FRIDAY, SEP. 24TH, 1886.

The Mail has been repudiated by Sir John A. Macdonald. If the reputation were genuine Sir John would be repudiated by the Mail.

The Conservatives need not think that the Mail's bid for the temperance vote will avail much while there is a brewer and a wholesale liquor dealer in the Dominion Cabinet.

While Chaplain was putting "tally" on to the Tories at London the other day, Sir John, who was sitting close behind him, leaned forward and said, "Go on, Chaplain, you're on the right train. The old man knows how to butter them up and either them down."

SOMETHING must be getting out of gear with Sir John Macdonald, Saturday last we were informed by an enthusiastic Tory that the demonstration at London was a great success, "except that Sir John talked too long in the evening and tired out the audience." Has the Old Man's voice lost the power to charm?

Sir JOHN MACDONALD at the London meeting tried to pose as the workmen's friend by stating that when Mr. George Brown sent to jail over twenty printers for belonging to a union he (Sir John) stood by as their friend and revoked the law under which they were convicted. The statement made by Sir John is true in every particular except that Mr. Brown sent the printers to jail, or that any of them were ever convicted under the obsolete law.

If MINISTER OF JUSTICE THOMPSON is not careful he will soon get as unenviable a notoriety for "stretching" his statements as did his predecessor, Dr. Tupper. At Jarvis, in Haldimand, he slandered Mr. Anglin, by stating that that gentleman had given vent to disloyal sentiments some years ago in St. John. As soon as it was published, Mr. Anglin met the statement with an unqualified denial. And now the Halifax Herald comes to the rescue of Mr. Thompson by stating that he never made any allusion to Mr. Anglin at Jarvis. After this it would not surprise us to learn from the Tory press that Minister of Justice Thompson had never been in Haldimand.

MARTIN IRONS, who was the leader in the great strike between the Knights of Labor and Jay Gould on the Southern Missouri R. R., and who a short time since aspired to Powderley's position as Grand Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, was recently arrested as a drunken vagrant in St. Louis. When asked what he had to say that the sentence of the court be not passed upon him, he said "not guilty, sir, but without the means to prove my innocence." The Boston Transcript voices what must be an almost universal feeling when it says: "There is a pathos in these few words that occasion more sympathy for Mr. Irons than any word or deed he has ever before spoken or done."

Last week we asked if anybody had heard of Oronhyatka? That child of the forest has since turned up at a Tory "Loyalist" gathering at Hamilton, along with Dr. Kane and Mr. George Hill Smith. A local paper thus reports his speech: "Oronhyatka, the Indian doctor from London, who is also an Orangeman, said that he had not come to make a speech, but to make arrangements for a visit to London by Dr. Kane and Mr. Smith. The Indians of this country were loyal to the backbone, and as loyalty was the foundation of Orangemanism, it was easy to make Orangemen of Indians. There were Orange lodges among the Indians, and on the reservation near London an Indian District was about to be formed, to which he invited the Irish visitors. He was glad to see such light thrown on the question, as there had been doubts in his mind as to whether it was right to refuse to Ireland the free speech and the Home Rule enjoyed in Canada. But now those doubts had been removed by the addresses of the Irish delegates."

D. D. WILSON AND EXETER.

Few men are more closely criticized by the liquor party of this county than is D. D. Wilson, the president of the Huron Scott Act Association. He can do nothing to please them. Just now the opponents of the Scott Act, and those men in this section who voted for the Act, but never dare to talk for it except with their heads under the blankets, are blaming Mr. Wilson because he refused to go down to Exeter to force a reluctant reeve to sit with him on a Scott Act case. We do not blame the Exeter temperance people for feeling a little disappointed at not getting Mr. Wilson to go with them to Exeter, but the facts as brought out in the Scott Act convention at Seaford prove that Mr. Wilson acted wisely in the stand he took.

It appears that a number of cases were looked up in Exeter by the license inspector of South Huron, and that that official asked the reeve of Exeter to take them. The reeve refused, and no local magistrates could be found to sit with him, or to force him to sit with them. The inspector then requested Mr. Wilson, who is reeve of Seaford, to go to Exeter, and by offering to sit with Dr. Rollins, the Exeter reeve, compel that worthy to act or bear the legal consequences. After due consideration of the facts of the case, Mr. Wilson declined, and gave, among other reasons, the following as his doing:

1. He was not a magistrate, except by virtue of his office of reeve, and consequently did not care about going out of his own municipality to accept magistratical work.

2. He was president of the Scott Act Association, and if he went to Exeter it might be regarded as if the prosecution was importing a prejudiced judge.

3. He did not see that even if he acted with Dr. Rollins he could be certain that that person would go by the evidence, especially when he would have to take the case against his will.

4. Not being an experienced magistrate, he did not care to go about the county doing a police-magistrate's work; and if he went to Exeter and refused to go to all the other places that would result in him, he would be giving further reason for disappointment, etc.

Mr. Wilson concluded his explanations by stating that if any cases occurring in his own municipality were brought before him he would most certainly, as reeve of Seaford, act in the premises.

There is a little note over Mr. Wilson's refusal to act; there would have been a tremendous howl had he gone to Exeter. The President of the Scott Act Association is not a man to shirk his duty. He says he has a good conscience over the matter, and we believe him.

The case of Dr. Rollins should be duly considered by the Provincial Secretary. He is a nice man to represent law and order.

HON. THOS. WHITE'S "PICTURE."

The Hamilton Spectator is the best hand in Canada to take exception to the statements of its opponents. The other day it asserted that Hon. Thos. White never exhibited a picture of Riel with a rope around his neck, at the Cayuga meeting; and that Mr. White never stated Riel was one of the new saints of the Catholic church. The Spectator should not have stopped there; it should have proved an alibi in effect that Hon. Thos. White didn't come back from his junketing trip to the Northwest until after the Haldimand election was over. What's the use of the Spectator saying things by halves? And now that the Hamilton Tory paper, under the influence of "political exigencies," has endeavored to repudiate what are the facts of the case?

The Globe having undoubted authority for its statement, printed the following: "At a meeting at Cayuga last week, Hon. Thos. White accented an incendiary speech by producing a portrait of Riel with a rope round his neck. As he unrolled the portrait he sneeringly remarked: '— This is one of the new saints of the Roman Catholic church!'"

Hon. Thos. White was in Toronto on the day the above appeared in the Globe. It is therefore reasonable to suppose that the Mail's explanation of the incident, which appeared the next day, was written by himself. The Mail said: "He (Mr. White) further produced a portrait of Riel with a rope round his neck and a bunch of immortelles in his breast."

Mr. White pointed out, what is quite true, that the Riel feeling was being carried so far in Quebec that the Liberals were actually having the rebel's portrait framed and placed in their houses beside those portraits of holy men which decorate French-Canadian homes, and are placed there as incentives to good living."

The Montreal Gazette of September 8 gives an extract from the same Mail article, but it carefully suppresses every word which we have quoted above. That is to say, Mr. Thomas White is afraid to admit in Montreal that he did produce the portrait of Riel with a rope round his neck, and that he did make the remarks concerning it which, even according to the Mail's version, are most offensive.

At Kingsville, Essex county, Mr. White admitted having exhibited the picture of Riel with the rope around his neck, and having said "the French Catholics in Quebec province now hang portraits of the rebel chief beside those of their holy men."

The Ottawa Free Press, however, drives the nail in the coffin of the Hon. Thomas White in the following manner, and thus far we have looked in vain for a refutation from the Spectator: "The Hon. Thomas White has denied that during the Haldimand campaign, he exposed a picture of Riel with a rope around his neck and sneeringly described him as the last new saint in the Roman Catholic church. In reply to this we are authorized to state that the Rev. Father Barlow of Cayuga, says that if Mr. White did not use the identical words reported in the press, they expressed substantially the same. The Rev. Father was in the hall and heard Mr. White say so. Father Barlow is willing to come out over his own name and declare this if Mr. White persists in his denial. Now let Mr. White look for a big hole into which to creep. His insult to the faith of nearly one-half the population was, although party exigencies demanded it, cruelly malignant and likely to bear bitter fruits as coming from one who professes to be a Protestant. Such Protestants disagree their faith."

After this Sir John will not let the Hon. Thomas away from home without a muzzle when a political contest is in progress.

OVER 92 per cent. of the Liberals who were at Ottawa when the vote on the wine and beer clause—that crucial test—came on, voted against the mutilation of the Scott Act. That shows who are the friends of temperance. Temperance people should not go back on their friends.

The West Huron Tories are still at their wits' end for a candidate. The latest phase of the scheme has been the attempt to induce a well-known Reform temperance man to enter the lists against M. C. Cameron. And the best of the joke is that the man approached is an enthusiastic admirer of M. C. C., and would go through thick and thin to see the present member re-elected. It certainly does not look as if Mr. Cameron's addresses on the floor of the House and on the public platforms have lost him prestige in West Huron.

