CHAPTER XXV.
HOW MISS VILLIERS PROSPERS IN PASTURES NEW.

"It is—as I trust—simply a question of her maintenance which separates you, if you scruple to use the means of one daughter for the support of the other, will you permit me, out of warm regard for Sydney, to send you a yearly remittance, which will, I think, cover the expense of her residing with you? This could be strictly between ourselves. It would gratify me and surely conduce to your own comfort."

"Mrs. Alwyn long balanced the pros and cons of this offer. The arrangement might be private; i.e., nothing now or, perhaps, ever need be said to Sydney of the major's share in it. The reconciliation would look well, would redound to her credit. The sum offered by the major would more than defray the cost of Sydney's living, and that was no mean consideration, for the hasty retreat from St. Clair's, the ill-considered purchase and angry transfer of the Dale, had diminished her principal. Mrs. Alwyn appreciated and pointed out these advantages clearly to Leonard, but that mere-never elegant dame made quite a Parisian moue at the notion of her husband's return, saying "only the Sydney's costume will be of the ark description, mamma. She may impress Mr. Morecombe-Wood with an unfavorable idea of our connections; or, illegitimately capping this with a sincerer excuse, "he may take to admiring—preferring her."

"Not the least likely, dear, foolish child. It would be my immediate duty to make it known she shared only my home, not your fortune. Mr. Morecombe-Wood was saying "only the other day it was a miserable thing for a woman to marry without dot. It placed her at a disadvantage from the outset. I entirely agreed with him, and said I should never permit my child to enter any family undowered. Sydney may come, for all that. He would never think of her now."

"He" never had the opportunity. A note, most coldly worded, about which hung the odor of yet unpardoned offense, offered Sydney the option of return. Promptly came reply in shape of a refusal. Grateful (more than there was need for, had the writer known all), anxiously thankful for these late-fung crumbs of maternal solicitude, but still refusal: "Mainly," said Sydney's letter, "because of something fresh I have learned, mother, which seems to bid me stay at Wynstone, as the place above all others where I ought to go on working. I will tell you in my next exactly what I mean by this if you will give me leave."

"But I shall not give her leave!" cried Mrs. Alwyn, quite ready to take affront at her overtures being declined, and possibly having a dim suspicion of the reason. "I require no explanation of what I understand only too well. It is the old story. Her will against my wish, and we very well know which always wins."

CHAPTER XXVI.
SYDNEY'S NEW WAY TO PAY OLD DEBTS.

It is to be hoped a better reason than the bald one imputed by her mother will be found for Sydney's refusal to rejoin Mrs. Alwyn by those who have followed her fortunes thus far.

For truly that chapter of the Hurst's history disclosed on New Year's Eve carried her with one great gust clean out of the becalmed haven of Wynstone's light duties once more into the deep waters of indebtedness, which this time appeared unshakable—past all her power of paying off.

Long after her employer had concluded her plaintive good-night—and, indeed, long after the agitated lady was asleep, and dreaming that Mr. Babbington brought three little children and shut them up in her dining-room, declaring she must take care of them, for he could not—Sydney still sat wide awake, seeking up and down among her senses how she could fulfill the Tantalus task she had undertaken. For a long while the search was utterly unproductive, and she smarted faint to lay her head upon her arms, and christen the year's first hours with a flood of hopeless tears.

But hopelessness and Sydney were never for long allies. The courage which last summer's disasters had failed to quench mounted with this new occasion. Quickly she rose—noiselessly paced the room, thinking. Money she had none wherewith to open the terrible rift in two lives, caused by credulous trust in her father's counsel; but youth, health, vigor, were hers. These she would spend unstintingly—ah, she would pour them out!—in aiding endurance of what was past cure. She had been wondering of late how long this service of hers would last. Now she knew. As long as she lived. Only at the very end should those she meant to dedicate her days to find it was John Alwyn's daughter who had been laboring to win back succorance for the name now stigmatized as the source of all their troubles. Her sensitiveness was too acute to let her weigh aright the responsibility accredited to her father. Her generous pity, maybe, cast a glamour of romance over Miss Jean's story. But there was not a spark of romance, only pure, brave womanliness, without one jot or title of other feelings, in the resolve she reached. Before a little locked-up cabinet she stopped, took forth a faded likeness, and stroked it tenderly. Her eyes, beautiful and steadfast as twin stars, shone out through the last of her tears. The warm color stole back to her white cheeks. Her breath came fast. The wind outside was sobbing and wailing round the house; the rush of the river sung an angry second. Just now she had felt as storm-tossed as they, but now on her heart there fell a wonderful and childlike calm. Casting the incense of her care upon a Power every day taught her the better to trust, she stood at her window with clasped hands, looking forth into the darkness, promising that invisible presence, which was her life's companion, "With the best I have, the very best, I will make them amends, father!"—and so met the new year fearlessly.

The next morning brought her mother's letter. Chill though it was, restful at its outer cost Sydney no longer pang. The old hungering for affection asserted itself strongly at the first note of favor. But chained afresh, as now she found herself, not a hundred-fold more temptation that Mrs. Alwyn's measured lines held out would have taken her from Wynstone. Definitely her "no" was written and dispatched. The cause of that "no" she dared not add without permission, well knowing it would only reopen the old bitter dispute, and as this permission never came, under Mrs. Alwyn's perverse judgment she had to lie till time, the great redresser of many wrongs, removed the unmerited ban.

One confidant she had, Jacob Cheens. To him she wrote what she suspected was no news, and back came the candid admission that he had known throughout who her employers were.

"But, while I heard you were peaceful at Capel Moor, with nothing to complain of, I thought my knowledge best kept to myself. The Hurst's are kindly by breeding, and come of honorable stock. There were Hurst's, gentefolks, at Stillcote, generations before your own name was transplanted there two was one of that quartet who used to meet at Stuart's every week. I knew that in their home you might be better done by than among richer and prouder people; and I thought that if ever this which you have just heard old reach your ears, you could come up to me, if that course seemed best to you. It never entered my calculations you should take it, so hard."

Thus Jacob answered her, and urged with even-handed shrewdness and liveliest regard for his old master's daughter, that she might with a clear conscience hold herself exonerated as her father's vicar from every vestige of blame in this loss of the Hurst's. What Mr. Alwyn failed to foresee for himself, how could he foretell for others? No professional man would dare to give advice if his actions were to be thus afterwards. Miss Hurst had colored her tale too highly, Miss Sydney had magnified the imputation—had accepted it too readily. She must let him, who valued his master's honor second to none but herself, arbitrate for her now. She must give up Wynstone, since she had learned this, and come to him. He would so gladly have her if his home was not beneath her sharing. But he was getting better off—a little. All his had done last summer had set his narrow income free. For awhile it would be plenty for them both. By and by they would see what was to be done. And when would his dear Miss Sydney come?

"Never, good old Jacob!" was her silent verdict; but there came a haub about her downcast eyes, and a treacherous tremulousness about her soft, feeble lips, white, with words loving and gentle as fire, she penned her answer to the friend her father had cherily humanity had purchased for her fifty years before.

BEFORE AND AFTER CHILDBIRTH

Mrs. Williams Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Kept Her in Health

Overpeck, O.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me both before and after my baby was born. I suffered with back-ache, headaches, was generally run down and weak. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the newspapers and decided to try it. Now I feel fine, take care of my two boys and do my own work. I recommend your medicine to anyone who is ailing. You may publish my testimonial if you think it will help others."—Mrs. CAROL WILLIAMS, Overpeck, Ohio.

For more than forty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been restoring women who suffered from irregularities, displacements, backache, headaches, bearing-down pains, nervousness, and "the blues." Today there is hardly a town or hamlet in the United States wherein some woman does not reside who has been made well by it. That is why Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is now recognized as the standard remedy for such ailments.

PARKER & MONROE, Ltd., THE SHOE MEN

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

WHAT IS GOING ON BEHIND THOSE EYES.
 Don't you often wonder when a child looks at you from grave, inscrutable eyes what is going on behind them?
 And don't you fancy that if we could find out, we should often be astonished and perhaps sometimes displeased?

grownup particularly loves (though why, I cannot imagine, for I do not think I ever saw a child respond to it). "I don't believe Ann has any tongue, I think she's lost it," she cried brightly, "Ann can't talk, can she?" Ann made absolutely no response to this, but after her visitor had gone she said to her mother, "What made Mrs. S. say such silly things about my tongue?"
 It would be interesting to know, wouldn't it, how many of the children whom grownups are attempting to catch by that old subterfuge, are wondering behind that sphinx-like silence, what makes said grownups so silly?

