave him to be judged by himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will not allow the minister to lecture me while I am able to stand on my feet. What I say is, not that the question was not answered, but that it was not answered twenty times.

Mr. BRODEUR. I leave the hon. gentleman to be the sole judge of his conduct in making that assertion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have a standing in this House just as good as that of my hon. friend.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Don't compare yourself with him.

Mr. TAYLOR. Whenever I speak I make a statement in accordance with facts, but the minister can't make a reply but what he makes a wrong statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw that. The minister told us last night he paid the board of these accountants on vouchers, and I told him it was not a fact, and he had to admit he made a wrong statement.

Mr. BRODEUR. Whenever I do make an incorrect statement to the House I am always very glad to correct it when I acquire the knowledge as to the facts.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When you are caught.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a nice way for a member of this House to conduct himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister said he answered the question twenty times and that is not so.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have answered the question several times, and if the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) says I did not then I leave him to be a judge of his own position.

Mr. TAYLOR. My position is a good deal better than yours.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We had instances in the Public Accounts Committee in reference to the 'Arctic' of the colossal nerve of a gentleman at the head of a department to fit out the ship without calling for tenders. The story goes that they kept the trucks running on to the steamer and right over the ship and dumped them into tugs belonging to their friends on the other side who carted them away. Then the hon. minister comes to this House and he has the colossal nerve to say he answered this question once, and he will not answer it again. The rights of the opposition are to get information and the minister is obstructing the business of the House. If the minister gives the information as other ministers do he will be treated in a proper way. I want to tell the minister that his name and the name of his department ring from one end of the country to the other in connection with the furnishings of the 'Arctic,' and that it will lead to the removal of that minister, who has already been too long in power.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have stated that these accounts were produced before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. I say these accounts are not before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am blamed for not having produced before the House some of the returns which have been asked from me since the opening of the session. I promised last night that I would see that those returns were brought down to-day, at least those in a position to be brought down. Since the opening of the session I suppose thirty or forty returns have been asked from my department. We have a certain number of clerks engaged in preparing those returns. Some of those returns I believe are useful, while some are not, and when brought down I am sure will not be read by those who have asked for them. The votes and proceedings will show that every week, almost every two or three days, I have brought down returns. Just to show the committee the quantity of work that we have been doing, I have here a great pile of returns in addition to the fifteen or twenty which have been brought down since the opening of the session. I want to lay the responsibility where the responsibility belongs, and if I am in any way guilty I am ready to take the responsibility of that guilt. I have nothing to conceal, so far as my department is concerned; quite the reverse. I ask my hon. friends opposite to make all the investigation they like of my department. I understand that they are going to keep us here for many months. It is rumoured, indeed, that they will not let the government have a cent of money and thereby prevent affairs of this country being carried on after the 1st of April next.

Mr. BLAIN. What member of the opposition stated that the government would not be allowed any supply?

Mr. BRODEUR. I say it is rumoured everywhere—in the House, in the corridors, and outside of the House—that the opposition will not allow us to have any supplies. That is so far true that we have been already four weeks on my estimates; at every opportunity I brought them up to be discussed; we have been on this resolution 209 now for four long days, and it has not yet been adopted. I have given all the information in my possession in regard to these items, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite say there is a return which has not been brought down. The other day we were told by the hon. member for North Toronto that it was easier to get into supply than to get supply. We spent the whole of that day in discussing the 'Montcalm,' and the opposition asked for information, not only in regard to last year, but in regard to every year since that ship was bought by the Canadian government. Was it fair to call on the minister to give all that information ? I say it was not. However, I gave all that information, and finally hon. gentlemen had to admit that they had no more questions to ask or information to get from the department on that matter. I have been trying to be respectful and pleasant to every member of this House; in the face of all the attacks and insinuations made against me, I think I have preserved my temper in such a way that nobody can complain. Of course no charges have been made, because hon. gentlemen opposite are not in a position to make any charges. But insinuations have been made. No hon. gentleman on the other side of the House has the courage to get up and state that anything dishonest has been done in my department for which I am responsible ; but they have been keeping us here all night and obstructing the public business. I am standing here for the rights of the people to have the necessary money voted to carry on the affairs of this country. To show how unfairly I have been treated by some hon. members, the hon. member for North Toronto has been asking for a return showing my travelling expenses from 1906 to the 1st of September, 1908. This return has been brought down. I was told, however, last night that another return has been requested, showing my expenses from 1904 to 1908, most of which period was covered by the return already brought down. The other portion I had nothing to do with, because it pertained to the Department of Inland Revenue over which I have now no control. I think it is my duty to protest against such conduct and to state before the country that the opposition are trying to prevent the affairs of the country being carried on, and I leave with them the responsibility.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister has made a defence of himself, and has placed a lot of returns before us. I do not know whether these are old or new, the ones we require or not.

Mr. BRODEUR. They are a portion of the returns asked for. For instance, here is a return with regard to the bookkeeping. It is not yet completed. It was brought down, but I found that there were some reports not yet copied, and I gave instructions to have them copied. I have no objection to lay on the table the return as it is.

Mr. MONK. For my part, I am not going to allow the statement made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to go unchallenged, because I consider it untrue, incorrect and unfounded.

Mr. GAUVREAU. It is true all the same.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. MONK. It is not true. I have spent the night here, and I am sure that I have made no unjust obstruction. I have stood up for the rights of the people more than the hon. minister. Before we entered into supply yesterday my hon. friend was warned by the hon. member for North Toronto that we would require before we proceeded with his estimates three important returns; two of these had been ordered by the House some time ago, and they concerned the head of the department in a delicate matter, his own travelling expenses. The third was with regard to the reorganization of the books of the department. The government was warned that, though we were ready to make progress with the estimates of any other department, we would not vote the supplies for this department without the returns we had asked for. I believe that what the hon. minister lacks is tact and judicious consideration for the committee. I do not believe there is one of his colleagues who would have put himself in the position in which the hon. gentleman has placed himself. Why does my hon. friend make a statement calculated to mislead the country as to our attitude? Last night the ground taken by my hon. friend was that the information we had asked for was before the House. He did not then urge that his employees did not have time to prepare the returns or that we had demanded more than they could do. That is where I find my hon. friend insincere this morning; when he thinks his statement can reach the public, he invokes a totally different excuse from that which he gave last night. It is important that the opposition should not budge from the position we have taken. The demand we made last night was a fair one; we gave the hon. minister fair warning; and had he been less dogged, less obstinate, we would have gone into supply and advanced the public business. My hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) supported by some of the younger members of the House, my hon. friend from Richelieu (Mr. Lanctot) among them—hon. members who are quite in earnest no doubt—have been interrupting and protesting—I do not blame the hon. gentleman ; he is new to the House, and unacquainted with the methods of the House, and consequently unaware of the means to which an opposition must have recourse to maintain its rights. But because these youthful members surround my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) he persists in his course. But it has been said—and truly—that investigation is blocked, not alone in this House, but elsewhere, in a manner which would revolt any member of the British parliament. If we are to advance the business of the House and vote the supply needful for the government, there must be no unwillingness to give information. The facts must come out whatever the consequence. Since the minister has shifted his ground, I think it is only right that our own view should be placed before the public.

Mr. A. LANCTOT (Richelieu.) (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, the few remarks I have to make will not keep the committee much longer, but I want to say, as has been stated already, that what is going on lacks seriousness, and is not what it should be. That is the reason why I do not wish to prolong this debate, but I just want to state that if one wants to see honest and honourable citizens, they can be found in the counties of Richelieu and Rouville. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has not spent the whole night here; he has not listened to what has been said, or he would not have made the statement we have just heard.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I have stated that I remained in the House till five o'clock this morning.

Mr. LANCTOT. (Translation.) If the hon. gentleman had been here after five o'clock, he would know that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) has answered every question that has been put to him, not only once, but ten and twenty times, and I cannot help thinking that many of those who were putting these questions had no other object in view but to make obstruction.

I might not be very conversant with the rules of this House, being a new member, and I am not aware of all that has been said, but I know that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been charged with dishonesty by the hon. member for North Toronto. He has been charged by the hon. member of having appropriated the people's money to his own use, with having kept that money in his pocket for months and months. Now, Mr. Chairman, speaking not only for myself, but for the people of the province of Quebec, I am in a position to state without fear of contradiction that there is not the least foundation in these insinuations. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries enjoys the respect and confidence of the large majority of the citizens of that province; the insinuations or the accusations of the hon. member for North Toronto will not lessen in the least that respect and that confidence.

Let the hon. gentlemen opposite go on with their speeches, let them send all over the country their campaign literature as they have already begun to do; they will not succeed in their campaign of misrepresentation and falsehood. In spite of these unjust onslaughts, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will still enjoy the full confidence of his friends and the respect of the people of the province of Quebec, for not a single scandal can be successfully charged against him, nor can it be proved that he has taken a single cent from the public treasury as has been insinuated.

When gentlemen like some of those I see on the other side dare hurl accusations in the face of a man of the hon. minister's standing, I say that those who are supposed to be the champions of the French speaking element of this country should be ashamed of such conduct and should enter a protest against it. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier, whose pupil I used to be, and of whom I have always been proud, does not play to-day the part of a true French Canadian, of a professor of Laval University who has given to this country so many worthy citizens.

Does the hon. gentlemen opposite know that in insulting the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries they insult the province of Quebec?

I do not want to be harsh on anybody, but when it comes down to the point that you have to defend a man who is held in such high esteem and respect as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the most lenient is exposed to lose his temper.

Hon. gentlemen opposite complain of extravagance in connection with the Arctic expedition. They do not seem to know what they are talking about, and they are not acting the part of good citizens, for every true Canadian should rejoice in having the boundary of his country expanded. Moreover, there is nothing new in this policy; it has been inaugurated years ago, and has been continued by the present government.

If ever that same question comes before the House I will be ready to stand by the government and to prove that all those scandals exist only in the imagination of the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. E. PAQUET (L'Islet). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, like many other hon. gentlemen, I regret having been kept here all night, and my intention is not to make a speech, but I think it my duty to offer a few remarks on this question.

I strongly object to some of the remarks uttered by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lanctot). As a French Canadian, I think that we have not to be ashamed of the position taken by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I am sure that on further reflection, the hon. member for Richelieu, will regret his exaggerated statements concerning the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier.

Mr. LANCTOT. (Translation.) I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I did not say that the French Canadians should be ashamed of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, but that they would have been pleased had he taken another position on this occasion.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation.) I accept the statement of my hon. friend for Richelieu. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier has maintained the traditions of the Conservative party, and I might add, that if I have persisted in my allegiance to that party, it is due to the straightforward policy of my hon. friend. Nevertheless, I must strongly protest against this protracted debate as detrimental to the Conservative party, and to the interests of the country, and with all due respect to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, I think that the discussion should not have been kept on as it has been.

I have no desire to vindicate the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), but as I have said the other day, I recognize what has been done to improve our seaports and the St. Lawrence route, and I am ready to give the hon. minister all the credit that is due to him for the part he has taken in the works done in that respect during the last ten years.

I do not know what the people will think of this discussion, but for my part, I decline to share the least part of responsibility for it. I am sincerely convinced that if the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) had been in the House, this discussion would have been closed long ago, and that we would be ready to begin a new sitting and to go to work with perhaps, more open minds and more dignity than we can do at this moment.

I will not say more. I hope that this discussion will close, and that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will come to an understanding with the leaders of the opposition so that we may set to work in a regular way, for the best interests of both parties and of the country.

Mr. F. D. MONK. (Translation.) I was greatly pleased, I must admit, with the speech of my hon. friend for Richelieu, and if the hon. member for L'Islet, like myself, had been in the House during that all-night sitting, I am sure he would have found out very good reasons for the position taken by the opposition on this question.

At the risk of looking as candid as my hon. friend for Richelieu, I would like very much to go back to those younger days of which we are reminded by his speech. It cannot be denied that he is possessed of a fine long-range voice and an ample and manly action. He is also endowed with that easy elocution which was already apparent at the time he has alluded to when he was still a student at Laval University.

If, perchance, I had had the advantage of hearing that speech of his, about two o'clock in the morning, I think I would have remained here instead of going home.

I regret very much that I have disappointed him, and that he should be under the impression that the province of Quebec ought to be ashamed of the position I took to-day. I have occupied a seat in this House for the last twelve years, and I can conscientiously give my hon. friend the assurance that I have never done anything or given a single vote without thinking more particularly of the interests of the province which is so near to his heart. When my young friend will be in a position to give a similar account of himself, I am sure he will have nothing to be ashamed of.

Mr. LANCTOT. (Translation.) I do not think that I said that the province of Quebec ought to be ashamed of the hon. gentleman. I said that the French Canadians would have been more pleased if he had taken another stand.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) My hon. friend is too able a speaker to say so in so many words, but from what he said, I must understand that if, up to this day, the province of Quebec had no reason to be ashamed of the member for Jacques Cartier, it will go otherwise hereafter.

What is going on to-day reminds me of an incident that occurred at the court house. I was arguing a case before a judge in Montreal and I was explaining that the other party was pleading for delay. I do not see anything wrong in that, said the judge, for circumstances might happen when a party has to plead for delay.

I think that the remark of the learned judge very well applies to the present situation. If my hon. friend has been scandalized by what has been done or said during this discussion, by some remarks not quite pertinent to the question, what would his impression have been, had he been here during the first session of 1896, when members belonging to his party used to get up in this House with a Bible in their hand and read it for hours and hours.

Why have I taken the position that has so offended the hon. member for Richelieu? Allow me Mr. Chairman, to repeat in French the reasons which, to my mind, justify the position I have taken.

For several days, this House which is the supreme power—my hon. friend will not contradict me, since his own party has fought so gallantly for representative government, and the establishment of that supreme authority—for several days the opposition had been urging the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to bring down certain reports of his department of a delicate nature, as they concerned his personal honesty as head of the department. Another report ordered by this House concerned the expenditure of large sums of the people's money. We wanted those papers to know the details of the expenditure of nearly fifty thousand dollars in connection with the reorganization of the book-keeping of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It will be hard to convince the country that this sum has been legitimately expended. We have an established system of bookkeeping in all the departments; we have all what is wanted to change or reorganize that system, and still, in one single department, nearly $50,000 have been expended merely to open a new set of books.

The two reports ordered by the House in connection with the personal expenses of the minister and the one I have just mentioned in connection with the reorganization of the book-keeping in the department, such are the three reports we ask to be brought down before the estimates of the department are acted upon. We gave the minister fair warning that not one item of his estimates would be voted unless those reports were brought down, that is to say, unless he conforms himself to these orders of the House.

The hon. minister does not even deny that the reports have not been brought down, for he says he has given to the committee all the information contained in those reports. So, the hon. minister had no ground for getting excited or losing his temper when he saw that the opposition was obstructing his estimates with the only object of getting the information ordered by the House.

Moreover, what happened at the beginning of the sitting? Just after the motion to go into supply, the hon. member for Comox and Atlin (Mr. Sloan), got up and started a discussion that lasted four hours, on a motion that implied a want of confidence in the cabinet. Who was making obstruction then? Is not the man with a grievance that presses it on the House for hours, the real obstructionist? The obstructionist is the member who stops the business of the House. Well, the hon. member for Comox and Atlin, who started that debate is a Liberal member of the House.

After that, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) took the floor, and with the greatest calmness, without the least acrimony, he repeated to the hon. minister the warning he had given him in the name of the opposition, namely, that he could not expect to pass a single item of his estimates before the reports in question were brought down. My hon. friend added that we were ready to take up the estimates of any other department, and to proceed with the business, but that not a dollar would be voted for the department at fault.

How could my hon. friend find fault with such a reasonable demand? Our attitude was so reasonable, that the hon. minister did not dare to contradict it, but instead, went on to explain that we had what was equivalent to the papers asked for.

I might be called cynical, but for my part, I say that I entirely approve of that position, that manœuvre. I approved of it last night and I remained here under the conviction that I was doing my duty to the country and that I was true to the traditions of my province where, for more than 90 years, we have fought for responsible government.

I consider that under the circumstances, my position, our position is just and justifiable. It has been resorted to more than once by our gallant friends opposite, when they were in opposition.

Mr. TALBOT. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has let slip from his mouth a word that is worth by itself a whole speech. He used the word 'manœuvre' to characterize the attitude of the opposition on this question.

My hon. friend who is a very able lawyer is apt to see clearly the distinction between working for one's country and working for one's party.

To put the responsibility where it should rest, let us see first, what is the subject matter of the debate. The opposition want certain information from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. They say: 'You have expended $50,000 to reorganize the bookkeeping in your department.' If there is something wrong in that what is the use of talking about it any further and of always putting the same questions over again? Let the hon. leader of the opposition call for a division and let us see the end of it.

If the hon. gentlemen opposite imagine for an instant that by their speeches or by the pamphlets that will be sent broadcast from one end of the country to the other, they will succeed in discrediting the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, they are labouring under a strange illusion.

All those who know the hon. minister of Marine and Fisheries are absolutely convinced that if there has been something wrong in his department, he cannot be held personally responsible; the fault is with those about him. The responsibility must rest upon the guilty parties. The opposition can keep us here for weeks on this question, but I can assure them that there is one thing that they will not be allowed to do, namely to discredit the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE (Kamouraska). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, allow me, first of all, to congratulate the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Paquet) for the position he has just taken. The county he represents is next to mine, and I heard with a good deal of pleasure his protest against the action of the opposition during the present sitting of the House.

The former speeches of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier were not characterized by the conciliatory note that is to be found in the one he has just made in answer to the remarks of the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Lanctot). If he had spoken in that note from the first, he would have had no occasion to complain of the remarks of my hon. friend. Being such a master of the French language, the tongue par excellence of sweetness and harmony, it would have been the easiest thing for him to restrain from using certain passionate expressions and certain uncalled for insinuations which, for my part, I consider should have been left unsaid.

The hon. gentleman said something about the 'manœuvres' of the political parties. If he had not left the House about five o'clock this morning, if he had been here from last night till this hour, he would have witnessed a fine display of the manœuvres of his party. He would have heard the heinous insinuations made against the character and standing of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, insinuations that we scout in the most emphatic manner. We have remained here all night, and we have heard all along the hon. gentlemen on the other side putting one after the other, the same useless questions to the hon. minister. The hon. minister was ever ready to answer each and every one of these questions. These constantly repeated insinuations might constitute a manœuvre, but they are certainly not to the credit of the hon. gentlemen opposite and will not bring discredit upon the high character of the hon. minister, whose character amongst his fellow-countrymen, stands as high as that of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

If you allow me, Mr. Chairman, I can say that the hon. member for L'Islet is not the only member on the other side of the House who disapproves of this manœuvre. Even amongst those who have spoken, several hon. gentlemen have been whispering in our ears in the lobby that they disapproved of such tactics, that they were mere child's play, but that they had to obey the orders received.

Hon. gentlemen opposite are prone to complain that it has been said by a member of the government that the minority in this House have no other rights than those that are conceded them by the majority. From what we see at the present moment, one could imagine that it is the majority that have no other rights than those that are conceded them by the minority.

I want my hon. friends to know that we will remain here to see that those estimates are voted upon, and it is my inner conviction that the manœuvres approved of by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and in which he has taken a hand will not help the Conservative party in the province of Quebec, nor in the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. We have had, I am sure, a very interesting speech from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lapointe), but whether it was on metaphysics, or consitutional law, or dealt with matters in the department of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), or the Minister of Finance, I could not be sure. But evidently it could not have related to the department of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) because that hon. gentleman is not now in the House, and arguments relating to the affairs of that department would be merely wasted. As it seems impossible to get the information we desire from the head of the department, and since that hon. gentleman has abandoned the House entirely, it seems only right and wise that a motion should be made that this committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. And that motion I now make.

Mr. BLAIN. In the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I assume that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) will speak for him. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries told us of a report brought down which was incomplete. Can the Minister of Agriculture tell us which one that was ?

Mr. FISHER. I know that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has prepared returns as complete as possible. One of these was sent to my hon. friend (Mr. Blain), and I think that possibly this is the one referred to.

Mr. BLAIN. That answer is sufficient to show that full information is not before the committee, and so it is impossible to discuss these items fairly. Now, how can the government justify itself in insisting that this discussion should go on ? We stated that we were prepared to take up any other department of the government. That offer was made last night at nine o'clock.

Mr. TALBOT. Did not the government offer to allow this item to stand and go on with others ?

Mr. BLAIN. With others relating to this department. We were prepared to leave this department altogether until the information asked by the House had been furnished. We were prepared—and I am sure we are prepared now—to take up any other department. But the government, while admitting that they have not supplied the information, insisted that this item should be gone on with, trusting to the power of its majority.

Mr. TALBOT. Did not the leader of the government offer to let that item stand if the opposition were ready to go on with others?

Mr. BLAIN. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Talbot) must have been sleeping during part of the discussion. Though the government has been unable to supply the information desired, they decided that no other item should be discussed except this. Had there been other items, the opposition were willing that they should be passed, but, unfortunately, the other items had been passed and therefore we were unwilling to comply with even that with which we were willing to comply at the outset. It was generally agreed upon the other night that any item in this vote of ocean and river service should be open to discussion until the whole vote was passed. We passed a number of these items.

Mr. J. D. REID. Some of them went through without discussion.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, and some of them went through without discussion and without the information which the government should have provided.

I am glad to see that the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) has returned. I would like to ask him if the return he was good enough to send me is the return that was incomplete.

Mr. BRODEUR. I explained that, when this return had been prepared, I found, on reading it over that some documents which should have been included were absent. I asked the deputy to make sure that all these documents were included in the return, otherwise I might be criticised. But the deputy minister was obliged to leave for Quebec, and the return is not yet complete. I am ready to lay on the table the return as it is.

Mr. BLAIN. We are not complaining of the information brought down, but of the information that is not brought down. We have it from the hon. minister himself that certain letters are absent from this fyle. Is that not enough to arouse our suspicion?

Mr. BRODEUR. Quite the reverse. I explained that I took the trouble to read this return myself, and gave special instruction that the documents missing from it should be included.

Mr. BLAIN. But the hon. minister acknowledges that information called for by the House unanimously is not ready, and yet in the face of that he says we must remain here until this item concerning which information should be given is passed. For instance, here is a letter from Mr. Falconer, this New York accountant, who was imported into Canada to take care of our accounts. It is dated July 16, 1907, and is addressed to Mr. Gourdeau, deputy minister. It acknowledges receipt of a letter of July 6, but that letter is not included in this return.

Mr. BRODEUR. Precisely what I have been——

Mr. BLAIN. I understand fully. The hon. minister made the matter quite plain to me——

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) is in earnest or not——

Mr. BLAIN. Quite.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am afraid, perhaps, he is not so much in earnest as I am. I have stated that I found there were in this return answers to letters which letters were not included. I asked the deputy how it was, and told him I could not lay the return before the House without having it complete.

Mr. BLAIN. That is a fair statement, and in the face of that statement is it not a fact that the minister is pressing the committee to pass this item without this report being complete ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That information has nothing to do with the item under discussion. I have already explained that I have been asked by this House to bring down 35 returns, of which 15 have already been brought down. We had to hire special typewriters in order to copy these other returns. When they are brought down, a large number of them will never be read.

Mr. BLAIN. I find here three letters written by Mr. Falconer to the department, to which there is no reply. I notice in this correspondence a letter by this New York accountant, which states that the condition of the accounts at the office in the city of Halifax is so bad that it is impossible for him to prepare an honest statement of the assets and liabilities of that office.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. Would the hon. gentleman kindly tell me who is the agent of the Department of Marine and Fisheries at Halifax, and who is his deputy ?

Mr. BLAIN. I have not that information. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give the information.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. A couple of good Tories.

Mr. BLAIN. So here is a business government employing an expert, sending him down to the city of Halifax, paying him and his staff $42,000 to correct wrongs, and I ask my hon. friends opposite what they think about it. This expert writes a letter to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself, dated August 9, 1907, in which he says :

> Herewith I hand you in duplicate a report entitled a statemtnt of estimated assets and apparent liabilities in connection with the Halifax agency. The only thing possible in the present state of the agency's books is an estimate of the assets, and it is also not possible to prepare a reliable statement of liabilities. For these reasons I have used the words 'estimated assest and apparent liabilities.' It is not the intention to reflect upon any person, but rather to show the condition of affairs that have been allowed to remain.

No answer at all was made to this letter. Before these items pass we want all this information. Now that condition of affairs having gone on under this government for nine years, surely we should have the correspondence down before we are asked to pass these items. Letters have been going back and forth between the department and this accountant, some of which are included in the return. The return is incomplete, and it is not unfair that the opposition should ask that the return be completed, after which we are prepared to go on with any other department.

I noticed in the explanation of the report that was given to the department that Mr. Falconer gives a detailed statement of the bringing into operation of a new system of accounting he has presented, and for which the government has paid $42,000. He says that there should be vouchers for all accounts. During this discussion, and speaking to my hon. friend from Leeds, the minister said: There are vouchers in the department for the accounts you are discussing under the new system of accounting which has been adopted ; but on reflection the minister afterwards said : I was mistaken about that, because the deputy says there are no vouchers for these accounts. Therefore, my hon. friend is placed in this unhappy position that after having paid $42,000 for expert accountants to go over the books and put the affairs of the department under a new system of bookkeeping, one of the important points being that there shall be vouchers for all accounts, he is obliged to say that on examination there are no vouchers at all. May I ask the hon. gentleman where the deputy minister is and on what business ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Quebec.

Mr. BLAIN. On public business?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Anything more important than completing this return ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a matter of public business.

Mr. BLAIN. It does seem to me that that gentleman should remain at home and produce these missing letters. However, I have nothing to say about it as the minister has the deputy under his control. I am willing to assist the government in every possible way to take up the estimates of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), who is always so ready——

Mr. FISHER. That is a great temptation.

Mr. BLAIN. I propose that we allow the Minister of Marine and Fisheries an opportunity to change his position, and that therefore we take up the items of the Minister of Agriculture. We will give him all assistance. It will not do for the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to go out and say that the opposition are wasting the time of the House because they are confronted with the statement that they are asking the House to pass this item in the face of a return which is put on the table and which is incomplete.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) has appealed to me, and I am afraid that he has got very near the bounds of corruption in holding out to me such a tempting proposition as that if I will take up my estimates they will all go through very easily.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I will remind the hon. minister that my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) was only speaking for himself.

Mr. FISHER. He is an important member of the opposition, and perhaps the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) will be willing to follow his older colleague the hon. member for Peel, in such a thing as this. But my virtue is proof against it and I will not be led away from what I conceive to be my duty in that manner. My hon. friend has insisted that the opposition are quite willing to proceed with the business if this item is allowed to stand, and hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to create the impression that this proposition has been refused by the government and by my hon. colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I take issue distinctly with them. I have not been in the House during the whole night, but I have been informed by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that he did offer distinctly and clearly to the opposition to let this item stand, provided they would pass a non-contentious item or two of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BLAIN. That is correct.

Mr. FISHER. Is the whole of this ineffective and futile keeping the House all night until nearly noon of the next day because there is an insistence that a non-contentious item of the Department of Marine and Fisheries must not be passed while contentious and important items in another department may be passed ? We are quite willing to allow this item to stand but in justice to my colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, after the vicious attack which was made upon him last night before I left the House, we felt that it was due to him that a non-contentious item of his department should be passed.

Mr. BLAIN. What member of the opposition made a personal attack upon the Minieter of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) last night, before I left the House, made one of the most vicious personal attacks upon my hon. colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that I ever heard in this House, although I have been here for a longer time, with one exception, than any of the members present. I remember when I was in the opposition, and I remember that in my inexperienced days I was just as foolish as hon. gentlemen opposite are. I can remember that the opposition kept the government sitting here day in and day out for half a week, and I can remember that at the end we had not advanced one step in political warfare any more than we had progressed one step with the public business.

Mr. BLAIN. Then we have a precedent for the course which we are now pursuing?

Mr. FISHER. You have the precedent of folly. If hon. gentlemen want to gain credit in the country they had better not follow the precedent of the Liberal party in the days when we did that. In those days we made no progress in the country; we simply put a stumbling block in the way of the success of the Liberal part just as hon. gentlemen opposite are putting a stumbling block in the way of the success of the Conservative party. If I had party leanings or wished to speak upon this matter from a party political standpoint I would chuckle at the way the opposition are acting.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. You are looking a little serious over it.

Mr. FISHER. Not a bit. I confess I am a little older than I was in those days, and that I am not quite so foolish as to want to stay up all night. The impression created by hon. gentlemen opposite that the government are unreasonable, that they are insisting upon pressing this particular item through without giving the information necessary to pass it is not correct and is not a fair statement of the situation.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. gentleman state to the House what difference it would make to the government if they took up the minister's own department?

Mr. FISHER. The opposition has deliberately insulted my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and we are going to stand by him.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is not the business of the country, but it is a supposed insult you are talking about.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the Minister of Agriculture admit that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is wrong and that it is only a question of dignity?

Mr. FISHER. Most certainly not.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to ask the chairman if it is parliamentary to say that the opposition have deliberately insulted the Minister of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. FISHER. I will withdraw that and say that the opposition have deliberately used language which might be considered an insult by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) seemed to think that public business must stop because of this difference of opinion between the two sides of the House.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. minister understands me. What I asked was, is he keeping up this fight because of a supposed insult to the hon. minister or because he insists on the opposition voting supplies without the information they desire.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member contends that items which are non-contentious should not be passed because he wants information which does not relate to them, but to other items.

Mr. LANCASTER. We cannot tell whether it relates to them until we see it.

Mr. FISHER. Items 212, 213 and 214 of the Department of Marine and Fisheries contain no contentious matter whatever.

Mr. BLAIN. Did not the expert accountant supervise any of those branches?

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt he did. Hon. gentlemen opposite will have all the opportunities possible of discussing that matter and everything connected with it or any item of the department. Therefore there is not the slightest objection on that ground to passing an item or two, and relieving the tension on public business unless hon. gentlemen opposite wish to obstruct the passage of any item. We are willing to take up any non-contentious item and let the item under consideration stand, and on this or any other item to give the fullest possible information.

Mr. SPROULE. I contend that there is not a single item relating to this department which is not under the circumstances contentious, because so far as that department is concerned we have found that parliamentary government has become a farce and a travesty. Public money voted for one purpose has been misapplied to an entirely different purpose. We claim that that department is absolutely rotten, and what has already been brought out justifies that statement. It has spent money without the authority of parliament. We have the hon. minister's own admission that the department was run so badly that he had to bring experts from a foreign country at a cost of over $47,000 to reorganize its methods. Why are the returns withheld that have been ordered by the House? We know too well the history of papers that have been withheld in the Immigration Department and other departments, and afterwards burned to cover up things which could not afford to appear to the light of day. How do we know that that is not the case with the papers of this department?

Mr. MILLER. Will the hon. gentleman say what papers are burned that he refers to.

Mr. BENNETT. Read Mr. Smart's evidence.

Mr. SPROULE. I gave that information to the hon. member for South Grey long ago, and if he is so dense that he cannot understand it, I see no justification in attempting to enlighten him again.

When the department, for instance, paid for breakfast cups and saucers $1.04 each to add to the furnishings of an icebreaker, is it not plain that the merchant never got the profit on that transaction Who got the money? So, I could go on with other items by the dozen. But when we seek for information, we are thwarted in every way. Look at the expenditure under this minister when he was speaker of this House. During three years there was an expenditure of $4,580 for furnishing a couple or three rooms.

Mr. TALBOT. Is not that furniture there?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know. A great deal of it disappears and has to be replaced. For instance, $52 a piece was paid for table cloths. Even if the table cloths were worth $52 a piece, there is no justification to pay such money for the Speaker's room. The expenditure under this hon. gentleman when Speaker was higher than that of any other Speaker in the history of Canada for the same length of time. What became of that furniture? Was it given away as perquisites, or as souvenirs of his regime there. Take the——

Mr. BRODEUR. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) to charge me with having stolen furniture from the Speaker's rooms? If that is what he means, if he has the courage to make a specific charge, pledging his seat to make it good, he shall have every opportunity to prove it. We will see whether he has the courage to act as a man.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has a lot of courage, but it appears to be oozing out at his finger tips. I stand by the statement I made, and I am not called upon to stand by any statement that he may represent me as having made.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will the hon. gentleman have the courage to state that I have taken anything from the Speaker's apartments?

Mr. SPROULE. I say that the expenditure under the hon. gentleman as Speaker was ridiculous and indefensible. I said I did not know where the furniture went to, but I was creditibly informed that somehow it disappeared.

Mr. BRODEUR. I appeal to the hon. gentleman's sense of fairness. Suppose I should make such an insinuation against him, he would feel offended, and with good reason. I am just as honest and just as respectable as the hon. gentleman. I have been insulted since last night in the most shameful way. Yet, I have been willing to concede everything that could reasonably be asked of me. I do not want to cause the House to spend time for nothing. But I have been insulted since last night and during this morning by the hon. gentleman and his friends. They are very careful of their words, however. They will not make a charge against me, but only insinuation. I do not say they lack courage—I leave that to the public to judge. I have been in public life for many years, and God knows I have done nothing of which I should be ashamed.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) says we make insinuations, and not charges against him. We declare that he has mismanaged his department, that he has paid money without appropriate vouchers, that he has paid money for which the country got no return—and the fact that $700 was given back at one time is surely a proof that there is good ground for that charge. If I understand what charges are, these are charges and not insinuations. When the hon. minister was protesting his innocence, I was reminded of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) who told us the other day that he was above temptation. I felt like asking the hon. gentleman then if he had the Governor General's consent to make that statement, for I fear that otherwise it could hardy be regarded as authoritative. In the same way I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) should have the Governor General's consent before calling upon us to accept these protests.

Mr. FISHER. The charges to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) now refers are entirely different from the insinuations made with regard to the purchases for the Speakers' chamber. These are insinuations reflecting upon the honesty of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and not charges at all.

Mr. SPROULE. They are not insinuations, but direct charges.

Mr. FISHER. What are they?

Mr. SPROULE. We have these items of expenditure, and I am told that the things purchased are not there.

Mr. FISHER. Will the hon. gentleman make the charge that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has taken these things away?

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) told us that many years ago he was young and innocent and foolish. Twenty years hence, he tells us he has got better sense, that his conduct of that time as a young and innocent and foolish man induced him to what was wrong, as he now admits his conduct of twenty years ago to have been. He has become very virtuous lately, but he admitted that he was not virtuous before. From his past conduct we may reasonably expect that in future he will not be able to approve of what he is doing to-day. I started to say, in answer to the request of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) why not give us some noncontentious items to consider? There are none such in this Department of Marine and Fisheries, for we have not the information we require concerning the management of that department. Take any other department, and we are willing to let the items go through on reasonable information being furnished. But in view of the disorganization of this department and of what has been revealed by the facts that we have been able to learn, we are justified in not voting a dollar until full information is given. We are refused the opportunity to gain information in the Public Accounts Committee, and when the matter is brought to this House we find ourselves blocked here at once. We are justified then in withholding supplies because that is the only way an opposition can check the government.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister of Agriculture raises the point that an offer has been made to let this item stand and take up a non-contentious one. That proposition was made in the presence of the Premier, when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was leading the opposition. The member for North Toronto gave his reasons why he moved for three returns, and only one of them had been brought down. The hon. minister explained that this return was complete, but there were some papers that he wanted to revise, after which it would be brought down to-day. After this proposition had been made two or three times, the member for North Toronto said, take another department and we will give you supply, but until these papers come down, I demand my right to have this information before we go on with this department. This morning the hon. minister comes down with an armful of reports. Some of them have been laid on the table already.

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where are the reports ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They have been sent back to the department to be completed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then we do not know what these reports were. But he brings down one that any typewriter could have prepared in two days.

Mr. BRODEUR. What about the 15 reports already brought down ?

Mr. TAYLOR. We give the hon. gentleman money enough to prepare all the reports the next day after they are ordered. In this return there is not a word of instruction, there is not a word of correspondence between the hon. minister and this expert accountant. But we do find some rather funny correspondence. On June 25th Mr. Falconer writes for money. On July 3rd he writes to the Hon. Mr. Templeman, acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries. On July 5th he writes to Colonel Gourdeau asking for $2,500, one-half his account from the department. There is an answer on the 6th of July, but is not signed by anybody. On the 12th of July, Mr. Falconer writes again asking for more money. Now here are letters asking for money, and no reply is made to them. This file is not complete, everywhere we find missing letters. We cannot get any information from this file. Yet the hon. minister persists in asking us to give him supply. It is the right of the opposition to demand this information.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was willing to be conciliatory, but in view of the insinuations made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), there must be some limit.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not think the hon. member for East Grey made any insinuations. When the hon. minister was speaker of this House he was extravagant, and he is more extravagant in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. He has not given us the information we are entitled to. When these papers came down, the opposition were ready to say, he has complied with our request and we will let him go on. But we find that he has not complied with the demands of the opposition, none of us can see the papers he did bring in, and we do not know what they amount to.

Mr. J. D. REID. Last year we moved for the amounts expended on the Arctic for the year, and they were all produced in the Public Accounts Committee. We intended going on with the examination, but owing to the arrangement that was made by which the Public Accounts Committee was closed, we could not proceed with the investigation. But it is intended to go on this year.

Mr. CONMEE. I think the hon. minister was quite justified in his course. I think the hon. member for North Toronto did make insinuations, I do not know that they can be called charges. But he made statements which he should be prepared to back up in a different way. The hon. minister has explained that the transaction in which he was accused of taking money and refunding it again, was merely a matter of bookkeeping. That has been magnified into some wrong on the part of the hon. minister, of taking public money for his own purposes.

Mr. LANCASTER. The member for North Toronto stated facts.

Mr. CONMEE. I say he did not state facts. If his so-called facts are true, the hon. gentleman ought to have the courage of his convictions, and instead of bantering the government hour after hour, he ought to put his statement in writing, put his name to it and make a charge.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who has disputed the facts that the member for North Toronto stated ?

Mr. CONMEE. They have been disputed right along. The whole charge is more or less a misrepresentation. Now I want to ask hon. gentlemen what good purpose is being served by the course they are pursuing ? Are they advancing the public interest, are they doing the business for which they were sent to this House. I do not think so. The opposition have a right to criticize and investigate, but I submit this is not criticism, it is factious opposition. While the minority has its rights, yet the business of the country must go on, and it would be a curious majority who would submit to being dictated to, I might use the word bulldozed. That cannot be done. Now there are certain letters and answers to letters which are missing in the return brought down, but which the hon. minister says had nothing at all to do with the item before the chair.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was the hon. gentleman here during the night ?

Mr. CONMEE. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then he did not hear the offer made from this side, that we were willing to take up any other department and give them good progress. Is not that fair ?

Mr. CONMEE. I do not think it is fair, because you say to the department : We will not allow an item to go through because we want further information which is not contained in the return—although the hon. minister states that this information has nothing whatever to do with the item before the chair.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have given last night what I consider a good reason why that item should not be passed.

I said that we had before the Public Accounts Committee the papers of this very steamer 'Arctic' that we were going to investigate and we did not want this item to pass until we had investigated them. That was another reason, but that was not accepted as a reason. Does the hon. gentleman think that we should pass an item when we are going to have the papers in connection with it investigated ?

Mr. CONMEE. Does not my hon. friend admit that this is not the last opportunity.

Mr. J. D. REID. We have been fooled that way too often.

Mr. CONMEE. This item has to come up in concurrence ; you have lots of opportunities. You did not press your claims last year before the Public Accounts Committee. I do not say it was your fault.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was the fault of the Prime Minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Never.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Prime Minister asked us that we should not proceed with these accounts.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman can put the blame wherever he pleases ; I would advise him not to put it on his own shoulders, but to get out of it if possible. Here we are in another year and I think it is about time that hon. gentlemen opposite should allow the business of the House to go on.

Mr. DEVLIN. A very fair proposition has been made to hon. gentlemen opposite and my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculter has repeated that offer. He said that he would allow this item to stand and that some other item might be taken up. That proposition was not accepted by hon. gentlemen opposite, but they wish to put the country to enormous expense and to stop all public works——

Mr. BENNETT. Give us the Public Works estimates and we will go right on now.

Mr. DEVLIN. At present the Marine estimates are before the House and there is absolutely no reason why the Marine estimates should not be proceeded with. I was astounded by some of the language that was used in reference to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I heard the hon. member for East Grey ask the question : Where has the furniture of the Speaker's apartments gone ; has the furniture been given away as presents ? Does the hon. gentleman insinuate that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, whilst Speaker of this House, was guilty of having taken away any of the furniture of the Speaker's apartments ? I ask him to give me a reply to that question.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not listening to the funeral ode of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DEVLIN. Does the hon. gentleman accuse the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of having been a party in any way to the disappearance of the furniture of the Speaker's apartments ?