The GODERICH SIGNAL makes this significant announcement: "While the West Huron Tories are vainly seeking from London to Montreal for a candidate, the Conservatives are unanimous and enthusiastic for their present able and popular representative, M. C. Cameron. The Liberals are a unit; the Tories are like sheep without a shepherd."

Surely this is not the same M. C. Cameron that the Tory organs, a month or two ago, were so certain was doomed to defeat because of his telling exposure of the misdeeds of the Ottawa Government, and if the evidence seemed to be all in that direction—we who live at a distance can only enjoy the fun of seeing the wire pullers unspooled. The difficulties which now present themselves, when these blowhards come to think of the strength of Mr. Cameron, should convince them of the folly of hallooing before one is out of the wood.—Hamilton Times.

Political Straws.

As a "record of the day," the Ottawa Free Press gives the following: "Since the beginning of the present year the Conservatives have been beaten—"

In the Provincial general election in New Brunswick;

In the Provincial general election in Nova Scotia;

At the elections for the Quebec Assembly in L'Oratoire, Vercherre and Drummond and Arthabaska;

At the election for the House of Commons in Chamby;

At the election for the House of Commons in Haldimand.

WHAT'S UP?

Things That Are Happening Around Us.

The Goderich Delegation to the London Tory Tea—Fall Show Reinstated—A Short Stop.

—Well, the great Tory demonstration has passed and gone, and the world continues to wag along in the old-fashioned way. If the other towns in the west turned out no more numerous, than did Goderich on the occasion, the Tory aggregation at London was not the "biggest show on earth" by a large majority. I strolled around town to see who had gone to the demonstration, and I only missed a few aspirants for the candidature and one or two office-seekers. The rest of the Lib-Con neighbors stayed at home to try and make ends meet, under the benign influence of the N.P. But, hold hard! I omitted to state that the Almanac man went to London to continue the cheer for Sir John that he didn't finish before he tumbled off the band stand falling and dinged his ancient plug hat the day Blake spoke on the courthouse square in 1882. He owes Sir John considerable for the "grease" he got out of the Dominion franchise voter's lists, and he thought he'd go to London and show his appreciation of his benefactor by hoovering. He's a whooper from Whoopeeville, and he went to London on the occasion, and raised his tawdry voice in glad acclaim, joyful jubilation, and wild hurrah. I'd have gone to the picnic myself, but I'm too advanced in years to take a billet, and too young to get a superannuation, and the boys are clear grits, and the girls have no votes, and the old lady wouldn't accept a Government position with a large salary and other limits attached if she was to be debared from speaking her mind on public questions as fluently as she does upon all domestic topics. No; there was no necessity for me to go to London to the grand panjandrum, for I had no axe to grind.

—So I stayed home, and laid low for the fall show, and the big steer, ad best heavy draught mare with foil by her side, and the aged sow, and the ram lamb, and the speckled hen, and the log cabin quilt, and the wreat that had braved a thousand years the battle and the breeze, and the best gentleman's shirt, hand-made—or should it be the gentleman's best hand-made shirt, or the gentleman's hand-made—there, I'm getting all tangled up, but you've all been to the fair at one time and another, and as they're all built on the same principle with foundations, superstructure and attachments to match, you'll have an idea of what I mean. Well, as I remarked before, I remained in town to take in the fall show, and this year, I must admit that the exhibit was what the phrasemongers call "good everidge." But I don't take the same satisfaction out of even the fall show that I used to years ago. Mebbe I'm getting old, and an too well acquainted with most of the ladies work exhibited, but be that as it may, the shows have not the same charms for me. Now, when I put on the director's blue badge and strut around I'm willing to admit that I've a little—just a little—vanity left, but my feelings don't swell up, upon the abolition of pigmeat, or the gentleman's hand-made—there, I'm getting all tangled up, but you've all been to the fair at one time and another, and as they're all built on the same principle with foundations, superstructure and attachments to match, you'll have an idea of what I mean. The Poet's Corner.

YESTERDAY,
Yesterday, darling—only yesterday,
The leaves were bright, and all the grass was fair;

OUR NEXT PREMIER.

Hon. Edward Blake's Speech at Picton.

A crowd of 5000 persons filled the large skating rink at Picton, Ont., last week to listen to the Liberal leaders, who received a genuine ovation.

It was 3.40 o'clock when C. H. Widdifield, secretary of the Prince Edward Reform Association, arose and read an address of welcome to the Hon. Edward Blake. The vast audience, at the conclusion, arose en masse and for several minutes rendered the great Liberal leader an ovation such as he had not received before in this part of the country.

It is just as essential that the human body should have pure blood, as that a tree or plant should have sap to nourish and invigorate its growth. Nearly all our bodily ills arise from unhealthy blood. Burdock Blood Bitters purifies this fountain of life, and regulates all the vital organs to a healthy action.

LOVERS OF POPULAR GOVERNMENT.
and asked them if the picture he had presented was founded on righteousness, truth, equity or justice? He urged the Liberals of the eastern section to exert themselves and avenge the wrongs committed upon them, as the Liberals in eight other gerrymandered constituencies had done.

LAYING MORE AND LARGER EGGS.
He combated the proposition that the prosperity of agricultural classes depended upon the prosperity of the manufacturing interests. The very opposite was the case. The prosperity of the farmers depended only upon themselves.

THE LACK OF INDEPENDENCE.
The members of the House of Commons, he said, were the property of the Government, and it was humiliating in the extreme that this should be. The content of the timber pedlars, land and plantation speculators, railway charterers were scathingly reviewed.

Mr. Blake spoke feelingly of the Northwest, and created unbounded enthusiasm by declaring his position upon the administration of that vast territory beyond Manitoba. He held the Conservative party responsible because of their apathy and neglect for every drop of blood spilled and every cent of money expended in connection with the rebellion. He had the claims of the halfbreeds attended to years ago there would not have been a war. He alluded to the Meit's attempt to create religious strife in Ontario, and concluded with a patriotic reference to confederation and to the desirability of each province being allowed to enjoy their own institutions nearest and dearest to the people of it. He took his seat amid another burst of applause. His broad and statesmanlike views on the question elicited admiration. As the thousands left the building remarks eulogistic of Mr. Blake was heard on every hand.

How a Dude Caught Cold.
A slim young man in the height of fashion was violently sneezing in a street car, when a companion remarked, "Aw, Charles, dear boy, how d'ye catch that dreadful cold." "Aw, dear fellow, left my cane in the lower hall to-day, and in sucking the ivory handle, so dreadful cold," it chilled me almost to death." If Charles had used Dr. Harvey's Red Pine Gum his cold would not trouble him very much. For sale at J. Wilson's prescription drug store.

Opals.
There is a good authority for stating that the opal—a magnificent gem too long neglected because of the foolish superstition of late years associated with it—is growing in favor abroad and is likely to come to the front here. As the opal is the only precious stone which defies imitation, and fine specimens are of rare occurrence, there appears no good reason why opals should not recover the high favor they held previous to the publication of Sir Walter Scott's novel, "Anne of Geierstein," in which romance is ascribed to this stone a supernatural power to bring bad luck. Previous to the appearance of this fiction the opal enjoyed its original character of being a love stone and suitable for a betrothal gift.

A National Evil.
There is no question but that Dyspepsia is the national disease of our country, and when complicated with disease of the Liver and Kidneys is the cause of untold misery. Burdock Blood Bitters will almost invariably cure the worst case known.

Velvets.
Plain velvets come in all the new colors, also striped or spotted in cross stripes alternating with plain velvet. The novelty is in the petit pois or pea-dotted velvets, with small spots embroidered on them in contrasting colors, such as currant red wrought on Salambo blue, or navy blue, or green, and also in tone upon tone, especially in brown shades, such as Suede dots on bois de rose, the new rosewood shade.

Of Vital Importance.
It is just as essential that the human body should have pure blood, as that a tree or plant should have sap to nourish and invigorate its growth. Nearly all our bodily ills arise from unhealthy blood. Burdock Blood Bitters purifies this fountain of life, and regulates all the vital organs to a healthy action.

The Hair.
It seems as though the good sense of many ladies might prevail against the combined efforts of hair dressers and hair importers, so when one is found to suit them; and in this season of general rather than particular styles, ladies are justified in retaining as which becomes them.

THE POTENCY OF "MUST."