Determined Not to Encourage Such Hypocrisy.
 A man who has that rather rare faculty of remembering some of the points of view which he held before he became a member of the adult race, says it always made him absolutely "set" to have some would-be clever adult try to force him to go upstairs and do an errand which he felt was his sister's rightful job, by saying, "I know why Richard went up, he is afraid to go up in the dark." He wasn't the least afraid, he said, and he knew they didn't think so, and whereas he might have gone before, he was determined not to encourage them in that ridiculous unfair method.

What Ethel Was Thinking
 A clever cartoonist had some tures recently of grownups in relationship to children. Of them which I particularly liked, I pictured a coy maiden friend of years old, Ethel's mother had Ethel's doll on her knee and was an idiotic dialogue between and herself. Ethel sits looking evidently not at all intrigued and caption comments, "Seldom has been more ashamed."
 Maybe we should be surprised we knew how often, behind those grateful eyes, instead of shame and wonder at our prowess and wit, are some such smothered Ethel's.

Household Notes.

Correspondence on Irish Question.

Official Text of Both Leaders-- Door of Negotiations Left Open-- Confidence Expressed by Lead- ers--Russian Bolsheviks Execute Women.

LLOYD GEORGE'S REPLY.
LONDON, Sept. 8.—Lloyd George's letter to the Valera, Irish Republican leader, which was forwarded to Dublin on the morning of the British Cabinet meeting, yesterday, seems at least to indicate that the Sinn Fein plenipotentiaries will meet the special committee of Cabinet Ministers at Inverness on September 20 for the purpose of settling up any ambiguity which the Sinn Fein leaders may entertain about the negotiations with the British Government regarding the Dominion status. The Prime Minister's letter, like all his communications since the Irish negotiations began, is characterized by a certain consideration for Sinn Fein. While it suggests the date for a proposed conference, it is in no way an ultimatum and sets no time limit on the negotiations. Those close to the Premier say that he earnestly wishes to discuss our proposals on their merits and that it will be open to the Sinn Fein leaders to raise the subject of Dominion status in any particular point of their reply. It is almost universal to-night that the Valera will accept. That what the Prime Minister offers is what De Valera desires, namely, an untrammelled conference with the single condition that Ireland remains in the British Empire. The guarantee which De Valera is supposed to have in mind are the terms of the League of Nations and the principle of the Government would be to grant.

TEXT OF LETTER.
LONDON, Sept. 8.—The text of Lloyd George's letter, which was despatched to Dublin from London, Scotland, yesterday, in answer to the latest note from Eamon De Valera, Irish leader, follows:—
"The British Government has considered your letter of August 30 and has made the following observations:—
1. The principle of government of the Dominion of Ireland is the subject of the British Constitutional Convention, but we cannot accept as a basis of a practical conference the proposition that principles which we submit to us to any demands you may present, even to the extent of setting up a Republic and repudiating the Crown. You must be aware that we cannot accept as a basis of government the principle of government by consent of the governed. We must determine the fabric of every State and drive the civilisation back into tribalism. On the other hand we have invited you to discuss proposals on their merits in a conference which you may have no doubt as to the sincerity of our intentions. It would be open to you in such a conference to raise the subject of Dominion status on any points in which you consider Irish freedom prejudiced by our proposals. His Majesty's Government is loath to believe that you intend upon the rejection of their proposals without examining them in a conference. To decline to discuss a subject which would bestow upon the people the fullest freedom for national development within the Empire can only mean that you repudiate allegiance to the Crown and all membership in the British Commonwealth. If we are to draw this inference from your letter further discussion between us would serve no purpose and all conferences be in vain. However, we are mistaken in this, as we still hope, and if you object to our proposals it is better that you offer Ireland less than we have described, that object can be explored at the conference. You will agree that this correspondence has lasted long enough. His Majesty's Government must, therefore, have a definite reply as to whether you are prepared to enter conference to discuss how the association of Ireland with the community of nations of the British Empire can best be reconciled with Irish national aspirations. If, as we hope, your answer is in the affirmative, I suggest the conference should meet at Inverness on the 20th instant."

PRESS COMMENTS.
LONDON, Sept. 8.—The message sent to the Sinn Fein leaders following the meeting of the British Cabinet at Inverness, was an invitation to Eamon De Valera to send delegates to a conference to be held on September 20th. It was within the Empire, were printed several newspapers here to-day, which upon those reports express the opinion that the door to peace has been left open. "The Government has Helpless as the town is in the absence of a supply of water, due to the prolonged drought, it is realized that nothing could save the rest of the town in the event of high wind springing up. It was stated this morning that the loss would approximate one quarter of a million dollars or half million dollar from replacement standpoint. Total insurance carried approximates $150,000.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN BRITAIN.
LONDON, Sept. 8.—Mine flooding in Eastern Scotland during the late coal strike is now found to be greater than was originally anticipated, and two thousand of the Mid-Lothian workers have been unable to resume work in the mines. There are now eight thousand men idle in the country and the position of the workers is steadily growing worse. In Manchester there are now 19,000 in the ranks of the unemployed. This is an increase of one thousand over last week. The response to an appeal for voluntary relief funds in several parts of the country has been disappointing. Doubtless the reason for this is because those who usually are generous under such circumstances are proportionally hard hit themselves, although Speed Artistes.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—Very frequently there appears in your widely read paper accounts of furious driving and carelessness on the part of motorists in the city. These people, or the majority of them, appear to be the sole owners of the country roads 'too. If one is to judge by the high speed at which they drive on the various highways. This is more noticeable at night time and if one happens to live in the country and his business keeps him in town until after dark, it is at the risk of his life or limb that he walks home. On most of the country roads there are no sidewalks, and consequently the pedestrian has to vamp it along the path where at any moment, and without warning, a motor car may fly past. If a man is fortunate enough to have a small garden and keep a few poultry, these speeding motorists care not if they crush them to death, should they happen to get in the road way; in fact that seems a particular form of sport for them. Yet these people if on their time or for ride, happen to meet with a breakdown, they expect to find country folks most obliging and agreeable. It would be well if those road hogs would ask themselves why they are so often spurned by these people of whose lives and property they are so careless of.

Yours truly,
Sept. 9, 1921. SUBURBAN.

Through With School, Now What?

The answer is entirely up to yourself! It is only a question of whether or not you are properly trained. Every man pays for a business training whether he gets it or not, pays for it in smaller salary, in harder work, in dissatisfaction, in fewer opportunities.

At the City Hall.

Weekly meeting of the Council held yesterday evening. Mayor, President, and Councilors present. Minutes of the last meeting read and confirmed.

Mayor, on behalf of the Council, extended congratulations to Mr. Hallett, the newly appointed Mayor. Mr. Hallett thanked the Council for his kind words, and expressed his co-operation with the Council in the betterment of the city.

The past week the Council held a special meeting, at which the City Charter was discussed. Several sections needing attention were dealt with, the forthwith action, which, under Section 10, must take place not later than the 15th day of December next.

It was decided the necessary action should be taken immediately. Mr. Hallett reported having interviewed Mr. F. J. Doyle in reference to the above matters. Mr. Doyle has been returning Officer for Municipal and Governmental purposes in the past, stated that it would be impossible to carry out the provisions for the coming election within the time allowed, and that, in his opinion, it would take at least seven months to complete arrangements in this connection.

It was ordered that the Government be communicated with immediately in regard to the above.

Mr. Hallett, replying to Council communication in regard to necessary for improvements at St. Thomas's Church, stated that matter would be brought before the Council at the next meeting for consideration.

The Secretary of the Truckmen's Union asked that the divided Municipal Works truckmen, who are evenly amongst city truckmen, be inspected by the City.

It was possible in this matter. The residents of Caddy Street, Outer's Lane petitioned for a road in this locality. This was acceded to.

C. Pratt, DeMarchant Road, in reference to battle damage to property, the attention of the Mayor is to be called to the following plans were passed.

Order: E. Smith, dwelling, (North Street); J. Dawson, extensive business; Road; R. Hibbs, Marymassey Road; S. A. Hutchins, Quill Vidi Road.

Plans for garages for E. Coffin, Outer's Lane, and R. G. Ross, Paterson Street, were referred to the City Council.

Permits for repairs, subject to the approval and direction of the City Council, are to be issued the following: E. Bedell and M. J. Murphy, Kings Street.

Mr. Hallett and Company were ordered to permit to install an electric light on their premises, Backworth Street.

The City Engineer reported that work of raising the 16' main at the River was successfully completed on Tuesday last.

The Long Bridge, O'Dwyer's and the Bridge are at present being repaired.

Reports of City Health Officer, Dr. J. J. Murphy, and other Departments were read and the payrolls and bills were submitted and ordered paid, after which the meeting adjourned.

Terminated Officially on Aug. 31st.

A recent meeting of the Privy Council at Buckingham Palace, His Majesty the King approved an Order in Council with respect to the date at which the late war is officially ended. The Order provided for the official termination at midnight on August 31st, 1914, and will be of general application in regard to the Ottoman Empire. This matter, although formal, is of very considerable importance, because so many matters of international interest are dependent upon the date at which the war is officially terminated to be at an end.