Mr. SPROULE. Apparently the hon. gentleman has one object in view and that is to waste time. He can read 'Hansard' to-morrow and know exactly what I said.

Mr. DEVLIN. Does the hon. gentleman say that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was a party to taking away furniture from the Speaker's apartments, and if he refuses to give me an answer I shall ask him to withdraw his words.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DEVLIN. It is well to see the courage displayed by the hon. member for East Grey. When he speaks about some funeral oration does he think the country will be satisfied with such an answer? I heard the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) say that the country was reeking with the name of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I challenge the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton and the hon. member for East Grey to come into the province of Quebec and repeat these words upon any platform. I defy the hon. gentleman to call in question the integrity or honour of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In questioning a man's integrity I appeal to facts.

Mr. DEVLIN. I will make this offer to these hon. gentlemen: I will resign my seat in the county of Wright, let these hon. gentlemen do the same, and I will appeal to the electors of that county upon the honesty or integrity, or honour of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Will these hon. gentlemen take up the invitation?

Mr. BENNETT. How would you like to take a turn in Carleton?

Mr. DEVLIN. A short time ago I had the honour of addressing a very large audience in Carleton and I was very cordially received. I am ready to meet the hon. gentleman for East Somcoe (Mr. Bennett) in Carleton or any other county now or at any other time. I was sorry to hear the language which was used by the hon. members for Victoria and Haliburton and East Grey in reference to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I heard the speech of the hon. member for L'Islet in defence of the hon. minister. I am sure that if the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) had been in their seats they would not have taken the responsibility of the language used by the hon. gentlemen to whom I have referred. All I have to say is that if that question comes before the electors of the province of Quebec, or if these hon. gentlemen will come and repeat their insinuations, they will be met in a fair and open manner, but they will receive their answer to such allegations.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am sure that the House and the country will appreciate the fact that the opposition feel perfectly justified in insisting that the government shall bring down these documents before this item shall pass. I believe it is not only the duty but the right of the opposition to investigate all public documents and public measures. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave us to understand that we were taking an unpatriotic position in regard to the vote which is before us at the present time. The opposition have taken the very opposite position. It is true patriotism not to neglect the duty of making a thorough investigation into these matters. The Conservative party have been the patriotic party.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask what hon. gentlemen opposite can say with regard to the position which some of the prominent men of their own party took on certain patriotic questions in this country. Let them examine into the records of some of these gentlemen and they will find out that instead of being patriotic they took a position exactly the reverse.

Mr. LANCTOT. (Translation.) What documents do you wish to have ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. (Translation.) I do not understand you.

The hon. gentleman knows that I am not thoroughly acquainted with the French language. I am spending hours and days in studying the hon. gentleman's language at the present time and instead of him trying to belittle me by asking me a question, thinking that I would not understand his language, he should have been taking the very opposite position.

I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite that the opposition are prepared to remain here until their rights in this House are vindicated, and until they investigate the accounts of this department. This government has been shown to be not only a blundering government, but a plundering government, constantly allowing middlemen—

Mr. BENNETT—Highwaymen.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—and highwaymen, as my hon. friend suggests, to take advantage of the public chest. I would be very sorry to see the opposition take any other position than the one they have taken in this matter, and I hope they will stand to that position until the Minister of Marine and Fisheries realizes that these estimates should be left over and those of some other department taken up instead.

Mr. MILLER. I realize that the members of the opposition feel chargrined and disappointed because of the tactical blunder which they made last night; but notwithstanding their chargin, they should be a little more fair in debate than some of them have been this morning. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), who is perhaps more addicted to interrupting and asking questions than any other man in this House, should not be so touchy when a question is asked of himself. When he spoke of someone having burned papers which would have afforded evidence to which this House was entitled, I asked him to whom he referred. He said that he had made the reply before. I had hoped, for the reputation of the hon. member, that it was not the papers of Mr. Smart, the late deputy minister of the Interior, to which he referred; and when I asked to whom he referred, another hon. member said, 'Read Mr. Smart's evidence.' I have a very slight acquaintance with Mr. Smart, but from what inquiry I have made into his life and character, I have no reason to believe that he is not as honourable a man as any man who occupies a seat in this House. If the hon. member for East Grey will read Mr. Smart's evidence to the House instead of stating exactly the opposite of what—under oath—Mr. Smart really did say, it will be more honourable and manly.

Mr. SPROULE. I have read the evidence, and he spoke of having burned his letter books and a great quantity of papers which showed that he had while deputy head of that department, carried on a private correspondence to that extent.

Mr. MILLER. My memory of Mr. Smart's evidence was that he was removing from Ottawa to make his home in Montreal, and that in packing his household goods he had burned several letters which he swore were private correspondence with certain gentlemen in Europe, and no reference to public matters, and were not the property of this country.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman say that the correspondence had no reference whatever to the North Atlantic Trading Company?

Mr. MILLER. After he left the department he entered into the employ of the North Atlantic Trading Company, and I will admit that the correspondence had something to do with that company, but Mr. Smart swore that it was absolutely private.

Mr. BLAIN. The objection taken in the Public Accountes Committee was that while Mr. Smart was engaged as Deputy Minister of the Interior, while in England and for some time after his return, he carried on correspondence with the North Atlantic Trading Company, which resulted in his leaving the employ of the department and entering the employ of that company—that he was in the pay of the government while this correspondence was going on, that it related to his appointment, and that it should therefore be brought before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This discussion is entirely irrelevant.

Mr. MILLER. Let me simply say that Mr. Smart swore that the letters had no reference to public business, and we have a right to believe him.

Now, I wish to refer to an accusation—or rather an insinuation—made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). The hon. gentleman will correct me if I misunderstood him. He stated that when the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries was Speaker of this House, certain furniture was bought for the Speaker's apartments, that some of that furniture vanished and that nobody knows where it has gone to. If he did not mean to insinuate something of dishonesty against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I would like to know what in the world he did mean.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say that nobody knew where it had gone to. I said it was bought and put there, but I am credibly informed it is not there now. The question is what became of it? Who gave it away? Was it given away as souvenirs, or what became of it? There was no personal insinuation beyond the fact that the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries was then Speaker of the House and is the only person whom we can hold responsible.

Mr. MILLER. Do I understand the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) to say that he makes no insinuation and has no reason to believe there was any act of wrong doing.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not saying anything of the kind.

Mr. MILLER. Then, he allows the insinuation to remain.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman was not here all night——

Mr. MILLER. Yes, and I am going to make a reference to what was said during the night.

Mr. BENNETT. Oh, you are obstructing the estimates.

Mr. MILLER. These hon. gentlemen are anxious to make it clear that they are not obstructionists. But they will have a task greater than they are likely to accomplish in attempting to prove that. The item we took up last night was one of $50,000 to provide for the maintenance of vessels employed in patrolling the northern waters of Canada. These hon. gentlemen objected that certain expenditures for the 'Arctic' were under discussion in the Public Accounts Committee, and said they did not wish to proceed with the item. Also, they wanted certain facts which were not covered by the returns before the House. Now, what was the case? They asked for a return of the personal expenditures of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries from 1906 to 1908 and also from 1904 to 1906. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries brought down that for 1906-8 and explained that he was having the other prepared as quickly as possible, and that if some items were passed he would bring down the returns to-day.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated to-day that this return related to the Department of Inland Revenue of which he was the head during the time these expenditures were made.

Mr. MILLER. I made a mistake to that extent. This return must come from the Department of Inland Revenue of which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) is not now in control. Last night, about eleven o'clock, the hon. member who was leading the opposition said that if the estimates of the Department of Marine and Fisheries were left and those of some other department taken up, they would allow the estimates to go on. But he knew that no other minister could go on with his estimates then.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. member think that midnight is a proper time to ask us to go into Supply anyhow ?

Mr. MILLER. If the members of the opposition persist in frittering away the hours of daylight, then the work must be done at night.

Mr. TAYLOR. The time yesterday was taken up by a supporter of the government, and an independent supporter of the government, and the members of the opposition did not say a word.

Mr. MILLER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) chief whip of the opposition, read out of the party the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Thompson) whom we on this side have regarded as a very honourable, respectable, independent Conservative ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not saying anything against him. He claims to be an independent.

Mr. MILLER. Does he claim to be an independent supporter of the government ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. How can he be an independent supporter of this government ? Ask a sensible question.

Mr. MILLER. I have not said he was, but the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has said so. As I was saying, at eleven o'clock, no other minister could go on with his estimates. Their officials were not here and the records of their departments not available. But the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) reasonable as he always is, after battling with the members of the opposition, said : If you do not want to pass this item, perhaps we could go on with some other item less contentious. And what was the next item proposed by him ? It was item 214 as follows :

Shipwrecked and distressed seamen, $3,000.

Now, what can the returns which the hon. gentleman wanted have to do with next year's expenditure for shipwrecked and distressed seamen ?

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. gentleman wants an answer I will give it to him. The department had employed New York accountants to go over its financial records, including this item. We asked for the information of that service, and the minister has brought down a return which is incomplete.

Mr. MILLER. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) knows that even that return could not affect next year's expenditures for shipwrecked and distressed seamen. But here is the explanation : The hon. member who was then leading the opposition, the chief whip of the party (Mr. Taylor) replied to the Minister of Finance by saying : We have driven down the stake and are prepared to stay here until Sunday morning.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member (Mr. Miller) is mistaken. The gentleman then leading the opposition was the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster).

Mr. MILLER. I heard it remarked that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) was the leader and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was the sub. Perhaps I was doing the hon. member for Leeds more honour than he is entitled to, but, at least, he does not deny the language I attribute to him.

Mr. TAYLOR. They have carried it out, haven't they ?

Mr. MILLER. So far, very well. With such language from the chief whip of the party and with the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) expressing his willingness to remain in this House until he was as small as a pipe stem what else can we conclude ? what else can the country conclude, than that it is the fixed policy of the opposition to waste time and obstruct business in every way possible ? I think they realize that they have made a mistake. I believe that if there is any way by which they can gracefully retrace their steps, it will be taken.

Mr. BENNETT. The committee hardly knows what question is before it. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) was here through the long watches of the night and has got mixed up. The point was this : Some months ago a return was moved for in this House relating to an expenditure of about $50,000 made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for expert book-keepers. Time and again the minister promised to bring down that return and let us know the inside workings of his department in this matter. Furthermore, among the bills that make up the $50,000, there are charges of $5 per day for board for certain men, and an hon. gentleman on this side of the House stated that he knew these men, that he lived in the same house with them, and instead of paying $5 a day for their board, they only paid $1 a day, if not less. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) knew that that statement was made last night, and yet he says we are wrong when we ask that this whole swindle should be exposed.

Mr. MILLER. Is there anything this government has ever done or is ever likely to do, that the hon. gentleman will not suspect and find fault with ?

Mr. BENNETT. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, there will be very few things this government ever do that I will not suspect or anything that the hon. gentleman ever does that I will not suspect. A few weeks ago the whole country demanded an investigation into the Interior Department, they wanted the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) to be placed under oath, and there was not a man from the whole province of Ontario dared to raised his voice against an investigation except the hon. member for South Grey. Why does he do it ? Because the hon. member for East Assiniboia and the hon. member for Humbolt (Mr. Adamson) are stockholders in the Saskatchewan Land Company and this hon. gentleman had a pretty block of land that he purchased from that Saskatchewan Land Company. Will the hon. gentleman deny that ?

Mr. MILLER. I certainly deny that I own any land that I ever bought from the Saskatchewan Land Company.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. member deny that he, with some other gentlemen from the county of Grey, had a quantity of land last summer acquired from the Saskatchewan Land Company, lands that the company had and sold to them ?

Mr. MILLER. I think the hon. gentleman likely is referring to some land I bought in conjunction with some other gentlemen belonging to the Canadian Northern Land Company, and if they had any connection whatever with the Saskatchewan Land Company I am not aware of it. The lands were bought from the local land agent in the town of Owen Sound, who was selling land for that company, and that is all I had to do with the transaction.

Mr. BENNETT. That is exactly the point. The Saskatchewan Land Company bought two large parcels which were directly under the charge of the Saskatchewan Land Company and the hon. gentleman knows it.

Mr. MILLER. The hon. gentleman insinuates that I had some reason for defending the hon. member for East Assiniboia because of that particular land purchase, in which purchase I was associated with Dr. Jamieson, the Conservative local member for South Grey. Now I would like in all fairness to myself that the hon. member for East Simcoe should if he can, show that the purchase of land made from the Canadian Northern Land Company through the local agency in Owen Sound, had any connection whatever with my defence of the hon. member for East Assiniboia.

Mr. BENNETT. Now we are getting close to the question. I happened to hear of this matter in the most casual way. One of the gentlemen who was concerned in this, said that the hon. member for South Grey had induced him to go into a land deal and that it was some of the Saskatchewan Land Company's lands. I take the word of that gentleman, who is well known to members of this House.

Mr. MILLER. I rise to a question of privilege. I would like again that the hon. member for East Simcoe should in any way show evidence to connect my name with the purchase of lands from the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, or in any way connect my name with the purchase of a quarter of an acre of land with which the hon. member for East Assiniboia ever had anything to do in which he had any interest to the extent of a five cent piece. I deny that I purchased any lands, or at any time had any interest in lands from the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company ; it was from the Canadian Northern Land Company that I purchased. I do not know that the one has any connection with the other. I have stated that I purchased land from the local land agent in the town of Owen Sound, not knowing and not now believing that the member for East Assiniboia or any other member of this House had anything to do with the ownership of the lands and certainly not with the transaction. I think the hon. member for East Simcoe is bound to accept the statement I have made, and I challenge him to prove anything to the contrary. If he would like to do so. I will show him the agreements and thus afford him every facility.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman will hear about this in South Grey in the approaching election.

Mr. GERVAIS. I think I am in order in calling attention to the following statements which were made in the Senate, on the 27th of February, 1908 by the hon. the Secretary of State. I consider these statements are a libel upon the citizens as well as the administration of the city of Montreal, and I feel it my duty to protest against them, because they are simply outrageously libellous. I think that the Secretary of State before speaking in the way he did should have consulted the members from Montreal, or if he does not care to speak to them, to those who know all about the police administration and the morals of my fellow citizens of that city.

Mr. FISHER. I rise to a point of order. I do not think the hon. gentleman is in order in interjecting into a discussion of supply in committee extraneous matter concerning proceedings that have taken place in another House.

Mr. GERVAIS. I think I am in order, and I beg leave to read this statement.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. GERVAIS. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of raising a question of privilege.

Mr. FISHER. I raise the point that the hon. gentleman cannot discuss a matter which is entirely extraneous to the question before the committee, even if he were in order in discussing a proceeding in the other chamber, which he cannot do.

Mr. GERVAIS. I wish to speak on the motion of adjournment which is now before the chair in reference to my question of privilege.

Mr. FISHER. I think my hon. friend is not taking a sound position. He cannot bring up anything he desires on a motion that the committee rise. That is totally different from a motion that the House adjourn. On a motion to adjourn the House the hon. member can bring up any question he chooses. But the House is now in Committee of Supply, and the hon. gentleman cannot bring up a totally extraneous matter.

Mr. LENNOX. I presume the hon. member for St. James, Montreal (Mr. Gervais) wants to show the reason why we should not proceed with any more Supply until something that is wrong has been remedied.

Mr. GERVAIS. Here is what was said by the hon. Secretary of State.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McColl). I must rule that the hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then we will appeal to the Speaker.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman rises to a question of privilege he is perfectly in order.

Mr. FISHER. He cannot rise to a question of privilege at any time in this House. There is only a certain time when a personal explanation can be made, but not in the middle of a debate.

Mr. SPROULE. He may do so at any time when there is no member on his feet.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend says that the hon. member for Montreal, St. James, should explain what he was going to deal with. He did, I understood him to say that he was discussing a question which involves a reflection upon the city of Montreal.

Mr. MONK. I understood him to say that he rises to a question of privilege.

Mr. FISHER. He was asked to state what discussion he was going to take up. The answer was that he was going to discuss a statement of a member of the government in another place, which statement, he contended, reflected upon the city of Montreal. In the first place, it is not a question of privilege in regard to the hon. member himself, and in the second place it is entirely irrelevant to the question before the chair or to the motion that the committee rise and report progress. Furthermore he is out of order because it is a discussion of what took place in the other House.

Mr. MONK. On the question of order, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) is wrong as to the fact. I understand the hon. gentleman from Montreal, St. James, to rise as a citizen of Montreal to a question of privilege.

Mr. GERVAIS. Surely.

Mr. MONK. If he does not claim that privilege I desire to claim it for myself. If it is a question of privilege I submit that it is perfectly in order to claim the privilege at any time. The rule suffers no exception; a question of privilege can be claimed at any time and the hon. member must state his question of privilege. It will be for the chairman to decide after he has stated it if it is a question of privilege or not and he should not be handicapped in stating it. I am in the same position under this serious contumely which has been put upon the ciy of Monreal and if the privilege is not granted to my hon. friend I will claim it for myself.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to quote the authority which will justify what I have said that a question of privilege can be raised at any time except when a member is on his feet. Rule 38 says:

> Questions of privilege can be always considered in either House——

And

> —it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It must be a question of privilege.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member (Mr. Gervais) was not allowed to go far enough to enable you, Mr. Chairman, to judge as to whether it was a question of privilege or not, but, when he arose to explain the question of privilege he was quite within his rights so long as there was no one else on his feet at the time.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr.

Fisher) who is leading the House, to the fact that it is the rule that all committees rise at one o'clock. It is just one o'clock and we have before us the motion that the committee rise and report progress.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am sorry that the minister of the department under discussion is not here at present because some time ago he said that he was prepared to ask the committee to rise if it were not for certain reflections made upon him by the hon. member for East Grey. Since then the hon. member for East Grey said that he intended no insinuation against the integrity of the minister himself.

Mr. FISHER. Did the hon. member for East Grey say that?

Mr. TALBOT. Did he take back what he said?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He does not take back anything.

Mr. TAYLOR. He said that he intended no personal reflection upon the minister. I think that, it being one o'clock and the minister not being in, the committee should report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is already a motion to that effect by the hon. member for East Grey which has not been disposed of. Do I understand the hon. member for Montreal, St. James (Mr. Gervais), to rise to a question of privilege?

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It must be a question of privilege.

Mr. GERVAIS. Let me explain the question of privilege, because it has been adjudicated upon before I have had a chance to put the facts before the House. As part of my statement I must quote something which was said in the Senate yesterday.

Mr. FISHER. May I interrupt for one moment? I understood the hon. member to make the statement that he wished to discuss the utterances of a certain member of the government in another place and that there was a reflection upon the city of Montreal. I contend that that is not a question of personal privilege.

Mr. MONK. I rise to a question of order. The hon. member (Mr. Gervais) has the floor, he is stating his question of privilege and he is not to be interrupted.

Mr. PATERSON. Surely the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) will admit that to rise to a question of privilege in committee it is necessary for the hon. mem ber to show that it is a matter personal to himself which constitutes the privilege.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. He must state the privilege.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. MONK. Nobody could stop him from stating the facts.

Mr. PATERSON. If there has been nothing charged against him, or if there have been any remarks made in a speech which are not personal to himself, then surely the hon. gentleman cannot claim a question of privilege.

Mr. GERVAIS. Here is what I want to call to the attention of the committee with your permission, Mr. Chairman:

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Italians have not come here at the invitation of the government. They come and go in all countries freely, and I know of no reason why we should interdict them here. We have Italians in the city of Ottawa who are law-abiding and industrious and give us no trouble, because we put our laws in force. There are Italians in all the cities of Canada. The reason why they are considered a dangerous element in Montreal is plain. It is because the police officers are absolutely indifferent in their duty and because Montreal abounds with drinking houses, both legal and illegal—more than any other place in Canada.

That is purely and simply an outrageous libel.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. GERVAIS. No, but I will go farther:

Some time ago I called the attention of the House to the sad commentary that Montreal had more drunken men in proportion to population than any other place in Canada, owing to the abundance of taverns in the city. The police have made no attempt to stem the tide of criminality as they should have done. I saw a month or two ago that some fifty men had been hauled up for selling liquor. Were they punished? No.

Mr. FISHER. I think the hon. member ought to show in what way this applies to him personally.

Mr. GERVAIS. I am going to do it.

Mr. SPROULE. He has a right to read it.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am trusting to the hon. member's knowledge of parliamentary procedure to enable him to judge as to what constitutes a question of privilege. A question of privilege must, of course, be personal to the hon. member.

Mr. GERVAIS. In a minute I will show how I am directly connected with it.

The chief officer asked them each to contribute $5 to a fund, and they were all let off. That is the condition in Montreal, and this is the consequence of it. Had the police done their duty in Montreal, those murders would not have been committed, and had they closed up a number of the drinking houses that would have put a stop to it. What is the opinion of the Italian priest in Montreal, who has charge of that parish? He says:

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is not a question of privilege. I cannot allow you to read a whole essay and then be obliged to conclude that it was not a question of privilege at all. The hon. gentleman will have to come directly to the personal question himself.

Mr. GERVAIS. Before I come to it directly I must quote the facts which I want to state to the chair. I want to show my connection with it.

The police and the magistrates——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will have to show his connection with it immediately, or else he cannot proceed.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is my ruling.

Mr. SPROULE. Then your ruling is not consistent with parliamentary practice.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is not a word to justify the question of privilege.

Mr. GERVAIS. There will be some words to justify a question of privilege.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It will be just as well to show what the question of privilege is now.

Mr. GERVAIS. It will be just as well to ventilate the grievance now. It will have to come later on, surely.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have no objection to ventilating the case if it is in order.

Mr. GERVAIS. I say it is perfectly in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is not in order so far.

Mr. GERVAIS. I must be allowed to quote all the facts in connection with the case before it can be determined whether it is in order or not. If you want to pass judgment before I have done, of course it is open to you to do so. It is in your province or your power to close my mouth.

Mr. FISHER. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. MONK. Have you given your ruling?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is no question of privilege before me.

Mr. GERVAIS. There is a question of privilege, but I am not allowed to state it.

Mr. LENNOX. Is he not to be allowed to read that which will show his connection with it?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. It seems to me that an hon. member has a perfect right to put a question of privilege before the chair, that the chair will take the word of the hon. member that it is a question of privilege, and if it is found that the facts stated by the hon. member do not constitute a question of privilege, the chair can then rule against him. But I think it is going against the privileges of a member to prevent him putting a question of privilege before the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have asked the hon. member to state his personal connection with the matter. If he wishes to do so he may, but I cannot allow the reading of a whole speech delivered in the Senate.

Mr. GERVAIS. Is it the wish of the chair that I shall begin my speech at the conclusion? Quintilian and other Roman authors, and those versed in French or English literature, say that we must not begin our speech at the conclusion. Such is the opinion of those who know.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question is that the committee rise.

Mr. MONK. If you rule that a question of privilege raised by a member cannot be fully stated, I for one would be disposed to appeal from your decision.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My ruling is that he has not submitted any question of privilege.

Mr. BENNETT. It has not developed yet; it is coming along nicely.

Mr. MONK. Privilege is a very precious matter, and I cannot accept your ruling in that respect.

Mr. J. D. REID. We will appeal to the Speaker.

And the Speaker having resumed the chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. What is the ruling which is appealed from?

Mr. MONK. I desire to appeal from the ruling of the chairman. I move that the ruling of the chairman of the committee be not sustained. The reason is that the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Gervais) raised a question of privilege and was not allowed to state the question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER. There can be no discussion on the appeal.

Mr. MONK. The hon. member who raised the question of privilege had, I maintain, the right to fully state it before the chairman was called on to rule.

Mr. SPEAKER. The practice is for the chairman of the committee to report in writing the point of order which he has decided and which is appealed from. The statement placed in my hands by the chairman of the committee is as follows:

Mr. Gervais, the member for St. James division, raised a question on the ground of privilege. which the chairman decided was not a question of privilege, and the hon. member proceeded to read an article which had no reference to the hon. member.

The question then is, shall the decision of the chairman be confirmed?

Mr. GERVAIS. Mr. Speaker, for divers reasons I beg leave to withdraw the question of privilege.

Mr. MONK. I do not think my hon. friend has a right to do that. I have just seen the hon. member for St. James conferring with hon. gentlemen opposite and he seems to have suddenly come to the conclusion that a question of privilege, such as he has raised, should be abandoned.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have ruled on the question.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit your decision to the House. I beg, therefore, to move:-That the decision of the hon. the Speaker be not sustained. I do so on the ground that any member who raises a question of privilege should be allowed to state it fully.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question must be submitted to the House without discussion. Is it the pleasure of the House that the decision of the chairman of the committee be confirmed?

House divided on the question.

Lewis,

Mr. SPEAKER. I declare the ruling of the chairman confirmed by the House.

Mr. MONK. Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to place in your hands a motion for the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that no motion at this point is permissible. The only reason I am in the chair is to lay before the House the report of the chairman on his ruling. The moment that is disposed of, the House resumes in Committee of Supply.

House resumed in Committee of Supply.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Mr. Sproule has moved that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) flatly contradicted the statement of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) as to the evidence of Mr. Smart concerning the burning of certain letters and letterbooks. The hon. member (Mr. Miller) flourished a clipping from a newspaper, leading the House to suppose that he would give authoritative evidence as to what Mr. Smart had said. But he took care to sit down without reading it. Now, I propose to read from the public documents just what Mr. Smart did say.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) think it has any bearing on this vote of $50,000 for patrolling the waters of Hudson bay?

Mr. BARKER. It has the same bearing that the hon. member for South Grey——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I allowed a passing allusion to it, but it will be awkward to allow a full discussion of this item.

Mr. BARKER. I appeal to fair-play.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If I were to apply the rules of the House, such a discussion would be clearly out of order. But I have allowed great latitude, perhaps unfortunately; but my reason was that it has been customary in this House to allow great latitude. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) will see that it is not in order to undertake a discussion of the Department of the Interior on an item relating to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BARKER. I always yield to the chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A passing allusion might be allowed.

Mr. BARKER. Then, I may say that the hon. member for South Grey has misstated the evidence. Mr. Smart stated directly and unequivocally, upon his oath, that he had received and answered letters from a member of the North Atlantic Trading syndicate relating to immigration while he was Deputy Minister of the Interior, and that those letters and the letter books containing copies of the replies he had burned.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) tell us out of what vote Mr. Falconer, this New York accountant, was paid?

Mr. BRODEUR. Out of money voted for the purpose by parliament. I think also, some money was paid from the appropriation for the works in Sorel and possibly some other similar special appropriations.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not better informed concerning the affairs of his department. Here is a letter dated February 26, addressed to the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries and calling his attention to the fact that a payment of $9,445.25 to K. Falconer in two cheques was against the vote for maintenance of lights. Can he explain that?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are several extensive reports made by Mr. Falconer—who, I may say, is not an American, but a Canadian living in Montreal—in connection with the lighthouse depot in Prescott. Mr. Falconer's services covered this as well as other branches of the department. The lighthouse depot at Prescott is included in the maintenance of lights service.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister tells us that though a certain amount was voted by parliament at his request to pay this service of Mr. Falconer, still he defends the policy of paying Mr. Falconer partly out of the vote for the maintenance of lights. Surely, on reflection, he will not support that policy. If this method were followed, where would it land us?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have explained that this sum was paid out of the maintenance of lights appropriation because that vote covered the lighthouse depot at Prescott, concerning which, reports were made by Mr. Falconer. The same was true with regard to the works at Sorel.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, we understand that the services for this special bookkeeping were paid out of these funds?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, what was done with the special vote given by parliament for the purpose of this expert bookkeeping?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was used for that purpose too.

Mr. BLAIN. How much was that?

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) has under his hand the report which I sent him. I would be glad to give him the information by reading the report.

Mr. BLAIN. I will read it soon. Now, continuing this letter to which I have referred, it says this includes the services of nineteen persons for various periods and at rates of pay varying from $75 to $3.50 per diem. Were the services of the expert accountant sanctioned by order in council?

Mr. BRODEUR. I could not say.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the expenditure of this money sanctioned by the hon. gentleman's colleagues?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BLAIN. Then are we to understand that his colleagues approved of the principle of paying these accountants out of money that was voted for another purpose? Now, it appears from this correspondence that Mr. Falconer's staff was furnished details of transportation and living expenses in accordance with the order in council, but the Auditor General's Report states that that part of the order was not fulfilled.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sure it is not my fault. I stated previously that I thought this part of the order had been complied with, and I was surprised to hear that some payments had been made without vouchers being furnished.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the hon. gentleman able to present to this committee now the vouchers that he said were in the department before these accounts were paid?

Mr. BRODEUR. I was under the impression yesterday when I made the statement that the vouchers had been produced when payments were made. I have just been informed by the officer of that branch of the service that the amounts paid were simply advances on account. There is a balance still due for which vouchers have been asked for.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to say that this account had been closed. How much is still due these men?

Mr. BRODEUR. They claim a balance of $6,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Was any portion of this $6,000 unsettled accounts for board by these men when they were living in Ottawa?

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand they have been requested to supply vouchers for that part of the expenditure, and the officers of the department have decided not to pay any more until these vouchers have been produced.

Mr. BLAIN. Was this request to Mr. Falconer for vouchers made by letter from the minister or his deputy?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was made by letter.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman produce a copy of that letter?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. He might do it this afternoon. For the time being I am willing to accept his statement. At what dates were these men paid on account of board?

Mr. BRODEUR. The dates of payment are not included in the return.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it not a fact that all these accounts for board have been settled and that the cheques are in one of the departments at the present time?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think anything has been permanently settled.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any correspondence between the department and Mr. Falconer showing that there was a dispute in respect to the board allowance?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, Mr. Falconer has been requested to supply the vouchers.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any correspondence between the department and these officers in respect to overcharges for board?

Mr. BRODEUR. The accountant who is here is looking into that matter.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want the minister to be sure of the statement he has made just now that these moneys were advanced to these gentlemen on account. Is that statement correct?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, that is the statement which was put into my hand.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman send up to the Public Accounts Committee and get the accounts that have been brought down, that were rendered in each case weekly or monthly and which were settled for? If he finds that to be the case, how will he account for the statement he has just made?

Mr. BRODEUR. The information I have from the department now is that some advances have been made on account and that there has been correspondence with Mr. Falconer asking him to supply the department with the necessary vouchers.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister must have a copy of these accounts as they ran on monthly.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that there has always been a balance due, even if the account has been paid in full.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are accounts rendered and settled for, and there is no question about them. The minister stated last night that he would bring down certain papers to-day. It is now to-day, because it is 2 o'clock. I asked at 1 o'clock that this committee rise and the minister watching the House was prepared to agree if it had not been for some statements made by the hon. member for East Grey. The hon. member for East Grey said that in the remarks he made he had no personal reference to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I think that in view of that fact and that the minister promised to bring down these papers he should move that the committee rise.

Mr. BRODEUR. What about the hon. member for North Toronto?

Mr. TAYLOR. What the hon. member for North Toronto said applied not personally to the minister but to any minister. The minister has not been able to bring down all the papers that he promised last night to place before the House to-day and in view of that the minister should accept what has been said and ask the committee to rise.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I understand that the minister has made an effort to bring these papers down. He felt that he should have been allowed to proceed upon the understanding that they should be brought down. Through no fault of his own he has been unable to get them. Therefore I think the minister would be absolutely justified in asking the committee to rise.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would be the last man to ask the House to sit unduly, but it is no fault of mine if the matter has reached its present situation. Last night when my estimates were reached a most vicious attack was made upon me by the hon. member for North Toronto.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, a most vicious attack in which it was said that I had some money from the department that there was no justification at all for, that I used that money for months and months and returned it afterwards to the department. The hon. member for North Toronto knows absolutely that this was an incorrect statement and he wanted to create the impression that I had used the money of the department without any justification. I resented this imputation very strongly because I knew that the hon. gentleman knew too much about the administration of the departments to unwittingly make such an attack upon a colleague in the House. I was extremely sorry later on to hear the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) make some insinuations against me in regard to my administration when I was Speaker of the House. I may have my failings, I know very well that I have not got all the qualities that might appertain to a man but I resent personal attacks.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the minister insist on forcing these estimates through ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I would like to have these attacks withdrawn. I think that in view of these attacks we should pass an item before we adjourn.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister promised to have these papers to-day. It is to-day now. If the papers which were brought down this morning had been the papers promised there would have been an item passed.

Mr. BRODEUR. I said last night that these papers concerning the accounts of the experts were brought down before me and I found they were not complete. I gave instructions to have them completed. We searched for them last night. Nobody could find them. The Deputy Minister was absent in Quebec. This morning, at half past seven or eight, I sent some one to see the secretary of the Deputy Minister to find where these papers were and to have them brought down. All the papers which were being copied were brought down. Amongst them were the ones in question. I saw myself that there were some missing documents and I gave instructions to have them included with the rest. The fact that these papers are not there is due to no fault or negligence of my own. In view of that and in view of the vicious attacks which have been made against me would it not be well that something should be done from the opposition side of the House, that hon. gentlemen recognize that I have done my best in connection with the production of these papers and that in order to show that there is no ill-feeling we will simply pass an item and everything will be forgotten.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister was not in the House when my hon. friend from East Grey said a little while ago that he intended to make no insinuation personally against the minister. It is the same as far as my hon. friend from North Toronto is concerned. In view of the fact that the minister promised to bring these papers down and that they have not been brought down, through no fault of his own, I think he should ask the committee to rise.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister, with no loss of dignity or prestige, having failed to produce the papers and accounts, might now ask the committee to rise.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have produced everything I have here. That is evidence of my good will. I have been trying to do my best. I understand that the opposition was under the impression that there was something to hide in connection with the employment of these experts. There is absolutely nothing to hide. Everything has been above board.

Mr. TAYLOR. At eleven o'clock last night this same proposition was made to the hon. member for North Toronto who, to show his willingness and that of the opposition to go on, made the proposition to take up the estimates of any other department until the Minister of Marine and Fisheries could get these papers. He did not want to proceed with the estimates of this department without them. The minister did proceed and he promised the House that these papers would be brought down in the morning. We waited for them and he says this morning that he cannot fulfil his promise of yesterday.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said a minute ago that he was sorry that the minister was not in the House when the hon. member for East Grey said that he had made no insinuation.

Mr. TAYLOR. Against the minister.

Mr. TALBOT. Made no insinuation. It was within the hearing of every member who was in the House at the time that the hon. member for East Grey positively stated that furniture had been bought by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries when he was Speaker of the House of Commons and that that furniture had disappeared. He asked whether it was done away with, or given as presents, or stolen, as he was informed. He positively stated these things and now the hon. member stands up and says he did not mean anything by it.

Mr. SPROULE. I never made any such statement.

Mr. TALBOT. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He followed up his argument by stating that they had every reason to believe that the then Speaker of the House was extravagant, that he had continued to be extravagant and that they would not allow the item to pass. These were the positive statements of the hon. member for East Grey and now it was very bad form and very bad grace on his part to try and get out of it.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not trying to get out of it one iota, and I do not wish to change one word I said. I will repeat it all over again if it is of any advantage to the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. BENNETT. We are here to stay.

Mr. SPROULE. I simply said that furniture and other things bought by the hon. minister when he was Speaker, I was credibly informed, had disappeared. I asked where they had gone, who had taken them away, I said that we did not know and that we had no person to hold responsible for them except the man who was managing that department for the time being, therefore, we held him responsible. That is the constitutional and the only way we can do. To say that I am trying to get out of it—not at all.

Mr. TALBOT. Will the hon. gentleman mention any pieces of furniture that were removed or disappeared that were bought by the Speaker of the House at that time? If he is the man I think he is, will he state it positively?

Mr. SAM HUGHES. A little while ago the hon. Minister of Agriculture proclaimed his virtue before the House. He told us that he had become virtuous and that he could not accept the proposal of the opposition to pass some of his items, instead of the items of the Minister of Marine. I regret that the conduct of the Minister of Marine is not in conformity with the principles of responsible government. We cannot be expected to desert the functions of an opposition and allow a minister to come down and say that this must pass or we will sit here day and night. I remember that when the hon. gentlemen were in opposition we were unable to pass a legitimate and proper item for the building of the Farnham post office and we were held up for days because it did not please these hon. gentlemen to see a post office built in that town. Then there was no principle at stake. To-day there is a vital principle at stake. In the face of the fact that these papers have not been brought down and the Minister of Finance thinks that the opposition will tamely sit down and pass these estimates.

I say that the Finance Minister is responsible for this deadlock in attempting to force through this House the estimates of this minister in the face of his refusal to bring down the necessary information. The opposition have offered everything that is fair and square in this matter. We are standing by a principle. Whenever the ministers have shown a desire to meet us fairly and squarely, it is on record that we have always been disposed to help them through with their estimates; but when we are treated as if we had no rights in this House, it is our duty to vindicate our rights as an opposition. When our good friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) criticises the expenditure and gives reasons why we cannot take the word of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) rises and tells him that he is pronouncing a funeral oration. The hon. member for Wright will find that when the freemen of this country hear the facts of this case, they will pronounce the funeral oration of a good many hon. gentlemen opposite. He made the magnanimous offer that I should meet him in the county of Wright and discuss the popularity of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I have faith in the intelligence of the good people of Wright; but when the hon. member for Wright addresses this House as he has done to-day, what would he do in the back townships where the people are beyond the reach of newspapers? I do not know that it is necessary for me to accept his challenge and meet him in the county of Wright. I might as well ask him to meet me in the county of Carleton. But I have faith in the intelligence of the people of Wright that when the facts of this case are presented to them and they learn that their money has been squandered in the manner in which it is shown to be by this minister, it will require a much more glib tongue than that of the hon. member to prove to them that he is the man for Galway.

Mr. TAYLOR. A few moments ago I asked the minister to refer to the accounts, which would prove that he was again misleading the House. Now, I have the accounts, and here is the first one on file.

Mr. BLAIN. No vouchers?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, no vouchers. The first is dated the 30th of November, 1906, and is as follows: 256 days' services, $7,638.89; 83 days' board at $5 a day, $415; 124½ days at $4, $498; 55 days at $3, $165; making a total for board of $1,078; transportation, $599.35; stenographer, 8⅓ weeks at $9.50, $79.16; telegrams, $42.49; stationery, $17.35; making a total of $9,445.24. This is the account rendered by Mr. Falconer, and it is marked on the face: 'Pay subject to minister's approval, H. G.' There is credited on that a cheque for $25,000, and on the 21st December a payment of $6,235, so that that account is closed; and not a voucher there. It is the same with all the other accounts rendered in this way to the amount of $31,235. This is the way the minister has been giving correct information on nearly every question submitted by this side of the House. He said that these advances were only made on account, and yet the accounts are closed right through. No court of law would allow the government or anybody else to deal with these accounts in that way.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the name of the man who charged $5 a day for board and only paid $1?

Mr. TAYLOR. The names are W. B. Richards, W. F. Russell, G. E. Fawcett and K. Falconer at $5 a day; R. L. Acton, F. H. Leland, Geo. Pare, M. L. Cooley and H. A. Marvin, at $4 a day; S. Kettridge, A. H. Moorman, J. J. Murray and L. Cone, at $3 a day.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to know if any of these men whose names have been read and whose board is charged at from $3 to $5 per day were in the house from which my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Jackson) was staying, and where the charge for board is about $1 per day.

Mr. W. JACKSON. The names of those I had referred to are found at page P—78, Marvin, Hipwell and Ellis.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the face of these accounts being settled, what about these advances ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I explained that the department has in hand a sufficient sum of money to recoup itself if there is anything wrong in these vouchers. The department has requested Mr. Falconer to produce these vouchers. He has been urging for money since September last, but we have declined to pay until the vouchers are produced.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the deputy minister says 'with the approval of the minister.' And the accounts are closed.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I have not initialled one of them.

Mr. LALOR. What amount has been paid these auditors, what amount is still due them ?

Mr. BRODEUR. About $36,000 has been paid, and they make a claim of about $6,000 which we have refused to pay until they produce the vouchers for the charge for board mentioned there.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has entered the House, and I would like to submit a question to him. It appears that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has paid these experts bills amounting to $9,445.25 out of the money voted by this House for the maintenance of lights. I would like to know if that is just to this House and if it is a proper principle for a minister to adopt in his department ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it would be more desirable, in a matter of this kind, to have a special vote to cover the service. But if the audit dealt with the service of the maintenance of lights, there would be nothing wrong in taking a portion of the expense out of the money for that service. As a matter of procedure, I would rather do it the other way.