Our Professor of Metaphysics Reads a Chapter on "Must."
 (Special Correspondence.)
 Boston, Aug. 17.—The word "must," says our professor of practical metaphysics, has, if frequently thought of and spoken in connection with your business plans, a magical power for making these plans succeed, because this word is the symbol of the thought of power, of force, of demand, of importunity. When you say, "This thing MUST be done," you create for yourself a mood of mind which is ever attracting more power to push your plan forward. The MUST mood of mind will invite success to you others who have must in them. You will win their confidence as they find must in you. Confidence between man and man in trade makes both cash and credit.
 The mood for bringing success most quickly is not the mood of begging, or supplicating, or wishing, or begging. It is the legal mood of must. Don't say, "I wish I had a better house, better fare, better surroundings than those I now have." Say (in mind), "I MUST have better, keep your eye on the best. Look critically on the best things of this world, so you can judge well of their quality, knowing that the MUST mood will bring them to you. When it does, you will then know how to make the best of them.
 The thought of MUST will ever push you onward the thing you say you MUST have. It will keep bringing to you new plans, schemes and devices to get that thing. Such plans need not be those of trickery or deceit. The power generated in you through an imperious aspiration is a power coming of the elements. It robs no man. It makes you richer, and you are richer. If you say: "I MUST have this or that thing through these methods," you employ an inferior power of must. If you say: "I MUST have it through dependence on the bounty of others or their kindness or sympathy," you employ also the inferior power of must. You then get the thing you desire, but it comes with a shackle; the shackle of the lie you told in some way to get it or the shackle of living on another's bounty. MUST, through the imperious and eternal mood of must, can draw to itself every really good thing. When you fling yourself back on your own power, your own must, the things desired come to stay. If you depend on any one else, or, in other words, on the inferior power of must, the thing will come, but not to stay.
 The more you think must and mean it, the more will power be yours. The thought of must will ever push your body on to new exertion. It is not the body that wins this fight, it is the silent thought kept in the mind. You will grow at last to a complete faith in the power coming of thought. You will then know how faith can really "remove mountains." It is the silent power of must that cuts through the hills, digs canals and builds railroads to the sea. It does more wonderful things than these. Keep the thought of must ever in mind and you are sending from you a real force which is at work for you when you sleep, which you eat, which you play. FRANCIS MORTON.

THE MIND CURE.

Some of the Principles Upon Which It is Based.
 (Special Correspondence.)
 Boston, Aug. 17.—Nothing just now attracts so much attention as the mind cure, and nothing could possibly be more difficult of explanation. It seems to be one of those things that must be absorbed rather than learned; it can be better understood than explained by its advocates. Even the teachers of it can talk hours without uttering anything an audience listener can take hold of and make make; a man in health sick by causing him to think and believe that he is sick. In the phenoplastic method of cure we simply reverse this process, and make the man well by inducing him to think himself well; not that we would deny the fact of the disease as a state of his consciousness, but simply that the immortal ego, the spiritual entity and real man, is neither diseased nor unhappy. The disease is in a region of our existence that is below, or what means the same, is external to the man—the essentially human nature and principle. How we may best effect this radical change is an invaluable matter, and himself is a question of supreme moment, and one which we are called upon to answer. It is to be done by the simple power of thought, uttered in appropriate words or symbolic signs or unexpressed. There is a living force and saving energy in thought. It is thought which shapes and governs the facts, and it is our thoughts which mold our fate, for thoughts and existence are one.
 "In treating a patient by the mental method, with a kindly positive and affirmative attitude of mind, we are steadily to think the truth in regard to his inner self, and maintain in our minds the correct ideas of ourselves and of him; and the silent sphere of our minds, according to the law of thought transference, will influence him in a degree proportioned to his susceptibility." THE FALL SHOW.

The West Riding Exhibition Prize List.

A Few Notes About Things Worth of Special Mention.

The fall show held here on Tuesday and Wednesday was well attended, and the wisdom of reducing the price of admission was shown in the increased attendance, with but little falling off in the receipts from the reduction. In 1884, with an entrance charge of 25c, the gate receipts were $186.15; in 1885 the fee at the gate was reduced to 15c, and the result was $174.16; this year the gate fee was still 15c, and $179.90 realized. This is encouraging. An additional $20 was taken by leasing stands, &c. to hucksters and fairgoers.

The show of horses was splendid. There were fourteen entries for buggy horses, all good animals, and the carriage teams were spanking ones. Some promising foals were shown in the various classes. Messrs McCloskey, Bawden, Polley, Clarke, Morris and Young were the principal exhibitors in this class.

There were some fine specimens of cattle on the ground, the principal exhibitors being Messrs Bawden, J Fisher and Beattie. Sheep were rather superior. Humphrey Snell had some of his choicest animals. There was rather a poor show of swine.

The agricultural implements agents were not out in force, as in the old days; but the organ and sewing machine men made it lively up stairs. Geo Thomson, assisted by his daughter and Miss Maggie Breckenridge led in these departments, while Messrs Cornell, Weatherald and Angus in sewing machines, and Prof. Clarke in organs also helped to attract the crowd. G F Oakes, of Clinton, deserved something more than a third prize. His instruments were a credit to his skill as an organ maker.

The number of entries for ladies' work, etc., did not appear to be as large as usual, but some choice specimens of needlework, work in wools, etc., were to be seen.

In photographs George Stewart had the field to himself. He made a big exhibit, and the work was most creditable. His enlarged pictures were particularly admired. We congratulate our townsman upon the success which has attended his efforts. The collection will be kept in the cases at the gallery for a few days yet, before being assorted, and sent to their originals.

The display of flowering plants was not large, the season being against it. However, the foliage plants shown were superior, and commanded much admiration. Gabe Elliott led in the floral display, and got more red and blue tickets than anybody else. He deserves special mention.

The fruit and vegetables shown were of superior quality. Pears and plums were never excelled here, and they would be hard to beat anywhere. The prize list tells the most interesting part of the story. There were no peaches on exhibition. This popular fruit has been a complete failure in this region.

At the close of the show, the directors, according to previous announcement, secured the prize fruit, and will box and ship the best to the Colonial Exhibition. There is no better way to advertise Huron's fruit in England than by sending such a display.

Dungannon.
The sports of Dungannon are greatly excited over the appearance of one or two deer that were seen in this neighborhood. They have not succeeded in capturing any of them yet.

Mrs. Brown, of Woodstock, and Mrs Stinson, of Ingersoll, were the guests of Mrs. J. M. Roberts last week.
The sacrament was dispensed in the Presbyterian church here last Sunday.
Rev. John McGillivray, of Goderich, preached a very appropriate sermon on the occasion, and was greatly appreciated by the congregation.

George Woods and Miss M. Rutherford, teachers for the past year in Union
S. S. No. 8, are engaged for next year in the same section.
The Dungannon baseball club played their return match with Goderich on Monday last, and were again victorious.
Dungannon stood 23 to Goderich 2.

Bluevale.
A synopsis of a temperance sermon by the Rev. A. Y. Hartley, crowded out this week, will be given in our next.

The mill seems to have increased in its business since the new miller came on the scene of action. Mr. Herbert was well known around here years ago when this place was small.

Our base ball team had a challenge from Millinery, the champions of Bruce, to play for a hundred dollars a side. It was immediately accepted. But where is the boasting champion now? Bruce-sis has challenged our club, and a game is to come off shortly.

The Foresters' concert on Tuesday evening was a complete success. Will T. Burgess has the skill as well as the will to keep every one pleased. The rest of the performance, which consisted of readings, singing, &c., was good, and indeed Bluevale is becoming noted for entertainments, which cannot be beaten.

Mr. Thos. McGillivray, one of the editors of the Goderich Signal, is announced, to address a meeting in the Presbyterian church, on the subject of "Temperance." All are cordially invited to attend.

The new Foresters' hall is now a credit to any town. The church is being painted inside and outside.

Rev. J. S. Cook supplied the place of Rev. Mr. McDowell, of Wingham, last Sabbath. Mr. Black, of Wingham, supplied Bluevale.

Rev. A. Y. Hartley is away on a holiday trip. He intends visiting the county where the Scott Act is all the talk, namely Halton. Rev. Mr. Law, of Belgrave, supplied his pulpit last Saturday.

The old Clyde is changed into a handsome frame building, of commodious size. It adds also to the value of Mr.
Reading's already valuable property.

Wawanosh.
The barn belonging to George Agar, of the 6th concession, was struck by lightning on Thursday night of last week and one of the rafters was splintered.

Mrs. John Irvin has sold her house and lot near St. Helens to Mr. Sheriff.
Mrs. Irvin is going to join her husband in St. Joseph's Island, where he has been for a number of years.

Mrs. William Gordon, of Toronto, has been visiting friends around St. Helena.
John Wetherald is engaged as teacher for St. Helen's school for the coming year with Mary J. Ferguson as assistant.

Wildcats are becoming prevalent again—a number having been seen in the neighborhood of St. Agastine.

Colborne.
Friday last the wife of Henry Zoelner, lot 12, Lake shore road, opened a hill of potatoes that contained 76 tubers—36 of which were good large pratties and the remainder of smaller size. The Germans hate the Irish in potato raising in this section this far.

J. McLeod, teacher at No. 4 S.S. re-engaged at an increase of salary. Mr.
McLeod has done good work during the past year, and our trustees are deserving of praise for securing his services.

Benmiller.
Picnic—A very successful picnic was held in Mr. Foster's grove on Monday 20th inst. It was under the management of the Bethel S. S., but the neighboring schools were each extended in invitation. It was heartily carried out by S. S. attended but when the day came there were no conveniences, and those who had made arrangements to go, had to suffer disappointment. How is this? Surely there is something wrong somewhere?