SMALL INSURANCE.—The amount of insurance carried on the stores of Mr. Vardy at Hickman's Harbor, which were recently destroyed by fire, was only $15,000. Three stores containing a supply of general goods, were completely destroyed. The owner will suffer a very serious loss as a result of the fire.

Secret Romances. It is really remarkable how many cases have come into the Courts lately where a man and woman have gone through the marriage ceremony, separated at the door of the church or registry office, and then lived their lives apart.

Semi-marriages of this kind take place in considerable numbers every year. During and since the war they have increased enormously. Not so long ago a certain nobleman, much interested in politics, fell in love with the daughter of a viscount, and for party reasons it was most inexpedient that he should marry her.

Not so long ago a certain nobleman, much interested in politics, fell in love with the daughter of a viscount, and for party reasons it was most inexpedient that he should marry her. But both were young and impetuous, and although a public marriage was out of the question they were wed in secret, returning to their homes immediately afterwards.

A strange case of a secret marriage of this kind was brought to light when a steamer came to grief in the Bay of Biscay and many lives were lost. One of the victims was a beautiful girl on her way to friends on the Riviera. When her body was recovered from the sea a wedding ring was found on her finger.

Such instances could be multiplied by hundreds, but I will give just one more. And here, as a contrast, there was a happy ending. A few years ago a young man with a wealthy guardian was madly in love with a pretty girl. The old man objected strongly to the match, but all his efforts to part the lovers were unavailing.

"No one else shall be my wife," declared the young man. "You are a fool," said his guardian. "Do as I wish, and with the money I shall leave you you may be able to marry a woman of title."

For some time the other held out, but at last gave way. "If you consent not to make me marry anyone at all," he said, "I will promise that at no time in the future will I wed the girl you object to."

The unresponsible guardian, thinking he had triumphed, willed all his money to his ward. Three years later he died, and then the young man installed in his home as his wife the girl he had secretly married before he had given his guardian the carefully-worded promise. In the interval she had been living with her parents.

Ward's Unlucky Lumberman's Friend. When cutting posts at Marsteller, Island of Whalery, a woman turned up, at a depth of 3 feet 5 inches from the surface, a finger ring of black plated gold wire, in perfect condition, and beautifully made, the ends being beaten together very neatly. The ring has been secured for the National Museum of Antiquities, Queen Street, Edinburgh, and is pronounced by the authorities to be a Norse ring of the period of the Viking occupation of the islands. It is said to be the second ornament of gold to have been found in the Shetland Islands, the first being the beautiful Orna bracelet or armlet.

Bandit King of Corsica.

KEEPS PRIVATE ARMY TO DEFEY GENDARMES. That Corsica is still the land of the lawless type of bandit may be gauged by the story told in "Le Matin" by one of its correspondents who describes the romantic life of the famous Corsican bandit Romanetti-Ronco in these terms:—

On May 8 last 15,000 persons were mustered in the public square of Ajaccio. Among them were a Marshal of France, an Italian prefect, newspaper men, parliamentarians, an archbishop, two prelates, and a large number of priests, a small army of photographers, a few gendarmes, the Prefect of Corsica, and M. Romanetti-Ronco, the bandit. All were in a happy mood and fraternized. Romanetti displayed a perfect and disinterested attitude. Indeed he was an example of moderation, for he was there in close disguise. This man, who received the archbishop's blessing and applauded the speeches was a much-wanted man. He had been three times sentenced to death. Seven warrants were out for his arrest, and during the past eight years every effort had been made to arrest him.

An Infamous Traffic. His first acquaintance of the law dates back to 1909. He had just been married, and, as he was poor and intended to supply his wife with all the possible luxuries of Marseille, he joined a gang of ruffians who piloted an infamous traffic. He attempted to induce a young girl of good family to follow him. Her mother interfered. The Corsican killed the girl with a dagger and narrowly escaped being taken prisoner by the girl's friends, who witnessed the murder. He was finally caught and sent to prison for three years. He returned to Corsica in 1913 and turned cattle thief. A farmer accused him of stealing his cattle. Romanetti thought it safer to escape to the hills than to have to answer the charge of sheep-stealing, and was sentenced in his absence to five years' imprisonment. A few days after the sentence the cattle dealer who was the chief witness for the prosecution was shot dead.

Then five gendarmes who happened to come across Romanetti in the bush fell under his deadly gun, as also did a couple of his followers who were seeking to mend their ways and live honest lives. At the end of 1913 there were seven warrants for murder against him, but he defied the gendarmes and took up the life of a country farmer on the plains of lava.

How He Wins Races. His annual revenue is stated to be at least £300, which allows of his keeping a body-guard composed of deserters and bandits, a motor-car, and a splendidly organized intelligence department, which permits him immunity from surprise visits by gendarmes. He actually owns a racing stud, and last year his colours won a race at Bolognoso. He had little difficulty in winning, as he had informed the other racehorse owners that if he did not win they would be killed.

A Kidnapped Bride. Mrs. Helen Whalley, a bride, recently arrived at San Francisco after one of the most thrilling adventures that has befallen a white woman in recent times. And it came near to turning her honeymoon into tragedy. She was kidnapped by a band of natives on one of the Fiji Islands, and was held a prisoner three days before she was finally rescued by an armed band led by her frantic husband, Jesse Whalley. Blonde and extremely attractive in face and figure, and always fashionably attired, Mrs. Whalley holds the attention of all who behold her. Her beauty hypnotized the natives of the island where she and her husband and their party landed during a thirteen months' tour of Australia, New Zealand, and the islands in the South Seas just now ended.

Groups of them followed her, and then one day, while the attention of her husband was attracted elsewhere, a small army of them noiselessly surrounded her and at a signal swooped down on her, stifled her cries for help, and carried her off into the heart of the sandalwood forests in the mountainous region of the island. After a journey of an hour or so the party came to a thatched hut. Here Mrs. Whalley was placed on the ground while hundreds of natives crowded and jostled to look at her. None of them could speak English. The men would look at her and jabber among themselves. Then they would stroke her blonde tresses and jabber some more. Apparently they had never before seen hair the colour of gold or eyes the colour of skies on a summer day. All this feminine beauty awfully made a big hit with the natives, all of whom were great big men, but were exceedingly gentle in their handling of this strange human being from another world. None of them seemed to harm her, though they indicated they had stolen her to hold for ransom.

WORK SCHEDULE.—Except at one or two premises there is now very little work for laborers along the water front. Scarcely any fish have yet arrived from the outports, but it is not likely that with a few fine days there will be an influx of schooners.

Fire Put Out With Beer. RARELY has such a sacrifice been entailed in quelling a fire as during a conflagration at the Harrow Inn, on the Oxford main road at Boston's Bottom, near Stokeschurche, Buckinghamshire. Owing to shortage of water the villagers, with willing hands, but sore hearts, poured 3 1/2 gallons of good old English beer and two gallons of ginger-beer, on the fire, before it subsided. One of them estimated the sacrifice at "182 half-pints of the best."

Drought Reveals Priory. A complete ground plan of Silchester Priory, which had been raised to the ground so that not a single stone remained visible, has been revealed by the drought. The Priory stood at Compton, two miles south of Winchester, and was destroyed by Henry VIII. Until a week ago there was nothing to mark its site, but a series of lines, burnt out brown on the grass, have appeared and resolved themselves into a perfect plan of the priory, each line marking the position of a wall. Every detail of the structure can now be traced quite plainly, even to a levelled bowling green, now enclosed by four walls.

