Legal Decisions.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office, whether directed to his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not—is responsible for the payment.

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay up all arrears, and the publisher must continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office, or removing and having them, is a prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

THE DYING YEAR.

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light;
The year is dying in the night; Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring happy bells across the snow;
The year is going, let him go; Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor, Ring in redress to all mankind.

Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of paltry strife; Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times; Ring out, ring out my mournful rhymes, But bring the fuller minstrel in.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite; Ring in the love of truth and right, Ring in the common sense of old.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease, Ring out the narrowing list of gold, Ring out the thousand wars of old, Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kinder hand;
Ring in the Christ that is to be,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

—Tennyson.

Interesting Story.

Slave or Wife.

"Ten o'clock, and the lunch-basket not ready to take to the field—as usual!" grumbled Farmer Brewster, as he thrust himself into the rockingchair in the kitchen and fanned his flushed face with his straw hat. "A quarter of an hour wasted very likely, waiting here. Right in the midst of as fine a hay day as any man would wish to see. Now, my mother used to have her lunch ready to the minute whenever we came for it, and I don't see why!"

His jibe was checked by the appearance of his wife, who came out of the pantry, tugging along the great lunch-basket, almost too heavy for her strength.

Farmer Brewster was a young man in spite of his steady grumbling. Only twenty-three, tall, straight, healthy, with blue eyes, rosy cheeks, fair, curly hair—and handsome face when it was not darkened, as now, by a scowl of discontent.

An only son, he had inherited a large and handsome farm, clear from mortgage and debt, which supplied all the wants of his household most liberally and gave him a nice little sum of money to deposit in the bank each year.

There was no reason why he should be mean, and yet miserly habits were gradually growing upon him far faster than he knew.

Nor was there need of grumbling over the household arrangements, since the wife of his choice was a farmer's daughter who knew well how to work, and who had taken delight in setting her home in faultless order when she first came as a bride to the pleasant Brewster place.

The same order reigned still, from garret to cellar of the square old house, but Mrs. Brewster went through her task mechanically now, or with nervous haste and hurry that made them almost unendurable sometimes.

"The constant drop of water will wear away a stone; and the constant fault-finding in which her husband saw fit to indulge had nearly worn the patience, the hope, and the endurance of the young wife's heart.

The comfort and happiness of that home hung upon a thread, which frayed more and more, hour by hour, under the pain of unmerited blame.

Yet, George Brewster saw nothing of this until the morning of which I write.

"There is the lunch, and it is exactly five minutes past ten," said Mrs.
Brewster, setting the basket down with some emphasis at his feet. "I was delayed that much with the butter.
It had to be seen to before the sun got too high."

My mother always churmed before breakfast," observed George, rising slowly to his feet.

His wife said nothing, but the color rose hotly in her cheeks till the last blush of her girlhood seemed to come back again, and she raised her eyes to his with a look that startled him.

Very handsome eyes they were—dark, soft and velvety, with a world of love and tenderness in their depth.

Yet, now they met his own coldly and sternly, with such an expression that he exclaimed,—

"Good gracious! Letty. You look as if you hated me!"

"I'm afraid I do," was the reply.

And with a swift-glance at the clock Letty hurried down into the cellar with a knife and a pan to make her preparations for dinner for six hungry hay-makers.

"Afraid she hates me! My wife!
She that was Letty Glover!" muttered he to himself in his bewilderment.

"Why, what on earth!—She must be going crazy or something or other."

"Letty!" he called at the cellar-door.

"It is ten minutes past ten," she answered from the depths of the cellar.

"If I don't see about the dinner now it won't be on the table at twelve to the minute, as your mother used to have it. I can't come."

"Well, if this don't beat all," said he to the white and malice-cut which ascended from the cellar and rubbed herself against his legs.

A shout from the hay-field roused him to the recollection of the day's business.

He went out and dispensed the treasures of his basket among the hungry men, who praised Letty's excellent cooking with every mouthful they swallowed.

"It's enough to make an old bachelor like me sit down and cry to eat such a superb short-cake as that," said Solomon Wyse, wiping the crumbs of the feast from his lips before he drank hard cider from the jug. "Tell you what it is, George, you drew a price when you went courting."

"So he did. And here's her good health," chimed in another mower as he took up the jug.

George assent-ed vaguely.

"They were talking of his wife—his wife who was afraid she hated him."

Never had the two hours between lunch and dinner dragged so slowly.