By the way, perhaps they're going to give us a Christmas tree or something better after a while. If they do, we think they had better have it at Mr. Foster's, as that gentleman seems to think "trouble of no account" so long as people enjoy themselves at his grove and home.

Mr. Foster and family have the hearty thanks of all who were at the picnic for the kindness and liberality shown on Monday.

Goderich Township.

journment. Members all present. Minutes of last meeting read and passed.

S. S. Section, as the trustees of No. 2, S. S. have refused their consent.—Carried.

Moved by John Beacom, seconded by and Isaac Salkeld be notified to remove at once the fence from across the side road between lots 5 and 6, 1st con.; if

THE TWO ROSENBERGS,

A certain man named Rosenberg, who belonged to a well known battery and had married very young, had a son whom he allowed to enter the same battery when he was 18. But as the father had not been promoted very rapidly, it happened that he and his son were second lieutenants at the same time, the father just entering his fortieth year and the son his twentieth. In spite of the difference in age, the father looked younger than his son who had come into the world with an old face; and if the fathers gray hair could have been exchanged for the coal-black locks of his son there is no doubt but that he would have been taken for his son, and vice versa, especially as there was a marked resemblance in face and figure. They became known as Rosenberg the first and Rosenberg the second.

After the death of his wife the father and his son separated and took bachelor's quarters, which pleased Rosenberg the second, as it gave him more freedom. But the father who had been used to society, soon grew tired of it, and invited to his rooms all the officers who visited the first garrison. This was not of frequent occurrence, but it afforded occasional new experiences. It was a great pleasure to the old officer to watch the unpacking of his comrades' trunks. There was always something new to be seen that people of this little, out-of-the-way place had never heard of, and concerning which the curiosity of Rosenberg the first led him to inform himself very minutely. One day an officer of the White dragoons came to the garrison, who, although no longer a young man, had very black, glossy hair. One Sunday morning Lieutenant Rosenberg the first entered the room of his guest without knocking, just as he was drawing the cork from a bottle he had taken out of his satchel.

"What have you so fine?" asked the curious host. "A flask of cologne water or perhaps a cordial for the stomach?" This sudden appearance seemed to surprise his guest rather unpleasantly. He hastily put the cork into the bottle and set it behind a curtain out of sight. "Oh, it is water—for the scalp," he muttered.

"For what?" asked Rosenberg. "For the scalp," "Oh!" he said, and continued: "You have a very clean, beautiful scalp. "That is what makes it. "And such black hair."

This was evidently very annoying to the strange officer, and he turned the conversation in another direction. The next morning he returned his thanks for the hospitality he had received, and was about to take his departure, but Rosenberg the first could not allow that until he ordered his own old horse, and mounted it to accompany his friend of the White dragoons to the city limits, where he left him, and rode home again. When he arrived there and saw the sun streaming in, he went to close the blinds, and discovered behind the curtain the bottle which his guest had forgotten. His first impulse was to hasten after him with it. But the second thought was that the officer would have a start of an hour before he could overtake him. He had only an hour at his disposal, as he must be on duty after that. The bottle could remain where it was until his comrade returned, or if he never did return he probably knew where to get more. The old officer examined it on all sides. It was a plain white bottle, without a label, and half-full of fluid like clear water. "What things people will contrive!" he thought while he shook first his head and then the bottle. "This benefits his head! What nonsense! I believe it is good for nothing." He drew out the cork, held the bottle to his left nostril, closed his right eye and took a good sniff of it. "It is clear water," he said. "My comrade has done well. Such stuff would make me white—clear, well water. I might play a joke on my friend of the White dragoons. I will pour this out, and put in some other. When he returns he will use it on his head and imagine it has helped him. Ha! ha! ha!"

With this decision he went to his room poured the contents of the bottle into the wash-bowl, and then filled it half full of water from the pitcher. "There he exclaimed, putting the cork in, I shall enjoy that, when my friend returns. This will help him as little as the other, and he will soon find out that it never amounted to anything. That do any good! Ha! ha! ha!" He then put his hand in the wash-basin, held his head over it, and washed his hair until his arm ached.

"Now, if that has any effect, my name is Hans," said he. "To-morrow morning my head will look just as it does now. But I must be off to the square to drill the recruits. It is a quarter of an hour too early, but it will make no difference, and one never knows what may delay him on the way." So he put on his cap, fastened on his sabre, and walked leisurely toward the market-place. When he reached there he found the captain there before him.

"Having had nothing to pass away the time with, the captain thought he would go down to the square and have a little chat with Rosenberg the first, if he should happen to be down somewhat early. He smiled with satisfaction as he saw that officer coming round the corner, but when he had come a few steps nearer his face fell with disappointment. Still he spoke to the man who approached him, and said: "Good morning, dear Rosenberg how is your father?"

Lieut. Rosenberg the first looked very much surprised at this unexpected question, and stared at his superior officer instead of answering.

"Your father is well, I hope," continued Capt. Klohn, now also somewhat surprised. "My father?" said the lieutenant, still as puzzled as before. "Certainly, your father. I thought I spoke plainly enough. What is there so wonderful about my inquiring for the health of your father?"

"The captain is very kind," said Rosenberg the first; "but I am very much surprised indeed. "I do not understand you. Why so?" "Great heavens! because my father is dead, captain."

The old man turned pale. "Dead! Your father dead?" said he, with trembling voice. "My God! How did it happen?" "He fell from his horse and broke his neck."

The captain clasped his hands and shook his head in horror. "Oh, oh, oh!" said he, over and over. "Oh, you poor fellow, you poor fellow!" Lieut. Rosenberg the first looked at him, wholly at a loss to know what to make of it.

In the meantime the recruits had gathered and stood in line. A lower officer stood before them waiting for the stroke of the bell. "Attention!" he called, as the first rang trembled in the church tower. The soldier duty comes before all else, eating or drinking, house or home, wife or child, father or mother. "Will you have the goodness to stay with the recruits, dear Rosenberg?" said the old captain. "They cannot be left without a head." He pressed the lieutenant's hands in deep agitation, and then added: "Adieu! adieu! dear Rosenberg," while bright tears fell from the old soldier's eyes down on his bushy beard.

"Auf wiedersehen! God comfort you! dear Rosenberg. God comfort you!" He turned and went with faltering steps to his home, the shock having weakened him so that he needed to rest and collect himself before calling the sergeant to advise with him in regard to further proceedings.

Lieut. Rosenberg watched the captain disappear round the corner; then he laughed and exclaimed: "Well, I never saw anything like it. There is nothing like it in all the world!" Just then another officer came from the same direction which the captain had gone.

"Lindemann!" called Rosenberg, as he was passing. "Good morning! Good morning! How goes it with you? Come here a moment."

Lindemann did so. "How can I serve you, Rosenberg?" he asked. "Did you just meet our captain?" "I did."

"Did anything about him surprise you?" "Very much; he was in tears."

"What now, you see—I thought he must have been too free with his schnapps or eaten too much breakfast."

"What do you mean? He is not in the habit of doing so."

"Well, there is certainly something wrong with him."

"What brought you to such a conclusion?" "Why, just think! When I came up to him he asked me how my father was!"

"Well, why should he not ask you?" Rosenberg the first looked at him in amazement. "Why should he not ask me?" he repeated.

"Certainly; why not?" "Because he never did so before."

"What of that? Everything must have a beginning. What is there specially to wonder at in that?"

"What is there to wonder at? I do not see how you, Lindemann, a sensible man, could inquire after a man who is dead."

"Dead! Do you jest? No one should speak lightly of such things, my dear Rosenberg."

"I have no pleasure in joking about such things; but I certainly can say that my father is dead."

Lieut. Lindemann's face grew very long, and he turned as pale as Capt. Klohn had before him. "Can it be true? Can it be possible?" he said. "But tell me, for God's sake, how it happened."

"He fell from his horse and broke his neck."

Lieut. Lindemann's arms fell by his side, and his breathing was heavy and painful. Rosenberg the first looked with wonder at Lindemann, who grasped his hand and said: "My poor, poor friend!" He wiped a manly tear from his eyes, and turned away in the direction he had come.

"God comfort you!" he cried. "Heaven send you strength to bear it!"

"He must be crazy," thought Rosenberg the first, staring after him in utter bewilderment, "for he had too hearty a breakfast. Only one of the two can be possible—only one of those two!"

But when fifteen minutes later the sergeant came to look around and see if all was in order, and took the liberty of inquiring for his father's health, Rosenberg became angry.

"Is it a plot?" he exclaimed. "They are trying to play a trick on me. But I am too old to allow such a thing, especially at the expense of my father; that will not pass—I certainly will not allow it. As soon as the training of the recruits is over I will go to the captain and report, and if he is at the head of the company it is all the same to me. I will not be responsible for the result."