Mr. BLAIN. This money was paid out of this appropriation for the maintenance of lights after an appropriation had been made by the House for this specific purpose. And the Auditor General drew the attention of the department to the fact that it was not in accordance with the order in council. Yet the Minister of Marine and Fisheries justifies this procedure. I suppose that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be taken to task at the next meeting of the Council. Now, the Minister of Finance has been called out of the House again, so I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if it will be the policy of his department in the future to apply the principle which he has applied in this case ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sure that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) does not wish the country and the House to understand that we have been taking money which should have been used for the maintenance of lights and applying it to bookkeeping as a different service. I may not have made myself clear. The lighthouse depot of Prescott is a large organization and covers manufacturing processes. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) say that work done for the improvement of the system in that lighthouse depot was not a fair charge against that service ?

Mr. BLAIN. Not in the face of the fact that the House had voted a specific amount for the work.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was not voted then. The vote was in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister tell us when these cheques were given ?

Mr. BRODEUR. One cheque, for $5,000, was on November 29, 1906. At that time, no money was voted.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that, before any amount was voted, the hon. gentleman had appointed the New York accountants to take charge of his accounts, that these New York accountants had commenced work and had run up an account of $9,000 against the department before this House had voted a dollar for the service ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not appoint New York accountants. I have stated that before and am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman repeat his statements.

Mr. BARR. There was a time when the ministers were all powerful. There was a time, before that, when the King was all powerful. But at length we came to the days of responsible government when the laws were not the expression of the will of the King or the King's ministers, but the expression of the will of the people themselves. Under responsible government, an opposition is necessary to criticise and check the acts of the government. For the first time in my short political career, I heard here recently from the lips of the Minister of Finance a plain statement of the doctrine that the opposition in this House had no inherent rights, but that what powers they enjoyed were conceded to them by the government. I want to tell that hon. gentleman that if we have not the numbers in this House, we have the country behind us, and the country will demand that our position be recognized. We are responsible for every item of expenditure authorized by this House. If we do not demand the information necessary to judge rightly of that expenditure, we do not perform that duty. The other item of $4,445 was paid in the month of December.

Mr. BENNETT. Who was the party with whom the minister dealt as to hiring, and the arrangement for board ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Falconer is the man with whom the arrangements were made, by myself personally.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the arrangement with Mr. Falconer that he and his party were to have each a per diem allowance for board ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Here is Mr. Falconer's first account, to the 30th of November : services, 256 days, $7,678.89. Now the per diem allowance for subsistence : 83 days at $5 a day, $415; 124½ days at $4, $498; 55 days at $3 per day, $165 ; or a total of $1,078 up to that date. Now the House will see that there was an explicit arrangement with the minister that Mr. Falconer was to be allowed $5 per day for board of certain classes of his staff, $4 per day for certain other classes, and $3 per day for certain others. Was that the arrangement with regard to board?

Mr. BRODEUR. My recollection with regard to board is that there was no understanding that we should pay a specific sum.

Mr. BENNETT. The account placed here by Mr. Falconer goes to prove that there was an explicit arrangement with the minister for a per diem allowance at three separate rates. On that basis a bill amounting to over $4,000 has been paid to Mr. Falconer. If the minister is correct that they were only to be allowed what they paid, we have here a case of petty stealing and theft. We find here one man, H. A. Mervin, who is allowed $4 a day, another man, H. Hipwell, who is allowed $3 a day, and another man named Ellis is allowed $4 a day. Now the hon. member for West Elgin has stated that these men Mervin, Ellis and Hipwell were all boarding in the same House with him, and that the prices paid there were not more than $1 a day if as much.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was well understood that these men should be paid the actual amount of money which they expended. Now they have made a claim against the department for work done and for board, and this claim has been rejected until Mr. Falconer produces vouchers for the amount which was paid for board.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister the contract that he made with Mr. Falconer ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it was a verbal arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. An expenditure of $50,000, and nothing but a verbal contract.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was a verbal arrangement to begin with.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, it is a very fortunate thing that the hon. member for West Elgin was able to expose this case of petty thieving. Now what proof is there that all these other men have not been paid swindling rates as well ? If he has swindled the country on the board of Hipwell to the tune of $2 a day, why has he not swindled the country on the whole board bill? Now the fault must be either the minister's or Mr. Falconer's and the minister seems to be in fault, because there was evidently an agreement that Falconer and his staff were to be allowed boarding rates at $5, $4 and $3 a day. I must say that if the minister was in a court of law the court would be forced to believe Mr. Falconer and not the minister. The minister received an account of $9,445 from this man, and he will not deny that he never saw that account.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think I ever saw it. I do not see any of the accounts in the department, they all pass through the accountant's branch.

Mr. BENNETT. Now we find in this bill one item ' Paid subject to the minister's approval.' Did the minister tell the deputy that it was right to pay that bill ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I am sure I did not approve of this bill because it did not contain my initials, showing that it was not brought before me.

Mr. BENNETT. The deputy certifies here to the accountant to pay it, because the minister has told him to do it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not see it, and I did not approve it. When accounts contain the words ' subject to the minister's approval,' if they do not bear my initials it is evident that I have not seen them.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister says he made a bargain with Falconer that the latter was only to be allowed for board for himself and his staff on the production of vouchers.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. I may quote from a letter which was sent to that gentleman :

Accounts and vouchers must always be rendered by you as well as the accountants for board and living expenses in Ottawa, from the parties with whom they live.

That is dated on the 19th of December, 1907.

Mr. BENNETT. That is after this account had been placed before the department and paid ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There was always a balance sufficient to cover anything which was not correct.

Mr. BENNETT. That seems to be a practice in the hon. gentleman's department. There is a case that will be reviewed in the Public Accounts Committee where a man named Birnie, of the Georgian Bay Fisheries Commission, by approval of the minister, is allowed $5 per day for hotel bills. The minister will not deny that.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Birnie who is not a regular officer of the department, did not keep his accounts but he was instructed that in future he would have to keep them. In the meantime he was paid $3 a day.

Mr. BENNETT. When the minister was paying Birnie $5 a day for hotel expenses he had right under his eye a bill of $2 a day for the stenographer who accompanied him. Here is Birnie exerting political leverage to force the minister to allow him $5 per day for travelling around country hotels when the minister has the bill of the stenographer who acompanied him and who charged $2 a day.

Mr. BRODEUR. The situation of Birnie was different from the situation of the shorthand writer.

Mr. BENNETT. I know it was nothing of the kind. Birnie stayed in the same hotel as the stenographer. That strengthens my belief that there was a bargain between the minister and Falconer. I am inclined to that opinion but I will withhold my judgment until I hear Falconer's statement. I do not wonder that the minister did not bring down this reeking mass of corrupt thieving. This goes right through the minister's department in which political leverage is sufficient to allow a man to charge $5 a day when another man pays $2. It is like the dredging contract men, both of whom swore the other day that they did not see anything wrong in swindling the government, that that was an accepted custom in their part of the country. It is not done to the tune of a few thousands of dollars but to the tune of hundreds of thousands. Is the minister going to say that this man is swindling the country when he puts his bill in in that way ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have stated my explanation of it.

Mr. BENNETT. This man stands as a confessed swinder and thief on what the minister says.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not in the habit of branding people as robbers and swindlers. I am simply stating the facts and I will leave the people to draw their own conclusions.

Mr. BENNETT. When a man is told that he is only to be allowed so much per day and when he puts in a bill for $5 a day when he actually paid out $1 or $2 he is a thief and every man will brand him as a thief.

Mr. BRODEUR. I cannot agree with my hon. friend. These are words that I am not in the habit of using.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman could apply the term to any man on this side of the House or if he could accuse them of such swindling work as that it would come very quickly from him.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not been brought up in that way at all.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, it may be that the hon. gentleman has not been brought up in that way, but he has consorted with that class of people and probably he has grown hardened to it.

Mr. W. JACKSON. We are here trying to see that the affairs of our country are managed honestly and fairly. We are here representing the people and as such we have a right to know everything connected with the public administration. If we have not a proper system of bookkeeping I for one believe that it should be changed. In any municipality in this country there must be a voucher for every account and the auditor will refuse to pay an account until the voucher is forthcoming. I do not believe in obstructing and I am not obstructing in fighting for the rights and privileges that belong to me as a representative of the people. We look to parliament hill to guide us in what we should do in our smaller corporations. We expect to find there a high standard but what would be said of the officer of any municipal or private corporation who took money from one fund entrusted to his care and used it for some other purpose ? We find that in many of our moneyed institutions officials have been tempted in that way thinking that it was no harm to take money from a fund with the intention of placing it back again, but how many times do we find that unfortunately the money is not put back, that in the end defalcation results. These people will say that it is all right because they do it in Ottawa. That is the condition that we find to-day. We find a minister of the Crown taking money voted for one purpose and using it for another. It is no excuse whatever to say that he will put it back. It is just as much a crime to divert that money from the purpose for which it is voted even if you intend to put it back as if it were never put back. You are entering the thin end of the wedge of corruption and the example is being handed down to our smaller municipalities.

Now, I have one or two words to say in reference to the making of this special audit. If you are going to pay men $50 a day for their services, let them board themselves, where they like and how they like. But if they were to have payment of their actual living expenses while in Ottawa, before one of them was paid a dollar on that account, he should have placed a receipted voucher in the hands of the department. Nothing could be more contemptible, ridiculous and unbusinesslike than the manner of dealing with these men. You will not find anything like it, even in the smallest municipality in the country. Our system of bookkeeping on parliament hill badly needs fixing. Surely the cardinal principle of good bookkeeping is to keep a check on all your disbursements, so that at a moment's notice you can tell where every five cents of your money has gone to. Speaking from the farmer's standpoint, I do not think the average farmer in the Dominion of Canada will be found to have his books in such bad shape as those of this department.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A little while ago the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries objected to the tenor of the language of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett); but I remember an occasion in 1892, when the present minister was in opposition, and he took a very active part in obstructing a little estimate concerning the Farnham post office. The obstruction was continued all one afternoon, all one night and the following day until nearly noon, when the then opposition saw their error, and withdrew. In 'Hansard' of 1892, at page 2902, will be found the speech of the hon. minister in which he used language quite as strong as that used by the hon. member for East Simcoe to-day.

So we find the hon. gentleman's chickens are coming home to roost. It comes with an ill grace from him to criticise the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) when that hon. gentleman calls him to account for his mismanagement of his department. Now, it is late for breakfast time, and I think the minister should see his way clear to have the committee rise and report progress. What does he say about it?

Mr. BRODEUR. I shall be very glad to report progress when progress has been made.

Mr. OWEN. The leader of the House, in the absence of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), I take it, is the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I would like to ask that hon. gentleman how long this farce is to continue?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OWEN. That it is a farce none will deny. We have been here three months, and what have we done for the people of Canada? Let me read what the people of this country think of this parliament. Here is the opinion of a weekly newspaper that I received this morning:

> Of all the public expenditures of Canada at the present time, there is none that calls more loudly for investigation than that of parliament itself. We would commend to the Public Accounts Committee an analysis of the reckless waste involved in a three months' session of the Dominion parliament which has scarcely given us, after all this expenditure of time, breath and money, a single item of important legislation. The present session met on November 27, and is therefore in the third month of its duration. Its cost to the country to date has been in round figures half a million.

That is the opinion of the country concerning this parliament. Now, I cannot understand why hon. gentlemen opposite continue to obstruct——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OWEN—for obstructing they are. The trouble seems to be in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I do not want the minister to think that I have any suspicion of him doing wrong intentionally, but there is evidently something wrong in his department. He has been asked time and again to bring down papers and has promised to do so, but the papers have not been brought down. That is the real trouble; that is the obstruction; that is how these gentlemen obstruct the business of the country in this House; that is why we have done nothing in the three months we have been in session. It is a disgrace to Canada, this parliament. The difficulty all seems to hinge on the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Evidently a house cleaning is needed in that department. There must be something radically wrong there, or so many lines of suspicion would not point to the department. The minister brought from New York—I learned for the first time last night—a carload of expert book-keepers to remodel the accounting system of the department. That job cost the country about $52,000. The minister told us he had vouchers for everything, and now it appears he has not vouchers for anything. We have had scandal after scandal here piling up against hon. gentlemen opposite. I was sorry to hear the Minister of Finance say here the other day that the opposition had no rights in this House. I do not know what the people would do if we were not here. They would have no country at all in six months if we were not here—the whole thing would go into the pockets of a few favoured individuals. But we have rights here. The people have sent us to investigate the doings of the government, and that work we have a right to do and are bound to do. I shall not take up time. I understood from last night's debate that the 'Arctic' expedition is going to be investigated in a short time, and I may have something to say about that. I simply rose to protest against the way the government is obstructing business in this House. We cannot get the papers to which we have a right, and without these papers we cannot carry on our investigations. I do not want the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to think that I am suspicious that he has done anything wrong, but he must see that unless the papers are laid before us we cannot help thinking that there is something wrong in his department. I should think that, for his own sake, for his own reputation, he would be glad to give us all the information we require. He should bring down these papers and allow us to go on with the business of the country, that we may no longer be like a parcel of schoolboys as we have been for three months in this House.

Mr. J. D. REID. The fact that certain names appear again in the Auditor General's Report, though we know that the men thus named have been guilty of great wrongs in this department, must justify severe criticism. The fact that papers are not brought down is another cause of suspicion. There is a fault in the papers laid before the Public Accounts Committee by the minister even to-day. About two weeks ago we moved for certain papers. And when they were sent over the most important letter of all was missing, that was a letter in the case of the purchase of the 'Catharine C.' We wanted to go on with that investigation. I telephoned the department two or three days ago about this letter, and asked them to look it up. But they have to get the authority of the minister before they will bring these letters over.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember the case to which the hon. member (Mr. J. D. Reid) refers.

Mr. J. D. REID. I may be mistaken as to the department. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) tells me that this has to do with the Department of Public Works, so I take it back so far as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is concerned.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have given positive instructions to prepare all returns that have been asked for. We are loaded with requests. I think the Public Accounts Committee has sent for a large number of returns.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then I take another case. Two or three weeks ago we moved in the Public Accounts Committee for the papers respecting the fishery leases.

Mr. BRODEUR. I told the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that all the leases were brought down last year.

Mr. J. D. REID. I want to look into these leases and I want to see the originals.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman can see the originals also.

Mr. J. D. REID. When the papers are brought down in the House I think the department should let the secretary of the Public Accounts Committee know where they are so that we can see them.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does my hon. friend think that when the papers have been brought down another motion should be made in the Public Accounts Committee to have new copies made?

Mr. J. D. REID. Certainly not, but we want to know where we can get them. I made a motion for the original documents to be produced in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no objection to that.

Mr. J. D. REID. They were ordered two weeks ago, and I have telephoned to his department several times asking if it was not possible to send a man over with them. The minister can see where we have reason to feel that he is not treating us fairly. Certainly he gave me the impression that he did not want us to see them.

Mr. BRODEUR. They are before the House now.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister knows that there is an awful difference between copies and originals, because the copies that are sent to the Public Accounts Committee in almost every case are not exact copies.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a strong statement.

Mr. J. D. REID. I could name a case where, within 48 hours, I have examined the papers in the Public Accounts Committee that were sent over by a certain department and they certainly show a pretty bad state of affairs. I telephoned over to the department and got the originals, and they show that the government were all right, but the copyists have left out certain parts that made it look bad for the government. Now, as far as that man Merwin is concerned, I want to tell the minister I have no confidence in him. I think he did everything he possibly could to rob this country. In the Auditor General's Report the department have bought $50,000 worth from Merwin direct and some $50,000 in the name of F. L. Brooks. Now, Merwin has made a great rake-off on that.

Mr. BRODEUR. The goods were ordered before I took office.

Mr. J. D. REID. Suppose they were, does the minister consider the prices he charged were honest?

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say with regard to Merwin that he sold to the department, if I remember aright, some goods for a very large amount. There were some few items among the whole in which he charged a large profit, but the items on which he charged this large profit did not amount to more than five per cent of all the goods that were sold to the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would ask the minister if he considers this invoice of Merwin's was a straight and honest invoice? For one engine for which he charged $1,250 he made a profit of $250. For a Sturdevant engine costing $335 Merwin charged the government $960, making a profit of 18 per cent. He got $625 profit or 187 per cent on a $335 purchase. Does the minister think that is honest?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not putting the case fairly before the country. Here is a man selling $200,000 worth of goods to the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. He sold over half a million dollars worth.

Mr. BRODEUR. The books will show that. There was some machinery which was sold for the lighthouse depot at Prescott on which the profit did seem to be large, but this was only a very small percentage of the whole transaction.

Mr. J. D. REID. I agree that these items in so far as machinery is concerned represent a very small percentage, but at the same time the minister knows that it was impossible, on account of the shortness of the time, to investigate all of Merwin's accounts. After it was proven that Merwin was a scoundrel the minister purchased from Merwin $50,000 worth of goods saying that it was contracted for before and he allowed him to sell through F. L. Brooks & Co., $50,000 worth. This $100,000 worth of goods was purchased from Merwin by the minister after the whole affair had been exposed to him and Merwin probably made from $20,000 to $40,000 profit out of it. That surely justifies the opposition in criticising the minister.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not complain of that at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minster said last evening that we were making a special attack upon his department. The minister did wrong to continue to do business with this man when he knew the kind of man he was dealing with.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend has no evidence that we continued to do business.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, the goods were still ordered.

Mr. BRODEUR. If they were contracted for before would not my hon. friend admit that the department is liable for the payment of these goods?

Mr. J. D. REID. Does not the minister believe that he would have been justified in immediately cancelling the contract if he knew the man was defrauding the department.

Mr. BRODEUR. Once a contract has been made it has to be carried out.

Mr. J. D. REID. This is a case in which we feel that we should criticise the minister very severely. He bought goods from this man and allowed him to supply goods to the department through the firm of F. L. Brooks & Co.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, that is not the case. The hon. gentleman knows very well that this machinery was bought and the accounts certified by Mr. J. F. Fraser.

Mr. J. D. REID. They are not all certified by J. F. Fraser.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. BRODEUR. Most of them. The hon. gentleman knows Mr. Fraser. He was the officer who was responsible for seeing that the accounts were properly certified and that no unfair profits were made. He knows Mr. Fraser better than I do. He was not an appointment of mine as he knows. He was in the service when the government came into power. Will he undertake to state that he would not believe that Mr. Fraser was honest in certifying the accounts as he has done in regard to Merwin?

Mr. J. D. REID. I know Mr. Fraser and I believe he is an honest, upright man. I am not saying anything about that, but the difficulty with regard to these officials is that it never has been proved that they were the ones who made the contract. The position they were in was this; if they wanted a boiler or any other piece of machinery they were told to go to Merwin to get it and let him send in the invoice, and if they do not certify to it something might happen to them.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think that is fair in regard to Mr. Fraser. Mr. Fraser was examined in that case and he said that he may have made a mistake but he thought the charges then made were fair and just. If Mr. Fraser is the upright man that we believe he is, there is no reason to believe that he has been trying to deceive the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then I look at the Auditor General's Report and I see that the minister has been paying $75 a day to this accountant and that he has been paying $5 a day for board in the city of Ottawa. That was all done by the minister personally. There is no other minister who can be held responsible for that. We must come to the conclusion that it looks rather fishy to say the least of it. We know that there is no place in the city of Ottawa where any man is charged $5 a day for board. He paid one man $75 a day, another $40, and so on.

Mr. BRODEUR. What do they charge in the Russell?

Mr. J. D. REID. You can live for $3 a day at the Russell, but it has come out since that these gentlemen were not staying at the Russell at all. When it was understood that they were only to be paid what their actual board cost and when they produced accounts in his department for $5, or $4 a day, as the case might be, I think the minister will agree that he should at once have looked into the matter and that it was a really unfair charge.

Mr. BRODEUR. These accounts were never brought before me.

Mr. J. D. REID. We only know that now, and that is the reason why we have to criticise the minister very closely. When the 'Arctic' investigation came on two or three years ago, we got an order to bring the accounts down in connection with that steamer. We supposed that they had all been brought down, but the accounts of next year showed several items that should have been in the original return. If these accounts had been brought down they would have shown that there should have been a larger quantity of supplies on the 'Arctic' than there was. The minister proved to us that the 'Arctic' had purchased enough goods of every kind to make a three year trip and he tried to prove there was a two years' supply still. Now we find that $40,000 more has been spent for supplies for that steamer. When things of that kind appear in the Auditor General's Report, the minister should not try to force these estimates through until they are explained. Last night, when it was shown that he had not brought these papers down, we were willing to let a number of other items go through if he would let this item stand, but he absolutely refused, and insisted on passing this item or nothing. We are not in a position without these papers to properly investigate these estimates. Therefore, I think the minister should reconsider the matter, and not place us in such an unfair and unjust position.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to ask the hon. minister a question in regard to the Merwin account.

Mr BRODEUR. The Merwin account falls under another item entirely. The hon. gentleman should confine himself to the item under discussion.

Mr. BLAIN. I merely want to ask one or two questions.

Mr. BRODEUR. Unfortunately, I cannot give the information, because the officer in charge of that branch of the service is not here.

Mr. BLAIN. This is so apparent that I am sure the hon. minister will be able to answer without the officer. The complaint against the department is that when they required an engine, instead of sending an officer of the department to buy it direct from the manufacturer, they employed Mr. Merwin, who has no manufacturing establishment, whatever and no business connection except that of a middleman, to buy it for the government. He went to Mr. Wilson, of Montreal, and bought an engine for $335 and sold it to the government for $960, Making a profit of $625 for himself in the transaction. I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he approves of that policy?

Mr. FISHER. That is too broad a question to answer off-hand.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sorry that my hon. friend is too narrow to answer the question. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries continues to employ Mr. Merwin. This man bought $11,830.70 worth of goods from the manufacturer and sold them to the department for $18,012.50, putting $6,173.80 into his pocket as profits. I want to ask my hon. friend whether that is a proper policy for him to adopt, and whether he intends to continue that policy ?

Mr. BRODEUR. As that question is not at all connected with this item, I do not think it fair to ask me to answer it. When the proper item comes for discussion, I will answer my hon. friend. This money for the 'Arctic' which we are discussing will not be given in any shape or form to Mr. Merwin.

Mr. BLAIN. Will there be a middleman employed to purchase goods for her ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the goods be bought by tender ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. At page 709 of the Debates of the House of Commons for 1906 I read the following questions and answers :

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Did the government or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries employ a company of American expert auditors or accountants, examining the books and accounts or investigating the purchases made by the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the aids to navigation, or other supplies?

2. If so, what is the firm name of the said auditors or accountants, and is its headquarters in New York, United States, or in Chicago, Illinois?

3. If so, how many men have been so employed on said work, and for what length of time have they been so employed?

4. If so, how much has the work cost, if completed, and if not completed, how much, if any, has been paid on account of said work?

5. If so, has a report of their work been made, and will it be laid on the table of the House?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Mr. Kenneth Falconer, of Montreal, and staff are making an audit of the accountant's branch of the Department of Marine with a view to remodelling work of same on most improved and up-to-date system of book-keeping.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Six. The work was put in hand towards the end of July last, and, after preliminary arrangements and details were settled, has since been in progress.

4. The work is not yet completed. An advance of $5,000 on account has been made.

5. No report has yet been made but as soon as it will be made I will lay it on the table if it is asked for.

Has a report in connection with this new system of book-keeping been submitted to the House ?

Mr. FIELDING. I presume that my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) put that question to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) some time during the last twenty-four hours and that the minister answered it. I cannot answer it.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not at any time during the last twenty-four hours, except within the last ten minutes, ask that question. And is it not a fair question to ask in view of the case itself and of what the minister has said ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it would be a most excellent and a perfectly fair question to have addressed to the minister at an earlier time. I am sorry the hon. gentleman did not put it at a more convenient moment.

Mr. BLAIN. It appears, then, I cannot get an answer to that question. Now, the minister was asked whether this firm of accountants had its headquarters in New York or in Illinois, and the answer was : This accountant is a resident of the city of Montreal. Now, the minister had the information at hand as to the headquarters of this auditing firm. And we have the fact here that the people of this country have been called upon to pay the travelling expenses of Mr. Falconer between Ottawa and New York. Shall I say this was a dishonest answer ? I will not say that, but I will say it was a misleading answer. Now, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) knows all about the city of Montreal. May I ask him whether Mr. Falconer is a resident of Montreal or of New York ?

Mr. FISHER. I am told that Mr. Falconer resides in Montreal generally.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, why does this government pay his expenses between New York and Ottawa ?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Falconer, I understand is a member of the firm in New York, and may have been in New York when called upon.

Mr. BLAIN. That is the honest answer, and the answer given by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) was not a fair answer. Mr. Falconer is a member of a firm with headquarters in New York. That is what I wish to call attention to.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Falconer being a Canadian, and residing generally in Montreal.

Mr. BLAIN. When this question was asked, we knew nothing about Mr. Falconer. The question was asked whether this government had entered into a contract with an American house to remodel the accounts of the department, and we were told that the contract was with a Montreal firm. Now, the Minister of Agriculture tells us it was with a firm in the city of New York. There is one other thing I would like to know. Prior to December 10, 1906, when $5,000 was paid to this firm, had an appropriation for this service been voted by this House? If not, out of what appropriation was this $5,000 paid.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. FISHER. I think that information has already been given to the House.

Mr. BLAIN. No.

Mr. FISHER. Not this year, but when the estimates were going through last year.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. minister recollect what the information was ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not, but I am pretty sure it was given.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sorry we have not the information we are entitled to. I cannot go on with what I had intended to say, owing to the absence of the minister and the lack of information to which we are entitled.

Mr. BARR. This is not the first time I have seen a conflict between a government and an opposition, and in nearly every case it has been the fault of the government. I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has taken the wrong course in attempting to force his estimates through this House. I may say here that of all the departments of this government, the one of which we are the most suspicious is the Department of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Evidently the minister has lost his head if he thinks that he can force the opposition to pass these items without affording us the necessary information to enable us to judge whether they should be accepted or not. This government have become overbearing and haughty, because they are able to carry the by-elections. But the fact that a government can carry a by-election, when it can concentrate all its powers of corruption on a single constituency, is no proof that it possesses public confidence. We remember that the late Liberal government of Ontario, one of the most corrupt that ever disgraced this country, carried nearly every by-election, but when the general election came on they were swept from power by a great majority. This discussion has taken a very wide range, and the interest which the House is taking in it is shown by the fact that so many members are sleeping soundly in their chairs.

I would strongly urge hon. gentlemen opposite to accept the liberal terms which were offered by the opposition and allow this House to adjourn. Last night the hon. minister insisted on passing several items but the fight was kept up through the night and between eight and nine o'clock to-day he agreed to bring down the papers. He brought down some papers but he only brought down enough to condemn himself and his department. In connection with the auditing of the books we find there was no written agreement but that there was a verbal agreement that the gentlemen employed on this work were to have a certain amount and were to be paid their board. What was their board ? My hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Jackson) happened to be boarding at the house where a number of Mr. Falconer's staff were boarding. Mr. Falconer and his assistant were to get $5 a day, the second class were to get $4 and the third class $3 as an allowance for board. I have been here for years and I do not know a single boarding place where they charge any one remaining for a length of time $5 a day. I do not believe that there is such a place and yet these men were paid $5 a day. Where is the rake-off ? The rake-off was more than was actually paid for the board of these men and I think we are perfectly justified in discussing these items. This shows the way in which business is conducted in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It shows that there is need of a complete house cleaning and we should be in a position when these returns are brought down to examine every item. In this case we have reason to be suspicious, and we have reason to demand a fair investigation at the hands of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller), in discussing the burning by Mr. Smart, the late deputy Minister of the Interior, of certain letters connected with the North Atlantic Trading Company, undertook to defend that transaction. Mr. Smart admitted during the investigation that he had burned letters which must have been connected with the official business that he was transacting as deputy minister. In his dealings with the North Atlantic Trading Company he was associated with Mr. Preston and Mr. Leopold, and we have reason to believe that the letters which were burned had reference to the North Atlantic Trading Company and that they should have been produced before the Public Accounts Committee. While he says that he burned the letters in large quantities, I venture to say that he kept enough to establish the bargain he made with Messrs. Preston and Leopold and the unknown who threatened to commit suicide. I do not think the hon. member for South Grey strengthened the cause of the government very much by bringing in that matter. Although the opposition has been charged with obstructing the public business, it would be easy to show that we have good reason for the position we take in this discussion. There never has been an opposition in the Dominion of Canada whose skirts are as clear as those of the present opposition or who have been tried so much in their efforts to perform their duties as we are by the present government. Under these circumstances the government must take the responsibility for obstruction. I can hardly imagine that the First Minister, if he were here, would sanction the course taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In connection with the 'Arctic' expedition we have for the last two sessions had to struggle to obtain the most meagre information. The country was astounded when the figures of the expenditure in connection with that matter came out.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BARR. Mr. Chairman, there are certain times in the day when men are better natured and better pleased with the world than at other times. After a splendid dinner we should feel that we are at ease, and under these circumstances I think that I might submit to our genial and usually good-natured friend the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) that it would remove the difficulties that exist at the present time if he would suggest to one of his colleagues that we take up some other estimates and let the work of the House go on. The tension will then be removed, and I have no doubt that when these papers are brought down everything will go on smoothly again. However, if the minister will not accept that proposition, we will have to go on with our consideration of the matter which is now before the committee. Before dinner I was discussing the 'Arctic' and showing what it had cost the country. I venture to say that when the free and independent electorate read in the papers tomorrow or, if they are allowed to do so, in the 'Hansard,' the facts of the case they will say that the opposition on this question alone had sufficient ground for holding up the minister until he had given the fullest information on every item before the committee. I pointed out that the steamer 'Arctic' was manned by forty-seven good and true men and that she was stocked with such an enormous amount of supplies that it is difficult to know how she could hold them all. Amongst these were clothing, $10,379.75 ; cigars, $450 ; cigarettes, $50 ; and tobacco and pipes, $595. I do not believe that there are many here who imagine that all the material that was paid for could be placed on that little boat. I do not think that it is possible that that amount was purchased ; we do know that it was paid for, but who got the rake-off we do not know. We have not been able to find out. However, we have done our duty, and we leave it to the country to decide. With these revelations, I am not surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite are endeavouring to shut off inquiry into original papers. The country is becoming alarmed at the state of affairs.

The independent papers that formerly supported hon. gentlemen opposite are today on the side of the opposition, and they reflect the public opinion of the country more truly than the old-line papers. In proof of that, I will read an extract from 'United Canada' of Ottawa :

Has a member of parliament the right to see original public documents? 'United Canada' believes that the electors think he has. As a rule, however, most governments—especially old governments—expect the opposition and the public as well to close their eyes, open their mouths and accept a dash of anything that is offered.

The Ottawa 'Journal' heads its article 'Premier's downfall,' and the Hamilton 'Herald' (both independent) declares that this refusal will 'cause Canadians to wonder whether our system of government is, after all, representative, democratic government.'

The theory of all monarchical forms of government, if we have read correctly, is that all law and favours are handed down to the people from the Crown, while the republican doctrine and theory is that all laws and enactments are handed up as their wish and will from the people.

In the 'United Canada's' humble opinion the people of this country have been doing the handing up—millions in taxes—for many years, and now a 'holding up' policy seems to be in sight.

The last deputy minister of that same Interior Department, Mr. James A. Smart, is said to have taken no chances, in the matter of being called upon to show original state correspondence, but burned them all before he left the department and the country.

This same James A. Smart, like his divine master, Clifford Sifton, became suddenly rich. Both affected to be very religious men in 1896. Smart would preach the gospel on Sunday evening, and sing himself quite hoarse, or roll his eyes heavenward in prayer. The bible he carried to church was as large as a city directory. He had the Ten Commandments hung in front of his desk. 'Thou shall not steal' was there, but 'successful' politicians in Canada never see that commandment. 'United Canada' hopes that this band of psalm-singing pirates will yet be hunted down, and their allies driven from place and power.

This is from a paper which is an ornament to the city of Ottawa. Now, I hope the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see his way clear to accept the offer made on this side of the House, so that we shall not have to slumber in our seats again to-night, but proceed with the country's business.

Mr. BLAIN. As my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is in his place again, I am quite sure he will favour the committee with an answer to one or two questions which I submitted to the government before six o'clock, and which have not yet been answered. I ask him of what appropriation voted by this House was the first $5,000 paid to Mr. Falconer, the New York expert accountant who was working in his department

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Is that question relevant to the item under discussion ?

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose the minister will be able to answer that question.

Mr. BRODEUR. It certainly is not relevant to the item under discussion, and I do not think I am bound to answer it.

Mr. BARR.

Mr. BLAIN. I think that the minister on reflecting will conclude that in making that statement he has not done himself or his government justice. When the minister was asked some time ago what accountants he was employing or had employed in his department, what did he say ? He said, a firm of accountants having their head office in the city of Montreal. My hon. friend knew full well when he gave that answer that it was an incorrect answer; he knew full well that the head office of those accountants was in the city of New York. I am going to read the question and the hon. gentleman's answer:

Did the government or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries employ a company of American expert auditors or accountants to examine the books and accounts or to investigate the purchases made by the Department of Marine and Fisheries for aids to navigation or other supplies? If so, what is the firm name of said auditors and accountants, and is its headquarters in New York, in the United States?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I rise to a point of order. If this House is going to make any progress, surely hon. gentlemen should confine themselves to the discussion of the item before the committee, which has reference to the maintenance of vessels in northern waters. I ask your ruling on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLAIN. I will answer my hon. friend's point of order by stating that when this item 209 was under discussion the other night, there was a distinct understanding with a member of the government that under this item every item could be fully discussed.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That arrangement was purely a matter of courtesy, and when hon. gentlemen opposite do not treat the government with courtesy and respect, surely we ought to stand strictly on the rule.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Since the point of order has been raised, of course rule 19 says that no member shall speak beside the question in debate. The hon. member has put a question to the minister, and if the minister refuses to answer it, that is an end of the matter. It is a question of appreciation whether this accounting belongs to the vote now before the House or not.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister has already stated that he paid part of the salary of this account out of these votes which we are discussing.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAIN. I will return now to the question of the headquarters of this accounting firm.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BLAIN. Our friends opposite have a majority sufficient to stifle investigation and to interfere with the just and honest rights of a small minority in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. BLAIN. No, I do not propose to take one word back, but to repeat it. The hon. minister sits in his seat and refuses to answer an honest question which I am clearly within my rights in asking. Now, what was the answer given before by the minister to this question ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the minister takes his stand on rule 9, the work done by this firm of accountants does not come within the purview of the item now before the committee.

Mr. BLAIN. Has it not already been decided by the government that when the opposition allowed certain items to pass, there would be full and unrestricted discussion on every item.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That was a matter of courtesy, not of agreement.

Mr. BLAIN. We have been discussing this item all last night and to-day, and at this late hour the minister himself calls it obstruction.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BLAIN. Obstruction not by the opposition but by the government. I repeat that the minister misled the House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister was misleading in his answer when he stated that the head office of this firm was in Montreal when he knew it was in New York, and as proof that he knew, he paid the expenses of these men from New York to Ottawa on more than one occasion.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I insist on a ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is well known in this committee that these rules have often been waived——

Mr. FOSTER. If you are going to make a ruling I want to speak on the point of order.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The rules of the House are often waived to allow discussion on general items, but when hon. gentlemen opposite are obstructing the estimates the rules should be rigidly enforced. My point is that the hon. gentleman is not discussing the item before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. After twenty-four hours of debate, ranging over every imaginable point, the minister, when he finds himself defeated in every other respect, tries to choke off discussion. Great latitude is always allowed in debate in Committee of Supply and that is not a matter of courtesy. if either side has to live by virtue of courtesy it is not the opposition. The life and comfort of the government depends on the courtesy of the opposition. Every wise minister and every wise government has given the greatest possible liberty in debate on estimates. The minister is now raising an objection that has not been raised before in this debate. The first point I make is that in the interpretation of parliamentary rules the greatest care should be taken not to curb the liberty of the opposition in debating the supplies, the very basis of this opposition has arisen from the objections made by the opposition to going on with this minister's estimates because this minister was in debt to the House on orders for two returns and in default of which the opposition declared they were not in a position to discuss the estimates. The minister has to live with us longer than from now until Saturday night at twelve o'clock; he has work to do in this House and he might as well learn now as later on to cultivate a fair spirit. The ruling may be in the strict parliamentary sense but it will not exhaust the resources of the opposition.

Mr. SPROULE. I want the chair to understand that when we were last in supply I was leading the opposition and we agreed to allow the other items to pass on the understanding that all these items should be discussed at any future time.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am exceedingly surprised at the tone displayed by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). Perhaps he has forgotten that last night instead of discussing this question in a calm and moderate way, as is his habit, he attacked me in a most vicious way. If the opposition have rights and privileges the members of the government side have rights and privileges too. If there is any charge to make against the government the proper procedure is for the hon. gentleman to make a charge from his seat and a committee is appointed to investigate, and if it is determined that the charge is not founded the only course is for the member to leave the House or to be expelled from the House.

Mr. BENNETT. That is a joke.

Mr. BRODEUR. That rule is founded on the principle that in the British House of Commons as well as here, members are expected to act as gentlemen and they are not expected to impute or make charges without foundation. The hon. member (Mr. Foster) instead of discussing these estimates last night thought fit to attack me in a most vicious way.

Mr. FOSTER. You had better read what I said.

Mr. BRODEUR. I can read it but I have not it at hand at present. If the opposition wants to be respected let them respect the honesty of the members on this side of the House and if they want to treat us fairly we will treat them fairly. I can tell my hon. friend that the country sees to-day the game he is playing to prevent the business of the country being carried on.

Mr. FOSTER. One of the faults of the Minister of Marine is a lack of frankness and another is a lack of honesty.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to show the minister where he has been incorrect in his statement of this case.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister himself dropped the point of order and attacked me.

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not raise the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to offer my defence to the attack made on me.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was accused by the minister of making a most vicious attack on him and he has given no evidence in support of that statement. When this government don't want to give information it is getting to be a common thing for them to say that a personal attack is being made on them. I want to know if that is all the defence the Minister of Marine has to the criticism of his estimates.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That is not a point of order.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am speaking exactly on the same lines as the minister did, and I want the minister to give some evidence that a vicious attack was made on him. The hon. member for North Toronto made no vicious attack upon the minister. He thinks he will get rid of criticism of the items of his estimates by telling the chairman that he is improperly attacked.

Mr. D. ROSS. I again rise to a point of order. I want to ask your attention, Mr. Chairman, to Bourinot, page 486, in which he distinctly lays it down that, when a point of order is raised:

> It is legitimate on such occasions for members to debate the point of order, but they must confine themselves strictly to it.

I want to draw your attention to this rule and ask you if the hon. member for Lincoln is in order in discussing this point.

Mr. LANCASTER. The minister argued the affirmative and I am arguing the negative. If the affirmative proposition was in order the negative is. The hon. gentleman cannot be serious. If he wants a little fun to-night he can have it. I am quite willing to play the game with him in any way he wants me to play it within the rules of the House. I want to say another word in regard to what the minister says about the point of order raised by one of his supporters and debated by the hon. member for North Toronto. What does the minister mean by saying that there was a personal or vicious attack made upon him last night by the hon. member for North Toronto? The minister surely does not mean to say that because his department is before the House and because we do not clap our hands and applaud him for every thing he has done we shall not be permitted to exercise our right of criticism. Does it mean that the minister, when he is criticised, is going to attempt to get out of it by saying that a vicious attack has been made upon him? What amendment has there been in the constitution since the hon. member took office? The hon. gentleman does not say that there has been any. As a minister of the Crown when he took office he was specially charged with the proper, just and faithful expenditure of every dollar that was put into his hands. If an hon. gentleman on this side of the House thinks that something ought to be done in a different way from that in which it has been done by the minister he is entitled to say so, and his saying so does not constitute an attack upon the minister. There is no reason for him to pretend to be offended and try to get his items passed without giving proper information in regard thereto. I think that this is the most difficult point of order for any chairman to decide. I think that he would really have to take the whole expenditure of the Department of Marine and Fisheries before he could decide whether the point of order was well taken or not. The whole policy of the Department of Marine and Fisheries is under review because what the minister does in one place, we have a right to suppose, he will do in another. Fifty thousand dollars was spent for patrolling these northern waters last year and $50,000 is asked for this year. I have read the minister's report through to see if the minister had given us any light upon this expenditure, but I cannot find one word in regard to the $50,000 that was used last year. The minister says that he has brought down all the information or all that he is going to bring down, and when he is asked to bring down any more he says that a vicious personal attack is made upon him. The House opened on Thursday and two important resolutions were allowed to go through by the opposition between three and six o'clock, one in regard to the Plains of Abraham and the other in regard to the constitution of the Railway Commission—motions which might have been discussed for several days if the opposition had chosen to discuss them. What thanks did we get for it? From Thursday afternoon until a few minutes before midnight the whole of the time of the House was taken up by government supporters discussing matters that they had a right to discuss with the government and the members of the opposition did nothing whatever to hinder the progress of the business. Then the Minister of the Interior comes forward and asks us to take up his estimates. The people will tell him when they get a chance that they do not send members of parliament to this House to sit up after midnight. If it were within the rules of the House I would say that the minister had practically played a trick on the House. He wanted to go into Supply at that hour of the night and the House was moved into Supply. There was no ground whatever for supposing that any one was trying to hurt his precious feelings. Even suppose that he was the most popular gentleman on the other side of the House, was it reasonable for him to expect to get anything through the House after midnight?

