The fall came; and the farm y elded an abundance of crops and Harry found himself beginning to drit along with the tide of prosperity.

And Nettie had begun to live her young

To prosperity.

And Nettle had begun to live her young girlhood over again, as it were, under her father's roof; but somehow it was not not like the happy, joyous girlhood of memory. It was sober and quiet now, and she fell into musing; and every now and then there passed through her mid a certain thought—she was neither maid nor wife.

She avoided the vicinity of her late home, nor had she once seen Harry since the separation; but she had heard of him occasionally—knew that he was a changed man. Still this knowledge brought but a melancholy satisfaction. The reform had come too late. There was a wide guif between them now.

come too late. There was a wide guir between them now.

But, one evening in the golden October, Nettie felt obliged to pass Harry's farm. It lay between her father's house and the village. On the evening in question, however, she had been detained in the village until nearly dark, and she was detrained to hazard the nearest road home. It would be fully dark when when she would pass his house, and the chances were that he would not see her. She wouldn't have him see her for the world.

she wouldn't have min see her for the world.

When she arrived opposite the house she perceived a light in the sitting room. Her first impulse was to hurry by; but some powerful impulse prompted her to stop. She did so, and stood timic'y at the further side of the road, gazed longingly at the house that had once been a home to her—first of happiness, then of misery. By-and by she felt an irresistable yearning to look at the interior once more. He was evidently within, and there was no danger that he would see her. She walked hurriedly across the road, opened the gate, and seftly stepped into the lawn. Another minute and she was at the window, looking in. What singular behaviour. But she could not help it.

The little room was as neat as when she herself had watched over it. A cheerful fire burned in the grate, although the night was not cold, and a lighted lamp stood on the table. It was there that Harry was sitting. How her heart bounded as she caught sight of him. He held in his hand a book from his scanty library.

She recognized it at once; but he was not reading now. Was he asleep—or was he buried in a sad reverie? Nettie thought the latter was the case, and her heart was "I wish I had borne with him," she said. But a moment later her heart was touched, when she saw a tear roll down his cheek and drop on the book. The lonely man was not asleep—he was crying.

She could not help it. All the woman in her heart was aroused, and she was at the door in a moment. No ceremony—she burst into the sitting room and was at his side. at his side.

"Oh, Harry!"
Her voice quivered with emotion.

"Why, Nettie!" he exclaimed, trying to hide his tears—men are ashamed of them—"Is it you?"

"Yes, Harry, I was passing—I looked in—I saw you sitting here so lonely and I couldn't help coming in. I thought of the time when we were happy here, and—"

Another Case of "Conscience Sake."

A person, bearing a long string of capitals after his name, recently came to this city, and formed a very pleasant copartnership, such as we should like to see all our batchelor friends enter into. This gentleman, however, or his friends for him, or both together, labored most successfully to impress the public that he is a most distinguished personage—and no doubt he is. Among those who formed an exalted opinion of him as tagentleman, were the clergymen engaged to tie the nuptial knot, and, of course, they anticipated from him a much larger sum than the usual fee exacted in such cases. It was only natural to expect that a gentleman with such a multitude of titles, and who desired so much parade, and three clergymen to marry him, would be generous far above the common run of people, but judge the surprise and charging of the clerger that when, on one. dispelled by the confession of the woman Merrigan, who for the coolness and bar barity displayed by her in the perpetra tion of the horrid crime merits the title of a Borgia. As was suspected, Miss Hammill came to her death by the hand of her friend and former schoolmate After considerable badgering by the detectives and at the earnest solicitation of her friends, the suspected woman consented to tell what she so well knew. For this purpose she and her husband were taken to the office of the Police Commissioners, and related the horrible tale of the flendish crime in which she had been engaged. It appears that after the arrival of Miss Hammill at Mrs. Merrigan's house in Ninth street, on Tuesday last, the latter quarrelled with her victim, and afterwards resolved to kill her. To accomplish her purpose, Mrs. Merigan, who is not a hardy woman, could not risk coping with Miss Hammill without first getting the better of the latter in some way. Besides it would not do to have a desperate struggle of which neighhave a desperate struggle, of which neigh-bors must necessarily become cognizant. Miss Hammill had to be rendered next to Miss Hammin and to be reintered next on the pless, and to effect that condition she was plied with liquor, to the partaking of which she was unused. Mrs. Merrigan fully exculpated her husband from any participation in the crime, and it appears to have been her purpose to keep him in to have been her purpose to keep him in ignorance of it that see slept out of the house where the corpse lay concealed. In this way she found ample opportunity to carry out the plan she had decided upon to conceal evidences of her crime by on to conceal evidences of her crime by a seeming accidental fire attendant upon a lamp explosion. Her preparations re-quired time, and were not completed un-til Thursday. On the evening of that day, to save her furniture, she had it re-moved to the lower floor of the here. moved to the lower floor of the house edjoining, with the aid of two young n en, line close to the neck of the corpse and then thoroughly saturating a straw mat-tress or its contents which lay p'led upon then thoroughly saturating a straw ress or its contents which lay p'led upon the head and trunk of the body. To start the funeral pyre was an easy matter after what had already been done, and then to make sure work she set a closet in the tront room in a blaze and completed the terrible self-imposed task. Deliberately Mrs. Merrigan conceived and carried out her well laid scheme, even to the placing of a glass in such a position that it would explode, and, as she doubtless imagined, relieve her of the consequence to be dreaded. In the opinion of Mrs. Merrigan, doubtless every trace of her act was obliterated, if not the body itself, by the fire, to insure which she seems to have calculated upon the consumption of the noose, which it was impossible to remove from the neck. The worst effect of the fire was about the head and chest, below which, to the kaees, the body of the murdered woman was only scorched, while the ankles and perpetrator.

was only scorched, while the ankles and feet were untouched by either flame or smoke. The authorities are satisfied that the whole affair is now unravelled, Briggs' Baby. Thomas Briggs, of Twelfth street, has a boy baby about ten months old, who is admitted at the beginning of this article the contract.
This Department does not however bind itself to look just like his father, and to be the smartest boy baby of his age in Detroit.
Yesterday morning the child was sitting ou the floor, playing with five or six big coat-buttons on a string, and taking an occasional nibble at an apple to bring out his first crop of teth. Mrs. Briggs and a neighbor were talking away as only women can gossip, when the baby hid the buttons under a mat and started to finish the apple. A bit of the skin got in his the apple. A bit of the skin got in his throat and he gave a cough and a whoop and pawed the air and rolled over on his head. "Oh, them buttons! he has swallowed them buttons!" cried the mother as she yanked him up and shook him. "Pound him on the back!" yelled the other woman, trying to hold the baby's legs still. "Run for the neighbors!" cried Mrs. Briggs, "Oh, he'll die, he'll die!" screamed the other, as she ran out. And the neighbors came in and made him lie on his stomach and cough, and then turned him on his back and rabbed him on his stomach, and jogcough, and then turned him on his back and rubbed him on his stomach, and joggled him about all sorts of ways until he got mad and went to howling. Then a boy ran for Briggs, and Briggs ran for a doctor, and a doctor came and choked the baby, and ordered sweet oil and mustard plaster, and told them to hold him on his to the Everybody knew that those six big buttons were lodged in that baby's throat, because he was red in the face, and because he strangled as he howled and wept.