Let us leave the old officer standing on the market-place raging inwardly and see what Rosenberg the second is doing. He came out of his rooms in the best of spirits, carefully picked a speck of dust with his thumb and forefinger from his left arm, and sauntered down the street with a complacent smile on his lips, not knowing exactly where he wished to go. He met Lieut. Lindemann.

"Heaven! What a ghastly face!" said Rosenberg the second to him. "You look as though you had had some frightful misfortune."

Lieut. Lindemann stared at this speech. "Rosenberg, I don't understand you," he finally said. "What don't you understand, old fellow? That I wonder at your doubtful expression! It is not usually so. Come with me into the restaurant. We will take a glass of wine together."

Lindemann shook his head, as if the conduct of his friend was wholly incomprehensible. "I am in a good humor today; I invite you to breakfast," continued Lieut. Rosenberg. "Come," and he turned to take his arm.

But Lindemann drew back. "You have consoled yourself very quickly," he said bitterly. "Consoled! What have I to console myself for?"

"Rosenberg, I do not understand you. I would not have expected such lack of feeling from you."

"Lack of feeling! What do you mean?" "Well, I should not have thought when one's father was dead—"

Rosenberg's face grew serious at once, and he grasped Lindemann's hand. "Oh! forgive me," he said with tender sympathy in his voice. "I did not know that—though I might have surmised something from your sad face. My poor friend! forgive me, and permit me to offer my sincere sympathy."

This was too much for Lieut. Lindemann. "Know what? Now, have done," he said, red with anger. "That is enough—my very soul rises up against such flippancy. Your father is not yet under the ground, and you begin to be merry!"

"Your grief has bewildered you, Lindemann," replied Rosenberg earnestly. "You are confusing me with yourself."

"How so? I do not see it."

"Or your father with mine. But, my friend, your father is dead, not mine."

"My patience is exhausted," said Lindemann. "It is not enough that you hold your own father in such little honor. My father, thank God, is well. I had a letter from him yesterday. If he were dead, my sister would certainly have telegraphed to me."

"Well, that is good. Why did you mourn, then?" "For your father, unhappy, frivolous, incomprehensible man!"

"My father!" said Lieut. Rosenberg, astounded. "Certainly. For whom else? He fell from his horse and broke his neck."

Rosenberg the second turned deathly pale. "I did not know a word of it," he stammered. "Who told you?" "Who told me? Why, you, yourself."

"How, I? That is impossible. I have not seen you today."

"Have not seen me? You called me a half hour ago, on the Market square, to tell me the dreadful news."

Rosenberg the second looked anxiously at his friend. "Lindemann," said he, "I believe there is something wrong with you."

"Quite the contrary. It seems to me there is something wrong with you. You told this same thing to Capt. Klohn!"

"Capt. Klohn! I have not seen him today."

"But I have. I met him as he came from the market-place, and his face was full of tears. He said you staid with the recruits that you had undertaken to drill for your father."

Now Rosenberg the second became angry too. "Did Capt. Klohn tell you that," he asked, "with his own mouth? Then I will go to the captain at once. If I told him that my father was dead he certainly is not, and so it must be that your father is dead. Some father must be, for such a story never came from nothing."

With that he took his sabre under his arm and stalked off, in a very agitated frame of mind, to the captain's house.

The captain was sitting in his room, unable to control himself, when his servant entered and announced that Lieut. Rosenberg was at the door and wished to know if he could speak to him.

"Certainly, certainly," he said; "show him in."

The next moment Lieut. Rosenberg the second appeared.

"My poor young friend!" said the captain, "it was very hard on you, under such sorrowful circumstances, to stay by such recruits so long. I met Lieut. Lindemann and intended to ask him to relieve you, but when I told him the sad news I forgot it. Do not be angry, my young friend. The sudden blow has completely upset me."

Lieut. Rosenberg the second was equally upset. Before he could speak, the captain's short speech confirmed what Lieut. Lindemann had told him. But he had not been near the recruits, and had not spoken either to the captain or Lindemann. It was a story fit for lunatics.

The captain was about to insist upon the young officer being seated, when his thick-headed, red-headed attendant entered the door again. "Captain—the door is—"

"He began, and then glanced at the young officer, and his head became thicker and redder than ever.

"Well, what is it?" urged the old captain. "At the door is—"

"Well, will you let it out? Who is at the door?"

"Lieut. Rosenberg," he answered with trembling. "He wished me to ask if he could speak with you a moment."

The captain and the young lieutenant looked at each other. Lieut. Rosenberg! If he was at the door he could not be dead, too. A gleam of light came to both.

"Lieut. Rosenberg the first?" asked Capt. Klohn of his servant, who stared again at the officer as if a spirit stood before him.

"The captain will pardon me," he replied; "it is Lieut. Rosenberg the second."

The two men were turned to each other in bewilderment.

"Lieut. Rosenberg the second!" repeated Capt. Klohn. "That is impossible—he is here."

"Yes, I certainly see that," said the fellow; "but Lieut. Rosenberg the second is also outside the door."

"You are crazy, fellow. You evidently can not see very well," and Capt. Klohn turned to the officer. "You surely are here. And while you are here, you can not come again."

The lieutenant did not know what to say, so he said nothing.

"Let him come in," said Capt. Klohn. The boy shuffled, cast an appealing look, muttered as if saying his prayers, and went on, stumbling over his own feet. A moment later Lieut. Rosenberg the first entered. New and speechless astonishment. The boy also stepped in to see the result.

"You are Lieut. Rosenberg the second!" said the captain at last.

"The captain will excuse me. I am Lieut. Rosenberg the first."

"That is impossible," said he. "In that case you would be your own father and father of the other Rosenberg, the second, and that can't be, for if you were your own father you would be dead, and could not be here. Heavens! How my head aches! This agitation—"

But all the time the two lieutenants had been looking at each other's eyes. "Father! your hair has turned black," said the son.

"What? My hair black?" he answered. Then he stepped before a mirror, and looked in. "It is," said he in consternation. "There was never such a thing before. That blamed stuff is what did it."

Capt. Klohn now stepped behind him. "Oh!" he exclaimed, "you have dyed your hair so that I didn't know you, and you were naturally wondered at it. Ha! ha! ha! Ha! ha! ha! And you told me your father was dead. But how did you know about it," turning to Rosenberg the second.

"I met Lieut. Lindemann."

"Oh, yes," roared the old captain, "I met Lieut. Lindemann, too. That is a good story, an excellent story."

"That is an excellent story," repeated the boy, who was slapping his left hand with his right hand in great glee. "Will you hold your tongue, boy!" growled the captain.

"I will, Herr Captain.—Translated from the German by Margaret G. Polk.

Why Good Swimmers Drown

A Professor Gives Some Pointers to Swimmers Leaving a Vessel.

A professor of swimming, in conversation the other day with a reporter about the fact that so many good swimmers get drowned when an accident occurs on board of a vessel, said: "The reason is that a good swimmer is liable to take a cramp as a bad swimmer is liable to swim at all. There is where the great danger lies. It is not far from shore, in fact, sea level only a few hundred yards distant, and gives himself as trouble to a good swimmer as to some kind of vessel. He jumps from the sinking or burning boat. He is so sure that the water is cold, that it is November or December and that what he feels so in the summer months he cannot do in the fall and winter seasons. In a few minutes after he reaches the water and boldly begins to swim for the shore, he takes a cramp from the cold water and in a little while sinks. It doesn't take long in cold water to give one a cramp. But in the hurry and excitement of jumping from a boat a swimmer does not consider many an expert swimmer has lost his life by taking a cramp."

My advice to good swimmers is not to rely upon their strength to carry them over 100 yards to shore, if they can get a plank or anything to assist them in floating. They frequently swim too fast, overtaxing their wind in the beginning. They swim slowly at first, keep their mouths closed, breathe through their nose and get out of their shoes and coat, if possible. In reading the like to take the water in, in nearly every instance the land is not far. Yet just as many good swimmers drown as those who cannot swim well. When the land is only a few yards distant, then of course it is not so much due to cramps in the water as to exhaustion and hurry in leaving the vessel. Many are killed by being jumped upon after they reach the water. Others are pulled under by those already struggling in the water. My advice to good swimmers is the master of leaving the vessel to take a jump with a rowl, especially the first wave. Remain until the majority have got into the water and quickly leap into a clear place and strike out."—New York Mail and Express.

McClellan and Burnside in 1862.

Towards evening on Nov. 8, 1862, at Warrenton, McClellan rode up to Burnside's headquarters to say that he had been relieved of the command of the army. Burnside replied: "I am afraid it is bad policy; very, very."

It was just at dark. I had dismounted, and, standing there in the snow, was surprised to see the camp arrangements of my troops, when McClellan came up with his staff, accompanied by Gen. Burnside. McClellan drew in his horse, and the first thing he said was: "Cough, I am relieved from the command of the army and Burnside is my successor."