Mr. D. ROSS. I want very mildly and humbly to ask if the hon. gentleman is discussing the point of order.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am discussing it; it is a very wide point of order. When the motion to go into Supply was made by the Finance Minister, one of his own supporters, the hon. member for Comox and Atlin (Mr. Sloan) practically objected, in order that he might talk about sealing matters. Why does not the Minister of Marine get that gentleman into line before he scolds us? He obstructed Supply last night from eight o'clock to midnight. If one particle of the criticism of the Minister of Marine against us is justified, ten thousands times as much should be heaped on that hon. member, because he had not any reason to object to any item, but he objected to any Supply at all until he talked about sealing matters. If the hon. minister does not want criticism to be aimed at his department let him admit that it is in bad shape, and we will try to get it into good shape for him. But he treats every criticism of his items as a matter of personal attack upon himself, and then, on the least provocation, he makes an attack on one of his own subordinates who is not here to defend himself. He said this afternoon that if a certain thing had been done, the hon. member who spoke of it was making a personal attack upon a gentleman in the department of the name of Fraser. That is not the way to treat members of this House who are discussing the department for which the minister is responsible.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Before the point of order is settled, I wish to say a few words. The hon. member for North Toronto has said that it would be troublesome to both sides of the House if the rules of the House were strictly enforced. What is the situation? Last evening, when in the ordinary course of business the House was moved into Committee of Supply, an opportunity was given to hon. gentlemen opposite to discuss the estimates of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. They said they had not the information they wanted, and the right hon. leader of the House made this statement:

> I see no reason why we should not on this occasion follow the course which is generally pursued. The opposition want certain information, and they are entitled to it and must get it. In the meantime, we can reserve an item so that the question at issue may be fully discussed. The money must be voted and the public service carried on.

That was a fair and liberal offer made by the right hon. leader of this House.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Chairman, I have a few rights here as well as my hon. friend. I want to ask whether my hon. friend is discussing the point of order.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am informing the House why I have raised the point of order.

Mr. BLAIN. I ask the ruling of the chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member declares that he is speaking on the point of order.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am speaking absolutely, completely and concretely to the point of order. I am pointing out that that was a fair offer to make to the opposition.

Mr. BLAIN. I ask whether the remark of the Prime Minister has anything to do with the point of order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. member should be allowed to proceed. It is impossible for me to say whether his remarks are on the point of order until he has spoken.

Mr. BLAIN. I ask whether reading from a former debate has anything to do with the point of order?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am going to read from Bourinot. The hon. members refused to accept this very fair offer of the Premier, and consequently they come within the strict rules of the House. Bourinot at page 464, in reference to the relevancy of speeches, says:

> A just regard to the privileges and dignity of parliament demands that its time should not be wasted in idle and rambling discussions.

If that rule were strictly enforced in this House the hon. gentleman who has just interrupted me would be continuously called to order.

Mr. BLAIN. I appeal to the chair whether this is discussing the point of order or not.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. (Reading).

> —and consequently every member who addresses the House should confine himself as closely as possible to the question under consideration. If the Speaker or the House believes that his remarks are not relevant to the question, he will be promptly called to order by the former. It is not, however, always possible to judge as to the relevancy of a member's remarks until he has made some progress with his argument.

If the hon. gentleman opposite had known that rule he would not have interrupted me.

The freedom of debate requires that every member should have full liberty to state, for the information of the House, whatever he honestly thinks may aid it in forming a judgment upon any question under its consideration. But it is nevertheless the duty of the Speaker of the House (or chairman of committee) to interfere when he finds that the member's remarks are not relevant to the subject before the House. On such occasions he may very properly suppose that the member will bring his observations to bear upon the motion before the House, or that he will conclude with something that will bring him within order. And he may find it necessary to caution a member that he is approaching the limits of propriety which confine hon. members in speaking to that which is relevant to the subject on hand, and to express the hope that he will be careful to confine himself to that which is relevant.

Now, what is the situation here? Hon. gentlemen opposite, abusing the privileges of the House——

Mr. BLAIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask whether these remarks are on the point of order? I ask you to rule.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is impossible for me to rule until I have heard the hon. member.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I was about to say when I was needlessly interrupted by the hon. member, that hon. gentlemen opposite, abusing the privileges of the House for the past twenty-four hours, have rambled over and discussed every subject under the sun except the particular item under discussion. Surely hon. gentlemen who want to see the work of this House proceed in a calm and orderly way, under the rules of the House, have some rights as well as the obstructionists opposite, and surely such hon. members, acting within their rights, are in duty bound to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that the rules of this House are being flagrantly violated in order that hon. gentlemen opposite may carry on this policy of obstruction and delay of the legitimate work of this House. For the purpose of drawing the attention of the House to the fact that they are flagrantly violating the rules of this House, I have raised this point of order and I quote my authority.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the hon. member who has just taken his seat had read further he would have found this:

Mr. D. ROSS.

In the English Commons the authority of the Speaker, in cases where members persist in making irrelevant remarks on a question, has very recently been enlarged. A member who resorts to persistent irrelevance may be directed by the Speaker (or chairman) to discontinue his speech, and if he continues in his irregular course he is 'named' as disregarding the authority of the Speaker.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. You will be named the first thing you know.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, but the hon. member has narrowly escaped. Since I have been in the House we have always been allowed a great deal of latitude in discussing the items in the estimates, but hon. gentlemen opposite want to discontinue the practice that we have followed since confederation. That is a narrow policy and it will not conduce in the end to facilitate the business of the House.

Mr. LENNOX. Even though it should be conceded that the minority has no rights except such as the majority accord, this understanding cannot be violated without a breach of faith on the part of the government. The minister himself stated at the opening of the debate last night that not one of these items had been yet passed, and I call the attention of the chair to that fact before a ruling is given on this attempt to gag the opposition.

Mr. BLAIN. On the point of order, I call attention to the fact that the Minister of Inland Revenue was acting Minister of Marine last summer when the minister of that department was in England.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We might dispose of this point of order first.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest to both sides that the most sensible course would be to have as few points of order as possible and not to press this one. The subject of the auditing was discussed constantly this afternoon, and the committee has accepted that as being more or less associated with the item before the House, and I would not like to see the discussion on that question shut off. I do not want to broaden the discussion of course, but however it may be contrary to the technical rules of the House the discussion might continue and it may be as well not to press the point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the hon. member (Mr. Duncan Ross) withdraw his point of order?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Unlike hon. gentlemen opposite, I am willing to facilitate the work of the House and if both sides think obstruction should prevail I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We must not forget we are in committee and when a convention is agreed to the rule is violated every day. But if I am called upon to apply the rule I will have to apply it. I understand the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. BLAIN. In the main I think the chairman is very fair to the opposition.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. In the main.

Mr. BLAIN. I will withdraw that and say he is altogether fair to the opposition. I want to ask the Minister of Inland Revenue if, when he was acting Minister of Marine he made a trip on one of the steamers, and if so, what was his business?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That is an impertinent question.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend is a past master in impertinence.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have no objection to say that for a week or ten days while acting as minister I made a trip on the 'Lady Grey' down the St. Lawrence. Every one knows that, there is nothing secret about it.

Mr. BLAIN. From what vote were the expert accountants paid when my hon. friend (Mr. Templeman) was away?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The accountant of the department and the deputy minister were responsible for that, and although I was consulted from time to time, at the present moment I do not know from what vote the money was paid. I presume the Auditor General's Report will show so that it is quite unnecessary to ask the question.

Mr. BLAIN. That is a fair answer, but I call attention to the fact that although the Auditor General notified the government that the expert accountants were being paid out of the ice breaker vote the department continued that wrongful practice. And in spite of the fact that is was reported to the department that no money should be paid without vouchers, the department paid without vouchers these New York accountants $5 a day for living allowance while they only paid $1 a day in a boarding-house in Ottawa. On December 10, 1906, the minister stated that no report had been made, but as soon as it was made it would be laid on the table. I would like to ask whether Mr. Falconer's report has been presented to the department.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to appeal to the Minister of Agriculture and to the Minister of Inland Revenue who was acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries for some time whether that report has ever been presented.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not want to be discourteous to the hon. gentleman but I submit to him that having been acting minister only during the recess it is hardly fair to put a question of that kind to me. I do not know whether Mr. Falconer has presented his report or not. During the months when I was acting minister of the department the only man that I came in contact with who had an agreement in connection with the audit was Mr. Falconer of Montreal. I never saw an American expert in connection with the matter. I was aware of the fact that American experts had been called in, but they were not the men who had the agreement with the department to carry on the auditing. Mr. Falconer is a chartered accountant who is well known to every person in Montreal.

Mr. BLAIN. If that is correct how does it come that this government paid the expenses of this gentleman from New York to Ottawa and back again in connection with the auditing of these accounts ? When we asked the question as to where the headquarters of this concern were we were told that they were in Montreal, whereas the facts and the accounts submitted prove that they are in New York. I am going to appeal to the Minister of Agriculture for an answer to this question. May I ask if this report which was promised on December 10, 1906, has ever been brought down?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot tell.

Mr. BLAIN. We have two ministers present and I would like to ask them where the $5,000 came from that they gave to Mr. Falconer. They went back on a system for which they had paid $42,000 when they allowed account after account to be paid last summer without vouchers. We are trying to gather this information but the ministers know nothing about it.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to be in his place, because I have some matters to speak of in reference to the item that is going through. Surely we are not asked to discuss estimates when the minister who is in charge of them is out of the House. That is impossible. Here are questions asked which are entirely germane. On December 10, 1906, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said that $5,000 or more had been paid to these men who were at their work and that they were going to make a report and that as soon as it was made it would be laid on the table of the House. It is now past December 10, 1907, it is nearly up to March 1908, and a pertinent question asked as to that report is : Why has it not been placed on the table of the House ? The Minister of Inland Revenue does not know anything about it and the Minister of Agriculture says he does not know anything. Here is the spectacle of the Department of Marine and Fisheries under discussion and the minister out of the House. I want the Minister of Marine here to attend to his work or some other minister who is able to do it. The minister made a charge against me that I had made harsh statements in reference to himself. I told him last night that I only said what I could prove. I have the proof before me and I propose to give it to the House, but it is not much satisfaction talking to an empty chair. It is altogether impossible to go on in this kind of a way.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that the Minister of Marine has been obliged to spend most of his time in the House now for nearly thirty hours. It is absolutely essential that he shall go out occasionally, he went out a little while ago and has not yet come back. I have sent a message telling him that the hon. gentleman wishes to make a particular statement which requires his presence and I have no doubt that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will come in for that purpose. As to the question put by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Bain), I have no very distinct recollection in regard to it but I am under the impression that the Minister of Marine has given the House an answer to that question.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the answer ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot really recall that, but I remember something about that report being brought up and I remember the Minister of Marine making a statement. I am inclined to think that the question, like a great many other questions, during this sitting of the House has been put several times and that it has been answered long ago.

Mr. FOSTER. Aside from all that the minister knows that if we are going to discuss estimates we must have the minister in charge of those estimates here. If the minister chooses to take a course which imposes thirty hours work upon him consecutively it is no fault of the opposition. Why does not the minister give up this item and let us go on with the estimates of some other minister?

Mr. FISHER. We are quite ready to.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister of Agriculture think that it is possible that he is going to put the estimates of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries through with no minister to answer questions ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then what are we to do ? Wait until the minister comes in ?

Mr. FISHER. Do as you have been doing go on and talk against time, repeating and repeating and repeating.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has no right to say we are talking against time. We are asserting our constitutional right that before supplies are granted to the Crown information must be provided. Now that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has come in I want to ask him out of what vote this $5,000 was paid to Falconer ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I could not say. I think it must have been out of the vote for maintenance of lights for Sorel.

Mr. FOSTER. What I understood the minister to say this afternoon was that there was at one time a special vote out of which he paid a portion of the money to these accountants, and that he took the rest out of the general vote. Am I right in that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think when the first payments were made the special vote to which the hon. gentleman makes reference was not in existence.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there ever a special vote ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I have diligently looked through the Supply Bills of 1905 and 1906, and I have been unable to find any special vote.

Mr. BRODEUR. There was a special vote of $25,000 last session.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we are clear as to that. The minister came down to the House, and I dare say he explained to the House that he proposed to carry on an investigation in his department as to the best methods of accounting, asked the House for a vote for that purpose, and was voted $25,000. Then the minister was on fair ground. He spent the $25,000, and then, instead of coming to the House for a supplementary vote, he deliberately took more than $25,000 out of a vote for an absolutely distinct purpose, the ship channel vote, to implement the special vote of $25,000. I ask any minister of the Crown whether he recommends that as the policy to be pursued. Such a policy strikes at the very root of parliamentary appropriations. The minister had no right to steal from another vote in order to implement an extravagant administration of the idea embodied in his first vote. That is the first error committed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with reference to that matter. What is the next ? It came to me to-day like a sudden shock. I had been asking for the papers. I wanted to see the peculiar contract which the minister had entered into under which he had made these payments. I have been waiting for the papers for that reason. To-day the minister rose and confessed that there was no scrap of writing with reference to the agreement or the arrangement, but only a verbal arrangement. Again I hold up the minister to his colleagues and supporters and to this country as an example of how a thing ought not to be done in the administration of the public moneys of this country—$50,000 spent in a complex way, and not a scrap of writing; he picks up a man on the street, makes a verbal arrangement with him by which he authorizes him to spend $50,000 of the people's money, and not a scratch of the pen to show what the bargain is. What is the first result of that? The minister is in a quandary to-day. Here are the accounts, Falconer's bills, and the cheques that paid the bills, and they are all drawn on Falconer's bill and on the basis of a per diem allowance for board; and yet the minister states here to-day on his word as a minister, that it was not a per diem arrangement at all. The action of the minister on the bill proves that it was a per diem arrangement, and that he paid $5, $4 and $3 per day for the board of these gentlemen, which was obtained in this city, as we all know, for one-third of that amount. The minister says he did not approve of that. That demonstrates another trait of the minister, and I hold that up to his colleagues and his supporters and the country. The minister finds fault with everybody but himself. He does not take the responsibilities that are his and his alone. What are the facts of the case? I have the documents here. Mr. Gourdeau, the deputy minister, receives a bill; the bill is certified by Mr. Falconer. Who is Mr. Falconer? The man who made the verbal agreement with the minister. Who knows anything about that agreement? Only two men—Mr. Falconer and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. One of the parties to that agreement presents his bill, amounting in all to $9,445, on the per diem plan, stated so on the face of the bill. The bill goes to the deputy minister. The deputy minister guards himself. He does not know anything about it; there is no agreement or contract to refer to. What does he do? All that he can do. He says: 'Pay if approved by the minister.' He can do nothing else. What happens next? The cheques are drawn and the man is paid his money. What is the absolutely certain inference? That the minister approved the bill. Who else could do it? What was the course of that bill? After the deputy minister had written upon it, 'Pay if approved by the minister,' it was handed, I suppose to the accountant. The accountant noticed that writing upon it; what does he do? He goes to the minister and says: 'There is no written contract or agreement; I find this written, 'Pay if approved by the minister,' and I want to know if you approve of this.' What the minister says, verbally, as in the other case, is, 'That is all right, go and pay it;' and the cheques are there as the receipts for the payment. And now the minister comes and says: 'I am not responsible for that; somebody has done wrong if that has been paid.' Why, the thing is as plain as it possibly can be; and the minister now finds where he is landed by going into a $50,000 contract by word of mouth with a man of the street. A minister who has any sense of responsibility or any decent care for his reputation does not enter into that kind of an agreement. He guards himself by a letter or a written contract or agreement, and then he has something that can be interpreted and can stand as his defence when parliament asks for an accounting of his stewardship. What happens after that? That was in November and December, 1906. It is now March, 1908. Mr. Falconer, the other party to the private and secret arrangement, goes on with his main work, and then what happens? I am going to read it to the House, as I have had a good deal of trouble in getting it into tabular form. What do we find? After the payment of this cheque for $9,445.24 certified in the way I have stated, these men go on and do work, send in their bills, and the department issues the cheques. Here are the bills put in after that: On November 30, $917.22; on December 31, $6,093.73; on January 31, $6,481.34; on January 31, $367.22, on July 28, $5,008.93; on March 30, $2,921.67; amounting in all to $21,790.11, every one of them from the same per diem plan and every one of them from the same man Falconer. What happens on the other side? Cheques go out: January 11, $1,000; January 31, $3,000; February 7, $2,093.73; March 1, $3,000; March 7, $3,000; May 4, $3,461.03; January 5, on a cheque of a yellow colour, $500; January 25, on a cheque of the same colour, $417; March 16, on a cheque of the same colour, $367.22; making in all, cheques issued on account to Mr. Falconer to the amount of $16,838.98; the bills put in were for $21,790.11; leaving at that time a balance unpaid of $4,951.13. Now, mark a peculiar circumstance. A secret verbal agreement is made between Mr. Falconer and the minister; $9,445.24 is paid in the first place on the certificate of the deputy minister subject to the minister's approval. After that, what happens? A bill for $917.22 is put in on the same per diem plan, and that is certified by whom? By Mr. Falconer, the man who makes the bill. Falconer puts in his bill, and certifies to his own bill. This bill for $917.22 is certified also by Mr. Desbarets, of Sorel, if I mistake not, the superintendent down there. The first cheque for $9,445.24 was paid, as I have said, on the certificate of Mr. Gourdeau subject to the minister's approval. When this second bill for $917.22, put in and certified as I have stated, comes up, the deputy minister simply writes on it the word 'pay.' Why did he do that? Because he knew that the first bill had been paid and therefore must have been approved by the minister, and he said, 'That sets the example; this comes in exactly the same way, certified in exactly the same way, therefore pay it.'

A bill for $6,093.73 is put in by Falconer and certified to by Falconer and it is paid, and outside of Falconer there is not a scratch of a pen by anybody in the department upon it. The next bill for $831.34 was put in by Falconer, certified to by nobody and paid in the same way. On the last bill for $2,921.67 there is no certificate of any kind whatever. We have a total amount of $21,790.11, of which only $917.22 is regularly certified and the rest in the main is absolutely uncertified by any officer of the department. That is the most remarkable and peculiar transaction. If the minister went into that knowing what he was doing he made a very false step in his own interest and in the interest of the public. No man living knows what the agreement is except Mr. Falconer and the minister who made the secret agreement with him. I venture to say that in the history of departmental doings by ministers of the Crown in Canada we can hardly find a grosser case than is presented in all this. This House would not be doing its duty if it gave the minister a single dollar of his estimates without full information and inquiry. I repeat that the minister was not frank in his statement and I will prove it. Yesterday I made objection to going on with the items because the information I asked for was not down and I quote what took place:

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend has not been here, and he does not know that my travelling expenses have been brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. Which ones?

Mr. BRODEUR. My travelling expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Three returns were asked for, and one has been brought down and the others have not.

Mr. BRODEUR. The return with reference to the travelling expenses of the different ministers at the Colonial Conference has not been brought down, I understand, but the return as to my travelling expenses has been brought down, and in it are included my expenses at the Colonial Conference. The information with reference to all my expenses is brought down, and it is no reason why these estimates should be held up that the returns with reference to the travelling expenses of other ministers are not brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. Three important returns affecting the minister and his department have been asked for, and only one has been brought down. It could have been brought down in five minutes, but they have been held for nearly two months now.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is mistaken. All the information with reference to my travelling expenses and the travelling expenses of my secretary and of the messenger has been brought down. As far as I am concerned, the hon. gentleman cannot be any better informed if the other returns were brought down.

Mr. FOSTER.

And yet my statement is absolutely correct. The minister brought down just one return, his expenses from 1900, but he has not brought down the expenses from 1904 to 1906 which I asked for. He misrepresented knowingly or otherwise. He says I made an attack upon him and I will read from 'Hansard' everything I said, but before I read it I tell the minister that I do not subscribe to his new fangled constitutional doctrine that if a member criticises him sharply for his personal estimates or any other estimates it is necessary for that member to make a specific charge against the minister. He says if I fail to prove that charge I must leave the House. What constitutional authority is there for that? The minister undertook to remodel the diplomacy of the British empire in his French treaty, and now he undertakes to remodel the constitutional history of parliament. If I make a charge against him and if I prove it it is proven, and if I don't prove it I am the judge of my own conduct and the minister and his supporters have not one scintilla of power to force me to leave my seat in this House. My seat was given to me by my constituents and my seat will be taken back from me by my constituents.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TALBOT. The province of New Brunswick has answered that.

Mr. FOSTER. What a wonderful wise man the hon. member is.

Mr. TALBOT. They drove you out of the province.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose I reason for a moment with the hon. member, if that is possible. The province of New Brunswick drove me out of the province, did it?

Mr. TALBOT. That is right.

Mr. FOSTER. How many times was Sir Richard Cartwright driven out?

Mr. TALBOT. We are speaking of your affairs.

Mr. FOSTER. How many times was the hon. member's own leader driven out? How many men 25 years in public life have not been defeated in some constituency? It is the essence of purility to say that a man is driven out from his province because he has been unfortunate enough not to get a majority of votes in some constituency. I contested five different elections in my own county of Kings and I won in every election. I was invited to stand for the sixth time, but I took another county and was returned by a majority of two to one. I then went to the city of St. John, the old haunt of a minister of the Crown, and bucked up against him and did not receive a majority for very good reasons which it is not necessary to explain.

Mr. TALBOT. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. That 'hear, hear' shows the calibre of the hon. gentleman. The Minister of Marine said I made a vicious attack on him, and I will read carefully what I said :

More than that, according to the information we have—and all the information has not yet been brought down—the minister himself is in the habit of drawing large sums and keeping them in his own pocket for months and months and using them for his own purposes, and then when called to book by the Audit Department making a refund. Why should he carry around the people's money? The very moment he has spent what he needs, he should give back to the treasury what he does not need. In doing what he has done, he is setting a vicious example to every accountant in every branch of the service. He is setting them the example of overdrawing and keeping the money and using it for their own purposes and only refunding when compelled to.

I may have said in the heat of debate more than I would otherwise have said, but the essence of what I said I will prove. It may be a little too strong to say he was using it for his own purposes, but I will say that it is not used for public purposes and it is kept by the minister in his own pocket or private account.

Mr. BUREAU. That makes a wide difference.

Mr. FOSTER. There is not the least difference in principle. The Solicitor General is the advocate of the principle that a minister or an employee can draw out $1,000 at the beginning of the year when he does not know he is going to spend $200, and that he can keep that $1,000 in his hands until the end of the year when finding he has only spent a few hundred dollars he puts the rest back when he is asked to do so.

Mr. BUREAU. There is a wide difference between accusing the minister of taking the people's money and using it for his own purposes and the fact of a minister asking for an advance and neglecting to account. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) admits that difference now when he qualifies the statement he made last night.

Mr. FOSTER. Neglected to account—the minister draws out $1,000 when he knows that he would not spend it inside of months.

Mr. BUREAU. He didn't know anything about it.

Mr. TALBOT. He didn't know where the money came from. The money was supplied to him by his officers.

Mr. FOSTER. How innocent he is. I would think a prudent minister would guard himself by not taking too much money at a time. If he takes the money and pays it to his own private account that is using it for his own purpose.

Mr. TALBOT. No.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not using it for public purposes; he puts it to his own credit in the bank.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Was the minister not engaged in public business when he got the money?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. The hon. gentleman is by inference an advocate of the principle that because a man is engaged in public business he can take from the public treasury $1,000 which he cannot spend and at the year's end pay the unused portion back.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If the hon. gentleman wants to interpret my principles he should do so correctly.

Mr. FOSTER. I have here the return brought down with reference to the minister's expenses commencing July, 1906, and running up to December, 1907, or for one year and a half :

Advances and travelling expenses of the Hon. L. P. Brodeur:

Contingencies—
July 6, 1906..	$ 68 27
July 28, 1906..	250 00
October 4, 1906..	8 58
December 5, 1906..	227 97
April 2, 1907..	109 50
Total..	$664 32

Taken by the minister in those months out of contingencies, and properly so, because contingencies are meant to cover travelling expenses. On April 2, 1907, $2,000 was taken by the minister out of the ice breaking steamer vote. That is the first inroad on that vote—taken out for travelling expenses. I want to emphasize what was so well said by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) last night, that travelling expenses should always be provided for in the contingencies, or, if they are made specially, there should be a vote for the travelling expenses connected with the special work for which they are made, and that it is a very improper system to allow spending officers to take their travelling expenses out of votes passed by parliament for absolutely different purposes. The minister had contingencies and he wanted to travel. He either had not sufficient money in his contingencies or he did not want to take it, and took that $2,000 for travelling expenses on April 2, out of that vote for an ice-breaker. On January 15, 1908, he refunds $680. He did not make that refund when he came back, because he came back in October, or November but he retained that money until January 15, after he had been sharply criticised in this House. The minister took the abnormally large sum of $2,000 out of a vote from which he had no business to take it and kept the $680, which he admits he did not spend, until January 15, 1908, instead of refunding it as soon as he came back. And he did not refund it until in January it was under criticism. On April 2, when he drew that $2,000 cash, he also drew for transportation $915. He does not say from what vote he took that amount, but no doubt it came also out of the ice-breaker vote. A part of that went to Mr. Venning, and a part to his own two men, Messrs. Wiallard and Potvin, I suppose in about equal proportions, and I see there was a refund of $285 of that amount, not expended by Venning, Wiallard and Potvin. The two latter were his own expenses for they were gentlemen he took with him, and I suppose about one-half of the refund was by Venning. On October 11, 1907, he took from the ice-breaker vote, $197.94, in addition to what he had already taken, and he took this, although in January, 1908, he refunded $680 out of the $2,000. Where was that money? He had not spent it? Why then did he take this fresh amount when he had this $680 still unspent? On November 23, he received from the Department of Finance, on account of the Colonial Conference, $4,000, which makes a total spent of $6,467.26. That is the minister's side of the account, let us take the private secretary's side. He began July, 1906. He was paid :

Contingencies—
July 24..	$100 00
August 17..	100 00
September 21..	33 50
October 15..	20 00
November 5..	50 00

A refund out of this was made on November 5, of $38.65. I do not think those expenses are at all abnormal. They are the usual contingencies, but on April 2, an advance was made of $1,000 to Mr. Wiallard on account of the ice-breaking steamer and transportation, $127.50.—also I think out of the ice-breaker vote. On July 2, there was another advance, from the ice-breaker vote I assume, of $1,000. There you have two advances to the private secretary from the ice-breaker vote amounting to $2,000, so that both the minister and his secretary were paid out of that vote $4,000 in all up to that date. But on July 30, there is another $1,000, on September 30, another $1,000, and September 5, $500, out of the same vote. This makes $6,500 in all taken in that time by the minister and his secretary out of that vote. I would ask the minister what travelling expenses were legitimately incurred on account of this ice-breaking vessel? Will he tell me what travelling expenses were incurred and how much were incurred absolutely on account of this steamer?

Mr. BRODEUR. I will answer the hon. gentleman later on.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I shall leave the statement and the analysis of it to the judgment of the House. What does it all amount to? It amounts to this, that the minister, in that one year and a half, took out of the moneys of this country for the travelling expenses of himself and his secretary, $11,769.66.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) intimated that the accounts of the establishment at Halifax were unsatisfactory and that Mr. Falconer reported that no just account could be taken of the assets of that establishment. I might remark that the agent of the Marine and Fisheries Department was appointed by the late government, of which my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was so distinguished an ornament, and that the system of accounting in that department was established by that government, so that he is accountable for any defects in the system, unless the appointee of the late government has not administered it properly. If my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) were conversant with the circumstances, I do not think he would have made any severe animadversions on the situation at Halifax. About a year ago the agent of the Marine and Fisheries Department was at the point of death. He remained long in that condition and recovered very slowly. I believe he had to take a long vacation in order to restore his health in some degree, and is now in a very infirm condition. The inspector, who was in charge of the department, was taken suddenly ill and died. That left the department deprived of its two managers. Again there was another circumstance. The Railway Department had been all along demanding the premises occupied by the Marine and Fisheries Department and finally removed the latter to Dartmouth, where new wharfs were constructed and the stores conveyed, and the gentleman who afterwards died was put in charge. Again the establishment was removed to a dockyard and the stores and other paraphernalia had to be also removed, so that it was very difficult to take a thorough accounting of the stores, the establishment being in so transitory a state and those who were administering it having been incapacitated. In fact it would have been wonderful were the conditions not precisely as they have been described.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought the minister was going to reply, but I will supplement my remarks and he can reply to them all at the same time. I have been looking for that vote of $25,000 and also for the vote on contingencies, and my hon. friend to my left has just put them in my hand. This advance of $2,000 on the ice-breaker vote was taken on April 2, just the beginning of the new year. At that moment the minister had $3,830 voted for contingencies in the Department of Marine and Fisheries as well as what remained over from the preceding year of the old vote. But I find this item. It does not seem possible to get a clear statement from the minister, but I find this peculiar item. The heading is:

Lighthouse and coast service—maintenance and repairs to lighthouses—further amount required to pay for the services of an expert staff reorganizing the system of book-keeping to assimilate with all the branches of the department through the Dominion, $25,000.

The wording would lead the House to suppose that the reorganization to put the lighthouse and coast service in harmony with the other accounting branches of the department would cost $25,000. But the peculiar thing is this, that when the money comes to be taken out and paid, it is taken out of the vote for the ship canal. Although we have the express statement that this was for maintenance and repairs of lighthouses, the minister seems to have taken the money from another source altogether.

With reference to the cost of that accountant, the minister said the expenses were about $36,000. I have his answer here and will read it in order that he may have the whole of it:

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What amount of money has been paid to the experts employed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to reorganize the system of keeping accounts for the department?

2. What are the names of these experts, their place of residence, and the sum paid to each?

3. Is their work completed?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. $35,499.56.

The minister has told us there are claims of about $5,000 still outstanding, so that the total cost of this precious business will amount to at least $50,000. I commend that to business men carrying on manufacturing or other operations as an advisable expenditure in order to get at a system of book-keeping and accounting. They should do this by a secret verbal contract which nobody could interpret but the man who is paid the money and the minister who has promised to pay the money. We have the further revelation that these high sums, varying from $75 down to $3.50 per day, were made to simple clerks who would be well paid in the ordinary course at $30 to $40 per month, and who were paid at that rate until they were slipped into this work. These are matters which should be considered by those who are anxious to get estimates through for ministers without the production of an immense amount of papers, in which the details of this transaction are hidden, and which were ordered by this House two months ago.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is certainly due to the House that I should give some explanation with regard to statements made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). I am glad that he has seen fit to withdraw some of the statements which he made last night concerning me. He had gone so far as to state I had been in the habit of taking from the public chest moneys which I kept for months and months and afterwards refunded. No more unfair or incorrect statement could be made by a member with regard to another member. We must have some rules for the conduct of our debates; it is in the public interest that they should be conducted with decency, and that the members should treat one another as gentlemen should. That has been the principle underlying the rules of debate in the House of Commons in England, where no one is permitted to say anything disrespectful, to impute motives or to make charges of dishonesty in regard to any fellow-member. In this respect the English House of Common has become very severe, and the members of that House are forced to treat one another with the courtesy of gentlemen. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has been a member of this House for many years; he is an old parliamentarian, and I would ask him if he thinks it worthy of himself or worthy of this House to indulge in the language in which he indulged in last night with regard to me? If there was the least reason or provocation for his using such language his action might be understood. It is to be regretted that the rule in this House requiring courtesy between members has not been as strictly followed by hon. gentlemen opposite as it should. The hon. member, in the remarks he has just made, stated that I stole from a particular vote a particular amount of money. Does my hon. friend think that is an expression worthy of the parliament of Canada? He may have some personal feeling against me, it looks to me as if he had, although I have not been able to discover why, for some months past he has made unjustifiable personal attacks upon me. I have never said anything in the House or out of it which would justify these attacks. I hope my hon. friend on reflection will see that this expression, that a minister of the Crown has stolen from a vote, is not worthy of this parliament.

It is due to the House that I should explain the change which was made in the book-keeping system of the department. I cannot say that when I became minister in 1906 I found the book-keeping system a good one. I had not time to study the situation very carefully, but just at that time during investigations before the Public Accounts Committee into some of the purchases of the department it was established that in at least two instances the accounts were defective, the balances were not given in a proper way. The amounts were not large, but they showed that the system was not absolutely regular. Besides that, it was stated by hon. gentlemen opposite that the department was in a very bad condition and had been badly administered, and I thought it necessary to make a thorough investigation and to institute a system of book-keeping which would place me in possession of information as to the accounts at all times. I had been trying to get monthly statements of appropriations and expenditures from different votes, but this took a great deal of time, and confirmed my judgment that the system of book-keeping required revision. It might have been perhaps better for me not to have done anything of the kind. In doing it I incurred the bad will of some people who have probably been prompting my hon. friends opposite in the attacks which have been made upon me. I do not say that is absolutely so; my hon. friends know better than I whether the supposition I am now making is correct or not.

Mr. BENNETT. What about insinuations now?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no insinuation in that.

Mr. BENNETT. Who does he insinuate has been supplying information, his own clerks?

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. TALBOT. It would not be the first time.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no insinuation in that. Hon. gentlemen opposite receive information every day in regard to transactions. I do not charge any one with dishonesty in connection with it, but I do say that this information might have been prompted by people who thought they had a right to give it. At all events, it would have perhaps been better for me had no change of that kind been made, but I thought it better to have this investigation and change in the interest of the best administration of the department. I feel that I should be posted every month as to the administration of the department. So long as I have anything to do with the administration of any department I intend to do my duty faithfully, even if the fulfilment of that duty should bring upon me the rancour or wrath of some people. I shall perform my duty without partiality or favour.

Was it advisable for the department to have a complete system of accounting? We were carrying on certain manufacturing processes in the department at Sorel, Prescott and other places. Mr. Blain has seen the report of Mr. Falconer, stating that it was impossible, as far as Halifax was concerned, to have a clear statement of the assets and liabilities of that place. The senior member for Halifax has given some reasons why we might expect that everything was not absolutely correct as far as that place was concerned. But there was no system established in most of those places so that we could ascertain the cost of everything there. In ordinary manufacturing establishments the expenses and receipts are accounted for and the cost of everything which goes into the manufacture is ascertained in order to determine whether it is possible to continue manufacturing it. I say it is in the interest of the department and of the country to establish such a business system in our service even though it were necessary to incur considerable expense to do it. By the system I have established—and I am glad to have established it—in Halifax, in Prescott, in Sorel, we can tell what the cost of every article is and we can tell whether it is profitable for the government to continue to manufacture that article or whether it would be better to purchase it elsewhere. As regards the departmental accounts, when I came to the department I gave formal instruction that there should be no more over-lapping of the fiscal years and that the expenditure in each fiscal year should be charged in that particular year. In future we will therefore have a regular system which may prevent the irregularities in book-keeping which have existed in the past. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) seems to think it is extraordinary that no formal agreement has been made with these experts as to their remuneration, but the schedule of rates to be paid these accountants is well established. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was minister and when he needed the services of a professional man, a lawyer for instance, was he in the habit of bargaining with him beforehand as to his fees?

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Shepley for instance at $250 a day.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, and Mr. Shepley is a very prominent and a very able lawyer and he was worth that I suppose. I have the honour of belonging to the same profession and it is the first time I have heard a lawyer in parliament or out of parliament stating that the fees charged by a brother lawyer are exorbitant.

Mr. LENNOX. I can tell the minister that if this is the first time he has heard it, it will not be the last time. I have no hesitation in saying upon my own responsibility as a member of this House that the fees are absolutely outrageous.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have some professional etiquette in our province but perhaps the custom is different in Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the minister one of these schedules of fees which this firm of accountants sent to him ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No. The same procedure was adopted with regard to these gentlemen as is adopted when the services of a notary, a lawyer, an architect, a doctor, or any professional man, are required. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) wants the services of a doctor does he bargain with him about his fees beforehand?

Mr. BENNETT. There was no question of compensation discussed between the minister and Mr. Falconer.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, he was to charge the same price as he charged to other people.

Mr. BENNETT. The agreement with the minister was that he was to charge the same price as to other people.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. I stated yesterday and I was then under the impression, that the board of these people had been paid on vouchers, but it now appears that no vouchers have been produced, although the correspondence shows that they have been requested to supply vouchers.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the date of the first request ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I don't remember now. According to the agreement I had with Mr. Falconer they were to be paid their board according to the amount they expended for that purpose.

But they now have a claim against the department which I have refused to pay. Since the month of September they have been pressing me for the payment of that amount ; they have been urging it upon me and almost using threats.

Mr. FOSTER. Poor man.

Mr. BRODEUR. I know what my duty is and I will fulfil it.

Mr. FOSTER. That's right.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have a sense of honour which perhaps some gentlemen opposite don't understand. Since I have been in public life I defy anybody in this House or out of it to make any charge that may affect my honesty or my sense of duty in the administration of public affairs. I know what I owe to my country and I can assure the House that so long as I occupy a position of trust in public life I will never be considered found not carrying out that trust in a proper way. That has been my policy in the past, that is my policy to-day, that will be always my policy. I may make enemies because of that, I know I have enemies because of it, and my hon. friends opposite know. I know why some of these personal attacks have been made on me. But these gentlemen opposite know they cannot touch a hair of my head ; they know that they cannot make a charge against me, and so they have to indulge in insinuations. Let them come into my province where I am known ; let the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) who for two days has been alongside the member for North Toronto, the member for East Grey, the member for Victoria-Haliburton to attack me ; let him come with them in my province and they will see whether the people have confidence in my honesty and in me. Let them come into my own county if they like. I may go into the county of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, and if he were here to-night I would make him a proposition—I have no fear to go into his county now and fight with him there the battle, and to see which of us has the confidence of the people of even that county. I am not afraid of these insinuations ; I have been discharging my duty in a proper way and I shall continue to do so. Now, it has been charged that some of the payments to these accountants has been taken from the maintenance of light service and is it not fair that that should be done seeing that the experts have been in Prescott and Sorel discharging their duties there in connection with the accounts of this service. The hon. member for North Toronto used a very mild and polite expression towards me—I am sorry that a young member like me should be obliged to say it of an old parliamentarian like him, but he seems to forget himself sometimes, and because this money was taken from the light service vote he has used the very mild expression that I had stolen the money from one vote to apply it to another.

I presume my hon. friend is anxious to gain the respect of his fellow members, but judging by the language he uses towards others, one would be inclined to come to a different conclusion. But if he be, why should he not use towards others the manner of expression which gentlemen are accustomed to use in their relations with one another? A great deal has been said regarding my travelling expenses to England, France, Germany and Italy. Well, this is not the first time when a public man has had to face attacks of that kind so that I find myself in very good company. Let me cite, for instance, the distinguished man who for many years was the leader of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario, the Hon. George Brown. In 1874 Mr. Brown went to Washington to negotiate a treaty. He came back with a treaty, but unfortunately the American senate refused to sanction it. His negotiations lasted about two months and his travelling expenses were a little over $4,000. Well, he was accused of having obtained the support of the American press by the corrupt use of public money. Mr. Brown denied this charge. 'Not a shilling, he said, had been spent illegitimately and the whole cost of his negotiations were only a little more than $4,000.'

Saturday Morning.

Mr. TAYLOR. That was not for himself alone, but for the whole party.

Mr. BRODEUR. He was alone to negotiate the treaty.