Quaint Callings. In Seven Dials there used to be a queer character known as the "Freckle-man." He was a young London cabman who deserted the rank for the ponds of Middlesex. He rented a small shack in a disused claypit at Cowley, and from there he sent daily consignments of freckles and aquatic life, via Seven Dials, to a regular clientele of naturalists, schoolboys, and fishermen. Freckle-painting was a few seasons ago a paying job at the seaside in the States. Freckles were fashionable. If you returned home from the sea without a sprinkling of sun-spots you were considered to be quite out of things. Beauty and freckles were synonymous terms. Freckles at 2s. Each. So what the ladies could not get from the sun they got from a professional freckle-painter. The charge was half a dollar a freckle, and if the lady did not wash herself too frequently, or "bab under" when bathing, one application would last quite a long time. The making of glass eyes is a Birmingham speciality, and during the war this art was largely called upon. But even in pre-war times one firm is said to have kept a stock of 5,000 of all colours and sizes, from big and blue to small and grey. Eyes are sent from Birmingham to all parts of the world. Another peculiar Birmingham trade is Jew's Ears. There is one firm in the Midlands capital which specialises in these tinny instruments. It is said also that Birmingham does quite a good trade in idols, but we cannot vouch for the truth of this saying. The question has often been asked, too, where those splendidly-made fannies come from which burglars use, not to mention other highly-finished and finely tempered instruments whereby the professional crackman follows his avocation so successfully. "Breaking-in" Boots. The scent-smeller is an essential to perfumery manufacturers as the tea-merchant is to the tea-merchant. The gift of scent-smelling is a thousand times more rare than the gift of wine sampling. In scent manufacture everything depends upon the proportions in which certain ingredients are blended. That is the fine art of scent-making, and there are certain gifted ladies who can tell, by applying their dainty nostrils to the mixture, when it is "just right." They are invaluable, and can usually command good salaries. One of the most painful occupations must be that of "boot breaker-in," but it is a fact that there are a few enterprising women who make a good living that way by wearing other women's boots and shoes for a few days and taking the newness off. As a matter of fact, they only wear one pair about an hour a day, and have a dozen pairs, at a fee of five shillings, on the go at one and the same time. The L.C.C. used to employ an official, and probably does still, whose work it was to get rid of the bronze coins collected on the tramcars, often between four and five tons of copper coins pass through this distributor's department in the course of one day, for the total number of "oppers" taken in a year exceeds two hundred millions. So this official has his work cut out.

The Only Unique Job. There is possibly only one absolutely unique occupation. It is that of Royal draught-hunter. Anyone who is in the habit of attending public functions knows that the draughts are calculated to raze the hair, and our Roppley cannot be subjected to this great danger. The draught-hunter caused all the furniture to be rearranged at a certain State banquet at the last moment because there was a dreadful down draught just where the Royal chair was to be placed. But occasionally the names by which trades are known among those familiar with them are very misleading. "Consol operators" are not, as one might think, something on the Stock Exchange. Their operations are conducted on the boat-bench. A "common hanger" sounds distinctly "Boisky," yet he is merely an artist in wallpapering. A "budget-trimmer" would be of little use to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for he is not an expert in finance, but a skilled mechanic in the coach-building trade.—Answers.

They are invaluable, and can usually command good salaries. One of the most painful occupations must be that of "boot breaker-in," but it is a fact that there are a few enterprising women who make a good living that way by wearing other women's boots and shoes for a few days and taking the newness off. As a matter of fact, they only wear one pair about an hour a day, and have a dozen pairs, at a fee of five shillings, on the go at one and the same time. The L.C.C. used to employ an official, and probably does still, whose work it was to get rid of the bronze coins collected on the tramcars, often between four and five tons of copper coins pass through this distributor's department in the course of one day, for the total number of "oppers" taken in a year exceeds two hundred millions. So this official has his work cut out.

Anyone who is in the habit of attending public functions knows that the draughts are calculated to raze the hair, and our Roppley cannot be subjected to this great danger. Fire Put Out With Beer. RARELY has such a sacrifice been entailed in quelling a fire as during a conflagration at the Harrow Inn, on the Oxford main road at Boston's Bottom, near Stokeschurche, Buckinghamshire. Owing to shortage of water the villagers, with willing hands, but sore hearts, poured 3 1/2 gallons of good old English beer and two gallons of ginger-beer, on the fire, before it subsided. One of them estimated the sacrifice at "182 half-pints of the best."

Drought Reveals Priory. A complete ground plan of Silchester Priory, which had been raised to the ground so that not a single stone remained visible, has been revealed by the drought. The Priory stood at Compton, two miles south of Winchester, and was destroyed by Henry VIII. Until a week ago there was nothing to mark its site, but a series of lines, burnt out brown on the grass, have appeared and resolved themselves into a perfect plan of the priory, each line marking the position of a wall. Every detail of the structure can now be traced quite plainly, even to a levelled bowling green, now enclosed by four walls.

Quaint Callings. In Seven Dials there used to be a queer character known as the "Freckle-man." He was a young London cabman who deserted the rank for the ponds of Middlesex. He rented a small shack in a disused claypit at Cowley, and from there he sent daily consignments of freckles and aquatic life, via Seven Dials, to a regular clientele of naturalists, schoolboys, and fishermen. GROCCERS--SHOPKEEPERS--READ THIS!

Grocers who check their costs carefully are unanimous in saying that retailing sugar out of a barrel costs them in bags, twine, waste and overhead expense close to, if not more than, 1 cent per pound. Have you ever figured it?

Figuring your profit on retailing sugar out of a barrel is guesswork when you attempt to reckon your actual profit. Your loss through waste of an ounce here and there is in itself considerable on a year's business. Think it over.

When you retail Lantic Sugar in 2 lb. and 5 lb. packages you don't have to guess at your profit. The difference between the price you pay and the price you sell at is actual profit. The profit may be only 1 cent, but it's real profit. You don't have to guess at it. You know it.

Our Great Empire.

Lord George made a brief statement regarding the conference of Premiers which should be emphasized. He has the faculty of putting a sermon in a simple and in this instance he has done so excellently. Discussing the proposal to enlarge the Premier's powers he said:

"It was the general feeling of the Imperial Conference that it would be a mistake to lay down rules and embark on definitions as to what the British Empire means. To do so would be to make its unity. We came to the conclusion that the fact was the thing that counted."

There is an understanding that on questions of foreign policy the Dominions should be informed, and as far as distance permitted, consulted. "We don't want to interfere in their internal affairs; they don't want to interfere in ours; but they do want to be a part of this amazing progression which is the first thing of its kind in the world."

Truly the British Empire is the first of its kind in the history of the world. It is a "nation and a company of nations," as God promises the search his seed should be and it is only power that ever existed that can be so described. It is an empire on such a scale as no other empire has. Through the mouth of the Minister Great Britain disclaims any intention or desire to interfere in the internal affairs of her daughter states. "Daughters in their mother's home but mistress in their own."

This maternal confidence and regard inspires in the daughter nations a deeper sense of loyalty and devotion to the mother nation. It is not an empire based upon statutes, but it is an empire based upon that reason all the world can understand. Such tangible things as exist are all for the good of the children, and they bear a sentiment of affection that is infinitely deeper and more binding than all laws ever written.—The Sentinel.

M. Venizelos to Wed.

LONG-STANDING ATTACHMENT TO END IN LONDON MARRIAGE.

Romance has entered the life of M. Venizelos, the famous Greek patriot and ex-Premier. His engagement is announced to Miss Schilisi, with whom he has had a long-standing attachment. M. Venizelos, who is 57, was first married to an Athenian lady, who died, leaving him two sons. He has been staying for some time at the Kohn Hotel, St. Moritz. During the war Miss Schilisi materially helped the Venizelist cause by handsome gifts. She is an extremely wealthy woman. The wedding, it is announced, is to take place from Lord Crossfield's house at Highgate, London, on Sept. 9. Lady Crossfield's husband is Sir Arthur Crossfield, the first amateur golf champion of France. Many competent judges consider M. Venizelos to be among the first statesmen in the world to-day. It will not soon be forgotten how, during the war, he drew his country out of the position of ignominy and shame into which King Constantine had plunged it by double-dealing and collusion with Germany, to a position of honour beside the Allies. Time and his faction never forgave him for being better than they and engineered his defeat at the recent general elections.

Schooner's Battle With Swordfish.

CREW HAD EXCITING TIME.

(Halifax Morning Chronicle.)

CANNO, Aug. 30.—When the fishing schooner Dorothy Earl, Capt. Hubler, operating out of this port for the A. W. Fisher Fish Firm, arrived in on her latest trip, the crew had some very exciting accounts to relate of encounters with fighting members of the swordfish clan, and to back up their tales they produced the most conclusive evidence, so that there is no chance for the sceptic to ascribe the stories to the seaman's supposed fondness for "spinning yarns."

The scene of the incidents was off Scattered. There the Dorothy Earl seems to have got in the midst of a particularly pungent or scrappy school of "swords," for on one of these fish being struck, instead of heading off as per usual custom, he decided to demonstrate that he could do a bit of sticking himself, and charged straight for the vessel, striking her quite near the bow on the starboard side. His weapon, the formidable sword, met the schooner's frame with such terrific force that it penetrated the five inches of combined hardwood and cottonwood composing her planking, and struck out ten inches clear of the vessel's frame inside. It was broken off in this position by the fish in its struggles, and your correspondent was taken down to the forecabin and shown it by the crew. The astonishing part of it is that the fish was only about a 100-lb. one, so the crew state, and that is a very small swordfish, as they average 300 lbs. or over. This would seem to bear out statements read in a recent article on the great strength of this fish, an extract from which is quoted hereafter:

"Prof. Richard Owen, testifying in a British Court as to the power of the swordfish, said: 'It strikes with the accumulated force of fifteen double-headed hammers. Its velocity is equal to that of a snail-boat, and is as dangerous in its effect as a heavy artillery projectile.'"