I stepped up to him and took hold of his hand, and said, "Gen. McClellan, I am sorry for it. Then, going around the head of his horse, I said, "Gen. Burnside, I congratulate you."

JUST IN TIME

BY ADELINE SERGEANT. AUTHOR OF "JACOB'S WIFE," "UNDER FAIR PRETENCES," ETC.

CHAPTER XXX. (continued).

So they set off, and arrived at the inn in time to hear that Lord Morven had preceded them and gone upstairs to see whether the doctor would allow him to enter Gerald's room. For, as Anthony told Beatrice, Gerald thought gentle as a child and apparently quite sane, seemed to be rapidly sinking from exhaustion; and it was doubtful whether the doctor would let him see any other visitors. His wife, as they learned from the landlady, had been admitted; but Beatrice and Lillias, who were waiting in a lower room, were denied entrance.

Presently the doctor himself appeared with tidings. Mrs. Ruthven had come away, and Morven had gone into his brother's room.

There was a pause of intense expectation. And yet no one knew what could be expected from the interview. It was to last minutes only, and the doctor watched the flight of time with watch in hand.

But before ten minutes had elapsed, they heard Morven's foot upon the stair; and looking anxiously through the window, they saw him go along the street, pale indeed as death and with blank unseeing eyes, but with the statelyness of bearing, the pride of lifted head and lordly gesture that had been his characteristic from old. They watched him silently until he was out of sight, and then they drew long breaths of mingled sadness and relief. For they thought the worst was over; and little dreamed that they should see him walk the village street no more.

The night was dark and stormy. Lillias and Beatrice remained at the inn with Maggie, in order to tend the sick man who had been so strangely restored to them, and to care for the child. Anthony and Beatrice, after staying with Mrs. Pirie's house, walking and talking with the old friendliness and confidence which had been broken for a time. They had much to say to each other, and sat far into the night discussing present, past and future.

But where was Stephen Airie, who had disappeared so mysteriously from the scene? And where was Morven, too?

"Airie probably got wind of the true state of affairs very early in the day," said Lockhart to Beatrice Douglas, "and was managed to slip away unobserved. Wretches like him are too clever to be changed as they deserve."

"I'll tell you this," said Beatrice energetically; "if that fellow gets off scot-free, I shall think there's something wrong with the government of the world. I shall indeed. Is he to blight the lives of half-a-dozen men and women, and escape?"

"He will not escape," said Anthony, gravely. "Somewhere—somehow—justice will be done. Not in this world perhaps."

Then he rose and went to the window to look out. Beatrice fancied that he saw him start.

"What's the matter?" he asked. "Nothing. I thought I heard a cry; that was all. The wind, I suppose."

"It's a wild night," said Beatrice. Then they were silent for a time. But they heard nothing more.

A wild night! A will night, indeed. The will howled round the castellated towers of Lord Morven's house; it broke off great branches of the trees and hurled them down like giants in grassy play. The clouds scudded blackly along the sky, with scarce a glimpse of moonlight in between their hurried ranks; the gusts of wind dashed rain in the faces of belated wanderers from time to time. A great tempest was abroad; and to the superstitious it might have seemed as if the souls of the lost and dying were wailing in the midnight air.

And over the cliffs on which the Tower was built there pealed out the sound of strange music—the tune that heralded shame and dishonor to the Morven race—the plaintive melody of "Morven's Lament."

It had often been declared that no living man could stand or walk upon that side of the Towers that fronted the river; but, as Lord Morven knew, there was a natural narrow plateau some twelve feet in length beneath two of the dining room windows, and there was also a difficult path leading to it up the side of the crag. He had known it well in his boyhood, and remembered it when the sound of the Lament fell once more upon his ear. He had been waiting all the evening in Dr. Airie's rooms, waiting perhaps, to settle the last items of his long and terrible account with the little doctor; but now he waited no longer. He made his way downstairs; he went into the dining-room and opened a low side-door, which had long been unused and was generally forgotten. The night air felt cool and fresh upon his brow. He stood upon the plateau of turf above the cliff. It was only four or five feet wide. He listened intently, but the music had died away. He could hear nothing but the dashing of the torrent over the stones below, and the howling of the wind above and around him.

He had not long to wait. Out of the darkness—how did he get there!—a man's figure emerged, creeping and crawling along the face of the cliff. He reached the plateau, then stood erect for a moment, breathing hard, as if exhausted by the climb. A gleam of moonlight shone upon his face and was gone again. But it had done its work. It had shown Lord Morven that the man whom he was seeking, the man for whom he had waited all through the night, the man whom he hated and meant utterly to destroy, stood before him. Stephen Airie had come back to the Towers by this strange and perilous path, because he feared the clutches of the law—and still more the strong hand of the master and victim over whom he had lorded in the hour of his might. But that hour was past.

Morven's hand was at Airie's throat before the doctor felt his presence near. The old man tottered beneath the heavy grasp and tried to plead for mercy. "Is it you I see?" he panted. "Let me go! let me go!" Then, as the grasp relaxed a very little—"Let me go, or I will expose you to the world." But Morven said not a word; he only grasped him more tightly, and shook him as a will beat shakes its prey.

Did he mean to kill the old man and himself? Or had he seized him in a moment of uncontrollable passion in which he was not master of himself and knew not what he did? Who can tell? Nearer and nearer the two men drew to the fatal verge; feebler and yet more frantic grew Airie's struggles. An agonized cry issued from the old man's lips; at last, but Morven spoke no word. There was a terrible crash, the terrific sound of the descent of two human bodies into the gulf of darkness; then silence—silence broken only as before by the rush of the torrent and the unweary wailing of the wind.

CONCLUSION. Thus ended the tale of vengeance and of punishment. The bodies of the two men were found at dawn beneath the cliff, and what Stephen Airie's motive had been—whether greed or lust of power, or as some whispered, revenge for a great wrong committed on a member of his family by Morven's father many years before—, the world would never know. Enough that he had gone to his last account, and that the Ruthvens were henceforth delivered from his blighting influence.

It was rumored long afterwards that he had had a wondering pipeer to play "Morven's Lament" under the window of the old house at certain intervals; but the story could not be verified. Lillias, at any rate, never believed it.

Gerald, now Lord Morven, recovered sufficient strength to travel with his wife and child to the South of France, where the soft air and sunshine restored him to a portion of his former vigor. Maggie, tenderly devoted to him as ever, proved an apt pupil in the arts of a refined and cultured life than one could have anticipated. But she was a woman of really remarkable strength of character; and having made up her mind to become worthy of her position as Lord Morven's wife and Ronald's mother, she spared no pains in accomplishing her end. Old Mrs. Logan and Mrs. Pirie were simply pensioned, and never disturbed her peace. In the stately woman who still guides Gerald's steps, and seems to live for him alone, unconscious of the admiration she excites wherever she goes, you would never recognize the yellow-haired lassie who watched by Mr. Lockhart's bed, or the tragic heroine who vowed to gain her ends and be known as Gerald's wife, in Granny's Lagoon's attic. You would seldom find a happier pair than Lord and Lady Morven.

Beatrice and Lillias left in charge of the Towers, and living on a handsome income settled by Gerald on his sister, as well as on Beatrice's own fortune, are also happy as the day is long. Glembernie has never been re-built. Anthony and Beatrice make their home in London, and spend only two or three months of the year in Scotland. Anthony is an excellent landlord; but it is Beatrice who is practically his working right hand on the estate. For, in spite of Anthony's dislike to the arrangement, Glembernie was transferred to him as his grandfather had willed that it should be. He would not have been penniless without it, for it was found, on examination, that Lord Morven had some time before his death left a large sum of money to Beatrice Esquilmont; but then Anthony would not like to give up his wife's money, and is glad to have something of his own. He went into Parliament soon after his marriage, and is now well known as a staunch supporter of all liberal measures, and especially of those which have for their object the working classes. Perhaps, of the three couples of whom we have spoken, Anthony and Beatrice are the happiest of them all.

Sometimes it occurs to one or another of the personages of our story to wonder to himself or herself what would have happened if Anthony Lockhart had not come back from India with his cousin Beatrice. Would Beatrice have married Morven? Would Beatrice have been separated from Lillias? Would Gerald have perished in the burning house, or died of exhaustion in the gloomy region below to the Towers? It is not only Beatrice who reflects sometimes with a thrill of dismay and also of hearty thankfulness on what might have chanced to all of them, if Anthony had not been brought to their aid, if Anthony had not been "by Heaven's mercy," as Beatrice used to say, "Just in Time!"

THE END.

As a Hero in the Strife. Says America's favorite poet. All very well, Mr. Longfellow, but how can you, when half your time you feel sick, and do not feel the other half. Men of noblest principles and highest aims find their efforts thwarted by disease. Night-sweats, a hacking cough and other symptoms only too plainly say consumption. Heed good advice. Try Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and the bloom of health will return to your cheeks, soundness to your lungs and you will be a hero yet.