Mr. TAYLOR. He had his secretary and staff with him.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend, who is so very captious, was a member of this House in 1882. How is it that he then sanctioned the expenditure of $8,000 by Sir A. T. Galt who went to Paris to negotiate a treaty, but failed? He was accompanied by Mr. Barnard, and he failed in his mission because he was instructed to ask the minimum tariff on razors and cutlery, two articles which we do not manufacture in this country. And his mission cost $8,000. My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) however swallowed that without making a wry face, as he will everything that his party supports. I went to England to attend the colonial conference, and I went to Paris to negotiate a treaty. I also went to Germany with regard to the ice-breaker and to Italy where I had some negotiations with the Minister of Foreign Affairs. In none of these countries did I spend lavishly. In fact, my expenditure was on a very modest scale compared with that of two representatives in Paris of countries which cannot be compared with Canada in importance, revenue, extent or prestige. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not seem to realize what those international negotiations mean. They do not realize the necessity of the representatives of any country keeping up the dignity of the state he represents. Take Great Britain and see what expenditure she incurs in her diplomatic service. She is not niggardly in her expenditure to keep up the dignity and influence of those who represent her in the foreign diplomatic service. Why, the English ambassador in Paris occupies a castle, which was built for one of the members of the family of the first Napoleon and which was purchased by Great Britain as a residence for her representative. And should I be called on again to go abroad on a similar mission as that which brought me to Paris last year, I shall do exactly as I did then. I shall consider it my duty to represent my country in a dignified manner. If hon. gentlemen opposite think they are going to influence public opinion by these picayune criticisms, they will find themselves very much mistaken. It may suit the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) to boast of the small expenditure he made when he went abroad, but during his time Canada was not known, whereas to-day Canada is becoming widely known and it is the duty of our public men to maintain their position in a dignified way. I have no desire to detain the House. That may suit my hon. friend who went to bed last night.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not go to bed until 9 o'clock this morning.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, I have not gone to bed since yesterday morning, but am still fresh and vigorous enough to reply to the attacks of the hon. gentleman and am quite prepared to stay here just as long as these hon. gentlemen are willing to continue their policy of obstruction. That seems to be the policy of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who for the time being occupies the position of leader of his party. He wants to prevent any money coming out of the public chest for the administration of this country's affairs after the 1st April next. So irritated is he because this country is prospering that he would like to stop all expenditure on the public works we are now carrying on. Well, let him take the responsibility of such a course and he will no doubt find that when the people have an opportunity of giving a verdict they will leave him.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) reminds me of the lady who is continually protesting about her virtue. The hon. gentleman says he is perfectly honest. Well, he is certainly anything but frank, and when he attempts to lecture this side of the House about courtesy, he ought to remember that the first essential of a gentleman, as well as a minister of the Crown, is to be always ready to disarm criticism by throwing every possible light on transactions in which his own personal honour is concerned. Will the minister explain how it is that on the file there are letters to which the answers are not brought down and replies to letters which are not included?

Mr. BRODEUR. I explained yesterday that orders were given for the preparation of the return and when it was brought to me I found these letters missing. I gave instructions to the deputy to have the letters hunted up and included and I have explained to the House that the return is not yet complete. When the report of Mr. Falconer is presented I believe I will be justified.

Mr. LANCASTER. We must be allowed to use our own judgment as to whether the information we ask for is necessary before we allow this item to pass.

Mr. BRODEUR. The return asked for has nothing to do with the item before the House and the country will judge as to this obstruction.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister gave his solemn word that he would bring the papers down and he has not implemented his promise. He should either bring the papers down or withdraw his estimates.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have been sitting here since the day before yesterday and I had no opportunity to go to my office.

Mr. TAYLOR. It's your own fault.

Mr. BRODEUR. I don't think there is any reason for a statement of that kind. My deputy minister is out of the city and at eight o'clock this morning I sent for the assistant deputy and got the papers which were handed me the other day and showed them to my hon. friends and everything is complete except a few papers which I found were missing. I have asked Mr. Stanton, the acting deputy, to try and complete the report. I have always been willing to comply with the request of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I could show them instructions I have given concerning these reports and if they are not yet down it is not my fault.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is your fault that you don't withdraw the estimates when these papers are not here. The opposition will show you they have rights and you can make up your mind to stay here till Sunday morning.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am accustomed to these threats, I have no fear.

Mr. TAYLOR. Any minister that will get up in his place and make a false statement or a statement he cannot fulfil——

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman has no right to say I made a false statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. I didn't say it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I ask for the ruling of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. G. H. McIntyre). What I understood the hon. member to say was that a minister had no right to make a false statement.

Mr. BELAND. Did the minister make a false statement ?

Mr. TAYLOR. He said he would bring down a return to-day and he has not brought it down complete.

Mr. BELAND. That is not a false statement.

Mr. BRODEUR. When I made that state- I expected I would be able to go to my office and attend to the business of my department, but I have been kept here since the day before yesterday. As a matter of fact I could not present a report when the House is in committee. I have asked the acting deputy to try and get these papers down tonight and I hope they will be finished tonight.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) knows he is not serious—if he saw himself in a glass he would laugh at himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask the protection of the chair from the slanderous attacks of the gentlemen opposite.

Mr. TALBOT. I resent that statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. Order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. G. H. McIntyre). The hon. gentleman is not at liberty to interrupt the member for Leeds who has the floor.

Mr. TALBOT. He wants interruption ; they are simply killing time.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister gave a good reason for not producing the papers while his deputy was away, but he has no business to try and shove it down the throat of the member for North Toronto that he will rush those estimates through the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. If you give me an hour I will go to the department and see how the copying is getting on.

Mr. TAYLOR. Do so and we will take up the agricultural estimates.

Mr. BRODEUR. Very well I will do so to show you how anxious I am to comply with the orders of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister can go and we will take up the agricultural estimates.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no.

Mr. BRODEUR. All right I will go.

Mr. TAYLOR It is not constitutional to proceed with the estimates in the absence of the minister.

Mr ARMAND LAVERGNE. No one understands better than I do the thankless position which an opposition occupies and perhaps with the exception of being a member of a party all by yourself there is no position more ungrateful. Every one knows I am not a blind supporter of the government and perhaps the opposition will take a little advice from me. We have been three weeks on these estimates and there is now a deadlock. It is evident the government will not yield, and while it is evident the opposition had some reason for starting the obstruction yet now the situation is changed and the information has been brought down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. As the matter stands, the information required has been for the greater part brought down but there is some part not yet laid on the table. I understand also that it does not relate specially to this item of patrolling Hudson Bay. In view of that fact and in view of the rule that a minister cannot bring down a report when the House is in committee, I think we ought to adjourn so as to give the minister the opportunity of bringing down what is required. The government however refuses to adjourn. And while the minority have rights, not only in the House but in the country, the opposition has made its point, and it ought now let the business go on. The opposition has made its case, and it will be for the country to decide whether it is a good case or not, and I think it would be quite proper for the opposition to allow this vote to pass and the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again. I do not see that the opposition can make its case any stronger by compelling us to sit here until Sunday morning.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend has been very fair, but when he says that papers cannot be laid on the table while the House is in committee, I would remind him that the minister promised to bring down these papers, and that he did bring a portion of them and handed that portion over to the leader of the opposition but he did not bring them all. If he brought down a complete return, that would put an end to the difficulty, but we are within our rights in insisting that he shall fulfil his promise and bring down the information we require or we shall not allow him to pass any of his estimates. I see in the Auditor General's Report some pretty large amounts paid George F. Caldwell and F. E. Calderone explorers. What explorations did these gentlemen make ?

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. FISHER. We will try and get the information for the hon. gentleman sometime.

Mr. TAYLOR. We want it now. The minister ought to be in his place when his estimates are going through. When the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked if it was not the right of parliament that the minister should be in his place when his estimates are being discussed, the hon. gentleman admitted that he should. Will the hon. gentleman allow the House to take recess until the minister returns ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. CONMEE. I would not in any way curtail the privileges of the opposition but it must be admitted that it is the duty of the government to conduct the business of the House, and the government cannot allow the opposition to dictate to us just what business will come before the House and the order in which it shall come. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has tried to convince the House that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries took the ground that because some personal remarks were made regarding him, he would not bring down certain papers. The minister never made such a statement. As I have said, the opposition cannot expect to take the control of the House from the government.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has the hon. gentleman any proposition to make?

Mr. CONMEE. I may have one before I sit down. I find that the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) used this language in the course of this debate :

But there is information we asked for and we cannot allow this item to pass until we get that information.

Some hon. MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has repeatedly taken the same ground. The responsibility for the order and proceedings of the House rest on the government, and I do not think it will conduce to the reputation of the House and the business of the country or will enhance the reputation of hon. gentlemen outside the House to take the ground they have taken, that is that the government must do as they say and in the order they say or they will not allow any business to be done.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. CONMEE. That is logically your position. The hon. gentlemen, contrary to a principle of British law, are endeavouring to take advantage of their own wrong, for it is largely their own obstruction that has prevented the minister from complying with their request, as he has not been able to go to his department even to see how the copying is going on.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said that it was becoming a scandal, that ministers were in effect adding to their salaries by taking expense money more than they would require and holding it for an unreasonable time. The hon. member took back part of what he said, explaining that he did not mean to say that the minister was personally dishonest.

Mr. LANCASTER. He did not say anything of the kind .

Mr. CONMEE. What do you say about it; do you say that the minister is personally dishonest? No gentleman will say that outside the House.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is inside the House we are talking now.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) went further and said this was a thieving government; he used the words 'highway robbery.'

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I beg to differ.

Mr. CONMEE. That was put into his mouth by another gentleman.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. In what way did he use it?

Mr. CONMEE. You used it in connection with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the whole government.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I want the hon. gentleman to take that back.

Mr. CONMEE. No, I will not.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Because I never made such a statement.

Mr. CONMEE. I ask the chairman to call in the reporters and ask them to read over what he did say.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I said that this was a blundering, plundering government, and I was justified in making that statement.

Mr. CONMEE. Did you not use the words 'highway robber?'

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No, Sir.

Mr. CONMEE. I repeat that you did.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. G. H. McIntyre). Order. The hon. gentleman must address the chair.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. The hon. member has not accepted the denial of the hon. member for Lambton.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. G. H. McIntyre). If the hon. gentleman denies the statement attributed to him the hon. gentleman from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) must accept his denial.

Mr. CONMEE. I accept his denial, but I am in the judgment of the House as to what I have said.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is a qualified acceptance.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. G. H. McIntyre). I hope the hon. gentleman will not make my task difficult. It is necessary to accept the denial without qualification.

Mr. CONMEE. I did accept it without qualification, and I have at least the right to say that I am in the judgment of the House, but if the chairman rules me out on that point I will withdraw that too.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. G. H. McIntyre). There must be no qualification.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman has stated that he did not use the words in connection with the government and I accept the explanation. I will not repeat what the member for Dufferin stated because I presume he is responsible to himself. I have been in this House for four years and I have not heard a single gentleman opposite make a charge against any minister or against the government. If these gentlemen opposite get up and simply make insinuations and shield themselves behind the privilege of parliament to say here what they would not say elsewhere; a man who does that is taking a cowardly position. The hon. member (Mr. Foster) said that if he made a charge and did not prove it he did not have to leave the House. I admit there is no power to expel any member who fails to prove a charge, but I do say that no gentleman who ought to have a seat in the House would remain in the House under such conditions. I know of no case in British parliamentary practice where a member has not retired under such circumstances. Mr. Tarte made a charge in the House some years ago and he put that charge in writing and made it in a formal manner and it was referred to a parliamentary committee. If hon gentlemen opposite think a minister has wrongfully taken money and applied it to his own use or if they think this is a thieving government; the man who makes such a charge is a coward unless he takes an opportunity of proving it and taking his chances. The government is responsible for the order in which business shall come before the House, and the opposition in this case have taken the ground that unless the majority allows the minority to dictate to them there will be no business done. As Mr. Taylor said, the hon. member for North Toronto has told you chaps what to do and you must do it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Rainy River is out of order in referring to a member of this House by his name.

Mr. CONMEE. That was a slip of the tongue. The minority is not responsible further than to make fair and reasonable criticism and I think they have done more than that in this case and they ought to be satisfied. Hon. gentlemen opposite think it to be a serious thing that the minister took $2,000 for expenses when he went to Europe to transact the business of this Dominion. I know that I would not start on a trip like that with less than $2,000 in my pocket. The minister had a right to take his expenses and all fair minded men will admit that the money was taken out of the proper appropriation for that purpose and that it was properly applied and properly dealt with in every way. Hon. gentlemen opposite dare not say that the minister used one cent wrongfully. He could have done nothing else than what he did do and if these hon. gentlemen opposite wish to go to the Public Accounts Committee and inquire to their hearts content they will find that that expenditure was just and honest. I hope we have heard the last in this House of the idea that the majority must be dictated to by the minority. I hope we will not any longer hear these gentlemen opposite say that we must do what they tell us to do or we will do nothing at all. I protest against that doctrine and so long as I have a seat in this House will not let it go unchallenged.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When the hon. gentleman makes a statement that we are holding up the government, the statement is false so far as we are concerned.

Mr. TALBOT. I for one will make that statement also and I will stand by it.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member (Mr Armstrong) has accused me of making a false statement and I ask him to withdraw.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) knows that the statement he made is not true.

Mr. CONMEE I want the ruling of the chair

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. G. H. McIntyre). I rule that it is not in order to say that an hon. gentleman has made a false statement.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I will substitute 'not true' for 'false.'

Mr. CONMEE. That wont do. The hon. gentleman must withdraw the statement.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. G. H. McIntyre). As I did not hear the statement myself I can only rule that it is not in order to say that another hon. gentleman has made a false statement.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I abide by your ruling as to the word false, but I wish to say that it is not true that this side of the House is obstructing the estimates. The hon. member for Rainy River said that I called the minister a highwayman, but that is not so and he wont get the minister to say I did.

Mr. CONMEE. I said you referred to the government as highwaymen and every one in the House heard you, and I say it is cowardly to say so if you do not make a charge.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When the hon. gentleman calls me a coward in regard to these matters I tell him I believe I am doing my duty to my constituents and to the country as a whole. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries tried to find some consolation for the unfortunate position in which he finds himself by making a reference to the hon. George Brown, leader in his day of the Liberal party. Well, if the shade of the late George Brown and the late Alexander Mackenzie could witness the degeneracy of the party they once led, they would come to the conclusion that there were some respects in which this country had made anything but an improvement since their day. Here we have a minister of the Crown trying to force his estimates through and yet at the same time refusing to furnish the information which the opposition deem essential.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES moved that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. The committee cannot pass estimates in the absence of the minister responsible for the department.

Motion negatived—yeas 15, nays 43

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I ask the minister leading the House how can we proceed without the Minister of Marine being here.

Mr. BELAND. No questions were put to the minister when he was here for hours.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I know of no rule which compels a minister to be present under such circumstances. It is asking rather too much of the minister to remain here for days continuously when the members of the opposition can form themselves into relays and get rested. It is physically impossible for the minister to be here all the time and it would be a most extraordinary act of cruelty to atempt to compel his attendance. If there were such a rule it would be possible for the opposition to prevent the carrying on of public business.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Agriculture said it was the duty of the minister to be present when his estimates are being discussed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have great regard for the Minister of Agriculture, but I am not bound by his ruling.

Mr. FISHER. And that was not my ruling.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister is unable to attend to his duties he can move the committee rise and then he will have an opportunity for rest and recreation.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No man could have done more to satisfy the opposition than the Minister of Marine has done for the past two days. Even if he were here he could only repeat what he has said already twenty or thirty times.

Mr. PARDEE. Since this discussion started it has appeared to me remarkable that nothing has been said on the item before the House and that these gentlemen opposite have continuously indulged in nothing but insinuations which it is absolutely impossible for them to substantiate. Prior to this debate I can candidly say that I have listened with interest and I hope instruction to the remarks of the member for North Toronto. But from his conduct in this debate I can gather neither instruction nor profit. He has said every word he could say without absolutely laying a charge,—to quote his words—that the minister has stolen, that he has filched, and he went further and insinuated that the Minister of Marine—and than whom there is no more honourable man in this House—had actually rifled one account for another in order that he might get his expenses. And, mind you, these expenses were necessary for him to attend the important public duties which called him to England. It may be an old saw, but I say in all sincerity that when a member of this House on his reputation as a representative of the people of the province of Ontario or any other province, when he says that a brother member has stolen, when he says he has used public moneys in a way he should not, when he says he has filched public money to his own personal advantage, when he says he has rifled the accounts of the Dominion, that member must be prepared to make a charge and substantiate his statements or the people of this country, honest as they are, will punish the member who refuses to substantiate these statements. I look at the definition of the word 'rifler,' and I find it means robber, and when a man sent to this parliament as a leader of public opinion says that a member of this House has stolen and filched and rifled the public chest, I say if that man has any red corpuscles in his whole body and if he is a man he will make such a charge on his responsibility and he will take the consequences.

Let me tell hon. members opposite that, so far as he was concerned, he did absolutely all that his oath of office called for. He has administered the department so efficiently that hon. gentlemen opposite have to show their discontent by these obstructive tactics. They cavil at the amount he spent on his trip to Europe. Well, the results of his mission to the old land, to France and to Germany have been such that Canada to-day occupies a position she never did before and such as the Conservative party were never able to achieve. The meagre amount he spent was absolutely justified by the profits which are bound to accrue to this country from the work he has accomplished. We have had some very peculiar criticisms on this trip of the 'Arctic' to our northern regions from hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) said it resulted in little or nothing except the collection of $500 from certain fishermen. But what are the facts? We have had the United States from year to year endeavouring to claim these waters as their own and planting their flag on those shores, but we have asserted our sovereignty over that region, and in this have carried out the policy of that greatest Britisher and Canadian of them all, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who declared that Canada must be for the Canadians. But that grand old Conservative party, which claims the monopoly of loyalty, by cavilling at this policy, show their willingness to sit idly by and see Canadian territory pass into foreign hands. Had we not asserted our sovereignty over that territory, we would have had the American people taking possession of it, and thus lay the grounds for an international dispute in the near future beween them and us. But these expeditions have upheld the nationality of Canada on those waters and shores, and the people of Canada are bound to reap every possible benefit that will accrue from its teeming fisheries and its abundant mineral and other wealth. We had the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) deploring the decadence of the present Liberal leaders as compared with the late Alexander Mackenzie and the Reformers of his day. But when Mr. Mackenzie was in office the party opposite declared that the treasury of the country was being rifled from day to day. But now that he is no more, they can hardly find words sufficient to express their appreciation of his great qualities. Sir, the traditional principles of the Reform party have come down from year to year, and are as strong to-day as they were in the time of Mr. Mackenzie. The discussion has wandered far afield for the simple reason that hon. gentlemen opposite, in default of argument, have resorted to obstructive tactics. Why, the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) inquired how long the Hudson straits were open in the year. Had he read the history of that country as carefully as he does the history of the German surtax, he would have known that it is open from four to five months every year. This is only one evidence of the childish criticisms of hon. gentlemen opposite. They are simply turning constitutional government into a farce.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. We have been sitting here for something like forty hours and it is useless for hon. gentlemen opposite to pretend that they have not deliberately set themselves to obstruct the work of this committee. What is the reason for this obstruction ? The chief reason, I believe, is that the hon. gentleman who represents North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has become soured. For a brief period he has had the leadership of the party opposite and as he feels the unfortunate position in which he stands before the country, he is now resorting, like a ruined gambler, to a desperate throw and imagines that by engineering these obstructive tactics he will draw the attention of the country on himself and possibly make some little political capital out of it. But unless I am very much mistaken, the verdict of the people will be that men of his calibre are not fitted to have any share in the administration of the country's affairs. The delay and obstruction of public business which we have witnessed during the last few days is due to the unfortunate temper in which my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) finds himself. I am sure that if the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) were here, he would have prevented this obstruction and would not have allowed the opposition to get themselves into anything like the position in which they have placed themselves in the last forty hours. Hon. members have made vague but high-sounding charges against the minister, but it is astonishing to see the agility with which the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) sought to escape from what he had said about that minister when he was taken to task by the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee).

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What does the hon. member mean by saying that I attempted to escape from any statement or criticism I have made ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I will come to you later. Does he imagine for a moment that the people of this country are going to be deceived by such tactics ? A fair and reasonable criticism of public expenditure is what any government should welcome, but my hon. friends opposite have exceeded that and gone beyond possible limits. They have made all sorts of insinuations and innuendoes and indirect attacks against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I ask does any one of them believe in his heart that the minister is a thief? If there be such a one, let him have the manliness to make a direct charge, and we shall furnish him with the fullest opportunity to have a most thorough investigation.

Mr. LENNOX. It is quite evident from the last two speeches we have heard, that hon. gentlemen opposite are becoming very restless. They tell us that our proceedings will not redound to our political advantage. Political advantage is all they think of, but what we are fighting for is our constitutional rights. If there has been any spectacle during the past forty hours, it is that afforded by hon. gentlemen who have not the courage to face the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) when he is in the House but who attack him behind his back.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is now almost seven o'clock and I observe that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has returned. I presume that he will now give us the information which the Minister of Agriculture said would be given in due course.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The situation we find in the House for the last two days is that a coterie of Ontario Tory members evidently for no other purpose and for no other good reason than that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries happens to be a French Canadian, have united to harrass him and to do everything possible to make his life miserable.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. I ask the ruling of the Chair as to whether an hon. member is justified in imputing motives to members on this side of the House when they are discharging their duty.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am not imputing any motives, I am stating the fact that during the last two days they have done everything to harrass the Minister of Marine and Fisheries because——

Mr. SPROULE. I want your ruling Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. There is a rule that prevents an hon. member from imputing motives.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If I have imputed any motives I cheerfully withdraw them, but any facts I have stated I just as cheerfully insist in placing them before the House. It is absolutely unfair that a minister of the Crown, even though he comes from the province of Quebec, should be treated as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been treated by the opposition. They ask him to give information at 7 o'clock on Saturday morning after keeping him here since Thursday night, and if they had the true spirit of sportsmen about them they would cease to harrass him any longer. I believe in playing the game of politics fairly, but I don't believe in a coterie of Ontarie Tories persecuting a minister of the Crown because he happens to be in charge of a prominent department and because he happens to come from another province.

Mr. PERLEY. I have always found the hon. member (Mr. D. Ross) a reasonable man, and I would like to know what he means by talking of a coterie of Ontario Tories ? The opposition has objected to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries going on with his estimates until he gives us information. Does the hon. member know that the hon. gentlemen from Jacques Cartier and Laval argued most strongly against these items going through without proper information being accorded ? Why should the hon. gentleman (Mr. D. Ross) introduce sectional and racial matters into a question like this. Surely we never considered on this side of the House whether the minister comes from Ontario or Quebec.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Perley) happens to represent a Quebec constituency it appears to be an accident and I will have to class him as an Ontario Tory.

Mr. PERLEY. What about the hon. members for Jacques Cartier and Laval ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. They are not here.

Mr. LAPOINTE. They got disgusted.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I am sure there is no stronger French Canadian in this House than I am, and I must say that the hon. gentleman from Yale and Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) seems to be mistaken, for I do not believe the opposition ever had the idea in their minds which he says they have. I think the opposition were justified perhaps at the start, but I think they have stated their position long ago, and what in my opinion they should have done was to record their vote and let the business of the House proceed. I am glad to say that I do not believe the opposition had in their minds the motives attributed to them by my hon. friend (Mr. D. Ross).

Mr. TAYLOR. The government members have been obstructing for the last six hours.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. My hon. friend (Mr. D. Ross) was mistaken, and any man who has sat here for so many hours is liable to make a mistake. As I said, if the opposition believed at the outset that a minister of the Crown refused information they were right in starting the discussion, but having stated their position, what they should have done was to record their vote and leave it to the verdict of the country as to whether the minister was right or wrong. I do not believe there were any racial, sectarian or narrow motives inspiring this matter. At the same time I think the obstruction should have ceased long ago.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Armand Lavergne) has been very fair and as an Ontario man I am very obliged to him for the rebuke he has given the member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross).

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I did not give a rebuke to anybody, I merely stated my views.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister give us the information now as to how this $50,000 is going to be expended ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I shall be very happy to give the information when the opposition are ready to transact business.

Mr. FISHER. The Prime Minister made a very fair proposition at the opening of the debate when he said that if one item in these estimates were put through this item could stand and they would get all the information they wanted on it later. That was a fair proposition because we thought the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should be vindicated.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Agriculture has propounded to the House some most amusing information with regard to the procedure.

Mr. FISHER. The opposition seemed to need it.

Mr. SPROULE. He assumes the authority to give it at any rate, whether right or wrong. In the case of the Farnham post office the Minister of Agriculture assisted to obstruct from Wednesday afternoon until Saturday night.

Mr. FISHER. I was not in the House when the item to which he refers was dealt with. I confess I have held up the late government when they were trying to pass improper items, not because they did not give opportunity to acquire information but because I thought the item was improper and tried to prevent it passing at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I say that until the minister is prepared to furnish all the information which the opposition want and which he promised, he has no right to ask us to pass any item at all. All he has to do is to allow some other department that is prepared to go forward. Are we not justified in asking that the estimates for that department be held over until we get the information ? Let any other department be taken up and we are willing to go on.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Agriculture should not question the course of the opposition in this case as he, when in opposition, assisted to keep the House from Wednesday, shortly after 3 o'clock, until 12 on Saturday night, and the minister refused to allow the government to pass the item under discussion or any other item.

Mr. FISHER. No question of any other item came up.

Mr. TAYLOR. You did not ask one.

Mr. FISHER. We were told the item had to pass if we stayed a year.

Mr. TAYLOR. And it did pass.

Mr. FISHER. Eventually, yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Our case is a great deal stronger.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. minister kindly let me have the report of the historian of the 'Arctic,' which, he says, is in his department ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I gave instructions yesterday to have it copied.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not necessary to have it copied ; I will not steal it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a document which he could get in two minutes.

Mr. BRODEUR. I gave instructions to have this report copied. Shall I withdraw those instructions or tell them to go on ?

Mr. FOSTER. The minister can do whatever he likes ; all I ask for is the report.

Mr. BRODEUR. Shall I get it copied ?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose others would like to see it besides myself.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I wish to record my objection to having the report taken out of the department. I want to see a copy of it.

Mr. BENNETT. I assume that the expenses of the 'Arctic' will come out of this vote. It says 'vessels' and in the fortieth annual report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, 1907, I find that there are a number of vessels owned by the government and, as more than one vessel may go to these northern waters, I am going to draw the attention of the minister to the vessels mentioned here, and ask him whether he thinks one or more of these may also go. On page 12 I find a reference to the 'Stanley.' The minister appears to be unable to give me any information as to what the flotilla will consist of. I have no doubt that the minister will have no inconsiderable fleet upon that occasion because I find by reference to this report that he has a perfect armada under his control. There is nothing small about the Minister of Marine and Fisheries when it comes tc spending other peoples' money. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if he thinks the 'Stanley' would be as well fitted for his expedition as the 'Arctic.'

Mr. FIELDING. Not quite so well.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, I assume that the minister fears that, never having been there before, she might make a mistake.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a good deal in that.

Mr. BENNETT. In every well-equipped armada there is a flagship and on this occasion, when the fleet will sail out from Quebec, there will be on the flagship that hardy and worthy mariner, Capt. Bernier. There should be no danger to the fleet with Capt. Bernier on the bridge. If the 'Stanley' is there, she will follow the lead of the 'Arctic.' But in case the minister fears that the 'Stanley' is not well fitted, I would like to call his attention to the 'Montcalm,' and it is really too bad that the Minister of Marine is not here to answer my questions. I would ask the Minister of Finance if he thinks the 'Montcalm' is fitted to go on this trip ? He is doubtful about her—cannot say anything against her, and cannot say anything in her favour. One great feature of this northern expedition is that it is a kind of missionary trip to establish peace and amity with those benighted heathens in the north—the Esquimaux.

I would impress upon the Minister of Finance the advantages of sending up the 'Montcalm' on this Arctic trip. She is supposed to be under the eagle eye of Commander Spain. And by the way, I notice that these letters precede the name of Commander Spain, O.G.V. Now, I would like to ask the Finance Minister what those letters mean. I think these letters should follow instead of preceding his name. It would seem that Mr. Spain is high up in the admiralty of the Canadian navy. The only meaning I can get from these letters is that they stand for 'One Great Viator,' if the House will indulge me in this mix up of English and Latin. In the blue-books it would be permissible I suppose to call him 'One Great Traveller.' Another point. I do not understand how the minister is going to make this trip this year with only $50,000, because we remember that on former occasions the expenditure has run up to about $125,000. How is it possible that this trip can be accomplished on $50,000 ? Since the flight of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I am unable to know how many vessels there are in the fleet besides the 'Arctic.' Perhaps the Minister of Finance could tell me.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no idea.

Mr. BENNETT. That is very sad, because there is going to be a lot of rivalry over this trip. Will the Minister of Finance give me a half promise now, even if it is a faint hearted promise, that the 'Montcalm' will be one of the equipment?

Mr. FIELDING. I will take it under consideration.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish the hon. minister could go further. The 'Montcalm' is an ice-breaker, and, as such, she would be particularly suitable for the navigation of these northern waters. Especially so if she has a French Canadian for her captain, like Capt. Bernier. I have the honour to have many French Canadians among my electors, and I am glad to say that I get the votes of more and more of them with each recurring election. With a French Canadian as her captain, the 'Montcalm' could do good service in these northern waters. It is true that the Public Works Department might feel that the 'Speedy' should be impressed into this service. But, on second thought, I am not sure that the Public Works Department would be willing to let her go. I would like to consult the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) about that. Does he think that the 'Speedy' would be a proper vessel to send on one of these voyages?

Mr. FIELDING. The name seems good.

Mr. BENNETT. Must the Minister of Finance judge only by the name? Does he mean to say he has never seen her?

Mr. FIELDING. Never.

Mr. BENNETT. Never saw her beautiful mahogany cabin? Never reposed luxuriously upon her beautiful divans? Never stretched his legs under her hospitable hundred-dollar table and drunk Radnor water and other etcetras? We are told that this vessel lies half the time at the dock. Better have her machinery rust out than wear out. I hope the Minister of Finance will have this vessel placed at his disposal and that he will make a trip up the lakes with her. If he will call at the town of Midland, he will be most hospitably received. I regret to observe that I failed to command the full attention of some hon. members at the rear of the chamber. I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, as a man of experience in public speaking, to sympathize with me in my difficulty of making an address worthy of this occasion with some of my auditors at such a distance and so inattentive. I am glad to know, however, that I have the attention of my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith), and that my hon. friend from Chateauguay (Mr. Brown) is also an intent listener. With this very select, though small list of auditors, I am—I will not say goaded—but led to continue my remarks.

Now, I am going to ask the Minister of Finance if he does not think that the insurance of the lives of the crew should be looked after. Let us consider for a moment the perils to which the crew will be exposed. It goes without saying that everything that was done on the last occasion of the trip of the 'Arctic' will be done on the coming occasion. I was going to appeal to the hon. the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche), who I regret to see is going out of the chamber, because he is a marine man, and lives down by the sounding sea. Does the hon. member for Halifax wish these men to go down to the sea in vessels without their lives being insured? Now, why should this great country of ours, which is paying so many millions of dollars in taxes to this government, not be willing to insure the lives of these men? This country cannot afford to lose Captain Bernier. Remember what Captain Bernier is doing for the country. There is never a year goes by that he does not come back from the northern regions and tell us that he has discovered so many more islands. He comes back here with a beautifully prepared map dotted with red spots, and he puts his finger on these spots and says: There is another island that I have discovered for the people of Canada. Now, the captain is very modest, I think. I am going to appeal to my hon. friends from Bagot (Mr. J. E. Marcil), and my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau), who I see are listening to me very attentively. Do they not think that it is great folly on the part of Capt. Bernier, when he makes these red spots on the map to show that he found a dozen islands, say, last year, that he should be so modest and not put down a few more red spots to show us that he has discovered a few more islands? It is just as easy for the captain to mark with red spots forty islands as it is to mark a dozen islands, and the result would be that the captain would be showing some better results of his trip. Now, if the captain were to bring us a new map every year with a lot of new islands marked on it with red spots, of course these maps would remain in the archives of the department, and the result would be that in a few years from now the map would be dotted all over with islands, and then the people would say to Capt. Bernier: There are no more islands to discover, there is no more use in navigating those regions because the waters are full of islands. Besides the dangers of the deep, there are dangers from the people amongst whom these navigators go. And with this immense display of silverware on the 'Montcalm' is there not danger that Capt. Bernier and all his gallant crew may be murdered by those who desire to possess themselves of these riches?

Now, looking over the accounts, I do not find any amusements have been provided for the crew, except in the form of drinking liquor, smoking tobacco and playing cards. Had it not been for the love of economy, I suppose a piano would have been provided. Can the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) tell me whether there is a piano aboard the 'Montcalm?' Apparently, the hon. minister does not know. Here again, we are at a loss because of the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. We know that there is a piano on the 'Speedy.' Might it not be possible to place the 'Speedy's' piano aboard the 'Montcalm,' should she be chosen as the sister ship of the 'Arctic' in these expeditions. Of course, there may be the drawback that there is not a good piano player among the crew of the 'Montcalm.' But, though the people of Canada are economical, I think they would like to feel that the crew are not confined to seek amusement in drinking liquor, smoking tobacco or playing cards, and would be willing to engage a piano player. The dances of which we read in the evidence as having been held would be all the more enjoyable if they had a piano on the vessel. I have spoken of the 'Montcalm' for, of course, the 'Arctic' will be sent—that goes without saying. And it goes without saying that Captain Bernier will be in command. Why, I believe that the very engines would refuse to work were the signal given by any other than the strong touch of Captain Bernier. But should there be any thought of sending the 'Speedy' I enter my protest against that course of action. The 'Speedy' entertains the people of these more southern portions of the Dominion with the splendour of her entertainments and her $25,000 of expenditure. God help the long-suffering people of this country so long as the men now in office handle their money. If they would but handle the public money as they handle their own, the expenditure of this money would be $50,000,000 instead of $150,000,000.

Now, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) has just entered the chamber. I would like to ask him whether Captain Bernier left Joe Lane in that northern part of the country. The Minister of Marine does not answer. Apparently he has not the information at hand. He comes here and asks for $50,000 for this expedition, and yet he practically confesses that he does not know whether Joe Lane is there or not. What would have happened to Captain Bernier and the other gentlemen if it had not been for Joe Lane? According to the evidence concerning a former expedition, if it had not been for Joe Lane the expedition would have been in sore straits indeed. We do not know whether Captain Bernier brought Joe Lane down or not. He may have brought him down. It may be that Joe Lane at this moment is over in Hull, having a good time at the expense of the country. Now, will the Minister of Marine and Fisheries tell me how the supplies will be purchased for this next expedition? Again, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is deaf to my questioning. However, I know one thing, and that is that these purchases will not be made in the open market. Everybody will look on this as a junketing expedition. Now that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who has been out of the chamber for some time, has returned, I wish to ask him if he has decided what vessel is to accompany the 'Arctic' on this trip. I think the minister should answer that question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, he is not going to get these estimates through quickly in this way. Has the minister decided what vessel is to accompany the 'Arctic?'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. BENNETT. It is not carried, and will not be carried in the next week or for several weeks. If the minister thinks he is going to sit there and not answer a proper question, he will not get any estimates carried. I ask him if there is to be more than one vessel on this trip? Will the minister answer the question?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have answered. I have stated that when hon. gentlemen opposite are ready to take the estimates seriously, I shall be ready to answer them.

Mr. BENNETT. I am now asking questions seriously about this trip for which this vote of $50,000 is asked. Will any vessel besides the 'Arctic' go on that trip? The minister need not think he can jolly these estimates through the committee. The day for jollying has gone by. The day for getting anything voted for that department has gone by unless the payment of the money is verified under oath in the Public Accounts Committee. That may just as well be understood first as last. We are not going to be satisfied when the minister stands up in this House and says that a payment was made to this man or that man; we are going to have the man state under oath whether he got the money or not, and whether he got all the money. Has it come to this, that when a minister gives the House an assurance that a certain sum of money has been paid to a certain person, his word cannot be accepted, and that we have to go before the Public Accounts Committee and produce documents with their tell-tale evidences of crookedness and have them verified under oath? It has come to that in this department. Let us look at this shameful statement presented to this House, which shows a case of open thieving and nothing less. The minister has said that he has invited this man Falconer to go to court with an action against the Dominion of Canada. He said the statement of Falconer could not be maintained, because there would be the oath of the minister against his oath. I assume that we shall have the oath of both of these gentlemen in the Public Accounts Committee. This is no time for mincing matters. If Mr. Falconer gets into court, he will have something to back up his verbal contract with. He will have this, that on several occasions he placed bills before this department which were certified to by the minister himself, and that the minister agreed that the men employed by him were to be paid, according to their grades or classes, $3, $4 or $5 per day as an allowance for board and lodging; and the minister will have to maintain that that was not the case at all, but that he had a verbal bargain with Falconer that he was to be allowed his actual disbursements. But the country will never see this case ventilated in a court of law. There is not a man inside or outside of parliament who, when he hears of the facts of the case, will ever believe that this man Falconer or those who associated with him ever got the $50,000. There will be the same old idea that there was a go-between, and the public will judge as to the capacity of a minister who allows bills amounting to hundreds of dollars to be paid by his department without a single certificate of any official of his department upon them. What an easy department this Department of Marine and Fisheries is. While the public treasury is being raided as it is to-day, the fight before the people of Canada cannot come on too quickly. Hon. gentlemen talk about obstruction. The honest thinking people of Canada will be glad to think that this discussion has gone on for two days and two nights, and their eyes will be opened to the exposure that has been made. They will realize that this is only one of many cases to show them where their money has gone, and will go to strengthen the suspicion in the minds not only of honest Conservatives, but of many honest Liberals, that 40 or 50 per cent of the public money has gone, not in graft at all—that is too mild a term—but in common, ordinary thievery.

An hon. MEMBER. Highway robbery.

Mr. BENNETT. Highway robbery would be a gentle term to apply to this. The highway robber met you in the open ; he did not skulk behind the doors of a government department as these thieves do. He was a gentleman compared with the man who is thriving to-day at the expense of the people of this country by means of payments such as these, that are not vouched for by either the minister or any official of the department. There will be a rude awakening when hon. gentlemen opposite have to face the people. I have heard the old story told around the corridors, 'Don't be afraid ; it will be all right ; we will work the race and religious cry in the province of Quebec, and we will work the foreign vote in the Northwest.' But the race and religious cry will soon be played out in the province of Quebec. I have more respect for the French Canadian people than some hon. gentlemen opposite. You cannot fool the French Canadian people much longer.

An hon. MEMBER. You will not fool us.

Mr. BENNETT. I invite the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) to come up to the township of Tiny. He will find there a gentleman who can hold his own on the public platform with the Solicitor General himself, a French-Canadian farmer, a man of ability and conversant with the political history of this country, a man who had much to do with bringing about the downfall of the rotten, ragged, disgraced Ross administration of Ontario.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE. Was he born in Ontario?

Mr. BENNET. He was born in Quebec, I think.

Mr. BUREAU. Contaminated in Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT. And if the Solicitor General comes to that section of country, he will find that the most prosperous, the most intelligent French Canadians there are Conservatives. This idea of hon. gentlemen opposite that they are going to win on the foreign vote in the Northwest and on the religious howl in Quebec cuts both ways.

Mr. BUREAU. It cuts only one way. We never hear it in Quebec. You are the only people who raise it.

Mr. BENNETT. Why, it is not so very long ago since the leader of the government, on the public platform in Quebec, thanked God that there was not an Orangeman in the Liberal party.

Mr. BUREAU. That is right, but that is not a cry of religion.

Mr. BENETT. Now, the Solicitor General also thanks God that there is not an Orangeman in the Liberal party. I suppose he will say that he does not want one either.

Mr. BUREAU. I did not say that. I never knew that Orangeism was religion. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) denied it when I spoke about that in the session of 1904-1905.

Mr. BENNETT. I know Orangemen who sometimes vote on the Liberal side.

An hon. MEMBER. Here is one, the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Finlay).

Mr. BENNETT. Oh, well, he will soon be numbered with the dead politically if Jim Stratton does not chloroform him, the Liberal-Conservative party will attend to him. But we do not worry much about this parliament, it is the next parliament we are worrying about.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT. And it is not causing us much worry. There will be an election in Ontario next summer. Talk of the ragged remnant who came out of the wreck of the Ross government. They are an army compared with those who will be left after the next election. And this government cannot bring on its election too soon to suit us. They are reduced to such methods as the Ross administration used—stealing ballots, burning ballots and things of that kind. But all that will not help them. And I point to the fate of the Ross government as an example. Why, I have seen men who used to be cheek by jowl with the ministers in the corridors of the legislature in Toronto. They had the ministers in their power. And what has become of them ? Deprived of the help of their friends in the government, they became political and social outcasts, and as such some of them have gone down to their graves. The Ross administration and the crowd that followed them were responsible for bringing down politically, socially and morally a number of young men, who, but for the temptations placed in their way might have been useful and honoured citizens. And the Ross government met its doom. I do not think there will be a Dominion election this year, though this side of the House desires it. My hon. friend from Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Louis Lavergne), the whip of the Liberal party shakes his head as indicating that there will be an election. It cannot come too soon for the Liberal-Conservative party, nor can it come too soon for the well-being of the people of Canada as a whole.