Just after the above encounter, a member of the Earl's crew had another exciting experience with a swordfish. The fish in question had been sighted and "traced," and William Sampson sent off in the dory to fire him out. Presently, his shipmates heard Bill calling, and they discovered that Mr. Swordfish, instead of acting half decent about his capture, had suddenly dived, and on coming up, had chosen the bottom of Bill's dory to come up through, hence the cries.

From the above it can be seen that sword-fishing is something of a thrilling sport as well as a profitable business.

Now It Can Be Told.

(From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.)

A curious sidelight on the fears and dreads and dangers of England in the early years of the war came out of London on the eve of the return of the railways to private ownership.

The War Office was so firmly convinced for a long time that the Germans would invade England by Zeppelin or carrier-planes that it insisted on keeping 100 trains in constant readiness to move troops to meet the attack. Day and night locomotives, steam up and coupled to the trains, were in constant readiness.

It was generally understood that England feared an invasion from across the Channel, particularly after the high cruiser raids and the Whitley and Hartlepool shelling. But the War Office, near-paralytic with uneasiness, at least outside of England. This late disclosure helps to explain why England did not place a large force on the West Front prior to 1916.

Facts About Footwear!

It is a recognized fact that good shoes cannot be produced at a low price. High grade leathers and skilled labour are too costly to permit it.

Therefore, when you purchase low-priced shoes you can only expect to get what you pay for—poor leather or substitute and faulty workmanship.

It would be far more economical to buy.

INVICTUS SHOES

—the highest grade of footwear made—sold at fair prices. Invictus Shoes will outwear ordinary low-priced shoes. They are made in distinctive, attractive styles on nature shaped lasts and will prove the most comfortable shoes you have ever worn. Why not try Invictus Shoes and be convinced?

Don't Need a Boss.

The kind of worker every employer wants is one who doesn't need any bossing. All thru this period of shrinking business and shrinking employment, employers have had to do a lot of serious thinking as to which employees to let go and which to retain. The recession has gone so far that most concerns have had to lay off not merely incompetent and indifferent workers, but quite a few of real merit. Some of those laid off have unquestionably felt that someone else should have been the victim. Now, it is safe to say that employers and executives have been very largely guided by this simple rule: Which employees need bossing; which don't?

It costs money to supervise workers. Bosses draw relatively high pay. Many millions of dollars have to be spent by large concerns in paying salaries to bosses and under-bosses for keeping their eye on workers. And, unhappily, the percentage of workers who need supervision is large. Let the boss be absent for a day with no one to see that the work is properly done, and in most places the results would show that everything had not gone along as satisfactorily and efficiently as usual. In other words, most workers need a boss.

We all aspire to progress—or at least, we ought to. Well, we are little likely ever to reach the position of a boss until we first cease to need a boss. If you demonstrate to your employer—and keep on demonstrating, if need be, for a very long time—that he doesn't have to employ anyone to keep you up to the scratch, he is likely to conclude some fine day that you don't need supervision and are capable of supervising others.—Forbes Magazine (N.Y.)

Thousands Write Grateful Letters of Appreciation As Famous Medicine Continues to Accomplish Remarkable Results—Great Tanlac Laboratories Running at Top Speed to Supply Record Breaking Demand—Over Half a Million Bottles Behind With Orders.

By CHARLES MURRAY GILBERT.

ATLANTA, GA., September 2.—"Tanalac made me feel younger." "It put me back on the payroll." "I now have a fine appetite." "I can eat whatever I want." "No more dyspepsia for me." "I gained weight rapidly." These and scores of like expressions are now heard daily from tens of thousands, as grateful users of Tanlac tell of their experiences.

Leading drug men of the country are amazed at the tremendous sales of Tanlac, and point out enthusiastically that nothing has ever equalled the phenomenal demand for this preparation.

At the great Tanlac laboratories at Dayton, Ohio, letters and telegrams are pouring in daily asking that shipments of Tanlac be rushed at once. Many of these orders are for full carload shipments, and quite a few of them for two and three carloads. Although running at top speed, the Tanlac laboratories are now over half a million bottles, or approximately twenty-four carloads behind with orders. This announcement will no doubt be received with great surprise in the drug world, because business in many lines, especially in the drug and medicine business, has been off from 40 to 50 per cent.

Agents in Every Town.

Our druggist in every city, town and village in the United States and Canada where agencies have not already been established will be awarded the exclusive publicity agency for Tanlac within the next thirty days. These agencies will carry with them a big publicity campaign exclusively for the one druggist in each city and town who secures the agency.

Tanalac is going right ahead more vigorously than ever before. For Tanlac there is no such thing as business depression. In fact, Tanlac does not believe there is such a thing as hard times; at least, not in the drug business. Things are getting better every day. In a few weeks' time crops will begin to move. Hundreds of millions of dollars will be put into circulation, and business will soon be back on a better and sounder basis than in years.

Notice to Dealers.

Many wholesalers and manufacturers stopped pushing at the very first sign of a dark cloud. The result being that many drug lines slumped. Tanlac and business will soon be back on a better and sounder basis than in years.

Line up with Tanlac. Connect with a product that sells no matter how the times, because of its superior merit. Although Tanlac has been on the market over six years, it is an actual fact that more Tanlac is being sold today with the same amount of advertising than during any time in the past.

Tanalac will not only prove your greatest seller for this year, but for many years to come.

Tanalac is sold by leading druggist everywhere.

Harbor Grace Notes.

Schr. "J. A. McLean" arrived in port on Monday to go on dock.

Mr. Charles Noesworthy, of the Bank of Nova Scotia, St. John's, who has been spending his holidays here with his parents and friends, left town on Wednesday to resume work again, after having had an enjoyable stay in the home town.

The Methodist annual Sunday School picnic went off yesterday. The day being so unfavorable it was impossible to have the affair in the open, but it was held in Coughlan Hall. A goodly number of children attended and a very pleasant time was spent, indulging in games, races, etc., as well as some fine refreshments.

Schr. "Ida M. Clark," A. J. Gillett, master, arrived in port yesterday from St. John's to go on dock.

The various day schools opened for the year's work on Monday, 5th inst. Miss Gladys Parsons, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Parsons, has been appointed Principal of the Methodist Superior School. Her many friends tender their best wishes that success will crown her efforts in her new field of work.

Mr. Nath. Noel, who has been teaching school at St. Anthony during the past year, arrived in St. John's by the last trip of S.S. Prospero and came to town on a visit. After having spent a short time here he left again by yesterday afternoon's train to take charge of a Church of England school on the West Coast. He has the good wishes of all for a successful year.

Schr. "Latona" went on dock on the 6th inst. and came off again this morning and left port shortly afterwards. Mr. B. Rose of Burgeo has been in town in connection with this schooner and goes out to the city by this afternoon's train.

Mr. H. Trapnell, son of John Trapnell, Esq., who is on the Cable Star at Sydney, N.S., arrived in town last week to spend a time at the old home. His friends are glad to see him.

The cup for the 10 mile Marathon race in the Dominion Sports, was presented to the winner, Jack Bell, at the C.L.B.C. Armory last night. The prizes won at the Church of England Garden Party sports were also presented. Lieut.-Col. R. F. Previous to the presentation, the C.L.B.C. pyramid squad under C.S. M. Harold Rendell, gave a much appreciated exhibition. Several excellent selections were rendered by the Band during the evening.

A Hint to the Customs.

It would be a good thing for Newfoundland if some of our Customs officials were sent to Barbados, that little British possession where we sell some of our produce, writes a correspondent. It appears that this island of the South must have a civilized and honest Government, as their ad valorem rate of duty is 20 per cent. on manufactured goods with a preferential tariff rate for British and Canadian wares of only 10 per cent. This duty is payable in British money at the market rate of Exchange on the day when the goods arrive.

Address to Retiring Rector.

A very pleasing event took place in the Sunday School room of St. Michael's Church last evening, when the congregation assembled to bid farewell to the Rev. Canon Field, their late Pastor and to present him with an address and purse of gold. The affair was opened by the Rev. Canon Jeeves who explained the object of the meeting, and then called upon His Lordship the Bishop to address the gathering. His Lordship made a short address in which he referred to the splendid work performed by Canon Field during his ministry at St. Michael's. He also spoke highly of the new Priest in charge, the Rev. E. Nicholls. At the close of the Bishop's remarks the presentation took place and was replied to by Canon Field in a very feeling manner, thanking the people for their kindness and co-operation while he was their Pastor. The Rev. Canon Jeeves and the Rev. E. Nicholls also addressed the congregation and wished the retiring Priest God speed in his new labours. A solo by Miss Doris Withers, and a recitation by Mr. B. Colton, were greatly enjoyed. Tea was served by the ladies of the parish in an excellent manner and the affair closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

The following is the address presented to Canon Field:—

ADDRESS.
St. John's, Nfld.,
June 30th, 1921.