And as he rode round the field with a sharp rattle of the mowing-machine he guided in his care, his mind was continually busy with Letty's looks, and her words, and his eyes turned often toward the cream-colored farmhouse, behind whose spruce green blinds his wife was very busy preparing dinner.

"Used to think how happy I should be if I ever persuaded her to come here," he thought. "It is two years—why, I declare it is two years this very day that we were married! I wonder if she remembers it! But it isn't very likely when she says she is afraid she hates me."

Did she remember? Ah, in that reminiscence lay the sting!

All that morning, while she got breakfast at five o'clock, and washed the dishes, swept the rooms, made the beds, churned butter, and prepared a junch for six men, her heart turned back to that morning twenty-four months ago, when the bright-eyed country maiden rose at four o'clock for her wedding-day.

How good, how kind, how handsome, her George was then. How his eyes followed her; how his love blessed her.

Was it all her fault that the bloom of life had departed in two short years?

Looking back, she could see no day in which she had not at least tried to do her duty.

And looking in the glass, she saw the light and glow of youth had passed from her face, while accomplishing the task unheeded by the approval of the one she loved.

"George has kept his color and his good looks, because his work lies out of doors," she mused, "but I have worked in this old kitchen until I look old enough to be his mother"—she paused with a bitter laugh—"I almost wish I was his mother, then he would be satisfied with what I did."

Non-com. The twelve o'clock whistle sounded sharp and clear from the factory in the village a mile away; a rush of terrified men, a confusion of voices, and among them all George Brewster lying on the ground beneath the mowing machine, his right arm and leg broken by the wheels, his head cut and bleeding with his heavy to the minute—and what a good one."

The dinner was indeed a success; every dainty of the season and the farm was there, skilfully cooked and neatly served on a table in the cool dining-room—a table covered with snowy cloth fresh from its fold, and glass and china.

In the centre of the table stood a great china bowl of red roses that perfumed the room. Her eyes shone dark and bright, and her words and smiles were ready for everyone save George.

As she sat grave and silent at the foot of the table, he looked at her wonderingly.

She wore a dress of silvery gray alpaca, that had been her travelling-dress when they were first married.

But he finally went out without asking. The wife, who was afraid she hated him, seemed almost like a stranger, although she looked so much on this occasion like the little girl he married just two years ago.

As George opened the door of the woodshed, where the men were loungeing away the rest of their nooning, he heard his own name uttered by Solomon Wyse in tones of anger. Involuntarily he stayed his steps.

"Yes, I knew George from a baby up, and I always said he'd make a likely man. But, I vow, it is a shame to see how he treats that poor little creature! Such a lurch this morning, and such a dinner this noon, in such a nice cool room, with the red roses and all the rest of it; and she's just as pretty as a picture, with red cheeks and bright eyes, and her wavy hair, and dressed as neat as a pink, too, and he sitting there as glum as a man of ninety. I was ashamed of him."

"I've heard her do nothing but find fault with her all day long," said a second voice. "My wife says if I threw my mother in her teeth, as he does in Letty's, she'd run away from me before she was a day older."

"And serve you right," chimed in a third. "I'll tell you what my wife says. She says it's confounded mean and small of George not to keep a woman here to help his wife. And when I saw the dinner to day for the pretty little thing had got for all us alone I thought so too. Hang me, if I hadn't half a mind to stop here this afternoon and help her wash up that great pile of dishes, and let her lay going to thunder. It's enough to kill the woman to have all that work to do.
And George is rich. What on earth is he thinking about! But he'll be sorry for this in a year or two hence, when we have to come here on a far different errand."

"To carry her out in a coffin?" said Solomon Wyse. "Yes, I suppose it will come to that if some of us don't talk seriously to George. She don't look at all strong now, and her hand trembles as she changes my plate.
It's a burning shame and if none of you will talk to George about it, I will."

But when George Brewster joined them Solomon Wyse deemed it prudent to defer the proposed "talking," for his brow was dark as night, and he had no more to say to his neighbors now than to his wife at the dinner-table.

This, then, was the way in which they spoke of him behind his back, these men who labored beside him, and took their wages from his hand, and pretended to be his friends. And his wife was afraid she hated him.

To whom could he turn for comfort —from whom could he expect true friendship, if she who should have been nearest and dearest was in such a ruinous disfigure? Lost in moody reverie, he paid little attention to his work.