Mr. BARR. The weary faces of hon. members remind us of soldiers during a siege. And, looking at the clock, we see that we have yet thirteen hours to fight the battles of our party and our country before the relief comes with the Sabbath, when, under the laws of the land, it will not be possible for this House to continue in session. We have had an experience which, I am sure, hon. members on both sides will hope not to see repeated for many years.

We have been told that an election is coming on. We have reason to believe that in the province of Ontario we will have an election next June. Now we know that in Ontario to-day we have one of the purest governments that ever governed a country, a government that is pure and white as the drifted snow. They took upon them a lease of power from the free and independent electors of Ontario.

Mr. DEVLIN. I rise to a point of order. I fail to see what connection there is between the snow-white government of Ontario and item 209 which is before the committee.

Mr. BARR. I may remind the hon. gentleman that some of his friends have been sleeping, probably not the sleep of the just, while we on this side of the House have been struggling for the liberties of the people. I thought it was settled last night when the point of order was raised that we had the privilege of discussing a wide range of subjects. I was going to proceed to discuss the platforms of the different parties of this country.

Mr. DEVLIN. I insist upon a ruling of the Chair to know whether the hon. gentleman is in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. J. J. Hughes). No doubt the discussion has wandered widely from the item under consideration. But if the point is pressed, I will have to ask the speaker to confine his remarks to the question before the Chair.

Mr. BARR. Of course there are a great many other questions that we can discuss if hon. gentlemen opposite prefer it. But we have at least this satisfaction, that in 13 hours from now we shall necessarily be relieved from the necessity of discussing anything at all. Now, I desire to submit to the House a platform which, if it were adopted by this government, would, I think, relieve them from the difficulty they have got into.

Mr. PAQUET. I rise to a point of order. For a long time now the hon. gentleman has been speaking on questions that have absolutely nothing to do with the question before the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If an hon. member insists upon the application of the rule relevancy, then the hon. gentleman who has the floor must confine himself to the question before the Chair.

Mr. BARR. I have no doubt my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Paquet) is quite within his rights, although I question his object in pursuing that course. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in bringing in from New York experts to reorganize the bookkeeping system in his department, thereby acknowledged that something was wrong. But in engaging these New York experts he made no written contract with them, and the result is that we are met with overcharges for board of an extraordinary character. When the public learn of the unnecessary waste of time that is going on, they will hold the government and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries responsible for refusing to supply the information demanded by the opposition.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. member for North Toronto asked me to let him see the originals of the letters of Mr. Vanasse. I beg leave to present them to the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad to get the report of Mr. Vanasse, for which we had not previously asked. If the minister had been as prompt in obeying the orders of the House for returns ordered two months ago, we would not have been in the condition we are to-day. Here we are within a few hours of the close of the week, and the minister still persists in pushing his estimates without bringing down the information the House has ordered.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have got it. I have stated time and again, during the night, let us do some work, and as soon as as the Speaker is in the chair, I will lay the report on the table.

Mr. FOSTER Well, my hon. friend will not make any progress in that way. The returns are to be brought down before the Supplies are voted. It is necessary for the information to be in the hands of those who have the voting of the Supplies before they vote them to the Crown. There have been a number of new doctrines laid down by the minister, and this is his latest one. Information which was ordered by the House two months ago he brings down in the midst of the conflict and locks it up in his desk. Then he says to the voters of the Supplies, we will reverse the old proposition that the information must come before the Supply is voted, and we will put it in this way ; I have the information ; here it is ; you pass the Supply, and I will give you the information. No man in this House will stand by the minister in that position. Of course, hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to save his face. They know that he got himself into this muddle ; they are sorry he did ; but they are standing by him now, and they are willing to remain silent under that novel and destructive doctrine. Fancy a minister standing up in the face of the House and saying, pass my estimates and I will give you the information, not before.

Mr. BUREAU. That is not a fair statement. The minister says he will put the papers on the table when the Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. FOSTER. He has an easy way of getting the Speaker in the chair. He will not move that the deputy Speaker leave the chair in order to get the Speaker in the chair. He says : Pass the estimate, and you will get the information.

Mr. BUREAU. That is an unfair statement.

Mr. FOSTER. An unfair statement ? And this is a member of the legal department of this government, the Solicitor General, with some of the traditions of justice under his care and keeping. He has heard the Minister of Marine and Fisheries make the statement here that if we will make progress and pass the estimates, then he will give us the information. Now he says mine is an unfair statement. I will leave the Solicitor General to make the statement as he understands it.

Mr. BUREAU. As I understand it, the minister explained that he could not lay the papers on the table until the Speaker was in the chair. While the committee is sitting, the Speaker not being in the chair, he cannot lay the papers on the table. But my hon. friend insinuates that the minister said, pass the estimates and I will get the information.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no doubt about what he said. 'Hansard' will show it.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman had the report in his hands yesterlay with the exception of a few letters.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not seen the report. The completed report has not been in the hands of any man on this side of the House.

Mr. BUREAU. That is hair splitting.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not hair splitting. The Solicitor General is doing the hair splitting. The House ordered the returns two months ago ; the minister has not laid them on the table of the House ; and now he refuses to get into a position to lay them on on the table ; and what he says, in words and in effect, is : I want you to pass this estimate ; if you do that, you will get the information ; if you do not, you will not get it. No man can maintain that position inside or outside of this House. The constitutional position is, before we pass the Supply we must have the information.

Mr. BRODEUR. Anything to make obstruction, that is all.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has no right to charge me or the opposition with obstruction. He has been a Deputy Speaker, a very expensive one, however, and he is supposed to know the rules of the House ; and he knows that no member of this House has the right to charge another member with insincerity. He himself was an actor in a similar event some years ago. In April, 1904 when Mr. Daly, the Minister of the Interior, charged a member of the then opposition with being insincere, no man was quicker to take the floor on a point of order than Sir Wilfrid Laurier, at that time the leader of the opposition, and the Speaker sustained the point of order, which was this, that no member has a right to charge another with being insincere. What we are doing to-day on this side of the House is standing for the right of the opposition and of parliament, and we are sincere in doing it; and the hon. gentleman, who presumably understands the rules of the House, charges us with being obstructionists, being insincere, when he knows that he has no right to do it. That is one of the subterfuges of the minister. It is actions of that kind which have made trouble for him.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is subterfuge a parliamentary word ?

Mr. FOSTER. The Deputy Speaker is in the chair, and if I use any word that is out of the way, he will call me to order. If the minister thinks that is unparliamentary, what does he think of his own charge of insincerity a moment ago against the opposition, when we are simply upholding the rights of this House, and the constitutional method of voting Supplies. Where is the return that he was ordered to bring down to the House ? Will he now put it in possession of the House ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am ready to do so at any time. I brought it yesterday, and I said I was ready to put it on the table as soon as the Speaker was in the chair.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister was given an opportunity of moving the Deputy Speaker out of the chair and putting the House in a position to get it ; but he has not done that. I am informed by some hon. gentlemen who saw these papers that they were altogether incomplete, and the minister acknowledged that they were incomplete. Does the minister say that he has the completed return in his possession ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, let him put it before the House, as he ought to do. If he will do that, we will have made that much progress at least.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am ready to lay it on the table as soon as I am able to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I will allow the minister to make his motion ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It cannot be done while the House is in committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I will sit down until the minister moves that the deputy speaker leave the chair.

Mr. BRODEUR. These papers have nothing to do with the item under discussion, and I am not going to be led by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. That is just what we expected from the minister. When we bring him up to the ring-bolt he stops. Does the minister think that assuming that attitude will enable him to get this item passed ? He knows that it will not. He knows that at twelve o'clock to-night this committee rises without his getting a single dollar of his estimates. What is the use of his butting his head against a stone wall, and compelling those who are loyally supporting him, some of them beyond their conviction, to do the same? He knows that at twelve o'clock to-night he will be just where he was before the House went into Supply on Thursday. Is that his diplomacy ? The minister has a great desire to be styled a diplomat, since he has been flashing his maiden sword in Paris. Is this diplomacy, or is it the outcome of deep-seated obstinacy ? I said that he would be just where he was on Thursday ; but he can never get back to where he was before three o'clock on Thursday. He has put himself in an attitude from which he will never recover as long as he is Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BRODEUR. Another threat.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman may call it a threat or what he will, but that is a plain statement of fact. He has incited his followers to attack me on this ground, that because he is a French Canadian minister I am attacking him and the French Canadian race.

Mr. BUREAU. Will the hon. gentleman permit a question ? Will he inform me on what he bases that statement; that the minister is instructing his French Canadian followers to say that the hon. gentleman is attacking the minister because he is of French Canadian extraction ?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the Solicitor General though he may not have heavy duties in his department, has intelligence enough to follow the course of the minister, and if he has done so, he knows that the minister has made that charge himself against me in this House, and has done it not once or twice merely, but many times.

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not do it.

Mr. FOSTER. I will take the opportunity, before the end of the session, to quote the words of the minister. Another means to which the minister resorts is to impute motives. He does this when he says that we are obstructing and when he verges on the line of argument that he is attacked because of his race and religion. Last night, hon. members from the province of Quebec, members whom I respect, stated—as I am informed ; I did not understand exactly what they said hurridly—that I was attacking this minister because he was a French-Canadian. Why, no matter where the minister came from, no matter what section he represented, he must be subject to criticism. It is very foolish to import these side issues, which are so trival in one sense, though, in another sense, of too much importance to be treated in this way. Then, the minister hides himself behind his officials. He presents the unique spectacle of the head of a department attacking that department. He tells us in effect, that he will have the head of this or that offender. On one occasion he turned to his followers, and, in an excited manner, and in very strong language, he said in effect, that he would make them pay for it. Then there was his diplomatic touch with relation to the historian of the 'Arctic.' He said that this historian was a Liberal-Conservative, and if the Liberal-Conservatives objected to him the government would have his head as well. That kind of thing does not stop criticism, but it does show the minister in a very unenviable light. Let the minister defend his expenditure on proper grounds so far as he can. But to drag in these unworthy side issues is an action to which we have not been accustomed to in ministers heretofore, and is not the credit of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

I think I pretty well disposed of the criticisms levelled against me last night. But there was one word to which I may refer. I took the ground that the language of a vote indicated to what purpose the money was to be put, and said that it was not proper to take $4,000 or $5,000 voted by parliament for ice-breaking steamers and use it to pay the travelling expenses of the minister and his private secretary. I said, in effect, that that was filching from one vote to meet the expenses of a different service, it was stealing from one vote and using the money for a purpose not designed by parliament. The hon. gentleman tried to give the impression that I had said that the minister had stolen the money. There is no use in following criticism of that kind. If the minister likes it and thinks he gets good out of it, let him take what advantage out of it he can.

Now, I propose to take up the matters of this steamer 'Arctic' as this vote seems to be entirely for that steamer for the coming year, and for her forthcoming expedition. And, when I have finished, I will ask the minister to give this committee a somewhat extended and connected account of just what results these explorations and expeditions have gained. I am amazed at the paucity of the information brought down in the minister's report. I have here the reports of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for three years, during which time these expenses have been going on. I intend to show what these reports tell us of the results attained by these expeditions of the steamer 'Arctic.' Here, for instance, is the report of 1905. At page 107 of that report, I find a description of the steamer and the statement that she had returned from the far northern waters in November. One would think that the report would go on to show what had been the result of her expedition. But it is merely stated that instead of remaining for three years in the northern waters, as had been intended, owing to a breakdown in her machinery she has returned to Sorel for repairs and would go north again in the following June. It is also said that a further account will be found in the report of Major Moodie to be published as a supplement to the annual report. Now, that report of Major Moodie, I find in sessional paper No. 28, dated Ottawa, December 30, 1905. It shows that Major Moodie was sent out in charge of a patrol of the Mounted Police, and, of course, his report is confined to that view of the case.

This is a report simply of the mounted police officer Major Moodie, in reference to the details of the police force that he had in his charge, the way in which he placed it, the conditions surrounding it, its duties, and the like of that. What I want to show the committee is that Major Moodie's report has absolutely nothing to do with the 'Arctic' in her expedition into these northern waters or with the main purpose for which she was sent there. She was not bought, provisioned and sent there simply to convey some mounted police. There was another purpose that the government had in view. A half inch extract in the minister's report for 1905 is absolutely all the information we have in reference to this expedition, in so far as the purposes contemplated by the government were concerned, outside of simply conveying the mounted police control to their posts in those northern regions. Now, we come to the year 1906 and we take up the minister's report, anxious to find out what had been done in the two preceding years. The 'Arctic' is named three times in that report. At page 15 we have the bare record of her time of sailing, her time of returning and the statement that the machinery was injured, and that she had to go on the docks at Sorel to be extensively repaired. At page 151 she is mentioned again. Then comes after that the report which is alluded to there. You would think that it would be an exhaustive report giving some information as to what this expedition had done. It is this :

Canadian Government Steamer 'Arctic,' Albert Harbour, Pond's Inlet,
Baffin Land, September 29, 1906.

The Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Sir,—It affords me pleasure to advise you that the 'Arctic' is safe and sound in Albert harbour, Pond's inlet, northern Baffin Land, where we met the sloop 'Albert,' and the whaler 'Eclipse,' by whom we sent this letter.

After our departure from Father point we had a good deal of fortune; we were fortunate in the choice of the route through the middle pack, and we arrived first at Pond's inlet on August 19, 1906. We then proceeded north through Navy Board inlet, and took possession of all the Parry archipelago islands.

There is a very pregnant phrase. What part of the archipelago islands was taken possession of by Captain Bernier? Were these islands British possessions before? They were not created by Captain Bernier. Was there any doubt that they were British territory? What does he mean by taking possession of them? What is the process, what is the result, what does it all mean?

Commencing by Bylot island, Griffiths, Cornwallis, Bathurst, Byam, Martin, Melville, Prince Patrick, Emerald, Eglington, Garrett, Davy, Young, Russell and Lowther islands, on the southern point of which I planted the flag, and called Colonel Gourdeau point.

We have three results of the expedition. There is the Préfontaine bay, Laurier cape and Gourdeau point. These are the three tremendously important results of this expedition to the north.

Mr. W. ROCHE. I am of opinion that the hon. gentleman misses some important basic information. I thought that what he wanted was to go through the process of exhaustion to arrive at some definite point. I think, from the trend of the hon. gentleman's remarks, that he has touched upon the theory as to whether land in that vicinity remains in the same place or not. Along the shores of Melville island, Baffin's island and Franz Josef land there is a theory that the land does not remain in the same place, but that it sinks and rises in proportion to the quantity of ice in these Arctic regions. Therefore, I think he should begin at some positive point and not seek knowledge through the process of exhaustion, but state something definitely and start from that. If the hon. gentleman would start from a certain point of latitude and longitude, he might proceed from that to go through all the islands in this archipelago and endeavour to fix what is British territory and what is purely Arctic territory. Now, on that particular theory I do not want to expand——

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, expand as long as you do not burst up altogether.

Mr. W. ROCHE. That the land around Gourdeau point and Laurier peninsula——

Mr. FOSTER. Cape.

Mr. W. ROCHE—and Franz Josef land sinks and rises annually in proportion to the quantity of ice in these regions, that what may be pointed out and distinguished this year may not be in the same place next year. If the hon. gentleman will confine himself to that theory and decide that scientific point he will convey a flood of information to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend had his own basis starting out. He does not lack for basic information, yet, strange to say, in trying to find a solid point to rest his feet upon in this philosophic excursion of his he came to the conclusion at last that there was no solid land there at all, but that these islands were constantly shifting. Well, then, the basic point upon which he rests himself is a shifting over after all. I am afraid that his foundation is not as basic as he thought it was. But I think he has mooted an idea that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries might take up now to justify further expeditions to the north. I see it a little better than I did. Captain Bernier took possession of the islands. What he did with them, goodness only knows; but he took possession of them, and the hon. member for Halifax says that they will not be there next year, and next year he will have to go back in search of them and take possession again. If, as he says, they change their place of abode every year, there is an absolute reason for a further expedition to capture and take possession of these elusive, floating and shifting islands. Then we will have Captain Bernier with us for ever, or as long as he lives. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has now the basic point upon which he can found his hundred-thousand-dollar-a-year expedition in summer, and the valiant captain can go into these northern waters to chase, at the rate of three miles an hour under favouring conditions with the fast vessel that he has, the shifting, elusive islands and take possession of them. But why does he not moor them and finish the work after he catches them? My hon. friend from Halifax is of a philosophic turn. I think the minister has found that he has a vivid imagination and, if he should not take Mr. Vanasse, I strongly advise the minister that as it is very probable the term of the hon. member for Halifax, which has been lengthened by some of those floating, evasive changes of position in the last four years, in an archipelago which is not quite as cold as that of those northern islands, will be brought to an end, and as his chances of evasion and escape will be limited in the coming elections, to anchor the present member for Halifax safe and sound and send him north with Captain Bernier to work out the philosophic side of the expedition and to discover if there is some means by which, after the gallant captain has captured the islands in the archipelago, they can be moored and chained down so that he will not have to do it every year.

Mr. W. ROCHE. The hon. gentleman is something of a peripatetic philosopher himself. He has had a good many changes of venu in his political career.

Mr. FOSTER. I never found that the peripatetic cult, as it is portrayed in history, is anything to be ashamed of. I think that the philosophers belonging to that guild were a wonderfully good set of philosophers. There are various methods of practising the peripatetic system. Some men practise it in trying to avoid seizure; other men go out to teach their fellow men and in order to meet them they have to travel from place to place. My hon. friend has been particularly fortunate in having a non-basic foundation during the last four or five years and he and his brave and good-natured colleague by his side (Mr. Carney) have had a wonderful series of escapes, but escaped they have by hook or crook.

Mr. CARNEY. Why do you say anything about me? I have not raised any question. Where is the charge that was ever alleged against me? I have always admired the hon. gentleman but I think he should stick to the truth in this House. If he does we will have a litle more respect for him, but if you do not, perhaps we will go after him.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry that my hon. friend is cross because I was recommending to the Minister of Marine——

Mr. CARNEY. He is able to look after himself.

Mr. FOSTER—to take his older and more wicked partner.

Mr. CARNEY. He has always remained in the same place. He has never had to run away. He carried five elections and every time increased his majority. You cannot say the same.

Mr. FOSTER. I am awfully sorry that I have stirred up my hon. friend. This is the first time I have heard a declaration from him in the House and I think I should have the thanks of the committee for having roused my hon. friend. He is always good-natured, I knew he always had it in him and I appear to be the man who discovered his ability in this respect. The journal of the commanding officer is the whole extent of the report which is given in the minister's report of 1906 of the results of this most expensive expedition. Next year, at page 179, we have as an appendix the report of Major

Moodie in which Major Moodie again is reporting in reference to his own peculiar work, that is the posts established by him in that country. Now we come to the year 1907 after the expedition has been made for three years. We were naturally expecting to find some extensive reports in this year. What do we find ? We find a statement at page 13 that the 'Arctic' went out at a certain date, she came back fortunately, at a certain date, and that is the whole of the record of that year. At page 67 we find this :

This vessel left, again, for the northern waters of Canada, in July, 1906, and returned to Quebec about the middle of October, this year; a full report of the work she has performed will be submitted by Captain Bernier, as soon as possible.

May I ask the minister if that report has been submitted ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sorry I was sleeping.

Mr. FOSTER. I must say in all fairness to myself and the House the minister is guilty of very great disrespect in sleeping while his department is being criticised. There again he shows his utter indifference to the feelings of the House. Well, I am a man of goodwill and I will repeat my question. Has the report been submitted ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have already answered the hon. gentleman on that.

Mr. FOSTER. Has it been ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman must remember.

Mr. FOSTER. I will allow the hon. gentleman to get on his feet.

Mr. BRODEUR. Once is sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the answer?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have already answered.

Mr. FOSTER. I demand an answer to the question and I am going to have one.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend says he is going to have it?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman who complains so much of his injured dignity, does not treat the House with respect enough to get on his feet; he mumbles something which, in so far as I can hear it, is a refusal to give an answer and under those circumstances I think I have the right to use something more than common, smooth phrases. I think I have a right to an answer. The hon. gentleman should respect himself if he does not respect others. The gentleman should respect himself if he does not respect the House, and if he has anything to say, he should rise in his seat and say it. You would think he was in a bar-rom. The habitué of a bar-room would not treat himself or his followers with such disrespect.

Mr. BUREAU. Is that in order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the language should not have been used.

Mr. FIELDING. On the point that the minister answers without rising, I think the hon. gentleman is too technical. Many times members ask questions and give answers without rising, but that does not imply any intentional discourtesy. The hon. gentleman has often done that himself.

Mr. FOSTER. That is quite true, when we are having talks backwards and forwards in the committee, but when I ask a formal question, ask it seriously and sit down till I get the reply; I am entitled to that reply in a similar way. I am waiting for an answer from the minister to that question.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have already answered the hon. gentleman that question. I do not know why he asks me again—I suppose for the purpose of keeping me in the House. I have no objection to staying. Perhaps he does it to make me sick.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, that is what the hon. gentleman is trying to do.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is another exhibition of the minister, which I commend to his colleagues, to the House and to the country. I tell my hon. friend that I never asked him that question before, never heard it asked and never heard it answered. I do not know at this moment whether that report has been given or printed or put before the House; I have not seen it. The minister at last ashamed, gets on his feet and intimates that he has already answered the question and does not need to answer it again, and accuses me of a motive in asking it, that motive being first to obstruct and then to make him sick. What a position for a man who has been elevated to the rank of a minister of the Crown. It is almost imputing to me a murderous desire. I assure him that I am entirely guiltless of a desire to rob him of his rest and make him ill and deprive this country of the budding diplomat that he is evolving into. But I want that information, and it will be much less trouble for the hon. gentleman to give it than to refuse it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have said that that question has been put before and that I have answered it. The hon. gentleman has just stated that he never asked me whether there was a report or not. If he takes up 'Hansard' of yesterday he will find it answered at page 4446.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister hand me that ?

Mr. BUREAU. There are some notes.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to see the notes.

Mr. BUREAU. I am surprised.

Mr. FOSTER. That is another wise thing for the Solicitor General of Canada to say. I was reading with reference to the 'Arctic' from the minister's own report, which stated: 'A full report of the work which has been performed will be submitted by Captain Bernier as soon as possible.' I asked the minister if Captain Bernier's report had been received. The minister refused to reply, and by his reference to 'Hansard' implied that I had asked this very question yesterday and that it had been answered. The question I asked yesterday was if Mr. Vanasse had made his historical report, and the answer I got had reference to that. Does the minister admit that that is frank dealing with this House? Now, I want the answer to that question as to whether Captain Bernier did submit a report, and if so, whether it has been brought down or will be brought down?

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say that Captain Bernier and Mr. Vanasse are preparing a report, which is to be submitted to the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Vanasse's report which has been brought down the report which is promised in the minister's report at page 67 when he says: 'A full report of the work which has been performed will be submitted by Captain Bernier as soon as possible.'

Mr. BRODEUR. The report which the hon. gentleman has in his hands is a report of the former expedition.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I repeat my question: Has this report from Captain Bernier, promised at page 67 of the minister's report, been received, and if so, when can we expect it?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have just said that Mr. Vanasse and Captain Bernier are preparing a joint report.

Mr. FOSTER. It will take in this?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, I understand that one reason why that expedition was sent north year after year was to look after and keep under surveillance the waters of the north on behalf of the Customs Department. Has the Minister of Customs published as yet any report from Captain Bernier or other officers as to what has been done with reference to that, if anything ?

Mr. PATERSON. As I understand it, the expedition of the 'Arctic' was to assert our sovereignty over those waters. In my judgment there is no better way of doing that than by requiring those who go there and engage in trade to submit to the fiscal laws of the country. I believe that those in command of the expeditions were clothed with full authority as customs officers, and I am informed that they received toll and tribute as such from both Scotch vessels and American vessels. I think two customs posts were established and something like $1,200 collected. But we do not attach so much value to the receipts as we do to the fact that our supremacy in those northern waters has thus been acknowledged.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister any detailed report in that respect——

Mr. PATERSON. I dare say we have in the department.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be interesting if the minister would get that information.

Mr. PATERSON. I should think it likely that we would have such a report, and, if desired, I will bring it down.

Mr. FOSTER. I would be much obliged if the minister would do that at his convenience. Now, I want to say a few words with reference to the expense of this expedition. As I understand, it was started at the instance of the Minister of the Interior for the purpose of asserting our authority in the northeastern waters. I emphasized that, as I thought every member would. Well, that was one reason of the expedition being sent out. Of course, it is not supposed that this vessel patrols these waters and exacts customs duties. The customs duties are exacted by the permanent posts of the mounted police who act as customs officers under the authority given them. They are the constant representatives of sovereignty in these waters. But there was a purpose, one without which that expedition would not have been undertaken. As I understand it, the idea, at first, was not to buy a vessel. To buy a vessel of this kind is very costly and, after the special use for which she has been purchased has been served, she will bring very little if you sell her, and she will be a constant bill of expense if you keep her. The vote for this expedition was put through without much discussion for national reasons. An understanding was reached between the leader of the opposition and his friends on the one side and the government on the other that such an expenditure was necessary. The understanding was on the basis of the hiring of a vessel. I am sure that the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) will substantiate that. But the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of that time had another idea. He bought a vessel, a vessel of doubtful parentage, an unwieldly vessel and one of little use for any other purpose than cruising through ice floes. He bought her in Germany, I think, and paid for her $70,000. As she was not designed for more than a moderate rate of speed, it took thirty-six days to get her across, and when she got into port $10,000 was added to the price. Then, it was found that extensive repairs were necessary. Altogether, when she was ready to receive supplies, she had cost the government $93,-112. In the arrangement made between the two sides of the House, it was understood that expenses would be kept down to a not unreasonable figure. But, Sir, when this vessel came to be supplied, extravagance burst out in a most inexplicable way. We have had that shown over and over again, and the country knows the facts. Never in the history of any department was seen such reckless, uncontrollable extravagance as was shown in the furnishing, equipping and provisioning of this steamer. In 1903-4, as I have said, the purchase, repairs, supplies, wages and miscellaneous ran up to $93,112.42. In 1904-5, just after the vessel had been fully repaired, there were repairs again to the extent of $31,055. Then, supplies to the amount of $112,050.50 were put inside of her. Wages were paid to the extent of $16,-928 and there were miscellaneous expenditures of $1,678, making the cost in 1904-5 $161,713.11. In 1905-6, there appears to have been a balance of purchase money—which I never could understand, but which may be explainable—$5,000. With repairs of $4,456, supplies, wages and miscellaneous for further amounts, the total expenditure that year was $38,314. In 1906-7, there were repairs again of $4,748.26, and other expenses making a total of $32,697.70. In 1907-8, the expenditure has amounted to $22,622, and, of course, she is not yet fitted out for the expedition for the current year. Altogether, $348,459.70 has been expended on this vessel in the four and a half years during which we have been in possession of her. The question naturally arises: What has been done as compensation for that expense? Is that expense properly balanced by the work of placing these patrols in position and flagging these islands—for, of course, there has been no discovery of new islands, and this vessel has not gone further north than other vessels have gone and are able to go. I think there is only one answer to that.

For a time, it was indefinite what the government proposed to do with this vessel. For a time, it was proposed that Captain Bernier should be sent on this vessel on a search for the north pole. To find the north pole is a laudable ambition, no doubt. For hundreds of years adventurous spirits have had the ambition to sit on the north or south pole. But for Canada to contemplate even for a moment the fitting out of a vessel to catch the north pole—which may be evasive and shifting as these islands are—to think of Canada, with her requirements for the development of her resources, going into a scheme of that kind, especially when there are rich private individuals who undertake these expenditures for the love of the discovery, would be going further than this parliament has sanctioned or will sanction. But in these days of using funds for other than the purposes specified by parliament, what security have we that the Minister of Marine, confabbing with Captain Bernier and perhaps with the hon. senior member for Halifax on an expedition to the north pole next year, and filch from some other vote, as the minister has done in other cases, a sufficient amount to cover the extraordinary expense.

Now, I would be glad if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would give us some connected narrative, if he can, of what has really been accomplished by this vessel. He is asking for $50,000 to send her out again, and the committee is asked to exercise its judgment as to whether this money should be spent. How can it exercise such judgment unless it knows what the results of previous expeditions have been. I should await with great interest, as I am sure the committee will, the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) with reference to this matter.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the policy of the government in patrolling these northern waters is pretty well known. There seems to be some difference of opinion concerning that policy, however. The hon. member (Mr. Foster) seems to doubt whether it would be advisable for Canada to exercise jurisdiction——

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. minister will allow me to interrupt him, I would like to say that I never expressed such dissent. On the contrary, when the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) was speaking a little while ago, I assented to what he said in every particular. Now the minister (Mr. Brodeur) has commenced his explanations by another misrepresentation of facts.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman recognize that the government should assert its jurisdiction over these northern waters.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister could have been glad of that for any of these years.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, but how could we assert our jurisdiction that Canada had some rights over these islands without sending an expedition up there to assert our jurisdiction? Americans were bringing goods in there to suply the natives, and was it not advisable for Canada to take means to assert our jurisdiction over that country and to compel foreigners to pay duties on their goods? Now my hon. friend says that the government did not adopt the proper means. How could we go there except in ships ? Could we go there on snowshoes ? I see no other way of asserting our authority over those sections of the country except by sending a naval expedition. If I remember aright, when my hon. friend was Minister of Marine and Fisheries he also equipped an expedition into those regions, and why should this government be blamed for following his precedent ? The hon. gentleman stated that we had sent a very expensive expedition. But I can show that in the expedition which he organized himself he paid more for provisions than we paid for provisions for the Arctic. He was less economical than the present government. Now this question presented itself in the beginning of 1905, how we should proceed to survey those northern waters. A previous expedition had been sent up there under the command of Mr. Low, who had recommended the purchase of a boat. The hon. gentleman has given the figures of expenses during the last three years, until the 2nd of December, 1907. Well, the total amount expended during those three years, including the purchase of a boat, was $348,459. Now we have the report from Mr. Low written at the beginning of 1905, from which I read this :

> Owing to the impossibility of purchasing the 'Discovery' or any other boat which would be suitable for the purpose of an Arctic cruiser, a ship has to be built, and such a ship can only be built at Dundee, Scotland. . . . At least a year will be required to build this ship. During the season of 1905, while the new ship is being built, another may be chartered to carry on the necessary work.

Now what is the estimate made by Mr. Low? For one expedition during a year in those northern regions, Mr. Low stated it would cost $336,500 But during the last three years, under the good administration of this government, we have spent only $348,459. No better boat could be found than the boat we purchased. Now the hon. gentleman, in order to make a personal attack upon myself, says that I have stolen out of the appropriation for ice-breaking a sum of money which I used for the trip to Great Britain. Well, Mr. Chairman, I had to go to Great Britain and to Europe for different purposes, one of which was the ice-breaking service. This question had been before parliament for many years, and I decided that it was necessary to visit the different places in Europe where these ice-breakers were built. The hon. gentleman however says that it was almost a crime on my part to take out of that vote the money for my travelling expenses. I suppose no one could believe that my hon. friend himself would be guilty of such a thing. I think he stated yesterday that the vote for contingencies was the only vote out of which it was proper to take money for travelling expenses. Well, I have recently consulted the Public Accounts, and I find that in 1886-7 the hon. gentleman spent $465 for travelling expenses ; in 1887-8, $1,175 ; in 1888-9, $300 ; in 1889-90, $400, in 1890-91, $1,566; in 1891-2, $1,198; in 1892-3, $1,429 ; in 1893-4, $525 ; in 1894-5, $1,531. In one year this economical gentleman spent over $1,500 in travelling expenses. Now what were my expenses out of contingencies as a Minister of the Crown ? In 1904-5, the first year in which I was minister, I spent $200 in six months. In 1905-6, I spent $691, whereas this economical gentleman had spent in some years $1,175 and $1,566. In 1906-7, my expenses were $554. Now my hon. friend says it is a crime to steal from the ice-breaking vote the travelling expenses of the minister made in that connection.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman might allow me to put in a caveat. He has gone on record as saying that I said it was a crime.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the hon. gentleman said it was a steal. I will leave out the word crime, if he objects to that. Well, the hon. gentleman has been guilty of the same thing, he has also been stealing from a vote from which he had no right to take money. I find that in 1890-91 he took $954 as travelling expenses out of a vote for commercial agencies. Let him consult that vote for commercial agencies and he will find that what I am saying is correct. Now there is no more provision made in that vote for travelling expenses than there was in the vote for ice-breaking. Why, I thought it was impossible for any man, according to my hon. friend to spend more than $10 a day. Here is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) who spent $954.08 in one month. He went to Washington, was away from the 4th to the 9th of April, just five days, and he spent $105.97. Perhaps he had a pass to go there; he must have had a pass over one part of the road. This is very extravagant. The hon. gentleman, in 1891-2, 'stole' once more from the vote for commercial agencies $692.58. In 1992-3 he charged $954.33 for travelling expenses to London, but that is not the only case, when he was Minister of Finance, in which some one was guilty of 'stealing' from one vote and applying the money to another purpose. The Auditor General's Report of that year shows that Sir John Thompson took money out of 'unforeseen expenses' for a trip. The vote for 'unforeseen expenses' is not designed for travelling expenses. It is a vote to provide for paying gratuities. My hon. friend has stated that there is only one place out of which we should take travelling expenses and that is out of the vote for 'contingencies.'

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, the total expenditure upon the 'Arctic' has been given as $348,459. That is a very large amount of money to be expended on a boat from which this country has, as far as parliament knows, derived no benefit. There is no report, at any rate, from any of the officers who are sent on that ship, as far as parliament is concerned we know absolutely nothing with respect to what was done in the interest of the people of Canada. The amount that I have stated is the expenditure to the 31st March, 1907, but if the hon. minister will look at the Auditor General's Report, page P—34, he will find that only a small amount was paid to each of the officers and men of the crew of that ship. I believe that a report of the expedition has been prepared by the men who were engaged in the trip, but without that report we are not justified in passing this estimate of $50,000. What evidence has this House that the balances due when the vessel arrived in Quebec in October last have been paid ? We have not that information, and it is the duty of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to provide it.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Is the hon. gentleman not aware that the minister placed those papers in the possession of the opposition and that they have them now?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. No, that is not correct.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understood the minister to state that they were handed to the hon. member for North Toronto, although not officially laid on the table.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I asked the hon. member for North Toronto this morning if he had the papers and he said he had not.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Was the hon. gentleman not in the House when the papers were brought in and handed to the hon. member for North Toronto?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. They were not a complete file and they were returned to the minister. We have a right to have those papers tabled and made a part of the record of this House so that we can go to the table and see them and make copies of them. But the minister refuses to place the return before the members of this parliament. There was spent altogether on that vessel last year up to the 31st March, 1907, something like $33,900, and there must have been spent since she came back from the northern waters probably as much more, and we have a right to all the information in the possession of the minister in regard to that expenditure. The Auditor General deals with bills as they are sent in. He would naturally assume that bills sent over from any department of the government of Canada would be correct. But from my knowledge of the present Auditor General, an honest, upright man, he would not allow any bill to be paid unless he was absolutely sure that it was correct. But did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries believe that the accounts of his own department were right? No. He must have assumed that there was something wrong, for we find that he sent to the city of New York for a large number of high-priced accountants to look into the accounts of his department. He made no bargain with them, even as to their board, while in Ottawa, but seems to have decided to pay them whatever they might ask. Did they find any mistakes either in the accounts of the 'Arctic' or in any other branch of the department's expenditure? We have a right to know that. But the minister has not given us the report. He says it is ready. Then why is it not tabled? Is the minister dumb that he will not answer why he refuses to table that report? He stated here this morning that he would table the report as soon as the Speaker was in the chair.

Mr. BUREAU. That is the reason.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I am ready to cease speaking and allow the Speaker to take the chair. But why did not the minister table the report before he asked us to vote this item ?

Mr. BUREAU. It was not ready.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. But it is ready now, and I will take my seat and give him an opportunity to table the report if he wishes to do so. He still persists in keeping the members of this House all Saturday until twelve o'clock at night merely because of his own stubbornness.

Mr. BUREAU. It is your own fault.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Why, we have declared over and over again that we are ready to have the Speaker take the chair and give the minister an opportunity to place these documents on the table of the House. But the hon. minister says: Pass the item and I will place this report on the table.

Mr. BUREAU. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. A. A. McLean) is making a statement that is incorrect and unfair to the minister. The minister made no such statement as: Pass the item and I will lay the report on the table. The minister has explained why he did not publish the report. It was because the Speaker was not in the chair. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. A. McLean) knows why the Speaker is not in the chair—it is because of the obstruction of the hon. gentleman and his friends.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. The statement I made is correct. Not only did the minister say what I have stated, but the same was said by other hon. gentleman on that side. It was stated in my own hearing.

Mr. BUREAU. No, no.

Mr. BARR. Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bureau) has no right to dispute the statement of an hon. gentleman as to what he heard.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. The hon. member (Mr. Bureau) has not been in the House, so that may excuse him.

Mr. BUREAU. I have been here all the time the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been here.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I think the hon. gentleman was not here when the minister made that statement. Now, what benefit will accrue to Canada from these trips to the north? He wrote the name of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries on an iceberg up there, he also wrote the name of Mr. Préfontaine upon another cake. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche) well says that these may be submerged some day. I do not see what good there is in writing these names upon cakes of ice that are liable to be submerged; you might as well write them upon the shifting sand. However, they might as well be engaged in writing their names upon cakes of ice as in doing anything else. We have asked the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for a return of what these gentlemen have done. Although the first expedition came back two or three years ago, the report of Mr. Vanasse, the historian of this trip, has never yet been tabled. I have in my desk the reports of the Marine Department for all the years since that vessel returned from her first trip, but the report of Mr. Vanasse is not found in any of them. To-day the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is pressed about this matter, he is asked by the member for North Toronto for a return in reference to many matters not included in the report of Professor Vanasse, and the minister sends over to the member for North Toronto a report written in French by Professor Vanasse, which has never been published by the government of Canada. Now, the minister states that the trip of the 'Arctic' was necessary to enable him to assert the jurisdiction of Canada in these northern waters. They sent to Sweden and bought a ship which they called the 'Arctic.' But before the 'Arctic' was ever thought of, men had gone from Ottawa overland to those northern regions. They took possession of the land there on behalf of Canada; they went up there overland and they came back overland. Therefore I do not see any necessity for sending a naval expedition up there on the ground that it was necessary to assert our jurisdiction over that territory.

Mr. A. M. BEAUPARLANT (St. Hyacinthe). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend who has just sat down read more than he spoke upon the question which we are now discussing. It was also the case with my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who for two hours this morning quoted profusely from reports and blue-books. It is already apparent that Sunday will be much welcomed by the opposition in order to be released from the very regrettable position it assumed a couple of days ago. When one of the stalwarts of the opposition—at least from the view point of loquacity—the hon. member for North Toronto is showing such symptoms of exhaustion, it is evident that our friends opposite not only have run short of arguments, but of their most fantastic utterances as well. When devoid of arguments, abuse is the weapon. This reminds me of a case in which the attorney for the defence, finding himself destitute of the necessary requisites to pile up all the disagreeable utterances that he wished upon his colleague for the prosecution, took them ready-made from the very paper which was being sued and read them to the court.

Mr. PAQUET (L'Islet). (Translation.) Would my hon. friend allow me to ask him what case he is now referring to?

Mr. BEAUPARLANT. (Translation.) My hon. friend being a layman, I must do him the favour of acquainting him with the fact that in so far as jurisprudence is concerned, that is on points of law that have been decided upon, it is only a case which has been reported that can be cited. For the time being, it is a striking analogy with the system put forward by the opposition that I have just quoted and not a point of law. The right of free speech before parliament and before the legislatures is too strongly intrenched among the principles of the Liberal party to clash with my convictions when exercised properly; but such right naturally calls for a corresponding responsibility, and whoever exercises it should do it in a judicious manner or otherwise the responsibility rests upon him.