To the Rev. George H. Field,
Canon of the Cathedral.

Reverend and Dear Sir,—On behalf of the congregation of St. Michael's Church, we beg to extend to you our heartfelt greeting as you resign the office of Priest in charge, and to wish you God speed in your new duties as Chaplain to the Public Institutions. During the five years in which you have been the "Father of the Flock" our Mission has advanced in many things, both spiritual and temporal. We recall that the Church has been re-seated with pews, a new organ has been installed, the Altar has been beautified and chief of all, the fund has been completed by which we now possess a new site for a future Church and Rectory. We ask you to accept the accompanying gift as a slight token of our esteem, and a memento of your labour among us. We pray that God may bless your new work to the consolation of many, and that you and Mrs. Field may enjoy many years of peace and happiness, always remembering in your prayers, your old friends of the Church of St. Michael's and All Angels.

Russia Buys 40,000 Bbls. Flour.

REPLY TO "HERRING DEALER."

Dear Sir—Your correspondent, "Herring Dealer" missed the main point of my argument, viz. the offer from Russia to purchase our flour. The point I have emphasized is that the terms offer a good basis for negotiations. If I could obtain an offer for 10,000 suits, on the same terms, I would not be here in St. John's waiting—like Micawber—for something to turn up. I would be in London, or on my way to Russia making a determined effort to arrange satisfactory terms.

The matter is of sufficient importance to warrant the Government in sending out their best Trade Commissioner to try and finalize the deal, and also to open up permanent trade connections. The following clipping from the Montreal Standard, September 3rd, shows that the Americans are not asleep, and that something can be done either with the Russians or the relief committees.

RUSSIA BUYING FLOUR; WILL GO VIA BLACK SEA.

"Russia is coming into the export flour market. While no business is reported to have been done locally, it is stated that some good business has transpired across the border, some of the Canadian article figuring in the deals. At New York this week freight room has been engaged for 4,000 tons of flour (40,000 barrels) for shipment to a Russian Black Sea port. It seems to be the general impression that this contract represented the first purchase of importance for the Russian relief work, although this has not been definitely stated. The flour is expected to move within the next two weeks and shipment will be made to the port of Batum, at the eastern extremity of the Black Sea in the Trans-Caucasian district."

Salving the Huntley.

The work of salving the gear from the wrecked schr. Huntley is progressing favorably. Yesterday the tugs Hero and Hugh D. were employed and the vessel's spars removed. This lightened the wreck and the hull rose out of the water several feet, so that it will be possible to upright it and remove the auxiliary engine. The remaining gear was found to be in excellent condition.

Rod and Gun.

Rod and Gun in Canada; the popular Canadian sportsman's monthly magazine appears in a new and improved size with its September issue. The many improvements include a larger size of page together with a coated paper that adds considerably to the appearance of the stories and illustrations. This number is rich with stories, articles and anecdotes dealing with wild life in the various parts of the Dominion. The Great Mackenzie Basin is the title of the leading article, which is written by F. H. Kitto and tells of his 12,000 mile trip from Edmonton, north along the Mackenzie through to the Pacific coast and then east to Edmonton. In addition to this article, the number includes thirteen stories and articles which together with the usual department makes an interesting issue of Canada's outdoor monthly. Rod and Gun in Canada is published monthly by W. J. Taylor, Limited, Publisher, Woodstock, Ont.

Household Notes.

To freshen vegetables, cut off ends of stalks and decayed bits, and leave in cold water for a few hours. Keep your kitchen just as clean and attractive as possible and the work done in it will be less irksome. Flavor rice pudding with grated lemon rind, sweeten it with honey and serve with cooked prunes, milk and honey. Cream of cucumber soup is quite delicious. Make a plain cream soup, add a pint of stewed cucumber and serve hot.

HORSES AT LARGE—Residents of Quidi Vidi Road are complaining of a number of horses which are allowed to graze in that locality during night time. Some of the animals are of rather vicious temperament and are dangerous to pedestrians.

Physical Development

And its Bearing on Health and Strength.

By GEE.

PRIME ELEMENTS (Concluded)
Heart and Lungs—Muscular action implies contraction and expansion. The central organ, the heart, the great provider of nourishment for the muscular system, should be regarded as the regulator and governor of exercise; that is, exercise should be in constant consultation with it, and should never unduly tax it.
 The lungs come next, and so intimately do they work with the heart, that they should never be imposed upon by violent exercise. Care for them will be better understood when it is known that no exercise would be of practical benefit unless the heart and lungs are allowed to supply their full quantity of oxygenated energy to sustain muscular activity. They have a most decided mission in aiding muscles to exude waste and the poisonous carbon-dioxide which exercise stirs and accumulates. Violent exercise causes the muscles to restrain the circulation of the blood. Hence blood cannot flow freely through the muscles to carry the waste matter to the lungs, there to be exhaled. So the muscles are deprived of oxygen. The worst is yet to come. When the muscular restraint is removed by relaxation there is a sudden rush of blood to and from both heart and lungs. The heart is overtaxed. The lungs cannot sufficiently oxygenize the torrential inflow of blood. The blood passes into the circulation in an impure form. Great injury is done to the system. The desired benefits of exercise are lost. This is why excessive physical training, if long continued, or injudicious effort at lifting, running, leaping, etc., leads to heart, and sometimes lung weakness.
 It should not be forgotten that both these organs are at work all the time, not only helping us to live, but to perform our daily duties. If for no other purpose, they should be sedulously attended to. But in drawing on them for the extra power required for a course of exercise, how much more respect should be paid to them, and this especially since that quantity and quality of exercise which secures the evenest and completest muscular development, sends heart and lungs in the performance of their functions. No two persons are constructed alike physically. Hence the need of adapting exercise to physical needs. A rigid rule for one may be fatal to another. So no two persons are equally affected by their occupations. After a day's toil, the one may require light exercise, the other

THE CRIPPLE.
 Old Jimson Jones has a pair of legs that he cannot use; they are as stiff as iron. The gay world round him scoffs and sneers, as he sits by his cottage door, and casts his tired and ancient glances on autos passing, score by score. The autos glitter like a star, they're painted up in gorgeous tones; the back seats often empty are, and well might rest some weary bones: the joyous journey near and far, but no one stops for Jimson Jones. The drivers look to left and right for damsels who might like a ride; they'd like to show some maidens bright how smooth and fast their boats can glide; and cripples languish through the night, forsaken, sad, and heavy-eyed. Old Jimson Jones has bungled up feet that will not stand the walking test; and shining cars go down the street and show all kinds of pep and zest; he often sees an empty seat, on which a poor old man might rest. And he is sick to go afield to country roads where green things grow, to see the orchard and the field, the farmyards where the roosters crow; oh, such a joyride well might yield more pleasure than he'll ever know. The autos roar and chug and crash, and throw up clouds of dust and stones, and some of them were bought for cash, and some involve extensive loans, and some are good, and some are trash—but not one stops for Jimson Jones.

his life for the sake of his family.

L. H. — had been an old worker of ours, was a splendid carpenter, a keen fisherman, and a thoroughly earnest man.

Dr. Bradstock is just starting on his visit from place to place along that section, which will be far more thorough than I could devote time to make it.

He is going with his able life partner, as he always does, and will have a valuable report to make when he has completed it.

The conditions on parts of the North Newfoundland shore are, however, grim and gloomy, hunger stalking along in many homes, and unless the windows of heaven open as in Samara, the death from chronic, if not from acute starvation, if accurately recorded, will be a heart-breaking history for a British Colony.

During the last six weeks we have ourselves visited from White Bay to St. Barbe Bay and along the North Labrador, and our workers have been spread out and reporting their experiences from many other centres.

Let me give a few examples, and this is still the middle of summer. One home with three tiny children—father travelled as far south as Grand Falls last winter seeking work, lying by roadsides and in shape developing consumption, and is dying. There was not a bite in the house and no earning power. Such charity as neighbors could give had kept them alive. The family could not keep the window open to admit the necessary fresh air as they had no bed clothes, and their personal clothing was insufficient to withstand the cold.

I can see now the tears falling on the face of the baby that lay in her lap, as the mother heard me tell her husband and protector the truth which he had to know. My friend, the new clergyman for St. Anthony, happened to be with me. Yet it seemed small satisfaction to pray with the poor fellow, and know that in an hour we must get up anchors and go. It goes without saying that we helped. Were there only a dozen such cases we should owe them a great debt for the joy they gave us of seeing them through; but it is more needless this year than ever saw it, and we must get emergency help before it is too late.