Facts and Fictions. In Montana there is still a tendency to crush high lands and pry on the pocketbook and sentiments of the tenderfoot. To cite a single instance of unmitigated gall triumphing over credulity in that section, an English traveler on our train purchased for $50 the arrow that killed Custer. As far as the testimony of history is concerned relative to the dreadful battle scene that lay silent overlooking the banks of the Little Big Horn, the body of the dashing, golden-haired Custer was found untrampled by the hand of the savage Sioux, undisturbed by the touch of an arrow. This fact triumphed over fiction.—Col. Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Heat and Cold. Is a never-failing cause of disease. At this season of the year neuralgia, tooth-ache, and a host of similar diseases are rampant. The great question, then, is, to find the quickest, surest, and most economical remedy. Polson's Nervine exactly fills these requirements. It is prompt, efficient, and most economical, for it excels in power every known remedy, and is as cheap as inferior articles. A 10-cent sample bottle will give every patient a chance to test it. Large bottles only 25 cents.

The Dogs at Newport. Dogs of many sorts one sees in Newport, and some very beautiful ones. Splendid grey St. Bernards of lustrous yellow; fat, low-bodied Deuchs; bunnies for tar-spid dogs; ugly, low-legged bulldogs, etc., meet the eye, and some pet dogs, but not so many as of old. One curious little dog looks like an enlarged and very fat pug. He has pointed ears, and the skin you can see under his pap-pap, through his thin black hair, has a smooth, unpleasing look, which is said to come from his being cold every morning. Like a prize fighter, this dog is in an open wagon of luxury, and belongs to a rich lady of Newport. At one of the florist's stores on the avenue is a tiny Scotch terrier, no larger than a kitten; but he is the child's pet, and very pug-nosed, hence it is called a pug-pug. A man driving in an open wagon on Thames street was seen a few days since with three Scotch terriers sitting on the seat beside him, and not a soul else in the vehicle.—Boston Traveler.

A Fine Fellow. He may be, but if tells you that any preparation in the world is as good as Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor distrust the advice. Imitations only prove the value of each bottle has been placed in plain view. Nothing but the child's own paper of Polson & Co. Get "Putnam's."

Would be a Mean Trick. "Dinky, you be 'cain't in the newspapers that Jay Gould's income is in cents every toime the clock ticks?" "Troib, an' O' did. Wouldn't be a maue trick now if some blaggard was to snake in an' stop 'is clock for 'im."

When symptoms of malaria appear in any form, take Ayer's Sarsaparil at once, to prevent the development of the disease, and continue until health is restored. A cure is warranted in every instance.

War Against Deadheads. The theatrical managers' righteous war against "deadheads" has begun. At one house the following notice has been placed in plain view: "Nothing but the admitted first! Let in lots of it and help the ventilation."—Chicago Journal.

The Stony-Hearted Waiter. Even the stony-hearted waiter at the big summer hotel has to leave a pitying sigh as he looks in through the window from the piazza and sees the old maid watching the children playing kising games.—Cambridge Chronicle.

The tenacity with which people abide by their early fair faith in Ayer's Sarsaparil is explained by the fact that it is the best blood medicine ever used, and is not equalled in excellence by any new candidate for public favor. Little James has been taken suddenly ill, and two playmates have called to know his condition. "An't' Violet, the old family nurse, says, 'De doctor don't know what stan'd trouble; but I n'ots one thing—she ain't been well since plums has been on de market. I tole him 'bout 'cain't dem malaric nos' veg'ables.'—Harpers' Bazar.

Senator Evans recently cabled one of his sentences to Europe, and it is noted as a curious fact that at one time it stretched from shore to shore. The experiment was made to test the capacity of the cable to resist weight, and it was eminently successful. It is estimated that it took the sentence twenty-two minutes to pass a given point.—

ILL-NATURED FOLK

TRAITS OF PERSONS WHO ARE GIVEN UP TO MISANTHROPY.

No Plant Repays Cultivation Better Than Good Nature—Why Some Men Fall—A Selfish Boyhood—Disappointed Men. Modern Alcees. No plant repays cultivation better than good nature. There is no lack of kindness in this world of ours, but quite a large section of society allows it to run to waste, and in time it evaporates and disappears. It is largely a matter of education and habit. Spoiled children are allowed to get into a temper when they do not get what they want. They grow up into cross-grained men and women, and after a time they lose the power of controlling their crabb'd instincts. Men of well balanced minds are taught sooner or later that we are all more or less dependent on each other, and that no one can afford to be a misanthrope. But the rarest thing in life is a well balanced mind which possesses the faculty of introspection. Men go through life without friends, and wonder that they do not achieve the success their talents would justify; it rarely occurs to them to analyze the causes of their failure; if they did, they would find that just about the same fortune as the flood, they lacked friendly help, or they met opposition from some one they had offended without cause.

A SULLEN, SULKY BOY. The ill-natured man was usually a sullen, sulky boy. He kept himself aloof from his schoolfellows. He was morose in his family, and possessed such a capacity for making himself disagreeable that he was promptly obeyed and waited upon for peace sake. He saw a gain in his ill temper and he cultivated it accordingly. As he grows to manhood he finds that more exertion than is needed for the success of his undertakings, and his opinion of the policy of cherishness rises higher. Bright men cannot be kept under, and if he possesses capacity, he makes his way. It costs him more exertion than it need have done if he had had allies; but he is content to owe nothing to any one.

To be a self-made man, to owe his success to his own exertions, suits his solitary nature. He drives his plow through society; careless of what little frail plants he uproots by the way. He is a positive, self-asserting individual, and acquaintances avoid discussion with him for the sake of their lives. He will be no party to the little harmless deaths by which the polite people render life pleasant to each other. He calls a spade a spade, Jones a lout and Smith a fool. He has an unerring eye for the detection of lambs in a flock, and loves to let bare. To appreciate and commend virtue and merit strike him as namby pamby; to put his finger in the hole which a directing angel has just struck him as more worthy of a man of intellect.

DISAPPOINTED MEN. We laugh at Alceste when he declares that he hates everybody and wants to live in a desert so as not to see a human face. But there are lots of Alcestes all round us. They are mostly disappointed men—men who have made unfortunate marriages and have unhappy homes; men who have formed exalted opinions of their own genius, and feel that the world is not treating them justly; men who upon plodding advancement is too slow, and who are filled with envy at the more rapid progress of their fellows. Molieres' Alceste declared that it was the bounden duty of an honest man to tell every one his faults.

Fears of physical punishment usually deter our modern Alcestes from being as frank and direct as their forefathers were. They say that they console themselves by speaking ill of every one behind their backs. The higher the individual, the purer his character; the wider his popularity, the less is their calumny. It is their joy and their pride to traduce those who by their station cannot resist the assault. They love to circulate scandal about women who have no natural protection to seek out non-combatant and stick a knife in them; to select the weak, the defenseless, the wounded and the bruised, to trample them down.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Last Year.—1886. After the above year is ended there need be no person suffering from Rheumatism, Toothache, Headache, Lumbago, or any acute pain, if they only purchase a bottle of Fluid Lightning, as it cures instantly. Pain cannot stay where it is used. The name is Fluid Lightning. Sold by G. Rhyans, druggist.

We would therefore advise you strongly if you are a subject of any of the above troubles to give Mc Gregor's Speedy Cure a trial and be convinced. It is sold in 50c and $1 bottles at G. Rhyans' drug store.

THROUGH THE AIR

Successful Voyage From Cherbourg to London in a Steering Balloon.

The balloon Torpilles, which fitted with a patent steering and propelling apparatus, and in which the aeronaut L'Hoste and astronomer Mangot ascended from Cherbourg, France, at 11 o'clock last Thursday evening, descended in London at 6 o'clock the next morning. The aerial navigators returned to Cherbourg, and will attempt a voyage from that place to Norway. The most recent feat, with conclusive proofs in the new born science of balloon navigation was performed in France on September 24, 1885, by the young military engineer, the brothers Renard, from the camp at Chalon, within a few miles from Paris. Starting at 4:25 p. m., the aeronauts reached Point du Jour after 5 p. m., returning to the camp at 5:25 p. m.—a distance of three miles each way. On this journey in the outward trip the wind was against them, opposing the advance of the apparatus toward the capital at the rate of four metres per second. The rate of speed of the balloon, as recorded by the "log balloon," was twenty metres per second. The revolution of the screw was fifty-five per minute; its diameter seven metres. The volume of the balloon was 1800 cubic metres, filled with pure hydrogen gas. The machine was eight horse power, constructed by M. Gramme, with a battery by Captain Renard, weighing in all 320 kilos, and capable of working at the rate of four to five hours. The whole journey was performed with perfect evenness, and the balloon covered about five miles. After the journey Captain Charles Renard said: "I consider the problem of aerial navigation solved by the results of our experiment. A journey was also made on Sept. 28, with much the same results, the only difference being that the wind with the aerial boat going out against the wind at the rate of the rate of one metre per second. The distance covered was about five miles. On November 2, 1884, Captains Renard and Krebs made a balloon voyage from Mendon to Bellacourt, and returned, alighting at a point from which they started in forty-five minutes. This was the third attempt made by Captain Renard with his balloon and steering apparatus, the second having proved a failure. His first attempt was in August, 1884, with such good results as to create the greatest interest in all the military circles of Europe. The balloon was eight metres in diameter and pointed at each extremity. In the car were seats for two aeronauts, and the balloon had a direct acting steering apparatus. The force was obtained by a series of electric accumulators of ten horse power, and the balloon was operated for four hours. On October 29, 1885, an experiment took place at the Place de la Defense, Courbevoie, Paris, under M. Brisson, but the cable apparatus failed and the result was consequently unsatisfactory.