On what point have the two parties come to a variance in this matter? Certain documents were called for by the hon. member for North Toronto from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries when this item was brought up before the committee on Thursday night. As a matter of daily occurrence in the House the minister answered that he hadn't all the documents to make the return complete and that his officers had not posted him on all the facts, and that he could not at that moment give all the information on that item. And the minister then promised to lay them later on on the table, adding that he was not trying to evade inquiry in these items but rather that he wished they would be dealt with one by one afterwards. Such is the position as I find it clearly stated in the minister's own words which I find at page 4142 of the unrevised 'Hansard':

Mr. BRODEUR. These are several resolutions each composed of several items, and if the House would give me the opportunity of explaining these items, I would be willing to leave one item of each resolution for further discussion, so that we might make some progress.

Who was it that opposed such a reasonable proposition? It was the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) himself who being intimately acquainted with the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries should have readily acceded to his request. And in what language did he raise his opposition? I find the following words in his remarks at page 4143: 'Je préférérais sieger ici sans desempare, jusqu'à demain aprèsè midi, plutot que decéwer sur ce principe.' This is the starting point of the strange proceedings which we have been witnessing in this House for nearly 48 hours now. The minister had stated his reasons which according to me were absolutely legitimate and for which at all events he is responsible, and responsibility that he does not try to shirk, the matter being of common practice before the Housè. The opposition it seems to me should have accepted those reasons, and therefore from that very moment, the responsibility rests upon itself for the discussion that has been going on since Thursday night. I believe it is commonsense to state that whoever rejects a reasonable proposition assumes the responsibility of the consequences that that refusal involves. The courts of justice which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and other members of the opposition follow never refuse to postpone a case once or twice and oftener still, so long as good reasons are adduced. And it is not always the party that is in the wrong that asks for such an adjournment.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation.) The hon. member seems to have made a special study of the grievances which he complains about. I believe he is thoroughly informed on the constitutional history of the country. I would like to hear him relate what took place before the union. He might very well tell us what history says about Papineau's refusal to vote the estimates when representing Lower Canada.

Mr. BEAUPARLANT. (Translation.) I take my hon. friend's interruption in good part, and I must take it as it is given out with some gratefulness, since he answered his own question in mentioning the circumstances of that occurrence, but for other reasons. While asking for a piece of information, he has himself communicated some information to us. And I don't believe it is necessary to go so far back to settle the present situation. The debate as it is spreads out already in a much exaggerated manner. If my hon. friend will allow me, I will cite him a much more recent authority, and that is his own opinion. Had I under my hands yesterday's 'Hansard.' I could read to him his own statement on the opportunity of his friends' attitude on this question.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation.) I will observe to my hon. friend that I put a question to him, not to criticize his remarks but to seek information. I admit that he is not obliged to give it to me. I understand also that the discussion has assumed a large range, the extent of which I protested against. He lives in a community where these questions are always thoroughly discussed and examined, St. Hyacinthe having large schools and a well posted population.

Mr. BEAUPARLANT. (Translation.) I will satisfy my hon. friend's demand which is very pertinent indeed and in answer I will tell him that in fact I read somewhat closely Mr. Turcotte's 'Canada under the Union,' which deals with that question. I will add also that I live in a very much enlightened community on questions of that character, St. Hyacinthe having a well-read population. It has numerous and important schools, and it is a great advantage for me to live among people whose society is for me a source of knowledge. Without going into any details, I may say to my hon. friend from L'Islet that I have never seen in any author in history or in constitutional law concerning the political situation in Canada that any parliament or assembly had been paralyzed in its normal functions for forty-eight hours, although such good reasons as were adduced by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries had been given.

When the hon. member for L'Islet interrupted me I was going to say that the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Owen) had also noticed the awkwardness of the present situation; but he did not in any direct way lay the blame for it on one party more than on the other, owing, I suppose to the fact that his political friends are at fault. I did not rise to defend the Minister of Marine, who does not need my assistance nor anybody else's, and I state here that a moment ago, when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) had monopolized the time of the House for two hours, that it was with a great deal of satisfaction—which did not surprise me, however—that I saw the minister get up and, after 48 hours without sleep, handle the hon. gentleman the way he did and put under his eyes the record of his expenses when he was a minister, expenses that were far larger than those of the Minister of Marine which are being discussed so savagely. I notice that the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has taken, at least to my knowledge, a very small part in this discussion. His attitude seems to me to be a repudiation of his colleague's standing on this question.

I will close by giving my friends opposite my opinion on the result which their conduct will have. This obstruction that they do without any reason is, they must find out very useless and this is why. To the point of parliamentary proceeding, they should know that the government could not and will not give in; that we are the majority and that we are ready to face them as long as it will be their pleasure to keep the same attitude. Therefore, in this regard their efforts are useless.

In the second place, if the opposition thinks by its abuse of the hon. Minister of Marine to hurt him in the public opinion, it has made a big blunder, because the victim of such vituperation rises rather than falls in the public estimation. This is the result which the opposition will attain. As it is diametrically opposed to what it had in view, it follows that all this hubbel is absolutely useless. It is aware of that fact and consequently they cannot be acting seriously.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. It seems to me a pity that we should be here at the middle of the day without a leader of the House.

Mr. GRAHAM. Where is the hon. gentleman's leader?

Mr. W. WRIGHT. We do not need a leader just now. Who is to blame for this prolonged discussion? The government think they can dictate to the House as to what business shall or shall not be done. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has provoked more criticism than any other department of the government; and notwithstanding this fact the government, in the absence of necessary information, insist upon our proceeding with the estimates of this department in preference to taking up any other business. The opposition have been accused of trying to dictate to the government. It is not our intention to try to dictate to the government, but the Department of Marine and Fisheries has come in for a good deal of criticism in the past, and it would have been the part of wisdom if the government had withdrawn the estimates of that department until the papers were brought down. If the report of the trip of the 'Arctic' has not been laid on the table the fault lies with the minister, because I feel sure that it has been in his possession for the last six months. We also asked for a certain return which is of importance to us in the discussion of these estimates. It was brought down in such an incomplete condition as to be of no practical use and handed over to a member of the opposition. What report have we of Capt. Bernier's trip last year? What islands did he take possession of? What amount of money did he collect from whalers and sealers? I do not think we should try to convey the idea that these northern lands do not belong to us. If, any one is to go up there to command such an expedition I do not know of any man who is better fitted to do it than is Capt. Bernier. I believe that the government have deliberately arranged this matter with the view of compelling the opposition to take the course that they have taken. I think that they have an object, and I was at a loss to understand what the intention behind it was until the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) let it slip out last night that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was being made a martyr of. The intention apparently is that they may be able to go down to a certain province and say that we are attacking him on account of his nationality. I disclaim any such intention. It is a matter of utter indifference to me as to what his nationality is. We will take up another department which is not under the control of a man of his nationality and criticize it as severely. We find that there is another boat which has been under construction at Sorel for two or three years, and which was intended for this particular purpose. I think we should know for what purpose that boat is being constructed and when she will be ready to go into commission. The name of this boat is the 'Rouville,' and we have spent $85,000 on her up to date. We are entitled to know whether the 'Arctic' is to be duplicated, or what work this new boat is to undertake. Is this boat intended for the work of patrolling these northern waters?

Mr. BRODEUR. The only boat that the department intends to send is the 'Arctic.'

Mr. W. WRIGHT. What is the 'Rouville' to do?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Rouville' is under the control of the Northwest Mounted Police, but last year she was employed for the purposes of pilotage.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I presume that the Northwest Mounted Police will use her in conjunction with the other boat patrolling these northern waters. Is that the intention?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Northwest Mounted Police have two stations established in Hudson bay, and the patrolling that we did last year was in the more northern regions.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. When this new boat is completed we will have two boats doing what one was doing previously. I would like to know what taking possession in the name of Canada means. As near as I can understand from Capt. Bernier it means that he plants a post on some of these barren lands up there and then covers it with something and that is supposed to be taking possession in the name of the Canadian government. I think we are fairly entitled to the latest report of Capt. Bernier in regard to the trip of last year, and we ought also to have some statement from the government as to what lands he purposes visiting this year and as to their policy generally in regard to that northern country and some facts and figures in regard to its resources. I do not think we are asking too much in asking for this information before this vote is passed. But it seems to me that the government have an underlying plan to hold back a certain portion of this information in order to induce the opposition to raise objections which the government may construe into an attack on the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for use in the elections. With regard to the supplies purchased for the 'Arctic,' from personal knowledge of the prices of many of these things I can say that there have been overcharges for a great many of them. It has been asserted, moreover, with what measure of truth I cannot say, that these Arctic expeditions have afforded merchants in Montreal and Quebec a favourable opportunity to dispose of unsaleable goods. I think we are entitled to know how many of these supplies are for the Esquimaux while the expedition is among them, and what the amount of money expended for this purpose will be; but this information is withheld. Then, we should be informed how much more we shall have to pay for the expedition of 1907 in addition to the partial statement of expenditures contained in the Auditor General's Report. When we inquire for these things, we are treated either with silence or with an explanation that is no explanation. When the returns are ordered by the House, they ought to be laid on the table within a reasonable time; but when the minister brings a pile of papers and puts them on his desk to show the opposition that they are completed, and does not lay them on the table. I think we must come to the conclusion that he does not intend that we shall have these returns in time to intelligently discuss the estimates. With regard to the suggestion which has been made that we should pass one item of these estimates and let the rest stand, the fact that the minister has been accustomed to take money voted for a specific purpose and apply it to some other purpose, may be taken as evidence that he would do the same thing again if we allowed any vote to be passed without having the information we are asking for. It is of no particular importance to the government whether we pass one item or another to-day. It would equally suit their convenience to have the estimates of another department passed, and to allow the estimates of the Marine and Fisheries Department to stand for a few days until we get all the returns. But the minister will not permit this because his pride or his vanity has been touched; so that we are being detained here all this time simply because of the pride of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. If that is the case, the country can easily come to the conclusion whether it is wise to continue this debate or not. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no great interest in it one way or another. If we are compelled to sit here till Saturday night, I would rather do business than discuss an item on which we have not sufficient information. I believe there are other ministers ready to proceed with their estimates while this minister is getting his returns completed. What prevents us doing this? Simply the pride of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who says, Somebody has said something that displeases me, and therefore I will not go on. That is a most unjustifiable position for any minister to take, and it would be a graceful act on the part of the Prime Minister to have the consideration of these estimates postponed until all the papers required shall be laid on the table. It would not take a great deal of yielding on his part to allow the Speaker to take the chair for five minutes while the hon. gentleman lays the report on the table, We can then resume the discussion of his estimates. There is no disposition on the part of members of the opposition to prolong the debate. Give us the information to which we are entitled and we will then go on with the business of the House. The minister is not dealing fairly with the members of the House in deciding that because one member—I think that is what he said—used language displeasing to him, he will not give us proper facilities for carrying on our work in this House.

Mr. CLEMENTS. So far as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) and his staff personally are concerned, I have no fault to find with them. I have been treated courteously by these gentlemen. But after looking over the return moved for by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) covering the bills of the expert accountant, K. Falconer, I can frankly say that any member who is careful of the interests of his constituency cannot fail to utter a protest against expenditures of this kind. As to this long discussion and its political effects, I believe the opposition will get credit throughout the Dominion for what they have done. The accounts of the 'Arctic' and the 'Montcalm' have been discussed by me in my own riding, and I believe that the electors, regardless of politics, regard these matters very seriously. However strong a supporter of the present government a man may be, he can hardly wish to cast his vote in favour of an administration that will make such expenditures as these. Now, I came into the House under somewhat peculiar conditions. I had the privilege which many hon. members have not had. I was given my nomination with the understanding that I was to support what I thought fair and just in the House regardless of my political leanings. I have never yet cast a vote in this House in favour of the government's view on any motion. But I believe I can justify every vote I have cast. Mr. Chairman, if in my explanations I wander a little from the subject under discussion, I trust I may be pardoned. I desire to say—and possibly I am the only individual who would feel free to make such a statement—that had I been here when the measure for supplying seed grain in the new provinces was before the House, I would have opposed the view taken by both the government and the opposition and would have voted against spending a dollar in this manner. Personally, I regard this seed wheat fund as one of the greatest corruption funds ever known in the Dominion. And, when you advertise to the world that this Dominion of Canada must make a public appropriation to supply seed for the farmers of those provinces, I think that is one of the worst advertisements you could give the country. I have had some experience with farming in the Northwest, and I believe there is ample seed grain there for the use of the farmers. And the farmers would have had no trouble in getting it. Had this government wanted to do something for the farmers, they could have done much better by bringing in legislation avowedly to assist them——

Mr. TALBOT. I would like to ask, Mr. Chairman, what connection the remarks the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) is now making have with the subject before the chair.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I was just coming to the point. And I told the Chairman, in beginning, that I wanted to make a few explanations first.

Mr. TALBOT. I call your attention to the matter, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is no doubt about the rule. The moment the point is raised, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) must speak to the point before the chair.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I shall endeavour to confine my remarks then, to the item under discussion. Now, for the sake of putting it on 'Hansard,' I wish to quote some of the bills of this expert accountant, Mr. Falconer. I may explain that, like many others in this House, I am first of all a Canadian. I believe in this government employing Canadians. Only the other day I protested against the Department of Marine and Fisheries even buying launches in the United States. I believe these should be bought in Canada and by public tender. In the same way, I believe there are enough expert accountants in this Dominion to do the work needed by this government without going to other countries for them. Now, I find that on November 30, 1906, this expert accountant brought down a bill of $9,445.24, with a special item for ship channel of $917.22. December 31st, there was an account of $6,093.73; January, 31, 1907, $6,481.34 and ship channel $367.22 ; February 28, $5,008.93 ; March 30, $2,921.67—a total of $31,235.35. Looking over this return, I find that a great many of these bills are not certified, and those that are certified are certified by Mr. Falconer himself, which seems to me a very strange thing. I think that of all the speakers we have heard on this subject, the one whom I would most heartily congratulate is my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. W. Jackson), who, I think, put the case very ably indeed. I hope his remarks will be taken into serious consideration by the government. Now, here is the itemized account for November :

Now, I understand that an auditor regards seven hours as constituting a day. We find: Services, 256 days, $7,638; per diem allowance, 83 days at $5, $415; for subsistence, 124½ days, at $4, $498; and 55 days at $3, $165, making a total of $1,078. Now, transportation is down for $599 ; stenographers, $79 ; telegrams, $42 ; stationery, $7.35. That, I suppose, was certified to by the deputy minister. Now, here is an account which does not seem to be certified to at all. W. B. Richards, 73½ hours at $75 per day, $905; this is money which he received on his monthly account. J. M. Gunn, 11½ hours at $75, $123; W. F. Russell, 91 hours at $50 a day, $794. Geo. E. Fawcett, 47½ hours at $50 a day, $396. K. Falconer, 338½ hours at $40 a day, $2,201. L. R. Acton, 184 hours at $30 a day, $913; F. H. Leland, 36 hours at $30 a day, $186; Geo. Pare, 118 hours at $25 a day, $421; M. L. Cooley, 181¼ hours at $25, $657 ; J. A. Marvin, 128 hours at $20, $371; S. Kettridge, 163 hours at $15, $353; J. J. Moorman, 49½ hours at $15, $109; A. B. Murray, 69 hours, 4 hours of travelling, at $15 a day, $152; L. D. Come, 14 hours, 9 hours travelling, $15 a day, $39.50. M. V. Finucane, one-half hour at $3.50, 25 cents; E. McGibney, 8½ hours at $3.50, $4.13; E. C. Moulton, 9½ hours at $3.50, $4.75; J. Meikle, 2 hours at $3.50, $1; S. E. Burton, 4 hours at $3.50, $2. That is just a sample of the accounts which I want to see published. Now, I think that when the electors of this country size up a bill such as this they will conclude that the government were not justified in paying it. I cannot help thinking that if the whole service in the Marine Department were paid in proportion, the men would get a great deal bigger salaries than they are getting now. I may point out that in my riding there is a lighthouse keeper who only gets $450 for a whole year, and he makes nothing to live on outside his salary. Now, coming to a few more of these accounts, here is a charge for subsistence. W. B. Richards, 6 days at $5, $30; W. F. Russell, 12 days at $5, $60; G. E. Fawcett, 9 days at $5, $45; J. Falconer, 56 days at $5, $280; L. R. Acton, 40 days at $4, $160; F. H. Leland, 9 days at $4, $36; George Pare, 19 days at $4, $76; M. L. Cooley, 33 days at $4, $132; H. A. Marvin, 23½ days at $4, $94; S. Kettridge, 30 days at $3. $90; A. D. Moorman, 9 days at $3, $27; J. J. Murray, 12 days at $3, $36; L. Cote, 4 days at $3, $12. Now, I want to appeal to the House in all fairness whether such bills as these ought to have been passed by the Marine Department. I am sure the people will not justify them. Now, here is another charge for transportation: W. B. Richards $36.50; Kenneth Falconer, $56.55; W. F. Russell, $27.80; F. X. Leland, $31.25; Geo. Pare, $6.85; S. Kettridge, $14.75; J. J. Moorman, $13.90; H. H. Petze, $13.90; H. Hipwell, $13.90; F. B. Whittet, $20.55. Now, here is a detailed statement of transportation for week ending January 5: Railway fare, Montreal, to Ottawa, $4; week ending January 12, one-half fare return Ottawa to Montreal, $1.75; seat 50 cents; one-half return and seat, Montreal to Ottawa, $2.25; Ottawa to Montreal, $3.50; seat, 50 cents; week ending January 19, railway fare Montreal to Ottawa, $4; week ending January 26, Ottawa to Montreal, $4; Montreal to Ottawa, $4; Ottawa to Montreal, $3.43; week ending January 31, Montreal to Ottawa, $4. Now, what were they doing travelling so much, and why should the electors of this country be asked to pay that exorbitant sum for transportation for these gentlemen in addition to everything else they were getting from the government?

I hope that the minister will assent to the wishes of the opposition and allow the committee to rise instead of keeping us here until midnight. I had occasion a short time ago to refer to the course of action which had been pursued by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) with particular reference to my own constituency, and I heard it stated around the House afterwards that hon. gentlemen opposite would make it hot for me in my constituency when election time comes on. The Minister of Agriculture said that he would be glad to go down to my riding. I invite him to come down at any time. We will take care of him there and I am quite sure that he will not make a vote for the policy which he attempted to carry out. If he does go down and attempts to explain the item which is at present under discussion, instead of securing support there will be 4,000 or 5,000 of a majority of the votes of the electors of West Kent polled against him. They are not hidebound; they consider these matters upon their merits and I am perfectly satisfied to take my chance with the electors of West Kent when the time comes for us again to submit ourselves to them. I again appeal to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to agree that the committee shall rise and report progress.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from West Kent has made several appeals to the Minister of Marine to answer the pertinent questions that he asked. Instead of the minister remaining in his place and answering these questions he has left the chamber. Therefore I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion negatived.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Mr. Chairman, I venture to think that when we calmly consider the position that this House has occupied for the last forty-eight hours we will hardly find it a subject of much congratulation for ourselves as members and I do not believe it will be a source of great pride to this country. I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) has left his place, for I intend, in the few observations which I shall make to the committee, to address myself particularly to him. I desire to do so in his presence for this reason, that, taking the view that I do of this case, which, to my mind, is a very simple case after all, a tempest in a teapot, the one man who is to blame for the whole difficulty is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I suppose there are some principles of constitutional government on which we will all agree. I suppose that every hon. member of the House will agree that the great function of parliament is the granting of supplies, and that the peculiar duty of the opposition is to rigorously scrutinize the disposition made of the people's money, because, while theoretically it is our duty alike on each side of the House, we know that practically it must be the opposition which will undertake the duty of looking after the expenditure of public money and that it will be so long as human nature is what it is. I think it will be borne out by the constitutional law in saying that there are at least two grounds upon which we can object to this item. The opposition would have the right to say that the government had lost the confidence of the people and that therefore we will not place a single dollar in its hands. Then the opposition might well say that owing to his general misconduct, or to his conduct in regard to a particular matter, we lay down the principle that no more money shall be granted to the minister until he either clears his skirts of the charges made against him or until he has done all he can to bring down the information that the opposition is demanding. The opposition is called upon to vote the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of patrolling our northern waters. I think it must be admitted by the government side as well as the opposition that the Minister of Marine and Fishies has been asked for certain information and that he has not brought it down. Surely when members of the opposition can appeal to such authority as I have in my hand, when we have the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) saying that:

> The opposition want certain information, they are entitled to it and must get it.

No person on the other side of the House can blame members of the opposition if they insist on having this information before a single item is granted. It is true that it was afterwards suggested that some other item might be passed in connection with this department, but I think that what I have already said is an answer to that. The opposition is objecting to one single dollar being put in the hands of the minister until he has purged himself of contempt in refusing to bring down information which the right hon. First Minister says he should bring down. We would be stultifying ourselves; we would be unworthy of the position we occupy, we would have no justification for refusing to pass this item if we passed another item giving money to the same minister. But we are quite willing at the same time, as has been offered over and over again, to grant any money that may be required by any other department.

I am sorry that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not in his place so that I could appeal to him as a lawyer, recognizing the constitutional right of the opposition to object to a single dollar being voted until we are provided with the information which the Prime Minister says we are entitled to. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is the man who is to blame for all that has happened in the last two days. The department over which he presides had, prior to his incumbency, become so demoralized, that the right hon. leader of the House stated that he had brought in the present minister in order that he might bring order and honesty into it; but what have been the fruits of the hon. gentleman's administration? Can any hon. gentleman suggest any improvement that the hon. minister has made since he took charge of that department? It may be asked why the opposition are not willing to vote money to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Without saying anything unkind, I might refer to the discussion which took place in this House some two years ago in regard to the supplies which had been purchased for the steamer 'Arctic.' In 'Hansard' of 1906, on page after page, from page 3208 to page 3227, you will find that the minister stated to this House repeatedly that the enormous quantity of supplies purchased had been purchased on the responsibility of Captain Bernier, to whom the government had assigned the duty of making out the list. He said the government took the responsibility of those purchases, because the department had carried out the wishes of Captain Bernier. We had an investigation of the matter in the Public Accounts Committee, where evidence was given under oath, and the requisition of Captain Bernier was produced; and all I can say is that if the statement made repeatedly on the floor of this House by the minister was true, then a terrible amount of perjury and forgery was committed on that occasion, because there was an absolute contradiction between the statement of the minister in this House and the evidence given under oath before the committee. If that took place only two years ago, are members of the opposition to be blamed to-day when the minister asks for a vote of $50,000 for another Arctic expedition, if we decline to let the item go through until he gives us complete information as to how he proposes to dispose of the money? The department being in the deplorable state which the right hon. First Minister admitted two years ago, one might reasonably have expected some improvement under the present minister; but we have yet to learn that he has called up for sentence any official of his department for any of the wrong-doing that has cost this country so much money. And now one can hardly imagine anything more childish or more calculated to bring this House into public contempt than to have the minister folding his arms and saying: Rather than consent to bring down the returns which have been ordered by this House, I will keep the members here forty-eight hours or more just to soothe my ruffled pride. This can be done only at the physical and mental cost of members on both sides of the House. Surely it would be better that the minister should recognize that the minority have some rights and also some powers, one of which is the power to prevent the voting of the supplies. I appeal to the minister, as he is now present, whether it would not be better to lay aside his pride for a moment, and let us proceed with the public business.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM. Until a short time ago, I felt that I should not take part in this debate. My sympathies perhaps were not as strong as some others.' But when I saw the recent vote, my eyes were opened and I saw where the real obstruction was. I had felt rather inclined to think that, perhaps, our own friends were partly to blame in this matter. But when I found the government benches declare, by such a majority as we had a few minutes ago that they were prepared to do the blocking, and oppose the rising of the committee, I felt it my duty to protest. And I rise for the purpose of protesting against the waste of public money and the time of members of this House. Let me read the item under discussion, for we have wandered so far from it that many hon. members seem to have lost sight of what we are talking about—

To provide for the maintenance of vessels employed in patrolling the waters in the northern portion of Canada, also for establishing and maintaining police and customs ports on the mainland or islands as may be deemed necessary from time to time.

Now, if I understand the case, the members of the opposition are asking to have vouchers produced to show what has become of the public money. We met here in November. The government should have been prepared to meet the House, and should have had their vouchers ready. We are now on the eve of the month of March, and practically, we have done nothing. We have been spending two or three days over one item, and I presume that the government intends that in a few weeks from now we shall rush through fifteen or sixteen millions some evening, as we did last year. But that is not business. I understand that the difficulty arises over a question of the board of the experts brought here to regulate the books of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It appears that about $47,000 was spent to get these books in proper order. They must have been in a fearful condition before that. And they must be in a fearful condition still, when it takes the minister three days to find vouchers for board paid to people in this city. I presume the people who boarded these men are still in the city and within half a mile of where we stand. Why cannot the minister send out, and, inside of half an hour, get from these parties a proper statement of how much these men paid for board ? An hon. member in this House declares that he boarded with three of these people and that they did not pay more than $1 a day for their board. But we are asked to allow $3, $4 and $5 a day and that without vouchers shown. I wonder if the whole department is being run in this way. I notice one item in the Auditor General's Report with regard to these experts,—page P—78 :

Travel of expert and staff: New York to Ottawa, Montreal to Ottawa, &c., 18 men, $1,533.14.

That is an average of about $85 apiece. Now, I understand that the Pullman fare from Ottawa to New York—and I presume it is the same from New York to Ottawa—is $22. So we see this is exactly in the same proportion as the board—let these people pay $22 and charge $85 ; let them pay $1 a day for their board and charge $4 or $5. Is it any wonder that the members on this side of the House find fault or that the people of the country are finding fault ? The obstruction of hon. members on the other side will be resented in the country. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) thinks he is a dictator, an absolute monarch. We read in the Scriptures, I Kings xviii ; 17.18 about the great King Ahab :

' And it came to pass, when Ahab saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, art thou he that troubleth Israel? And he answered, I have not troubled Israel; but thou and thy father's house, because ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord and thou hast followed Baalam.'

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I rise to a point of order. We have sat here for forty-eight hours, and I do not think it relevant to quote Scripture to obstruct the business of this House.

Mr. TAYLOR. The government needs it very badly.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I insist upon my point of order.

Mr. FIELDING. I venture to submit that the question is not a question of order, but a question of propriety—the propriety of Scripture being quoted by the hon. gentleman, and the right of these gentlemen to monopolize Scripture.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM. I thought I was quite in order in giving an example of a dictatorial monarch ruling over an abject people. And he asks us if we have troubled Israel, and our answer is that we have not troubled Israel, but ' thou and thy father's house have done so.'

Mr. TALBOT. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Chisholm) be good enough to tell us where the comparison comes in ?

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM. We are told we have no rights in this House.

Mr. TALBOT. Then you are the abject people.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM. And we are being accused wrongfully of obstruction. We are not the obstructors but hon. gentlemen opposite are. I am sorry to think that the Scriptures are being ruled out of the House. Has it come to this in Canada, and by the government ?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Thos. Chisholm) is not right. I did not support the point of order.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister objected.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I thought the point was not well taken But I said that I thought it unseemly for the hon. member to quote Scripture in the cause of the opposition. But then we are told that a certain person can quote Scripture to serve his own ends.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM. I presume the difficulty is that we have not had prayers for two or three days. Are prayers to be ruled out altogether ?

Mr. FIELDING. That may account for a good deal of it.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM. I think the Minister of Finance understands the situation. Let me point out that the obstruction is not in this House alone, but in the Public Accounts Committee, and by hon. gentlemen opposite. Of course, they say they are not guilty, but whoever heard of a prisoner at the bar confessing his guilt if he thinks he can face out the evidence ? But the fact is that these hon. gentlemen control the evidence and they refuse to give us the vouchers to which we are entitled. Why, in every fraternal society original vouchers are produced for the audit. The same is true of every township and county council. Surely, in this the highest body in the land we must demand vouchers also. Now, I wish to refer to another point. Here is the 'Eastern Chronicle' of Friday, February 28:

Letter from Sir Hibbert Tupper.
Vancouver, British Columbia,
February 14, 1908.

My dear editor,—Fair play is a jewel. Your issue of February 7 has an article headed 'comparisons.' In this, you say:

'Then again, Messrs. Tupper and Thompson represented Canada on the Behring Sea Commission in Paris in 1892-3. Each of these gentlemen was accompanied by a private secretary and they also had with them a messenger. These economical Conservatives on this occasion incurred a bill of $22,355.04, and it is worthy of remark that Tupper was also the agent of the British government, and in addition to the sum of $6,816.54, including the above figures for himself and private secretary, the British government paid all his expenses as such agent.'

A short time ago, I was annoyed to read that a minister of the Crown at Ottawa, who was being 'heckled' over his own bill of expenses, had gone out of his way to make a misleading and incorrect statement on which your remarks were based. I at once wrote as follows:

Dear Sir,—I have read with surprise your answer on page 1799, unrevised 'Hansard,' for January 23, 1908. The note respecting my expenses as agent is entirely incorrect. I was not 'also agent.' I was agent for Her Majesty only in this matter, and I did not act as Minister of Marine with regard to the $4,428.95. Canada, by agreement, paid the expenses of Her Majesty's agent. England paid me nothing for expenses or otherwise. England paid her own officers directly through the English accountant. None of it came through me. As a matter of fact I lost my sessional indemnity through my office as agent, and received no compensation in money either from the English or Canadian government, nor did I ask it.

On whose authority, therefore, I ask you, was the misleading statement made?

I have as yet received no reply to my letter, but observe that the misrepresentation is doing the work it was doubtless intended to do.

Yours faithfully,
CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Mr. TAYLOR. We expect a reply from the minister who made that statement. There has been no rake-off by the Conservative party; if there has been a rake-off, it has been by members of the government.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to apply the words 'rake-off' to any member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Galliher). I think while possibly you may apply that term generally, when you direct it to any members of the House, it is not in order.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from your ruling to the Speaker.

His Honour the Speaker takes the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The ruling of the Chair is that it is unparliamentary to apply the term 'rake-off' to any particular member of the House. And from the ruling of the Chair an appeal is made to the Speaker. I rule that the ruling of the Chair should be confirmed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. We appeal to the House.

House divided on the question of confirming the ruling of the Speaker.

NAYS:

Messieur

Lewis.—1.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie) has not voted.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has not voted.

Mr. BEATTIE. I am paired with the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dyment).

Mr. TAYLOR. I have a standing pair with the chief whip of the government who is not in the House at present.

Mr. FIELDING. How would my hon. friend have voted?

Mr. SPEAKER. I declare the ruling of the chair sustained.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought the government supporters wanted exercise.

And the House having again gone into committee.

Mr. FOSTER. By the kindness of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries I have been handed the report of the historian. I have in my hands an undiscovered and unknown treasure. It is embalmed in a language with which I am not sufficiently well acquainted in the script to read fluently. It is written en francais and whilst I am very anxious to know what is in it and very anxious that the House shall know I shall have to ask the intervention of the assistant clerk's kindly voice to act in my stead and read this for the benefit of the House. I know of no man more capable of doing that than the assistant clerk and I have very great pleasure in handing this over to him with the request that he will unfold it in English to us so that we may know the contents of the report of the historian. I see no other way of getting at the kernel in the nut unless the assistant clerk cracks the shell.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think that document has been brought before the House in the regular way, but I would be very glad to bring down a copy. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was so anxious to see the report of the historian that he would not wait for a copy being made and I thought I would show him the original in order to let him see that the document existed notwithstanding the fact that I had assured him that there was such a document. Since we have been on this question perhaps I may call the attention of the hon. gentleman to a little incident that happened last night. He stated that I had 'stolen' from an appropriation a certain amount of money and that I had applied this money to another purpose. As a matter of fact the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well the circumstances. There was an appropriation for an ice-breaker. I was going to go abroad also with the view of looking into the question of the ice-breaker and an amount of money was taken out of the ice-breaker vote to pay my expenses. My hon. friend stated that it was a bad thing to do, that it was a 'steal'; that was the language that he used in regard to me. He said I had 'stolen' money from that appropriation and applied it to another purpose. I called his attention this morning to the fact that perhaps he was guilty of the same thing some years ago. The hon. gentleman, in 1890-91 got $954.08, not out of civil government contingencies, not out of the vote for which travelling expenses should generally be taken, but he got that money from the commercial agencies vote. The commercial agencies vote does not admit of money being taken out of it for travelling expenses any more than the vote for ice-breakers. The question was brought up in the House at the time, by my hon. friend who is now the Minister of Customs, and I desire to draw the attention of the hon. member for North Toronto to the fact. I will quote to him what he then said and perhaps he will find, after I have quoted these remarks, that the expression that I had 'stolen' is not a very proper one. In 'Hansard' of the 18th March, 1892, I find the following:

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). At page B—91, I see that $1,400 of unforeseen expenses are charged to commercial agencies. What was the expenditure for the trip to Jamaica?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; the West India islands trip, and also the Washington trip. The expenses of the trip to Washington this year are also charged to commercial agencies.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is not the intention of that vote, is it?

Mr. FOSTER. The intention of the vote was never thoroughly carried out, though it is at present. But as we had not a surplus in the strictly proper appropriation, I thought it just as well to take the money out of that vote.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that while the expenses of the Finance Minister to Washington are charged to commercial agencies, those of Sir Charles Tupper are charged to miscellaneous charges. How is that?

Mr. FOSTER. It really makes very little difference, I suppose, to what they are charged as they all come out of the same pocket.

I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw the word 'stolen'.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we should abolish 'Hansard'.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think we have yet reached the stage in this House where it can be successfully argued that two wrongs make a right. If it was wrong in the one it was wrong in the other, but because a case is cited to the House of a similar thing having been done before it does not make it any better or any worse. If it was wrong then it is wrong now. I hold that it was.

Mr. FIELDING. Would 'Hansard' show that when attention was called to it by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) then said it was wrong?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to hide behind the issue, of course. I am going to meet it exactly as it is. I find in the first place, from a very cursory examination of the pages of 'Hansard,' that there were very sharp criticis at that time and that these critics, if my memory does not leave me in this matter, belonged to the Liberal party and were considered to be good representative Liberals and to be embodying and reporting Liberal doctrine. I notice that one of them is Mr. Paterson, of Brant. If I am not wrong this Mr. Paterson, of Brant, who, in 1892, so strongly denounced that method of taking away from one vote and devoting it to another purpose, is at present the Minister of Customs in this cabinet and is the colleague of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Now, when so strong an exponent of Liberal doctrine in the matter of Liberal appropriations in 1892 sits alongside the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in 1907 and allows the Minister of Marine to take thousands of dollars out of a vote for an entirely different purpose and use that towards a purpose for which it was not intended, I am led to the conclusion that either the former strong critic of that kind of transmigration from one vote to another has lost the edge and vigour of his criticism, or that he has a colleague alongside of him who is a little too strong-headed to be swayed by that old Liberal doctrine. So I think it is clear that the Minister of Customs has gone back on the principles of 1892 and allows in 1907 his colleague to do what he declared to be absolutely wrong at that time. I stand in a different position. In 1892, under the stress of circumstances, having no surplus, I was obliged for the time being to take a small amount of money out of one vote and apply it to an allied purpose. I declare now that this is not an absolutely proper method of treating appropriations. I stand absolutely on that ground. I am much older now than I was then. The act, although it was not a criminal one, might have been done in a very different way, and I am quite prepared to say that in the years that have passed between 1892 and this I have taken a step forward, and I regret very much to say that the Minister of Customs has taken a step backward. But I am not going to allow the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to get me to defend, even in my own action of ten or fifteen years ago, what I think now to be wrong and what I have condemned in him. I hope I am wiser than I was then, and now I am anxious for my hon. friend the Minister of Customs to give us the reason for his backsliding in this matter.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not think that I have done any backsliding in the matter I never expressed any opinion on the subject. I have not been guilty, as far as I know in the House, of having been caught in the most flagrant manner doing a certain thing and then getting up and using such strong language as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has in characterizing what he says was a perfectly legitimate operation when he did it himself. I have not seen 'Hansard,' but I think as I heard the hon. gentleman read it that what was done by me on that occasion was, when the matter came up, to mention the fact and ask the hon. gentleman if it was correct to do that. That is all. I did not say: You have stolen it. I simply asked the question whether it was right or not, and when he made the frank confession and said that it was perfectly right and perfectly proper because it all came out of the same pocket and that there was no harm in it I did not pursue the subject. I think the hon. gentleman ought to rise in the House and apologize in the most ample manner for the language which he has used. I should feel that I was called on to apologize if I had so characterized an hon. member of this House for having done what I had done myself. I would consider that I was entitled to lose in a large measure the respect of the House if I were to rise and denounce another member for a transaction of that kind as if he had stolen money. There is no one among us who does not commit errors, but these things can be straightened out among hon. gentlemen. If the hon. gentleman would say, I did the same thing myself, and I am sorry that I used that word and desire to withdraw it, he could no doubt rehabilitate himself in the estimation of hon. members, but until he does that, I hold that he stands in an equivocal position.

Mr. FOSTER. When I was going out before the lunch hour the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was reading a list of travelling expenses incurred by myself during my incumbency of office. I listened attentively to him, and while I have not the figures before me, so far as I remember them, the hon. minister attempted to make them appear as very extravagant. I think that the list, when conned, will just show the reverse. The expenditures made by myself for travelling expenses while I was in the cabinet ran along generally from $400 to $600 a year, in some cases running up to $1,500 a year; I think there were probably two years in which this was the case. There were two cases in which the minister criticised my diversion of moneys voted for one purpose to a different purpose. One of these was the vote for commercial agencies. I do not look on that as a diversion at all, as I was deputed to visit the West India Islands to establish commercial agencies there. I took the trip, taking my private secretary with me. We went to New York, took our passage, paid for our passage, and visited every one of the West India Islands in a tour which consumed some two months, going down as far as Trinidad, holding conferences with the governments and the boards of trade in almost every one of those islands and returning to Ottawa. The expenses for that trip were something like $950. Previous to that time we had not commercial agencies. It was a theory of mine to establish them, and it was put in practice when I was a minister. I established several agencies during that trip. Therefore, I have no hesitation in standing by that use of the vote. The other list of expenses read by the minister were for the purposes of the trip to Washington, for which it appears that a certain amount was taken from the vote for commercial agencies.

Mr. BRODEUR. And unforeseen expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. The vote for unforeseen expenses can be properly used in that way. For my part, I would make no strong criticism against the using of that vote for a mission in which a minister was suddenly called away on the business of the country. That was the reason we went to Washington, and the money, I understand, was taken partly from the vote for unforeseen expenses and the balance from the vote for commercial agencies. Whether it was proper to take any of the vote for commercial agencies for that purpose is a debatable question. The best way to provide for travelling expenses is out of the vote for contingencies. If, however, during the course of the year an unexpected trip is made which cannot be provided for out of contingencies, then I think the vote for unforeseen expenses might be used if there is any; if not, some other means might be found.

Mr. PATERSON. You did not think so at that time.

Mr. FOSTER. At that time I suppose I defended the vote against the criticism of my hon. friend.

Mr. BRODEUR. If my hon. friend will read 'Hansard,' he will find that he said that it did not make any difference out of what vote it came, because all the money came out of the same pocket.

Mr. FOSTER. The vote was:

Department of Finance and Treasury Board —contingencies, $9,000.

This is what was said:

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that last year the very large amount of $5,400 was spent in travelling expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; the expenses last year were heavy, as shown on page B—90. I will mention the chief items. There are travelling expenses of the deputy minister who went home to England in connection with the raising of the temporary loan. There are also the travelling expenses of the assistant inspector and inspector of savings banks, who have to travel through all parts of the Dominion. The expenses of the superintendent of insurance are also included, though they are not an ultimate charge on the consolidated fund, being paid by the companies themselves. Then, there are the travelling expenses of the minister himself, which this year are very large.

I was Minister of Finance at that time.

Mr. DAVIES (Prince Edward Island). The hon. gentleman does not anticipate another trip to the West Indies?

Mr. FOSTER. No. I do not think the expenses are extravagant when you consider the number of miles travelled and the length of time occupied.

The fact of the matter is that after the explanation there was no criticism of the expenses to the West India Islands, as there was not any reasonable ground for it, and they appeared to have been taken out of the contingencies of my own department, the Department of Finance. Then Mr. Paterson says:

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). At page B—91, I see that $1,400 of unforseen expenses are charged to commercial agencies.

It would seem from that, that that sum was treated as an unforeseen expense, and the charge was ticketed as for commercial agencies. So that there evidently was not a vote for commercial agencies. I had a different opinion when my hon. friend read it.