One beautiful feature in these cases is the real Christianity of our people. On my return voyage I called in at a harbour some six miles away from the family spoken of above. A smiling fisherman said, "I sent my milk and butter and some supplies to you—last week on your assurance, 'Ten Doctor.' 'Thanks ever so much, let me have the bill,' I replied. 'No indeed,' came the answer, and I saw his kindly eyes dancing, and I was glad, for I knew that he had many troubles of his own, and there is no help for ourselves on earth like sharing with a brother in trouble. It is the old story of what is not enough for one being plenty for two.

At another place an urgent letter from an old friend said, 'Please call at once on L. H. — and try to save a starving family whom I had seen in the Straits. The master of a fishing crew and owner of small store took us off to sea—by 'us' I mean Mrs. Grenfell and myself, for she is secretary on board again. 'I was up at Ship Cove last Sunday in my motor, Doctor,' said our host. 'Well, surely you need not say that.' 'Couldn't take it,' came the reply. 'I was just off for church when that poor fellow came into my mind, and I knew it would be an awful cry, so I got in the boat and went up to see him. It's only about fifteen miles. We are going to take up two collections for him and the family next Sunday.'—Only be forgot to add, 'I left a truck of food that I took up with me.' 'Did you get back to prayers in the evening?' I asked. 'Yes, we had a splendid service,' he answered. I thought of what I had seen heard D. L. Moody say. It was 'Christians should be satisfied with one good meal on Sunday days. They would be stronger if they got out in the evening and shared with others what they had received in the morning.' Surely it is carrying our end of His yoke that makes man's spiritual muscles grow, not everlastingly praying for Him to carry the whole thing, with ourselves travelling on as well at the other end.

Now I must close. We are running in on the lead, and passing some of the finest lobster traps that I have seen in all these thirty years past. They are wonders of beauty, and dignity and beauty—God's wonderful creations. Also, alas, how cold they are, and how useless, just melting away without leaving a helping hand to anyone. I wonder if we spent a little less energy and talents on outward appearance, if our hearts would not beat the stronger for the "least of these His brethren," here, there, and everywhere; and so, when we too fade away and leave behind us only our record, it should be something to guide the footsteps of those who come after us, even as our Master left us His.

Battle Harbor hospital is in sight now. We are landing three orphans, and much freight. What an invaluable helper is the little steamer Strathcona—old and worn though she is. She still does such a heap of work. In the roll this morning in the Straits, with her heavy deck load, the engineer called me to see clear salt water running in through the coal bunker. Her sides are thin and her rivets nowhere too good, but she keeps busy all the time. Some day we hope to take her to Montreal or Boston so that our friends may see that she has fairly worn herself out in the service of humanity, and needs to house her spirit in a safer hull.

Greece Marching On.

(From the Boston Transcript.)

The Sakaria river, where, it appears, the Greeks have again badly beaten the Turkish Nationalists, is practically the last natural defensive line of Turkish interior Anatolia, and if the Greeks advance in force beyond it, Anatolia the Nationalist capital must soon be theirs. The hubbub of Turkish resistance will then have completely burst. What will be the consequences? The Great Powers have proclaimed their neutrality in the contest between the Greeks and the Turkish Nationalists. Does that mean that they will permit the Greeks to possess themselves of the whole of Anatolia? They are apparently free to exert their full military strength against the forces of Mustafa Kemal. But it is hardly likely that they will care to go beyond Ankara, at the same time establishing themselves in the towns along the Black Sea where Greeks are, as they have been for all the centuries since the downfall of the Byzantine empire, the preponderant population. The Greeks, though ambitious, have shown a certain reserve in their demands not only under Venizelos but under the Constantinian restoration, and they are not likely to "bite off more than they can chew." They likely the Turks will be left undisturbed so far as the Greeks are concerned, at Karsiyeh, the ancient Caesarea, to which they have already removed their capital. But when we have said "the Greeks," we have not ended with the Turkish opponents. To face the Greeks, the Turks have already withdrawn their forces from Armenia, where, in co-operation with the Bolsheviks, they have been overrunning the population. The strength of the Greeks over Mustafa Kemal, supporting it to be complete, can have no other effect than to revive the Armenian hopes and stimulate their resistance and an attempt to expand the Armenian republic, which was barely restricted to an improper and inadequate area by the Treaty of Versailles.

The Greek success will indeed open up several Eastern questions of importance. In the meantime, King Constantine stands to gain more than the promise of a victorious commander. His campaign in Asia Minor is a dynastic struggle, and by his success, if he can consolidate it, his position at home and in Europe will be greatly strengthened. If he now has the sagacity to call M. Venizelos to his counsel, almost any coup is possible for him—even to the addition of Constantinople to the Hellenic realm.

The Horseless Carriage.

(A weekly column devoted to the interests of the Motoring Public.)

We didn't know that there were so many dogs in town of the class that we described last week as being "a cross between a lady's muff and a squirrel." We apologize to the numerous ladies who, we hear, are going to have our blood for referring to their pets in that flippant manner. We assure each of these ladies that it wasn't her dog we were talking about.

And, again referring to last week's notes, we acknowledge the courtesy of the Editor's remarks in Saturday's issue re the typographical errors which slipped into this column. We didn't mind a bit about the misnaming of the biblical speed artist, but what did rather get our goat was being made say that the Act that came into force late in the 1920 season was not retroactive when that's just what it was, i.e. the increase dating back to the beginning of the season. However, mistakes will happen in the best regulated motor columns.

Years ago when we were young we happened to go, one Sunday night, in New York City, to what was described in the announcement as a "Sacred Concert." It certainly was some Sacred Concert. We remember that it started out with a lively vaudeville sketch, the scene of which was laid in a hotel bedroom, which had been apportioned in error to a lady guest and a gentleman guest, each stranger to the other. (Alright, Mr. Editor, we will tell it just as it ought to be told in a drawing room.) Neither guest would give up the claim to the room, and the two eventually decided to occupy the room, and to divide in half, for sharing purposes, every 2 of furniture and crockeryware in the apartment. (An important piece of the crockeryware was at this juncture, of course, found to be missing at which the "Sacred Concert" audience was overcome with mirth. It is not necessary to finish the story except to say that by the time the end of the sketch had arrived, he pair had become good friends and had decided to get married, whereupon the lady sang in a sweet soprano, "When we are married what will you do?" and, while the curtain fell, the gentleman obliterated the chalk mark on the principal piece of furniture that the room contained.

Now the above story has nothing to do with motoring, but it suggests to us an expedient that is fast becoming necessary. That of dividing the country roads—by a chalk mark or otherwise—to point out to certain "road hogs" exactly how much of the road they are entitled to occupy, when passing a car coming in the opposite direction. Those offenders are not only motorists. The average country cart, carriage and cab in nine cases out of ten, hugs the wrong side of the road at all times at considerable risk to themselves and everything else that may come along. Surely to goodness, it is an easy to drive on the right side of the road as the wrong.

"The rule of the road is a paradox quite. For if you go 'right' you go wrong. And if you go 'left' you go right."

The Motor Association tends its thanks to Mr. Albert Perlin of the Evening Telegram staff, for the excellent account of their last meeting as published in the Evening Telegram. The Secretary asks me to say that he is particularly grateful, as a copy of the Telegram's report will make the most excellent "minutes."

The sad tale of the motorist who, running short of gasoline around the Bay, applied to a friend to help him out and was given a "fill" from his friend's private supply which later turned out to be kerosene and played the deuce with the engine, reminds us of the advice that we used to be given prior to 1917, that "it was never wise to mix your drinks." As rumor has it that the "kerosene" was pink in color, a friend enquires if possibly the two bottles of "St. Pierre" which he mislaid "round the bay" the previous summer have not been accounted for.

We call the following from an English exchange: "Diverting the exhaust through organ pipes by means of ten switches forming a keyboard on the dash of his car, Mr. Rowland Winn, the head representative of Fords, has provided himself with music wherever he goes. Practice on this keyboard has enabled him to play a variety of popular tunes on the exhaust from "The Lost Chord" to "The Rosary." Personally we have seen many Fords that play music all their own, and we have heard Ford owners speaking in a very musical way about their cars—especially on a cold night when the

N. F. Herring and Russia

The Police officers on duty at Rawlin's Cross deserve a word of thanks for their unflinching courtesy to motor drivers. Their position is one by no means to be envied, and we understand no Insurance Company in town will accept a risk on their lives. The rule says a motorist must drive around them, and some motorists are apt to misunderstand this and attempt to drive over these men rather than around them. Nevertheless, the Rawlin's Cross traffic cop comes up smiling (and doing calisthenic exercises) every time, and he has our best wishes that if his life is short it will be a merry one.