And at last, at three o'clock in the afternoon, there was a sudden uproar in the hay-field—a trampling of hoofs, a rush of terrified men, a confusion of
voices, and among them all George Brewster lying on the ground beneath
the mowing machine, his right arm
and leg broken by the wheels, his head
cut and bleeding with his heavy fall.

Meanwhile, Letty, in the cream-colored house, had not been idle.

Tying on a great calico apron in place of her white one, she had quietly washed and put away the dinner dishes and reduced the dining-room to order.

Tea was easily arranged, since it was to consist of cold fishes, with glasses of fresh milk for the men.

She threw a clean table-cloth over the whole as soon as it was finished and went upstairs to pack her trunk.

Yes, Letty had made up her mind at last. She was going away.

Life had degenerated into slavery, unbrightened as she fancied, by a ray of love.

"And slavery will support one anywhere," thought Letty, as with trembling hands she locked and strapped her trunk and fastened her few lines to George upon the lid.

At the porch-door she paused for one last look around the house that might have been so pleasant and happy.

She did not intend to glance toward the hay-field. Yet, in spite of her resolution, her eyes turned that way to single out the tall figure that guided the rattling, clinking mowing-machine.

"I wonder if he will miss me a little —just at first?" she mused. "He can get a divorce, I suppose, if I desert him, and then he will marry again. I hope he will be kinder to his next wife than he has been to me!"

With tears, that rose at the thought of her successor, blinding her eyes, Letty failed to see the figure that she sought.

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFFVILLE, N. S., DEC. 30, 1887.

To most people the closing days of the year bring a tendency to retrospection and often a desire to moralize.

her cargo in good order marks a new era in the apple trade. A prediction of such an event, a few years ago, would have received no more credence than a prophecy of the early completion of the Kingsport railway.

Junior Exhibition. The Rhetorical Exhibition of the Junior class of Acadia College took place in Assembly Hall on Tuesday evening, December 20th.

PROGRAMME. Music. Prayer. The Office of Conscience. H. T. DeWolfe, St. Stephen, N. B.

As was announced by Pres. Sawyer, the subjects chosen bore either directly or indirectly on the regular course of study pursued by the writers; and no one could fail to notice from the moral tone that pervaded each of the papers, that moral culture as well as mental development receives due consideration at Acadia College.

The Halifax fur duck, which has been the dream of a life-time, has at last taken definite shape and will probably be opened during the coming year.

From Gravesend to Hampton Court.

The Victoria Embankment terminates at Westminster where are so many places of historic interest. As ours is but a trip up the Thames we must confine ourselves to the places that can be seen along or near its banks.

The Victoria Tower is the largest square tower in the world, being 336 feet high to the top of the flag staff over 400 feet and 75 feet square.

The present Westminster Hall was erected by Richard II, but the hall was originally founded by William Rufus in 1097.

As was announced by Pres. Sawyer, the subjects chosen bore either directly or indirectly on the regular course of study pursued by the writers; and no one could fail to notice from the moral tone that pervaded each of the papers, that moral culture as well as mental development receives due consideration at Acadia College.

The death-roll of the year numbers among others the names of Alfred Krupp, the great German iron master; Alvin Clark, the famous maker of telescopes; Madam Goldsmit (Jenny Lind); and Prof. Baird of Washington; while literature has lost H. W. Beecher, J. G. Saxe, Jus. Grant, Sylvanus Cobb Jr., Lady Brassey, and Mrs Craik (Miss Mulock).

Going.

Moving about the quiet ways, Sitting beside the hearth,

Yet always through the haunted night, As through the restless day,

The last frail strand of the milds Is parting, slow and sure,

My bonnie boat, that may come again,
God temper the wave and wind!

To gladden sad eyes, and vernal hearts, That now are left behind;

My bonnie boat, that may come again,
God temper the wave and wind!

Only one drop of swill, mother, only one drop of swill,

To keep the little life I have until I hear the barrels are getting full,

Oh, mother! they'll freeze and burst;
And what a dreadful future for us,

Near death with hunger and thirst!
If the bridge were only finished now,

Our troubles would all be over;
But here we lie in a famished state,

And almost at death's door;
For the bridge has only proved to us

The miserable "Bridge of Sighs," And if not soon completed

The lusty crowd, the horrid creatures, can fly,

They can't stand up, we can fall down.
A pretty poor independence I'm sure.

For the iron bridge has not a safe footin', And the icy weather is coming certain;

And have some good sharp shoes put on,
And prepare ourselves for the coming fit