Mr. BRODEUR. There was a vote for commercial agencies, and the money was taken out of that vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I would take it that the vote was in the first place for unforeseen expenses, and a portion of that was set aside for commercial agencies. Whether there was an independent vote for commercial agencies against which the expenses of the Washington trip were charged I do not know. Then Mr. Paterson asked:

What was the expenditure for the trip to Jamaica?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, the West India Islands trip and also the Washington trip. The expenses of the trip to Washington this year are also chargeable to commercial agencies.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is not the intention of that vote, is it?

Mr. FOSTER. The intention of the vote was never thoroughly carried out, though it is at present. But as we had not a surplus in the strictly proper appropriation, I thought it just as well to take the money out of that vote.

Whether 'that vote' means the vote for unforeseen expenses or the vote for commercial agencies, I do not know, and I do not propose either to condemn myself or to exculpate anybody else until I look into it and see what the votes were. When I do that, I will put before the House the exact state of affairs.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is more than that.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I will read more :

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that while the expenses of the Finance Minister to Washington are charged to commercial agencies, those of Sir Charles Tupper are charged to miscellaneous charges.

If they are charged to miscellaneous charges, I do not see that that is an improper charge. The debate continues:

Mr. FOSTER. It really makes very little difference what they are charged, as they all come out of the same pocket.

Now, there is not quite enough to go upon for the minister if he desires to put me in the same box with himself.

Mr. BRODEUR. But I think the time has come when my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) should withdraw the expression of 'steal' which he has applied to my action.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me quote a little further:

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course, it is public money, and in that respect it does not make any difference. But the vote for commercial agencies was intended to facilitate our foreign trade.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) thought at that time that it should have come out of the proper vote, and I think he was right.

Mr. FOSTER (reading): These items are perfectly correct then?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That was not the object of the vote. The object was to establish new lines of trade, and the Finance Minister should not lose sight of that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is very true.

Now, I have cleared that up, so far as I can to show how that vote stood. This is what I stated last night—page 4246 of 'Hansard':

The minister came down to the House, and I dare say he explained to the House that he proposed to carry on an investigation in his department as to the best methods of accounting, asked the House for a vote for that purpose, and was voted $25,000. Then the minister was on fair ground. He spent the $25,000, and then, instead of coming to the House for a supplementary vote, he deliberately took more than $25,000 out of a vote for an absolutely distinct purpose——

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend (Mr Foster) is making a mistake. The discussion in which he charged me with having stolen a certain sum of money from one appropriation to be used for another purpose was with regard to my travelling expenses, and not with regard to the accounts of the experts.

Mr. FOSTER. I read this as I find it:

——took more than $25,000 out of a vote for an absolutely distinct purpose, the ship channel vote, to implement the special vote of $25,000. I ask any minister of the Crown whether he recommends that as the policy to be pursued. Such a policy strikes at the very root of parliamentary appropriations. The minister had no right to steal from another vote in order to implement an extravagant administration of the idea embodied in his first vote.

This is as strong an expression as I used. The minister attempted last night, and again to-day, to imply that I had accused him of stealing the money. But that is entirely foreign to my statement. But I am frank to say that I might have used a word which would have been less offensive than the word 'steal.' I might have used 'transfer.' But the meaning I had was exactly the same meaning if I had used the word 'transfer' from one vote and used the money for a purpose distinctly not provided. If the minister objects to it, I will take it back frankly and fully. Looking at it, now that it is in print, it does appear to be a little too strong. If I were to go over it again, after cool moments, I would say 'transfer' instead of 'steal.' But my hon. friend knows that I did not use the word in the offensive sense of taking the money for his own uses out of a vote, but of taking a sum of money directed to one vote and applying it to another—appropriating it wrongly. I am willing to stand by my statement, but to offer an apology for a too strong word, though applied in the right sense of the case. Now, I think I have made the case clear by the explanation I have given.

Mr. DEVLIN. This is my fourth session in this House, and I have never seen the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in such a position as that in which he has been placed before us this afternoon. We members from the province of Quebec are charged with trying to raise racial prejudice in our province because we come to the support of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) in the case before the House. We take that position because we know that the minister is too honest a man and his honesty is too well known throughout the country for such suggestions to be made against him. It was extremely painful for us on this side to hear such expressions as were used yesterday—accusing the minister of having 'stolen' money from one appropriation for the purposes of another. I congratulate the hon. member for North Toronto on the frank statement he has made that, in a cooler moment, he would have used more appropriately the word 'transferred.' I would like to see the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) in the same spirit, withdraw the expressions he used with regard to the hon. minister.

Mr. SPROULE. I said the management of the department was rotten.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman said that certain furniture had disappeared from the Speaker's apartments. Will he not say that he made that statement in the heat of debate?

Mr. SPROULE. I stated that parties were employed by the department whose board was charged at $5 a day when they only paid $1 a day, and we had no vouchers. I showed that this was in line with the purchase made by Merwin and Brooks where they got profits of 250 per cent. I said that these cases proved that the management of the department was rotten. I think that was the most offensive word that I used, if any was offensive. As to the furniture for the Speaker's apartments —I do not remember using the word 'furniture,'—but I think I said 'supplies.' I said that I was credibly informed that certain articles had disappeared, and asked whether they had been given away as souvenirs or what had become of them. I did not say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) had given them away. I feel something like the Ethiopian speaker—a celebrated orator, like my hon. friend from Wright (Mr. Devlin). His oratory usually won for him great applause. But on one occasion he appeared before his audience with a strangely significant patch on his face. He said, 'It is only right that I should make an explanation to this intelligent audience how I appear in this condition. As I generally speak where I am known, my reputation assures me of a favourable reception and great applause in addition boquets are usually showered until my platform is usually strewn with boquets like a boquet garden.

Mr. DEVLIN. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPROULE. I am going to take back a statement if the hon. gentleman will allow me.

Mr. DEVLIN. I think the time of the House is too precious to be spent in listening to stories.

Mr. SPROULE. The orator proceeded: Last night I spoke where I was not known. I aroused great enthusiasm, so that the people went out to buy bouquets. But the bouquet man was not to be found, so they purchased other things, including some eggs, and proceeded to throw them around promiscuously, one of which, unfortunately, struck me where you see this patch. And I have a two-dollar bill in my pocket that says that the hen that laid that egg was not healthy. I say that the department that 'laid these eggs' is not healthy.

Mr. DEVLIN. That is a very good story, but very badly told. Now, to come back to the member for North Toronto. When he, in order to prevent money being voted for necessary purposes, is obliged to come into the House and charge the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with theft——

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order. I have not, in the sense conveyed by the words of the hon. gentleman, charged the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or any other gentleman in this House with theft. I object to that term, and I ask that it be withdrawn.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is that the statement of an hon. member must be accepted.

Mr. DEVLIN. I bow to the ruling of the chair, and I beg to refer to 'Hansard,' page 4246, where I find these words used by the member for North Toronto:

> I ask any minister of the Crown whether he recommends that as a policy to be pursued. Such a policy strikes at the very root of parliamentary appropriations. The minister had no right to steal from another vote in order to implement an extravagant administration of the idea embodied in his first vote.

I also quote from 'Hansard' at page 4123:

> More than that, according to the information we have—and all the information has not yet been brought down—the minister himself is in the habit of drawing large sums and keeping them in his own pocket for months and using them for his own purposes, and when called to book by the Audit Department, making a refund.

Now, I call the attention of the member for North Toronto to the fact that he distinctly charges the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with stealing.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to that. I am going to follow this hon. gentleman or any other who adverts upon that language in the sense he has done. I have told the House to-day what I meant by that statement. If the hon. gentleman will quote all my words instead of only a part, I will not object, but by the way he quotes my language he makes it appear that I have charged the minister with personal theft. I object to that manner of reading my remarks. I ask the ruling of the chair with reference to that and will every time that this statement is made.

Mr. BRODEUR. In order to make every thing clear I suppose the hon. gentleman will have no objection to withdraw the expressions he used concerning me in the quotation that has been read?

Mr. FOSTER. I have made a frank statement to the minister and I told him, as he well knows, that the word was too strong, and that in my cooler moments instead of using that word I would use the word 'transfer.' That is as far as I can go.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend charges me with having taken some money from the public chest and used that money for months for my own purposes, leading the public to believe that I used the money for my own purposes when in point of fact I used it for public purposes. I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw that also.

Mr. FOSTER. That came up again, and again I said that that expression as it stood was a little too strong, and that all I meant to say was that the minister took a certain amount of money, much more I think than he had intended to expend and that months afterwards he refunded that money. I said that during that time it remained somewhere, either in his bank account or in his pocket. That is what I meant by saying for personal purposes.

Mr. DEVLIN. Do I understand then that the hon. member for North Toronto withdraws the expressions used in his speeches during this debate charging misappropriation of funds by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries? If he does not, then I am forced to go on. The hon. member for North Toronto seems to feel very keenly the way his words have been understood. He does not like it to appear that he used the word 'stealing,' nor the word 'theft.' I would ask the hon. member for North Toronto to consult some of the legal gentlemen sitting near him and get their definition of the word 'theft,' and whether the word is not implied in the expressions he has used with regard to the action of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in taking money from a vote from which he had no right to take it and putting it into his pocket.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. I ask for your ruling whether, after an hon. gentleman has explained the sense in which he used the phrase and declares that it was not intended to mean personal theft, and in that sense has withdrawn the phrase, if it is still in order for an hon. gentleman to attempt to establish the very thing the hon. member for North Toronto has denied?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Here is what Bourinot says on the subject:

> Whatever a member says in explanation—whether relating to the words or the meaning of his speech—is to be taken as true and not afterwards called in question. The words which he states himself to have used, are to be considered as the words actually spoken; and the sense in which he says they were uttered, as the sense in which they are to be taken in the debate. If a member disavows the use of words attributed to him, and objected to, the matter must end.

That is my ruling.

Mr. DEVLIN. I accept your ruling, and I have nothing further to add, except to congratulate the member for North Toronto for having so generously withdrawn all charges against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) said something a little while ago that prompts me to take a little part in this discussion. I understand that the hon. gentleman said that the criticism that is being made here is directed against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries because he is a French Canadian and comes from the province of Quebec.

Mr. DEVLIN. At no time in this House have I said that the charges made against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries were made against him because he comes from the province of Quebec. What I did say was that it would be cowardly on the part of hon. members coming from Quebec if we would see one of our colleagues attacked as the minister has been in this House without at least having the courage to stand up in his defence.

Mr. BERGERON. I heard my hon. friend mention the fact that it was insulting to Quebec. It will be found in 'Hansard' when 'Hansard' is printed. That is not a fair way of discussing this matter.

Mr. DEVLIN. I do not wish it to be put in 'Hansard' when I did not use such language.

Mr. BERGERON. I am obliged to take the word of my hon. friend, but I am sure that 'Hansard' will show that those are the words that he used.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman is obliged to accept the word of the hon. member for Wright. It is not a question of 'Hansard.'

Mr. BERGERON. I do, but when 'Hansard' comes out to-morrow I am sure that I will see that I am right. There is no question that there are grave suspicions about the Department of Marine and Fisheries, whether that department be administered by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries or by some one else. We know that about $50,000 has been expended for the purpose of introducing a new system of accounting in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The country will be astonished to learn that this department, which has been organized since confederation, is in such a state that it costs $50,000 to put the accounts in proper shape. I need not mention some of the details which I have heard, nor need I repeat the statement that money has been paid for expenses which have never been incurred, that men have been paid $4 a day for their board when they only spent $1. Vouchers which were to be put before the House have not been produced, and that is the cause of the delay in passing this item.

Mr. BRODEUR. This firm have presented claims for a large amount of money, but I have refused to pay that sum of money in view of the fact that they have not produced proper vouchers.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course, I take the answer of my hon. friend, but there is one thing he did not deny, and that is that the arrangements between my hon. friend and Falconer were verbal arrangements made on the street, I understand.

Mr. BRODEUR. Where did my hon friend hear that statement?

Mr. BERGERON. I heard it in the House, and it was not denied.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, nobody takes that statement seriously.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend said that it was made like any other arrangement you might make with a notary or a lawyer or a doctor. If it is true that no other arrangement was made with Falconer, it will take a long time for members sitting on this side of the House to grant the moneys which are denied to the department, because that shows a great deal of carelessness on the part of my hon. friend. What has been the result of this accounting by Mr. Falconer? Notwithstanding the fact that these men have been employed to provide a new system of accounting in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, are the books of the department not kept to-day in the same way as they were before? Last night the minister made some insinuations to the effect that some one was not satisfied. Did he mean that some one in the department was not satisfied, and that some one in the department had prompted this criticism? There has been no change there, and I would like to know from my hon. friend if there has been any difference in the method of keeping the books of the department?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, there has been.

Mr. BERGERON. Well then, I would be very glad to hear my hon. friend explain it in a moment. These are some of the reasons which have forced hon. members on this side of the House to criticise so severely the passing of the hon. gentleman's estimates. I know it is tiresome, but he used to be on this side of the House, and we all remember——

Mr. BRODEUR. I can stand it; I have not slept more than two hours in two days and two nights, but I can stand it.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that my hon. friend will not plead sickness; I know that he is a fighter; but I also remember—and I have reason to remember it, because I was then in the chair as Deputy Speaker—that he criticised us very severely for hours from this side of the House. It is quite legitimate for the opposition to criticise severely the expenditures of that department. I am not blaming my hon. friend alone. Of course, he has the constitutional responsibility of having succeeded other ministers of the department. In 1896 the fisheries branch of the department cost $427,251, while in 1906 that branch cost $968,702, an increase of 127 per cent in ten years.

Mr. BRODEUR. What about the revenue now?

Mr. BERGERON. That is another part of the question.

Mr. BRODEUR. What is it?

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend can treat that part of the question later on. I am calling the attention of the committee to one part of the question. Lighthouse and coast service in 1896 cost $466,658; last year, $2,530,308, or an increase of 443 per cent. Take ocean and river service; in 1896 it cost $181,452; last year, $1,013,083, or an increase of 458 per cent. Altogether the work of the department cost in 1896 $1,074,761, and in 1906 $3,437,932, or an increase of 1028 per cent. For about four hours last night we had under discussion the expedition of the 'Arctic,' and I think that a great many people will agree with me in expressing the belief that that expedition has been useless compared with the amount of money that it has cost.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose the hon. gentleman will be fair enough to admit that since 1896 there have been transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries the St. Lawrence ship channel and the hydrographic survey, which in themselves are costing more than $1,500,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What my hon. friend said is perfectly true. My hon. friend would like to convey the idea that that immense increase of over 1028 per cent is due to the transfer of these services. But let me tell him how much the Department of Public Works has cost the country, although this work has been transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

In 1896 the cost of the Department of Public Works was $1,299,769. Since that time a portion of the work of the Public Works Department has been transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries; but notwithstanding that, the cost of the Department of Public Works last year was $7,484,716, or an increase of 476 per cent over the cost of that department under the previous administration. I would be very glad if my hon. friend would explain in detail the reason of that enormous increase. The hon. gentleman does not want to hear about the 'Arctic' expedition. It was said in a confidential way to a member of the opposition that it would cost about $10,000, and we are to-day up against an expenditure of half a million dollars for that business. According to the revelations which have come out, under oath, at the Public Accounts Committee, this is a useless and reckless expenditure, showing the people of Canada that they cannot be too inquisitive when the Department of Marine and Fisheries is asking this House to vote more money. Although my hon. friend is not responsible for this, it has been proved before the Public Accounts Committee that middlemen have made as much as 187 per cent profit on supplies which they have sold to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Are we not justified in being inquisitive before we grant any money to that department ? I am sorry for my hon. friend, because we are of the same blood. He accuses the hon. member for North Toronto of trying to injure his health, of wishing to make him sick. There is no such idea in the mind of the hon. member for North Toronto or in the mind of any other man on this side of the House. We are doing a duty, and it is a painful duty; it is no pleasure to any man to sit here for fifty or sixty hours. If my hon. friend laid on the table every possible letter, account and voucher required to enlighten the House when he puts his estimates before us, they would all have been passed long ago. There is no use of thinking that one side of the House can bulldose the other side. This is a serious matter; it is not a matter of hard-headedness; it is a matter of duty. Unless the leaders of the two sides can come to an understanding, which could be done without reflecting on the honour of any one, we shall separate to-night at twelve o'clock, and commence again on Tuesday afternoon. I may say that certain papers, after having been demanded for the last two days, were put on the desk of my hon. friend from North Toronto, and they were in French. I have always been strict in asking that every document laid before the House should be printed in both languages. While I have demanded that on behalf of the French minority, it is equally important in the interests of the English majority, that all these documents should be in English, as a good many of the hon. gentlemen here cannot read French. The hon. minister should know that he cannot carry his estimates unless he puts before the House all the papers required to discuss those estimates in an intelligent way. I call upon my hon. friend to grant what is asked—to lay before the House all the accounts, vouchers and papers required; and if he has not the papers relating to the item before the committee, let that stand, and let him take an item that is not contentious.

Mr. FIELDING. We offered that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, another department.

Mr. BERGERON. Anything that will bring the matter to a conclusion.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend made an offer which is fair and reasonable. His suggestion is that we should take up some items which are not contentious and let this stand. I suggested many hours ago that we take any two or three items of a non-contentious character in the minister's department, and after passing those, close the sitting. That is a good suggestion of my hon. friend, and we will be glad to accept it.

Mr. BENNETT. Last night the whole defence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for this extraordinary expenditure for expert accountants was based upon the statement that there were certain places where articles were manufactured for the department, and that it was necessary to have the services of these accountants in establishing a proper system of book-keeping in order to ascertain the cost of these articles. Now, what happened in Ontario two years ago in connection with the accounts of the Central prison ? Mr. Hanna, on coming into office, found a condition of things that was assuming serious proportions. He at once secured the services of a first-class accountant in the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, in the United States; and in the public accounts of Ontario for the year 1907 will be found at page 15 this item :

Thorne, L. E. C., services as accountant at $200 per month, $2,350; travelling expenses, $48.65; total, $2,398.65.

What were the capabilities of this gentleman, Mr. Thorne ? They were such that he had been the accountant of a concern at Port Huron, opposite Sarnia, which had an output of $1,200,000 a year; and by that means he became known to Mr. Hanna. Compare that with the bagatelle productions at Sorel. For that expenditure of $2,398 the province of Ontario got a great deal more service than this government got from these accountants at a cost of $50,000. The members of the opposition in the local House thought they saw a scandal in the employment of this accountant, and called for an investigation by the Public Accounts Committee. The report of that investigation will be found in the journals of the Ontario legislature. The examination was conducted by Mr. A. G. Mackay, now leader of the opposition, and what was he able to establish ? Utterly unable to show that this Mr. Thorne was not a competent man, but dazzled by the immense knowledge he showed of the intricacies of all kinds of book-keeping, Mr. Mackay was forced to ask such innocent and childinsh questions as the following:

Q. Are you a British subject?—A. No, sir.
Q. Have you taken the oath of allegiance?—A. No, sir.
By Mr. Mackay:
Q. If you remain in the service of this province, do you intend to take it?—A. I may. I do not know that I intend to remain in the service of the province very long.

Further on Mr. Mackay, when he found that he could not attack the knowledge of this gentleman as a first-class book-keeper, took a new line and asked this question :

Q. It is due to ask you, is it true that you keep an American flag floating over your desk in the office?—A. No, I did once, for nearly a week—a little flag about that long.
Q. Did you have any one make any objection to it?—A. No, I never did.
By Mr. Hanna:
Q. How high was it?—A. About an inch or an inch and a half.

That expenditure in Ontario was an honest expenditure under an honest government; while the reason this payment of $50,000 to these imported accountants is looked on with suspicion is that nobody believes that they were ever paid this sum, but that a great part of it went to some person at present unknown.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister has not yet answered the question of my hon. friend as to the purpose to which this money is to be devoted.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WHITE. I did not intend taking any part in this debate, but after having seen the government so persistently refuse to bring down the information to which the opposition are entitled, I think it is necessary that I should say a few words in support of the position taken by this side of the House in vindication of our constitutional rights. We have made the government an offer which they had no reason to refuse. We offered to go on with the estimates of any other department and let the estimates of the Department of Marine and Fisheries stand over until the minister brings down the information we require and to which we are entitled. That request having been refused, I submit that we are perfectly warranted in upholding the sound constitutional principle that the House should not be asked to vote any supplies, concerning which essential information is not given.

Mr. FIELDING. Just before six o'clock a suggestion was made by an hon. member of the opposition that we should suspend the consideration of this item and pass one or two non-contentious items of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and then close the sitting. I only wish to say that if my hon. friend opposite is disposed to adhere to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Beauharnois, we shall be very happy to accept it.

Mr. SPROULE. I have only to say that we have been making an endeavour for quite a length of time to do otherwise; that is, to get such information as we want, and then to dispose of all the items, which we could do in a very short time.

Mr. FIELDING. I only wish to intimate our willingness to accept that suggestion.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire for a moment to show what is said by parliamentary authorities. I am quoting from 'Todd's Parliamentary Government in England' :

The member of the administration who is charged with the duty of representing the particular department on behalf of which the grants are proposed, first explains to the committee whatever may be necessary to satisfy them as to the general expediency and propriety of the class of estimates under consideration, and then proceeds to propose each grant in succession.

I wish first to draw attention to the fact that we have not a minister here to-night to make an explanation, nor his deputy, who is usually at hand to give information which the minister could not be expected to have. Therefore parliament is not following the well-understood practice, both in England and in Canada, in voting Supplies. At the commencement of this debate I put the question whether any other member of the cabinet was prepared to take his place. To that I got no reply. It was the usual practice for a minister to have in his hands a synopsis of the estimates he proposes to the House, why the money is wanted and how it is to be expended ; also what disposal was made of the money voted for the same purpose in the previous year. It is the duty of the opposition to make all such inquiries so as to satisfy themselves that the expenditure was properly made and that there is a good reason for voting a further amount. In none of these respects has the usual practice been followed in regard to the item under consideration.

We have been twitted with holding up this House. We said, and we repeat, we do not want to be over-exacting. Let the minister give us what information he can give. Sir Richard Cartwright, when a minister in this House, used to give us all the information he had, and when he had no more he threw himself upon the generosity of the House. And no man ever got his estimates through more easily. The same may be said of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). That right hon. gentleman seems to take special care to inform himself of the affairs of his department. I sometimes do not know whether the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) has not the information or whether, having the information, he does not wish to give it. He seems to depend upon jollying the House along, giving comparatively no information. I sometimes think he could give us ten times as much if he desired. I do not want to do him an injustice——

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is mistaken. I have never refused information. It has sometimes happened that when we are discussing one item and information was desired concerning another I have asked hon. gentlemen to postpone their questions until the officers connected with the service could be present and I could have the information at hand.

Mr. SPROULE. We are supposed to be in the hon. minister's items for the last time. It looks as if we were to be jollied along as we were last year. Of course, I accept the hon. gentleman's statement that he does not intend to deny us any information. But I do not see how he can escape the other horn of the dilemma, which is that he has not the information, and that is not very creditable to a minister of the Crown. Contrast him, for instance, with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). We ask that hon. gentleman one question and he will talk for an hour—he seems to be a perpetual stream of information. If there is any obstruction of his estimates it comes from himself, but it is obstruction which is, in a way, creditable, as he shows a willingness and ability to give us information. But from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries we receive but the merest modicum of information. I would advise that hon. gentleman to take a day off and with his deputy go over the book prepared for his use in getting his estimates through. But it is because we do not get the information to which we are entitled that we are unwilling to allow his estimates to go through. Though I am not authorized to speak for any but myself, yet I think I speak the wish of every hon. member on this side when I say that if the minister will give us the necessary papers and let us have time to examine them we can make short work of his estimates. We do not want to delay him, but we want to do our duty. And we are prevented from doing it by the government and its friends, who render practically nugatory the functions of an opposition in this House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before entering on the subject directly before the House, I desire to refer to a statement made a short time ago by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) replying to a statement made by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). The hon. member for Beauharnois was mistaken in the statement he made. What the opposition did offer was that if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) would allow his estimates to stand then the Minister of Agriculture or some other minister could proceed with his estimates, pass a few items and let the committee rise, but on no account would the opposition agree to allow any small item of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to pass until the information was brought down.

Mr. FIELDING. My statement did not pretend to report anything said by the opposition generally. I referred to a statement made, shortly before six o'clock, by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), a distinguished member of the opposition, and what he said was exactly what I said a moment ago, and in that statement he proposed what we were willing to accept.

Mr. HENDERSON. I quite agree that that is exactly what my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) said and understood, not having been in the House, that that was the proposition made in the early part of the debate by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. I only regret to say that he was labouring under a mistake. He did not understand exactly the proposition that was made and consequently the Minister of Finance should not desire to take any advantage of what was said by the hon. member for Beauharnois because he thought that he was repeating what had been offered before. As a matter of fact he was not. It was distinctly understood that on no consideration could any minor item of the estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries be taken up and allowed to pass even if he did allow the larger item to stand. Why? Because these items are all associated with each other. Every item in the estimates of the minister is associated with that one item in regard to expert accountants. That permeates the whole department, because the money that was expended for that purpose was money that was expended on other branches in connection with the minister's department. Consequently it was impossible that the opposition could accept the proposition that one or two minor items should be allowed to pass and that the committee should then rise.

Mr. FIELDING. He did not claim to be repeating anything; he made the statement for himself.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg now to say that he was simply repeating what he understood was a proposition that was made before. I am quite sure that the hon. member for Beauharnois would corroborate what I say if he were in his place now. My hon. friend from North Renfrew (Mr. White) read some speeches that were delivered some years ago in reference to an expedition to discover the North Pole, and amongst other speeches was one which was delivered by myself. I was not then ashamed of it; neither am I now. My proposition was that an expedition should be fitted out to go in search of the North Pole that would not cost this country one dollar. We are spending $800,000 or $900,- 000 every year for immigration. I simply said that we might take $100,000 out of the vote for immigration, give it to Capt. Bernier to fit up a boat and that if Capt. Bernier discovered the North Pole it would advertise Canada more throughout the known world than all the money that we spend year after year for immigration.

A good deal has been said of what becomes of all the money. In the ten years ending with 1896 the total revenue from taxation was $287,931,372. Ten years later the total taxation of Canada amounted to $430,399,933, or an increase of $142,468,561. In 1906 the taxation on tobacco alone was $1,832,000 more than it would have been under the tariff of the previous government. In the late revision of the tariff there was added to the duty on raw sugar what would have produced $343,811 more than if that increased taxation had not been added. I give these two items as an illustration of how the taxation of the country is being gradually increased. In the five years ending with 1896 the average taxation under customs duties was $19,625,000; for the next five years it was $24,659,000, and for the next five years, ending 1906, it was $39,479,000. For all purposes, for the three different periods I have named the average taxation was, for the five years ending 1896, $27,000,000; for the five years ending 1901, $34,000,000, and for five years ending 1906, $52,000,000. These figures show the enormously increased taxation that has been imposed upon the people year after year. The people apparently have submitted to it. What they will do when they come to understand it better——

Mr. TALBOT. I rise to a point of order. I would like you, Mr. Chairman, to decide whether the hon. gentleman has the right to go over all this rambling about taxation for the last 25 years. Is it pertinent to the question before you?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman is enlarging upon the subject.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well, I will not further proceed with it because I had just got through with that part of my discourse. If the hon. gentleman had raised the point of order a few minutes before he might perhaps have interfered with my address. What becomes of all this money? I am going to give the expenditure as a whole and then I shall come down to a few items of expenditure. In the five years ending 1896, when the Conservative party went out of power, the average expenditure was $37,000,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman has the idea of sending a vessel to the North Pole?

Mr. HENDERSON. If the hon. minister will read the speech which I delivered here a few years ago, he will find exactly what my views with respect to that question were. In that speech I did not advocate sending an expedition to the Hudson bay and to the islands to the north of that bay. What I advocated was the sending of an expedition through Behring strait, through the Arctic ocean and back by way of Greenland, with a view to discovering the pole. That was the purpose with which I delivered that speech. I stand by that speech yet, and would be glad to see the minister make a grant of money for carrying out that idea. One consideration I had in view was that if a Canadian navigator discovered the North Pole, he would plant the British flag there and take possession in the name of the King of every bit of land that lay between the Pole and Canada as now known. But I protest, in the name of the people of Canada, against the extravagance and waste indulged in by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in connection with the expedition he sent out. To give an illustration, I may say that eighty suits of blue pilot cloth and eighty-seven dozen shirts and drawers were purchased for thirty-four men. Does the hon. member for Bellechasse think that a proper expenditure?

Mr. TALBOT. If the hon. gentleman were only fair and would use a little common sense, he would know that they were bought for the crew.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not endowed with that amount of common sense which the hon. member for Bellechasse thinks he possesses.

Mr. TALBOT. We will lend you some.

Mr. HENDERSON. I appreciate the offer, but I would not appreciate the sense very much.

Mr. DEVLIN. For what period of time were these articles obtained?

Mr. HENDERSON. I understood that the 'Neptune' was to go out during the year and furnish additional supplies. Bear in mind that this was not to be a three-year cruise, but just an expedition for twelve months.

Mr. BRODEUR. No; it was for three years. My hon. friend has only to consult the investigation which took place. I see that my hon. friend is quoting from a pamphlet issued by the Conservative party.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the time of the House would be better occupied in discussing the item under consideration.

Mr. HENDERSON. It appears that the eighty-seven shirts and drawers were not sufficient for a crew of thirty-four men, for they had to come back in fifteen or sixteen months.

Mr. DEVLIN. Were they bought for the crew or for distribution at different ports?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not aware that the Minister of Marine was sending out an expedition to distribute charity to the people of that northern country. If it was his intention to give these goods away to the Indians or the Esquimaux, he should have first asked the consent of this House to spend the money of the country for that purpose.

Mr. DEVLIN. Does not the hon. gentleman know that a great many of them were for distribution at the Northwest Mounted Police posts?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know that, nor do I think it is correct. The Northwest Mounted Police are supplied by the government under a different department. We find here an item of eighty sleeping bags at $25 each. There were thirty-four sailors, and they managed to crawl into eighty bags. There were five hundred Havana cigars at ten cents each—good brands.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. There were no cigarettes?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; there were five thousand cigarettes.

Mr. DEVLIN. Does the hon. gentleman smoke?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, I have smoked for over fifty years.

Mr. DEVLIN. Cigars?

Mr. HENDERSON. No; I do not smoke cigars.

Mr. DEVLIN. Then the hon. gentleman is not a judge of the quality of the cigars.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the hon. gentleman wants to treat me to a cigar, I will never refuse. If he comes around some day with a fine cigar, I will give him my opinion of it.

Mr. DEVLIN. If my hon. friend will come out now, I will do so.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall be very glad to accompany my hon. friend after I get through; and if he has five, or ten, or five hundred cigars, I shall be very happy to assist him in smoking them. But I will say this: Don't offer me a cigarette, because I agree with the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) that cigarettes are poisonous.

I am going to make this statement and I am going to make it with a full consciousness of what I am saying. I do not blame the Minister of Marine or the minister of any other department for the extravagant wastefulness that is going on or for all the scandals that had been perpetrated in this country during the last four or five years. I do not blame the head of the department or even the men who are under him so strongly as I do the right hon. gentleman who is at the head of the government of Canada. I have often heard it said in the country that you cannot point to any wrong doing of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. Hon. gentlemen say 'hear, hear,' but who is the man who controls the whole lot? Who is the man that, if he held up his little finger, could stop the whole machinery of iniquity?—the right hon. gentleman. The right hon. gentleman can dismiss these men from office and if he does not he must be held directly responsible for the extravagance and waste which have been going on in this country for the last eight or ten years. Mr. Chairman, I have to thank you and the hon. members in this House for listening to me. This is a debate that will be remembered by the people of the country for a long time. the reports of this debate will go out into the country, they will be read and the people will wonder what it all means. To my mind it is an eye-opener and the results that will flow from the discussions that have taken place here during the last few days will be for the weal or woe of this government and hon. gentlemen will have to take the consequences.

Mr. STAPLES. The constituency which I represent is made up largely of industrious and intelligent farmers, who expect me to inquire very closely into the public expenditures of this government, and I believe I shall have no trouble in justifying to them the course taken by the opposition on this particular item of $50,000 to pay the expense of maintaining certain vessels to explore the northern waters of Canada. In this connection I want to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries a question. On page P—60 of the Auditor General's Report there is an account relating to a snag boat which has been constructed on the Red river near the city of Selkirk. I would like to know if that boat comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BRODEUR. It certainly does not come under this vote.

Mr. STAPLES. Does it come under the hon. minister's department?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think so.

Mr. STAPLES. I would suggest that a portion of this appropriation be expended in equipping that boat in order that it may patrol the waters from the Red river going up through the chain of lakes and eventually down through the Churchill river, in order that we may get valuable information regarding that particular country.

Mr. BUREAU. It is refreshing to see that the hon. member for North Toronto

(Mr. Foster) has decided to turn a new leaf. This afternoon he apologized to the Minister of Marine for having treated him rather harshly during this debate, and to-night as an indication, possibly, of the sense of the injustice he has committed and of his obligation to make some reform, he gives another indication of his change of mind by appearing in a new suit of clothes. Let us hope he has discarded the old one completely and that his change of disposition has become equally permanent. There is an old saying that the tailor makes the man. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on his tailor. He has worked a reform in our hon. friend which no amount of argument could accomplish. When driven to the wall by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), who showed that the hon. gentleman had two weights and two measures in this discussion, he did not try to justify what was quoted against him by the hon. minister from the 'Hansard' of 1892, but instead he called on the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to explain how it happens that he has also changed his mind and is now approving of the expenditure of public money on one purpose out of an appropriation voted for another, which method he had formerly so strongly condemned.

The explanation has been given that when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) left to attend the imperial conference, as we were in the midst of a session and no money had been voted to defray the expenses in connection with that conference, the minister took upon himself, perhaps on the advice of his officers—who, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) says, are part of the administration and who often give advice to ministers upon which they are obliged to rely—took from the appropriation for ice-breakers the sum of $2,000. The minister did use some of that money for the purposes of the ice-breaker service, for he has told us that he went to Germany to investigate this subject. This was a necessary preliminary to beginning the building or purchase of ice-breakers. These facts are known to the House. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who is an old parliamentarian and who has been a minister and knows the questions with which a minister must deal, criticised the minister severely. I am glad that he has withdrawn part of the language he used. He has withdrawn the word 'steal' as applied to taking money from one appropriation to use for the purpose of another. He has withdrawn also the charge made against the minister in the heat of debate that he had used money for his personal purposes, but it was a conditional withdrawal. At the same sitting on February 27, according to 'Hansard,' the hon. gentleman, after being charged by the minister with making a vicious attack upon him—and I think it may be so characterized, because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), when he came to his sober senses, found he had gone a little too far. But still he said he could prove this thing and was going to prove it. He said:

I may have said in the heat of debate more than I would otherwise have said, but the essence of what I said I will prove. It may be a little too strong to say he was using it for his own purposes, but I will say that it is not used for public purposes and it is kept by the minister in his own pocket or private account.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. The explanation was made and accepted at the time. And if I understand the ruling given by the chairman, nobody has a right to receive it and to quote from 'Hansard' to bolster up his argument. He must accept the statement. He cannot do indirectly, what he is not allowed to do directly.

Mr. BUREAU. I accepted his statement. I congratulated him on having made it. Surely I have the right to quote from 'Hansard'——

Mr. SPROULE. I ask your ruling, Mr. Chairman, as to whether the hon. gentleman can bolster up his arguments by going again over the same subject.

Mr. FIELDING. If it were a question of what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) meant, I would agree. But surely the hon. member (Mr. Bureau) has a right to read from 'Hansard.' Of course if he undertakes to give an explanation which involves a refusal to accept the statement of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), there would be something in the point.

Mr. SPROULE. For what purpose is he reading it except to show that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) said what he did not mean?

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever his purpose, that has not appeared, and if he quotes correctly from 'Hansard,' he is within the rules.

Mr. BUREAU. The statement having been read, is read. I do not see what harm is done——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is clear.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) did not dispute the words of his explanation, which was accepted by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. But that acceptance surely would not deny the hon. member (Mr. Bureau) the right to quote his statements as made.

Mr. SPROULE. But it would deny him the right to bolster up an argument contrary to the ruling of the chair.

Mr. FOSTER. There were only two statements I made. One is that the statement in which I used the words 'steal'—not in the sense the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) tried to make the House believe I used it. I explained that and gave the word I would substitute for it. That settled that. And, even if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bureau) reads from another place in 'Hansard'—for he says I repeated the statement—my explanation applies to that in the same way. It is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who stated he was satisfied with that. After the minister made his statement, it was taken up by the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin).

Mr. BUREAU. I claim the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOSTER. I am speaking to the point of order.

Mr. PATERSON. It has been decided.

Mr. FOSTER. But the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) does not propose to stand by the decision.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Wright endeavoured to put another meaning on my words, and now the Solicitor General, declaring that he accepts the statement, still refers to the matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER—I suppose the hon. gentleman understands the rule.

Mr. FOSTER. If he understands it, that is all right.

Mr. BUREAU. I made the statement that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries brought to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Foster's) attention the view he took of these matters in 1892, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) tried to show that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) thought otherwise. Let me explain how he did it. That is one of the great acrobatic feats of the member for North Toronto—to shift an answer by asking a question. I would call the attention of the committee to 'Hansard' of 1892, volume 1, column 285. A question came up on this item:

Department of Finance and Treasury Board —contingencies, $9,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The intention of the vote was never thoroughly carried out, though it is at present. But as we had not a surplus in the strictly proper appropriation, I thought it just as well to take the money out of that vote.

There is no pretense that there was anything that could be applicable to anything that the hon. gentleman was going to do.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that while the expenses of the Finance Minister to Washington are charged to commercial agencies, those of Sir Charles Tupper are charged to miscellaneous charges. How is that?

Mr. FOSTER. It really makes very little difference, I suppose, to what they are charged as they all come out of the same pocket.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course it is public money, and in that respect it does not make any difference. But the vote for commercial agencies was intended to facilitate our foreign trade.

Mr. FOSTER. The items are perfectly correct, then?

I ask the hon. gentleman where is the change in this position. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs does not answer that he has grown older. This is just sixteen years ago but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says: I have changed my mind; I said that in a moment of weakness.

Mr. FOSTER. I said no such thing. The hon. gentleman is attributing words to me that I did not use and I require that he shall take them back.

Mr. BUREAU. The hon. gentleman says—

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for your ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A statement made by an hon. member must be accepted.

Mr. BUREAU. I am willing to take the hon. gentleman's statement. If he did not use the words he conveyed that impression and that is what he intended to do. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs stands to-day exactly on the same ground as that on which he stood at that time. He said: It is public money, you expended it, you accounted for the money, we are satisfied that whether it comes under the heading of contingencies or under another heading it is all right. But, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) does not adopt the same language to-day. That hon. gentleman has sent through the press the statement that he has made. He has become indignant over the fact that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, about to leave on a six months trip, has taken $600 or $900—I forget which—for his expenses, that in doing this he has committed a crime, that he has applied money to that purpose which was voted for another purpose, and that as a matter of principle and because of their rights under the constitution they will refuse to vote this estimate to my hon. friend. But what have these hon. gentlemen done and said? They have done and said exactly the same thing. If remorse has come to the soul of the sub-leader of the opposition and if he has made up his mind to retract I cannot say as much for the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). That hon. gentleman is not so particular about his charges. He makes the statement that things disappeared from the Speaker's apartments at the time my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was Speaker of this House. When asked what has disappeared, how does he know, on what does he base his statement, he says that they are based or mere rumour and that he has been credibly informed. I think that any hon. member who makes a statement based on mere rumour or credible information ought to be ashamed to make known the names of the persons on whose authority he makes this accusation or to disclose the documents by which he has so credibly informed himself. If we were to proceed on the same theory, if we were to listen to all the rumours we hear on the street and inside of this House, if we were to come here and make statements against hon. gentlemen opposite there would be a fine state of things. We have heard about a trip that the hon. member for North Toronto made to Washington, and I have heard that the three ministers who went upon that journey got into a wrangle as to how the expenses should be divided up amongst the three of them. Whether that is so I do not know. I do not know what reason there was for refusing the demand of the hon. member for North Toronto for such a division. Perhaps it was that the hon. gentleman spent less than the others.

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever other difference we may have in this House, I think we will all agree that it is not desirable that we should sit on the Sabbath. No doubt there will be opportunity in the following days to take up and discuss these questions and I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Bureau) to yield the floor in order that I may move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. We will now just have time to get to our homes before Sunday.

Progress reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House adjourns may I ask if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will now lay on the table of the House the return that was ordered on the 8th December and which he said to-day he had with him ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think I will lay the papers on the table on Monday. It is getting late.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m., Saturday.