A correspondent has asked us to say a few words on the iniquity of passing on corners, and we feel we cannot do better than quote a piece of an article touching on this subject from the English magazine "The Motor":—"Another fault to be avoided is the passing of cars on corners. Neither party is safe if this be done. There may be only room for two cars on the road, so that, if any hidden obstruction be round the corner, there must be a smash. Some day we shall get two cars each coming round a corner, with one of each pair trying to pass, and then we shall hear of the most unholy disaster in which at least three out of the four will be involved, and two of them will be quite unoffending drivers. Such driving is sheer lunacy, and men who indulge in it ought to be deprived of their licenses, for they are a danger to the community and none the less to themselves."

Their own sentiments on that subject precisely!

While we're about it we are going to give you a mighty good paragraph from the same article headed "Gentlemen of the Road":

"We have both cads and gentlemen in all classes, and the old and experienced paid chauffeur is usually, in the fullest sense of the term, a "gentleman of the road"—there are others, of course—and, unfortunately, there are many car owners who, by their social position or means, ought to be gentlemen, but are not, in so far as their behaviour on the road is concerned. This, in some instances, is due to pure hoggliness or overbearing arrogance, but in others it is very largely accounted for by lack of road sense. They have not, before they become possessed of a motor, been either cyclists or horse drivers, and they have not enough discretion and common sense to acquire road sense quickly, with the consequence that they become a nuisance or a terror to all other road users. Whilst there may be some excuse for the young and inexperienced, as there was last year for young men home from the war, and new to peace-time motoring, there is none for older men, and for young and old the road to successful motoring may be summed up as: "Be a gentleman," which may be translated: "Do unto others as you would they should do unto you," which, indeed, epitomizes the whole duty of man to man, and to this may be added: "When in doubt—safety first." How many highbreath escapades there have been lately I do not know, but from my own observations, and those of others there were many. Too many run are prone when on a clear stretch of good road, to "let her go," regardless of crossroads. Such driving is most reprehensible, particularly when there are trees, and other obstructions to vision, making crossroads. When men drive like this, they are not only a danger to themselves and their managers, if they have any, but to all other people on the highway; for, however carefully a motorist may be driving, and however slowly and cautiously he enters on another road crossing his path, he is practically helpless to avoid disaster if a car doing forty or fifty is right on the top of him as soon as he appears."

That's the "dope" to give the troops. There's truth in every word of it, Mr. Driver.

Good-bye—e, now till next Friday.

MR. DUNLOP.

Yours truly,
MATTIE FULL.

THOUGHTS OF A RETURNING SCHOOL BOY.

I used to think my Pa was wrong when he would say, the years fly by; I thought the weeks an' months were long.

An' when I wait for Christmas, I am sure the days will never go.

An' weeks seem just like years right then.

An' now time does go fast I know.

But now time does go fast I know.

I've got to go to school again.

It seems a dreadful time when my birthdays, but my Pa says: "wait."

When several more of them you've seen.

They'll come around at rapid rate.

I don't believe that can be so.

And yet I've got a new suit on.

And back to school I've got to go.

Vacation time has come an' gone.

I used to count the weeks, and say I could spend all by myself in play.

And now the last of them's gone by.

It doesn't seem 10 weeks ago.

Since school let out, they've gone so fast.

But Pa just grins and says: "Oho. You've learned that time does fly, at last."

Ten weeks to Christmas! that seems long.

Ten weeks to school days an' the fall. An' teachers an' the study gone!

That isn't any time at all.

The fun you want seems far away.

The fun you've got goes whizzin' by.

An' my vacation's done to-day.

I'll bet the school days, thought won't fly.

SWEET, PURE MILK—always on hand when you want it!

If you have never used Libby's Evaporated Milk, you will be amazed to find how good, how convenient and economical it is. Many women who first tried it in some emergency now use it always—they find it gives such satisfactory results.

There's no waiting for the milkman—you can always keep several cans on the shelf and in summer there's no bothering with ice, and in winter the milk wagon can get stuck in a heavy drift of snow as often as it wants to!

And there's less waste—a can of Libby's Evaporated Milk will keep indefinitely before being opened—and after you have opened a can you can use just what you need; the rest, put in a cool place, will keep several days.

Libby's Milk comes from the finest dairying section of America and is processed in our own sanitary condensaries—it is not the "distributed" product of an unknown and nameless plant.

Order a tin from your grocer to-day.

Household Notes.

Add a dash of nutmeg and a little onion juice to the white sauce of creamed carrots.

Meat will keep sweet if wrapped in heavy oiled paper, kept on ice, and turned every day.

Flannels are not so likely to shrink if rung out slightly before hanging on the line.

A teaspoonful of ammonia mixed with half a cupful of cold tea will clean black felt hats.

To store beets, parsnips or carrots for Winter use put them in boxes and cover with sand.

Do not pour boiling water over fish in the kettle, it breaks the skin; lower fish into water.

A tablespoonful of vinegar added to the water in which meat is boiled makes it very tender.

A good cocktail is made with sliced pineapple and watermelon combined with lemon juice.

Whip stiff cream and strawberry jam together. Spread between sponge cakes split open.

Salt fish needs more fresh milk than for any form of cooking which includes milk.

Put a teaspoonful of lye into a cold vinegar crust; let stand a few days and then wash out.

Part of a head of cabbage will keep fresh if wrapped in oiled paper and put away in a paper bag.

A handy thing to have on hand for the emergency luncheon is a box of cubes of squares of beef pasta.

Taking a Fleet Out of Harbour

(Daily Mail.)
 To the man in the street, it is a very simple operation to take a fleet out of harbour.
 The ships are all at anchor at one moment; the next they are steaming in perfect order out to sea.
 There is more in it than meets the eye.
 The evolution of getting a fleet under weigh involves no little organization and is not merely a case of pulling up the anchor and ringing down to the engineers.
 The admiral will have signalled the time at which the fleet will proceed to sea. It is necessary that every ship shall be ready at the exact moment a certain little string of flags at the masthead of the flagship is hauled down.
 This string of flags is the "executive signal." It is hoisted to give just sufficient time for every ship in the line to have a chance of seeing and acknowledging by an "answering pendant."
 Let us see what preparation has been necessary before any single ship feels qualified to hoist her "answering pendant" in obedience to the signal.
 To begin with, all the boats must have been hoisted and lashed securely in place, for it may be rough outside. A "lifeboat" on each side of the ship must be ready to lower instantly with the crew in it in case of emergency. It is probable that every boat will have been necessary for the commander to calculate precisely at what time his last boat must leave the shore, in order to get back in time to be hoisted and secured.
 The arrangement of boats requires a great deal of organization, for the postman must be landed in time to catch the latest possible mail, and to get down from the post office after collecting the letters.
 Then there are officers and men from leave to come on board, afterwards to be landed for marketing and brought off again, various other ships have to be visited, and, last but not least, a boat must be kept in readiness for the flagship in case she should take it into her head to demand one at the last moment.
 The engine-room staff required to try their engines shortly before getting under weigh, and there must be no boats alongside while this is being done, for they would injure themselves in the wash of the crew.
 Again, the engine-room staff must be warned at what time steam will be required for working the main derrick, the captain, the fire mains (which are needed for washing the cable down as it comes in lest it should bring mud into the cable lockers).
 Torpedo nets must be secured, and covers must be laced over the masts and yards to protect the paint from smoke. And a hundred other little items have to be arranged and made to fit in with the precise moment at which the order is given to weigh anchor.
 Once the anchor is off the bottom the ship must be kept in position while she awaits the order to proceed.
 The flagship hauls down the signal when she herself is ready, and with one accord the engines of the various ships begin to move.
 The fleet is proceeding out of harbour.

Suicided From Olympic.

Passenger Plunged Overboard in New York Harbor.
 New York, Sept. 1. (Canadian Press.)—Family troubles in England and the fear of being detained and sent to Ellis Island, were believed to be the cause of Thomas Braxington, of New Castle-under-Tyna, England, jumping overboard from the second class deck of the White Star Liner Olympic, Tuesday night, when she was at anchor at quarantine here, leaving his fiancée, Miss Anne Louise Thompson, Calif., lying unconscious on the deck.
 According to the ship's officers, Braxington was well to do. He was thirty-nine years old and was on his way to Abbotford, B.C., where he owned a bakery business. Miss Thompson had become engaged to Braxington on the Pacific coast and had gone to England six weeks ago to marry him. There was some trouble with the relatives and the two sailed on the Olympic with the idea of getting married in California before proceeding to Abbotford.
 On Tuesday night the man displayed symptoms of despondency. Just after dark he went to his cabin, and left there his money and jewelry, with a note stating that he was afraid of detention at Ellis Island. He then went on deck where he kept a towel to Miss Thompson. The girl fainted and Braxington jumped overboard.
 Stafford's Prescription "A" will cure that uncomfortable feeling caused by indigestion and Dyspepsia. Price 25 and 50c. Postage 10 and 20c. extra.