In June, 1879, Professor Grimley started from New York in the air ship Canada, but he had a fearful experience and came near losing his life owing to the poor quality of gas used. In September, 1879, Professor C. R. Ritchie's air ship was sent up at Hartford, Conn. It consisted of a balloon above and a vertical mast from which a screw was used for steering purposes, and a horizontal screw for steering. The result was anything but a success, and the balloon was forced down, but at a little increase above that force, it drifted miles to leeward.

The Last Swindle. Some time ago a couple of young gentlemen came to this city with a patent law. They took the absolute measurement of the foot and the hand, and the result was a perfect fit. It was to be that any shoemaker could, by using it, make a boot or shoe which would be a perfect fit. They asked $5 a pair for them. One of the victims talking with a representative of this paper, said: "I took a pair with the rest, and there was scarcely a business man in the city who did not give them a pair. The result was a perfect fit. I paid for mine and placed them on one side. Some weeks after I thought I needed a pair of shoes and took them down to my shoemaker. He commenced to laugh as soon as he saw me, and pointing to a large pile of last's feet, said: 'You could give me base ball tips, and horse-shoe tips, and regatta tips, but nobody had any ostrich tips, and I gave it up as a bad job. You but at him close for an instant, took in the situation, and mutual explanations resulted in an amicable settlement.'

Love Episode in a Prince's Household. A genuine love episode in the Prince of Wales's household has recently attracted a pleasant degree of attention. Mr. Robertson, a personal attendant of the princess, has been seriously ill at Windsor for several weeks. A firewoman of the princess, when the illness seemed likely to result fatally, declared that she loved the sick man, though she had previously rejected his addresses. The result was that she was married to him while he lay seriously ill, nursed him to recovery, and afterwards the princess organized a household fête in celebration of the happy event.

A Word to the Girls. Let not the virgins of the far east be beguiled by fables of the wealthy cowboys in Montana and Wyoming who are said to be prancing up and down the land in search of wives. As a rule these claps are loafers and the woman who is led away by stories of their fabulous riches is simply a fool. The real men on the frontier who want honest wives do not seek them by methods of cheap advertising.

Newspaper Notoriety Catches Them. A Miss Derby at Newport, being chided by her aunt for appearing in an immodest bathing dress, replied: "Why, aunt! I don't think myself that it is exactly the thing for a young girl, and I am sure it is not what it was very wicked, but then it was described in such glowing and attractive terms that I could not resist getting one." Such is poor, weak human nature.

Honesty The Best Policy. As honest medicine is the noblest work of man, and we can assure our readers that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is not only reliable, but is almost infallible to cure Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Canker of the Stomach and bowels, and the various Summer Complaints, whose attacks are often sudden and fatal.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health. Ten years ago my health began to fall. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured. It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Hairy, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 883 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

STRAITPORT, Aug. 28, 1885. About three years ago I was laid up with bronchitis, and for a x months was unable to do any thing. Four bottles of Dr. J. C. "Goderich has the reputation up this way of being a dull place. Its newspapers, however, have a splendid advertising patronage, and would seem to reflect a prosperous community. There were a number of fowl and a good overcoat in the stable, and Mr. McFarlane thinks that some thieves were around, and that the place was fired by them either purposely or accidentally. There is no insurance.

W. B. Chilton, who for many years has been connected with the United States coast and geodetic survey, is on a visit to his parents here. His brother, Percy Chilton, left town on Tuesday—his stay at home having been cut short by the receipt of a telegram from New York summoning him thither in haste. A flurry in the stock market probably led to the curtailing of his yearly vacation.

Old "Rock", the once popular trotter, but for some years ago horse, was kicked by a stable mate on Sunday morning, and as one of its legs was broken, it had to be killed. This veteran was many admirers in his day, and his name and decease will call up a host of recollections in the minds of some of our local sports. Rock pulled the stage for nearly six years, without missing a day.

THE GODERICH SIGNAL has just entered upon its seventh year under the management of the McGillivray Bros. THE SIGNAL, which is one of the oldest newspapers in the West, appears to have renewed its youth under the present management. It is an able exponent of Liberal principles, and a live go-ahead journal. May it long continue to prosper.—Galt Reformer.

THE FALL TRADE.—Elsewhere in this issue will be found the full circular of H. W. Brethour & Co., Brautford. This enterprising firm has used the columns of THE SIGNAL for advertising purposes for several years past, and has succeeded in giving entire satisfaction to ladies of Goderich who have thus far favored it with orders. What H. W. Brethour & Co. advertise can be depended upon.

TEMPERANCE MEETING.—A temperance meeting under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. will be held in the Temperance Hall on Tuesday evening, Sept. 28th. An address will be delivered by D. E. Cameron, banker, of Lucknow. The public is cordially invited to attend. The meeting will begin promptly at 7:30 o'clock. Suitable music will be provided. A collection will be taken.

We have this week to return our best thanks to Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Taylor, of Toronto, for a piece of choice wedding cake, which came to hand Tuesday last. Our old friend Archie has at last joined the benedictine ranks, the partner of his copy being Mrs. E. W. Warworth, of Ingersoll, and the congratulations of his numerous friends in this section go in to showers upon him. The happy event took place on Monday, Sept. 13th.

A LOCAL LIGHT.—Among the actors in the "Long Strike," given by the Cohen Company on Saturday evening last at S. O. H. was Percy Mackid, (formerly of Goderich), who took the dual part of Mr. Armitage, a manufacturer, and the Judge. Mr. Mackid, it will be remembered, was formerly a resident of Brautford, he having been in his brother's drug store, and Goderich branch, and has travelled more miles by rail than any other railroad man of our knowledge. He has no intention of giving up the business yet, and looks good for another thirty years.

A VETERAN RAILWAY MAN.—Conductor Dan Holmes, formerly of the Goderich division of the B. & L. R., and now on the Southern Division of the same line, was in town during the week, receiving congratulations with old acquaintances and familiar faces. He entered his thirty-first year as conductor on the 12th of August, and stands the oldest conductor of any in Canada. He was two years on the Northern before he came to the Goderich and Goderich branch, and has travelled more miles by rail than any other railroad man of our knowledge. He has no intention of giving up the business yet, and looks good for another thirty years.

GOT THE PENSION AT LAST.—Mrs. Andrew Green, of Colborne, had a son who died in the American army in 1862, and in July, 1873, through the assistance of J. E. Deane applied to Washington for the pension allowed in such cases. Since that time there has been a continued correspondence between Mr. Gordon and the U. S. authorities, with apparently little prospect of success until the late arrival of Mr. Deane, who interviewed the commissioner of pensions, with the result that Mrs. Green has been awarded the sum of $2,308 as back pension and interest up to March last, and will thereafter receive $12 per month besides.

THE BIGGEST EGG YET.—Last Saturday afternoon, our old friend conductor Deane, dropped into our sanctum and presented us with a box, containing an egg which, as a curiosity, beats anything we have ever seen, as sure as "eggs is eggs." The egg in question is 9 inches measured around long way by 7 inches the other, and weighed 45 ounces. When the shell was broken, it was found to contain a second egg, complete, inside, together with an extra yoke. The phenomenon is on view at this office, and people anxious to see the freak of nature can drop in at any time. The egg was laid by a common hen belonging to James Robinson, Trafalgar street. We are thinking of sending it to Mr. Farrow, M. P., the hen champion in Parliament.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIAL.—The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, in connection with North St. Methodist church, held a social in the basement of the church Friday evening last, which was largely attended. After refreshments had been served, the chair was taken by Rev. G. R. Turk, the pastor, and the intellectual part of the program proceeded with. An address was given by the chairman, after which quartettes, duets, solos and readings were rendered, in which the following vocalists took part: Misses Eiland, Berry and Henderson, and Messrs. Delcher, Halls and Armstrong. Miss Trueman presided at the organ in her usually able manner. Rev. G. F. Salton, D. McGillivray, S. Sloane and Rev. J. McGilivray were also called upon to address the gathering. Altogether a most enjoyable time was spent, and the young folk of North street deserve credit for the entire entertainment.

Salford. Miss K. Dall, of the junior division, is leaving in order to complete her studies at the Model School in town.

A couple of deer visited this neighborhood last week. A pair of otter sportsmen have been in pursuit of them.
